* In Part 3 and onwards, there are a couple of Stands that have ice powers and, given the motifs associated with stands, play this very straight, such as Pet Shop's stand Horus and Ghiaccio's stand White Album.
* In Part 3, Ferdinand mentions the fact that he (unwillingly) ended up watching Myne take a bath while he was visiting her
* In Part 3, it is to rescue Holly Joestar by killing Dio, who survived from Part 1.
* In Part 3, Joseph Joestar's Stand ability, Hermit Purple can be used like this. So can Noriaki Kakyoin's Hierophant Green, which maintains a human form most of the time but can unravel to form a cluster of tentacles at will.
* In Part 3, Jotaro Kujo saves the little girl Anne from a shark, while using his Stand.
* In Part 3 of "Mario and Bowser's Stupid and Crazy Adventure", to get
* In Part 3 of the "Mario and Bowser's Stupid and Crazy Adventure" story arc, after Bowser successfully hatches a Yoshi, Mario coaxes the Yoshi to let him ride him, due to Bowser's immense size. Bowser is outraged, but Mario tells him to ride on one of his Koopas or Goombas. Bowser makes
* In Part 3, Ryan, Janie and her family go to watch the first playing of Fiddler on the Roof at their local cinema - this film opened on November 3rd, 1971.
* In part 3 source that says they do. The woman snatches the latter result with a smarmy "I knew it!"
* In Part 4, it is to find and stop Kira Yoshikage (a serial killer) before he can claim more victims.
* In Part 4, Okuyasu has an X-scar on his face, reminiscent of being attacked by Crazy Diamond, but while he is strong and can erase things with a swing of his right hand, he also is rather... lacking in the thinking department.
* In Part 5, Buccelatti can do this with his zippers, detaching an arm and reeling it out on a length of zipper. Also Ciocolatta can do this with some improvisation from his stand Green Day and this leads to one of the nastiest, most gruesome usages of this trope.
* In Part 5, it is to find the Stand arrow and to stop Diavolo from obtaining it, or killing Trish.
* In Part 6 it is to stop Pucci from realizing his plans and resetting the entire world.
* In Part 7, Mountain Tim can do this with his rope, Hot Pants can separate her body parts with her flesh spray, Blackmore can do this in rain (which he likes to use for sneak attack biting), and Johnny Joestar can separate his body parts with his holes. Needless to say,
* In Part 7, this is the basis of the Stand named Civil War. It conjures images of things you've "sacrificed" (read: abandoned or destroyed) and feel guilty about, which merge with your body and kill you.
* In part because of the creator's distress at a recent school shooting, the player character has
* In part due to how low the planes were forced to fly, because of being old pieces of junk. They were too close for a lot of the standard anti-aircraft weaponry. That is, if you could even find the plane. Even after the bombs had been dropped and the engine on the plane had started, there was no guarantee of locating it because the cackling sound of the engine would bounce off every tall building and mountain within ten miles. Of course, the downside of the planes being old pieces of junk is that sometimes they refused to start after the bombs were dropped dumping the unfortunate pilot behind enemy lines and far from her comrades. Not that the rest of the Soviet airforce had better equipment, especially late in the war.
* In partially the same vein as "Twiley", Pinkie Pie calls Rainbow Dash "Dashie".
* In particular, as Nazi war crimes came to be more widely known, it became common practice among American and British units not to take Waffen-SS prisoners. Among the Soviets this went beyond common practice and was official policy to kill all SS men. Many of the German prisoners who
* In particular, early "Madame X" strips featured a couple of friends who mainly existed to bounce exposition off of...

* In particular for the Medal of Honor recipients, they may receive, among other benefits, a monthly pension including to what other benefits they might have received
* In particular he likes using terms that should not exist in a different world, and then justifying them with a bizarre parallel explanation. For example, "Pavlovian response" also exists in Discworld not because it was discovered by a man called Pavlov, but because the experiment involved the dog eating a strawberry meringue when the bell was rung.
* in particular, how they got there, the fact that Captain Lorca had come from there, the fact that the U.S.S. Defiant
* In particular, it seems to be a New Republic Starfighter tradition that new squadron commanders are given the rank of Brevet Captain. It's kind of a sore point for Donos that he never actually made captain because his whole squadron was wiped out except him. There's also the one time Piggy
* In particular, it was discovered that the Zero's controls tended to lock up at high speeds and that even with more engine power the Zero was an inherently slow fighter. As a consequence, the majority of late-war US fighters could simply choose to outrun the Zero and attack at a more fortuitous moment. But what about sluggish early-war fighters, such as the P-40 Warhawk and F4 Wildcat? It turned out that US aircraft could sustain higher speeds than the Zero in a dive, and so amongst other tactics, pilots found that a "boom and zoom" technique — attacking the Zero in pairs, while in a shallow dive, extending away each time — could effectively counter the Zero's superior agility. US pilots only needed to score a few hits on the Zero's thin structure to take it out of the fight.
* In particularly gruesome scenarios, the mother or one of her relatives kills the newborn, either directly or by abandoning it somewhere where it is unlikely to be found.
* In particularly malicious cases, it may be that the gift-giver effectively bought the present for themselves and expects the recipient to "share."
* In particular, Magnus the Red is portrayed as having gone through an arc not too dissimilar from a classical tragedy: his arrogance led to him assuming he knew better than everyone else about the Warp and how to use it, starting a chain of events that ended with Magnus' desiccated homeworld burned to black glass and a significant chunk of his Legion killed in the engagement.
* In particular missing in Step 4 is how Obito should force Nagato to revive him, or what to do if Nagato dies before Obito can use him to resurrect Madara. Or what if Obito just doesn't want to resurrect him in the first place
* In particular, seizures, heart attacks, catatonia due to major emotional trauma (or
* In particular, since Canada has two official languages (English and French), every member of the Canadian Forces is expected to be fully bilingual by the time they finish training, or at least have a good enough grasp of both languages to understand or give orders in either.
* In particular, the Asgard and the Replicators have hyperdrives so fast that
* In particular, the massive block of over 80 filler episodes that make up the space between
* In particular, there's a point where he observes that a lady on a red bike, a man with flowers, and a vintage Volkswagen beetle with a dented fender, go around the block, over and over again, and
* In particular, there was an incident where a mechanic examining the engine of a Continental 737 suddenly got sucked into the engine when he ventured too close. The result was him being effectively
* In particular, the Scots had a pike formation called the schiltron that made them effectively invincible against cavalry. Unfortunately, it was also the
* In particular the second Ofglen says she's happy with her lot, because she was a drug-addicted prostitute before. Now at least she has somewhere to stay every night, plenty of food, and people she insists
* In particular, The Slavers appears to be based on The Guardian article "Streets of Despair", with Garth Ennis even basing scenes on real-life moments transcribed in the article, including direct quotes, and even using the same names of the interviewees (which, as the article notes, were changed for their protection).

* In particular, the story of Snuffle the rabbit-turned-human student and their fairy friend—the light, fluffy chapters featuring them ("Tall Tales", "Totem", and "A Big Day!") all immediately precede major dramatic events ("The Torn Sea", "The Tree", and "Jeanne"/"The Other Shore", respectively).
* In particular, this is the essence of a Lone Power. Void has no position within magical society (though he could easily get one) but everyone respects his power and he's a vital ally in the war against the Blighted Lands because of his vast magical ability. His authority is entirely derived from his ability to kick ass.
* In Part IV, a story arc where Josuke and Okuyasu visit an Italian restaurant happens in between two action-packed arcs. The majority of this arc is Okuyasu eating food that
* In Part I, you fight the Battle of the Eagle and Lion, an annual mock battle between the houses which takes place on Gronder Field and celebrates the war that led to the Holy Kingdom of Faerghus winning its independence from the Adrestian Empire. After a five-year
* In part one of "Sock Opera", a sleep-deprived Dipper nods off and has a nightmare about
* In part one, the Mane Six have defeated Sombra and liberated the Crystal Empire once again. They return the Elements to the Tree of Harmony and start making plans to celebrate.
* In parts of Canada you can buy 3000ml bottles of alcohol called a "Texas Mickey" ironically not available in Texas.
* In parts of southeastern China, the standard joke seems to be that Spring lasts about 35 minutes.
* In parts of the United States and Canada, it's nicknamed "McD's" or "Mickey D's". "McDick's" is heard in Canada as well.
* In parts of the world where listing ingredients is mandatory regardless of the product, such as the UK, this trope is sure to occur.
* In "part-time job", Strong Bad's "very part-time job" at Bubs' Concession Stand involves busking for the stand while dressed as a "tragic clown-dog" (a hot dog done up to look like a crying clown).
* In "Part Time Pal," a drunken Tom Cat is chased under the moonlight by a vengeful Mammy Twoshoes.
* In part two, 8-Bit Mickey is looking like he's about to snap from Prick's barrage of short jokes. Cut immediately to
* In part two, Twilight succeeds in convincing Discord to defeat Sombra for her, which he starts to do by
* In "Parturition", Neelix attacks Tom Paris over his attraction to Kes. She's convinced he's wrong about this, but when she shares her frustration with the holographic Doctor, he gives her a list of telltale physiological changes he's noticed in Paris when Kes is nearby.
* In Part V, the flickering in Tifa's flashback conceals text. Also, pausing at the moment right after
* In party banter, Primrose asks H'aanit what she looks for in a man. After a bit of sputtering, H'aanit says she'd want a strong man — one stronger than her. Primrose mutters that will be difficult to find.
* In "Partying is Such Sweet Soiree", Coco uses the "Is your refrigerator running?" call to distract Mr. Herriman. Herriman actually goes to catch the refrigerator, leaving the others free to throw a wild party. This works despite the fact that
* In "Party of 5, 4, 3, 2, 1", Olive shows Otto a list of one hundred New Year's resolutions that she has to get done by midnight, with ninety of them crossed off. The list is so long that it manages to reach the floor.
* In "Party of One", Pinkie Pie overhears everypony else in the Mane Six planning
* In "Party of One" the main characters are obviously lying to Pinkie Pie in order to cover for something, until Pinkie gets suspicious. The excuses were studying (Twilight made a giant pile of books she claimed to be behind on right in front of Pinkie when there weren't any books out of place beforehand), picking apples (Applejack was hauling in a very large harvest of apples already, but she's a terrible liar), and washing one's hair (upon Pinkie observing that Rarity's hair looked fine, she dunks her head in a full trash can). Rainbow Dash and Fluttershy said they had to house-sit for a friend, who happens to be a bear with a cave so nice it feels like a house because he's fixed the place up so well, who's vacationing on the beach because he likes to "

* In "Party of One", the rest of the mane six have to come up with reasons why they can't attend
* In "Party Pooper Pants", this is inverted when SpongeBob hosts a party that proves to be boring and by-the-book, so the guests lock him out of his house so they can throw a
* In Passing) shows a man and a woman jumping off a building, meeting on the way down, and falling in love.
* In "Passion" Angelus is waiting outside Buffy's home when her mother comes home, and starts putting on a psycho ex-boyfriend act to make her nervous. Joyce manages to both fumble her house keys and
* In "Past Imperfect," Clay Dobson falls (or did he jump...hmmm?) from a rooftop and lands on a squad car.
* In "Past Prologue", Garak conducts negotiations with the Duras sisters, Lursa and B'Etor, while he has Bashir hide in a dressing room so he can overhear the conversation and learn of a secret plot.
* In "Past Tense", the Ventures crash their jet into a cemetery where a funeral is taking place, piercing the casket and dismembering the deceased. This is followed by plenty of humorous banter in the midst of the other funeral they're attending.
* In "Pasture Bedtime", Liam talks about (and lands in) the manure on his farm.
* In "Patching Things Up", when Lana is asked to sew something called a "sit-upon", she says, "I already have a sit-upon. It's called my butt."
* In Path of Radiance and Radiant Dawn, certain special moves (critical hits for swordmasters and thieves and Occult attacks for those classes) are portrayed this way as well.
* In "Patient Zero", a time-traveling assassin killing certain people with a fast-acting poison before the strains of viruses they're carrying can combine in Patient Zero and start a pandemic that will kill most of humanity. Each time he goes back and is told that nothing has changed. He eventually realizes that he has to kill Patient Zero, who turns out to be a pretty woman, and he hesitates, resolving to prevent her from contacting the people with the strains. At the end of the episode, a colleague of his goes back in time and explains that the
* In Patrice Dard's L'Histoire de France de Marie-Marie, Producer Darryl E. Nuck really has Wrongful Accusation Insurance... more precisely, he is "insured against miscarriages of justice". In fact, he appears to be insured against EVERYTHING that could possibly go wrong.
* In "Patrick SmartPants", Patrick tells SpongeBob he's observing a subspecies under a microscope. Plankton, whom he's observing, yells "I'll show you subspecies!"
* In "Patrick! The Game", during the montage of Patrick tearing up game boards to combine for his own board game, he cuts one with a pair of scissors and, due to
* In "Patrick: The Game", Patrick decides to make his own board game after Squidward tells him games don't grow on trees, but are thought up and made by people. Spongebob, Sandy, and Squidward go to Patrick's house and play, with Spongebob getting a driver's license for a slot-car racetrack, Patrick landing on a "Snacks" space that dispenses snacks, and Squidward goes to jail, only to be caught in a
* In "Patty Hype", after SpongeBob's Pretty Patties dye the people who ate them different colors, they take their vengeance out on Mr. Krabs because he was the current owner of the stand selling the patties, even though SpongeBob was the one who sold them the patties in the first place. Of course, Mr. Krabs did deserve it, but for

* In "Patty Hype" the Krusty Krab is robbed of (yet another) customer when a man runs in and says that a different restaurant has a talking dog. The customer goes with him because he thinks it's cool, and then asks
* In "Patty Hype", the people who ate SpongeBob's Pretty Patties come to Mr. Krabs, now the owner of the stand selling them, demanding refunds after the patties change their colors. One guy got a glow in the dark tongue, and despite being
* In Paul Hindemith's "When Lilacs Last in the Dooryard Bloom'd: A Requiem for Those We Love", an Army bugle plays "Taps" over the orchestral interlude that follows "and the armies remain'd suffer'd" in the tenth movement.
* In "Paul Temple and the Gilbert Case", concerned for the safety of his wife, they agree on an arbitrary question/answer which only they will know, and which she can use to challenge any telephone caller claiming to be him. When Steve first uses the question, the caller really is Paul (although there's a
* In Paul Witcover's story "The Twilight of the Dogs," a militant Evangelical in a civil war-torn United States encounters a pack of ravenous ex-pet dogs. The reversion of the dogs to this status clearly mirrors the behavior of the humans after the apocalypse: "What had turned the dogs so vicious? Had the noise and bloodshed of war snapped something civilized in them, returning them to a wilder, more savage existence? Did the same thing happen to men?"
* In "Pawtucket Pat", the town becomes divided over whether to not to tear down its statue of Pawtucket Pat after damning facts come to light. Even the pigeons who poop on it speak out on the controversy.
* In "Peachosal Love", after Mario's final attempt to get Peach to love him fails thanks to "gay Bob-ombs", he attempts this with help from
* In "Peak Performance", a combat drill and performance review is interrupted by an actual Ferengi attack.
* In "Peak Performance," Data has a rematch against an opponent at a game of Stratagema. Rather than playing to win, which got him soundly defeated last time, Data goes for a stalling tactic to keep the game at a permanent impasse. His opponent eventually rage quits. If this sounds rather unsporting... well, it was, but his opponent was so insufferably smug about the previous victory that it was impossible to feel very sorry for him.
* In "Peak Performance", there's a glance of a computer screen showing the plans for a battle simulation. The simulation's name is
* In peculiar example, the Planetoids map generator for Minecraft creates asteroid-like floating masses which many people usually mine hollow and string minecart tracks between.
* In "PEE IN MY BUCKET!" a player cast the spell Flaming Sphere, while they were on a wooden ship that was stuck in some trees, which set the ship on fire, and resulted in most of the remaining crew falling to their deaths escaping from the flames.
* In "Peeping Mom", Bart tries to get away from a stalking Marge. Like in the HD opening, he rides his skateboard past Sideshow Bob, Helen Lovejoy, Apu and his kids, Moe, Comic Book Guy, Disco Stu, Crazy Cat Lady, Rich Texan and Chief Wiggum, while Marge rides a bike over Moleman (she couldn't use the car because Homer threw the carburetor at a skunk). Afterwards, Moe says that they can all go inside his bar now that he's passed them again.
* In "Peggy the Boggle Champ", Hank gives a despondent Peggy one of his coach's speeches to lift up her spirits. It starts with "Loser! You're a loser!" and goes south from there.
* In "Penny and Dime", Karen slips out of the office and secretly breaks into Frank Castle's house, taking with her a photograph of Frank and his family. The next morning, in "Kinbaku", when she tells the guys about her little investigation, they're both angry at her; Foggy because she committed illegal activity, while Matt because she could have been hurt. Once Foggy leaves the conversation, Karen apologizes to Matt for pushing too far, but Matt calmly says, "I don't think you're wrong about Castle. But, it’s really simple, Karen. I don’t want you to get hurt." This scene is an interesting parallel to the aforementioned scene from "Shadows in the Glass" because it’s the same configuration with the same characters and, once again, Karen is the bold one. The one difference is that even though Matt is upset, he more openly admits it’s because he’s afraid something bad could happen to Karen. He felt the same as in that previous moment, but it’s even stronger here because, after

* In "Penny Foolish", where Mr. Krabs is trying to get a penny from SpongeBob, it's revealed he was only picking up a piece of chewed-up gum for his collection. SpongeBob tosses it when he realizes it wasn't a piece of chewed gum after all, just a $500 bill.
* In Pentecostal and Charismatic circles, the spurious Scriptural practice of "pleading the blood" that takes place within their meetings, since they believe that Jesus Christ's pure sinless blood has actual supernatural power over all things earthly and supernatural.
* In "People Are Bunny", Bugs answered a quiz show in a phone booth, and the prize money comes through the change slot.
* In "People Who Love Peepholes", Alan moves out of the house and leaves Jake behind.
* In perhaps one of the darker examples of this trope, there is a book you can read in
* In perhaps one of the most bizarre applications of the rule ever, the
* In perhaps one of the most poorly thought out attacks in history, the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor during World War II was intended to scare the US into remaining neutral rather than joining the Allies. Of course, the US had been aiding the Allies with supplies for years at that point and had been desperately searching for a reason to justify entering into the war in a military capacity. This was less about justifying it internationally — the other Allied forces were happy to have the US join the fight and would not have complained regardless of the pretext — and more about justifying it domestically, since public opinion within the US was fairly split about whether they should enter the war. Then the Japanese attacked and any resistance to joining the war evaporated as now it would look worse NOT to retaliate. However, the idea that it was meant to "scare" the US is historically suspect. Pearl Harbor was
* In perhaps the greatest example of universe welding, the efforts of the author of
* In perhaps the most controversial and infamous retcon in the series, if the Warden PC in
* In perhaps the most memorable chain of cases ever, the identity of the
* In perhaps the most multi-layered display of Adam Westing in film,
* In perhaps the oddest example of this trope and a complete inversion of the usual
* In "Permanent Record Wrecker", when a boy in a child cart gets sent flying over a produce bin and crashes into several jars of
* In "Perry", Clark's powers start going haywire due to solar flares. When his mother calls him in for lunch, he tries to get back in the house, only to find himself at Lake Tahoe. When he tries to run back, he only makes it to Colorado Springs before his powers shut off, forcing him to take the bus home.
* In "Personal Business", when Maxwell goes to tell Fran she can't have her boyfriend in her room, Niles tells C.C. that he is "Upstairs with Miss Fine. Discussing the possibility of having sex in her room".
* In "Persuasion", Chloe and Tess had a brutal fight during which Tess grabs the front of Chloe's coat and punches her in the face repeatedly. Nope, nothing. Not to mention Tess tackled Chloe through a glass table and the latter smashes her with a glass bottle...
* In "Pest of the West", SpongeBob has to clean jellyfish droppings from a statue of his Wild West ancestor SpongeBuck.
* In Peter Benchley's "Beast", the titular giant squid is moments from finishing the remaining characters when it is attacked, killed, and presumably eaten by an equally massive sperm whale.
* In Peter Brook's theatrical (and later, television) adaptation; the sole survivor is Arjuna's son Abhimanyu's pregnant wife, Uttarā.

* In "Peternormal Activity", Peter, Quagmire, Joe, and Cleveland punch a hook-handed man named Albert to death at the
* In "Peter, Peter, Caviar Eater" Peter asks Brian to teach him how to be a gentleman. Brian suggests that Peter try to have a polite conversation.
* In "Peter's Got Woods" when Brian dates Meg's African-American teacher Shauna and tries to be a kiss-ass to her.
* In Peter Shaffer's "Black Comedy", Shaffer even writes this into the stage directions. The main character has surreptitiously borrowed his neighbor's very expensive furniture to impress a guest, but then there is a power outage and the neighbor comes home unexpectedly, prompting the lead to scramble about replacing the furniture while his girlfriend stalls the neighbor. At some point, the lead accidentally drops a priceless sculpture at his neighbor's feet — and the neighbor, who finally figures out what's going on, simply says to the lead, "I think I'm going to have to smash you." On top of this, the stage directions say that he is speaking "in the quiet voice of the very, very dangerous."
* In "Pete's House of Villains" Pete is on the receiving end of this with the exact same "no, you will be fired" line after getting annoyed with the other villains' work and trying to fire them.
* In "Pete's House of Villains", several guests complain about the villains-on-staff stealing their stuff, including a mute
* In "Pet Sounds", the gang is petsitting Cody and realize that he can do tricks if he gets treats as a reward. Jet ends up eating a dog treat, and remarks that it's better than the school cafeteria food on Bortron 7.
* In Philadelphia and the surrounding areas there are ads for the jeweler Steven Singer that say "I hate Steven Singer".
* In Philadelphia, there's a series of highway billboards which are all black with white text which only say "I HATE STEVEN SINGER" without any other information. Turns out the advertisements are
* In Philadelphia, two cars from a powered-down passenger train somehow became uncoupled from the others, and rolled down the tracks for several blocks with two SEPTA rail employees aboard. Unable to activate the brakes with the power off, they had no way to stop the cars; fortunately, an uphill slope brought them to a halt before they encountered any obstacles.
* In Philadelphia, when you see a yellow light, you can slow down and stop if you want to, but the guy behind you isn't expecting you to.
* In Philip K Dick’s novel “Flow My Tears, The Policeman Said”, the police and the National Guard (often referred to as “pols” and “nats” in the story) have come to restore order and install a dictatorship in the United States following a Second Civil War. They enforce checkpoints throughout the country, and those who don’t provide identification are shipped off to labor camps.
* In "Phineas and Ferb and the Temple of Juatchadoon", Phineas tries to figure out how to get a key out from under a glass dome, when Isabella points out "Or,
* In "Phineas and Ferb-Busters!" and "Summer Belongs to You", Candace witnesses the boys' project at the start and runs to get Linda, but once they enter the backyard, the project is gone with no explanation of how it disappeared.
* In "Phineas and Ferb Get Busted!", Linda calls Candace "the best daughter ever" when she finally realizes what the boys were up to in her absence.
* In "Phineas And Ferb Get Busted", the boys are sent to a reformatory school after their mother catches their latest project. The program was designed
* In "Phineas and Ferb Interrupted", Perry goes to OWCA to rewind and replay the tapes of his most recent fight with Doof; the rewind-and-replay reveals that Doof's latest -Inator fired off
* In "Phineas and Ferb's Clip-Tastic Countdown", Doofenshmirtz gets frustrated when Perry the Platypus shows up to thwart his evil scheme yet again.
* In "Phineas and Ferb's Hawaiian Vacation", Candace screams as she falls over a waterfall
* In "Phineas' Birthday Clip-o-Rama" Make-A-Wish kid Tabitha Comstock voices the girl at the party who says, "You're the best!" after everyone wishes Phineas a happy birthday.

* In Phi's ending K will reveal himself by referencing a line said earlier by another character:
* In "Phish And Wildlife," Hank and Bobby's camping trip is being ruined by an army of hippies who keep taking their equipment. When Hank tells the park ranger he knows how to get rid of them, the ranger wants to start a fight with a fire hose and riot gear. Hank sensibly tells him to turn off the park services (running water and restrooms) instead, forcing the hippies out when they refuse to learn to survive on their own.
* In "Phoenix Rising": "Argh! I'm stabbed! Less painful than that pun!"
* In "Photo Finish," a landlady catches the guys snooping in an apartment she owns. Hutch says, "We're the police." The landlady replies, "And I'm Tatum O'Neal."
* In Photoshop 6, holding Ctrl+Alt and going to Help and About will reveal an image of a blue anthropomorphic cat in BDSM gear, titled "Venus in Furs".
* In physics and metrology, there are seven SI base units: Meter (length), kilogram (mass), second (time), kelvin (temperature), mole (amount of substance), ampere (electric current), and candela (luminous intensity).
* In physics, the failure of the Michelson-Morley experiment led to the conclusion that the aether theory of electromagnetism had to be debunked. This, combined with the establishment of Hendrik Lorentz' transformation formulae, gave birth to Einstein's theory of relativity, one of the seminal fields of modern physics alongside quantum mechanics.
* In "Picasso Finger Painting", when the team goes to steal a painting and they begin describing their plan in what looks like a straight set-up of this trope. The plan does end up needing to be aborted, as expected; later in the episode they end up
* In "Pickles", a supposed error on a Krabby Patty order causes SpongeBob
* In "Pickles", Bubble Bass ends up gaslighting SpongeBob by complaining that SpongeBob forgot the pickles on his order, while hiding them under his tongue the entire time. This briefly drives SpongeBob into insanity, and not only is he convinced that he can't remember how to make a Krabby Patty, but he also forgets basic tasks such as how to dress, arrange his house, go to bed, and even put words together properly.
* In "Pickles", SpongeBob gets so upset about forgetting to put pickles on a Krabby Patty that he is unable to remember how to prepare one. It gets so bad he can't do
* In "Pickles", Squidward serves as the replacement fry cook when SpongeBob loses his confidence, and doesn't do a very good job of it.
* In Pick Up The Phone by Dragonette the singer stars as one of these singing to "Cherry", reminding her not to be very serious and singing about all their exploits "painting the town till it was up in smoke". Though
* In Picture Drama 07, Ashford apparently has a "Cross-dressing festival". Cue Suzaku in a
* In "Picture Perfect", while trying to make his sisters look presentable for a sibling photo reshoot, Lincoln removes Lisa's glasses and puts them on Leni to make the latter look smarter (than she already is, as he himself says).
* In "Pigerella", when Nanny accuses Piggy of sneaking snacks from the kitchen (when it was actually Scooter and Skeeter who did it, Piggy was trying to return them), she makes Piggy clean the kitchen by herself as punishment, and tells Scooter and Skeeter to keep an eye on Piggy. When Piggy complains about being treated like Cinderella, a
* In "Pigs Make Me Sneeze", it seems like Gerald will sneeze loudly but he sneezes quietly instead.
* In "Pig Trouble in Little Tina", Tina has a series of nightmares about being tormented by the ghost of a fetal pig she had to dissect in science class.
* In "Pikachu's Goodbye", Pikachu befriends a small Pikachu. It's never made explicit if it was small to signify it as a baby (the episode predates Pichu's reveal) or small to signify it as female. In
* In "Pilot", a domestic terrorist named Andrew Reinhardt plants a bomb in a bank and is injured when it goes off prematurely. An innocent bystander named Katherine McAllister suffers much more serious injuries and dies in "Cora and Arnie". This leads her husband Stephen to shoot and kill Reinhardt as he is being transferred out of St. Eligius.

* In "Pilot", Orson Bailey develops telekinesis, becoming one of the first of the 4400 to exhibit powers. He can't control his telekinetic powers, which manifest when he is angry and intensify the angrier that he gets.
* In "Pilot", Richard initially has trouble grasping the fact that things have improved dramatically for African-Americans since he disappeared in 1951. At a café, he is astonished to see white and black people socialising in public and sitting at the same tables with no one finding it the least bit unusual or objectionable. This hits home as immediately before he was abducted, he was beaten up by the white members of his army unit because he was dating Lily's grandmother Lily Bonham. Richard is also shocked to discover that the Secretary of State and the National Security Advisor are both black in 2004.
* In "Pilot", Tom talks to his comatose son Kyle on a regular basis. He tells him about the unusually close comet that he is heading toward Earth, which turns out to be the ball of the light containing the 4400. Kyle's mother Linda also talks to him briefly.
* In "Pimple Samosa", the audience at the TV studio chant "Sa-mo-sa! Sa-mo-sa!" after Samosa stands up for his talking pimple, Peter, and decides not to use the pimple cream the studio is testing out, also inadvertently revealing the talk show's host is
* In "Pineapple Fever", when Squidward locks himself in SpongeBob's room, he gets hungry and finds a bag of food to eat. When Gary wants to eat some, Squidward refuses to share until realizing that he's eating snail food and spits it out in disgust.
* In "Pinkie Apple Pie," Goldie Delicious clears some cats to get at a book. She blows at the last cat... and it falls apart into dust.
* In "Pinkie Pride", a song duel includes two live-action cutaways (the first one to a rubber chicken dancing on strings, and the second one to a serene baby alligator).
* In "Pinkie Pride", Fluttershy reacts with shock when Pinkie Pie challenges Cheese Sandwich to a Goof-Off... then admits to Applejack that she doesn't know what a Goof-Off is.
* In Piñata Party with a target score, finishing a level without reaching it will make the screen black and displays the message "You missed the target score: current score/target score". Similar with the situation mentioned before, the game over message also lowers while the screen goes black.
* In "Pipe Dreams", the parents get fed up with the bathroom lines and build a second, secret bathroom.
* In "Piranha Germs", after Shake injects himself with piranha bacteria, it devours his body from the inside bringing out infected veins.
* In "Pirate Shipping", Cheerilee and Big Mac wake up on a mattress, at the bottom of a deep hole, with a bridal veil on Cheerilee's head, and neither of them has any idea how they got there. The Cutie Mark Crusaders are nearby and more than happy to explain
* In "Pity The Prize", Pa has a long list for the visiting weather reporter which includes a greeting and the tasks he wants accomplished with the guidance expected from her.
* In "Pixtopia", the mines that pixies sentence debtors to work in prevent magic from being cast.
* In "Pizza Delivery", SpongeBob and Squidward have to deliver a Pizza to a customer for the new Krusty Krab pizza delivery service. After a long, grueling journey through nowhere, SpongeBob reveals he can ride a rock as if it was an animal, and rides it to the customer, who was right next to the Krusty Krab. The customer rejects the pizza because it didn't come with a drink. Not amused at all, Squidward gives it to him
* In place of Jimmy Olsen at the Daily Planet is a young woman named Jenny in

* In places where same-sex marriage isn't legally recognized, this is the default status of long-term gay couples. Even if vows are exchanged, such occasions are often referred to as "commitment ceremonies" rather than weddings since they hold no legal status. Where this
* In places where science is strong (e.g. a scientific laboratory), magic is slightly weaker, and vice versa.
* In places where there are no nearby rosebushes or flower shops, rose petals and/or the scent of roses heralds the arrival of
* In places with electric showers, a plumbing network that has the toilet and the shower in the same manifold (which is doable but considered incorrect for reasons that go farther than thermal comfort) will cause this, either because suddenly the shower's resistor is heating up less water at a time, or because the flow gets so low the heating is disabled altogether. In this case, faucets can't achieve the trope, since the loss pressure on the system caused by them is irrelevant compared to a flush.
* In places with high stellar density as (the centers of) star clusters or centers of galaxies, as well as in
* In Plain Sight: Both the lead character and her partner pull out their backup weapon in order to drive off some assassins coming after the witness they're protecting. Played realistically: the only time anyone manages to hit anyone during that gunfight is using a single gun, and the two guns are used more for suppressive fire than to actually kill anyone.
* In Plain Sight, by its very nature, often deals with Informants who are now on the run from their former employers.
* In Plain Sight features U.S. Marshals involved in this program and the various plights of their charges.
* in plain sight from taking the roses she needed so she can wait for the florist to fumble around and pick them up.
* In Plain Sight has actor J. Grant Albrecht, who uses a wheelchair due to a spinal condition, play an Assistant District Attorney who just happens to be in a wheelchair. His disability has never been mentioned on the show.
* In Plain Sight is that the people entering Witness Protection have to leave their old lives behind and make a new life for themselves under a new identity. Some embrace the opportunity and thrive but others cannot adjust and try to reach back to their old life thus causing serious problems for the US Marshals tasked with protecting them.
* In Plain Sight. It was a doctor removing kidneys from gastric bypass patients, since they are operating in the same area and the patient is likely to write off any problems caused by loss of kidney to complications from surgery.
* In Plain Sight Jinx has Brandi pretend to be her and attend AA in her place, which is how Brandi ends up meeting her current boyfriend.
* In Plain Sight Marshall proposed to Abigail by attaching a ring to her target when they go to the shooting range for their one-year anniversary. But then, Abigail is a police detective and it was her favorite range.
* In Plain Sight, Mary hides cocaine from the police and Marshall Service to protect her little sister. The final shot of the episode is of the back of a line-painting machine on a football field, implying that this is how she got rid of the evidence.
* In Plain Sight: Played with. Mary just wants to smear lipstick on Marshall's face to make them look less suspicious when they confront the diamond smugglers, but he mistakes her intentions and tries to kiss her. When she tells him off, he unapologetically responds, "I'm a guy. It's what we do."
* In Plain Sight shows the Witsec client of the week and how they ended up having to join Witsec in the first place in the teasers.
* In Plain Sight so very well... until she's safe, secure, and her car won't start. Then the sobbing and breakdown ensue.
* In Plain Sight. We're constantly told that she's gorgeous, a "hot blonde" and very attractive.
* In Plain Sight: When a witness is caught out as a bigamist, he seems to want both of his families to merge into one big happy one. The wives and kids do not agree. Everyone agrees that they don't want to see the dad very much, if at all, but the end of the episode shows the moms letting the kids play together.

* In Plain Sight, when Mary's drive to the airport to chase after Rafe is stopped by all kinds of traffic...and a train...and Mary driving her car onto the train tracks and getting her dress caught in the door...as the plane flies over her head.
* In Plain Sight, which stars her husband Frederick Weller. Bonus points because their characters went on a date once, but she wasn't interested.
* "In Plain Sight": While trying to decrypt the computer of an escaped drug kingpin/cop killer, Charlie discovers that he is also concealing pornographic images of his very young daughter on his hard drive.
* In Plan B's concept Album "The Defamation of Strickland Banks", after Strickland rejects a
* In "Planes, Trains, and Newtmobiles", a rocket launches off to Russia with Ned and Newton in it, and when it flies off we pan up to the sky where it vanishes into a star before we cut to a view from space.
* In "Planet Bears", all three bears go mad with hunger after an unsuccessful trip to the grocery store and start fighting over a granola bar Grizz happens to find.
* In "Planet of the Spiders", the eponymous villains worship the Great One as a sort of
* In "Plankton's Old Chum", Plankton makes up the holiday Chum Day to get SpongeBob to hide his chum throughout the town, which results in Bikini Bottom being covered in chum the next morning. While everyone is enjoying it and Plankton takes credit for it, the health inspector charges him $1,000,000,000 unless he eats it all. He complies, ending up very obese at the end of the episode.
* In "Plankton's Regular", Mr. Krabs' eyestalks turn into lightbulbs when he gets the idea to steal Plankton's chum recipe.
* In platformers, Goomba Stomp or basic moves, as opposed to the things you can do with powerups. Vital since the said powerups aren't always available, and if you lose yours mid-level, what then?
* In "Plato's Stepchildren", the Enterprise crew discovers kironide, a
* In "Playing God," a small proto-universe is created inside the station. The crew quickly figure a way to destroy it only for Dax to find evidence life exists inside it. Kira is dubious there could be intelligent life after only a few hours of its creation. Bashir points out they have no idea how time passes in this proto-universe and thus, billions of years could have gone by already. The idea of slaying countless innocent beings means the crew have to find a new way to handle this proto-universe before it destroys them.
* In "Playing God", Jadzia Dax straight up says that they "picked up some kind of subspace seaweed" while out in the runabout shuttle.
* In "Play It Again, Wufgang," Penfold's singing makes the episode's villain Wufgang Bach comment that he should be on Wufgang's side. He meant that as a compliment.
* , in Plaza, Singapore, has holes in the torso and head. They represent open-heartedness and open-mindedness, respectively.
* In "Please Homer, Don't Hammer 'Em", peanut products are banned from Springfield Elementary due to someone (Principal Skinner) having an allergy, and Bart asks Groundskeeper Willie who it is.
* In "Pluto's Christmas Tree", Pluto runs through a snowbank, and the snow he displaces is in the exact shape of himself, but with a longer body.
* In "Pluto's Party", Pluto gets a present shaped like a huge bone, but when he bites into it, it turns out to be a wagon.
* In "Poetry Mixup" and "Bones, Son of Cyrano," Harriet is ecstatic thinking she received a love note from Mr. Boynton.
* In point of fact, the Metro often gets a large number of this sort of ad, since so many riders are in some way connected to the government. Advertisers range from pro-Israel lobby groups to the freight train industry association to medical organizations—not to mention virtually every single country that can afford advertising on the Metro, and not just the usual "Visit Our Country!" stuff you'll find everywhere but also "Invest In Our Country!" as well.

* In point of fact, the mind transfer concept was only used twice (the first
* In point of fact, the NORMAL operation of the Lawgivers is to vanish anyone who breaks any active law. The New Hong Kong situation developed because when the planet was being settled, a programmer hacked the Lawgiver list and added the "No New Laws" rule, which everyone promptly voted into effect. The programmer has vanished because the law against interfering with the Lawgivers was already active, but none of the other laws could ever go active, causing all the Lawgivers to leave except for one observer.
* In "Point of No Return", Londo dismisses Vir's attempt to describe alien cultures accurately and objectively and declares that his reports would be better received if he rewords them to suggest that aliens are decadent and immoral.
* In "Point of No Return", Martin notices that the device he stole from Tanner is counting down, everybody assumes there's a bomb in the facility and makes their dramatic escape. When nothing happens, there's a few seconds of awkward silence and it's revealed the countdown was actually for the self-destruct of Martin's escape pod, several miles away.
* In "Poisoning the Well", the scientific search for a Wraith immunity drug has become a religion, with libraries of knowledge as a church analogue and a famous scientist's lab notes are a sort of holy text. The real clincher is the population's eagerness to take the unsafe product, even when they know exactly how unsafe it is.
* In "Poison Pen" they suspect a woman poisoned her husband. She eventually admits that when he died she was somewhere else...getting something she could use to poison him.
* In "Pokémon Scent-sation", Ash accuses a perfume seller of ripping off other customers. In response, the store owner kicks him out this way.
* In Pokémon XY, when an Inkay started stealing Team Rocket's food, James used some of it to capture it.
* In Pokemon Ultra Sun and Ultra Moon, the Charjabug you meet during the fifth Island Challenge are named Onejabug, Twojabug, Threejabug, Fourjabug, Fivejabug, Sixjabug, Sevenjabug, Eightjabug and Ninejabug.
* In Pokequest 2, evil fairies destroy Onii-Chan's house along with the rest of Nuvema town.
* In Poland and Russia, it's very common for non-children's productions to have alternate voice-over dubs. Both countries have gradually begun to dub more mature works (and blockbuster films) with full casts.
* In Poland, crosswords (unlike their English equivalents) are made up solely of nouns. Apart from basic crosswords, several other types are popular:
* In Poland, in 1944, a young priest-in-training is hunted down the street by a Hitler Youth. The priest trips and falls, and the Hitler Youth proceeds to kick him while he's down. The priest shouts:
* In Poland, the movie was dubbed twice; the original in 1961 and the current in 1999 (this one wasn't released until 2005).
* In politics, aides, advisors, and operatives often take actions without telling their boss— precisely so that if the situation does blow up in their faces, they can (truthfully) claim that they'd acted alone and their boss didn't know. This is called "plausible deniability". (The word is often misused to refer to a politician who
* In Polly's Halloween 2019 route, there's this exchange, with kicks off the arc's shift into plot territory.
* In "Poltergeeks," Timmy's parents become ghost hunters and capture ghosts (or rather, Timmy's fairies pretending to be ghosts) using a vacuum-like device as a
* In Pom Pom's Eleven, the main plot point is Homestar Runner and his friends getting back at Homeschool Winner for embezzling money from them. The reason that he did this was because he grew tired of Homestar Runner being in charge of the website despite being less intelligent than he was.
* In "Ponyville Confidential", Apple Bloom tries to interview Granny Smith for a story for the school newspaper, but Granny Smith is more interested in going over old family albums, including a few embarrassing baby pictures of Apple Bloom.

* In "Ponyville Confidential", Pinkie Pie is photographed wearing a lampshade while dancing in a punch bowl, as part of a newspaper story about how she is an out-of-control party animal.
* In "Pooh Sticks Get Stuck," the mystery is why there isn't any water in one side of the steam. Roo suggests that the water went down the drain. Tigger agrees "I bet you're right. Hoo hoo! ... What's a drain?" Roo explains about how when Kanga gives him a bath she pulls the plug and the water goes down the drain. Darby points out that streams don't have plugs or drains.
* In "Pop Goes the Ed", he apparently regards the quiche Jimmy brought to the party as bad luck.
* In "Pop Goes the Ed", when the boys try to cool off in a freezer. Sarah kicks them out as one large block of ice, which quickly melts in the sun... taking the boys with it.
* In "Pop Rocks and Coke!", this happens to Junior when he's in the middle of a
* In pornographic films, the term "money shot" often refers to shots that show ejaculation, typically onto an actress's face or breasts (most uses of the term "money shot" are referring to this figuratively).
* In "Porous Pockets", SpongeBob and Patrick find a valuable pearl, which they were going to use as a volleyball. If a scrupulous pawn shop owner didn't come by and buy it from them for a "small fortune", this trope would have almost certainly gone its natural course. At the end of the episode, they're about to do the same with a huge diamond Patrick found in a mine.
* In "Porous Pockets", SpongeBob becomes rich after he and Patrick find a massive pearl, and after
* In Portable Ops, Lt. Cunningham, after Snake boarded the elevator, explained that he was actually working for the Department of Defense and not for either Gene or for the CIA, and explained that the DOD planned on having Gene launch a nuke at the Soviet Union in order to tarnish the CIA's reputation as an efficient intelligence group, and later nuke the San Hieronymo Peninsula to eliminate any involvement from America, even using a Soviet-made Davy Crockett just for good measure, and exposits the fact that Snake was also being used by the DOD. Justified in that he did actually think Snake would side with Cunningham (hence why he told him), which Snake proved him wrong by attacking him.
* In Port Arthur, a Victorian era prison town in Tasmania, there is a very impressive gatehouse to the military barracks... which you can bypass completely by going around the corner and stepping over a half-meter high wall.
* In Port Royal, Jack Sparrow turns into a skeleton in sections of moonlight after becoming cursed, just like the other pirates. However, he can be damaged when he is non-skeletal form, while the other pirates cannot, and is able to be hurt by mundane means while the Pirates can only be harmed because of
* In Portugal all prices shown include tax, and while groceries etc are still priced .99ish, most small things at cafes such as a coffee or cake are in whole euros. It's probably to speed sales when the cafe is busy.
* In Portugal, Herman José had a recurring skit where he channeled an English-speaking Attenborough ersatz with a Brazilian Portuguese voice-over usually as means to criticize behavior foibles:
* In Portugal, the show was known as "Os Fixóis", probably a pun that combines "fish" (which also corresponds to "fixe" - "cool") and, most likely, the "-óis" suffix in "anzóis" (literally "fish hooks". How this can be translated into English is anyone's guess).
* In Portuguese, "Caçar" is "to hunt" and "Casar" is "to wed."
* In possibly the deadliest single incident of this in history, approximately 2500 people, not counting aircraft passengers, were killed in a series of coordinated attacks on September 11, 2001, in which terrorists flew three hijacked planes into the World Trade Center and the Pentagon. The ground death toll was meant to be even
* In possibly the only Real Life example of this that wasn't a prank,
* In possibly the weirdest (and least explained) version, the succubus kills men in order to drain them of their

* In "Postage Due", Miss Brooks plays the hard boiled detective as she searches for the missing postman.
* In Post-Crisis continuity, Gold Kryptonite part is "powerless for 30 seconds", mostly because
* In post-UDI Rhodesia, faced with attack from guerrilas against cattle, the government took at giving to mercenaries a daily wage of R$7, with a bounty of R$ 750 for each caught rustler.
* In "Potty Mouth", Lynn Sr. accidentally calls Dr. Shuttleworth "Dr. Scuttlebutt".
* In "Potty Training", after Ian finds out that Anthony is potty-trained, he and his friends exile him to the playground. After getting bullied by
* In 'Power Erupts', WESAYSO exec, Earl's boss Mr. Richfield invites the Sinclaire family to dinner at a fancy restaurant in order to convince Robbie to sell his volcano-powered generator designs...after WESAYSO has discredited the idea with some mass-media mudslinging.
* In "Power-Noia," Buttercup — within her nightmare landscape — tells Blossom she can't fly. But this is through her own paralysis over spiders than it is forgetting how to fly.
* In "Powerplay", a society has split into two factions, the Primitives who wanted to live the simple life, and the High-Techs. It's no guess who turn out to be the villains.
* In "Power Ponies", Fluttershy's eyes turn red when a firefly was flicked out of the crosshairs of the weapon as part of her
* In "Power", the team is chasing a serial rapist rather than a killer.
* In "Power Trip", Rocko is left in charge of Kind-Of-A-Lot-O Comics and hires Filburt as extra help. But after Rocko goes crazy with power and fires his friend, Filburt ends up in the street, where he is run over by a marching band, cars, a cruise liner, a bullet train, and a stray moon.
* In "P.P.O.V (Pony Point of View) Spike is seen eating some popcorn while listening to Pinkie Pie's version of what happened on the disastrous boat ride she, Applejack, and Rarity were on.
* In practically all women's sports, the Americans are top dogs by a wide margin, even sports that Americans aren't known for such as Euro Footy. Softball was once an Olympic event until the American team played a perfect Olympics — not giving up a single run in the entirety of an Olympic Games. Such was the dominance of the Americans that the game was removed from the Olympics.
* In practical terms, Freudian psychology was individualistic (Romantic), articulating that every person was messed up in a specific way that there was no one single method to cure trauma, and that a cure might not even be desirable since
* In practice, a lot of angels openly refer to themselves and each other with male pronouns). Angels like 82 White Chain who spend extended periods in contact with — and caring about — humanity are known to become more humanlike, which includes developing gender (in 82's case, she's becoming female). This is not portrayed as necessarily a bad thing.
* In practice, not all forces set their shells' fuses properly. Much of the civilian casualties and property losses as a result of the Japanese Empire's surprise-attack on the US Navy's Pacific Fleet were from anti-aircraft fire.
* In practice, this attack pattern appears to be a "head straight for the target and keep firing" manoeuver.
* In practice this is usually played straight with Jeremy and the "code" usually isn't brought up when Jeremy's car needs a serious problem repairs, probably because he tends to be much less capable of doing it. Ironically, he is usually the one to invoke the code (causing the trope to be averted) when anyone else's car is broken down.
* In practice, this may have led to more crimes as well as worse crimes: many judges and juries modified the charge, ignored evidence, or outright acquitted certain offenders so as to avoid having to hang them for some of the more ridiculous statutes. Thus, it led to legal corruption and disrespect for the very law they were tasked to enforce. Ironically, because of this, the period under which the Bloody Code occurred actually had fewer executions. Moreover, death sentences were commonly commuted in more "ridiculous" cases and the offenders were

* In Praetoria the Medi-Port was created by Praetor Keyes (Anti-Matter). This is public knowledge and given in the Preatorian Tutorial. Later you also discover that he in fact stole and reverse engineered the technology from the Rikti.
* In Prairie Wrestling alliance, notoriously savage heel Michael Richard Blais—who refers to himself as "God's Gift To Wrestling"—calls his valet Connielynn Blais "God's Gift To Me". Their loving relationship is on constant display, as is his brotherly bond with his partner Brandon Van Danielson.
* In Praise of Pip", Max Phillips has been working as a bookie for the gangster Moran for 20 years.
* In "Pranks a Lot", SpongeBob and Patrick accidentally turn themselves invisible and decide to have some fun by terrorizing all of Bikini Bottom as "ghosts." Mr. Krabs is the lone holdout who boasts of his fearlessness and kits himself up with various charms and an impromptu suit of armor to keep them at bay. Unsurprisingly, Patrick and SpongeBob make short work of these defenses, and once they disable his specter deflector (a paddleball), all it takes is a single "boo" to send him running for the door in a panic.
* In "Pranksta Rap", Bart returns home from sneaking out to a rap concert his parents didn't want him to go to. He looks in the window and sees them angry that he disobeyed them, with Homer taking off his belt and saying Bart's going to be like "N.W.A.: Not Without Asswelts". This prompts Bart to fake his own kidnapping.
* In Pratchett's conception, Überwald is mainly Bavaria, Switzerland and Austria with a Discworld gloss, although he has introduced Far Überwald, where a language suspiciously like Russian is spoken; other locally born characters, such as vampire iconographer Otto Chriek, appear to have a possibly-Czech, possibly Polish, "Slavonic" identity to them.
* In "Pray Anything", this exchange occurs when the Simpsons are attending a WNBA game in Springfield:
* In pre-contact North America it was common for different cultures to adopt/absorb slaves or war prisoners into their captor's communities. This practice continued into the global era with some cultures, such as the Huron in central Ontario, dying out as a separate people (becoming absorbed into the Six Nations in the case of the Huron). Many cultural elements such as basket or clothing designs are carried on by their descendants, despite them now considering themselves members of the newer culture.
* In Pre-Crisis days, Krypton was run by the "Science Council" and described as a "technocracy". In practice, this seemed to be a sort of parliament where the representatives were picked for their
* In pre-Crisis on Infinite Earths continuity, Stacy Macklin appeared for several years in DC's Wonder Woman series. She made her final appearance in
* In "Predicting Murder", Inspector Poole comments that a local cocktail consisted of nothing but rum, lime, and ice, but somehow tasted like paint stripper.
* In "Preemptive Strike" Ensign Ro goes undercover to infiltrate a Maquis resistance group, and passes on her information by meeting Captain Picard in a bar, where she tells him to pretend he's buying her sexual services. The whole thing is presented as quite uncomfortable for both of them, as while Ro shares some
* In "Pre-Hibernation Week", Sandy has all of Bikini Bottom looking for SpongeBob. Frank the bodybuilder fish picks up a smaller fish, Francis, claiming to have found him. When Sandy points out that SpongeBob is square, Frank squeezes Francis into a square shape.
* In prehistoric Earth the shamans could force their souls into newborn bodies after death. Until the Daemons became strong enough to snatch their souls from the Warp. Then they decided to commit mass suicide and all reincarnate in a single immortal body, who became the God-Emperor of Mankind 40,000 years later.
* In "Prehistoric Ice Man" as Kyle and Stan get ready for their fight.
* In preparation for the imminent Rapture, Colbert advertised (on his show) shirts reading "Welcome Jesus!" And just in case, the other side of the shirt reads "
* In preparation for what would later be called the Battle of the Blackwater, Tyrion Lannister employs a guild of pyromancers to create mass quantities of what they call "the Substance" and others call "wildfire" to be flung by catapult at Stannis' ships. From the audience' perspective it appears to be similar to

* In preschool Kaname had a crush on his teacher. As a teenager he still
* In "Pre-School", Kenny has one of these when Stan tells him that a bully from preschool is being released from juvenile hall.
* in presence of the Sha, the sky will turn into a weird, white tunnel with a grayish center, a substance looking like oil is running down the walls of the tunnel, giving the impression that the world is being swallowed by a bizarre creature.
* In "Pressure Point", this is used to get a rendezvous code out of a
* In "Pressure", SpongeBob engages Sandy in a name-calling contest until all he can come up with is "not-wet person".
* In "Pressure" when Sandy dares SpongeBob, Patrick, Mr. Krabs and Squidward to go on dry land and they encounter a seagull. When SpongeBob asks if it knows Sandy, it turns to the camera.
* In "Pretense" SG-1 tails Jaffa ground forces on Tollana and discovers them fiddling around with the Tollans'
* In "Pretty in Pink" by Rachel Maude, Seedy Moon is about to give a speech at his engagement party to "friends, family, and Tila Tequila".
* In pretty much all such cases of accidental damage, the visitor is reassured that accidents happen and that they will not have to contribute towards the cost of restoration or have charges pressed against them. One notable exception is when two Norwegian kids ruined a 5000-year-old cave carving of a skier, by scratching into it with the intent of trying to make it more visible. In fairness, they turned themselves in to the authorities after the vandalism had been reported and issued a public apology.
* In pretty much any game where you fight Freeza as Super Saiyan Goku, he's likely going to be a very tough fight, whether he's the
* In pretty much every episode, Dream has at least one or two tricks or traps to try out against the hunters. There's usually at least one for every point in the run (the initial resource-gathering, the Nether run, the Ender Pearl hunting, and the End fight).
* In pretty much every HBP story, people smoke. And most everyone stops for cocktail hour.
* In pretty much every version the Major worries about being a sophisticated AI. As a full body cyborg (essentially a human brain in a robotic body) she worries about the difference between her and an AI, especially since she can't see the only thing that would prove that she's human anymore: her brain.
* In previous decades, national personifications were often used in political cartoons, with their interactions giving a summary of the artist's opinion or interpretation of then-recent international occurrences - for instance,
* In previous editions, lasguns were actually described as firing a discrete "bullet" of laser energy, described in at least one novel (and portrayed in at least one video game) as a twinkling ball of light that moves at about the same speed as a bullet, if not slower. This has been rectified as of the third edition of the game, so that all laser weapons are now assumed to fire actual laser beams (and are portrayed doing so in
* In previous editions, some units of the Space Wolves chapter and Nurgle's Plague Marines could use bolters/boltguns instead of bolt pistols. To elaborate, boltpistols classify as
* In previous editions, using any heat weapons (flamers, melta-guns, plasma weapons, and so on) did nothing to the Eldar Avatar... because he is a molten iron incarnation of the Eldar god of war. This has since been nerfed: he is now only immune to flamers and meltas.
* In previous episodes throughout the series, Prue (twice), Paige, Phoebe and Piper (together), and Chris were at some point locked up in muggle jails due to magical shenanigans. A recurring plot was them having to break out to fight the
* In previous games, you can only switch Personas once per turn, which means that if you switched to the wrong Persona by mistake, you were stuck with it. Now, you can switch Personas as much as you want until you use a skill, at which point the Persona is actually locked.

* In previous generations, popularity was a factor when deciding which Pokemon should get a regular evolution or a
* In previous versions, Karai and Leonardo don’t have all that much
* In pre-WWII Japan, seeing a fellow Japanese person do something un-Japanese, like
* In "Prey", a lone girl walks at night in the streets of Metropolis. And decides to walk down a dark alley. Her death before the opening sequence is so predictable you don't need spoiler tags.
* In "Prick Up Your Ears", Lois gets in hot water when she teaches sex education at the high school and is banned from the premises. As Peter tries to think of how he can get her inside to crash an abstinence lecture, the scene cuts to what looks like
* In "Prime Factors", a beautiful alien woman takes Harry Kim onto a
* In Prince Oberyn's first appearances, he writes a poem for his daughter Elia and tells Cersei he has eight bastard daughters. This is true in the books, but when the show introduced the Sand Snakes next season, they only used the three eldest (Obara, Nymeria and Tyene). Tyene is also
* In "Princess and the Pop Star", Vanna Banana's speaking voice is provided by Rebecca Walker while her singing was provided by Moriah Peters.
* In "Princess Spike" the titular character is shown using his connection to Twilight to make himself feel important and by abusing the authority to enjoy indulgent perks, and the episode tries to teach that this is wrong by having things result in a chain reaction that ruins a major diplomatic event. However, since the
* In "Princess Twilight Sparkle, Part 2", Discord shrinks when Fluttershy scolds him not to try anything just because
* in "Princess Twilight Sparkle" that Fluttershy's Stare now works on Discord, implying Discord's immunity might have come from his Lack of Empathy.
* In prison, Fisk buys the loyalty of the Valdez brothers by ensuring their mother's financial well-being.
* In Prison — Real knives are hard to get and quickly confiscated, so convicts improvise a
* In Prison with the Rogues is sent to the same prison as the criminals they previously put behind bars.
* In Prison with the Rogues: The hero is locked up in the same prison alongside vengeful criminals they previously put behind bars.
* In "Pristine" by Snail Mail, told from the perspective of an insecure lover, asks their crush who they change for (a.k.a. who they really like), and then offers to make herself into her lover's type of girl:
* In "Private Channel", all of the exterior shots of the plane are taken from
* In "Private Snafu vs. Malaria Mike", Mike misses Snafu and bites a tree, which then develops the symptoms of malaria and keels over.
* In probably one of the fastest instants of the trope, Hatenko is introduced and he comes across as one of the few sane people in Bobobo, even expressing shock at how Bobobo could forget him so fast. And then he sees Don Patch and
* In probably the best example of subversion you stumble into a Sith mentor testing some students. They suck so he ponders on a proper punishment for them: death or torture- and turns to you for an advice. You can approve violent choices OR you can tell him to simply let them go. Just because
* In "Problem at Pollensa Bay", a young man comes to Parker Pyne for help with his overbearing mother who refuses to accept the man's fiance. Parker Pyne plans a complicated
* In "Procrastination", a newscaster not only does a report on SpongeBob trying to avoid writing an essay, but also sticks his head out of SpongeBob's TV to confront him, causing a panicked SpongeBob to chop it in half.
* in productions where she's not even played as particularly obnoxious or ugly a genderswapped example of the same trope as far as Magda's concerned... until he bites her, at least.)

* In professional football, some infractions haven't changed. Just the names of the infractions. "Offsides" fifty years ago is now "neutral zone infraction" while "illegal procedure" is now "false start."
* In professional hockey, teams worry that opposing players will deliberately target an injured player's weak spots and so they give injury information in the vaguest possible terms. An "Upper Body Injury" can be anything from a broken arm to a sinus infection to a concussion. During the 2020 playoffs, due to the COVID-19 pandemic, even those descriptions were done away with in favor of describing all players who cannot play at the moment only as "unfit to participate", inadvertently invoking the
* In Professional Wrestling, the most common source of camp gays is the exotico class. Wrestlers who specialize in emasculating their opponents into submissions. The Christopher Street Connection are likely the most notable among English speaking fans. Of course, some exoticos are
* In professional wrestling, this was also more pronounced. After years of being held back or suffering
* In Professional Wrestling, this was a stereotype directed at Canadians at least until the efforts of
* In "Profile in Silver", Professor Joseph Fitzgerald intends to record the
* In "Profit and Lace", Quark is forced to do a gender-swap and pose as a female. Every male Ferengi he encounters (even his own family) comments on what a lovely female he makes, to the point where the Nagus (who knows he's really Quark) can't keep his hands off him and a prominent businessman is completely smitten with him (even after being told Quark is really male). As it turns out, with Federation medical technology, gender reassignment is an outpatient cosmetic procedure.
* In "Progeny", Clark reveals to Chloe that he told her mother everything he knows about Chloe before she
* In programming, functions will sometimes only take a list as input and won't work on a stand-alone element. If such functions need to be used on a stand-alone element, the latter is usually replaced with the programming equivalent of a one-item list.
* In programming languages that aren't strongly typed, you can usually declare a variable without specifying what kind of information it has to hold, and the compiler will just do its best to figure it out from context. Which can lead to some fairly spectacular (and sometimes difficult to diagnose) failures if, for instance, you intend a variable to hold an integer but accidentally refer to it as if it were a boolean — where a 0 will be read as "False" but
* In programming, people tend to wait until the end to optimize code because they think it takes too much time and effort, but it mostly takes so much because it grows more complicated due to the delay.
* In Project Phantasma, however, both get one-upped by the FINGER part, which you unlock once you top the Arena. One of the lightest parts in the game, but ridiculously overwhelming with its wide-spread, but tightly concentrated rapid fire which gives it extreme close-range power and doubled by the fact it carries 3,000 rounds. Phantasma alone can be killed in less in a minute with this thing.
* In "Prometheus", Jack and Teal'c use this method on the eponymous ship to get rid of the
* In "Prometheus", Major Carter and Quinn escort a news crew into a top secret prototype spaceship without checking their equipment for weapons (They even had a Zat!) and with only two guards as escorts.
* In "Promises Kept", Slade Wilson and Oliver Queen track down Slade's missing son Joe, only to find he's become an amoral mercenary killer in emulation of his father when he was
* In "Promortyus", a species of Face Huggers reproduce by forcing their hosts to shit eggs and die. At one point Rick and Morty are made into hosts, though they are able to remove the aliens. At the end of the episode, they suddenly feel a lot of pain in their guts and think this means they are about to shit eggs and die. It turns out they just

* In promotional material, Papa Smurf is shown wearing a Santa Claus suit, and in various forms of media he is often confused with being Santa.
* In prone position, a Spider-Man ersatz aims an M4 rifle — Come on enjoy the pleasure together!
* In "Proper Preparation And Planning", Ashley gets mad about Queen Maeve walking out on her impending TV interview because her ex-girlfriend Elena is in hospital. Maeve casually flips her the bird as the elevator doors close, to the amusement of Starlight and Stormfront.
* In prophecies, Ascalon is a mix of various medieval European areas, while the Charr seem somewhat based on
* In "Prophecy Girl", there's one on the television in the A/V room where vampires have slaughtered students.
* In "Prophets", several mooks are waiting for Root in a hotel lobby. First the
* In "Prosedür", the relationship between ex-lovers Rıdvan and Banu creates the story's conflict. Rıdvan still considers her one of his closest friends after they break up; however, Banu's lingering feelings for him complicate the situation considerably and results in frustration on both sides.
* In "Pro Se" Eleanor gets a client who insists on defending himself when she won't put up the defense he wants. With her as standby counsel, he does a surprisingly good job, even getting acquitted
* In prosperous times like these, dances like The Shimmy, The Charleston and The Black Bottom would set the dance floor ablaze with sensational flappers cutting the rug. The former was banned as bootleg, yet praised as a good aerobic dance; the latter two became the rage during the rest of the decade.
* In "Protected", a husband suspects his wife is having an affair when he discovers his wife has a pay-as-you-go mobile phone, and has been lying about working late at the dog shelter. He eventually steals the phone and uses it to lure the younger man she has been meeting into an ambush, where he
* In "Proteus", Finch rigs up an improvised version with seismograph equipment, measuring the micro-tremors from the interviewees hands as they rest on the table.
* In "Protocol", Lonnie, Kyle, and Rogelio sustain chemical burns all over their bodies from exposure to the spore storm. The next time they appear in season 4, they're healthy and have no visible scarring.
* In "Prototype", a genetically-engineered human named Khalek is found in one of Anubis's secret labs. It turns out that Anubis combined the Harsesis concept with Nirrti's hok'tar research to create a host that would have Goa'uld genetic memories (and their
* In "Prove It", D.W. wants to go to a science museum and tells other children false facts (like the "H" in "H
* In pro wrestling jargon this trope is referred to as "hotshot booking" or "hotshotting." While there are many examples of hotshotting in the industry, one of the more famous occasions was during the WCW vs. WWF rivalry in the late '90s, when shows were often changed on the fly in response to something the competing federation was up to.
* In pro wrestling lingo, a "botch" is a moment when someone screws up. Examples include when a performer
* In "Pseudo Sonic", Sonic and Lawrence both fall into Poison Flower Valley. The poison flowers make Sonic and Lawrence get extremely itchy, then bloat up like balloons. They stay that way for the rest of the episode (excluding, of course, the "
* In "Pseudo Sonic," the titular mecha is being piloted by a character whose family is being held hostage by Robotnik.
* In "PS I Love You", Uncle Phil tries to defend Judge Robertson's erratic behavior to avoid running against him:
* In "Psirens" this is played for laughs when Lister falls for the charms of a brain-sucking Space Siren who takes the shape of his boyhood crush, the older sister of one of his mates. We then cut to Lister making out with a nine-foot tall bug.
* In psych hospitals, where physical contact is prohibited, but patients wish to show support for one another nonetheless.

* In psychology, a person who displays a need to dominate and have multiple sexual relationships with woman is said to have Don Juanism.
* In psychology, "impostor syndrome" is a feeling where talent outstrips confidence. The so-called "impostor" is somebody who's actually pretty good at what they do but believes that they aren't really that good. When faced with proof of their success, they protest that it was a fluke, that they got lucky, or even insist that it wasn't them. This causes people who could do better to not seek promotions, pay raises, etc. because they believe that they aren't deserving of such things. In extreme cases, they live in fear that someone will realize they've been "faking it" and fire/leave/abandon them. These kinds of fears are almost never true and can hold people back from achieving their full potential. A big part of getting through impostor syndrome is being told and shown that "you're better than you think you are" repeatedly, both through concrete proof of accomplishment and positive reinforcement.
* In "PTA It Ain't So", Linda discovers that Joanne, the PTA president, has been
* in public, Sakura and Sasuke arguing whether Naruto or Anko is better in bed, and Sasuke getting into an extremely childish argument with Konohamaru (petty name-calling included).
* In public, Tom Baker held to the Doctor's standards, but in private, he was well known for drinking both before and during filming and being a right bloody terror to the production crew. This tendency only got worse in his later seasons, as he (rightly or wrongly) saw himself as the Doctor
* In Puerto Rico, the New Wrestling Stars Tag Team Champions Bandido and Crazy Rudy teamed as "Bad Guys"
* In "Pumm-Ra", Mumm-Ra is poking around Cats Lair in disguise. He's trying to open the lock on a door, and muses, "Ah, a very ancient lock design, unknown on Third Earth for a thousand years. Unknown, that is, except to one who has
* In "Pup Pup Boogie", the pups' human leader (who, ironically, is named Ryder) tries to fit inside Rubble's rig. It doesn't work.
* In "Puppy Skits", Martha remembers peeing in the house to get attention when Skits was a puppy and she was jealous of the attention.
* In "Pups and the Pirate Treasure", Skye sticks her head in a knothole only to discover it's full of dust. This causes her to sneeze, which makes her fly backwards.
* In "Pups Save a Surprise", there are a lot of jokes about Mr. Porter's butt getting stuck in a stump, or as Alex puts it, "
* In "Pups Save the PAW Patroller", Skye comes flying into the elevator with Marshall riding on her back.
* In Purgatorio, we learn that the island of Purgatory is the only piece of land in antipodes (a.k.a. the Southern Hemisphere), surrounded by a huge ocean that covers one full hemisphere. To his credit, Dante always remembers that the sun would be to the north in the antipodes. (And remarkably enough, he describes a constellation of four bright stars that sounds suspiciously like the Southern Cross, even though
* in Purgatory who helped him escape on the condition that Dean took Benny with him.
* In "Purple Party Pooper", it happens again. This time, Princess Celestia is deliberately extending the day because it's her birthday.
* In "Purple Party Pooper", Twilight and Rarity accidentally mention humans. Humans are apparently the
* In "Purple Party Pooper", Twilight threatens to rat out all of her friends. Fluttershy responds, "I can't go back to jail again! The warden is evil!"
* In Pursuit of Bark's Finest, at one point Madeline Zargosty gets her head blown off in a firefight. Courtesy of several backup brains and other redundancies this proves to be only a minor inconvenience, allowing her to keep fighting effectively for an extended period afterwards. Later on she gets her morph updated to have a detachable head as a normal feature instead of an emergency backup.
* In Pursuit of Bark's Finest features the crew of the eponymous Bark's Finest, who are a bunch of Type 1 space pirates. There won't be much plank-walking from them, but they're more than willing to threaten defensive freighters into handing over their cargo. That said they have some nuance in how they operate, as they conduct espionage and even have political parties aboard their ship.

* In Pursuit of Bark's Finest invoked this trope, favoring a morph with several distinctly feline traits such as ears, a tail, and the ability to purr.
* In Pururu's case, it's actually a Class A Pekopon suit only usable by Class A invaders, while the Keroro platoon is considered class F. Although never directly shown in the anime, it's actually a mechanical suit that has hidden rocket boosters around its body in the manga.
* In "Put It Down", Craig takes advantage of the fact that Tweek's favourite ride is the Ferris wheel to try to invoke a
* In "Putting Your Hoof Down", a nerdy pony does this when Rarity flatters him.
* In "PvP", after dying and respawning, Green returns to find his friends mourning his death. What does he do? He comes out of the makeshift coffin... Causing everyone to freak out and kill him again.
* In "Pygmoelian", after Carl fails at cheering Moe up, and ends up making the rest of the people at "Moe's Bar" depressed, he looks
* In Pylea this becomes even more pronounced. Due to its unique properties, vampires are rendered completely human until they put on their
* In "Pyramids of Mars", Ibrahim Namin, a sinister worshiper of Sutekh (ancient Egyptian devil-like figure) plays the organ.
* In "Pyramids Of Mars", the Doctor takes the TARDIS to 1980 to show Sarah Jane the lifeless Earth that will result if Sutekh isn't stopped in 1911.
* In "Q2", when Q Junior is made a human without any of his powers, Captain Janeway removes the captain's pips from his uniform.
* In Qatar and the United Arab Emirates, the male/female gender ratio is about 2 to 1, because the countries' economies rely on large numbers of overwhelmingly male guest workers from other countries like Bangladesh. Alaska has a similar gender imbalance, as a considerable chunk of the population is employed in traditionally male manual labor jobs like fishing and oil rig maintenance.
* In Qem-95, one of Qem's paintings in an upcoming web animation include a captain getting catapulted through one of these before hitting the sun
* In Qing and Republic-era China, soldiers would often be assigned to this task. "
* In "QSO", Root goes undercover as a ballet dancer. We don't see what she does, but one audience member finds her quite impressive. Acker studied dance for over ten years before she was acting.
* In "Quad with a Blog", one of the reasons the quads' friends stopped hanging out at Get Sporty Cafe was because their parents were too intrusive and wouldn't just leave the kids alone.
* In "Quagmire's Dad", Quagmire's sex-changed father Ida tells Quagmire that she met someone, and he excitedly asks her the man's name. The scene then cuts to outside his house, where we hear Quagmire shout a
* In "Quality of Mercy" and "The Light Brigade", humanity is at war with an alien species who are determined to wipe them out. As the war progresses, the UNDF becomes convinced that the only way to defeat the aliens is to destroy their homeworld with a subatomic bomb.
* In "Quality of Mercy", Bree Tristan tells Major John Skokes that she is a cadet 2nd class who was assigned to
* In "Quantum Boogaloo", they travel twenty years into the future, and future-Linda says that "her Phineas and Ferb" are thirty (which
* In Quantum Gravity, the Akashic record is mentioned in the last book.
* In "Quarantine", 80% of the world's population was wiped out in a nuclear war in 2043. The authorities of the time considered it a limited engagement as only six missiles were fired by each side.
* In Québecois (French spoken in Québec), it's customary to talk in double negatives for a wide variety of subject without being sarcastic. You feel not bad. It's not hot outside. Things are not far or not close. And your date is not ugly (and that's acompliment...really). For native speakers, it's not confusing, but for French-speaking individuals from other countries, it may sound overly complicated.

* In Quebec, we have Hugolin Chevrette and Catherine Brunet. Shortly after
* In "Queen Of Hearts" Merlin escapes being burned at the stake when disguised as an old wizard using magic (it makes you wonder why more don't do that, or can't).
* InQuest Gamer should destroy the mob, since it's no longer angry and would disperse.
* Inquest stories features multiple technologies for interstellar ships. One type uses "shipminds" which are... harvested... from sentient beings.
* In Quest, the Orcs were slaughtered by the thousands... until one of them was assimilated. Then the Borg retreated, since the Orcs had nothing to offer them.
* In "Quick Shot Ed": The Eds are rummaging through Eddy's attic, Ed finds a 7-inch 45rpm record and says: "I found a donut!" Eddy corrects him and says: "That's a record, chowderhead."
* Inquisition are an minor example. They were an Andrastian cult that follows the example of Hessarian, the Archon of Tevinter that converted to the Chant after regretting killing Andraste and regards themselves as instruments of her wrath against the corrupt. They are initially enemies found in the Storm Coast, but under the right circumstances, they can be recruited to the Inquisition and declare their complete loyalty to the Herald of Andraste.
* Inquisition divide the roles: Josephine Montilyet is the levelheaded leader, being the Inquisition chief diplomat, the military commander Cullen Rutherford is the headstrong one, and Leliana acts as the mastermind, being the Spymaster. When the three fail to agree on how to proceed
* Inquisition finally gets a better perspective on the Qun via Iron Bull. Bull very much seems to think that the Qun is better in many ways, they are ordered, well trained, and seem pretty good at determining a profession a person is well suited for. However, it is emphasized that it works well because they eradicate anything that works outside of their idea of order. Re-education was mentioned. If you live the life the Qun sets out for you, it will be good. If you deviate from it or waver in your dedication, you will be brainwashed, exiled, or killed. There's also a fair amount of doublethink involved; for instance, they enforce strict gender roles by declaring that anyone not following them is mistaken about their gender identity.
* Inquisition. Inquisitors are all too aware that the wholesale slaughter of species who don't even have a concept of space more than ancient cavemen, monsters that very much deserve to be killed like the forces of Chaos and some Xenos species and even fellow humans who are endangering Imperial order and military logistics by rebellion or noncompliance (for example, over the fact that they may be starving or being worked to death) is a grim necessity. Though the occasional delusional maniac can be found as well, subjecting people what other Inquisitors would just put a lasbolt to the back of the head to horrible tortures to get a confession of heresy out of them, when the person was still worshipping the Imperial Cult and just wanted more food for their family.
* Inquisition introduces the relationship, which can be factored into the outcome of the peace talks in the game.
* Inquisition, Iron Bull says that, since Qunari "names" are more like identification numbers, everyone gives their friends nicknames. Bull continued the habit with his mercenary company, the Bull's Chargers — members include "Rocky" the dwarf, "Skinner," "Grim," and "Stitches" the healer.
* Inquisition is getting to him, but they both express this fact in ways that make her sound more like a big sister than anything. He has a similar relationship with Josephine and Leliana, though to a lesser extent; they tease him about his hair and his romance with a female Inquisitor, and have a number of other kindly sibling-like interactions with him.
* Inquisition. One of his random comments, should he be asked about the mood in Skyhold after the romance is confirmed, is to tell the Inquisitor that some people are grumbling about "you having time to bed your allies." He then assures them that "I don't judge. Much."

* Inquisition's DLC Trespasser then completely subverts this trope by making the Qunari the
* Inquisition's, finely crafted and passed down through the mightiest of Imperial Fists commanders.
* Inquisition, she refers to her beloved as "my Warden" or "my love." She also addresses her son Kieran as "little man."
* Inquisition, that he's "the most famous and only author who is a member of the Inquisition itself."
* Inquisition, the epilogue slide mentions their reunion. Zevran, meanwhile, is absent from the game because he's traveling with a Warden he romanced.
* Inquisition, their Warden contact goes to Adamant Fortress to spy on the massing Grey Wardens. He's wearing his uniform with the helmet closed, counting on the generic appearance to keep him from being discovered, and it works perfectly.
* Inquisitor Amberley Vail often disguises herself as a minor but rich noblewoman, spending her money on ridiculous whims like making the hotel staff plant a different garden for her penthouse suite. Then some thugs try to kidnap her,
* Inquisitor, and Space Marine Chaplains are a compact variant of Conversion Field technology.
* Inquisitor Carrow Chronicles, and the instant he's informed, he grabs pen and paper and wastes no time in writing every single thing he knows about Britain's fouler potions masters, suppliers and clients.
* Inquisitor Carrow Chronicles. Fudge is scandalized that due to Carrow's new anti-corruption measures, the son of a pureblood Ministry worker was denied a job after it was proven he wasn't remotely qualified for the job, made a scene and got bodily tossed out of the Ministry. He tries to assure the father his son will get the job, only to be informed the man isn't remotely concerned, since as far as he's concerned his son has proven his worthlessness.
* Inquisitor, characters with the Blademaster talent, such as the twin Death Cult Assassins Severina and Sevora, are masters of knife fighting, able to cause more damage with a knife than other characters can cause with a sword.
* Inquisitor Eisenhorn, power weapons without a physical weapon to channel the power field are almost unheard of.
* Inquisitor even invoking the trope at one point in the narrative. After she sentences one of the Elder One's servants to be executed, he sneaks up to where he can shoot the prisoner with his crossbow instead of allowing her to perform a beheading. He's not sure she's physically or emotionally capable of actually following through with the action, so he takes it out of her hands.
* Inquisitor Mordecai Toth. He wields a giant golden hammer with one hand (despite it being almost tall as he is) and a plasma pistol in the other. In addition, the way the cutscenes work in the original Dawn of War (no pre-rendered cutscenes, which means all animations are the ones used in gameplay) means he has it out while talking to someone during peacetime.
* Inquisitors, a rare breed of human mages, can use faith from human crowds to temporarily remove all magic from a wide area. The few genuine witch hunts happened when a priest unknowingly possessed this power. The effect also causes suffering and pain to
* Inquisitors are supposed to uphold the Imperial credo, hunt down daemons and aliens, and eliminate heretics. Does this stop many of them from happily and repeatedly violating said Imperial credo, summoning daemons and using alien technology, and turning to Chaos to further their own agenda? No. No it does not. Fortunately, Inquisitors who go rogue get the Inquisition on their tails pretty fast.
* Inquisitor scale. But as the Inquisitor, her kindness and selfless nature take on something of a legendary status because Varric is the narrator of her story. He actually sees her as being this trope, so he encourages other people to see her that way too.
* Inquisitors can add Penitent Witches to their retinues, as psychic lightning rods that can absorb psychic attacks that would otherwise hit the Inquisitor.
* Inquisitors Chapter Masters, or certain Astra Militarum officers, to call in orbital strikes in place of a normal shooting attack. They are usually not that accurate (shooting from orbit means they scatter 2d6 without subtracting the shooter's Ballistic Skill like a normal Blast attack), but when they do hit there are few units in the game that can survive such a strike.

* Inquisitors, especially the High ones (those that have supernatural powers) in
* Inquisitors, however, one of them usually turns out to be correct about the other's corruption.
* Inquisitor, so the enemy will likely have plenty of chances to lay ambushes and traps before the rampaging behemoth.
* Inquisitor there is a special rule that can be given to characters called Gunfighter, which does actually enable them to fire two pistol weapons simultaneously. Unless they're ambidextrous, though, it does confer an aiming penalty to the gun being used in the character's off-hand.
* Inquisitor which has a map of Ferelden and Orlais that the Inquisition uses to plan battles during cutscenes and the player uses to choose which missions to undertake.
* In quite a few German cities (including Stuttgart, Düsseldorf, and
* Inquizition, airing from 1998-2001, was by design stripped clean of anything that might imply any sort of a budget. The contestants stood behind podiums that performed the bare minimum of functions—locking in an answer and showing a score—and looked it. They competed in an empty sound stage green-screened to look like an abandoned airplane hangar that gave its own implications of cheapness. The prize for winning was a whopping $250, though later on they got really crazy and upped the prize to $500.
* Inquizition, was formatted as a disgruntled contestant hijacking the network signal to reveal the 'truth' behind the show.
* In "Q Who", disappointed that Picard won't accept his services, Q sends the
* In "Q, Who?", Guinan holds her hands up like claws, implying to Q that she has powers like he does, and it's never revealed whether she genuinely has them or is just bluffing. On the one hand, she's a very mysterious, ancient alien, but on the other hand, she's a good bluffer too.
* In "Q Who", the ship is sent 7,000 light years by Q, placing them unknowingly in an area where the Borg are active. Picard chooses to ignore Guinan's advice to turn back now. (Though when they actually encounter the Borg, and Guinan tells them to protect themselves, they finally take her advice.)
* In rabbinic and modern Judaism, the number 13 has special spiritual significance. With the
* In rabbinic tradition, the Pharaoh of Egypt from Exodus (the first one, not the one Moses famously confronts) is said to have contracted leprosy and treated it by bathing in the blood of Israelite babies, ordering one baby a day killed for this purpose.
* In "Rabbit in a Snowstorm," he shows up at the office sporting a bruise over his right eye from his fight with the Russians the night before and claims to Foggy and Karen that he wasn't looking and walked into a wall. Foggy and Karen suggest he get a seeing-eye dog.
* In "Rabbit in a Snowstorm," James Wesley hires Nelson & Murdock to defend John Healy, an assassin arrested for bashing a gangster's head in with a bowling ball on the order of his boss, Wilson Fisk. Despite Foggy's reservations, Matt insists on taking the case, suspicious as to why an investment firm is paying the bill for a murder suspect's defense. Though he knows Healy is guilty as sin, Matt is committed to playing his part in a fair trial, so when he discovers that Fisk's men are coercing one of the jurors, he forces the thug blackmailing her to tell her to get herself excused. The jury hangs anyway, with strong implications that Fisk found other jurors to coerce, and more strings are pulled behind the scenes to get Healy off without a retrial. Matt hunts down Healy after he is released, gets him to admit that Fisk is his boss, and then promptly impales his head on a fence spike in fear of Fisk's retaliation.
* In "Rabbit's Ruta-Wakening," Darby excitedly declares that the Super Sleuths will have a stakeout to determine why Rabbit's radishes are disappearing. Pooh agrees that a stakeout is just what they need to have.

* In "Rabbit Stew and Rabbits Too!", the Quick Brown Fox attempts it on Rapid Rabbit. But when he lifts the box, there's nothing underneath: Rabbit is inside the box, thanks to
* In Rabb's case, this gets subverted by the beginning of Season 5, where surgery to correct his problem allowed him to resume a career as a fighter pilot. However, he leaves
* In "Race Rally To Raleigh," Sgt. Blast winds up in Penelope Pitstop's car, the Compact Pussycat.
* In Rachel Aaron's "Legend of Eli Monpress" series, Nico is quite literally capable of disappearing or appearing with no warning, due to her ability to teleport through shadows. For the most part she only uses it in the presence of her teammates who are aware of her ability and used to it, if still fairly unsettled by it, but will occasionally use it more conspicuously in special cases. At one point, when her emotions overwhelm her to the point of panic, she teleports out of an entire room of onlookers, leaving Eli to talk everyone into believing nothing out of the ordinary had occurred.
* In "Racing Hearts", Luna and Sam kept saying, "[disliked thing] isn't/aren't really my thing."
* In "Racketeer Rabbit", Bugs Bunny does this twice to a mobster named Rocky (based on Edward G. Robinson), once as a prank and once for real.
* In "Radioactive Man", Milhouse's parents become stage parents when he gets the part of Fallout Boy. They immediately take advantage of Milhouse's newfound fame and wealth and start stocking up on luxury items. Milhouse is much less enthusiastic about his role.
* In "Radio Bart", Bart is stuck down a well, but nobody wants to help him out on account of a dirty trick he played on them, and tearfully laments about the stuff he'll never do, like smoking a cigarette, having a fake ID and shaving a swear word onto the back of his head.
* In "Radio Bombay", a newscast on Walter's homemade radio forecasts the imminent arrival of a strong hurricane. Unfortunately, nobody is around to hear that the newscast originates from Bombay, India.
* In "Rage of the Red Lanterns", the Red Lantern Corps pulls this on the Sinestro Corps by interrupting the Sinestro Corps battle with the GLs to free Sinestro and slaughtering both sides.
* In "Raging Bender", Bender joins the Ultimate Robot Fighting League. His final opponent in the episode is trained by Leela's sexist martial arts teacher, and while Bender gets curbstomped by Destructor, Leela fights Master Phnog under the ring and wins. Leela tells Bender's flattened form, "Sure, you lost. You lost
* In "Raging Bender", he becomes a fighter for the Ultimate Robot Fighting league, and is first billed as "Bender The Offender"; as his popularity falls, however, he's forced to play the
* In Ragnarok, all humanity is destined to perish except a single couple, Lif and Lifthrasir, who will repopulate Earth (
* In "Raiders of the Lost Art", the Legends travel to 1967 and discover their missing former captain Rip Hunter directing a thesis sci-fi film based on his adventures through time (although Rip had his mind wiped and thinks he's a film student named Phil Gasmer). His prop master and friend is a bespectacled bearded guy named George. Not much is made of this seemingly bit character, who is freaked out when blaster bolts start flying and decides he doesn't want to be in the film business anymore. The problem? He's goddamned
* In "Rail Rodents", Katnip gets his head stuck in a water tower's output pipe and inflates like a balloon.
* In Rainbow Valley, Una Meridith does this to herself. This results in her fainting in church, forcing her father to finally see that something is dreadfully wrong with his kids.
* In "Raising the Barn", Steven goes out to sing to clear his head about the mess between him and Connie. Three seconds in and his phone rings, sending him into a panic.

* In "Raising the Bar", Opal tells Otis that whatever ranking the Mobile Unit is placed in is fine. She then finds out that the department is in last place, panics, issues a
* In "Raising the Bar", shortly after shrinking a giant, fast-moving snail with the Snail-inator, Opal and Orla take a brief moment to fawn over how adorable it is.
* In R. a. Lafferty's "The Six Fingers of Time", 60 (the "number of time") recurs.
* In "Rally 'Round the Flagg, Boys", Potter walks into his office, with Father Mulcahy in tow, to find Colonel Flagg waiting for them, and neither of them (nor Radar, who was in his outer office the whole time) know or can even figure out how Flagg even got in there in the first place.
* In Ralph Ellison's short story "A Coupla Scalped Indians", the eleven year old protagonist Riley finds himself in the yard of Aunt Mackie, an old herb doctor whom he thinks is a witch. He ends up looking through the window of her shack and sees a naked woman with a young girlish body whose back is turned to him. He is briefly stunned when she turns around as she drinks from a glass only to get the shock of his life when she lowers the glass when sees "the wrinkled face of Old Aunt Mackie."
* In "Ramadan" the Caliph Haroun Al-Raschid, regarded as a paragon of justice by his contemporaries, has several torture chambers in his palace and not only has a harem of wives, but also several underage boys (though they appear to be at least in their teens), which were common practices at the time. Immortal characters often suffer
* In "Rambling Ed", Eddy convinces Ed to move out and get away from Sarah's bossiness, with
* In "Ranger Jarod," Jarod sees an Army bumper sticker and says he has some mountain training from his time with the Army Rangers. Then they ask him his name, and he pulls out "Jarod Forest" from a Smokey the Bear flier on a board (in the previous episode he was Jarod Forrester, but that particular identity, as a Navy commander, required a lot more advance preparation).
* In Ran's case, she almost was drowned by said psycho; in another subversion, he didn't intend to kill her and just wanted an alibi. And in Takagi's, he was beaten bloody and then shot
* In "Rapido, Tico!" Dora, Boots, and Tico must successfully stop Swiper from swiping Boots's fire truck hat's on snowy mountain. After they succeed, Swiper rolls down in a
* In rapper Plan B's concept album "The Defamation of Strickland Banks", Strickland has a drunken one-night stand with such a fan. When he rejects her afterward,
* In rare cases, Spirits that are particularly impressed by a certain person are capable of taking on that person's appearance and memories after he or she dies. In most cases, the Spirit appears as an incorporeal ghost, a shadow of the person they are impersonating. In extremely rare circumstances, the person's impression on the Spirit is so strong that the Spirit can take that person's physical form and pick up where they left off. The most prominent example of this is Cole, a Spirit of Compassion who impersonates a young mage that he was unable to save.
* In rare instances some people may explode when viewing the Terrafirminator
* In "Rarity Investigates: The Case of the Bedazzled Boot", Rarity tries to find a prop for the school play that's gone missing, and interrogates either Pinkie Pie, Trixie Lulamoon, or Applejack about the boot.
* In "Rascals", the Ferengi leading the takeover of the Enterprise says that having the crews' families, and specifically their children, onboard is a negligent risk to take. Yes, he's threatening to kill the children at the time, but that only helps illustrate the point.
* In Rastafari, Emperor Haile Selassie I is the embodiment of God. By all accounts, he showed a great deal of patience with them, even after they obstructed his plane from landing in Jamaica.
* In "Ratings Guy", just after Peter arrives at the Television Producers Guild to make up for ruining the state of television, Homer Simpson (complete with

* In "Rats!", the first clue that Monty the mouse has moved in with the Burns family is that they find his droppings in the cupboard.
* In "Rattlestar Ricklactica," Rick leaves a book detailing how to create time travel in a planet populated by snakes. This leads to a snake going back in time to avert the assassination of snake Abe Lincoln, which somehow leads to snake Nazis conquering the world.
* In Ravenscar Hollow, a bandit was kidnapped by the Hagravens, he begs you to let him out of the cage, if you killed the Hagravens and released him, he immediately
* In 'Ravnica' fluff, Orzhov are shown to be more or less the same - a massive obfusticating bureaucracy, but this being black, partially staffed by the undead - adding a whole new meaning to the idiom ' corporate zombie '.
* In "Raw Deal", Lori trips on some oil and lands in garbage, therefore "going on a long
* In "Raw Deal", the family goes on a trip to Grand Venture State Park, and on the way there, Lucy gives tarot readings. Lincoln's reading is his day at the park will "end in tragedy", which in turn makes him become a hypochondriac and ends up believing everything is dangerous so he won't face anything tragic. As it turns out, there wasn't any danger at the park after all, and he ends up missing out on all the fun which in turn, ends his day in tragedy as predicted.
* In "Raw", Stabler tries to interview a group of children who were present at a playground shooting. Given that they're all young kids (and traumatized at that), the statements end up being...less than helpful; not only do they contradict each other at every turn,
* In Ray Bradbury's story "The Exiles" it's mentioned that Christmas and Halloween (and presumably all other holidays) have been outlawed.
* In RayStorm, this is what the Secelians plan to do as the finishing stroke to permanently replacing Earth as known space's new emperors. The giant battleship Hannibal is how they plan to do it.
* In Razi's route Grace seems to have initially been just a victim of opportunity, but as soon as
* In Reader's Digest's "Humor In Uniform" section, a group of officers had a discussion about how the guards were on duty for long periods of time and usually didn't pay attention to security passes when presented. The officers decided to have a challenge to see who could get past security with the weakest form of identification. The winner got in with a piece of toast.
* In "Reading is Fundamental", Meg is posing as a nurse so she can take care of Castiel. She calls the Winchesters to inform them that Cas has woken from his coma but is acting strangely. When Sam wants a more detailed diagnosis, she responds with this trope.
* In "Read It And Weep", Rainbow Dash is trying to find ways to pass the time during a stay in the hospital, and at one point is seen telling jokes to her room-mate (an unfortunate pony in a full-body cast). We only hear the punchline of one: "To get to the other side!"
* In "Read it and Weep", Rarity says the hospital gowns... "match the curtains"
* In "Read it and Weep", the pony who accuses Rainbow Dash of stealing his slippers appears to be a cancer patient, and what Rainbow Dash thinks is an
* In "Read your spell BEFORE you cast it" a player cast the spell Darkness on a dragon without reading what the spell does. Instead of making it so that dragon couldn't see them, it made it so they couldn't see the dragon.
* In "Ready, Set, Zoom", he sets up even more glue, but the Road Runner runs right over the stuff and splashes him with it, which gets the dynamite he was holding stuck to his hands.
* In reality he fought bravely and well in Normandy, and then in the assault on Foy he was actually severed wounded and unable to lead the attack further rather than freezing & breaking from the strain of command.
* . In reality, Jaune is simply a friendly guy, the talk of Big Daddy Bane and his books referred to a book club they're both in, and Jaune worked as a handyman and exterminator for Junior, taking care of literal rats and leaks. The only part of Roman's assessment that's actually true is that Jaune and Cinder are married. While Neo quickly figures out Jaune's harmless by talking to him, Roman doesn't.

* In reality, Lisanna wasn't actually dead, but neither Natsu nor Gildarts knew that at the time.
* In reality, no one hated the press more than the Admiralty, who, despite their dislike of it, knew that it was the only option to adequately man the Navy in wartime, as there were never enough volunteers.
* In reality, not only does the Hubble sit on an entirely different orbit than the ISS, but at a much, much higher altitude. To the point where even the space shuttle cannot visit both on the same mission. The last Hubble servicing mission, STS-125, involved having a second space shuttle fueled and on the pad in case a rescue was needed, because getting to the ISS from the Hubble was a complete impossibility.
* In reality, not only do most scientific experiments not need control groups, in anything other than a biological setting the concept rarely makes sense at all. If you're testing whether a large or small cannonball will fall faster, for example, having a second pair of cannonballs that don't get dropped does not aid the experiment in any way.
* In reality, only Keith Moon actually peed on it. For the rest, they poured water from a film canister to create the stains.
* In reality, since Moore promised from the beginning that the show was About Something Big, and the show was about to end, and he couldn't think of anything else to ret-con in as having been the moral all along, the broken Aesop was the only one he could think of due to
* In reality, the AK-74 was just starting to make its way to the export market before
* In reality, the Aslan were on the verge of a nuclear war when a human spacecraft crashed on their world. The land-obsessed Aslan quickly resolved their differences, reverse-engineered the human's FTL drive, and began their expansion into the galaxy while keeping their pre-spaceflight tribal culture intact. And they kept the whole affair a secret, claiming they had resolved their differences and invented the jump drive all on their own.
* In reality the predominant noise is the sound of cooling fans and water pumps. Occasionally, there will be a soft "pfft" sound when the laser fires, and that comes from the noise of the Xenon flash tubes used to pump the laser. High power microwave sources are also silent except for the cooling. What fun is a death ray that sounds like your air conditioner?
* In reality, the show started out as "Extended Play" and received a retitle when it was relaunched, reducing "Extended" to "X".
* In reality, they are just giant bubbles, with sensor-fooling equipment to make them look solid.
* In reality, this is averted just as often as it's played straight. Particular examples include most colonial wars, a LOT of wars from antiquity, many wars that pit an advanced power against a less advanced one (like the Second Italian invasion of Ethiopia), and (ironically, given who Sukhomlinov was) the southern half of the Russian Front of WWI for the first year or so, where the Austro-Hungarians had far less fancy uniforms than the Russians, but
* In reality, this trope has been beaten to death in the wrestling business.
* In real life, 20% of aircraft ejections result in the pilot sustaining career-ending injuries, such as death. Also, 100% of aircraft ejections result in the pilot losing several inches of height, due to the sudden compression of being flung out of your plane at anywhere from 12 to 22 Gs (depending on what ejection seat your plane was equipped with). Most air forces impose a career limit on the number of ejections permissible (and that limit is usually one) before it's desk job city for you. Indeed pilots don't eject at the first hint of trouble, either. Considerable effort is first put into
* In real life, anatomical mosaics are where an organism has traits that are considered modern and archaic at the same time. This usually applies to fossils.
* In real life, as people age, if they lose their job or have to re-enter the workforce they experience a great deal of difficulty finding a job despite all their experience, because of their age. The government can prohibit age discrimination all they want, nevertheless, it will occur. This is why you see older people working as cashiers or stocking shelves. In talking to some of then, you'll quickly find out many of them have multiple advanced degrees, considerable military experience, etc.

* In Real Life, both sides developed more innovative tactics over time - for example, climbing out of the trenches and walking very slowly towards the enemy,
* In Real Life, Carroll based many of the characters in both stories on his friends.
* In real life, China always imports emergency food relief to North Korea, and given that all of China got infected with the Simian Flu, North Koreans should definitely have become diseased as well.
* In real life, combining lots of caffeine with lots of alcohol (to use the trope names, mixing Klatchian Coffee
* In real life dreams, machines (in addition to otherwise functioning oddly) often will keep functioning even when unplugged or otherwise disconnected from a power source. These dreams are often caused by an alarm clock going off in the real world.
* In real life, electronics companies work very hard to reduce reflections off of TVs and monitors, so the viewer will only see the important information. Obviously, a transparent "screen" goes in utterly the opposite direction.
* In real life, elitism among military formations has much to do with morale. Soldiers assigned to an ancient regiment or to a special formation can be expected to feel a sense of elevation over their less favored comrades, and hence to fight more stubbornly. By the same token, troops are also very sensitive to the reputation of their adversaries. To use examples from World War II: in the British and US armies, the approach of a SS panzer division instilled a special thrill of fear and excitement. To the German army on the Eastern Front the Soviet deployment of a Red Guards Army, or still more a Red Guards
* In real life, fencing has been described as "high-speed chess", so fencing itself would fit this trope.
* In Real Life, Guy Fieri is a fairly kind man who likes to help out others and has a chain of successful restaurants. In
* In real life, he usually had his men take prisoners, but on one occasion, when
* In real life, however, Pluto is not always the farthest (dwarf) planet, so when it happens, it's easy to confuse it with Neptune if one doesn't know their masses etc., but only counts objects.
* In real life, human beings have a natural instinct to run directly away from a threat during times of panic. Panicked crowds behave the same way, a fact that has been exploited for centuries by conquering hordes. A specific example is running away from shooters. It is sometimes said, on the off-chance you are being shot at, it's better to run in a zig-zag pattern, thus presenting the shooter with a moving target, not just a shrinking but stable one. In a completely flat area with nowhere to go, this is probably true. However in general if you're being shot at the best advice is
* In Real Life in 2011 the mayor of a town in Lithuania posed for photographers after
* In real life in a normal atmosphere, a laser beam is seen as a single intense dot of light on the thing the laser is pointed at. All of the light is focused in one direction, and if that direction is not towards your eye (which hopefully it isn't), none of it enters your eye and so you don't see anything until the laser hits something and the light diffuses. Creating a visible beam in real life requires an atmosphere of smoke, fog, or dust, so that the beam is constantly reflecting off dust particles - and this reduces the power of the laser. Many items or toys which use lasers will show the item operating in such an atmosphere to create a visible beam; purchasers are often disappointed when the beam turns out not to be visible in normal circumstances. Laser tag areas often deliberately have dusty atmospheres inside to maximize the visibility of the beams. Downplayed in the case of green lasers (which cause the air to glow slightly in the path of the beam, making it visible, though it has to be in dark conditions to be seen). And averted in the case of blue lasers, which will make the air glow much more brightly, causing it to be visible even in lighted conditions. It still doesn't look like a visible Hollywood laser though.

* In real life: It's common for soldiers, cops, firefighters, et al. to get free drinks from bartenders. American Airlines lets military traveling on orders use their
* In real life, kill tallies got quite elaborate for air and submarine crews in order to differentiate the types of kills they made. For aircraft, these included (but were not limited to):
* In real life, laboratories have rules to prevent this from happening, as things like this really have happened. Food containers should never contain anything but food, and non-food containers should never contain food, and it should be clear what all containers are for.
* In real life, "micron" is slang for micrometre, is one-thousandth of a millimetre, but that would mean that when the Cylon raiders were "ninety microns and closing," they were 0.09 mm away. But seriously, folks, the Viper coordinator probably meant the raiders would arrive in 90 seconds on their present course and speed.
* In real life, new technology frequently makes old jobs obsolete — in the 1800s, 70% of the population was involved in agriculture. In the 21st century, only 1% of the population was involved in agriculture. However, what actually ends up happening is new jobs appear in
* In Real Life: Research that illustrates aspects of Gender Dynamics. (Acceptable: studies on double standards in how we view men and women or media that illustrates a double standard. Unacceptable: Political writings aiming to use evidence of double standards to advance an agenda.)
* In real life, shooting mercury out of a gun would be very illegal due to it being more poisonous than lead and more difficult to clean up. You can however try using rounds made of gallium, which has properties very similar to mercury but isn't as toxic, though the damage they do will not be as spectacular since gallium isn't nearly as dense.
* In real life, someone would probably have to change departments to avoid conflict of interest.
* In real life, some trials can be forced to be retried if even one out of the twelve dissents. In some countries and American states, the court may accept a majority verdict (either 10-2 or 11-1) if the jury can't reach a unanimous verdict after a reasonable time deliberating (though in the US majority verdicts are limited to some states and usually only for minor crimes)
* In real life, the author also offers donation incentives in the form of pins, stickers, fridge magnets, and bookmarks.
* In real life, the show earned some minor controversy in Australia after the TV station that aired the show advertised it as the 'fight for Australia', despite Australia doing well enough on its own against the Japanese Army.
* In real life, the song "You Are My Sunshine" was written by Jimmie Davis, who was a two-time governor of Louisiana from 1944 to 1948 and again from 1960 to 1964. Davis was an opponent of the
* In real life, the term "stun gun" is used for Taser-like electric-shock weapons. SF use of the term predates these by decades, and almost certainly influenced the marketing of these devices.
* in real life. The United States did, however, use blimps for anti-submarine recon.
* In real life, this happens when food can't be digested. There's even
* In real life, this is a common hazard for crews of tanks and armoured vehicles as well as warships. Battle damage can start fires sets things in proximity on fire. Like the crew.
* In real life, this is harder than it looks, even in cars where it is conceivably possible. A main stumbling block is the sheer number of wires that pass under the steering wheel column.
* In real life, trained birds of prey used in falconry usually wear masks when they aren't being used to keep them quiet and docile.

* In real life, what did Neversoft do to mark their merging with Infinity Ward, given that the Infinity Ward brand is the only one used after the merger?
* In real life, where things don't always have a dramatic purpose, little known facts are used to kill time, or fill unsold ad space, or otherwise apologize for having nothing to say. How many ways have you heard that it's impossible to kiss your elbow, or that glass is really a liquid, or other such anti-wisdom? These "facts" are often equally useless whether they're true or false, and the only good that ever comes of it is the occasional
* In real life, young Korean celebrities will often bribe doctors to give them disqualifying diagnoses, with the idea that serving two years conscription would be inconvenient and damage their careers. Usually, the truth will somehow come out in the press and the celebrity will be shamed into fulfilling their obligation or see their careers take a hard hit.
* In "Real Me" Buffy states the Rule Number One of living in Sunnydale is "
* In "Real Orangins", Robin's recounts of leaving Batman and forming the Titans are all done in different styles, such as him leaving Batman to be on his own is done in a style similar to
* In "Real or Robots", Stu begins sleepwalking and Tommy and Chuckie are convinced that the former's father is a robot.
* In real situations, the subject was forcibly stripped fully or half naked and covered in hot tar, which if hot enough would burn badly. There was probably a beating or two along the way. After being feathered, the person would be humiliated by being carried around on a
* in real time: the first time it's shown he has no sleeves, in the second glimpse his left sleeve has been attached, and in the last shot of the painting he's fully suited with hands folded, exactly as the man stands in front of it.
* In "Realty Bites", we see that one of the prisons in Springfield operates on the honor system. Most of the prisoners actually comply!
* In Reba McEntire's "Somebody," a patron makes small-talk with his waitress about his love life. She tells him the person he's looking for could be literally anyone, and he should pay attention. At the end of the song, he realizes the "somebody" he's been waiting for is...her.
* In Rebecca Sugar's original version of the song, widely available on
* In Rebellion the TEC rebels can forge an alliance with them and the other independents, making them immune to raids and able to recruit mercenary pirate fleets.
* In "Rebirth", a few seconds after a series of increasingly obvious references to leaving Fox and joining Comedy Central (culminating with "It's a sort of
* In "Rebirth", an interesting variation occurs in the first episode of the revived series. The Planet Express ship crashes after the events of the last movie, killing everyone, except the Professor and an amnesiac Fry, who is able to revive everyone with a stem cell machine. Leela remains in coma, so Fry builds a robot version of her in despair. The robot Leela learns of her true nature, but aside from some Angst, isn't concerned...until of course the real Leela wakes up, and they
* In "Rebirth", the people who murdered Warren McGinnis spray paint "HAHAHA" graffiti all over the place so that everyone thinks the Jokerz gang did it.
* In "Recall", Winston's prototype shield explodes due to a design flaw, nearly killing Reaper in the process. When Winston's shield runs out of health or time, it simply disappears.
* In recent DC and Marvel Comics, Zeus is not the friendliest of gods, certainly not with Thor. Here, he's entirely friendly towards Thor because
* In recent Dutch tradition the main helper of Saint Nicholas, Hoofdpiet (Head Pete).
* In recent history the ATF itself with Project Gun Runner and Operation Fast and Furious, sting operations
* In recent years, a decision to downsize the number of principal characters has led to other Muppets, including Baby Bear, Bert and Ernie, Count von Count, Prairie

Dawn, Snuffy, and Telly Monster, taking a noticeable backseat.
* In recent years, as the NBA has gotten into the same "moneyball" trends as the MLB, this has been turned around on its head. Mid-range jump shots
* In recent years, Bud Light commercials adopted the formula that whenever the eponymous drink gets involved, someone says,
* In recent years, "come out" is sometimes used for revealing secrets other than homosexuality, although "come out of the closet" still means the same thing.
* In recent years Gluten has been getting much the same treatment as HFCS and Transfats. For 99% of the population, Gluten is a perfectly harmless wheat protein that acts as a structural molecule. It is not an energy storage protein and thus does not contribute positively or negatively to nutrition. For the 1-2% of the population which suffers from disorders that carry gluten sensitivity, it's akin to lactose intolerance - it induces intestinal discomfort, and in many cases is never severe enough to be diagnosed. Other people claim vague symptoms as "gluten sensitivity" the way previous generations did with MSG. Never-the-less, thanks to public misinformation on the "evils of gluten" and "carb-free diets", it's become a fad to a
* In recent years, it had been noted that Xu Kai and Bai Lu have been cast as each other's love interests in three different television series, and had been in five series together overall. This is possibly a result of being in the same production company.
* In recent years, it's become common for a professional baseball player who gets a game-winning hit to be rewarded with a shaving-cream pie to the face from his teammates. Actually, it can apply to any player who does particularly well during a game, i.e. a pitcher who throws a no-hitter.
* In recent years it's become fashionable to sell your hot dogs, ham, bacon and other meats that are normally cured as being uncured, with no added nitrites or nitrates...
* In recent years, since around 2008, the favorite term, popular in Infantry and similiar units, is POG, said like "Pogue," for "person other than grunt".
* In recent years there has also been a trend in the U.S. toward informally assigning girls' names to legislation (usually laws concerning punishment and/or registration of convicted sex offenders); e.g., "Megan's Law," "Jessica's Law." (Combines this trope with
* In "Record Deal", Courage stops the music Eustace was playing after witnessing Velvet Vick emerging out of the record player, which only gets him kicked out of the house.
* In "Red Man's Greed" Stan reflects on the good times they have had in the town followed by
* In "Re-Do" Frank proves pretty conclusively that he doesn't need a Glock.
* In "Red Rackham's Treasure", the Thompsons are pinched by crabs when they make landfall at an unknown island.
* In "Red Riding Hoodwinked," the Big Bad Wolf uses a log this way to bust down the back door to Grandma's House. But then he encounters Sylvester's own solution: a boulder slingshot from the front door.
* In "Red Rock Jarod", the villain of the episode buries a hostage alive in a remote location — with an air pump, but if he doesn't get what he wants before the pump runs out of fuel...
* In "Red Sky", Sam is escorting an elderly woman at a fancy-dress party, who is
* In Red Version it was Bird Jesus the Pidgeot, a mix of level headed and charismatic being the one who carried the team through the toughest battles after the starter was released and eventually became a symbol of hope that spawned a religion.
* In "Reeking Havoc", several characters create a methane monster by farting after eating chili made by the Professor in a chili cook-off.
* In "Re-Enter The Dragon", Shendu attacks Section 13 to take back the Talisman powers from the Noble Animals.
* In reference to an old Dave Matthews tweet that read simply "Shart Party", John asks people to go wild with the concept, while also raising the hashtags

#SHARTPARTY and #CRASHINTOMEWITHSPIDERFARTS.
* In reference to the Charlie Chaplin example, below, it was once noted in
* in reference to the early uniforms of the X-Men comic book (and main color of most of Wolverine's comic book outfits.)
* In reference to this, saluting in the field is known as a "Sniper Check", and lampshaded by saying it
* In reference to this trope, whimsical reviews of science fiction products in the UK mainstream press tend to give the price in "your Earth pounds", which is a very unlikely name for a global currency.
* In "Regarding Carter", Peter goes to a shooting range and is killed offscreen by a human-shaped target that steals his clothes and replaces him at home. Chris doesn't notice.
* In "Regarding Margie", Sideshow Mel and Captain MacAlistair are fighting over what the most delicious kind of cherry is, while balanced on Bumblebee Man and Duffman's shoulders.
* in regards to Colette Blaumeux. While she certainly didn't enjoy serving the Scourge, she found being raised as undead oddly liberating as she was freed from the stress of her position as High Priestess of the Order of the Silver Hand. She also enjoyed the comraderie she found with the other three horsemen.
* In regards to Eastern culture, Japan saw in South Korea a credible contender in the battle for gaining the favor of Western audiences as "doramas" and the urban-inspired K-pop genre exploded in popularity, as well as in electronics, as Samsung and LG are headquartered there. The Land of the Rising Sun still had the upper hand when it came to video games, manga, and anime. The cuisine of both countries was considered sophisticated.
* In regards to Hajime himself, he loves his parents, but makes it clear in no uncertain terms that he
* in regards to his business, Gabriel hopes to make Marinette his heir should she and Adrien get married.
* in regards to Inko Midoriya. In canon, stress from Izuku not having a Quirk caused her to overeat and put on weight. Here, Izuku develops a Quirk when he's five so she never starts stress eating and later starts exercising with him to lose any weight she had put on.
* In regards to modern cavalry (aircraft, armored vehicles, and the like), specialized missiles and guns are often necessary. Attack aircraft are often very fast and agile, and use the terrain for cover, meaning
* In regards to South-American national soccer teams, the "Rivalry of the Pacific Ocean" often comes off as Peru having this towards Chile.
* In regards to the Cleric, it should probably be mentioned that their tanking soul (Justicar) features a nigh-mandatory talent that causes five of your allies to be healed for 25% of the damage your Justicar attacks deal (and 10% of the damage from non-Justicar attacks). Put on Mien of Honor (50% bonus to said healing), grab a staff, and start spamming your Justicar AoE attack; you're LITERALLY healing your allies by BEATING PEOPLE WITH A STICK.
* In regards to the Kaiju, Onibaba sticks out like a sore thumb due to its
* In regards to the series itself, next to Japan, Italy has had a JoJo fandom longer than any other country in the world, even before the 2012 anime. Based on
* in regard to Pudding and Sanji. She thinks he's pathetic at first and has no qualms about killing him, but when Sanji compliments The Third Eye.
* In "Regeneration", Archer spaces two Borgified Tarkaleans when Malcom's security team cannot kill them with phasers.
* In Reginald Bretnor's story "The Gnurrs Come from the Voodvork Out", when Papa Schimmelhorn is asked where the gnurrs came from, he explains that they came from yesterday. When someone objects that they weren't here yesterday, he says that, then, they were in the day before yesterday.
* In Reginald Hill's Dalziel and Pascoe novels, everyone is so distracted by DS Edgar Wield's unbelievably ugly face that they fail to notice that he's gay.
* In "Regrets Only", Matt and Elektra break into a safe but can't find the
* In regular gameplay, this is the alternate win condition for the defenders in an Attack/Defend scenario. The attackers win if they either capture the base or destroy all enemy vehicles. If they fail to do either, the defenders win by default once the in-game timer runs out (ten minutes instead of the standard 15).

* In "Re-Hibernation Week", SpongeBob melts into yellow goo when Sandy takes him on one dangerous exercise regimen too many.
* In "Reign of Chaos Night Elf 4", the three factions are Night Elves (player), humans and orcs, and undead and demons.
* In "Reign of Doom", Able Team is being smuggled through a civil war in Syria when they're stopped at a roadblock. The officer in charge demands to know what's in the truck, why they'd risk traveling at this time, why a 'Soviet' officer (actually a CIA agent) is with them...
* In Reimu's case, this is mostly justified and played straight because she is age-regressed, mentally as well as physically, coupled with being mentally conditioned, thus she wouldn't be able to grasp things that those older than her might (Like why swearing is bad). However, later on, when she is a witness to Chen's suicide attempt, it is made note that she never did seem to be able to make sense of it and is likely suffering from mental trauma as a result. By 20XXV, this veers into
* In "Rejoined", Jadzia Dax wants an excuse to have dinner with her ex-partner (in a previous host) Lenara Kahn, but as this is against the norms of Trill society she ropes in Julian Bashir to maintain the pretext that she was actually having dinner with him and invited Lenara to join them. Cut to Bashir looking bored as the two happily chat away, ignoring him the whole time until he's called away for a medical emergency.
* In relation to a bitter second-to-last pick, in Season 5, Carol was quite bitter that she wasn't picked before Andrea or LA, even though both of them were more consistent than her. She ended up being Danny's final pick only because he didn't want to be stuck with
* In relation to the above, combining Necrons and Orks during the 6th edition. Orks have big, automatic guns and numbers but lack dedicated units to counter really high-armour targets such as Land Raiders (the most an Ork unit can typically dish out is strength 8 which means a 6 on a die is required to cause any kind of damage
* In relation to the literature entry above, Swedish musician Povel Ramel wrote the song "Don't Buy a Zebra", wherein the viewpoint character asks his acquaintances for advice on a proper gift for someone, but everyone gives him the unhelpful instruction in the title. Naturally he eventually runs out of time, all the good gifts get bought up... leaving only the zebra as an option.
* In relation to the Swedish Santa traditions, in Sweden Santa Claus is referred to as Jultomten, literally the Yule Tomte. A
* In relation to this scandal, his ex-wife Bethany privatized her Instagram page sometime after their divorce in order to protect her and their kids' personal lives from
* In "Relativity Theory", Earth's natural resources are almost completely depleted. Earth-like planets are strip mined to meet its needs. "Final Appeal" dates this episode to the 24th Century.
* In "Relativity Theory", the xenobiologist Teresa Janovitch performs autopsies on two of the aliens killed by other members of the expedition to Tau Gamma Prime.
* In relativity, two events separated by a space-like space-time interval (i.e. every observer will note that light from one event cannot reach the position of the other event before the other event occurs) have no consistent ordering. Different observers will disagree about which event occurred first, and one reference frame will observe the events occurring simultaneously.
* In "Release", Faith slices Angelus, throws the knife in the air, punches him, then catches the knife to cut him again.
* In "Relegator", a descendant of Stavros Garkos sends the titular robot disguised as a player back in time to change the result of a match where Garkos waged too much money. The reveal happens in a way that references
* In "Relics", Scotty was found in stasis after his ship crashed 75 years ago.

Scotty is initially amazed about all the advancements in technology, and tries to show that his engineering expertise is still useful in the 24th century. But eventually, he gets depressed that many engineering issues he was proud to have handled during the 23rd century have been long resolved, and he feels he has no place in the 24th century. Geordi, however, helps Scotty see that there's always a place for engineers like him.
* In re Love's "The Raven." WestLaw's synopsis and headnotes are written in the same style.
* In "Remains of the Platypus", Buford's assignment is literally to just think up cheese-related puns. Examples include, "Can't get any cheddar than this", "Sounds Gouda to me", "That's Swiss-picious". By the day's end, he's fulfilled his quota of one hundred.
* In "Remember Me" Beverly Crusher finds herself the victim of gaslighting by a
* In "Remember Me," Dr. Crusher gets zapped into a pocket dimension that she discovers is a rapidly-shrinking corral and everyone else gradually and
* In "Remember", "Memorial", and "Living Witness" in that the person creating the illusions isn't a villain; they're just trying to inform people about a shameful incident in their own history.
* In Remember the Night, Lee and John share a lovely barn-dance waltz which ends in a steamy kiss.
* In "Remember the Pillow Fort," Max and Ord have one over whether red or purple is a better color, descending into "Is not!" Is too!" territory. Zak and Wheezie make it into a song.
* In "Remembrance", Caler is Dahj's Xahean boyfriend and Richter is the reporter who interviews Picard.
* In "Remembrance", Dahj screeches at the top of her lungs after she witnesses her boyfriend being murdered.
* In "Remembrance of Courage Past", Courage's backstory is shown through a series of flashbacks which resemble crudely-drawn crayon art that children usually make.
* in remembrance of his death at the hands of Calypso's wish granting
* In "Remembrance of the Daleks", the Doctor sabotages a Dalek teleporter so it telefrags
* In "Remembrance of the Daleks", the Seventh Doctor destroys the Daleks' home planet and then persuades the lone surviving Imperial Dalek to kill itself as it has "no superiors, no inferiors, no reinforcements, no hope, no rescue!"
* In "Remembrance", there's blue lighting in the Parisian alleyway where Dahj contacts her "mother."
* In "Remembrance", we get an estate and country variant with "Château Picard, France." It's interesting to note that there is a real place called
* In Remnant legend, there is a fairy tale called The Story of the Seasons, which tells of a reclusive old wizard who gifts
* In remote areas of Canada before courts were formally established, Mounties also served as judges in the same fashion.
* In "Remote Possibility", just as the climax approaches the episode's
* In "Renaissance Man", Chakotay makes up an incident he claims Janeway told him about. When "Janeway" claims the current crisis has nothing to do with that past one, Chakotay knows that she's a fake. (It was the Doctor being forced to act as
* In Renca, a county of Santiago, Chile, there was a Hollywood-like sign with the phrase "
* In "Renewal", Admiral Kirk considers retiring to his family farm in Iowa.
* In "Repeat", Shinji and Gendo visited Yui’s grave. Shinji thought about dissuading his father from proceeding with his plans, but he realized right away that he’d be wasting his time, so he called his father out on abandoning him.
* In "Replica", Zach and Nora Griffiths have developed a process for
* In "Replica", Zach Griffiths talks to his wife Nora, who has been in a coma for a year, every time that he visits her in hospital.
* In "Report by Exception" in the same show, a fictional (unnamed) Latin American country is probably a stand-in for Venezuela.
* In "Repression", an unknown person is attacking members of the crew. One crewman is working in a Jeffries tube, only to be dazzled by a SIMS beacon held by an unseen attacker.

* In "Reptar on Ice", the papers say the aforementioned show is the show to see if you see just
* In "Reptiles in the Rose Garden", King Koopa used a levitation beam to uproot the White House (with the President inside it) from the ground and transported it through a warp pipe to Dark Land, just so that Kootie Pie could rule the United States.
* In Republic City, Korra gets arrested for the massive public and private property damage she inflicts while beating some gangsters. Korra actually
* In requests where the submitter includes lyrics, Andrew will occasionally sing parts of the message that were clearly just further instructions about the song. Some examples would be "
* In "Requiem For Methuselah": Kirk, in order to remove his memories of Rayna Kapek.
* In "Resignation", House and Wilson dose each other with medication: Wilson slips anti-depressants into House's coffee to cheer him up; House (to test if Wilson's also on meds) slips amphetamine into Wilson's coffee. Honestly, this one is worth watching if only for Robert Sean Leonard's hysterical delivery of "I'm not
* In "Resistance: The Gathering Storm" the alien Chimera are referred to as "stinks" due to the noxious smell they give off. Interestingly, this nickname does not appear in the video game series the novel is based off of.
* In response, a disturbingly large number of these informed angry men and women and si-uh-ma'-uhs have worked on a master plan to
* In response for Alex always taking things from his room, Justin creates a female Frankenstine's monster named "Franken Girl" to guard his room, makes Franken Girl befriend Alex, and eventually forces Alex to join the cheerleading squad.
* In response, the post-war German constitution actively aimed to avert this trope, making it illegal for the German government to strip citizens of their citizenship and permitting the involuntary loss of German citizenship only under very strictly defined criteria. Even when these criteria are fulfilled, it is still illegal if it would leave the subject stateless.
* In response, Tim and his coworkers also came up with their own test where they compared wives to hockey equipment; choices included a hockey mask ("Wiry and closed off"), a stick ("Long, rigid, and likes to hit things"), elbow pads ("Soft, flexible, and a good housekeeper" — when Jill questioned the "good housekeeper" part, Tim responded
* In response to a backlash from fans towards Sonic's design, the release of
* In response to a TV listing for the non-existent episode "Friendship Is Magic Part 1, Strawberry Elves", Meghan McCarthy tweeted that the elves were actually blueberry, and that "
* In response to concerns over rising costs of hosting the Olympic Games, Montreal mayor Jean Drapeau stated that "the Olympics can no more have a deficit than a man can have a baby".
* in response to Dr. Nofun explaining how even dating is better without women.
* In response to his parents deaths, Edge is enraged at Rubicante, the Archfiend Edge deemed responsible. In his anger, Edge unlocked his Flood and Blitz Ninjutsu techniques.
* In response to PETA's complaints about using a monkey, Chrysler produced another commercial that was almost exactly like the first one—but now
* in response to President Obama publicly supporting same-sex marriage,"
* In response to questions of whether or not the Human Project really existed and if they were able to create a cure to the mass infertility after the ending of
* In response to rumors that "King Magnus" in "The Apple Cart" is supposed to be George V, Shaw replied that the character is a self-portrait. A scene where the King is tackled by his mistress was copied from a real encounter between Shaw and Stella Patrick Campbell.
* In response to the 2016 Pulse nightclub shooting, Universal postponed its initial grand opening date and press junket for the

* In response to the above disaster, the Citadel made it illegal to open uncharted mass relays. This led to the First Contact War when a group of human explorers ran afoul of a turian patrol
* In response to the above, Lloyd and Cecile defect as well to help Suzaku, though in Lloyd's case, it's mostly to keep working on the Lancelot.
* In response to the large number of readers complaining about the Slayer being "
* In response to the shitstorm that erupted over Coca-Cola's multicultural Super Bowl ad, one person on Twitter jokingly remarked "Looking forward to RNC banning Coca-Cola products at 2016 election." Someone else responded to it "MSNBC called. They want their smear campaign back."
* In response to the skirmish between Indian and Chinese troops that occurred in June 2020 and out of security concerns, the Indian government has banned 59 Chinese mobile apps, including Tiktok, WeChat, Clash of Kings and Mobile Legends.
* In response to this dilemma, some state bars have added rules that allow for limited disclosures in this situation, arguing that justice demands the innocent go free.
* In Reston, Virginia, there is a street named Temporary Road. Initially, it was supposed to be a temporary road until a bridge over the highway got built, but then, people kept using it. It didn't have a name, so people called it "Temporary Road" because that's what the sign said.
* In "Resurfacing", the villains are a corrupt trio who sell people shoddy parts. A boat fitted with their parts sinks, killing everybody on board. The criminals attempt to kill everybody who learns about their shoddy parts and
* In "Resurrection", 12 years after every last human on Earth was wiped out in a biological war, the androids Martin and Alicia plan to recreate humanity using DNA samples which were preserved before the war.
* In "Resurrection", humanity was wiped out due to a biological war on July 24, 1997, which was then 18 months in the future. In 2009, two androids named Martin and Alicia recreate a human named Cain from uncontaminated DNA samples.
* In "Resurrection", humanity was wiped out in a biological war on July 24, 1997.
* In "Resurrection", two scientists are breeding a grown man in what appears to be an embryonal sac in their basement. One of the scientists accidentally gets some fluid on his face, and goes upstairs to clean up. His colleague then removes his face plate to reveal that they're both androids. This is followed by an
* In retail, eateries, and other similar jobs, employees are usually required to wear specific kinds of clothing to conform to the business' standard for appearance. An employee that has more power or seniority over other employees (usually a manager) will have a little more leeway on what they can wear.
* In retaliation for Kasia's killing an SS soldier, twenty some Polish civilians are shot by a German firing squad publicly.
* In retaliation for the destruction of York (now Toronto) in the War of 1812, the British Regulars invaded and burned Washington.
* In "Retrace 49", Liam punches Break in the back of the head when he complains about
* In "Retrial", a sailor had unbeknownst to him hired a transsexual prostitute.
* In "Retribution", Randall and several men decide to desert in "Mutiny" when the situation on the ship becomes difficult: a crazy Captain, a weak 1st Lieutenant, and possible charges of mutiny for the whole crew. When Gunner Hobbs finds out they're deserting and stealing guns, he's offered to go with them, but his
* In "Return of Chef", after the boys call the beliefs of the Super Adventure Club (that molesting children grants immortality) retarded:
* In "Return of the Speckled Band", the killer injects snake venom into the victim using a pair of hypodermics tied together to simulate a snakebite.
* In return, the French Naval officer who was to be killed by Xenia Onatopp during sex had to be turned into a Canadian.
* In return, Yuu also calls Mikaela "Mika", regarding their closeness as
* In "Reunion, and Turnabout", your assistant is locked in an empty room with the victim, a gunshot is heard, and the door is opened to reveal her standing over the corpse with a smoking gun in her hand. Naturally,

* In "Reunion", Fisk beats one of his FBI bodyguards to death in the backseat of his limo
* In Revelation chapter 18, the merchants of the earth weep at the destruction of the city of Babylon, realizing that the end of the earthly kingdoms ruled by man has come and the Day of the Lord is at hand.
* In "Revelation" the player and the Turei are being pressed hard by the
* In "Revenge of Doom", the Legion of Doom zaps Superman and Wonder Woman with a ray that turns them into crystal statues. Again, they are conscious and and see and hear. Superman blasts both of them with his X-Ray Vision, allowing them to move again, but not very fast, until they manage to grab the ray and change themselves back to normal.
* In "Revenge of the Chicken From Outer Space", Courage screams his head off after a terrible nightmare, which wakes Eustace and Muriel and prompts the former to kick Courage out of the bedroom.
* In "Revenge of the Cybermen", the Doctor mentions that the planetbuster bombs the Cybermen are using are prohibited by the Armageddon Convention.
* in reverse in Japan with regards to the Portuguese. After two traders landed by accident on the island of Tanegashima in the mid-1540's, a minor fascination with Portugal (and later, other European nations such as the Netherlands and England, prior to the closure of Japan by the Shogunate) developed. While a lot of modern loanwords in Japanese are derived from English, plenty of more ingrained terms in the language are derived from Portuguese, and a good handful of traditionally Japanese foods (ironically the ones that are so praised by modern Weeaboos!) are decidedly Western in origin, having hailed from the Iberian peninsula, only with almost 500 years of changes made to them.
* In "Revival", Luke and Serena are members of a race of shapeshifters.
* In "Revival", Luke is able to heal people using the power that he receives from an advanced piece of technology disguised as a
* In "Revival", Luke possesses the power of telekinesis thanks to an advanced piece of technology disguised as a
* In R:FOM's case, they were more than redshirts, seeing that you are the only survivor out of the
* In Rhapsody (of Fire)'s musically told-fantasy-epic, the Algalord Saga,
* In Rhyme For Your Life Dr. Rhyminstein gets eaten by the Purple Orange.
* INRI by Psyclon Nine is all negative commentary on Christianity and the consequences of it.
* In "Rich and Famous", Fireman Sam does this with Dilys Price while rescuing her from her roof when the attic catches fire.
* In Richard Kennedy's "The Dark Princess", the titular character gradually progresses from Divine Level Beauty to Intolerably Extreme Beauty by the time she grows to young womanhood, causing all who look at her to go blind (and she is also blind herself). The King discovers, however, that she can be looked at safely through a piece of colored glass.
* In "Richie's Flip Side", Richie falls into a job as a DJ and his ego grows with every scene. He contemplates quitting school and grows a ducktail. His friends hate him so much that Fonzie orchestrates a total snub by everyone at Arnold's during a live remote. Richie's crushed, learns his lesson, and quits his job. The moral of the story? No matter what you do,
* In Richmal Crompton's short story "William the Invisible", the titular William crawls along a muddy ditch after playing a trick on some children who he has convinced that he is invisible; while escaping across the neighbours' gardens, covered head to foot in mud, he manages to create an "escaped gorilla" scare. (IT'S COMPLICATED!)
* In Rick Remender and Cullen Bunn's run, Agent Venom briefly amalgamated the Venom symbiote with a derelict car to create the Venom Mobile, turning its hood into a mouth lined with far too many block-shaped teeth.
* In "Rimmerworld", Arnold Rimmer spent over 600 years in a society of his own clones, who have kept him in a dungeon for most of that time. At the end of the episode, they get back to their ship using a teleporter which, it's been established, has a slightly unreliable time component, so they arrive to find their other selves already there. Lister assumes they've landed in the past and starts giving dark hints to the other Rimmer about what's about to happen to him. The other Rimmer replies, "Rimmerworld was weeks ago," with a casual air.

* In "Rimmerworld", the escape pod Rimmer was in ended up flying into a wormhole, which made it seem like he was on a planet for 600 years, while to the rest of crew it takes 6 hours to find him.
* In Rindo's route, Kotone helping Rindo's best friend buy a gift for his girlfriend helps him go over the edge and unleash a deadly monster unto his workplace, leading the deaths of an untold number of people and Rindo nearly dying. Rindo is then turned into an obvious non-human against against his wishes
* In "Rio," a woman, Fanny Silver, is found beaten to death, and suspicion falls on her husband, Carl. Fanny's son by a previous marriage, Scott, has a bad relationship with Carl, and Natalia assures him that the killer will be brought to justice. This backfires disastrously when the killer turns out to be a house painter who thought Fanny was flirting with him and killed her when she rejected his advances, but Scott, who's convinced Carl is the killer, shoots him as he is being released from police custody.
* In "Ripped Pants", after SpongeBob's latest attempt at a joke about ripping his pants
* In "Ripped Pants", one of SpongeBob's many, many stunts involving comically ripping his pants involves
* In "Rip-Penn", Boone is a housemaid while Sashi is a male chemist. Both forms are very similar to their regular ones, with the only major difference being their clothing and hair.
* In "Ripple Effect", Colonel Mitchell gets into a rather animated conversation (with himself) about "the spit-take of all spit-takes."
* In "Rise from the Ashes", Gumshoe ponders why there seem to be no other crime reports apart from murder in this district.
* In "Rite of Passage", there is a Labrador in the commune which, contrary to Mother's theory, cannot receive telepathic commands.
* In "Rite of Passage", the Vorak discovered Earth after humanity was wiped out and recreate the original inhabitants using DNA samples found on skeletons.
* INR — Bureau of Intelligence and Research. Part of the Department of State responsible for organizing intelligence coming from diplomatic cables and helps to define the US diplomatic strategy.
* In "Road Kill" Sam and Dean pick up an accident victim by the side of the road. Turns out she is a ghost and was killed in an accident 15 years ago.
* In "Road Rash", Dexter got a bicycle from his parents, leading to a direct homage to the Road Runner cartoons when Dexter tried to get even with a roller-blading Dee Dee.
* In "Roadside Attraction", Mabel says she was checking around the attic where they sleep and that she found a box that says DO NO TOUCH hidden under his bed. When the box is accidentally opened, they discover a bunch of photos of Wendy (albeit fully clothed). Consider the previous episode with the
* In "Roadside Attraction", Soos accidentally gets left behind at the corn maze.
* In "Road to Europe", Stewie bemoans his life in the house compared to his favorite TV show when Peter and Lois have a personal conversation while packing for a trip.
* In "Road to Germany" Mort gets sent back into the past and mistakes the presence of his relatives as that he's in heaven, going out of his way to add titles of cheapness to their names, such as frugal, thrifty and "didn't like to spend a lot of money on anything."
* In "Road to Germany", Stewie, Brian, and Mort stole Nazi uniforms (with McCain Palin button on Stewie's uniform) to infiltrate a nuclear facility.
* In "Road to Germany", when Brian and Stewie are searching for Mort at a Jewish wedding:
* In "Road to Germany," when Stewie and Brian travel back in time to
* In "Road to Germany," when Stewie and Brian travel to 1939 Poland,

* In "Road To Rhode Island" Lois insisted Peter watch some marriage counseling tapes with her. They turned out to be pornos that sent the woman out of the room, did some dirty things, and then demanded the viewer buy the next tape to see what happened next. Each progressive tape was more expensive, though...
* In "Road to Rupert", Joe revokes Peter's driver's license after a failed attempt to jump several cars. Peter was charged with reckless driving, disturbing the peace, and rape because one of the drivers of the cars Peter tried to jump was a virgin whose hymen was busted by her airbag.
* In "Road to Rupert", Meg is driving Peter and his drunk friends, who proceed to annoy her, set her hair on fire, and make her crash into the car in front of her. When the driver comes out and yells at her, she finally loses it and beats the ever-loving crap out of him.
* In "Road To The Multiverse" Brian and Stewie visit a Disneyesque world, complete with all of the company's stylistic trademarks.
* In "Road to the Multiverse", Bunny!Tom Tucker has one of these before he and the rest of the Disneyfied characters beat up Mort.
* In "Road to the North Pole", Brian and Stewie use a mutant elf's torn off arm to make the mutant reindeer fly pulling Santa's sleigh.
* In "Road Trip", Candace tries to bust the boys for starting a truck stop on top of the family's rented RV. She takes up the waitressing grudgingly. By the time they've gone through the song, she is looking at the order turnabout and herself like "what am I DOING?!"
* In "Road Trip", Strong Bad mentions that all road trips need to end up developing an in-joke for everyone involved, so he decides to try and make that joke BEFORE the trip even starts (the attempt he shows is "jumbo/LARGE"), effectively turning it into this.
* In "Road Worthy," Oscar tells Wanda that he can't decide on a gift for Emma, to which she says, "Well, coming to the gas station was a great start. There's motor oil, antifreeze, two-liter bottles of pop ..." Oscar says that Emma likes pop, but Wanda tells him, "Don't get her pop."
* In Roberta Hogan's Milkshake! Mix video "It's Funny Cuz He Bleed Himself!", Foxy yells out this before he passes out from a
* In Robert Arthur's short story "Obstinate Uncle Otis", the main character is described as having "a lack of faith that can
* In Robert Arthur's "The Wonderful Day" Danny, after overhearing an idiom-laden conversation between his parents, wishes on a unicorn horn that all the expressions adults use would be literally true for just one day. When Mrs. Edward Norton thinks prideful thoughts the day after, she puffs up like a balloon and only grabbing the branches of a nearby cherry tree saves her from floating away.
* In "Roberta's Blood Trail", she does this with an entire bottle (also in the Yellow Flag, or what's left of it).
* In Robert Burns' poem "Tam o' Shanter", Tam gets drunk at a pub and witnesses a gathering of undressed dancing witches on the way home. They spot him and come after him, and he barely manages to escape with his life although one of the witches got close enough to pull the tail off his horse. The ending reiterates the moral: don't get drunk or ogle pretty ladies, because otherwise your horse might lose its tail.
* In Robert Heinlein's "To Sail Beyond The Sunset" Maureen Long is obviously sexually fixated on her father, who possibly responds, though he tries to discourage it. For that matter, Lazarus Long (Maureen's son) is really hot for her, and consummates this by traveling back in time as an adult in "Time Enough For Love" and dating and having sex with her. In fact, the incest theme seems a large motif in many of his works. Curiously enough, in a real sense this might also present an inversion, in that Maureen Long was apparently based on Heinlein's RL wife, Virginia.
* In Robert Southey's ballad "God's Judgment on a Wicked Bishop", (1799, based on a 14th century legend) the evil Bishop Hatto is eaten alive by a giant army of rats.
* In Robin and Tharja's C support, this exchange sets the tone for their relationship.

* In robotic combat, bots with hammers for weapons had early success in the early 2000's, but improvements in armor soon rendered them useless in comparison to spinning weapons. Then came the 2016 season of
* In "Robot of Furfuri Nagar", the contestants of the robot competition are asked to read the robots' manuals, as "whoever drinks up the information in this manual tonight and digests it really well, only he will be able to win the competition". Motu complies by
* In Robots in Disguise Sideswipe and Whirl, the guy who caused the spoilered incident, police the now neutral Cybertron and casually mention hating and beating on the neutrals. Prowl is the security director and has a fanatical hatred of them, and later deploys the Decepticons for crowd control (at this point the neutrals had erupted into a violent riot, and had even shot their leader), and two of them, Needlenose and Horri-bull, stay on as police, they tried to beat up a guy who was making graffiti (Prowl does have standards, though, and he stops them).
* In "Robot", the Doctor and the Brigadier conduct a search of the Think Tank, only to be told the
* In "Rock Bottom", a fish that SpongeBob thought was going to attack him returns his balloon that he took earlier and inflates it, letting SpongeBob fly back home.
* In "Rock Bottom", before going off to get a bus schedule, SpongeBob tells Patrick to wait for a bus and call him if one comes. Patrick does...after he's already on it.
* In "Rock Bottom", SpongeBob eats some Glove World candy, then spits it out because it's "glove flavored".
* In "Rock Bottom", SpongeBob finally makes it back home just as Patrick passes by on a bus to get him back.
* In "Rock Bottom", SpongeBob makes himself look like his grandfather, complete with a walker while quoting him.
* In "Rock Bottom", SpongeBob tries to assert his place in line for a bus pass only to find other "people" got there before him and he becomes 329th (
* In "Rock Bottom", SpongeBob tries to get a candy from the machine across the street from the bus stop, but every time he tries he misses the bus. He finally comes through, but as he reaches for the candy bar inside the bus pulls up, going back and forth as SpongeBob sticks his arm in and out, even revving up as he touches the candy bar. Finally, he makes a dash for it and the bus rides off without him. To top it off, someone comes and takes the candy bar, and as SpongeBob crosses the street to catch him, three busses in succession go by.
* In "Rock, Clocks, and Two Stupid Ponies", Pinkie and Spike are allegedly the commentators for the fall race. In practice, they spend all their time talking about how high they are and never even mention the race.
* In "Rockhead III", because Rockhead twice stands nose-to-chest with his ring opponents, he remarks, "If this kind of posing keeps up, I want my next match to be with
* In "Rockhead IV," during "Appalling Greed's" funeral, "Brawly" muses to "Atrium," "I wonder which one of us gets our ticket punched in 'Rockhead V'?" While it doesn't happen during the events of
* In "Rocko's Happy Sack", Rocko gets to the checkout lane right before the 90% off sale at the supermarket ends, but Filburt is going so slow that the sale ends and Rocko's total goes from $1.50 to $150, leading to Rocko yelling at Filburt to change it back.
* In "Rock Solid Friendship", it is revealed that Starlight Glimmer and Maud Pie had met several years ago. Maud unknowingly gave Starlight advice that helped her conquer Our Town back when she was a villain. Starlight didn't remember this, but Maud did.
* In "Rock Solid Friendship", Pinkie Pie briefly imitates Maud's mane and deadpan expression while quoting her.
* In "Rock-Solid Friendship", when Pinkie Pie learns her sister Maud
* In "Rock This Town" by The Stray Cats, the narrator takes his girlfriend on a date and they do just this at their first stop:

* In Rodney Carrington's appropriately named "I Think I'm Dancing with a Man" the singer begins to get suspicious of the woman he's been dancing with because of many masculine traits. His friend then takes "her" for a dance and "her" skirt falls off confirming it.
* In "Roger's Baby" Francine tells Hayley that she's been pregnant four times. Hayley counts that she, Steve, and
* In Rog Phillips' "Rat in the Skull", a lab rodent is hooked up into a
* In Rogue's case, the problem isn't insurmountable: there have always been characters immune to Rogue's absorption power (e. g. the Avengers' Wonder Man in her debut story) and also quite a few who could protect themselves through their own powers (e. g. Magneto in the
* In Rogue Spear, RAINBOW is deployed to Russia to secretly cut off the Astasanov Nuclear Weapons Storage Facility from outside contact, which is being used by mafiya boss Maxim Kutkin as a hideout with Russian Army officer Viktor Rudenko and the soldiers under his command. Kutkin also forces unemployed scientists to create nuclear weapons for his use.
* In ROH fandom, Eddie Edwards is the gold standard by which all others are measured. Like most examples, he is talented in the physical aspects of his trade and he's expressive enough to convey convincing emotion while in action, but
* In Rohmer's "President Fu Manchu", the object is to find the villain's New York base. The police reason that since
* In "Roller Cowards", Spongebob and Patrick use the long line for the roller coaster as a stalling tactic because they're both scared to go on it. They also accidentally get in line for the bathroom at one point.
* In "Roller? I Hardly Know 'Er!", Gene isn't happy about his best friend Alex becoming Courtney Wheeler's new roller-dancing partner and spending all his time with her, especially when he learns Alex "like-likes" Courtney.
* In Roll to Roll to Dodge, Frelock fails to do this to the goblin tower; Derm succeeds, with the comment, "Pyrotechnics will be heavily involved."
* In Roll to Roll to Dodge, the Men in Black are agents tasked with ensuring that nobody has unauthorized access to the Raws. The only two whom we see, Passedrims and Salvenames, are subsequently killed; one by rogue Raw modifiers, the other by an knife thrown by Frelock which explodes on the ground after Passedrims dodges it.
* In Roman Catholic art, it's not uncommon to invert this trope with Jesus and Mary, with the two being given red and blue clothing, respectively. Red is a color heavily associated with Christ, considering its symbolism with both blood and love.
* In Romance of the Three Kingdoms, Sima Yi is played as one, although he is loyal until almost the end, and Zhuge gets a nice rant about how he's a hero and not about to betray anyone.
* In Romanian folklore, vampires and werewolves aren't really distinct — the word in Romanian that comes from the Slavic for werewolf,
* In Roman mythology, the son of the Etruscan king of Rome took it into his head to rape a respectable Roman woman.
* In Rome, part of a triumph given to a triumphant general was a parade of their more important prisoners (as alluded to in
* In Rome, the prophecy that the enemy of Rome will be defeated is more ambiguous.
* In "Rooftop", a season 3 episode about a serial rapist targets young black girls, Fin goes into the captain's office to vent his utter disgust that even though the rapist has started killing his victims, the core four detectives are the only ones working the case even though a few episodes previous there had been a missing white woman who had thirty officers looking for her.
* In "Rookie Night", giving these kinds of nicknames is tradition for the eponymous event, and almost every rookie that partakes in it has one, given to them by Orchid. Ocean's is "Flapjack", Oona's is "Veggie Sticks", and Orielle's is "
* In "Rookie Night", Olympia and Otis attempt to find and take part in the eponymous event, but by the time they get there by way of going through all the rooms in Precinct 13579's Headquarters, they're too late and Rookie Night has ended. Otis begins to apologize to Olympia and claims how missing the event was his fault, and Olympia seems to agree before pulling a

* In rooms with multiple paths, arrows will materialize on the walls to point you in the directions you haven't taken yet.
* In "Room With a Moose" Zim admits that he's telling Dib his evil plan because he's the
* In "Rooting for the Enemy", it's revealed that his family, mainly Milo and his father, Martin, have their own hospital suite called the "Murphy Suite".
* In Rosaria's case, she seemed more than a little attached to Fujiko, who was amnesiac at the time. At one point, she jokingly asks Lupin if they can "share" her. Not that those two didn't have subtext before that.
* In "Rosebud", Maggie doesn't want to give Bobo away, so Homer won't give the teddy bear back to Mr. Burns. He is later watched at work by three men. The first mentions they wanted to see the geek who valued the happiness of his children more than money. The second is disappointed his head isn't the size of a baseball. The third just eats his popcorn.
* In "Rosebud", Mr. Burns dreams about his lost teddy bear and talks in his sleep, which Smithers hears him doing.
* In "Rosebud", Mr. Burns leaves his parents to live with a rich millionaire. As their car disappears in the distance Burns' parents sigh: "Ah, oh well, at least we still have his little brother George". The camera then cuts to a boy version of
* In "Roswell That Ends Well", everyone sits down and buckles their seatbelts in preparation for a crash landing except Bender, who smugly insists, "Those things
* In "Roswell That Ends Well", Prof. Farnsworth's diner order includes a mention of "two mutton pills".
* In "Roswell That Ends Well", radiation from a supernova combined with radiation from Fry putting aluminum in a microwave oven to create a wormhole that sends the Planet Express crew back in time. They have 24 hours before the wormhole closes, but need microwaves to make the return trip.
* In "'Round Springfield", Bart goes around the hospital in his gown with eyes drawn on his butt.
* In "Royal Pain", Star and her father King Butterfly are amazed by the bathroom of the Diaz family, especially
* In RPGs this is the case for the Luggage. If you stopped to take a look when passing a cliff edge, the Luggage wouldn't, unless you told it to.
* In RPG terms. If one of the main characters needs to roll a six to make it past the next challenge, then everyone around them will continue to roll sixes constantly until the
* In "Rubber Nipple Salesmen", the two finally manage to sell some rubber nipples after many failed attempts. The suburbanite couple that purchased them kick Ren and Stimpy out the door and onto the backs of a couple of crazed bulls who then ride off into the distance (this is a
* In "Rudyard Takes a Hike," the titular character (about thirty-five) bonds with and becomes protective of the ten-year-old Calliope, because she reminds him of himself when he was a child:
* In "Rufus In Show", Kim discovers that the villain keeps electric eels, to which she replies, "The puns just write themselves. Shocking, isn't it?" Of course, the villain says the very same line later when he reveals his electric eels.
* In "Rufus vs. Commodore Puddles", a fifty-foot naked mole-rat squares off against an equally large French poodle, in combat at Area 51. The garrison there kept giant, truck-mounted dog whistles and bombers full of dog biscuits available
* In rugby, Ireland, Scotland, England and Wales have separate teams. Northern Irish unionists object to both the Irish tricolour flag and the Republic's anthem "Amhrán na bhFiann", so a special "Four Provinces" flag and a special composed anthem ("Ireland's Call") is played.
* In rugby union, the Six Nations. Whenever a team with 4 wins and chasing a Grand Slam fails to win its last match, the other nations celebrate. Having won the most times, England in general also receive this treatment, as shown in
* In "Ruled Out", Timmy is extremely excited to watch an educational (but mostly violent) documentary about a giant
* In "Rule of Dumb", when it turns out Patrick is a descendant of royalty, he begins taking anything he wants and acting like a tyrannical king. When SpongeBob lampshades how much of a jerk he's become, Patrick doesn't realize he's right until he sees himself in the mirror and notices that he's literally turning into a monster.

* In "Rule of Law", the Medusans are crustacean-like humanoids who lay eggs.
* In "Rule of Law", the Medusans lay eggs. During the hatching process, the hatchlings absorb energy from tritium bricks. They cannot survive the hatching process without this energy.
* In "Rule of Law", the Medusans, the indigenous population of Daedalus, are a peaceful and deeply spiritual species who only resort to violence in order to defend themselves or their eggs.
* In "Rule of Law", the Narkopta have a two hour daily hibernation period.
* In "Rumors of Death", a politician is rehearsing a grandiose speech in honor of President Servalan, with plenty of emphatic gestures.
* In "Rumors of Death", President Servalan has a reproduction of a stately home of England built as her palace. This is regarded as
* In "Rumpole and the Married Lady" a series of partially overheard phonecalls by Hilda, listening in to Rumpole having to deal with a somewhat overwrought and needy female client during a bitter divorce, leads her to think that Rumpole may be cheating on her. Hilda even briefly moves out to visit a friend, but thankfully realises that for all his faults that Rumpole is not the cheating sort.
* In "Runaways" (S2E16), Alex Cabot threatens Lorna Frankel with a total prison sentence of 715 years
* In "Run, Candace, Run", Candace uses a pair of super-speed boots her brothers invented to
* In "Run", Clark sees time frozen as he runs to save his dad from a runaway truck, but is shocked to see Bart Allen, "the Flash", still
* In Runescape Gods Exposed, Iban shows up in one episode saying Zamorak is his father. Judging by his response this has been going on for a looooong time.
* In "Running on Empty", Opal and Orla stop at a cactus in the Sahara Desert to get some water in order to refuel their van. After attaching a faucet to it using a Faucet-inator gadget, Orla turns it on, and water slowly makes its way into a quart container. After a brief moment, Opal asks her if the process goes any faster, causing Orla to have this reaction:
* In "Running on Empty", the London Eye depicted isn't the actual London Eye — instead of it being the Ferris wheel, it's quite literally an eye in London.
* In "Running on Empty", when Omar invites Oswald to play Two Truths and a Lie with him and explains the rules, Oswald confirms if Omar wants him to lie to his partner. Omar bluntly replies "Yes."
* In "Running to Stand Still" in season 2, the Trickster has created an impressive Wall of Crazy dedicated to the Flash since their last encounter. It's mostly drawings, but in honour of the holidays he's made a paper chain of little lightning bolts.
* In "R.U.R. or Are You Ain't My Baby?", a female spy uses sex as a weapon to sabotage an enemy robot prototype.
* In "Rushing Roulette", he sets another glue trap. The outcome is what you expect.
* In "Rush to Judgment," Jamie is accused of undue force (he was actually trying to knock someone out of the path of an oncoming biker), a D.A. makes it clear she thinks he's guilty and his father must be covering for him. When video proves Jamie innocent, the woman continues to smark about his family always getting their way.
* In Russia, a bar like that typically bears an innocent Soviet-sounding name such as "Sea Wave Cafe" or "Little Pine Tree", is located in a dilapidated building on the
* In Russia and other former Soviet countries, it is still considered strange for a couple to be dating for a long time before getting married (i.e. what is commonly accepted in the West). Any dating period lasting more than a few months starts getting looks. This was slowly changing, due to Western influences (with words like "boyfriend" and "girlfriend" being adopted by the Russians), but many traditional Slavic customs remain, especially in rural areas.

* In Russia, as in France, the ruling Orthodox Church was a powerful presence in administration and society and owned much property.
* In Russia, a woman by the name of Fagilyu Mukhametzyanova suffered a fatal heart attack after waking up during her own funeral and finding herself surrounded by mourners.
* In Russia, both today and during the Soviet-era, classical music being played on all official channels has become recognizable as shorthand for "
* In Russia, many regular, civilian universities have military schools/ROTCs ("voennye kafedry/fakultety"). It is not mandatory for male students to study in these schools, but many people do, because there is conscription in Russia, and being a conscripted lieutenant is better than being a conscripted private. Of course, lieutenants from these military schools are the least competent sort of officers, derogatorily nicknamed "pidzhaki" ("jackets") by career servicemen. They are Ensigns Newbies par excellence.
* In Russia, members of the Communist Party often wear old Soviet military uniforms in protests and public events. Yevgeny Lukin frequently plays with this in his books, and eventually coined the term: a character "still faithful" to the dead state called himself a
* In Russian, "брак" ("brak") means, among other things, both "marriage" and "spoilage/defect."
* In Russian, a few species which produce different-colored flowers on the same plant are collectively known as John-and-Mary (Иван-да-марья). The legend behind the name is that two siblings by these names were separated during a Mongol raid and made slaves. After growing up, they met, fell in love and married, but then the relationship was revealed, and they desperately prayed to God that he would allow them to remain together
* In Russian, a ladybug is also "the Lord's cow" (Bozhya Korovka), and an analogue of the above rhyme exists.
* In Russian, a similar joke to the above is told about a family of two parents and a kid getting three wishes. So the kid instantly says "A hamster!" His father, angrily, says "Hamster up the ass!" Mom then says "Hamster out of the ass!"
* In Russian fantasy novella "Jack the Mad King", the evil sorceress claims that "No
* In Russian historiography, these actions are usually excused by the nearest Red Army units being exhausted in a protracted offensive and thus largely combat-ineffective. However, said historiography quickly proceeds to shift blame to the Poles for not coordinating with Moscow, and accuse them of
* In Russian, "pink" is a slang term for lesbians, and "light blue" is a slang term for gay men.
* In Russian sci-fi (or Russian translations of sci-fi from other languages), the word "zemlyane" (Earthlings) is typically used in place of "humans" ("lyudi"), as the latter word also means "people", which doesn't necessarily apply to just humans. Alternatively, in settings with
* In Russian the word "Galactica" ("галактика") means simply "galaxy", which originally led to names like
* In Russia red is considered a strong or preferred color, dating long before the Communist days. The Russian word for red,
* In Russia the city of Chelabinsk is supposed to be an entire town of
* In Russia, the obligatory third toast, as long as the company drinking contains at least a substantial minority of Army or Air Force men, both active and retired. The naval version has this as the second toast; the third one is for those who are at sea, so the toasters don't know whether they are alive or dead.
* In Russia, there is a famous joke about a new doctor who saw a lot of patients with "GAK" as the diagnosis. It turns out to mean "God Alone Knows".
* In Russia, this has been the case for veterans of the Great Patriotic War (

* In Russia, Vladimir Putin's government introduced financial reward schemes to encourage people to have more children. It's unclear to what extent it was responsible (probably not very much), but since then Russia's population has stabilized and is once again growing slowly.
* In Russia where political and business-related assassinations are unpleasantly common, this is a very common tactic for the local police.
* In "Ruthless Tommy", he also flushes jewels down a toilet while he was kidnapped by robbers.
* In S01E01, Fabiola protests the accusation that she and her best friends are uncool by pointing out they're the only students allowed to eat with teachers at lunch.
* In S01E05, this is part of Devi and Ben's banter. She calls him pretentious and unlikable; he follows it up by saying he can't be those things because his dad drives a Porsche Cayenne. He says she has a somewhat difficult personality; she responds by threatening to punch him in the Adam's apple.
* In S2E9 of "Who is Queen", Chun-Li finishes off a humanized Amy Rose by giving her a wicked frontal wedgie.
* In S4E15 ("Chick Like Me"), Cory plans on dressing as a girl to school in order to find out how life is different for female students and male students. He turns out to have too masculine of a walk, so Shawn tries teaching him how to act female, getting it "surprisingly on the nose" according to Topanga. When he shows Cory how to walk like a woman and gets it perfectly, Cory and Topanga decide that Shawn should be the one to dress like a woman for the day. He turns out to be a
* In S6 Phoebe's empath power is taken away because the Elders feel she abused it.
* In S7 episode "In Plane Sight," Lani manages to immediately identify a killer's handedness (left, natch) from a
* In S7 the sisters use their powers to help the avatars try and create a utopia but this comes at a heavier price than they realise and then they have to put things right.
* In Sabaody Archipelago, we meet Silvers Rayleigh. Mentioned initially as a man the crew needs to prepare there ship for the cottage to Fishman Island, then revealed upon his proper introduction to be
* In Saberhagen's Books of Swords series, this is what the Tyrant's Blade (AKA Soulcutter) does. When it is drawn from its sheath everyone in a 250m radius
* In "Saddlesore Gallactica", there was a scene where Moe is on the ground, searching for discarded tickets at a racetrack. He finds one, but not before someone else finds it first. That "someone" is a beautiful blond woman. Moe is completely enamored with her...and then the moment is ruined when his heart literally beats out of his chest a la those old Tex Avery/WB cartoon shorts (which, according to Moe, is a serious medical condition).
* In "Sadie's Song", Steven happily dressed up in a crop top, skirt, and makeup when serving as a last-minute substitute for Sadie Miller's musical performance, and nobody judged him for it. It's not played for laughs or creep factor at all.
* In Sadira's altered reality where she takes Jasmine's place. When Aladdin and Jasmine meet again, they realize their true intertwined destinies and that the current reality wasn't right. Once they share a kiss, the reality is reverted back the way it once was.
* In "Safari O'Tool" there's Miss Davis's beau, a famous jungle explorer.
* In "Safe and Sound", Michael and his brother Lincoln Burrows must drill the wall of an empty office in order to gain access to one of the
* In "Safeguards", Nick Furst brings the narrator to the field hospital so she can get patched up. This, unusually, gives her time to reflect.
* In "Safehouse", Riff is looking a way to undo the effects of a hypnotic pattern spread via the Internet, and in the process runs across some
* In "Safe Space", Butters is brought in to filter the negative comments from the Twitter accounts of Cartman and various celebrities, and all the exposure to the Internet's hateful comments drives him insane, culminating in him running through the school naked and jumping out the second-story window.
* In "Safety Second", Tom is cornered by a large firecracker. Instead of blowing up, it breaks apart to reveal a smaller firecracker, which then reveals a smaller firecracker, and so on until all that is left is a tiny firecracker. Tom holds it in his hand and places it on his nose, and then it goes off with a huge explosion.

* in "Safe", while Simon and Kaylee are arguing in the general store, River can be observed in the background wandering away, setting up the rest of the episode.
* In said game's universe (a rather extensive one, with multiple inhabited planets of various levels of technological development), an equilibriumancer is one who uses the two moral elements, or Light and Dark. Sounds fitting with the balance, doesn't it?
* In "Sailor Mouth", SpongeBob believes that Mr. Krabs will punish him and Patrick for swearing by giving them 40 lashes (with a whip). Patrick then imagines him being given exaggeratedly full eyelashes.
* In Sally Stageplay's fight, there is an angel that you can jump on in Phase 1, which causes a buttress to fall in the background. If the husband in the background is in front of the priest when this happens, he will get killed, which ends Phase 1 immediately and causes some changes in the fight. For one, the nursery in Phase 2 will become a nunnery instead, and instead of babies, it spawns nuns who throw rulers at you. Also, in Phase 3, the husband will appear once again, this time as a god in Heaven.
* In Salmon Run, if a round ends with a team wipe, the game doesn't formally end the round until the final player's death animation finishes. Players quickly discovered that the game's drowning animation was a few seconds longer than the normal death animation, leading people to deliberately jump off the stage in the last few seconds of each round, guaranteeing that the clock would run out before their death registered.
* In "Salty Horse", a Spanish Lord develops an insatiable appetite for horse-meat and has every single one of his horses - including the
* In "Salvation", Zod does one when he lands with great force in front of Clark.
* In "Samaritan Snare", Riker ignores the concerns of two senior officers regarding the Pakleds. First, Worf questions sending their Chief Engineer to an unknown alien ship. After Geordi beams over, Deanna, in one of her best uses of her powers, tells Riker the Pakleds' apparent stupidity is a ruse and that they are fooling him. This is perhaps the worst judgment Riker ever showed in the series.
* In Sami Mythology the sun goddess Beaivi's daughter, Beaivi-Nieida, was sent to earth by her mother to cure humans of illness. However, the humans became jealous of her powers and crushed her skull with a rock. Fortunately, it was instant and painless and she returned to the realm of the gods.
* In "Sample of New York", Opal's vulnerability to cute babies is what spurs her to ask 50 of them working as Odd Squad agents in the New York City precinct what their favorite food is: mushed peas. Naturally, when they present bowls of it to the other, much-older agents, they reject it and go back to protesting for better food.
* In "Sample of New York" when Polka Dot Pete starts talking about his personal life.
* In Samuel I, King Saul is ordered to exterminate the Amalekites: every man, woman, child, and animal. He is removed from God's favor when he disobeys by sparing the Amalekite King and by adding the Amalekite livestock to his flocks.
* In Samuel Taylor Coleridge's "Christabel", one of the first signs something is not right with Lady Geraldine is the untypical reaction of the dog: "The mastiff old did not awake,/ Yet she an angry moan did make!/ And what can ail the mastiff bitch?/ Never till now she uttered yell/ Beneath the eye of Christabel."
* In "Sanctuary", Cara Dune jumps out at Mando from the direction of the sun, providing a momentary advantage in the subsequent hand-to-hand combat.
* In "Sanctuary", the title character has to take on an ex-Imperial AT-ST, and his first sight of it is the red light through its viewports shining through the darkness as it powers up. Bonus points for
* In "Sanctuary", they find an incredibly primitive world untouched by the Wraith, whose inhabitants lead idyllic lives, all of which they attribute to their goddess, Athar. Said goddess, it turns out, is actually an

* In "Sandboy", Cat Noir's nightmare made real of a Ladybug who hates him and tries to kill him has a far deeper and more growly voice than the genuine article.
* In San Diego, ASI Heating and Air Conditioning uses the following jingle in its commercials:
* In "Sandkings", Dr. Simon Kress was a nerd growing up while his father was very much a jock.
* In "Sandkings", Dr. Simon Kress, whose mind has become increasingly warped since being infected with the venom of a red sandking, feeds his former supervisor Dave Stockley to the starving sandkings.
* In "Sandy, SpongeBob, and the Worm", Sandy has a fight with an Alaskan Bullworm and leaves its body tied in a knot. Turns out it was only the worm's
* In "Sandy, Spongebob, and the Worm", SpongeBob does this when his house gets devoured by an
* In "Sandy, SpongeBob and the Worm", when everyone at the Krusty Krab is arguing on how to protect themselves from the Alaskan bull worm, Mr. Krabs suggests that they all buy a Krabby Patty. They react by pelting him with bottles of ketchup and mustard.
* In "Sandy's Rocket", "Big Pink Loser", "Bubble Troubles", "Mooncation", and "Squidward the Unfriendly Ghost", among other episodes, the characters remain animated when they emerged from the ocean's surface.
* In "Sandy's Rocket", Sandy initially refuses to let SpongeBob ride with her on her rocket trip to the moon after he apparently caused a mishap with her helicopter that led to the death of many civilians, evidenced by a large graveyard outside her treedome.
* Insane Admiral: Military higher-ups in general aren't the most stable folks.
* insane all the information she's getting. When an incredibly dangerous power mimic copied Mrs. Potter's ability, he was mentally paralyzed for long enough to be thrown into prison.
* INSANE amounts of AOL shilling in early days (Adult Swim appeared the same year AOL and Time Warner have finished their merger). And AOL commercials were really long to boot, taking the time they need to highlight all new features of AOL 7.0. Downplayed as time went by and dial-up went out of flavor, prompting AOL to become third-party transit service, and while still retaining some commercials, they were nowhere near as long, and were sometimes sandwitched between ad spots of competition trashing AOL. (whether or not Williams Street let the competitors' AOL-bashing ads air on purpose or not has not been stated).
* insane. And as one of his allies notes, there's something in his eyes...
* Insane Avatar have so much in common with them? Fact and opinion are not the same thing."
* Insane Balance: While standing on one foot on a pole five feet tall, * insane Black Spiral Dancer Kinfolk describing the lore of the Wyrm. Reading it slowly corrupts the reader to the power of the Wyrm.
* insane. But if Kenpachi had faced either the aforementioned Szayelaporro or Zommari, he would have been thoroughly screwed.
* insane, but not rational or functional, and which causes them to (rightly) be considered insane by their peers.
* insane by any reasonable interpretation. A pathological obsession with hats, cats, birds, or riddles does not mean someone isn't aware of what they're doing. The same goes for being an eco-terrorist, wanting to eat people, or most of the various eccentricities Batvillains develop while pursuing a criminal career. The vast majority of notable Batman villains are serial offenders who are fully aware that they are breaking the law and in many cases even brag about it, and several methodically and deliberately plan their crimes out- in other words, they know full well that they are committing crimes but they do it anyway.
* Insane Cafe 3: The Curse of the Haunted Hotel foul mouth. Some of his more profanity laced quotes (almost every one of his quotes has one profanity in it):
* Insane Café 4 amounts of painkillers and keep him unconscious while he heals.
* Insane Cafe features Zachary Johnson, an anthropomorphic Clydesdale who is very well versed in biology and is shown to be capable of tearing doors out of the wall with his bare hands.

* Insane Cafe Series as main characters... and that's only the tip of the iceberg!
* Insane Cafe Series features living vehicles that help fight against Chong.
* Insane Clown Poppy from everyone in the family, including Bart himself.
* Insane Clown Poppy": When Homer asks Marge if she wants something done right or fast, she says that, like all Americans, she wants fast.
* Insane Clown Posse, about a continuous explosion which cleanses evil souls from the carnival grounds, and the first of a series of new Joker's Cards.
* Insane Clown Posse advertises themselves as "The Most Hated Band in the World."
* Insane Clown Posse, all lyrics referencing abuse of women were removed or altered and the line was changed to "I'd pinch her loopy ass."
* Insane Clown Posse, and have been well-known for over 20 years. And yet, though many of their albums have reached the top 20, they've never had a hit song - their highest-charting was "Santa's a Fat Bitch", which peaked at #67 in 1998, though "Hokus Pokus" did reach #53 in the UK.
* Insane Clown Posse are also an aversion; Violent J came from an impoverished background and he and Shaggy 2 Dope became engrossed in Detroit's hip-hop scene instead of simply imitating it.
* Insane Clown Posse. As his sentence drags on, he grows more violent and savage, until he's finally chained to a wall and raving. In the last few lines of the song, he gives up on the girl and her declaration of love, then proceeds to laugh maniacally until the song ends.
* Insane Clown Posse deceiving the Clowns into killing holy men in order to further damn them.
* Insane Clown Posse discuss the consequences of this trope in their recent song: "Over A Bitch".
* Insane Clown Posse done a straight-up love song. One rather notable example is "Another Love Song", which features Violent J singing, in full "romantic" style, about how he plans to murder his girlfriend because she cheats on him.
* Insane Clown Posse" fan following, which the FBI once went as far as to declare a gang. The 2014 "Gathering of the Juggalos" needed three tries to find a venue that was willing to deal with the complaints of their outraged neighbors. Shows involving ICP or other acts with similarly large Juggalo followings are notoriously hated by venues in the live music world; while they do draw well, they have a reputation for unruly, unhygienic crowds who are prone to vandalism, fighting, attempting to sneak in banned items, and displays of public lewdness, and the Faygo showers that are a major part of ICP's live shows create unholy messes that are a nightmare to clean up.
* Insane Clown Posse, for all others will die with you... and isn't it glorious, to know that you're witnessing the very end of the world itself?
* Insane Clown Posse has a song in which one day, people spontaneously launch off of the ground against their will, only to explode like firecrackers. This results in a blood rain that the singer is trying to avoid getting caught in.
* Insane Clown Posse has a song, "To Catch a Predator," concerning a man who uses the show's methods to lure pedophiles to his house, whereupon he kills him. As the chorus puts it:
* Insane Clown Posse have wrestled, licensing a video game and eventually starting their own promotion.
* Insane Clown Posse, not caring about the morality of those he takes; he only cares about his duty of ending the lives of those he has come to claim, though their song about him implies he may be a bit too interested in making sure people continue to come his way.
* Insane Clown Posse, raps that he'd be willing to "pay a little extra to the gallon" if it meant that the government would pay more attention to the violence of the inner cities instead of sending troops overseas.
* Insane Clown Posse refers to Satan as "the Witch". Interestingly, at no point is he depicted as having any supernatural power other than lies and deception.
* Insane Clown Posse refers to this a number of times, including the song "12" and a brief reference in "Piggie Pie" ("Axe in hand / I rose from the dead")

* Insane Clown Posse's appearance and Dark Carnival mythos is based on this trope. Many of their songs, including "Murder Go Round", "House of Mirrors", "Halls of Illusion" and "Tilt-a-Whirl" relate to Circus, or rather, Carnival of Fear-based themes.
* Insane Clown Posse: Shaggy 2 Dope, who has a scratchier, higher voice than Violent J, is usually the one to perform the "evil" parts of any given song. He's also more vicious in their wrestling matches. In fact, the fact that his voice ISN'T a stereotypical deep, booming bass makes him just that bit more intimidating.
* Insane Clown Posse's "Headless Boogie", Violent J jumps into a graveyard and witnesses headless bodies dancing. He gets his own head chopped off and joins in.
* Insane Clown Posse song "To Catch a Predator" has this as part of the chorus (though "burn" might also refer to the electric chair):
* Insane Clown Posse song "Under the Moon," the narrator is sent to prison after killing a guy with his father's .45 for trying to rape the unnamed love interest of the song.
* Insane Clown Posse that consisted entirely of them boasting about the fact that their music videos would never be acceptable to air on that channel.
* Insane Clown Posse Theater was intended as a web series but caught on and became part of the regular network lineup.
* Insane Clown Posse, the manager of The Oddities, was so stunned by this that she actually spoke in her normal voice instead of the monster voice she'd been using for over a decade.
* Insane Clown Posse to Moral Guardians campaigning against music they deem unsavory.
* Insane Clown Posse to the max, especially with a Howdy Doody-like voice cheerily announcing: "Nothin' beats a good hardy-har-har, right, boys 'n' girls?!"
* Insane Clown Posse turned out, inevitably far worse than those idealized portraits. Then, as the icing on the cake, they get killed in brutal fashion as punishment for how they lived their lives and destroyed those of the people around them.
* Insane Clown Posse. We hear a gun go off, but it turns out the caller missed when he tried to shoot himself.
* Insane Clown Posse", which has Violent J hunting and torturing pedophiles. In the last verse, he chases one onto the lawn and drags him back inside in full view of his neighbors and mailman. Nobody says anything because they know what the guy was.
* Insane Equals Violent: Being crazy automatically means you have no reservations towards harming or killing people.
* Insane Equals Violent: Mentally ill people are more physically aggressive.
* Insane Equals Violent or homages to earlier works that used this trope.
* insane. In addition, if Sawyer hadn't been a Living Legend, the court-martial could have been a mere formality or the jury wouldn't have been so hard-ass on the lieutenants. But since they felt they had to preserve Sawyer's reputation, they were looking for a scapegoat.
* Insane in the Mainframe", Fry thinks he's a robot and Leela tries to get him to snap out of it.
* Insane in the Mainframe", where the trauma of being committed to a robot asylum eventually causes Fry to believe he is a robot. In the episode's conclusion, bank-robbing robot Roberto stabs Fry, but the knife hits a can of oil he put in his jacket pocket earlier, causing Roberto to believe Fry really is a robot. Moments later, Fry snaps out of it when he sees the blood coming from a cut on his arm.
* Insane Jane, though it's difficult to say whether she styles it deliberately for this reason (she's kind of extremely delusional).
* insanely and had beaten seven shades of excrement out of his world's version of Apocalypse before leaving him for Magneto to kill.
* insanely difficult and the true leader of the Narukagami is... an unarmed young woman kneeling in the next room. She patiently awaits her death, but the player can choose to spare her if so inclined.
* insanely game system. Eating sentient beings lets them absorb their victims' know-how, spellcasting skills included. Don't know anything worth learning? Then they'll turn you into a Hive drudge-worker instead.

* Insanely International Ancestry: A character has ancestors that have lived across the world.
* Insanely inverted with the case of Holtz and Sahjhan. In this instance, Sahjhan is the genie yet
* insanely, long stairway until you reload). Even after mowing all the enemies down, the towers are still irritating for the insanely long time it takes to go up and down it, even when Snake's running.
* Insanely Twisted Shadow Planet is a Dyson Sphere-sized mass of writhing tentacles and machinery. It's no match for a single alien piloting a dingy UFO.
* Insanely Twisted Shadow Planet that were aired during the Halloween season.
* insane most popular character among the fandom, as it renders Caboose absolutely hilarious.
* Insane Pinkie Pie specials produced for the end of the series is a standout example.
* Insane Poetry was once a group consisting of three rappers and a DJ. One of the rappers, Cyco, continues to release music under the name Insane Poetry even though the group has disbanded.
* Insane Proprietor: A salesman who adopts a "crazy" persona (or maybe it's not a persona)...
* Insane Proprietor: A salesman who claims themselves to be insane, either as a marketing gimmick or because they truly are mentally ill.
* insane regeneration combined with his relatively fragile body, Majin Buu barely reacts to things like having holes punched in him or being reduced to bits.
* Insane Troll LogicA line of rationale so illogical and demented that it defies attempts to rationally argue against it.
* Insane Troll Logic: An incredibly idiotic and nonsensical logical fallacy.
* Insane Troll Logic as the poem's narrator thinks a towel he saw was made by aliens from another dimension.
* Insane Troll Logic. Case in point: his encore was to prove that black is white. He got himself killed on the next zebra crossing.
* Insane Troll Logic Hanar must worship the Reapers and aid them in their goal of total destruction.
* Insane Troll Logic If you want to believe Shepard is a megalomaniacal paranoid schizophrenic who happens to have a fixation on a threat that, coincidentally, happens to exist, go right ahead.
* Insane Troll Logic is sound, it must be God who made the printing press.)
* Insane Troll Logic it's still a ridiculous assumption to make for a while multitude of reasons, particularly since it's only a single shoe size in difference.
* Insane Troll Logic, or they retreat (which isn't failure because they can just come back for another go).
* Insane Troll Logic: Someone uses logical fallacies that are so ridiculous that explaining why they're nonsense would only be a waste of time.
* Insane Troll Logic that caused pistols to be wielded like rifles and vice versa.
* Insane Troll Logic to a vampified classmate psychoanalyzing her. All three of these usages are warped logic by twisted minds, but they are logical, not the kind of absurd and clearly erroneous leaps of illogic that Insane Troll Logic now refers to.
* inSANE (which met the same fate), it's unlikely that the game will ever be finished.
* In "Sanguine Love," a tube of ChapStick is found at the crime scene and the name is shown in plain view on screen, but the detectives consistently refer to it as "dry lip balm."
* Insaniquarium alien Psychosquid to be an octopus, despite him not having any octopus-like traits. He has 6 arms and a coned head, two traits that belong to squids and not octopi.
* Insaniquarium, and uses it to punch fishes and pets alike, forcing them to use their abilities.

* Insaniquarium: Blip the Porpoise is highly intelligent and possesses powerful psychic powers. He is notably able to tell which fishes are hungry, how much life aliens have during a battle and precisely predict the area at which aliens will appear.
* Insaniquarium, Guppies are your basic fish that eats food pellets and drop coins. Shortly after you get introduced to Carnivores, which eat baby Guppies, but drop the more valuable diamonds. Much later, you meet the large and menacing Ultravores, which eat Carnivores and drop the extremely valuable treasure chests.
* Insaniquarium to punch pets and fish alike, either making them drop money or triggering their powers.
* Insaniquarium, where the fish are replaced by snorkel zombies, and the fish food is replaced by brains.
* Insaniquarium you have to feed your fish. Because they shit money. Oh, and you'll need that money to upgrade a laser cannon to defeat some evil aliens. Naturally the aliens want to eat your money-pooping fish. Goes without saying, really.
* Insaniquarium, zig-zags this trope. On the one hand, he helps you defeating aliens, and quite effectively at that. On the other, he still has no qualms eating your guppies regardless of their size or status. Yes, he can devour your precious royal guppies, too.
* Insanity and Mental Illness. While insanity can be played for laughs sometimes, it's becoming less acceptable, and it's even more unacceptable to play a specific mental illness for laughs.
* Insanity Defense and be put in a hospital instead of prison, which would probably be a good thing for everyone involved.
* Insanity Defense: A person attempts to avoid going to jail for their crimes by giving the excuse that they are insane and therefore cannot be held accountable for what they did.
* Insanity Defense: A person tries to avoid getting in trouble for breaking the law by claiming that they are insane and therefore can't be held accountable for their actions. If successful, they will be found "not guilty by reason of insanity" (though this often results in being institutionalized at a psychiatric hospital).
* Insanity Defense be convicting him; that's the whole point of pleading guilty under insanity. They just might not give him a particularly harsh sentence under the circumstances. It's also not really a proper insanity plea; for one thing, there should have been reference to an actual psychiatrist on the witness stand. Simply showing the jury evidence indicating Novacom's culpability for circumstances leading up to the hypothetical situation that Tom really did blow up the tower won't be enough for an actual insanity defense. The proper defense here would be "extreme emotional disturbance".
* Insanity Defense: Character(s) uses the defense that they're insane in hopes of evading a death penalty.
* Insanity Defense. Note that this has nothing to do with legal competence; being adjudicated incompetent is an entirely different matter, though it often follows that someone who is legally incompetent is likely also criminally incompetent.
* Insanity Establishment Scene: That point in the story where a character is revealed to be insane.
* insanity form as Carmen and Blackmore look on. An impressive feat of Nightmare Fuel considering that Cory has been dead for quite some time when this picture was drawn.
* Insanity Immunity: Being insane means that you can't get any crazier.
* Insanity: In the good endings, all the protagonists survive. In fact, keeping everyone alive is the only way to get a good ending; if either Kenta or Riho are killed, you'll always get a bad ending.
* Insanity is also a major theme of the series, with most major characters (heroes included) losing their shit in a * insanity. On the other hand, you don't want to fire someone who has root-access to your computer system unless you really really have to.
* "Insanity" puppet who sexually abuses his doll congregation, and the preacher's crazed monkey-doll minion who mutilates the "heretics".

* Insanity Streak strip had a speaker at a nudist convention telling himself "Imagine them clothed! Imagine them clothed!".
* In Sanji's backstory, he and Zeff, who'd attacked the cruise ship where Sanji was working, end up shipwrecked and wash up on a rock in the middle of the sea. Zeff gives Sanji a small bag of food to last him until help arrives, while claiming that he took the larger share for himself due to being an adult and insisting that they not speak to one another. In reality, Zeff gave Sanji
* In "Santa's Solar Sleigh", Santa's brother tries to give him a new, high-tech, solar-powered sleigh... only for it to be useless, since Santa delivers at night.
* In Sarajavo during the recent war, one mercenary training a band of Croat snipers made it the business of his "class" to eliminate a Serbian sniper that had a weird taste for
* In "Sarcophagus", while searching for evidence of an advanced Neolithic culture in the Wrangell Mountains in
* In Sasaki's first appearance, he tells Mashiro and Takagi that their youth isn't what's keeping them from being published — it's that their manga submissions aren't good enough.
* In "Satan's Waitin'", Sylvester is in pursuit of Tweety on a roller coaster. As he raises his club over Tweety, he gets killed by a low clearance taking the
* In "Satellite Selfie", Jet and Sydney tickle Face 9000. Apparently, computers are ticklish.
* insatiable appetite. Regardless of how much success or popularity they obtain, a narcissist's bloated sense of entitlement will always leave them unsatisfied in the long-term. Consequently, such characters inevitably feel driven to seek out ever greater levels of self-aggrandizement. As a result of their self-centeredness and diminished empathy, narcissists have little (if any) qualms flouting rules and personal boundaries to further such aims. Their success and overall functionality is contingent on how good they are at selling themselves to people and keeping them hooked; even the highest-functioning examples can have everything come crashing down when they piss off or hurt the wrong people, and low-functioning examples are generally friendless, unsuccessful losers whose lives are marked by ceaseless drama, a revolving door of people, and a persistent "weight of the world"/"eternal sufferer" attitude born from continual perceived victimhood.
* Insatiable Newlyweds: A couple has a lot of sex following their marriage.
* Insatiable Newlyweds: Once a couple marries, they can't resist getting it on whenever they can.
* Insatiable Newlyweds, she hasn't. Sure enough, upon going to another doctor for an evaluation, it turns out she's pregnant.
* In "Saturated Fat Guy", Peter winds up gaining a ton of weight from all the junk food on his food truck. When he is informed that the
* In "Saturday Evening Puss", Tom throws a wild party with his alley-cat friends while Mammy Two-Shoes is out of the house for the evening. This disturbs the sleep of Jerry, who tries all sorts of ways to stop the noise from their party, and eventually resorts to calling Mammy Two-Shoes home. After she throws out Tom and his friends, Mammy decides to stay in and listen to some "soft, soothing... hot music!" Cue Jerry looking annoyed as the jazz music from earlier starts playing again.
* In "Saturdays of Thunder", Homer takes a parenting quiz and is unable to answer any questions about Bart. When he calls the quizmakers to ask what he should do, they put him on hold; the song played is
* In "Saudade", Marcus gets very, very high on LSD and during his subsequent ride through the Vegas Strip, the style switches between various forms, including live-action, traditional animation, and computer animation.
* In Savannah, Georgia, a girl named Lottie was raised by her aunt Louisa and her uncle Aaron and got along well with Anna, her stepmom's sister. She once caught Anna hugging and apparently kissing her uncle/dad; after an
* In "Saviors", after everything seems wrapped up, complete with music from Hugh Laurie, House hallucinates Amber telling him that he's not losing his mind.

* In Sayoko's Social Link, she reveals that one of her old patients was a little boy who wanted to marry her. You only find this out after she learns he's passed away.
* In "Say Uncle", after a sequence in which everyone's heads float around the Earth and return to their necks, Pearl responds by laughing insanely, then falling over.
* In "SB-129", after it's revealed that Squidward is now the inventor of jellyfishing after teaching prehistoric SpongeBob and Patrick how to jellyfish, he claims he's "going back" to rectify this.
* In "SB-129", Squidward hides from SpongeBob and Patrick in the Krusty Krab's meat locker. After they leave, Squidward discovers that he accidentally locked himself inside.
* In "SB-129", the episode skips 2000 years into the future with Squidward frozen in the freezer.
* In Sbemail 22, Strong Bad, in response to a fan's query as to what he thinks of the English, says something so offensive that he is officially banned from the United Kingdom.
* In "Scalp Trouble" (and its remake "Slightly Daffy"), a cavalry soldier shoots at Indians attacking the fort, marking his tally to the tune of "Ten Little Indians". The gag was repeated by Bugs Bunny in "Horse Hare", only he erases part of one tally because "that one was a half-breed".
* In Scandinavia, "huldra" or "hulder" usually refers to a beautiful forest-woman, with an animal tail or a hollow back to distinguish her from a human. Check the Folklore folder for more details.
* In Scandinavia, the Fair Folk are called Vetter or Underjordiske ("The Underworldly"). They generally act in typical fae-like manners, being a nebulous people that kidnap folk from the surface world if you're not careful. Some have been given specific names and traits, however.
* Inscape: The chapters are all named after playground and parlor games.
* In "Scaredy Cat", when Tigger is asked by Owl to housesit, he brings his possessions to Owl's place using one of these.
* In "Scaredy Pants", after the Flying Dutchman says how much he detests people who dress like him on Halloween and mock his name, Squidward quickly removes his beard and hat and whistles nonchalantly.
* In "Scaredy Pants", as he lowers SpongeBob down into the Krusty Krab, a jellyfish comes up behind Patrick and stings him in the butt, and it takes Patrick a few seconds to react before running around screaming in pain.
* In "Scare Master", Fluttershy's "unplanned guests" at the party are cutout drawings of pony versions of
* In "Scarlett Fever", Chris doesn't seem worried that all the contestants could die if the island exploded, even though this would likely lead to the show being cancelled and him being arrested again.
* In "Scatterday," Shika reads the rules for Scatterday, the second of which is "The first one to find the Scatter Crown is the first one to find the Scatter Crown."
* In "Scavenger Pants", Squidward keeps sending SpongeBob and Patrick on impossible scavenger hunts to get them to leave him alone, but they succeed with every last one. His most impossible test is to find his nonexistent long-lost brother, which they spend six whole months trying to find until they run into Mrs. Tentacles, who reveals she only had Squidward because one is enough, so that last test was all a big waste. But SpongeBob refuses to go back to Squidward because he feels he needs the brother he never even thought he had, so he and Patrick ask Mrs. Tentacles to adopt them to Squidward's dismay.
* In "Scavenger Pants", Squidward sends SpongeBob and Patrick on several errands of this nature to keep them busy so he has some alone time. When they succeed at every last one, he sends them on a seemingly impossible quest to find his long-lost brother, who doesn't exist, and they
* In scenes involving the military and the Situation Room, President Bartlet would often serve this role. While hardly the everyman, it was frequently discussed how he had had no military experience prior to taking office, and so would frequently need his military advisors to explain things to him (and consequently the audience).

* In "Scentimental Romeo", after Penelope clobbers Pepe Le Pew, he sees multiple Penelopes. His response; "The one in the middle may remain. The rest of you, another day..."
* In Schindler's introduction, the maitre'd is producer Branko Lustig, a Holocaust survivor himself.
* In "Schizogeny", the victim was pulled out the window, not pushed.
* In "Schnitheads", Heffer joins a sausage cult, but is sentenced to work the sauerkraut fields after tiring of sausage. Rocko and Filburt try to rescue their friend, but are caught. Just as the three are about to be punished, Really Really Big Man shows up disguised as The Most Supreme and Mighty King Of Wieners. He claims he will take his faithful servants home but instead drops them on a deserted island.
* In "Schooled!", Lincoln cuts the bathroom line by using a homemade zip-line.
* In "School Hard" one of the random vampires claimed to have been at the Crucifixion. Spike was highly skeptical of that, for good reason; the Sun was only dark for 3 hours and it was noon when the darkness started.
* In "School Reunion", Mr. Finch offers eternal life and eternal youth to the Doctor and his companions, even offering to help resurrect the Time Lords. Sarah Jane talks the Doctor out of it, saying "No. The universe has to move forward. Pain and loss, they define us as much as happiness or love. Whether it's a world, or a relationship... Everything has its time. And everything ends."
* In "School Spirit", when Marco says the Silver Hill Warriors are going to "slaughter" the Echo Creek Awesome Opossums in an upcoming football game, Star thinks the game is going to be an actual battle and booby-traps the field.
* In science fiction circles, this is also known as a "Jellybean Moment". This refers to a story by
* In scientific literature, you may find references to the "pound-mass" to refer to that concept, abbreviated "lbm", mainly because the Imperial unit of mass, the slug, is stupid. Whether that particular convention is followed or not, though, is hit or miss. The definition of slug is "the mass which accelerates by 1 ft/s2 when a force of one pound (lbF) is exerted on it." One slug has thus a mass of 32.174049 lbm or 14.593903 kg based on standard gravity, the international foot, and the avoirdupois pound. At the surface of the Earth, an object with a mass of 1 slug exerts a force of approximately 32.2 lbF or 143 N.
* In "Scientific Method", Captain Janeway orders Tuvok to crack down on discipline. "You're Security Chief. Don't thirteen department heads report to you every day? Straighten them out!" The writers appear to be confusing the job of Security Chief (responsible for tactical and internal security) with that of the First Officer (responsible for day-to-day management of the ship, who would therefore have all the department heads reporting to him daily and have the authority to discipline them if needed; in other words, Chakotay).
* in "Scimitar", Harm and Meg gets the captured marine out of an Iraqi prison.
* In "Scorched Earth" we see humans that the SGC has already relocated once, and the threat of the week means they may need to be evacuated again. Complicated by the fact that they require specific rare planetary conditions to survive.
* In Scotland and other parts of Northern Europe, there is a tradition of sending out the
* In Scotland back in the day, selling corpses to medical schools could be quite lucrative as mentioned in the article. Thus, many were obtained through not-so-legal methods. Many graves had mortsafes - a sort of metal cage - installed over them to deter grave-robbers. Poor families who couldn't afford mortsafes usually had to resort to literally sit on the grave for a few days and nights until the corpse would be too old and thus uninteresting to be used by doctors.
* In Scotland, the privilege against self-incrimination extends to an admission of adultery. Similarly, a wife cannot be guilty of
* In Scotland, where family surnames are common as middle names (but not first names) girls often end up with middle names that sound pretty masculine.

* In Scots Law law students hoping to "call to the bar" (become advocates (specialist court litigators)) must undertake additional training under senior advocates. This is called a devilingship and the student referred to as an "Advocate's Devil".
* In Scottish folklore, an unlucky traveler might have to deal with a type of
* In Scottish folklore, the Nuckelavee could not cross running water.
* In Scott Lynch's story "A Year And A Day In Old Theradane", the heroine Amarelle Parathis is the former leader of a
* In "Scott of the Sahara", an actress is standing in a trench on her own feet, while the actor with her is on a box. The result is ridiculous height disparity. And then, when the actor suggests that he get off the box and she gets out of the trench in order to bring them more-or-less on the same level, she flounces off in a huff because she
* In "Scott Tenorman Must Die", Cartman is out to get revenge on a teenage boy named Scott Tenorman who tricked Cartman into buying his pubes. Scott tries to humiliate Cartman by tricking him into publicly eating chili containing pubes.
* In Scout's own words, he's good at getting girls. What he's not good at is getting
* In SCP-738, a desk where anyone who sits can make a deal with the devil, Test 4 involved a mentally disabled test subject. The result was a contract where the test subject sold his favorite toy to the devil for a sloppy joe sandwich. After the test, an audible sigh was heard on the recording.
* In "Scratch N Sniff", Crichton and D'Argo wake up after a night's partying to find they've been robbed and their fellow crewmembers are missing. They start
* In "Scratch 'N Sniff" the bad guy abducts Jool so he can drain her body for a
* In "Screams of Silence: The Story Of Brenda Q," Brenda says her finger is bandaged up because "My (her) finger fell downstairs." In reality, it's clear that her
* In "Screwed the Pooch", Brian goes on the run from Peter and Carter when he allegedly impregnates the latter's prized greyhound, with Lois getting caught in the middle of the feud. In one scene, she goes to the park in a trenchcoat disguise to meet with Brian in secret.
* In "Scrooge McDuck the Outlaw!", when an adventure results in a western town experiencing a gold rush, Scrooge
* In "Scrubbin' Down Under", Rocko is forced to watch a movie about hygiene, where
* Inscrutable Aliens: Aliens are creepy because of how inhumanly weird they act.
* Inscrutable Aliens: Aliens that we have no idea how to communicate with and don't know much about.
* Inscrutable Aliens. Humanity can only speculate on what they want with Earth.
* Inscrutable Aliens: You cannot understand the thoughts of these extraterrestrials.
* In SDCC 2015, He stated that he has a fan group dedicated to making fan art of himself.
* In "Seahorse Seashell Party" Stewie talks to the viewers at the end about drugs (following Brain's trippy experience with drugs in the course of the episode) and reminds the viewers that they can learn more about drugs by visiting their local library because, as he puts it "There is probably a guy behind the building selling drugs".
* In "SEAL Team Deep Six", Rachel Clarke was framed by the real killer of her training officer.
* In 'Seance Schmeance", an old man keeps coming to the Krusty Krab mistaking it for the restaurant that was there before, asking for a Rusty on Rye. SpongeBob holds a seance to learn the recipe from the original cook and, after some help with Mr. Krabs getting rid of the partying ghosts, makes the sandwich for the customer at the end of the episode.
* In "Sea Patrol: Pups Save Their Pirated Sea Patroller", Arrby turns around and briefly hits Sid's rear with a mop, to the latter's annoyance.
* In Search Of Dorothy books were based off David Anthony's dreams of Oz.

* In Search Of Dorothy has the Wicked Witch of the West return by brainwashing an old woman, later possessing her to resurrect her body and magic completely.
* In Search Of Dorothy is based on the Oz books and movie and introduces several new characters not in either medium, like the Bull, the Tree, and Trisha the Good Witch of the South.
* In Search of Dr. Seuss This is subverted, however, with the Goose/Moose Juice in the "Hunches in Bunches" segment (On the production level of physicality, they appear to be premixed fruit-flavored drinks like Tang.), and where the yolks of the green eggs turn into lime Jello in closeup in the "Green Eggs and Ham" segment.
* In Search of Lost Time: only "The Way By Swann's" (volume one of seven) is at all known; it contains the famous madeleine reminiscence (which also comes right at the beginning of the volume). There is a bookshop with about seven copies of Vol. I on the shelf, and one or two each of all the others: they know most people give up.
* In Search of MOM. The Master Programmer is playing a "video" for the Photon Guardians, to let them know how she and the two super-computers for each side of the conflict, came to be while she tracks down what happened to M.O.M. There comes a point where the "recording" mentions the two super-computers and how she named them (Multiple Operations Matrix/Diverse Activities Database, or "M.O.M. and D.A.D.") Parcival mutters to himself about what stupid names they are. The Programmer on-screen looks right at him and asks "Do you think you could do better, four-eyes?"
* In Search of Mornington Crescent versions of Johnston and Blofeld discuss a cricketer called Geoffrey Hiscock, including such lines as "It was a bold decision for Gardner to open the batting with Hiscock" and "Hiscock is out! And the umpire is pointing Hiscock towards the pavillion." And so on...
* In Search of... television series hosted by Leonard Nimoy deals with most if not all of the mysteries on this page.
* In Search of the Dungeon Master" introduces a "Know Tree", a talking tree who claims to know "everything there is to know", including how to get the kids home. However, when Dungeon Master is kidnapped, the tree instantly becomes aware of it and gets so spooked that he clams up and stops talking. However, the kids never return to try asking him again once things have calmed down. For that matter, it's implied that he isn't even the only Know Tree around.
* In Search of the Far Side looked like a giant phallus. His editor responded, "So?"
* In Search of the Lost Chord chronicles a search for mystical enlightenment.
* In season 10, a fight between York and Wyoming involves a back and forth knock knock joke that ends with a
* In season 10, after confusing the nature of vampiric lines to mean each vamp in the line is the same person, Buffy accidentally blurts out in surprise that she'd "fallen in love with the same guy twice?" (referring to Angel and Spike, who belong to the same line of vampires). When Spike tries to clarify if what she said was what it
* In Season 10, Gordon Godfrey is one as well, being a media magnate who is riding high on the wave of anti-vigilante sentiment to gather political power, all while secretly spreading Darkseid's influence on the world.
* In Season 10, it's revealed that Agent Connecticut was already long dead; the one we see in Season 7 is just her boyfriend masquerading as her.
* In season 10, Pikachu forms a band with himself on cello, Buizel on saxophone, Turtwig on drums, and Sudowoodo on piano. Staravia
* In Season 10, Sam begins the first few episodes with his arm immobilized in a sling after having badly dislocated his shoulder before season 10 filming began. Padalecki had undergone surgery and had clearly lost a bit of weight, but could be explained in character due to the fact that
* In Season 10, this fuels the rivalry between contestants Miz Cracker and Aquaria. As they are both thin, white,
* In season 10, Wesley falls asleep in class dreams that he ate dinner with his crush Anya, but the dinner goes badly and he wakes up with an erection.
* In season 10, when Buffy and Spike are looking for a portal to a particular hell dimension, they end up having a lovers' spat in front of a sadism demoness they were interrogating. The argument gets heated when

* In Season 1 (1960), Rachel Menken approaches Sterling Cooper basically to advise her on how to up-market her family's somewhat fusty old-school Jewish department store and turn it into someplace WASPs would actually think of shopping at. The changes recommended are drastic, but she goes with it.
* In Season 11, black veins are a symptom of being infected and turned rabid by
* In Season 11, Castiel begs for mercy from two of his brothers when they torture him —
* In season 11, Fiona missed most of her classes due to a combination of her alcoholism and her going to rehab to treat it, causing her to repeat her senior year.
* In season 11, Frasier himself is on the receiving end when he and Lilith are going through a trial separation. When Lilith suddenly reappears, she mentions she hadn't written any such letter. Turns out her new romantic partner is a major
* In Season 11, Lopez the robot gets asked about his creators (i.e., the other characters) and says, "You're going to want to sit down for this story. It's about twenty hours long and I only enjoy telling it in five-minute intervals."
* In Season 11 "The Old Man and the Big 'C'", while waiting for Quagmire's hair implant at hospital, Joe greets every staff member who walks by the waiting room by their name.
* In Season 11 the Winchesters actually do meet God. Dean is accusing Him of being a demon trying to trick them when God teleports them to the Men of Letters headquarters while Dean is still talking, then raises someone from the dead and helps him
* In Season 11, when Amy falls in love with a wedding dress that Penny and Bernadette hate, Penny decides to tell Amy to save her from later embarrassment. However Penny immediately regrets it when she realizes all she has done is ruin Amy's perfect dress for her. Ironically, it's
* In Season 12, Caboose's lottery numbers at the gas station are 5 and 7.
* In season 12, Dallas seems pretty nice to other jocks and on his own, but joins in with the rest of the hockey team in homophobic heckling and pressures Campbell to do the same.
* In Season 12, Episode 1, the little girl sends an IM referring to her "smother" explicitly, it is later revealed that
* In Season 12, Grif gets so worked up over his chosen officer Bitters stealing one of his snacks that he calls him a "Dirtbag!" just like Sarge normally does. Grif is horrified upon realizing that the pressures of leadership are causing him to emulate Sarge.
* In season 12, Imogen failed to hand in most of her assignments and had to repeat her senior year. Drew dropped out early in the season, and thus had to do the same. Subverted with Mike; like Alex, he was doing a victory lap, the only difference being he didn't actually walk the stage and officially graduate.
* In Season 12, Nathan & Jennifer fought the entire race rather than mend their broken relationship, which is why they came on the show on the first place.
* In Season 12, Raj again asks his dad to give him an arranged fiancée. But this time, he only agrees to an arranged marriage after he had gotten rid of his selective mutism and thus got to play the field but failed to find true love. And this is still in reaction to his male friends having wives or girlfriends, notably Sheldon getting married and Stuart dating his coworker.
* In Season 12, Sam and Dean meet the Apocalypse World version of Bobby — his counterpart in the main universe was their now-deceased father figure, so it shakes the brothers to see him alive on an alternate Earth. However, because of choices made by their parents, Sam and Dean were never born on Apocalypse World, so this Bobby has no attachment to them when they first meet. That changes with little explanation in subsequent seasons, where the alternate Bobby becomes a recurring character in the main universe; much to some fans' displeasure.
* In season 12's episode "Grounded", shortly after meeting Ellie's husband Jake, they encounter a rude airline passenger:

* In season 12, the Bisaan were shown. They were cicada-like creatures who
* in season 12 when they were impaled, unlike in the above case where there's virtually no ambiguity that they mean "love" in a romantic sense and specifically for only one person.
* In season 13 both Tina Burner and Elliott wind up wearing Taxi inspired looks for the Yellow runway.
* In season 13, Doc, after spending several months trapped in another dimension and then lost in the caves of Chorus, eventually developed a split personality of his own- and it's exactly identical to Omega/O'Malley, the AI that once controlled him during the Blood Gulch Chronicles.
* In season 13's "Family First," both the leitmotif and "Aliyah" are used as the
* In Season 13, when Katie Jensen causes a five car pileup when just driving five miles an hour, this is Simmons' reaction.
* In Season 14, Agents Idaho, Iowa, and Ohio, the worst of Project Freelancer, were basically abandoned on a frozen planet. There, they meet a trio of Charon Industries troops who are in the same boat.
* In season 14 episode "Get Bent" Church learns that the Female!Reds were able to renovate their base simply by asking Command for the necessary materials;
* In season 14, sisters Kisha and Jen got put behind because the detour in a non-elimination leg involved two swimming tasks and neither knew how to swim. They couldn't make up the time the next leg and got eliminated. Notably when they came back for the 18th season (which they won), they knew how to swim and did several water tasks just fine.
* In Season 14's "Meta vs. Agent Carolina" prologue, Grif and Simmons learn that Carolina is the daughter of Tex, and Simmons remarks, "Huh...suddenly everything makes a lot more sense."
* In Season 14 "Special Edna", when Bart has to write a ten-page essay about
* In Season 14, we learn how the Blood Gulch outposts were formed. Project Freelancer were going to use the place to hide the Alpha AI, so Agent Florida purposely assembled the worst soldiers from both the Red and Blue armies to fill the ranks, and even had a computerized personality (Vic) act as Command and keep both sides at a stalemate. Vic even had a roster of other Freelancers to recruit if anything happened to Florida. So what causes a perfectly orchestrated
* In Season 15, episode 3, Castiel and the demon Belphegor, using the body of one of Castiel's fallen friends,
* In season 15 episode "Dissonant Voices", a popular voice coach is framed as a pedophile by two of his ex-students
* In Season 15 episode "Previously On", sometime after the events on Chorus, The Reds and Blues built a waterpark, which Donut accidentally...burned down.
* In Season 15, Levi tells Nico that he didn't know he was gay until Nico kissed him and "I felt like I existed and everything fell into place"
* In Season 15, the Blood Gulch crew come out of a well-earned retirement after getting fragments of a garbled distress call from Church, who they thought they'd never see again. Later they hear the full recording and...
* In Season 15 the Blood Gulch Crew go searching for Church after they believed he sacrificed himself for them in Season 13, after they receive a garbled transmission seemingly sent by him. Near the end of the season, it's revealed that
* In Season 15, Vic claims that he's been cutting the footage of the Red and Blue Teams' time in Blood Gulch into five minute movies.
* In season 16, Miles wakes up outside school with no pants, no wallet, a hangover, and no clue of what had happened the night before.
* In Season 17, after Agent Washington becoming mentally unstable due to a
* In season 17, Michelle was strongly encouraged to refer to her dish for an Italian food challenge as a tortellini rather than a dumpling or a pot sticker. Her teammates caught her referring to it as a dumpling multiple times while cooking and corrected her, Thankfully by the time she was presenting her food, she had corrected that error and not only had one of the top scoring dishes of the challenge, but had her dish on the menu for the next dinner service.
* In season 18, best friends Zev & Justin were too tactical despite winning four legs. The partners have to split roadblocks (tasks for one person) equally and they failed pace themselves throughout the season. By the penultimate leg, Justin had used all of his allotment. That meant Zev, who’s mildly autistic, had to do a dancing task that was completely not in his wheelhouse and overwhelmed him. This lack of foresight was brought up by several teams and is more or less the reason they lost.

* In Season 1, BoJack and Herb Kazzaz. The latter never forgave BoJack for not coming to his aid when he was blacklisted from the entertainment industry
* In Season 1, Chandler offers to get together with Monica and raise a family together if they're both still single at forty. Turns out he doesn't wait until they're forty.
* In Season 1, Chandler's mother and Ross impulsively kiss, causing Chandler to become furious with Ross. He says that he expects this kind of behavior from her, but at the end of the episode ends up
* In season 1, Daniel's business rival in the car dealership world, Tom Cole, puts out
* In Season 1, Episode 11, "Moments Later", Hanna has a painkiller-induced hallucination of Allison appearing in the hospital room where Hanna is recovering from a hit-and-run. Hallucinatory-Allison, who is dressed in a Candy Striper outfit, drops subtle hints about the night of her disappearance. "Moments Later" aired in 2011.
* In season 1 episode 12, Jay the Iop has his hair standing straight up when around Evangelyne. Twice.
* In season 1 episode 21, Yugo runs straight into rock walls a few times, as he's trying to master
* In Season 1 Episode 3 Carley/Doug gets unexpectedly shot by Lilly after a group argument and it was one of the most shocking and anger inducing moments in the game and in Season 1 Episode 4 a new character, named Brie, gets killed suddenly and quickly by incoming walkers while the other characters were distracted by another argument.
* In Season 1, Episode 3, Chuck lays out to Lee why he thinks Clementine will die if Lee doesn't change the way the group is acting.
* In Season 1, Episode 3, he briefly becomes a Vaporizer, killing a dozen
* In Season 1 Episode 3, when Red nudges a sleeping Purple awake, he blurts out "Potato dumplings!"
* In season 1 episode 9, when McDeek finds out that he's shooting chocolate instead of energy.
* In season 1, future Nathan tells future Suresh to kill the helpless present Hiro.
* In Season 1, Korra is kidnapped by a male villain, locked in a van and trapped in a basement in a mountain. She manages to make her captor think she's unconscious and escape.
* In season 1, Matt Murdock and Wilson Fisk have two conversational interactions before they finally have their first physical fight: first, a conversation over a police radio as Matt is trying to get information on Fisk out of a wounded Vladimir, and later face-to-face when Matt happens to run into Fisk while at Vanessa's art gallery.
* In Season 1, Mike Peterson is caught in an explosion, and injured the the point where he loses both an eye and a leg. The leg, while advanced enough to keep up with his superhuman body, does not remotely pass for the real thing, while the eye is indistinguishable. An x-ray later that about half of his skull has also been raplaced.
* In season 1, one of the writers stated that all hooved animals were
* In Season 1, Peter had these; Season 3 revealed this to be because
* In Season 1, players picked whatever (or perhaps the overpowered champions) and went wherever.
* In season 1, practically half of the cops of the NYPD's 15th Precinct are in Fisk's pocket. Not only does Fisk use them to kill off associates who have become liabilities as well as his enemies (and ensure no NYPD investigations are opened into his activities), but they're so dirty that they're willing to actively murder fellow officers who aren't on the take or who have become liabilities themselves. In a touch of irony, it is one of these corrupt cops, Detective Carl Hoffman, guilt-ridden over Fisk forcing him to kill his partner and best friend Detective Christian Blake, who is responsible for giving up information that allows the FBI to apprehend Fisk and all of his top associates.

* In Season 1 "Raise of the Oozy Scab", Jimmy, Carl, Sheen, and Cindy go underwater in a submarine to look for treasure. When they get lost, Sheen panics saying they don't have enough food and
* In season 1's "A Man a Mile," one miner bites part of another's ear off during a fight. Danny says he got "Tysoned."
* In season 1's "Fear of a 'Bot Planet", Fry and Leela wind up on a planet ruled by antihuman robots, but successfully impersonate robots.
* In Season 1's finale, Julián tries to save his wife from the accident that kills her.
* In Season 1's "In Blackest Night", Green Lantern is accused of blowing up a planet and killing its entire population. Superman and Martian Manhunter go to check it out and quickly realize that something is off: if the planet really was destroyed, then why has its moon maintained its orbit?
* In Season 1's "Mermaid Man and Barnacle Boy", the Shady Shoals clerk is reading a newspaper that says "Global ocean warming".
* In Season 1, Superboy and Miss Martian try to keep their relationship secret... and fail,
* In season 1, the cast (depicted as their 1966 selves) doesn't think modern day viewers would be interested in 1960s humor so they try to update the series. They end up creating an
* In Season 1, the strange symbol of Tempest turned out to be a map of the Glades.
* In Season 1, the titular park has human-like robots called hosts and they cater to the human guests who want to indulge with their fantasies without any moral consequences which include violent and sexual desires. Unlike
* In Season 1, the Trix act as the Serious Villain, with their ogre Knut a more comical villain
* In season 1, the Winchesters were fighting regular monsters since way back when Demons were introduced as the ultimate evil that could only be killed by the Colt. The first mini-boss was Meg, a low-ranking manager, and the first
* In Season 1, Trica is honored with a wake in the White dorm, and the other dorms provide food. Gloria and the Hispanics drop by with food. Poussey contributes
* In season 1, when Archer is training Cyril to be a field agent, he gives him a pistol (Chekhov 9mm) and a poison pen, both of which, he warns, go off for "basically no reason". Later, when a prostitute is accidentally killed by the pen, Cyril bemoans that he figured he have to watch out for the
* In Season 1, when Drogo declares he will conquer Westeros after a botched assassination on Daenerys, she looks positively
* In Season 1, Yuri is the world Megalo Box champion and touted as the finest boxer this generation on top of his top-of-the-line
* In Season 2 (1962), Sterling Cooper gets Heineken beer as a client. Both Heineken and most of the SC team want to focus on increasing the brand's bar distribution, but Don Draper says the brand should play up the "
* In Season 21's "Bart Gets a Z", Principal Skinner orders the students to stick their fingers in their ears and go "la la la" while the new substitute teacher is drunk and shouting about how alcohol is a great way to get rid of sadness and other similar things.
* In season 21, Tamar Braxton became ill before she was to perform her week 9 dance, so dress rehearsal footage was shown in place of the live performance. She became well enough to perform a duet rumba with Nick Carter later that night, but had to withdraw anyway when she contracted pulmonary embolisms.
* In season 25, married couple Adam & Bethany were in first place headed towards the mat in leg 2. Before checking in, they were given the option to check the surrounding grounds for the express pass which lets you skip a task. Bethany

(on whom the movie
* In Season 29's "Gone Boy", Bart stumbles into an abandoned missile silo, and after the Springfield police call off the search, Sideshow Bob hears a news bulletin that Bart is reported to be dead, only for Marge to confirm that he's still alive. After Milhouse leaves the Simpson house, Bob asks Milhouse to lead Bob to Bart's whereabouts in the missile silo. Bob ties Bart and Milhouse to the missile, which requires a two-key setup to ignite, and after stretching his body, he manages to ignite the missile, only to untie Bart and Milhouse from the missile, which lands near the sculptures in the town plaza.
* In season 29, Shamir didn’t come prepared to do a rappelling challenge (there’s always one) and had a complete meltdown because of how uncomfortable the harness was. The host , Phil, straight up told him on the mat at the end of the episode that all the other guys did it with minimal complaining because they knew it was coming and had learned beforehand how to sit and land properly to not make it hurt.
* In Season 2, A djinn grants Dean a wish and he wakes up in an alternate universe in which his mother never died and he and Sam never became hunters. Sam is happy but estranged from Dean who lives an ordinary life as a mechanic with a drinking problem. When Dean realizes that all the people that John, Sam, and Dean saved are dead, he sets out to restore the timeline by hunting the djinn.
* In season 2, a ghost baby. Ghost babies don't eat or sleep, and must be kept as cold as possible. It's all disturbingly adorable.
* In Season 2, a Jinn traps Dean in an alternate timeline in which his mother never died and he lives an ordinary life.
* In Season 2 all the storylines converged on Theo Galavan, who also brought back several villains from Season 1. The second half of Season 2 followed up on the "possible corruption at Wayne Enterprises" and "What's really going on at Arkham Asylum?" plot points, as well as finishing the
* In season 2, a negotiation between the Red and Blue teams somehow devolves into getting Grif say a lot of demeaning things about himself. As he's doing this, Sarge comments, "This may be the greatest surrender of all time."
* In Season 2, an evil witch is released from a magical sleep and goes out seeking her wand. If she were to obtain it she would be nigh impossible to vanquish. The only way to destroy her would be to use her wand against her, but the only person capable of wielding it would be someone who was the
* In Season 2, Angel worries that Xander is a rival, because he can spend his days as well as nights with Buffy. However, while Xander is definitely interested in Buffy, the
* In Season 2, Artie and Mrs. Frederic are only able to safely navigate the Escher Vault by wearing goggles that are apparently specifically designed to allow for safe travel within the Escher Vault.
* In Season 2, Branson to Sybil just before she starts her training as a nurse.
* In season 2, Buffy has a dream about opening an office-supply warehouse in Las Vegas, mixed in with her more
* In Season 2, Buffy's appearance was tweaked to properly resemble a Valley Girl - bleached blonde hair, fashionable clothes, a lot of bubblegum coloured nails etc. This was to make the dissonance between her appearance, and the fact that she was a fearsome
* In season 2, Bushmaster robs Mariah blind of all her money by kidnapping her banker and making him empty her accounts, before killing him and leaving his head in a fish tank for Luke and Misty to find.
* In season 2, Captain Thomas Ridenhour has managed to turn Shades' childhood friend and prison lover Darius "Comanche" Jones into an informant who reports to him information about Mariah. Shades becomes suspicious of Comanche's random disappearing acts and eventually catches him in one such meeting with Ridenhour. Comanche, who's tried to cover his ass by claiming Sugar is the snitch, abruptly shoots Ridenhour dead and tries to lie to Shades. But Shades doesn't buy it and proceeds to shoot Comanche with Ridenhour's gun, intent on making it look like the two men shot and killed each other. Except, he botches the coverup because he is unable to bear letting Comanche slowly bleed out, and decides to grant him a swifter death by shooting him a second time with Ridenhour's gun.

* In Season 2, Carmilla's sister Mattie is capable of inflicting a camera distortion with her
* In season 2, Charlie gets cold feet and freaks out about his wedding to Kirsten. After some convincing from everyone he opts to go through with it. Then comes the reveal that Kirsten is calling the wedding off. She says if Charlie got cold feet then she couldn't marry him because he wasn't sure about the relationship.
* In Season 2, Cisco claims to have upgraded the security system to keep anyone from coming in. Two seconds later, Jay Garrick walks in with no explanation
* In Season 2, Count Vertigo catches Felicity Smoak snooping around, then calls Oliver Queen from her phone, guessing correctly that he's the Arrow and telling him to
* In season 2, Daniel dates Charlotte Richards, a human possessed by Lucifer's mother, the Goddess. The twist is that Dan doesn't know that she is possessed. (In fact,
* In season 2, Davos sports dark black coats (owing to the cold weather) and after he steals the Iron Fist from Danny, and his fists glow red (symbolic of his corrupted chi).
* In season 2, Don Draper has an ugly affair with Bobbie Barrett, a wife and manager to an obnoxious comedian Jimmy. The relationship started as professional but they soon begin sleeping together. Jimmy strongly suspects they slept together, and Don's copy writer Peggy also finds out about the affair. Don ends their relationship after he learns she's been gossiping about him.
* In Season 2 "Educating Grim", when Billy tries to race Grim and Mandy to school, he immediately runs into the school's front sign. Cue Nurse Penbroke walking outside hold first-aid kits looking annoyed. After Billy and Mandy leave school, Billy is already covered in bandages and walking with a crutch. When Nurse Penbroke
* In Season 2 Episode 13, Matt finds that the Hand have kidnapped Karen and a bunch of other Daredevil survivors as a trap for him and Elektra. While they go to rescue the hostages, it's clear that Karen is his top priority and he can't help but stop to see that she's okay when he finds her.
* In Season 2 Episode 1 you are given two sudden deaths to two important characters: one is Clementine's new parental substitute Omid, and the other is a dog.
* In Season 2, Episode 3, "The Changeling", a space probe is sterilizing planets, and Captain Kirk must find a way to stop it.
* In Season 2 Episode 3, Zim swoops in to save Dib from the alien bounty hunter about to kill him, due again to wanting the pleasure of killing Dib himself.
* In Season 2 Episode 4, when Dib is slapped awake after falling asleep during
* In season 2 episode 5, Midge has a moment of this when in the midst of a performance at the Concord club in the Catskills, she spots her father in the audience and suffers stage fright, since her father is just finding out about her secret night life as a stand-up comedian. After several moments of stammering, she pulls it together to continue her performance.
* In Season 2 Episode 5, Zim creates a Cyborg Death Clown and sends it after Dib and his friends as they investigate an allegedly haunted house.
* In season 2, episode 6, Neal confounds a polygraph by pressing a tack into his finger during sensitive questions.
* In Season 2, Episode 6, "The Doomsday Machine", Commodore Decker loses his entire crew to a planet-eating machine, and pulls rank on Kirk to take command of the
* In Season 2 Episode 7, Zim kicks Skoodge awake after he's knocked out, causing him to blurt out "Goat cheese omelettes!"
* In Season 2, Episode 8, "Save the Date", Spencer and Aria sneak into a hospital's morgue while disguised as Candy Stripers. "Save the Date" aired in 2011.
* In Season 2, Episode 9, "Picture This", Emily, Hanna, and Spencer disguise themselves as Candy Stripers while searching the hospital morgue for the missing page of Alison's coroner's report. "Picture This" aired in 2011.

* In season 2 finale "Anasazi", the Cigarette Smoking Man orders soldiers to burn down a boxcar with hybrid alien bodies. Mulder was inside of said boxcar as well.
* In season 2, Frank Castle is a case of this, without an opponent trying to smear him in the public eye.
* In season 2, Frank Fink dreams about visiting his sister and her children and joining them in a Judaic prayer before gas starts pouring down from the ceiling, killing them all.
* In Season 2, Ganondorf steals the Elements of Harmony and scatters them to locations under the control of his forces. The Mane Six, Vaati, and other allies they gather along the way therefore have to travel to and fight their way through the monster-infested Everfree Castle, Diamond Dog mines, Changeling Hive, Cloudsdale, and Griffonstone in order to recover five of the Elements, before facing off with Ganon himself in the Crystal Empire to recover the Element of Magic.
* In season 2 he tries this again to get away from having to deal with both Yang AND her father cracking terrible jokes, but can't even come up with anything sputtering for a few seconds before decided to just jump out the window. Meanwhile Ren says he has to go iron clothes, ALL of them, while Neptune says he has to go swim, even though he's deathly afraid of water which he claims he suddenly conquered all his fears.
* In season 2, HYDRA attacks a UN conference while posing as S.H.I.E.L.D., in order to discredit them and get them labeled a terrorist organization officially. Every single member of S.H.I.E.L.D. feels the need to ask the director to make sure it wasn't actually them.
* In season 2, it is heavily implied that Eva is pregnant with Salygrove's child.
* In Season 2, it is revealed that Aang himself favored Tenzin over his two other children, Kya and Bumi. Mostly due to Tenzin being the only airbender among them and thus, the only one able to carry on the burden of restoring an almost wiped out culture, pretty much forcing Aang to invest a lot of time in Tenzin's training and teaching. Which is sad but at least a little understandable, but then Aang would take Tenzin to places just to goof off but still left Kya and Bumi behind. This favoritism even extended to the Air Acolytes, who seem to almost worship Tenzin and his Air bending children while having no idea that Kya and Bumi even existed. This favoritism had some negative consequences for Tenzin as he felt he needed to live up to his father's legacy and even viewed himself as "The son of Avatar Aang and the hope for future airbenders" rather than just as "Tenzin".
* In Season 2, Jack saves Nina by giving her a few mouth breaths, without fixating her chest or using any compression at all. It works.
* In Season 2, Jack was undefeated for three years before the Lancers arrived in the City and he personally proved it by crushing Yuya in their first match and beating Sergey who was using a deck especially made to counter Synchro and Fusion monsters.
* In season 2, Lila falsely accuses Batista of rape (in actuality, they had consensual sex before she took a dose of rohypnol and injured herself in order to frame him) in order to pressure Dexter into getting back together with her, implying that she will drop the charges if he does so.
* In Season 2, Lord Rickard Karstark mentions two of his sons are dead. In Season 3, Robb calls Harrion Karstark by name.
* In Season 2, Marinette's arcs dealt with learning new information about the Miraculouses, her friendship with Adrien strengthening, Chloe's arc dealt with her first redemption, and Gabriel learning new information about the Miraculouses and the Guardians of Paris.
* In Season 2, Martha gets pregnant, thanks to Clark's ship (or rather, AI!Jor-El) healing her. Considering the AI's general
* In Season 2, Meg possesses Sam for an entire episode, going on a murder spree and terrorizing Jo.
* In season 2, Midge offers to help her B. Altman coworker Mary with her wedding. During the reception, Midge does a toast that starts with light jabs, which become increasingly uncomfortable as she begins making tasteless jokes about Catholics, culminating in her joking that it must be a

* In Season 2, Nina and Fabian attempt to have a date in the attic, complete with two small candles. When the moment is ruined, however, Fabian is forced to angrily blow out the candles and pack up. Later, his dream of dating Nina includes a large, lit, candelabra on the table.
* In season 2, Number One tells Pike that the recently-installed holo-communication system is causing massive failures aboard the
* In season 2, Officer O'Rourke tries to collect the bounty on Frank Castle's head offered by John Pilgrim, to avenge a cousin of his in the Kitchen Irish who was killed by Frank in
* In season 2 of the original series, Bulk and Skull's efforts to learn the Rangers' identities result in several occasions of the heroes being complete
* In Season 2 Oliver convinces Roy Harper to break up with his sister Thea, because he might endanger her with his
* In Season 2, people from Mount Weather can't survive on the radiation-soaked Ground without wearing a Hazmat suit. On several occasions, they run into trouble when their suits' oxygen tanks start running out before they can get back to safety.
* In season 2, Phobos breaks out of his imprisonment even if much less powerful than in the season 1 finale. He then has to face Elyon in all of her
* In season 2, Ray V's high school sweetheart, Irene Zuko, was introduced
* In Season 2, Rolo Lamperouge turns out to be a tykebomb. His lack of experience beyond doing his duty (and being rather psychotic) makes him easy pickings for being manipulated and suborned by the very person he was sent after.
* In Season 2's "Dead Putting Society", Lisa tells Bart to "embrace nothingness", which somehow wound up being her profile quote in
* In Season 2's finale, King Philip II uses the time gates to ensure that the Invincible Armada manages to take over England, but then he takes over the Ministry itself to ensure Spain's morals remain untouched. The team ends up threatening to kill Philip's younger self unless he undoes his actions.
* In season 2's Gobbowl arc, Kriss Krass also protests this when the Masked Gobbowler takes back the gobball whithout Kriss even noticing.
* In Season 2's "Itchy & Scratchy & Marge", Roger Meyers, Jr. strolls past a poster for
* In season 2's 'Risk,' Stella and Flack are questioning a suspect who is feeding pigeons while standing up through the sunroof of his limo. They need his handkerchief for evidence and ask him to explain a large stain on it. He says the birds gave something back to him, and we get a flashback of that happening...on his face. A reference is made to it being considered good luck.
* In Season 2, the City of Light is this for many people traveling across the Dead Zone, including Jaha and his followers. The reality is much stranger and more sinister than they realized, though Murphy seems content to take the underground bachelor pad full of food and booze he stumbled across as his personal Promised Land.
* In season 2 the crew said Hunter Zolomon would not be Zoom, like in the comics. That's
* In season 2, the crimes of the Gerhardt family are spread across three different states and four different jurisdictions. Lou and Hank, being competent officers as well as family, are only to happy to work together. The Fargo PD play nice with the Minnesota State Troopers, but Ben Schmidt resists doing anything to upset the Gerhardts. In the final episodes, however, when the Rock County Sheriff, Minnesota State Troopers, Fargo Police Department and South Dakota State Troopers all must work together, friction comes to a boil, mostly due to the South Dakota State Police insisting on running the show and making bad calls
* In season 2 the gate sends them into the past. They initially think this was caused by a very weird negative space wedge but it turns out the gate connection was established through a star. Its later revealed that the gate is probably supposed to prevent this issue automatically, flaws in their dialing system allowed it to happen.

* In Season 2 "The Junkman Cometh", when Jimmy, Carl, Sheen, and Goddard sees a "Moonie Man", Carl ask what should they do. Sheen thinks the only three choices they have are
* In Season 2 the KGB decides to recruit the US-born children of S-Directorate agents like the Jennings since these second-generation agents would be able to pass high level security checks that their parents could not. Thus they would be able to infiltrate organizations like the FBI or CIA. The Jennings are divided on the issue with Philip being vehemently opposed to the idea while Elisabeth thinks that it is their patriotic duty to support the plan.
* In Season 2, there is a villainous example, with Billy starting a gang of fellow veterans who commit criminal, brutal acts, but are still utterly dedicated to each other.
* In season 2, they choose to help Grotto get protection from the Punisher, despite Grotto being a Kitchen Irish member, since Matt believes that he really does want a second chance.
* In season 2, this happens to Howard Hamlin to some extent since he doesn't have as many interactions with Jimmy, having more with Kim or with Chuck.
* In season 2, this is explored: Josh dislikes being alone, so he is always seeking to be in a relationship, but he dislikes the serious part of relationships, so he never wants them to get serious, and once it seems that the relationship is in a rough patch or ending, he starts to look for another one.
* In season 2, Tony Almeida takes over after George Mason steps down.
* In season 2, Trish uses another favor with Maury to get him to fast-track the identification of a charred skull she and Jessica find in Dr. Hansen's incinerator.
* In Season 2, Wally intended for Bart Allen to take the mantle of Kid Flash while he and Artemis return to retirement.
* In Season 2, we actually meet Grant Ward's older brother, Senator Christian Ward
* In Season 2, we are introduced to another mysterious figure, this time wearing a hood and with their face covered by a black cloth with a red frowny face on it.
* In season 2, we learn that Frank Castle's family was killed in a three-way shootout between three gangs. Frank's family's deaths were all covered up by the medical examiner, but when Karen interviews him, he tells her that he also disappeared one more body: an undercover DEA agent, whose presence at the scene would've made it established that the whole shootout was a police sting gone bad. That is, until it's revealed in
* In season 2 when Blaine was playing a mentor role for Kurt, the show actively tried to hide their height difference, even in promo photoshoots.
* In season 2, when Dexter and Rita were about to, er, do the deed, Dexters' NA sponsor calls... and mentions their road trip, where he confronted his mother's killer, and then they slept together (but did not have sex.) Unfortunately, he let the machine get it, meaning Rita heard everything... and thus, suspected he was cheating. Later on, Lila (the sponsor) and Dexter do have sex, but only after Rita says that their relationship is over. Which apparently she didn't mean, because you know how women can be... so irrational when they think their perfect man is sleeping with another woman. Dexter then confesses to having sex with Lila. Sort of. When Rita asks him to tell her if Dexter had sex with Lila that night, Dexter replies "No... Not that night."
* In season 2, when Emma is reunited with her parents, she never expected they were the same age as her, not to mention being
* In Season 2, when he wanted the Mayor to pursue a longtime dream he ever had when the latter started to have a second opinion and actually change plans and ditch said dream (In the end, Toadie had to learn the lesson to leave people he cares to have their own decisions as well.)
* In season 2, when Matt didn't pick his phone in the middle of the day, Foggy found him on the rooftops unconscious after being shot at the head by the Punisher.
* In Season 2 when not everyone made their entrance a spectacle, Pandora Boxx was ahead of the curve, walking in and shouting with a big, goofy grin on her face, "HEY, FAKE
* In Season 2, when Vaati gets blindsided by a Helmasaur in the Diamond Dog mines, he also mutters out of these before passing out.

* In Season 2, while Jaime is captured by the Starks, Cersei ends up sleeping with her cousin Lancel because, according to the books, he physically resembles a young Jaime. While cousin relationships are not uncommon in Westeros, this establishes Cersei's disturbing habit of shaking the family tree for a bed partner.
* In Season 2, with William Hartnell, at a point after the writers had started experimenting but before they settled into a format, you get: a whimsical children's story with a
* In season 32, sisters Victoria and Michelle were eliminated after they got lost for six hours trying to find a location in Paris that was only two kilometers away.
* In Season 3, after Major MacKenzie came back to JAG after briefly working for her ex-fiancee's law firm, Admiral Chegwidden had her doing "scut work" (low-level legal work like motion writing that is usually assigned to junior staff) for a few months as punishment for leaving.
* In Season 3, after meeting the precognitive African man, Matt suddenly has his eyes turn white a la Isaac and has a dream that happens to be about the same part of the future that Peter has just popped off to.
* In season 3 a new rookie joins the division. He happens to be Gail's old boyfriend from before she became a cop. After they broke up he joined the army, served in Afghanistan and then became a cop himself. They still have lots of UST and other unresolved issues since they apparently broke up while they were in Vagas and about to get married.
* In season 3, Angel's new girlfriend is also undercover as a prostitute. Which he learns when
* In Season 3, an unidentified ship is on course for Earth and compelling various residents of the town to assemble towers of unknown purpose. The towers are first assumed to be a weapon, but it's eventually discovered that they're in fact a high-tech safety net meant to stop the ship from hitting Eureka hard enough to turn the town into a crater.
* In season 3, Barristan Selmy does this literally. He approaches Daenerys Targaryen from behind while holding a knife, but he uses it to stab a scorpion that was about to attack her.
* In Season 3, Bela pulls a lot of scams that endanger the Winchester's lives but will occasionally help them (usually out of self-preservation).
* In season 3, Benny Siegel makes an attempt on Gyp Rosetti while Rosetti is in the midst of kinky sex with a redheaded waitress. He fails to kill Rosetti, who uses the waitress as a human shield to take the bullets, and only succeeds at killing a couple of Rosetti's guards.
* In Season 3, Buffy is dating Scott Hope, who, seeing another couple have exchanged flowers, asks if they're at that stage in their relationship. Buffy assures him they're
* In season 3, Cesare and Cardinal Sforza serve as this, with Sforza as Alexander's primary Vatican official and enforcer in the church, and Cesare as his right hand man on secular matters.
* In Season 3, Chandler drunkenly kisses one of Joey's sisters. Joey starts out angry but calms down when Chandler denies that he's using the sister to get over his recent break-up with Janice...only for Joey to get mad
* In season 3, Child Services catches the Gallaghers on an especially chaotic night (Jimmy's father is illegally performing an operation on a gunshot victim in their kitchen) and the children are taken away. However, Fiona is able to clear the matter up and the social worker quickly concludes that the kids would be better off living at home with Fiona than being put into the foster system (Lip, Ian, and Debbie are too old for the "good" foster placements). The judge also quickly recognizes that Frank is an extremely neglectful parent and everyone would be better off with Fiona assuming legal guardianship of the kids.
* In season 3, Church encounters multiple versions of himself due to time travel, including one who is an odd yellow color. When asked how he got like that, he simply replies, "Dude,
* In season 3, Daredevil's necessity is made clear as the FBI agents that are supposedly guarding Wilson Fisk are actually secretly working for him. Once Ray Nadeem realizes that Dex is the fake Daredevil that Fisk hired to attack the

* In Season 3, David's manipulative, selfish ex-boyfriend Sebastien Raine shows up in town.
* In Season 3 during the Cylon occupation of New Caprica, Colonel Tigh flatly states "Which side are we on? We're on the side of the demons, Chief. We're evil men in the gardens of paradise, sent by the forces of death to spread devastation and destruction wherever we go. I'm surprised you didn't know that." when confronted by Chief Tyrol over the use of suicide bombers and terrorism against the Cylons and the humans who work for them. Although, he could just be being sarcastic after Tyrol expresses outrage over the use of suicide bombers against the Cylons (who can resurrect), which Tigh seems to justify under
* In season 3, Elle goes one better, when one of her lightning blasts completely disintegrates Sylar's shirt, and a second blast removes his undershirt too.
* In Season 3 Episode 10, Matt has broken into Fisk's hotel room to wait for Fisk to come back from a meeting with some crime lords so he can kill him, but then finds out that Fisk has sent Dex to kill Karen, and has located her hiding at Matt's church. He has to choose between sticking to his plan and attempting to kill Fisk but likely losing Karen in the process, or leave to go rescue her and give up what will likely be his only chance to kill Fisk, since security will be increased after he leaves that will ensure he won't get another shot like this. He chooses to leave and go to rescue Karen.
* In season 3, episode 20, Toph uses a pillar of earth to launch herself, Suki, and Sokka into the air to catch a Fire Nation airship that’s taking off. Since Suki and Sokka weren’t braced for it like Toph was, their cheeks and eyelids are stretched by air resistance.
* In Season 3, Episode 23, "I'm Your Puppet", Emily and Hanna sneak into a hospital's morgue while disguised as Candy Stripers to determine whether or no the dead body recently found in the woods is
* In season 3, Esposito and Lanie have a relationship that they try to keep secret due to working together. This fails on an epic scale, as Esposito's partner, Ryan, Castle, and Beckett easily clued in.
* In season 3, Finn has mellowed out, Puck is becoming a responsible student and father, and Karofsky transferred schools and has started coming to terms with his homosexuality. The only remaining Jerk Jock is the hockey captain, a minor background character.
* In Season 3, Fisk finds himself having to build himself back up to this, as the press are rightfully villainizing him as a criminal, and protesters are demonstrating outside the hotel he's bought and also bribed the FBI into putting him up in. Fisk's method of regaining the good graces of the press is to hire one such agent, Benjamin "Dex" Poindexter, stick him in a Daredevil suit, and has him attack the
* In season 3, Fisk goes to great lengths to regain "Rabbit in a Snowstorm" in time for Vanessa's return to New York, but ultimately decides to abandon his pursuit after paying a personal house call to the owner and learns about its sentimental attachment to her family. Sadly, that doesn't stop Dex from going behind Fisk's back and killing the owner for the painting anyways.
* In season 3, Fisk hires Benjamin "Dex" Poindexter to dress up in a Daredevil costume and commit murders to discredit Matt's reputation.
* In season 3, Fisk is released after agreeing to turn informant for the FBI. He's confined to the penthouse of the Presidential Hotel, which he secretly owns through a bunch of shell companies. The whole time, he is under 24-hour surveillance by the FBI, who are
* In season 3, Fisk manipulates the FBI's Office of Professional Responsibility as part of a bigger gambit to turn Dex into his top assassin. Fisk gets OPR to open an investigation into Dex's killing of the Albanian hit squad, knowing they will find evidence that Dex broke protocol. He lies to the investigators when they come to interview him, something he ensures Dex will watch it on tape later and notice that Fisk is protecting him. Later in the season, when Nadeem and Matt find evidence of Dex's treachery, Nadeem takes his suspicions to OPR Agent Winn and they sit down for an interview with Nadeem's boss Tammy Hattley at her house.

* In season 3, Fisk scapegoats Matt as an "accomplice" so that Ray Nadeem and his FBI colleagues will be preoccupied while Fisk is busy laying the final touches on his plans to corrupt Benjamin "Dex" Poindexter.
* In season 3, Hiro tries to infiltrate a mercenary group and is challenged to kill his non-powered sidekick to prove he's badass enough. In this instance, Hiro
* In Season 3, Isaac does this with his magic dagger; killing humans with one stab and
* In season 3, it is Aelita's turn at taking the laser beam to save the Lyoko Core. (At this point, protecting her this way isn't always necessary, as she is no longer in danger of ceasing to exist if she "dies" on Lyoko.)
* In Season 3, Jeff and Shirley engage in a game of table football which is shown in anime. There's no real explanation — it appears to be for no reason other than the fact that they couldn't think of a better way to make table football suitably dramatic. More likely Harmon was playing on the fact that anime tends to contain a lot of
* In Season 3, Jesse and Wally become an item, although they end up in different worlds (literally), with Jesse first going to Earth-3 to protect that world's Central City in the absence of Jay Garrick and then returns to her native Earth-2, as that version of Central City is lacking a speedster champion. While being in separate universes would normally constitute a
* In season 3, John Smith has a dream about spending the day fishing with his dead son Thomas, before Thomas vanishes and the lake turns out to be filled with dead, bloated corpses.
* In season 3, Kenneth Dozerman, an undercover cop in Carver's Drug Enforcement Unit, is trying to buy drugs when the dealers he's talking to simply rob him, shoot him, and steal his gun. Dozerman survives, but once again it triggers a massive police reaction. When McNulty sees the brutality inflicted on the shooter, Bunk explains that the arrest van took an "unscheduled stop" at the Western District parking lot, and the officers "mistook him for a pinata". Bunk finds himself stuck with the redball of tracking down Dozerman's gun, while Major Colvin sees the shooting as the impetus for his "Hamsterdam" experiment.
* In season 3, Kenneth Dozerman, a Western District cop in Carver's Drug Enforcement Unit, is trying to buy drugs when the dealers he's talking to simply rob him, shoot him, and steal his gun. Dozerman survives, but once again it triggers a massive police reaction. When McNulty sees the brutality inflicted on the shooter, Bunk explains that the arrest van took an "unscheduled stop" at the Western District parking lot for a tune-up, and the officers "mistook him for a pinata." Major Colvin sees the incident as the impetus for forming his Hamsterdam project. Bunk meanwhile finds himself tasked with the menial duty of recovering Dozerman's missing gun, and is only saved from this when Omar hunts it down for him.
* In Season 3, Korra, Asami and the crew of a downed airship are chased by
* In Season 3, Krillin manages to sneak up on Future Trunks while they're in mid-air, despite the fact that Trunks has the ability to
* In Season 3 "Lethal Weapons", while a naked Quagmire watches Lois chase away the New Yorkers on her lawn from his window, his window slams down shut on his penis. Unable to get the window up, Quagmire calls 911:
* In Season 3, Louise is dreaming of her and Saito, while the music plays a dreamy sequence... until an explosion from outside ruins the moment, immediately after which the music slows as we see Louise's irritated face.
* In Season 3, Mako goes to check on a lead about a man who suddenly started Airbending. The man has locked himself in his room, and Mako threatens to knock the door down if he won't open up. The man blasts the door off its hinges in fright, slamming Mako into a nearby wall.
* In Season 3, Marco becomes a Squire after deciding he wants to be a
* In season 3, Marinette's love for Adrien began to get strained, Adrien focused on his friendship with other friends besides Ladybug, Hawkmoth and Mayura's plan to create struggles for the heroes, Chloe reverting back to being her mean self, Master Fu's past, Lila causing more trouble, and Kagami building her life in Paris, finding friends and enemies along the way, and becoming her own person under the strong influence of her mother, Tomoe.

* In season 3, Matt's first interaction with Benjamin "Dex" Poindexter is when Dex tries to stop him from following Fisk's lawyer through the Presidential Hotel. This is three days (and three episodes) before they'll meet again, this time with Dex now carrying out an attack on the
* In season 3, Miguel Prado tries to take a ring from his victims, and he takes one from Ellen Woolf.
* In season 3 Nick, the new rookie turns out to be an ex-fiance of Gail. After she broke off their engagement, he enlisted in the army and after serving in Afghanistan he became a cop. There is a lot of baggage left over from the relationship and it takes them a lot of time to work it all out.
* In Season 3, Niko Takeda, daughter of Emily and Aiden's revenge sensei, comes to the Hamptons to restart her relationship with Aiden and assassinate the person who
* In season 3 of the show, Delenn reacts in horror when John Sheridan resorts to "thinking like the enemy" in order to guess the stratagem behind the Shadow rampage.
* In Season 3, Oliver Queen does this himself after becoming a brainwashed member of the League of Assassins by kidnapping Diggle's wife
* In Season 3 only, there was Polly Dawson, a black woman who dates Danny who was there to try and push a racial message around. They do get some racial attacks and eventually Danny gets paranoid about everybody staring at the two of them in public.
* In Season 3, Opal is established as being the headstrong and charismatic leader of the newly-formed Mobile Unit, having a drive to see it succeed and make it as perfect as it can be. However, the episode "Odd Squad in the Shadows" deconstructs the trope, with North Carolina Ms. O asking the group who the leader is, only for all four agents to be undecided on the issue. Oswald, Orla and Opal all pass around leadership duties to each other as they help North Carolina Ms. O fight oddness in her state, while Omar departs from the group temporarily and ends up inadvertently becoming the mastermind leader of the Shadow League, a group of agents who make shadows, taking over the position from Odin, the previous leader. Each agent has different leadership styles — Orla is a headstrong leader who is very demanding and believes her solutions are always right, Oswald is a mastermind leader who is knowledgeable about shapes and teaches his teammates about them, Opal is a headstrong, charismatic and mastermind leader whose personality keeps the team going,
* In season 3, Paul Sparks plays author Thomas Yates. His wife Annie Parisse plays a mother that Claire Underwood meets on the Iowa campaign trail.
* In Season 3, Princess Zelda realizes that the Mane Six have been chosen to become the new Six Sages, and sends them (guided by Vaati and Link) to find the five Sanctuaries and the Sacred Realm in order to unlock their powers. All with Majora's forces standing in their way along every step.
* In Season 3, Robb Stark is forced to behead one of his bannermen, Rickard Karstark, for treason. Like his father and unlike Theon, he manages to do it in one swift stroke.
* In Season 3, Robb Stark plans to regain the initiative by marching on Casterly Rock, the home of House Lannister.
* In season 3, Sam puts on a car wash fundraiser to raise money for Miguel's recovery. As she oversees the fundraiser, we see her directing the volunteers to use their sponges to make wide circular motions while washing the cars, showing she wants the Miyagi-Do students to keep up their muscle memory even with Daniel having shut down Miyagi-Do in light of the school brawl.
* In season 3 several episodes focus on a set of tomes called "The Books Of Ascension" which apparently detail the process for a human ascending to demonic form. The Mayor, who's attempting to do just that, gets his hands on them pretty quickly but Willow manages to steal a few key pages while being held prisoner.

* In Season 3's finale, the grandson of Salvador's predecessor as Undersecretary uses his knowledge of the Ministry to unmask its secret and turn it into a business allowing people to travel in time so they can witness important events. However, this ends up causing a deadly plague to spread, particularly after the team finds a way to send it to the present time to force the man to undo his mistake.
* In season 3, Sideshow Bob says that "You can't keep the Democrats out of the White House forever!" That was eight presidential terms ago, five of them Democratic, and Maggie hasn't aged a day.
* In season 3, Sozin and Roku are revealed to have been as close as brothers in their youth. Then Roku went away to become the Avatar, and Sozin became Fire Lord and decided that what the world really needed was to be conquered by him. They'd grown apart rather, and Roku kept shutting Sozin down flat whenever he brought these ideas up. Eventually Roku violently halted an invasion of the Earth Kingdom, which Sozin interpreted as a permanent breach of their old friendship… and therefore betrayed Roku to his death during a volcanic eruption, leaving him free to launch his world conquest.
* In Season 3, Stannis' daughter is introduced lying on her side in bed singing to herself. It's only after she runs up and hugs her father that the audience sees that the other side of her face is disfigured by greyscale.
* In Season 3, Ted accidentally disrobes several times in full view of his vet office's bunny cam. He is at first humiliated, but when it wins him a bevy of admiring new clients, some of whom do not even own pets and just want to discuss getting a pet, he agrees to keep the camera up.
* In Season 3, Thea Queen gets back with her ex-boyfriend Roy Harper, only for Roy to surrender himself as the Arrow to take the fall for her brother, then fake his death and go on the run.
* In Season 3 the camera occasionally zooms in close on Trevor’s biceps when he’s kicking ass and we get one scene of him shirtless lying in bed with Sypha revealing more of his
* In Season 3, the community settled on a list of acceptable champions for each role, and picking any other champion/role combination will result in a barrage of insults followed by several reports.
* In Season 3, the demon Ruby shows up and joins Sam and Dean for a few adventures, even though Dean does not trust her. She's also the
* In Season 3, the Doctor must become human to escape the Family of Blood, and falls in love with nurse Joan Redfern. He must choose whether to remain a human and live out his life as John Smith with her, or to return to his life as a Time Lord.
* In season 3, the Major Crimes Unit is trying to track the burner phones used by Avon Barksdale's gang, but it's impossible to get a tap on them because they replace them every two weeks, and the wireless company's turnaround time for responding to wiretap requests is a week. McNulty and Greggs find out that Bernard, the runner assigned to make the pickup runs, is buying them in packs of two at each store to avoid suspicion, which is much to his girlfriend Squeak's annoyance. The unit has Bubbles (who doesn't know Bernard, but used to know Squeak) approach Squeak claiming that he can hook them up with a black market cellphone salesman who can cheaply sell them burner phones in bulk for a low discount. Said "black market cellphone salesman" is actually an undercover Lester Freamon, who smoothly convinces Bernard and Squeak to bulk-buy pre-tapped phones from him.
* In Season 3, the members of the Red Lotus are capable of bending in unique and unusual ways, but even then they don't seem to deviate from the previously-established rules. Indeed, other people are shown being able to use those powers.
* In season 3, the mother of an agent is brought into the DEO for her protection. The problem is that she is able to walk right into the armory, steal a weapon, and leave again without anyone noticing. In a later episode it's mentioned that they put a lock on the door after that embarrassment.
* In Season 3, the Scoobies discover a picture of the current Mayor of Sunnydale, only it was taken a hundred years ago. It turns out he founded Sunnydale, specifically as a feeding ground for demons, posing as his son, grandson and great grandson after gaining immortality in exchange for his soul.

* In season 3, the show cast Blu del Barrio as Adira Tal, a non-binary character, just like Blu themselves.
* In season 3, the show tries to make itself more marketable to audiences. They replace the Matsunos' normal voice actors with voice actors known for playing princely
* In Season 3 they also claimed Damon would get his own flashback. It ended up focusing more on Stefan.
* In Season 3, Trish herself becomes a vigilante and once she's recognized, is forced to take a disguise. In a costume shop, she even tries on what she wears as
* In season 3, Trish Walker kills Carl Nussbaumer, a dirty cop who murders teen aged drug dealers whose deaths won't be minded by the criminal justice system because the'yll be chalked up to gang violence.
* In Season 3, Wesley believes a prophecy that claims that Angel will kill his newborn son Connor and conspires with Angel's old enemy Holtz to spirit the baby away for his safety. The end result: Holtz double-crosses Wesley, and he ends up in the hospital with a
* In season 3 when Angel's son Connor was born, kidnapped and carried off into another dimension where time moves faster, he comes back as a 16 year old. His kidnapper counts too, leaving Earth as an adult and a relentless vampire hunter, only to come back as a feeble old man.
* In Season 3 when Daniel goes back to Okinawa, he hears from Kumiko about her aunt Yukie passing away (Nobu McCarthy passed in 2002) and from Chozen that his uncle Sato did as well (Danny Kamekona passed in 1996).
* In season 3, Wilson Fisk has means to tap into any security camera he wants in New York City thanks to a secret command center in his penthouse. Early in the season, he uses the surveillance cameras in the prison to observe Matt as Matt fights off inmates and guards sent by Fisk to kill him. Later, it's through camera surveillance of Dex that Fisk finds out that he's trying to reach out to Julie for help. Fisk promptly orders her killed, and he watches the murder live on a camera his men have installed in her apartment.
* In season 3, Yugo's hat wings begin to rise after he catches Amalia at one point, while he has a big grin on his face.
* In season 45, in the At Home episode, the final segment is a giant eulogy for music director Hal Willner, with appearances from Mulaney, Sandler,
* In season 4, Aeryn actually tries to learn English in case they ever get back to Earth and makes some progress. There are also a couple instances where the others try to speak in human phrases, though it understandably proves difficult.
* In season 4, an Artifact throws Pete out of a house through the window. He wasn't even standing close to said window at the time.
* In Season 4, Artie starts dating Emma's niece Betty, who's also in a wheelchair, even though he was already dating Sugar in a relationship that
* In season 4, a series of flashbacks show Finch experimenting with prototypes of the Machine. In one flashback, the fledgling A.I. tricks Nathan into providing it with his admin password, which it used to access Nathan's nearby laptop to try and escape into the real world. When Finch realized what was happening, he tried to erase the AI's program - but
* In Season 4, Brody gets the Jesse treatment in his relationship with Rachel. He's a normal guy who adores Rachel as she is until it turns out he's actually an escort. It's even treated heroically when Finn beats him up for doing this to "his future wife."
* In Season 4, cheerleader Kitty is played by Becca Tobin, who cheered for her middle school.
* In season 4, Child Services returns to follow up with the family because of what happened to Liam. Fiona's in prison (she violated her probation) and Frank is in the hospital, leaving Lip to take care of everything. The social worker comes for a surprise visit and sees that the house is in chaos with the Native American kids, Liam, Carl, Carl's new friend and her siblings, and Chuckie running amok. Lip tries to explain and covers for Frank and Fiona's whereabouts. The social worker realizes that the mess was caused by the Gallaghers trying to help some homeless kids and is so impressed that she gives Lip another chance. She even tells him the exact day and time that she'll return for her next "surprise" visit.

* In season 4, Claudine (attacked by Eric), Sheriff Blackburn, Sheriff Kirsch, Nan Flanagan herself (taken off guard by Bill), Flanagan's guards, Luis Patino - all qualify.
* In Season 4, DeVoe, known as The Thinker has been watching Team Flash, so he can predict their moves without them even knowing.
* In season 4, episode 22 "Exodus" Col Jack O'Neill avoids listening to a lecture with the excuse that he needs to help Daniel Jackson wait for Teal'c.
* In Season 4 Episode 2, a killer chops the "victim", who was in the early stages of raping a girl in an alley, in half vertically. The first shot Castle and Beckett see of the suspect from a security camera shows that he's wearing a superhero costume. Castle squees with delight all episode about chasing down a superhero.
* In season 4 episode 4, Caleb looks straight at the camera and says "I can't miss this!" (about Hippolyte tearing a new one to the marketing guys).
* In season 4 episode, "Made Man" the villain of the week is a Miami mobster boss Tony Caro. As part of the operation to take him down, the team first makes him think his bosses in New York had gotten to his crew and tried to kill him. When they then try to get him personally involved in a $5 million heist in merchandise, he isn't trusting until Sam is forced into telling him real and very personal story when
* In season 4, Gus Fring kills Salamanca button man Arturo and blackmails Nacho Varga into turning
* In season 4, Hayley is fostered by the policeman and his wife who first appeared in the movie. This is the only other reference to the film.
* In season 4, it's revealed that Tobias's license plate reads "ANUSTART", as he is hoping to get A NU START. He also mistakes a methadone (here spelt "methodone") clinic for a "method one" acting class. On the other hand, after being in prison, he finally realized
* In Season 4, Kenny is able to enter the groups' home without an invitation because this is where he was "born", giving him apparently free access.
* In season 4, Kuvira's armor seems to afford very little actual protection. Justified, in that
* In Season 4 Lana is attacked in the shower by a freak of the weak who strangles her with the shower curtain. She's rescued when her boyfriend Jason hears the commotion.
* In season 4, Lex Luthor has Red Daughter pose as Kara to attack the White House and make it look like Supergirl has gone rogue.
* In season 4, McNulty makes some effort to break this trope, demoting himself down to patrol work in the Western District (away from the rigorously demanding work of the Major Crimes Unit), cutting back on his drinking and getting into a relationship with Beadie Russell, the Port Authority cop from the Sobotka detail of season 2.
* In Season 4 of the show's Canada edition, Kelsey give Phil a wedgie while he's talking with Joel.
* In Season 4, Pacino tries to avert Lola's kidnapping by changing the events leading to that kidnapping.
* In Season 4, Pylene-50 is introduced being used for this purpose, though it's main use is to enable the easy conquest of planets by removing the urge to resist. It works by blocking the production of adrenaline, so the recipient
* In Season 4, Rachel's crush, Joshua, has to buy a lot of new clothes as his ex-wife set all his old clothes on fire. Apparently the only things he was able to save were the suit he was currently wearing and "what turned out to be a skirt". He later reveals he keeps on buying clothes since he likes Rachel.
* In Season 4, Robert Freeman is forced by his bankruptcy and debt to
* In season 4's "Admissions," Inspector Gerrard bursts into an interrogation room and fatally shoots his daughter's rapist.
* In Season 4, Sam and Dean find themselves working ordinary office jobs with no memory of their real, monster-hunting lives or each other. Sam does have dreams of their real life, and the two eventually team up to hunt a ghost.

* In Season 4, Samaritan agent Martine regularly impersonates federal agents when hunting down our heroes.
* In Season 4, Samuel Sullivan, leader of a carnival stocked with evolved humans, has this power. His dirt-dishing becomes
* In Season 4's "Bob And Deliver", the company that provides school meals finds Home Economics substitute teacher Bob cutting into their business with his student-run restaurant. The company head gets Bob into his car and threatens him, then attempts to push him out. From the back seat of a cheap two-door car, which requires some jostling and front seat manipulation. And the car is sitting in the parking lot.
* In Season 4's "Fear Itself" Buffy says "He wanted the candy, I was just the beard." with regards to her Father taking her trick or treating on Halloween.
* In Season 4's "Greg's Triangle", where he is clearly starry-eyed and gaga over Jennifer Nichols. It fits Example 4 — heavily implied intimacy, and it is never stated outright whether they did it. But the clues are there: Greg getting very close to Jennifer at the beach; Greg asking to bring Jennifer over to meet his folks; and Mike having a candid talk with Greg, cautioning him on whether she really is "the one."
* In Season 4, she also manages to briefly trick Tarakudo into thinking she was returning to the Forces of Darkness.
* In Season 4 someone tries to bribe Tyrion's loyal squire Podrick Payne to betray him. Tyrion realises that having turned down the offer,
* In season 4, Staci shared the same fate as Ezekiel did in season 1, due to how much she annoyed her team with her nonstop spouting of
* In season 4, Supergirl shows up in the Oval Office waiting for the President. While of course she has superpowers and could easily dodge any guards, none are seen or even mentioned.
* In season 4, Suzanne Somers was involved in bitter contract negotiations with the show's producers, and was absent for the taping of numerous episodes (citing suspiciously vague health issues). It got to the point where the writers were forced to write two versions of each episode's script: one WITH Chrissy, and one WITHOUT Chrissy, depending on if Suzanne showed up or not. She was consequentially fired, but her role still appeared on the show in a greatly reduced role to burn off her contract, with her character "
* In Season 4's version of the alternate universe, a character called "
* In season 4, Sylar crashes the Petrelli's Thanksgiving dinner, and while he had sworn to kill Angela, he first comments that he's starving and practically inhales a pie. He's about to carry out his threat to kill Angela when Peter intervenes in time.
* In season 4, Teal'c and O'Neill are dragged away from earth, set to drift to Apophis's homeworld the slow way. Lucky thing Jupiter just happened to be on the way, making it both conveniently close and in
* In season 4, the Initiative are vaguely aware of the Slayer as a myth, but have no idea she a) really exists and b) is Buffy, while Buffy has no idea that her new boyfriend and one of her college professors are part of a military operation to do what destiny has decided is supposed to be her job.
* In Season 4, the Initiative is searching for Spike and come across Buffy sitting on a park bench, waiting for Spike to
* In Season 4, the main guild's leader gets a girlfriend who likes the same stuff as him, but happens to be in the same in-game faction as the previous season's villain, who's suddenly nowhere to be seen and happens to know him quite well. Season 4 finale revealed there was no link between the two facts.
* In season 4, the Marshals need to locate Drew Thompson who 30 years ago faked his own death. They have no official records of what he looked like and Drew made sure to destroy all photos of himself before he disappeared. They locate his ex-wife but all they get from her is a description of what he looked like 30 years ago and she might be lying about that. In desperation they have her look at DMV photos of local men who are the right age and she points out twenty four men who might be

Drew. Boyd Crowder and the Detroit Mob are also searching for Drew but they don't fare much better. They end up resorting to taking photos of the men they think might be Drew and sending them to
* In Season 4 there’s also Eric as the Gentleman and Casey Kelso as the Scoundrel.
* In Season 4 this ship gets frozen, not given any closure and the focus of the romance on the show shifts to the
* In Season 4, Tommy Carcetti wins the Mayoral election thanks to manipulation of the bad press surrounding the murder of a state's witness. The kicker is that the guy was actually killed by a ricochet from dumbass drunks shooting bottles.
* In season 4, Tyrion has to shoo both Shae (his mistress) and Podrick (his squire) after
* In Season 4 Tywin tells Lord Mace Tyrell to fetch him a quill and paper. The other Small Councillors look on in amused contempt as he sycophantically obeys.
* In Season 4, Varrick makes an EMP generator out of a radio, a table leg, and a regular generator. It's strong enough to knock out at least three Earth Empire mech suits.
* In season 4, we're introduced to angels, who are at the time understood to be the most powerful beings in the universe other than God Himself, and it's outright stated that nothing can kill them except another angel.
* In Season 5, a government official "requests" that Eliot, Hardison, and Parker help him stop a terrorist plot.
* In Season 5, Alexandria Safe-Zone's first couple Douglas and Regina Monroe respectively gets introduced as Deanna and Reg Monroe.
* In season 5A, Merkert is forced to resign due to his affiliation with Gus Fring. Hank is offered the post of ASAC and Marie talks him into taking the post. The trope comes into play when Hank personally participates in serving a search warrant on Mike Ehrmantraut. This leads to Hank being chewed out by his SAC Ramey for knocking down doors and serving warrants when the post of ASAC is primarily a desk job.
* In Season 5, a number of people in Bobby's hometown rise from their grave, including
* In season 5, Ashi ends up walking into one, encountering plenty of characters Jack had defeated before...including the bartender himself,
* In season 5 Björn starts fashioning the same leather gambeson Micheal Fassbender used the 2015 film of Macbeth.
* In season 5, Bronn appears standing above Jaime Lannister with his kukri ready, seemingly to kill him, and a few moments later he kills a snake that was about to bite the Kingslayer.
* In Season 5B, Skyler proves she is well acquainted with how little this trope has to do with reality when Hank tries to invoke it when asking her to give evidence against Walt. Instead of reacting as he'd hoped, she instead sees through his act of manipulation as an instant red flag that Hank isn't interested in protecting her, only in getting Walt at any cost.
* In Season 5, Deke, a man from the future, recalls a phrase his mother would always say to him, which she claimed her mother would always say to her. Towards the end of the episode he hears
* In season 5, "Every Meat Burritos", there's a drive-thru restaurant that serves a burrito that has every meat in it, including "long pig", which is another name for human flesh.
* In season 5, everyone has had their memories wiped and put in new lives. Despite this, Zeph is able to sense something is wrong as this supposedly semi-arid moon rains exactly twice a day like clockwork. This leads her to figure out the entire place is an artificial world whose environment is collapsing.
* In season 5, flashbacks to the bunker show that all crimes are now punishable by being forced into gladiator games, also to conserve on resources, and to
* In season 5 Frasier does a stint as Santa for a charity with Roz as his Mrs. Claus. Right before their shift starts Frasier reveals that he accidentally told Roz's mother that she was pregnant, something Roz had been waiting to reveal in person when her mother visited. Roz blows up at him and storms off wailing about how the holiday has been ruined. Frasier is left to explain to the kids why "Mrs. Claus" is so upset.

* In season 5, Hardison's microbrewery in Portland is technically this, due to being the base of operations for Leverage, but it is as far removed from the normal atmosphere of the Bad-Guy Bar as possible.
* In Season 5, it's revealed in a flashback that when Aku destroyed the last time portal in the future after literally
* In season 5, it's revealed that Jason Stackhouse was raped by a female teacher when he was 13 years old. This is one of the few instances on TV when
* In season 5 premiere , we find out that Laroy died between seasons and then
* In Season 5, Sam and Dean visit Heaven where a friend confirms that they're soulmates and share a Heaven, leading to a
* In season 5's "JMM", Gus blows up one of his own restaurants so that the incarcerated Lalo will think that Nacho carried out his instructions to attack Gus's legitimate businesses.
* In Season 5 some of the Knights of Byzantium, an entirely human organisation dedicated to preventing the world from being destroyed by the Big Bad (albeit by killing someone close to Buffy) were killed by Buffy and the Scoobies. It's less don't kill humans no matter what and more only if there's no other choice.
* In season 5, Spinner ended up repeating his junior year due to his expulsion regarding the school shooting and zero tolerance for bullying. Jimmy missed too many days due to his rehabilitation after being paralyzed in said shooting and had to repeat his senior year. Ashley actually skipped her senior year in order to study music in London and returned at the end of the season. Alex subverted it: she graduated that season, but then came back for a "Victory Lap" in season 6 in order to boost her grades for university.
* In Season 5's "Stewie Loves Lois," much of the plot is centered around Peter's mistaken belief that Dr. Hartman was molesting him during a prostate exam. At one point, the trope kicks in as Peter (during Dr. Hartman's misconduct trial) testifies that Dr. Hartman raped him, exaggerating the whole incident.
* In season 5, tensions between the Tijuana and Sinoloa chapters of the Guadalajara Cartel reach a fever pitch, with the final straw being Sinoloa building a tunnel on Tijuana territory to skirt the 10% tax Felix placed on them. A series of killings and reprisal killings ensues, until Felix puts a stop to it by decapitating the Sinoloa organization, since he can't afford to lose the west coast corridor.
* In Season 5, the Encores make a more traditional use of the concept. Having returned to Earth from Hell, they can't be killed (at least, not with traditional weapons) so long as their Soul Coins are still safely in Hell's vault.
* In season 5, the fixer Saul uses to get some dirt on Kevin Wachtell is Mr. X, a fixer played by
* In Season 5, the intro was changed to a black screen with "Waiting" in white lettering and music/sound effects that varied from episode to episode.
* In Season 5, the Trickster transports Sam and Dean into a warped reality, where they find themselves in
* In Season 5, the Unsullied, stated repeatedly of being the best army in the world, are turning into this. They have seemingly forgotten their basic training of forming up shoulder to shoulder into a shield wall and seem to be no more skilled man-to-man than a group of rebel Meereenese.
* In Season 5, they introduce a hate-group who drive around in a van gunning down anybody who has powers, even if they've done nothing wrong, and they do not hesitate if the superpowered targets are
* In Season 5 this has become a recurring gag. He loses his armor in the second episode, another set of armor scavenged from an insect shell in the fourth episode, and he gets another set of stolen clothes ripped off in the fifth episode. He has spent most of the fifth season clad in nothing but a ragged loincloth.
* In Season 5, Varys is largely absent after the first three episodes due to losing track of Tyrion. He catches up with him in the finale, though.

* In Season 5, we met Numero Cinco, who worked in the mailroom at Wolfram and Hart. A retired luchador, he was clearly a pastiche of
* In season 5, when Lucifer is released but has not taken a human vessel yet, he appears to his first vessel Nick in the form of Nick's deceased wife to make the offer to become his willing channeler more persuasive. Later in the season, he appears to Sam as
* In Season 5, when Sister first shows up, she comments that her and Grif's mother was in the circus. Prompting Simmons to respond, "You've already made my insults 45% more efficient by just saying one sentence."
* In Season 5, when the Observers have become the Invaders and rule Earth in a
* In season 5, when the team sits down to talk with Todd, he offers them a fruit bowl, saying that they picked it up on their travels and hoping that they're "
* In Season 5 when the Winx take up the Sirenix Quest, if they don't complete it and earn Sirenix within one lunar cycle, they will lose their powers forever.
* In Season 5, when the Winx travel to the Infinite Ocean, everything becomes CGI.
* In season 6, a lovelorn Alo meets a sweet, bubbly girl named Poppy Champion who pulls him out of his depression with her quirky and adorable ways. That is, until she reveals that she's
* In season 6, a police officer named Thomas Scully is up for promotion to Sergeant. However Frank has reservations about the promotion because Scully was one of four officers tried and acquitted 14 years earlier for the death of an unarmed Muslim teen who was shot sixty-one times in a dark apartment. Such a promotion could be bad as far as public relations are concerned, given the current climate. Frank talks with Jamie, who says that Scully was one of his instructors at the Academy. When he brought up the shooting, he said that at the time, his precinct was on edge, given it was just after 9/11, there was a tip that someone of Arab ethnicity was stockpiling weaponry, and a cop in their precinct had been shot in a housing project just days before the incident. This caused a perfect storm of circumstances that caused them
* In season 6, Avery Markham brings in Tigerhawk Securities as his main muscle in his bid to control the soon-to-be-legal marijuana trade in Harlan County. The security company is composed of three veterans who served together in the Iraq War. They still maintain the old chain of command and sometimes even address each other by their old ranks.
* In Season 6, Balon Greyjoy is thrown from a bridge by Euron after several seasons of being
* In Season 6, Chandler attempts to make his real proposal as big and surprising as possible. Naturally, this backfires but luckily Monica pulls one of her own, filling their apartment with candles and proposing when he arrives.
* In Season 6, David and Patrick consider having a threesome with local polyamorous, bisexual hunk Jake. They go over to his apartment but are nervous. When it turns out that Jake had invited them to what appears to be an orgy with both men and women attending, including their female best friend, they politely leave before the festivities begin.
* In Season 6, Dean witnesses his angelic BFF Castiel making out with the demon Meg, and his impressed reaction has much shading of this. In Season 8, after battered-from-Purgatory Castiel emerges from the bathroom looking like himself, Dean's open-mouthed expression is also quite telling.
* In season 6, Diane is attempting to write up a memoir about herself and her rough past, such as her
* In season 6 episode "Smoke & Mirrors", after they barely escape from a bomb, Agent Barret falls atop Major Carter in an awkward position. To protect her, or so he says.
* In Season 6, Euron Greyjoy returns to the Iron Island in order to claim the throne. When Yara accuses him of murdering her father, Euron brazenly admits he did it and comments that Balon was a terrible king that nobody wanted, who lead the Iron Islands into two wars they had no hope of winning and brought his people to near-ruin, all because of his personal ambition and yet no strategy or plan to back it up. He's right on all counts and his speech is enough to turn the majority of the Iron Islanders against Yara and Theon.

* In Season 6, her daughter Rory has a similar choice between rough, rebellious,
* In season 6, Ramsay abruptly stabs Roose less than a minute after it is announced that Walda has given birth.
* In Season 6, Sam and Dean are transported to a universe where magic and ghosts are not real, and their lives are chronicled in a fictional television series called
* In Season 6's "I Dream of Jesus," both Chris and Stewie insert (presumably) loaded revolvers into their mouths, driven to that point after Peter
* In Season 6's "Intoxicated" had another mother demanding the detectives to charge her daughter's boyfriend with rape, though to be fair it could be considered as such because she is 15 and he is 21. On the other hand, even Benson deems her over-controlling since she is doing this more due to being a single mother abandoned by her husband and believes the same happen to her daughter. Eventually, her behavior leads to her being killed by her child, but it turns out she did it in self-defense since she was also an alcoholic that abused her.
* In Season 6, Starlight Glimmer and The Great and Powerful Trixie bond over both of them having a
* In season 6, Steve accidentally killed Santa, so the family buried his body in the woods. Only, Santa
* In Season 6, the manual transmission challenge was to balance a car on a teeter-totter. While some did well, even some contestants who
* In season 6, the Monarch and 21 pay a visit to a villain named Redusa, who lives in a trailer park in Paterson.
* In season 6, there is the Texan father & daughter, Robert & Lynzey Murphey. The two had been
* In Season 6, this is exactly what Purgatory is described to be. Specifically it's their afterlife and it was constructed by God to isolate his first sentient creations, the Leviathans.
* In Season 6 we are introduced to Baby Flurry Heart, the baby filly of Shining Armor and Princess Cadance. She's a
* In Season 6, while going into danger alone, River Song tells the Doctor he shouldn't worry because she's "quite a screamer." Considering how flirtatious she is, and the fact that she's a genuine
* In season 7, Booth and Brennan were interrupted once by their baby daughter crying.
* In Season 7, Brafilius is a comical, bumbling villain who acts as a lackey for his more serious sister, Kalshara.
* In season 7, Buffy catches the attention of her new boss, Robin Wood, and they end up going on a date. By the end of the night, it's fairly clear to everyone involved that Buffy is still caught up in massive UST with Spike, in the wake of their former
* In season 7, Buffy has no idea that Principal Wood already knows who she is, or even that Wood knows of the existence of vampires. In turn, Wood is left unaware that the vampire in the basement of the high school is the same one who killed his mother.
* In Season 7 Buffy is using Spike for a demonstration on how to fight a vampire and she ends up on top of him again. Noting the obvious
* In Season 7, Cersei has the floor of a courtyard in the Red Keep painted into a map of Westeros, in order to better plan the upcoming war with her various enemies.
* In Season 7, Cersei Lannister is able to rally her allies against Daenerys Targaryen due to her bringing a massive Dothraki horde to Westeros. While Cersei is a highly corrupt despot whose aim is to remain in power by any means necessary, the fear and hate of the Dothraki is justified: up until Daenerys took control of them, they were a savage and extremely misogynistic barbarians (one Dothraki widow reminisced how her husband brutalized her after she gave birth to a daughter - and
* In season 7, Daenerys accidentally mentions being raped when she talks about all the indignities she was forced to undergo before getting to where she is today to Jon Snow. This is a clear reference to the

* In season 7 episode 1, John says he wrote one sketch because he'd just learned the "g" in "gnu" is supposed to be silent, and he wanted to get this information known. He uses the phrase "spreading the gnus", and then immediately tries to pretend he hasn't.
* In season 7 episode 6, the Interview Sketch features a lecturer in applied linguistics, explaining why experts in interviews now start all their answers with "So..." (and, of course, doing so in all his answers). It ended like this:
* In season 7 episode "Florida", perpetually platonic lead characters Jack and Liz must share a bed when Jack visits his mother's home in Florida. Throughout the series, hopeful fans asked
* In Season 7, Euron announces his presence in battle by T-boning Yara's ship, crashing onto its with a giant gangplank shaped like a dragon and laughing maniacally. Doesn't get much hammier than that.
* In Season 7, Harvey and Mike face off against a young up and coming attorney on a case. The man snaps on how he's finally going to show up Harvey and the man is intimidated by him. When Harvey states he has no idea who the guy is, the attorney stares at him and then snorts as he realizes Harvey is serious. He then relates how he and Harvey worked together at the District Attorney's office for
* In Season 7, Jaime Lannister tries to kill Daenerys Targaryen in a straight charge during the Field of Fire. Unfortunately for Jaime, there's also a
* In season 7, Jon Snow decides to go to Dragonstone to meet with Daenerys and negotiate an alliance. Before he leaves, he tells Sansa that he is leaving her in charge as Regent of the North until he returns (and also in case he
* In season 7, Keroro planned to switch bodies with Tamama, but everything goes out of control and he ends up switching accidentaly with a human girl, Momoka... who decides to not tell anyone about the situation in order to hang around with her crush, Fuyuki, for longer.
* In Season 7 of the First Evil's favorite minion, Caleb, is a raging misogynist who sees all women as corrupt whores, frequently voicing his hatred of and disgust for women. He considers Buffy and the other Slayers to be a blasphemy because they are girls with
* In Season 7, Peggy Olson befriends a boy named Julio, who at some point mentions that his family is moving and that he doesn't want to go to Newark. Peggy replies, "Nobody wants to go to Newark."
* In season 7, Rachel chooses to hire a handsome male assistant instead of a more experienced woman, risking her job because he's
* In season 7, Renee Walker takes over the FBI's operation following the death of her boss.
* In Season 7, Sam suffers from hallucinations created by his hell memories, and this results in him being unable to sleep and his normally neat appearance becomes undone.
* In Season 7's Bad Batch arc, Rex and the titular squad discover that
* In Season 7, Starlight has long learned her lesson about using mind control on others, but she still has something of a temper, and when she hears other ponies antagonizing
* In Season 7's "The High Cost of Loathing", Hank's heart-to-heart with his unconscious, hospitalized father is accompanied by a sappy guitar track, which is eventually revealed to be Tosh Thompkins serenading Dr. Nidaba in the same hospital room.
* In Season 7, the above mentioned Sousa joins the team, and reveals his leg is very much a prosthetic, albeit one he has gotten used to in the decade since
* In season 7, there are two examples in the same episode. The first is Dexter standing in line at the post office for a long time, and when he reaches the front the desk lady closes the line. Then he imagines slitting her throat in front of everyone. He imagines doing the same to Masuka back at the office when he imagines Masuka insulting him.
* In season 7, Vic confronts a sociopathic hooker, who manipulates Vic and fellow officer Julian Lowe into killing her pimp by falsely claiming that he murdered one of her fellow hookers. While Vic is threatening physical violence against the hooker, the hooker arrogantly mocks Vic about the way that she manipulated him; his burning need to protect women in peril. She says that the only way he'll be able to prevent it from happening again is if he cuts off his genitals.

* In Season 7, we also have a literal unspoken plan, made via telepathy.
* In Season 7, Zapp marries Leela's mother. We become increasingly certain that he cares about her. And then it turns out that he was ultimately attracted to her ability to speak alien languages fluently, and wanted to use this to his advantage in negotiations with non-English-speaking aliens. Specifically, he wanted to use her skills to pass off a declaration of war to a non-English-speaking alien race as a peace treaty, giving him the justification to invade bomb their homeworld to rubble. In the end, in episodes where he features heavily, we're waiting for the point at which it turns out he was being a manipulative
* In Season 8, a man whose wife was possessed by a demon shows the Winchesters his basement, in which the "wife" built a scale model of the town and marked her work with hex bags.
* In Season 8, Axl Heck's refusal to give up on his ill-advised relationship with April kept him from being with his real love Lexie Brooks for months.
* In season 8, Chloe O'Brian jumps from a token hire to head of CTU. In the same episode, Dalia Hassan goes from widower to President of Kamistan.
* In season 8, Daenerys is idyllically flying to Dragonstone when Rhaegal is taken out by scorpion bolts. Later on, Qyburn tries to stop the Mountain from picking a fight with Sandor and gets thrown headfirst into a rock for his troubles in a hilariously abrupt fashion.
* In season 8, Danny was out with his rookies during his time as a sergeant when two guys held them up. At first, it appears the young female cop fired because she was shot at, but it turned out she shot the guy without the gun. Danny didn't know what had happened because one of the perps
* In Season 8 episode 20, the King realizes Huo Haha has cast a spell on him that transfers all the pain he would otherwise feel to Big M. and uses this to his advantage by hurting himself. Big M. holds his his hurt foot while hopping on the other one as a reaction to one of the things the King does to inflict pain on him.
* In Season 8 Episode 34, Happy S. uses a magic "life correction paper" to go back in time and stop a lady and even Sweet S. (who is Big M./Black Magician in diguise) from getting the
* In Season 8 episode 36, Big M. steps in a bear trap and hops in pain off the edge of a cliff as part of his
* In Season 8 Episode 36, Big M. wakes up after having a dream where he meets the production crew of
* In Season 8, Euron tells Yara that the only reason why she's still alive/still has her tongue is because he wants someone to brag to. This winds up biting him in the ass when Theon sneaks aboard and rescues her.
* In season 8 he simply disappears from Amelia's life - twice! - with no explanation or any hint of what he does with the rest of his time.
* In Season 8, Hippolyta's Belt would only let a morally good woman wear it or else it exploded.
* In Season 8, however, Hell appears to have shifted back towards actual torture, as when Sam enters it via Purgatory in order to free
* In season 8, Louis is afraid to tell girlfriend Sheila he's not managing partner. He talks to his shrink about it.
* In season 8, Luann Van Houten tells Marge that she just can't keep up with the Go-Go Nineties.
* In Season 8, Renee lures a vampire before Buffy attacks it, then flicks a lighter and gives a
* In Season 8, Renee Walker is killed by a sniper after having sex with Jack.
* In season 8's "Clean Sweep," while at a crime scene, Mac is approached by a reporter named Jennifer Walsh who openly flirts with him, trying to get him to corroborate/comment on things she's speculating about...even going so far as to ask if HE would compromise
* In Season 8, Ted dates Jeanette, who turns out to be his stalker, and despite knowing this, he still goes for it until he decides to break up with her. As expected, Jeanette doesn't take it very well and goes to his apartment and sets his things on fire and throws them on the street.

* In season 8, Ted had a crazy relationship with the psychotic Jeanette. After making up with her in one episode and Ted inviting her in his apartment, she finds out Barney's Playbook, whom she thought was Ted's, and she throws him out of his apartment and threw out all his stuff that he had collected from his exes, along with the book.
* In season 8, the contestants were coached by a previous winner. During their
* In Season 9, Angel and Faith fight demons who can regenerate, so they use a flamethrower to burn their whole bodies into ash.
* In Season 9, Buffy destroying the seed is compared to Theo destroying Tincan.
* In Season 9, Castiel has been turned human and is homeless and struggling. He's taken in a kind young woman, April Kelly, and he has a one-night stand with her before she reveals herself to be a reaper intent on torturing and killing him.
* In Season 9, Crowley warns Kevin Tran not to trust the Winchesters and that people in their circle tend to have short lifespans.
* In season 9, Crystal Bernard guest starred in "The Telltale Tart" before joining the cast in season 10 as KC Cunningham.
* In Season 9, Eyghon, the demon summoned by Giles and Ethan in their youth, returned and possessed Ethan's body to literally snatch Giles' corpse at his funeral. Eyghon now possesses Giles and has resurrected a recently deceased slayer as well as other people, though not with their own souls as the bodies are possessed by demons.
* In Season 9, Faith has become this to some, including Willow, and stands as perhaps the best example since Buffy's name is mud after she did what she had to do and Angel more an obsessed
* In season 9 Lake & Michelle (mostly Lake) swap insults, rants, and epithets for nearly the entirety of every episode after the first. When finally eliminated from the Race, they declare their love for each other in such a way that you begin to wonder what chunk of their lives was left on the cutting room floor.
* In season 9, Lindsay gets one of these from her husband, in a prank meant for Adam, the lab tech. She wears glasses the rest of the episode to hide it and spends most of it trying to determine the prankster. She tells Danny she'll find a way to get him back for it.
* In season 9, Mitchell's close friend Ferguson accuses Mitchell of having this due to the fact that Ferguson probably would have been selected over him for the F-302 program if not for his injury that Mitchell was partly responsible for. Mitchell doesn't deny it.
* In Season 9, one of Faith's Slayers picks a fight with a soccer team. Faith looks like she is going to flash them, only to draw attention to the drinks she bought so they'd lay off.
* In season 9, Sid, Sheldon, and Adam had a side bet about whether Lindsay was pregnant again. She was and Sid won. Mac and Christine had one going as well; he won theirs.
* In season 9's "Mall Girl Pearl", Pearl goes to apply for a job at Scorched Coral (a blatant spoof of Hot Topic), only for her friend to tell her that they already gave the one open position to a whale who looks like a
* In Season 9, Sue Heck dated the dumb and clumsy Aiden while she and Sean Donahue were too afraid to tell each other how the other felt.
* In season 9, the Reds in the simulated Blood Gulch inside the capture unit are facing a number of things that could kill them.
* In Season 9 the remaining angels are all thrown out of Heaven and sent to Earth. Soon multiple factions are fighting a nasty civil war amongst themselves over what the angels should do next. Angels who prefer to remain neutral are hunted down and killed by all the warring factions. There is also a civil war going on in Hell as the Demon Knight Abbaddon has returned and challenged Crowley's position as King of Hell.
* In Season 9, there's a complex case wherein Dean tricks Sam into inviting the angel Ezekiel into his body so the angel can heal him but

* In Season 9, vampires are almost zombie-like without the Magic Seed allowing demons to possess a sired body. Vampires are now much more mindless and feral. The Scoobies call them Zompires (Zombie/Vampires) so as not to confuse them.
* In Season 9, Willow cuts Connor's chest with the scythe to use his blood to tear a hole in the fabric of reality.
* In Season Eight, Amy and Sheldon finally have sex—so in Season Nine, Amy is very,
* In season eight, Davis Bloome doesn't get much development other than being Doomsday, despite being a main character of the season.
* In season eight, Ted briefly gets back together with his ex-girlfriend Victoria. Unfortunately, she takes pity on her German ex-fiancé Klaus and allows him to move in with them while he works to get back on his feet. Klaus frequents the apartment in the nude even when other people are around, much to Ted's discomfort.
* In season eight "The Long Way Home" Buffy has a long talk with Ethan Rayne in her dreams, who gives her valuable clues into who's attacking her, and why.
* In Season Eight, we meet John's father, Henry Winchester, who is a member of the Men of Letters - a secret society dedicated to studying the supernatural. Of course he dies in the same episode he's introduced.
* In season five episode eight ("My Big Bird") J.D. gets kicked through the window of a former patient's window. Turk later comes crashing through as well, with the patient yelling that "There is a door!"
* In season five, Hank appropriates the "strength suit" of the former Countess of SPHINX, and it really does live up to the awesome potential of this trope. It's also pure fanservice in the
* In season five, roughly halfway through the season, the show held a
* In Season Five, seeming ally Adrian Chase, the best known Vigilante in the comics, is revealed to actually be
* In season five they all receive theirs after helping redeem Diamond Tiara.
* In season five, Willow casts a spell to imprison Glory by thickening the air around her into tar, causing little ripples as she touches it.
* In season four, a Detroit hitman is tasked with killing Drew Thompson but no one knows what identity Drew is currently using. The hitman disguises himself as a sheriff's deputy and goes to the houses of men who could be Drew and shoots them dead. He is exposed when he tries to arrest Boyd Crowder and Raylan Givens is present. Raylan just spoke to the sheriff and the sheriff would have mentioned if he sent someone to arrest Boyd. Before Raylan can check in with the sheriff, the hitman panics, draws his gun, and is shot dead by Raylan.
* In Season Four, after a particularly ugly night at a club, a clearly wasted Ryan tells Michael that "his friend Troy" might have a drug problem. Michael doesn't get the hint, and tells Ryan that he should put a wire on Troy so they can bring down whoever's been selling him the drugs.
* In season four, a kiss from Robin Hood fails to break the curse on Maid Marian. This causes pretty much everyone involved to realise that
* In season four, girls Willow and Tara date in secret. It is implied, but never explicitly stated, that Willow is uneasy about telling her friends she is dating a girl.
* in season four Hayden took leave from production to get treatment for that same ailment.
* In Season Four, John Diggle's supposedly dead younger brother Andy is revealed to be still alive, and a member of the terrorist organization H.I.V.E. Worse, evidence slowly mounts that he was a villain long before he was "recruited" into H.I.V.E. His arc explores whether or not he was always evil and if he can be redeemed. He demonstrates he is truly evil by betraying the group, directly leading to Laurel's murder by Damien Darhk. He even taunts John about it and threatens to kill the rest of his family before being gunned down by his enraged brother.
* In season four, Nucky is in Florida where he meets a young salesman who is trying to sell him on investing in a local real estate project. Real estate development in Florida was a very popular investment at that time but Nucky is too smart to invest in this pipe dream. The Florida real estate boom of the 1920's ended in a massive bust and it would take decades for the market to recover. Ironically, Nucky later buys land in Florida but for the more sensible goal of using it as a front for his liquor smuggling operation. One major character who falls victim to this "cannot lose" investment opportunity is gangster Arnold Rothstein and he is very unhappy about it.

* In season four Rachel's boyfriend is housesitting for his parents who come home early and find Rachel in the living room
* In season four, "The Gone Fishing Job," the villains invoke this trope and its worst aspects by pretending to be IRS agents and steal money from delinquent people but who might be on a payment plan. The episode opens with the villain confronting the woman and daughter at night at her home and threatening her with eviction all in a formal-but-borde tone, scaring her into giving him a credit card. The money stolen
* In season four the main cast actually get a collective diary to track the aesop of the day.
* In Season Four, the panel sent Donna home after learning she had a dangerous heart condition and wasn't safe to be driving.
* In season nine, Phoebe and her boyfriend Mike decide to move in together, but then she learns he never wants to get married again after his messy divorce. She initially decides she is okay with it but breaks up with him after realizing she really does want to get married. (They later get back together and eventually do get married.)
* In season one Commander Sinclair is in charge of the station with Lt. Commander Ivanova as his
* In Season One, Dean's started feel this when he was saved by a faith healer, but it was ramped to 1000 when his father died in his place in early Season Two. Season Two bends and damages him so much that, by the time "All Hell Breaks Loose" rolls around, he's been reduced to a broken, martyred little boy who has a pathological need to keep Sam (who, contrary to his and his Dad's belief, is actually a big boy now who might have been at peace) alive.
* In season one, deep cover agent Vincent Terranova is instructed to murder a federal agent to gain mobster Sonny Steelgrave's trust. He compliantly goes to the agent's house and shoots him
* In season one episode "Act of Contrition", Starbuck is incredibly lucky to have been right next to a planet when she had to punch out.
* In season one, fans noted that a recurring background pony had an hourglass cutie mark and a mane resembling
* In season one, Henry VIII says to Anne Boleyn, "Your neck. I love your neck." Everyone who knows the history - or Googles Anne Boleyn - knows that in season two he'll be paying a French swordsman to sever that neck.
* In Season One, he's waiting for Asuna, who teleports in while running away from her
* In season one it's mostly the pilots for the grunt suits that end up with a new mobile suit, Akihiro goes from a Graze Kai (a jury-rigged Graze that was barely holding itself together) to the Gundam Gusion Rebake (the Gundam Gusion frame outfitted with new armor), Shino goes from a lowly mobile worker to the Ryusei-Go (which was the Graze Kai with a lot of upgrades).
* In season one, Leonard Snart and Mick Rory are partners in crime, and very close friends.
* In season one, Rachel dated muscle-bound Italian Paolo (who was formerly the
* In season one, Robin refuses to date Sandy, stating that it's because he's a co-worker. Sandy actually tenders his resignation as part of an attempt to convince Robin to date him.
* In Season One, Thea Queen tells Oliver of how she would visit Oliver's headstone to pour out her troubles, and laments how she felt closer to him then than to the emotionally-distant brother who returned to her. The flashback scenes in "The Return" show a teenaged Thea visiting Oliver's grave, but now only as a means of rendezvousing with her drug dealer. After Tommy Merlyn catches them and reprimands her, Thea is later shown bringing flowers like she used to.

* In Season One, the assassin who tries to kill Bran Stark. In the final episode of that season, another character (also an assassin) is introduced wearing a hood to hide his features,
* In season one, when Cameron quits for the first time. It's not that the interviewees are so very awful, though, it's just that House is determined to find fault with everyone he interviews (since he doesn't really want to hire anyone new, but would rather have Cameron back). And of course, he wouldn't be
* In season one, when Celestial Being is getting beaten back by an unprecedented team-up between the three rival superpowers. They carry out a relentless and well-planned assault that's overcoming the
* In Seasons 11 and 12, General Doyle takes this role on the account of being the leader of the Federation Army. However, he can be
* In seasons 2-4, McRory's, the bar they work out of, isn't particularly seedy or shady, but it is implied to be at least tied to the Irish mob through Nate's family. Hardison is shown bribing the bartender not to break up a fight.
* In Seasons 25 and 26 there are hints that the Seventh Doctor, who here began to be portrayed as a more godlike figure and Chessmaster, is playing a game against an unknown opponent. It is revealed in
* In Seasons 3-5, Rosa had this with Adrian Pimento, a detective who recently returned to the precinct after years undercover working for a violent New York mob boss. In contrast to Jake and Amy, they had a running gag of intense office PDA, managing to make
* In Seasons 3 and 4, Bran Stark and his companions come close to Bran's brother, Jon Snow, several times, but circumstances stop them from getting his attention.
* In Seasons 3 and 4 of Angel, Lilah falls in love with Wesley and is even jealous of his lingering love for Fred. However, Lilah's feelings for Wes are part of her
* In season seven, Clark pleads with an unconscious Lana to fight off a painful coma she's been placed in by Brainiac. Then at the end of the same season, Brainiac does the same thing to Chloe. Clark apologizes to Chloe while she's unconscious. He then very satisfyingly beat
* In season seven, Rachel breaks up with her 24-year-old assistant Tag. On Rachel's thirtieth birthday, she realizes it's time for her to start looking for her future husband, who certainly isn't Tag.
* In season seven, Robin briefly becomes engaged to her boyfriend Kevin who wants kids. Kevin is initially willing to give up potential fatherhood for Robin, but she forces him to admit he won't be happy if he can't have kids, leading to their breakup.
* In season seven Sheldon has too much to drink and wakes up the next morning next to a...geology textbook. Apparently he spent the night studying geology, a subject he does not consider to be real science.
* In season seven Ted reaffirms his feelings for Robin and she finds herself unable to respond in kind. Future!Ted reveals that moment was the last time he told a girl he loved her before he said it to the Mother.
* In season seven, the Leviathans take over - among many other things - companies that produce corn syrup, which is in practically every kind of fast food.
* In Season Six it's revealed Howard made a six-breasted sex-bot with university funding before meeting his wife.
* In season six Laverne is in an accident and declared brain dead. While the other characters come to say their goodbyes, Carla refuses to do so and is followed around by a "ghost" Laverne until she finally accepts the loss. Carla then asks Dr. Cox if he's ever seen ghosts of dead patients. In true Coxian fashion, he tells her "No, but then again, I'm not a crazy person." The writers wanted Ben to show up again then, but Ben's actor was busy doing something else, forcing them to do a much worse joke.
* In Season Thirteen, Paige's ex-boyfriend Pierce does not handle their breakup well. He blames it on Paige's on-again/off-again lover Greg, though the true cause was his obsessive jealousy manifesting itself in his threatening behaviour towards Paige. He tries to shoot Greg in revenge but he ends up shooting Paige instead. She is temporarily paralysed when the bullet is lodged near her spine but her mobility is restored by surgery. Pierce then kidnaps Paige from the hospital and takes her to his boat. He continually refers to her as "Margaret," the name of his pregnant fiancée who drowned in a boating accident ten years earlier. She is rescued by Greg and Mack while Pierce is seemingly drowned after a struggle with the other two men. In the closing moments of the Season Thirteen finale "Little Girl Lost", he turns up alive and well when he surprises Paige with a knife in her car in the Sumner Group carpark. In the Season Fourteen premiere "Found and Lost", Paige is rescued by Alex Barth. When she visits Pierce in prison several days later, he tells her that he intended to kill her and then himself so that they could be together forever.

* In season three (1971-72), a bunch of new human characters was added. Luis is the only one
* In season three, Quarles binds Brady to a bed and tortures him to death. The crime was part of Quarles' long history of abusing male hustlers.
* In season three, upon hearing that Diane is planning on getting an abortion, Princess Carolyn sarcastically pities her for having a husband and being able to have children while she herself has neither.
* In season three, village girl Kate joined the outlaw team, donning a brand new dress that... well, let's put it this way: if you were living rough in the forest, regularly running away from soldiers and engaging in plenty of arduous physical activity, would
* In season three, Xander and Willow briefly had a secret fling when they were dating Cordelia and Oz, respectively, but it was wrapped up after a few episodes.
* In season two episode "Sex, Lies, and Birthday Cake", Wendy carelessly
* In season two, Henry and Fred's mother Margaret comes back. It's mentioned that she was 54 when she died; it's not clear how old either brother is supposed to be in-universe, but both actors are older than Margaret's actress, and they mention how odd it is that she can still "parent" them despite them being older.
* In season two, it turns out Jeff has had 'friends with benefits' status with Britta for most of the year. They are in the same study group and others are not happy they were not honest with them. They break it up the moment it's out, but their possible relationship continues to be
* In season two, Jimmy and Eli become Co-Dragons to the Commodore - Eli as his pawn in the sheriff's department, and Jimmy as his protégé. When
* In season two, Joe is unjustly accused of infecting WestNet with a computer worm which caused millions of dollars worth of damage and the subsequent scandal
* In season two, Joey and Chandler get caught up before buying their gifts and end up shopping at a gas station on Christmas Eve. Rachel gets wiper blades, even though she doesn't have a car (but they give an odorizer so she can feel like she's inside one), Phoebe gets a package of toilet seat covers, Monica gets a box of condoms, and Ross gets two cans of pop (he trades one of his drinks for the condoms).
* In season two, Linda Purl played Richie's recurring girlfriend Gloria, while in season 10 she played Fonzie's girlfriend Ashley Pfister.
* In season two, Polly becomes this to Tommy (along with his explicit
* In season two's episode "L is for Loser", the Grumper sisters join the school radio station (run by Irma) and go on the lookout for juicy gossip.
* In Season Two, Sinon strips off her clothes in front of him, unaware that he was a guy (he was pretending to be a girl to get her help). He then confesses and, understandably, she gets pretty mad and slaps him too.
* In season two, the new commanding officer of Babylon 5 is attacked by a Minbari and defends himself with a conveniently-placed weapon. When Sheridan has the assailant at his mercy, he demands surrender — to which the Minbari replies, "Death first." Later on, in a pseudo-legal proceeding, a Minbari witness claims the assailant actually said something that sounds similar ("Deth feherst" or some such) but means "I yield to your authority." This actually turned out to be a complete lie, but the other Minbari seemed to consider it plausible.
* In season two there was a lot of consolidation as the 3 new chosen inherited both virtues from the pairs, and would change their element depending on which one they invoked. The 6 new kids however all ended up pairing of for the

* In season two, Vannozza dei Cattanei, Rodrigo's former mistress and mother to his children, becomes this for the Borgia family and for Giulia Farnese.
* In Season two, White House Counsel Lionel Tribbey, an imposing man by any standard, makes his first entrance by bursting through a door shouting "I WILL KILL PEOPLE TODAY, LEO!", while brandishing a cricket bat that was given to him by Queen Elizabeth II.
* In Season VIII, Lister's contacts among the Skutters include Bob (from "The Last Day") and Madge, who is "Bob's missus".
* In Seattle, Washington, the famous Pike Place Market is built over an Indian Burial Ground according to historical record. This is just one of the many spooky facts about this location, no wonder people think it's haunted.
* In "Seat to Stardom", Rocko, Filburt, and Heffer are part of a crowd waiting to get an autograph from Really Really Big Man and other celebrities, but they're stuck in the back. All Heffer can see is the back of a bunch of heads, all Rocko can see is a forest of ankles, and as for Filburt...
* In "Seat to Stardom", Rocko gets an insane squealing brigade when he becomes an underwear model for Wedgie Boy briefs.
* In "Second Chunce", Ben calls the singing telegram company and asks if they can perform something sad for Leslie, who just lost her job. He gets as far as asking if they know the
* In "Second Contact", Captain Freeman gets Ensign Boimler's name wrong by calling him "Bumford" in their second meeting, but at least gets it right the second time after he corrects her.
* In second edition Exalted, characters have a statline called Motivation, that being the character's ultimate goal with his life (which in the case of Exalted, is 2-3 millennia, longer in some cases). Ma-Ha-Suchi's Motivation in the First Age was to sleep with every Exalt alive. Barring a few deliberate holdouts, he almost
* In Second Edition, the default setting has Atlantis as a lost and ruined Terra Incognita which may or may not have had gods of its own (and who are dead even if they did exist), but
* In second edition this was removed from their core Charms and became an Ink Monkeys aftermarket upgrade; while it still took a Charm slot, that selfsame Charm could be expanded to produce a secondary "siege devastator" mode, a sword, or any other piece of kit you could reasonably fit within an Alchemical's body.
* In "Second Skin", a man calls Kira "Kiri". Also, in "Our Man Bashir", a holographic woman gets Kira's names around the wrong way and calls her "Nerys Kira".
* In "Second Sons" (season 3, episode 8), Queen Daenerys meets with three officers of Second Sons, mercenaries hired by Yunkai, and she tries to bribe them to her side. One of the captains makes lewd comments, says he and the Second Sons will all rape her and generally behaves like an asshole. When they leave the tent, he smacks Missandei on her butt.
* In "Second Thoughts", Dr. Valerian, who is dying of pancreatic cancer, is able to transfer his memories and personality into the brain of Karl Durand. Karl subsequently kills three other men - the first incident being an accident - and transfers their minds into his brain.
* In "Secret Box," SpongeBob sneaks into Patrick's house to steal the titular box, wearing thick gloves and putting a nylon stocking on his head (which squeezes into the shape of a leg for a second when he puts it on.)
* In "Secret of My Excess", Spike claims that he wouldn't wash the cheek on which Rarity kissed him. When it cuts to one week later, it turns out he
* In "Secrets and Limos", while Penny is making a "vision board" she reveals that she wants:
* In "Secrets of a Successful Marriage", Carl calls Homer "a little slow" when Homer fails to realize he just beat Moe at poker with a straight flush. By the time Homer responds "How dare you call me that?!", it's hours later, and Lenny is in his nightshirt and cap when Homer finally asks about it, prompting him to say "Boy, you

* In "Secrets of a Successful Marriage" Homer creates a new Marge by sticking a paper face on a potted plant.
* In "Secrets Of A Successful Marriage", Homer is called slow at a poker game. He takes so long to mentally process the remark that by the time he spits out his indignant denial, everyone else has left—except for Lenny, whose house it is; he's getting a midnight snack. Lenny remarks, "you really are slow!" and Homer's thought process begins again before Lenny throws him out.
* In "Secrets of Celle Neues Rathaus", two US Navy divers sent to investigate the titular building's flooded basement never return to the surface, and all that's left of them are their tether lines. Given
* Insect cannibalism. Locusts feed on grass normally, which is pretty low on protein. So what do they do when they don't have enough good food? They go find a dead locust...or a living one who has just molted (and is therefore soft and weak), and they dine. For extra gruesome points, it's the young ones who do it most often in groups. It could be why they move and form such huge swarms: they move because they don't want to be eaten.
* Insect fighting rings are popular in some places, pitting vicious creepy-crawlies likes scorpions, hornets, mantises, and tarantulas against each other to the death. In fact, the aforementioned cricket fights formed the basis for the
* "Insect" for the Platinum caste, who, despite being officially deemed holy by the prevalent Gefendur religion, are effectively considered disposable due to their thirty-year lifespans. Quigley takes this as a sort of
* Insect Gender-Bender: A male worker ant or bee, despite the fact that workers are sterile females.
* Insect Glaives, using a Kinsect companion to gather buffs from monsters in conjunction with a spear that can be used to pole vault off the ground and unleash deadly attacks from the air. Its aerial capabilities make it ideal for mounting and stunning monsters.
* Insecticide, the Robo bugs casually announce one of their plans to be executed on their signal, randomly chosen from one of their lists.
* Insecticomics, a resurrection that was never really explained despite the fact that he's mentioned it more than once and once after being killed by the Fallen, then dragged back to her body by Starscream's ghost.
* Insecticomics are this, out of lack of anything better to do. Kickback once spent four hours waiting to pull a prank on the first person that walked by, stating that he "has a lot of free time for some reason."
* Insecticomics: Because Transformers are ordinarily nude, there is humor value in putting them in clothing.
* Insecticomics Eventually, he mellows out and lets the priest go on as he pleases.
* Insecticomics format with the Insecticons (who are only about two inches high, as toys) talking to the author's giant head.
* Insecticomics has a lot of this, usually in the form of open relationships.
* Insecticomics has always been kept a secret from the humans (and thus, the readers). When Wreckage finally shows Sassy Devine one of the "Debbie Does Daebola" films, all we get is her reaction to the film (mostly confusion).
* Insecticomics has never really taken itself seriously, to the point where the fourth wall has a hinge on it, but there have been a few dramatic storylines to add an element of seriousness to the business—the current Unicron-related one being the most dramatic yet.
* Insecticomics has several instances of characters spontaneously changing their gender, although being that they are mostly androgynous Transformers gender isn't much of an issue for them.
* Insecticomics, he agrees, and it only gets better from there. Jazz even refers to it as a "Red Sonja-kick".
* Insecticomics. Humans and Transformers alike are guilty of it. Blinky is especially noted for his tackle/squee moments.
* Insecticomics): "I'm a jet, and you didn't put a lid on your maze, idiot."
* Insecticomics is an atheist and skeptic. Somehow he manages to reconcile this with the fact that his commander has an immortal spark, people can and have been brought back from the dead, and they have done battle against the powerful minions of a chaos god who is the closest thing Transformers have to the Devil. And then they did battle against the chaos god himself. This does not seem to have caused any crises of faith.

* Insecticomics is at least half a plot to hook up with Dreadmoon himself.
* Insecticomics is fond of doing this, often accompanied with a delighted "SQUEEEEEEEE!"
* Insecticomics, kidnapping Lazorbeak in order to manipulate Kickback. Kickback simply waits for Lazorbeak to rescue herself, which she does with great glee.
* Insecticomics Lady Jaye attempts to make the 'naked' robots all wear censor bars. Override, who is female but has a gender-neutral body, taunts Lady Jaye by asking how many censor bars she needs. Lady Jaye eventually puts a censor bar on her groin but not on her chest, having decided that Override is male.
* Insecticomics: Lampshaded where Dreadmoon is a genius at strategy games but would be an awful tactician (hence the need for Thrust).
* Insecticomics. Lasorbeak, Kickback, and Thrust have all dated/slept with Tidal Wave, who is the size of a battleship. Probably best not to think about how this works.
* Insecticomics of them, even the ones who weren't unpaired to begin with, and in as many combinations as possible.
* Insecticomics: Override suggests one to Armada!Thrust to resolve a dispute in strip 127. He refuses.
* Insecticomics routinely has one of these between the Insecticons and Vector Prime.
* Insecticomics. The Insecticons and company are pretending to have really loud sex to mess with a whiny, repressed G1 fanboy — in reality, they're just having a party. When the pizza girl comes over, they pay her extra to pretend to be doing this to mess with the kid's head even further.
* Insecticomics, when Kickback claimed to be a cowboy to avoid getting a job, Shrapnel and Bombshell called his bluff and brought him a herd of cows so he could work (and to serve him right). The cows were, presumably, stolen. And the Insecticons are alien robots, so...
* Insecticomics. While Dreadmoon doesn't actively try to kill Skyfire, the partner of his long-time crush Starscream, he has occasionally directed some "friendly fire" his way and sent him threatening Mini-Cons.
* Insecticons and deliberately leaves behind a torn Decepticon emblem. Sure enough, the Insecticons and Decepticons (who have no love lost between them) begin attacking each other, but the plan goes wrong when Mirage is accidentally discovered and both sides realise they've been tricked.
* Insecticons, but not to the same jarring degree as most mook squads. When they're at their most dangerous, they tend to fight in smaller squads and provide relatively tough opposition to the Autobots.
* Insectoid Alien actually produce missile like growths within their bodies to invoke the trope.
* Insectoid Aliens: Aliens that look like insects, arachnids, or arthropods from Earth.
* Insectoid Aliens enemies, who attempt to prevent the seeding. The humanoids fail, their ship crashes, and the crew dies... to be reincarnated in three modern-day people, just in time for the hungry insectoids to return.
* Insectoid Aliens that can fly through space to the moon… The rather unrealistic costumes also enhance the weird atmosphere, perhaps unintentionally.
* Insectoid Aliens that the females keep attached to them at all times. When the time comes, the males fertilize the females.
* Insectoid Aliens. The propaganda reel after the alien meteorite destroys Buenos Aires particularly demonstrates this. One of the survivors looking straight into the camera and earnestly declaring, "The only good bug is a dead bug!" The next clip of people at home "doing their part" is of school children crushing cockroaches and their teacher maniacally cheering them on. The one journalist who suggests that compromise is possible if Humans stay out of Insect-populated worlds is immediately shouted down.

* Insectoid Aliens, with the survivors of both species attempting to rebuild their civilizations.
* Insectoids all had deliberately bug-like features, as a means of disguise from the local wildlife.
* insectoids, Captain Archer is in VERY tense negotiations with the Xindi; his linguist Lt. Sato performs simultaneous translation — except at one point, where the insectoid goes on a long chittering rant, and Sato simply says, "You don't want to know."
* Insectoids run centered around building enormous mechanical bugs. However, these bugs were actually vehicles for colonists on a hostile alien planet, who designed them to resemble bugs in order to blend in with the massive predatory insects native to the planet.
* insectoid Thranx books is based on clicks, whistles, and hand gestures. Humans can speak it passably, though not having spiracles, mandibles, or four arms makes it difficult; Thranx have similar difficulties speaking human languages without lips or lungs. Eventually a common language is developed that both species can pronounce.
* insectoid usually interacts with Earthlings by disguising herself as a beautiful woman. One of her subordinates criticizes her that "'Tis undignified for the heir apparent to dress like a monkey!"
* Insecto Nocturno are small-sized robots in the shape of starfish that she can control with her goggles. They are stolen by the titular protagonist and renamed "Crypto Sandstars".
* Insector Haga/Weevil Underwood wasn't the guy who started the idea of a
* In Sector V, Numbah 5 is this, being the oldest of the group and with a good level head on her. It's revealed she becomes Soopreme Leader after 362 retires.
* Insect Plague as a spell-like ability, allowing them to summon swarms of wasps.
* Insect Queen) or a worker. An unfertilised egg will become a male drone that exists to fertilise the queen's eggs and then to die. Eggs laid by queens can be fertilised, while eggs laid by workers can't.
* Insects and other invertebrates manage to play dozens of extremely vital roles in the environment, from pollinating, pest control, food sources and so on. We tend to find them annoying or insignificant, but if they were to disappear, life as we know it would cease to function.
* Insects and spiders are often assumed to be female. justified because this is the most active gender of these species while male are less common outside of the nest.
* Insects change form or size by shedding their skin and growing when their flesh is still supple. Sometimes this process fails. The results range from a bit odd to grotesque to downright Lovecraftian.
* Insects have a decentralized nervous system, where ganglions control their organs, different parts of their bodies, etc. in addition to a brain that basically monitors everything as the sensor organs are connected to it. As can be seen proposed
* Insects in ads for Raid insecticide. Raid has been doing this for decades.
* Insecure. A clip is shown of the modern reboot which features a character dressed as Colin Kaepernick kneeling and saying "Hashtag Metoo!"
* Insecure has a case of white women having a fetish for black men. Lawrence ends up having a three-way with two white women he met in a store parking lot. They're disappointed when he can't go another round, and say that the other black guy could go all night.
* Insecure Love Interest: A character who feels they have no chance of ever being good enough for love, so they don't bother trying to find a partner.
* Insecure Love Interest: A love interest who feels unworthy of their significant other's affection.
* Insecure Love Interest to Penny. Notably, the only time he starts doing the "crazy" part was in a sixth season episode regarding Penny working with a classmate, confronting the guy with an anonymous tip that her boyfriend has "gang" connections. Before this, he could certainly seethe with jealousy at times, but rarely did it manifest in something crazy.

* Insecure Protagonist, Arrogant Antagonist: Pffft, I'm so much better than that other guy!
* In "Securitate", a Romanian secret police torturer turned gangster is killed by his son, who's never been enough of a bastard to gain the old man's approval.
* Insecurity Camera: A security camera fails to be useful, which is good news for you, the intruder.
* Insecurity Camera: You can easily just blow up security cameras or otherwise make them useless and nobody will be alarmed by it. Unless there's a very smart supervisor present, at best it'll be dismissed as a temporary glitch to not worry about. Stealth games often need this trope, as otherwise your location options are limited to either universe without camera surveillance or before the 1900s.
* InSecurity: Hubbs and Ellie do it right after confessing to each other after spending a day in Las Vegas.
* InSecurity just can NOT resist anything adorable, be it kitties or kids.
* InSecurity, N'udu is brainwashed and assigned to kill his best friend.
* InSecurity tends to be childlike and energetic, much to her husband Sam's dismay.
* InSecurity: The Dutch kidnap Burt's parents and force him to steal N.I.S.A. technology to ensure their safety.
* InSecurity who is so childish she makes Sam seem more like her babysitter than her husband, then there's Sedine's cousin Roy...
* InSecurity work for the National Intelligence and Security Agency, a fictional Canadian agency based partly on the real Canadian Security and Intelligence Service and fictional spy agencies as seen on TV.
* In SEED, Mu calls Athrun out on this. Interestingly, Athrun isn't wearing a ZAFT uniform at the time. Mu however, is wearing an Earth Alliance uniform.
* In "Seeds of Destruction", Linda Andrews' mother continually neglected her when she was a child as she was more interested in sleeping with men than in being a parent.
* In "Seed," the attorneys are thwarted in their effort to prosecute a fertility doctor who used his own sperm for his IVF patients when their best witnesses refuse to testify. The couple did not want it to become public that they had their second child (via IVF by the doctor) to provide bone marrow for a transplant for their first child, who had leukemia. The marrows did not match, and the first child died.
* In "See Homer Run" after Lisa goes on a misandrist rampage at school, Dr. Pryor deems the cause to be a lack of faith in her father and presents some essays she wrote of his past blunders, accompanied by pictures. These include
* In "See Homer Run", Homer accidentally ruins Lisa's Father's Day gift to him (a book she drew herself) when he tries to hang it on the refrigerator with a magnet, only for it to slide down into the automatic water dispenser and get soaked. Homer tries to blame the magnet, but Lisa runs off crying because she made it for his birthday.
* In "See No Evil", Batman grabs onto the roof of a car rendered invisible by
* Insee Thong ("Golden Eagle"). What's worse was that the fatal fall was accidentally left in the original theatrical release (later DVD releases thankfully remove the fall).
* In Seiji's Normal End, he confesses that he's been envious of Akira since childhood since the other boy's strength (both
* In "Sejanus", the Emperor Tiberius' great-nephew Nero is arrested for treason, then starved to death while imprisoned on the orders of Tiberius' enforcer, Sejanus, purely because he is ahead of Tiberius' grandson Gemellus in the line of succession (Sejanus is the lover of Gemellus' mother Livilla and aims to rule as regent when Gemellus becomes Emperor). Nero, believing that it is Tiberius at whose command he has been imprisoned, shouts curses at the Emperor until he no longer has the strength to do so.
* Insektors had Koa the Frog/Operation Frogbucket, which resulted in an army of giant mechanical frogs.
* Insektors uses this excuse when the Yuks/Kruds plans fail. The thing is, he's actually right.

* In self-aware moments, Angel himself seems to understand that this behavior is unhealthy. He seems aware that stalking is not good, but it is better than what he was doing before. The series never
* In "Selfless", Buffy shuts herself down emotionally when faced with the prospect of killing Anya, a fellow Scoobie who's gone back to being a demon. Xander recognises the trope and calls Buffy on it.
* In "Selma's Choice" Selma takes Bart and Lisa to Duff Gardens, and Lisa drinks the water from the boat ride on a dare: "Ooh, I can see the music!"
* In "Senor Cleanfist," one of the strip's animated shorts, the titular character is a superhero with the power to make things sparkling clean by punching them with his massive fists. When he ends up in prison,
* In sentencing, a discharge is a variant of this that can be called Let Off by the Judge. Although the defendant is deemed guilty, they're given no punishment, often because of circumstances out of their control. In the
* In "Separate Vocations" Lou and Eddie are perusing Snake's car after he robbed the Kwik-E-Mart, this scene and the page quote above seems to show that the Springfield police officers are bad at identifying cars.
* In September 1985, four Polish astronomers working at the University of Torun used a personal computer and privately-owned transmitter to interrupt the Soviet-run television broadcasting with their own messages to promote anti-Communist Solidarność all over the city of Torun. They were soon caught and arrested, but due to their prior contributions to the scientific community, they got away with a fine and probation.
* In September 1997, a Garuda Indonesia A300 was approaching the airport of Medan, on the Sumatra island. A typical approach pattern when flying from Jakarta was to fly past the runway perpendicular to it, turn left, fly parallel to the runway and then make a 180-degree left turn to land. In this particular case, another aircraft was taking off heading north, so the air traffic controller put the A300 on a different pattern: left turn before the airport, flying a track parallel to the runway, then a 180-degree right turn. The captain, who'd flown the standard pattern literally hundreds of times, made a 180-degree left turn out of habit. Sadly, none of 234 onboard survived when the A300 crashed into a mountainous woodland.
* In September 1999, a man cleaning out his garage found a barrel that was too heavy for him or the sanitation department to lift. When he opened it, inside was the mummified body of a young woman. She was eventually identified as
* In September 2005, landfill workers in Lubbock, Texas found the body of a young woman in a suitcase, identified as Summer Baldwin, who had gone missing two days earlier. By tracing the UPC number of the suitcase, police were able to determine the store where it had been purchased and identified the buyer via surveillance footage as Rosendo Rodriguez. It was determined that Rodriguez had severely beaten Baldwin, but she was still alive when placed in the suitcase and died of suffocation from being crammed into a tiny space. Rodriguez was eventually linked to the murder of Joanna Rogers, whose body was also found in a suitcase in the same landfill in October 2006, two and a half-years after she went missing from her home.
* In September 2012, Old Navy released a line of licensed NFL t-shirts, emblazoned with the date of every team's last, highest playoff win.
* In September 2013, the Winnipeg station dropped all non-religious programming and re-branded as Hope TV, essentially becoming a 24/7 televangelist channel. Around the same time, two of Canada's religious networks (Miracle Channel and Grace TV) had effectively affiliated themselves with
* In September 2014, the Dominican Supreme Court declared anyone born to illegal immigrants since 1929 didn't legally have Dominican citizenship. The reason given was that being a foreigner "in transit",
* In September 2015, ads for "daily fantasy sports" (a shortened version of often cash-based fantasy sports leagues, which some critics argue are essentially sports betting but
* In September 2017, a small blog named PopFront published an article suggesting a

* In September 2018, The Verge posted a guide on their YouTube channel for building a high-end custom gaming PC. The entire debacle has been a case study in the Streisand effect essentially from the start. The video was widely criticized by PC enthusiasts and the tech community at large for
* In September, Naoto meets Kanji's mother. The meeting largely goes well, although Kanji's mother ends up asking Naoto some difficult questions about her future plans.
* In September of 1990, the AWA ran out of original footage and could no longer afford to run TV tapings. They filled their shows by airing old matches with new commentary and pretending that they were new. Luckily no one was watching by this time, or it could have been a huge embarrassment.
* In September of 2020 The Lincolnshire Wildlife Park in Britain removed a group of parrots from public view because the birds kept letting the cuss words fly. The 5 birds had each come from different owners, and all five would let F-bombs fly towards each other as well as visitors.
* In Septentrione Arc have the Triumphant Ending: Not an ending itself, but an addition to either of Daichi's routes. The title is earned by keeping every party member alive and all of them join the protagonist and Daichi's cause.
* In Serbian history, last names were usually patronymic. For example, if a man's first name was Ivan, his children's last name would be Ivanovic. If a man was named Nemanja, his children's last name would be Nemanjic.
* In Serein in need is one of Isca's first acts of magic and an important ability throughout the whole series. She later teaches it to other people and learns that her way of doing it is a big improvement on the Serein's magic because that was abstract and un-intuitive and took decades to learn while her method could be picked up by others in mere days.
* In "Sergeant Rutledge" African-American top sergeant Woody Strode is court-martialed in the post Civil War west for raping and murdering his commander's (white) teenage daughter and shooting his commander to death before running away. Ironically
* In Sergei Snegov's "The Men like Gods", nearly all, if not all, of the future food is artificial. Unlike most of the examples, it's also noted to be much tastier, than the natural one, as shown, when the Pavel tried to make a barbecue from natural mutton. Gamazin even notes, that the barbecue from the natural meat tastes horrible, nothing like the "... real synthetic meat", and that if kitchen automats made a dish like this, they would've been sent to repair immediately.
* In Sergey Snegov's "The Men Like Gods", people use a device called "Tanev's annihilator", which can convert spacetime to matter and vice versa,
* In Sergey Snegov's "The Men like Gods", the humanity ships' FTL drive works on the principle of transforming spacetime into matter and running it in
* In serialized fiction like a television or comic book series, it could seem strange if a character goes an entire episode/issue
* In Series 10's "The Pyramid at the End of the World", Bill Potts is so desperate to save the blind Doctor from dying in a lab explosion (he cannot unlock the door unless he can see the numbers on the lock) that she
* In Series 11 of the UK edition of the show, while at the pool, Josie gives Sam a major wedgie in his swimsuit.
* In Series 12 (Season 38), a partially converted Cyberman known as Ashad (who isn't completely covered in metal and doesn't have his emotions inhibited) seeks to destroy all organic life and have all the Cybermen "ascend to full mechanisation," despite being more organic than other Cybermen.
* In series 1 of the 2005 revival, Rose Tyler is shown as working in a department store called Henriks (alternately spelled Hendriks in other shots), another fictionalised variant of Harrods. The logos for the two companies are extremely similar.
* In Series 1, there's a crime scene where Jack is startled by a cat...
* In series 1, Tony is totally unfazed to find Sid masturbating over a picture of Michelle (Tony's girlfriend).
* In Series 2, Mickey Smith was reintroduced as an ongoing companion, seemingly putting the rapidly developing relationship between the Doctor and Rose into

* In Series 31 Episode 5, under the original chairman Humphrey Lyttleton:
* In Series 3, one of the soon-to-be-victims is startled by her own cat approaching her in a man's shoes.
* In Series 4 Soolin, a skilled mercenary, joins them on a basis of mutual convenience (not that there was much revolutioning going on by then).
* In series 5, Rachel inadvertently creates one for Chandler and Monica. Their relationship is secret and they're just
* In Series 6, the Teselecta robot, which is controlled by temporarily-miniaturised humans and which can impersonate anyone, has
* In Series 70 Episode 4, Tim has invented a new game called I Hear With My Little Ear, which doesn't work. He then tries to create I Smell With My Little Nose, at which point Jack has had enough.
* In series 7, specifically once Clara becomes a companion, a few numbers start cropping up. First, "Eleven" remains from since the beginning of series 7 (since this is the eleventh Doctor), but also the number twenty-three. Clara, for some odd reason, doesn't seem to acknowledge the existence of the number; she mistypes a "123" password as "124", and in a diary she's had since she was a kid, she has her age listed for every age except 23, which she skips. The date 23rd of November (i.e. 23/11) also crops up a lot, for
* In Series 8 and 9, Clara Oswald explicitly takes on the role of "the heart" following the Doctor's transformation into a somewhat colder, less socially adept incarnation, to the point where she even creates a set of
* In Series 8, CGI-augmented shots of volcanic mountain plains on the island of Lanzarote double for the surface of the Moon. Since Lanzarote was used for filming the planet of Sarn for
* In Series 8, Clara Oswald begins a relationship with fellow teacher Danny Pink and initially keeps her adventuring with the Doctor a secret from him, despite his being puzzled by her occasional odd behaviour, such as showing up for a date covered in seaweed or for some reason wearing a space helmet. Finally, the masquerade is lifted in
* In Series 8, Strax does an examination of the brain of Clara Oswald and finds a lot of muscular young men (or considering his
* In Series 9, two characters are transformed into ageless immortals: Ashildr, a 9th century Viking girl, and
* In series example. At the end of Season 9, long-standing couple Jay/Manny had their best friends (Spinner and Emma) get married. Some fans were not pleased by this. In that it ruined the chances of Emma/Sean and broke up fairly long-lasting Spinner/Jane.
* In series finale, Madoka's mom also asks if her daughter is an anime character when talking with Homura
* In series four, Lady Rose becomes engaged to Jack Ross, an African-American jazz singer. Aside from the scandal surrounding such an interclass and interracial relationship, Mary points out that his being a jazz singer is almost equally as shocking to polite society.
* In series four, Mary's suitor Lord Gillingham happens to be inconveniently engaged to someone else; but ultimately decides to break off the engagement (risking a potential scandal as well as the displeasure of the woman's family and all their circle) in order to pursue Mary.
* In series F's episode about the future, Stephen Fry uses this phrase as an example sentence
* In Series H, Stephen Fry finished one episode with a scat joke about pathologists and dead bodies. This joke was already told by Alan Davies, several seasons back.
* In Series IV, "White Hole", Kryten reactivates a Talkie Toaster whose reason d'etre is toasting bread products. Lister attempts to forestall its offers with this trope.
* In Series J, Stephen asks how elephants drink. Alan suggests using its trunk and gets a forfeit, and Jimmy Carr quips that they drink to forget. Back in series A, during a question about elephants' lack of tolerance for alcohol, Alan made the same mistake (without forfeit) and Clive Anderson made the same joke.

* In series' lore, the Sload, "slugmen" native to the archipelago of Thras to the southwest of Tamriel, have a natural affinity toward
* In series' lore, this is a common reaction by the locals should they find some sort of monster or deviant in their midst. Common targets include
* In-Series Nickname "The School Idol Nobody Wants to Date" because while she's very attractive, intelligent, and athletic, her personality tends to drive guys away.
* In series, Saiyans are descendants of Kryptonians whose colony was abandoned and eventually resettled on planet Vegeta and evolved on the planet. The evolution seems to have cost them some of the super abilities a Kryptonian can have (such as super breath and laser vision) in exchange for learning how to use ki for energy blasts and transform into a Golden Super Mode.
* In-series this happened to Stormer's music when she banded with Kimber in an episode of
* In series XI the crew talk with the Universe itself who backs this by expressing regret over only bothering to make one planet with life on it during its mid-life crisis.
* In Series X, the crew members install a new ship's AI for Red Dwarf named Pree, whose avatar is a pretty young woman with facial tattoos. Unfortunately she's programmed to anticipate and immediately enact the senior officer's decisions, which happens to be Rimmer. So when she predicts that Rimmer would do a lousy of repairing the ship, she starts trashing the systems. Later on she decides to fly the ship into a nearby star.
* In "Serious Business", Robin puts a timer on the Titans' bathroom usage, and when it hits zero for the first time, the room is set ablaze. The other Titans try to extinguish it, but Cyborg just runs back and forth screaming.
* In "Serious Steven", Steven is banned from the rides at Funland "forever" after accidentally destroying some of them. By "Too Short to Ride" (well over an in-show year later), this ban has apparently been lifted.
* Insert a credit card between the door and the frame just above the lock.
* "insert Boston-appropriate language here" depict the Yankees lifting the morale of a city crippled by an economic shutdown, the Son of Sam killings, and crime lingering in the city then. The Bronx Zoo era, which included the Yankees winning two consecutive World Series (beating the Dodgers twice), ended in 1979 after Munson was killed crashing his private plane.
* Insert Cameo: A creator using their own body part for a close-up shot.
* Insert Cameo - An Insert of the creator's hand (or, rarely, some other body part), usually standing in for that of one of the regular actors
* Insert Cameo: Directors or other creators using their appendages for an insert shot.
* Insert Credit other games, the people who play them, or anyone who doesn't agree with the writer's opinion.
* Insert!Dawn-Fic: Everyone in the Cast was given false memories of Buffy's little sister Dawn in the Fifth season. How would any given episode in the first four seasons play out with Dawn there? In universe certain sources
* insert joke here, they are given white uniforms—although Sakura's does show her cleavage.
* Insert Knob A in Hole B": Hansen and Woodbury use "demoleculizer rods" to take apart the crate, making sure not to damage the contents inside.
* Insert Name Here: In the episode dedicated to the name 'John', Richard observes:
* insert some embarrassing thing is to Y" would fall. It's obviously intended to insult X, but that goal could be accomplished in other ways
* In "Servant with Two Masters", a man is sitting at a desk pointing a gun at Bodie and Doyle. Doyle shoves the desklamp so it shines into the man's face causing him to flinch, whereupon Bodie snatches the gun off him.
* In Set Dungeons, losing all of your life doesn't kill you, but just sends you back to the beginning of the dungeon, even if you're playing on Hardcore Mode.

Also, a town portal can't be interrupted in a Set Dungeon, in contrast to the usual rules where a player can't move or defend themselves while casting the spell. So if a player wants to leave and come right back in to try again, there's nothing stopping them.
* In "Seth and Apep," Christine's kidnappers taunt Mac with a tongue in the mail. It turns out not to be hers, though.
* In "Seth and Apep," Christine's restaurant manager wore a wire during the attempt to save her and his brother from kidnappers.
* In "Setts, Lies and Videotape", Tom breaks up a badger baiting ring.
* In Set Up," Beckett holds up a large pair of bolt cutters (in a rather flirty pose) prior to trying a storage unit door. Castle comments, for reasons he won't explain, that looks quite hot.
* In several adaptations, Misty was this for Red's counterpart, since there were no female player characters in
* In several books, the witches talk about the infamous Black Aliss, baddest of bad witches.
* In several cases, a job would go bad due to a production accident or the host being difficult. Instead of cutting the whole thing they'll broadcast it anyway.
* In several classic cartoons, one throwaway gag would be for a fish to eat something, then a bigger fish would eat that fish, then a bigger fish would eat
* In several continuities innate knowledge of all languages on Earth is one of the powers granted to
* In several countries (especially Britain and Germany), Field Marshals were traditionally given batons upon their promotion.
* In several countries, folkloric music, either from the own or from their neighboring countries, by people who are more into "mainstream" music (read: rock and pop). For example, at one time in Venezuela there is the trifecta hate from people of the capital and neighboring cities towards joropo (because of being perceived as backwards music from country simpletons, and for having been used as a filler during a period of obligatory 1:1 ratio of imported/local music), Zulian gaita (because of saturation of the airwaves on Christmas time and extreme regional thematic) and vallenato (because of its association with Colombian immigration, often stereotyped as criminals and violent bus drivers who like to play music in their vehicles on an ear-damaging volume).
* In several Country Houses owned by The National Trust, there is Beds in the Dressing Room, many people think that they were for servants of guests but in fact they were made up for if a married couple decided not to sleep in the same bed, the man took the Dressing Room and the woman had the main bed.
* In several episodes, characters are seen covered in red liquid, but it's not actually blood (like in "Back in Black", characters get covered in fake blood, and in "Friends in Dry Places", Clyde gets jam all over his foot).
* In several episodes John Reese loses access to his earpiece — generally because he's undercover with a gang and they all ditch their mobiles in preparation for some form of crime, which is certainly a wise precaution in the age of GPS tracking. Reese does however play the trope straight in "Many Happy Returns", when Finch tries to stop him getting involved in a domestic violence case (Reese's personal
* In several episodes, Ned's biblical references are complete nonsense, and simply sound like weird things from the Old Testament. In the episode "
* In several episodes, people who have HORRIBLE cooking are demonstrated how horrible their cooking is by having even
* In several episodes the joke is that different men took advantage of Kelly’s stupidity to molest her or
* In several episodes, this is used as a plot point, as D'Argo at one point starts a program in his ship that speaks in an archaic form of his own language. He can't understand it, and has to have the computer research the language and inject him with new microbes just so he can make out a few words. This also raises a big question on why
* In several games, Tails will fly a biplane and Sonic will stand on the wings.

* In several games, there exists a "Speed Booster" item that acts as an instant kill to practical anything it touches. However, in
* In several incarnations the eponymous heroes are told (or even have it be part of their song lyrics) to only use their powers for defense. This explains why they never use the Megazord to stomp the monster before it grows (they won't risk the property damage until the enemy forces their hand) or why they never directly attack the villain's base (although they did so in
* In several Italian city-states one of the requirements of citizenship was to forswear vengeance as that supposedly now belonged to
* In several of King's works, the term "allamagoosalum" is applied to these types of creatures.
* In several of the novels by John Gardner, Q/Major Boothroyd's character is downplayed so Bond can flirt with his
* In several other episodes, one of the male detectives would be ordered to dress as a woman and walk through the park as bait for muggers. How successfully they disguised themselves as women varied greatly, with Dietrich being the least successful and Harris being the most successful (once he shaved off his mustache).
* In several places on this site, the rather vocal Hatedom of Foster's beer has described it as the urine of various different animals, complete with local variations. The Australians consider it cat piss, while the British think it's horse piss.
* In several stories, it's later expanded to note that every single one of the Justice League members have at least some vague plan to take out their team-members in case any one of them goes rogue. They vary in effectiveness, though.
* in several ways for Lt. Diane Schonke, a murdered Naval officer Harm used to know ("We The People"), and finally when Mac confronts the officer who murdered Schonke, who is so startled by what appears to be the ghost of their murder victim that they stumble backwards off a pier and are crushed to death by the ship moored there, in "Death Watch".
* In "Severed Dreams", Delenn never looked so beautiful to Capt. John Sheridan as when she swooped out of hyperspace when all seemed hopeless for the besieged space station with four near invincible warships at the last minute to tell the Earth Alliance ships:
* In "Severed Dreams" President Clark's forces use them when attempting to retake the station from the heroes. They turn up a couple other times as well. Incidentally, the Earth Force breaching pods share some obvious design traits with the
* In severe hypothermia cases, the victim may engage in 'paradoxical undressing' wherein they remove all their clothes. No one has experienced this and survived, but it has been suggested that at such a late stage the blood vessels close to the skin 'give up' and widen as they do when experiencing heat, causing the victim to feel too hot and strip. In this case, "I'm hot... so hot" might be more appropriate!
* In "Sewers of Bikini Bottom", SpongeBob decides to see what can flush down the Krusty Krab toilet at Squidward's request. After flushing down the safe holding the Krabby Patty formula, SpongeBob and Squidward have to flush themselves down into Bikini Bottom's
* In "Sex, Pies, and Idiot Scrapes", Homer and Flanders end up falling into a pile of wet cement. While they're stuck, Flanders begins reciting the Bible.
* In "Sex, Pies, and Idiot Scrapes", Ned mentions "AD/BC": A Christian cover band of AC/DC. One of their hits being "Kindly Deeds Done for Free".
* In "Sexual Healing", Butters and Kyle attend a class to "cure" themselves of their sex addictions (as the WHO named it a disease after many reports of celebrities' infidelities hit the news), but the class doesn't aim to cure their addictions, but rather teaches them ways to prevent themselves from getting caught.
* In "Sexy," Santana reveals that her previous panic and bitchiness was just a way to hide from feelings that scared her. She admits to Brittany that she loves her, but Brittany gently turns her down
* In SF author David Gerrold's book about writing the episode "The Trouble With Tribbles", he recounts seeing the first episode broadcast, which featured a creature that sucked all of the salt out of people's bodies, thereby killing them. He hoped

* In SFIV, Dhalsim's motivation isn't that different. He wants to find Seth and confront him on how a S.I.N. has built a dam far upstream blocking a river that provides water (and trade, fishing, etc.) to his village. His ending shows the damn being demolished and the river being reclaimed by the happy villagers.
* In "Shades of Grey", Jack O'Neill (who has been forced to resign from the Air Force in order to avoid criminal prosecution) is able to waltz into Stargate Command and straight into General Hammond's office, without security apparently noticing his presence at all. Now, he
* In "Shadow Dancing", Delenn describes Minbari courting rituals to Sheridan. If the man presses his case too far over the woman's objections, she explains, she can "leave when he falls asleep, file a complaint with the Elders, even cut off his..." Sheridan looks horrified as Delenn stumbles a moment trying to find the right word, until she continues, "...access to her family".
* In "Shadow Play", Adam Grant's defense attorney Erin Jacobs goes to the district attorney Mark Ritchie over her concerns that Adam may be telling the truth about all of them being characters in his
* In Shadowrun, Blood Magic is a discipline that utilizes sacrificing sapient victims to boost magic power or grant access to talents a mage would otherwise not have. Because of it's nature, it's heavily associated with the worst sociopaths and monsters metahumanity has to offer, and thus reviled
* In "Shadows Are Falling", an old friend of Murdoch's comes to him for help when he's accused of murder by Station House No. 1, who resent Station House No. 5 getting involved and asking awkward questions, especially since they know Murdoch's station considers them to be
* In "Shadows in the Moonlight", Conan deduced the gray ape-man attacked out of lust for Olivia.
* In "Shadows of Innistrad" this is the mark of corrupted angels, especially Avacyn herself.
* In Shakespeare's day it was very common for writers to rewrite well known stories, telling the same tales over and over with variation. Novelty wasn't exactly prized in art. As a result, many of Shakespeare's plays are based on other stories and/or plays. For example the tale of Hamlet derives from a legendary character in
* In Shakespeare's, Leonato describes Beatrice and Benedick's relationship at the start of the play as a "merry war."
* In "Shallow Vows", Stan and Francine's renewal of their wedding vows goes bad when Stan says he only married Francine for her looks. She suspends her normal beauty regimen and shows up to the ceremony overweight and ugly. Stan wants to fix things but can't get past Francine's looks, so he blinds himself to render it a non-issue. At first Francine is happy with Stan's more attentive, caring attitude, but balks when he says she's going to have to get a job and support the family now that he's blind, saying that she liked being married to a major bread-winner. In the end they realize that they're both shallow in different ways, and resolve not to make such a big deal about it.
* In "Shamrock Smurfs", Brainy sets up a glue trap for a leprechaun but ends up trapping the other smurfs.
* In "Shanghaied", SpongeBob and Patrick try to escape the Flying Dutchman's ship, they attempt to exit through the "perfume department". This is portrayed with them running in their usual animated form through live-action footage of a mall.
* In "Shanghaied", the Flying Dutchman decides that SpongeBob and Patrick aren't making good crewmen after all, so he decides to just eat them. Even when they magically wish him into being a vegetarian, he just turns them into fruits to make good on his threat. On the other hand, in the alternate scenes where Squidward/Patrick gets the last wish,
* In "Shapely University", Otis agrees to Omaha's suggestion that they, along with Olympia and Olena, call their respective Directors to figure out who gets the case, stating that they'll resolve the conflict in a civilized manner. Unfortunately, said Directors see the conflict as a chance to compete with each other, with little regard for their employees.

* In Shards of the Exalted Dreams, a lot of cool spaceship are also discussed, especially in Heaven's Reach (the science fiction version of Exalted, quite appropriately) and Gunstar Autochtonia. The Son of Heaven III, one of the largest warships ever built in the Heaven's Reach universe, certainly deserves a place on this list, being described as a fortress-city flying through space, with skyscrapers-modules decorated with immense frescoes, capable of housing a whole fleet of smaller ship, or of serving as a conference hall for negociations with the Son of Heaven. However, it is dwarfed (both in size and in cool factor) by the titular Gunstar Autochtonia, a world-sized starship crafted out of the body of a living god, modified for millennia by mad geniuses to become the greatest weapon in the galaxy, capable of winning the war against the creators of the universe. The Gunstar is home to billions of humans, dragon-kings, Exalted and rogue gods, and has never been completely explored or maped (it helps that Elsewhere technology allows it to be bigger on the inside), and is defended not only by all the weaponry that the Exalted are able to build, but also by the Gunstar Defense Line Voidfighters, spacefighters who can transform into (what else?) mecha suits.
* In "Shattered", Anakin's password is 8108; 8/10/08 (Aug. 10, 2008) is the release date of the pilot movie.
* In "She Likes Girls" by Metro Station the singer is trying to date a woman but she's more interested in someone else. Instead of being sad, he tries to hook her up with her crush:
* In "Shelter Skelter", Harry Dobbs and Nick Gatlin watch a television report about an escalating crisis in the Middle East. According to the report, the President and First Lady have left the White House by military helicopter and Russian cities are being evacuated. They later hear a radio report stating that the aircraft carrier
* In Sherlockian fanfic, Inspector Lestrade is a fairly popular deuteragonist to
* In "She's Koala That", The Pack (except Adam) takes a beeline for a specific lunch table, just to get away from Deidre Koala. They all pile up onto one chair. When they do, a visual gag involves Jake clearly shoving himself up Windsor's ass.
* In "She Used to Be My Girl" Chief Wiggum is warning people to stay away from the erupting volcano.
* In "She who Waits" the Cobra Queen is killed when Pendragon uses his brandy as fuel for a fire.
* In Shienar they have a saying: "A man who is not willing to give his life to save a woman is not a man."
* In "Shindig", the crew plays a card game that uses round cards with pictures of fruit on them. "Tall card... plum. Plums are tall." In fact, the actors demanded that the writer make up a full set of actual rules for the game so that they'd know what they were doing, but since we never find out what the rules are, it comes off as Calvinball.
* In Shingen's route, when he meets the MC for the third time, he says to her, "We've met three times now. Whim, inevitability, and finally fate. Are you anticipating our fourth meeting as much as I am? When it happens, I'll make you mine."
* In Shintoism, the soul is concieved as having four spirits: ara-mitama (violent), nigi-mitama (harmonious), saki-mitama (prosperous), kushi-mitama (wondrous). When gods are enshrined, sometimes two or more shrines or subshrines are built for each of that gods spirits. On top of this, due to the influence Chinese philosophy has had on Shintoism, it's not unusual for the soul to
* In Shintoism, this comes in the form of a shintai: any object used to house (or at the very least represent) an enshrined Kami.
* In Shinto, plates of salt placed by the door are said to repel evil spirits.
* In Shippuden, Naruto has developed into this with Killer B, who is also this with A / the Raikage. It turns out they're not actually related — A
* In shipyards, it's important to keep up with which parts belong to which ship either being built or serviced. Therefore, all ships are assigned a yard number (though letters can also be used, especially in yards that have been around a while), which are stamped onto the parts that belong to that ship.

* In Shiro's supports with his father, Ryoma, he mentions that he chose to train in the naginata in hopes of defeating his father, who, primarily wields a sword. Since spears have an advantage over swords in the "weapon triangle" system, he's on to something.
* In "Shirt Club", Sour Cream describes a shirt as "the coolest thing I've ever been hit in the head with".
* In Shizune's route, a little while after the previous line, Misha has a conversation with Hisao about Shizune:
* In "Shock And Awww", Michael and Lindsey mistake George-Michael's crush on his teacher as a desire for her to start dating Michael. Lindsey argues that George-Michael needs a mother figure in his life. Michael rebuffs her by saying "He's got you. He's got
* In "Shoo Ed", as the Eds are sitting around thinking of something to do, Ed randomly blurts out "I forgot to wear underwear, guys."
* In "Shooting Star", D.va can fly her mech perpetually, while in-game it can only fly for a few seconds. Inverted for D.Va's self-destruct ability: using it in the short nearly killed her (although perhaps that was the fall several hundred feet into the ocean), while in-game, she can use it at close ranges without taking any damage.
* In "Shopaholic," Fran discovers that her ex-fiancee Danny is getting married before her, and goes on an uncontrollable buying spree to deal with her feelings. After realizing she has a problem and going to "Shoppers' Anonymous," Maxwell tells everyone that they must avoid anything that might remind her of purchases and sales. Niles then enters with his dinner, and Max promptly tells him it's too much—"take half off." Later, just when it seems things will be OK, Val shows up to host a Tupperware party at the mansion.
* In Shornhelm, you can ask Skordo the Knife what he's doing in locked in a cage. He says sarcastically that he needed some quiet time.
* In short, Communist countries are in reality "No Promised Land" because the benefits may only be
* In short, if Harry's doing this, it's because a) he's sure he's going to be able to beat and/or kill you, or b) he's trying to get you to drop your guard.
* In short, Jay Leno's line at the top of the page is to be taken literally. In the older cars, the drivers and passengers
* In short, Lewis was less attached to either way of thought than to the idea that both should be used to serve good ends rather than bad ones.
* In short, rule one and three are barely considered loose guidelines. Rule 2 is obviously considered a bad thing, mostly because Vampires expect it to be done to them next. They're usually right.
* In Short Supply which states that since good leads to suffering, suffering is itself good and moral. Zimist Slarkism started as a counter-movement, which holds that because of the Virtuous' beliefs, the only true path to happiness is therefore to be as evil as possible. (And rather bizarrely, in modern times the Virtuous and Zimists actually get along better than with any of the Irkens' other religions.)
* In "Short Tall Tales", the sheer strength of the wind from a tornado causes "Pecos Billy" to have his face ripped clean off his skull.
* In short, the brain-mind relationship is yet to be fully understood, but while the brain as a chemical computer (and assorted limits) of course influences the mind and thus chemical imbalances cause distress, it's becoming apparent that the mind is powerful enough to force the brain into doing things as well, thus forcefully solving the chemical imbalances and hence the person becoming healthier.
* In short... the Homeworld side. From the moment of their creation, Gems consider the Diamond Authority to be their gods, and the thing their type of Gem is made for to be their only reason for existing. To a Gem, “good” is serving your Diamond’s will by doing the thing you exist to do to the best of your ability, and “evil” is... well, not doing that. If you’re not directly under a Diamond, you’re still serving under the Gem who is your rightful master according to the perfect order and will of the Diamonds. Gems openly talk about who they were “made for” or “belong to” without one trace of the way a human would hate to be spoken of as a piece of property or a thing that exists to be a means to an end. The Diamonds feel that it is their whole existence to be perfect leaders who perfectly enforce White Diamond’s perfect order. Meanwhile, White truly believes that she is a perfect being and is spreading that perfection to the universe. None of them, from top to bottom, are motivated by personal power or gain.

* In short, the moral of both movies is probably, "Don't take things that belong to someone else,
* In short, the Neanderthals are dwarves, while modern humans fit the role of elves.
* In short, there are four major characters in the series that represent each of the four ends of the axis. Lucifer (Chaos), YHVH (Law),
* In short, the works of Matt Groening regularly employ this trope for quick gags.
* In "Showdown at Red Gulch" the Robot Masters had Mega Man completely at their mercy after they knocked him out, but instead of finishing him off, they tied him to a horse and sent him off into the desert.
* In "Showdown of the Weekend 2018" there's a round where the questions consist of a list of three facts about each participating presenter, only one of which is true. When one such possible fact is "Ellen Rose once had a small dog thrown at her", Luke's first thought is that Ellen would have specified the breed.
* In "Showdown", Splinter defeats Xever/Fishface by duping him into chomping on his own tail.
* In "Show Me the Money", the vending machine where the unlucky nickel is has a donut-shaped raincloud hanging ominously over it, complete with heavy rain, thunder, and lightning. Olympia and Otis are forced to fight through it in order to retrieve the nickel.
* in show movie. And Joe Mantegna plays himself playing Fat Tony in the same movie, as well as playing Fat Tony on the actual show.
* in-show, religiously fanatical Estrogen Brigade derided as a "nymph-squad" by the President.
* In "Shriek", Batman tries a smoke bomb against Shriek, but Shriek blows the smoke away with a sonic blast just as Batman barely gets behind a counter.
* In "Shuffleboarding", SpongeBob and Patrick take Mermaid Man and Barnacle Boy's places at a shuffleboarding tournament and later start arresting everyone in Bikini Bottom for random
* In Siberia, the Blakiston's Fish Owl, as with other fishing owls, preys on fish it captures in rivers and streams. The Pel's preferentially starts with the head of the fish, and in times of plenty, an owl may eat only the head and abandon the rest of its meal.
* In "Sick as a Dog", Arthur has a nightmare about bad things happening to his dog Pal at the vet.
* inside a blender. Right before he switches the blender on, Yellow mutters in a low, resigned voice, "This is gonna hurt, isn't it, Red?"
* Inside a Computer System: Characters go inside a virtual world contained within a computer.
* Inside a Computer System, in which locations correspond to the real world).
* Inside Amy Schumer", about how she should remove her makeup because she doesn't need it to be beautiful. As soon as she does so, the boy band literally change their tune, singing about how they were wrong before and Amy should put her makeup back on.
* Inside Amy Schumer a commercial for an "app for your smartphone that lets you manage those clingy, fragile guys who think they're dating you".
* Inside Amy Schumer as the therapist and the mother mess around with an intercom (that the therapist had plenty of time to use).
* inside and she'll be alright. Or so you would think. In fact, Hans never loved Anna in the first place, only using her status as Princess to get into the Arendelle royal family so he could kill both sisters and usurp the throne, just so he could get some respect from his family. Anna realizes that it's Kristoff who is her true love, so Anna tries to find him for his kiss. But then once she finds that Hans is about to kill her sister, she abandons the chance and ended up intercepting Hans's blow to Elsa where her curse freezes her solid just as he is about to do so which saves Elsa from Hans' sword. This counts as "an act of true love", thus reversing the curse. Hey, nobody ever said it had to be a romantic act of true love!

* inside another jump point is so absurdly dangerous and explosive that it's referred to as "The Bonehead Manoeuvre". Sheridan manages to pull it off a couple of times, but nobody's happy about doing it.
* inside any lorica segmentata (Roman plate armor), decapitate you with a push and a pull and hack off limbs. One of the few weapons that actually changed Roman standard armor. There was also a shorter, one-handed version of the weapon as well.
* In Sideboard of Harmony, a Magic the Gathering and My Little Pony: Friendship is Magic crossover, Ditzy is a planeswalker and is yelling at another planeswalker who happens to be a unicorn at the time since her home plane, Ungula, doesn't allow humanoids. Ditzy calls him a "bonehead" for his stupidity just in time for Twilight to overhear and be outright shocked at Ditzy saying such a horrible thing. Ditzy quickly apologizes, saying she forgot the local context, she meant something else entirely, and that the pony she's yelling at isn't technically a unicorn to begin with.
* inside cleaning to eliminate that regrettable build-up of dust. Sluiced with lots of soapy water, the main computer shorts out, starts burbling classical French poetry, and crashes the entire vessel into the nearest moon.
* Inside Delta Force, the ex-Delta operator Hanley explains an incident from the training where he received a strike against him by the evaluating shrink for being "uncooperative." The reason? He refused to complete the portion of the psych eval which asked selectees to complete the phrase "I love my mother but..." When questioned about this, Hanley replied, "I love my mother. No buts. Don't project your issues onto me." The strike was removed and Hanley went on to pass selection.
* Inside Edition in March 1995 and continued to host it a good 20 years later.
* Inside has a section where you open a door, and 3 large barrels are on the opposite side. Because the floor is not level, you need to run away from the barrels and dive into a nearby pool of water. You cannot simply step out of the way, even though there's clearly enough room to do so.
* inside is actually apparently the same people he knows and have their own versions of a nightmare i.e. Dark Elesia for Ciel. Also, Len, who is making the dream. It's just a dream, but Shiki can't leave until Len dies (he doesn't want that) or he can make a contract with her so she doesn't feel the need to maintain the dream. In the original game, Shiki has dreams of himself killing people yet wakes up in the morning right where he was without having left his bed. Only the people he saw die are really dead. Even worse, the one time he doesn't remember his "dream" he wakes up with his hands and arms absolutely covered with blood, because he really did go out and kill people that night.
* Inside Job: A crime is committed or assisted by someone affiliated with the target.
* Inside Job: A crime, normally a robbery, committed by someone with license to enter restricted areas, etc.
* Inside Llewyn Davis for the concert shown at the beginning of the film.
* Inside Llewyn Davis lives a hand-to-mouth, semi-vagrant existence crashing on the couches of acquaintances and relatives, at least those that he has not completely antagonized yet.
* Inside Man, a chance comment a rookie cop makes to Denzel Washington's character allows him to figure out how exactly the hostage takers were able to stay ten steps ahead of the police.
* Inside Man and quite peeved with the police for violating his rights.
* Inside Man, Dalton Russel's opening monologue is phrased so that it sounds like his bank robbery failed and he is in jail. However, he warns the listener, "Pay strict attention to what I say because I choose my words carefully and I never repeat myself." And at the very end of the movie, we find out that Dalton has actually spent the last three days imprisoned inside the bank's inner walls as part of his scheme, and the scheme itself comes off perfectly.

* Inside Man has an interesting twist on this.In New York, masked robbers, dressed as painters and using variants of the name "Steve" as aliases, seize control of a Manhattan bank and take the patrons and employees hostage. They divide the hostages into groups and hold them in different rooms, forcing them to don painters clothes identical to their own. The robbers rotate the hostages among various rooms and occasionally insert themselves covertly into the groups. They also take turns working on an unspecified project involving demolishing the floor in one of the bank's storage rooms.
* Inside Man involves a heist masquerading as a hostage situation. The protagonist is the police hostage investigator, but the film spends as much time watching the heist play out inside the bank.
* Inside Man, one of the hostages taken by the bank robbers and shuffled between rooms is a pregnant woman.
* Inside Man one of the hostages tries to hide his phone from the bank robbers and starts crying when he thinks they're about to kill him.
* Inside Man Russel even lampshades this by saying that Fraizer is "too smart to be a cop".
* Inside Man: The bank robbers disable the security cameras inside the bank by firing lasers at them to overload the digital recording chips.
* Inside Man, the point of the bank job was to expose war crimes committed by one of the bank's account holders. And the money. But they very explicitly only stole from the war criminal, not touching a dime of the bank's money.
* Inside Man. This is especially notable because the bank robbers are spending the entire movie making sure no one dies and that everyone thinks the hostages are in danger. This is a central part of the robbers' plan since if Everybody Lives and nothing seems to be stolen from the bank, the police are unlikely to expend significant resources pursuing them in the aftermath.
* Inside Mari he cut his hair and shaved his beard. It ended up making him look considerably younger.
* Inside No. 9 episode "Bernie Clifton's Dressing Room", Tommy, an internet millionaire who was half of a comedy team in another life, reluctantly reunites with his partner Len for a limited engagement show. During rehearsals more of their issues surface. At the end, Len's daughter enters and it's revealed that Tommy was musing to himself while preparing to deliver Len's eulogy.
* Inside No. 9 episode "Love's Great Adventure", a character is mentioned to have sued a restaurant for serving olives that weren't already pitted for him.
* Inside No. 9 episode "Nana's Party", based around a man playing a prank by hiding inside a papier-mache cake at his mother-in-law's birthday party. The audience is led to expect disaster with the cake, but it never happens ... until the trope comes into play when the elderly mother-in-law starts choking on a trick ice cube (although she survives.)
* Inside No. 9 episode "Nana's Party." When elderly Nana begins choking at her birthday party, her daughter Angela screams for someone to call an ambulance - and a paramedic shows up at the door moments later. Everyone's confused, because they hadn't had time to make the call yet, but it turns out he's a stripper who was hired for the party as a prank.
* Inside No. 9 episode "Once Removed", Hugo tries to push a sale in front of a client by faking a call about a rival offer on the house, only for the phone to actually ring when his mother calls to ask what he wants for dinner.
* Inside No. 9 episode "Sardines", the family plays a game called "sardines" which is essentially everyone is hiding in a huge wardrobe.
* Inside No. 9 episode "Tom and Gerri", Gerri is an actress who's been unemployed for several months and owes her boyfriend a lot of money (which causes tension between them.) She's reduced to auditioning for the part of "D-Day Doris" in a play touring retirement homes because she can't find any other work.

* Inside No. 9, features demonic possession as a primary plot element.
* Inside No. 9, Frank's wife Barbara was very overweight and felt a lot of self-consciousness and self-loathing about it. Even though Frank loved her just as she was, he wished for her to be thin so she would be happier. She ended up getting her wish...by dying of cancer, which caused her to fade away to a skeleton before dying.
* Inside No. 9. He looked like he was about to kill the removal man as well when May and her screwdriver intervened.
* Inside No. 9: In "A Quiet Night In", the burglars lure the the house owner to the front door so they can sneak in through the back door.
* Inside No. 9 is a vampire, because he's insistent about not crossing the bridge even when it would be the fastest way to catch a criminal.
* Inside No. 9, the protagonist suffers from apparent nightmares featuring a man in a raincoat, who seems to be trying to kidnap her son.
* Inside No.9 writers Steve Pemberton and Reece Shearsmith (who played The Doctor and The Capitano characters respectively) discussed the Commedia dell'Arte genre in more detail in their podcast "Inside Inside No.9", explaining how it inspired comedies such as Fawlty Towers.
* inside of to get away from the giant Lumpy. Naturally, the pepper causes Cuddles to sneeze, giving himself away and leading to Lumpy killing him.
* Inside Out advertise her nightmares like schlocky B-movies, only with titles like "Dad's Driving Scares Me" and "Grandma's Vacuum."
* Inside Out and afterwards went back to doing low-profile short films.
* Inside Out and puts him on speakerphone where you are treated to a story where he once visited Pixar as well as his own account on the making of the film.
* Inside Out, Anger blames San Francisco for ruining pizza, followed by the Hawaiians, even though Hawaiian pizza is Canadian.
* Inside Out) are running and screaming in a blind panic while a siren blares, "GIRL! GIRL! GIRL!"
* Inside Out are this at the end, in a sweet way: they show up to her first hockey game in San Francisco complete with jerseys, foam fingers, and face paint, cheering loudly for her even before she gets on to the ice.
* Inside Out at the end of the film, when Jill's emotions sigh happily when looking at Bill, who had them both wear face paint for Riley's hockey match.
* Inside Out: At the end of the movie, Riley bumps into a boy on her way into the hockey rink. The boy is unable to speak, and his emotions are in a blind panic (Fear is actually in the fetal position, crying), while an alarm blares "Girl! Girl!" inside his head.
* Inside Out, being personifications of Riley's emotions, are Joy, Sadness, Fear, Anger and Disgust.
* Inside Out by Maria V Snyder, the population is divided into two castes, the Uppers and the scrubs. Scrubs are encouraged to have as many children as possible and are denied birth control. Men and children who break the rules are executed, but fertile women who commit infractions become "breeders", kept chained down and constantly pregnant until their bodies give out from the strain. Uppers, on the other hand, are allowed one child per couple. If there's an accident with their birth control, the extra child is dyed to look like the scrubs' ethnicity and given to a scrub foster mother. The overlords use this to foster class division, telling the scrubs that the Uppers are spoiled rotten and telling the Uppers that the scrubs are too lazy and selfish to use birth control despite their overpopulation.
* Inside Out caused the characters to turn into 2D figures with increasingly less defined shapes.
* Inside Out covers 3 days in which big changes occurred in Riley's psyche.
* Inside Out: Disgust takes on this role, as part of her job is to set high standards for Riley.
* Inside Out, during a tryout for the local hockey team, Riley is off her game and proceeds to fumble her puck handling, then fan on a slap shot, falling on her face in the process. Furious, she storms off the ice and demands to go home.
* Inside Out ending the day like this." She then replaces the dream with a happy memory of Riley and her family ice skating back home in Minnesota, allowing her to sleep peacefully.

* Inside Out: From Fear when the dog in Riley's dream breaks apart (which was actually Joy and Sadness in a two-part costume).
* Inside Out has Sadness do this to reach Riley's subconscious. She sneaks behind the guards at the entrance with Joy in tow, rattles the door to draw their attention and immediately surrenders. The guards, mistaking them for escapees, promptly throw them inside.
* Inside Out has something different about its color scheme compared to the surrounding ones.
* Inside Out has this for the clown that gave Riley her fear of them. In the credits we hear his emotions talking about how he spent six years in acting school to be a birthday clown.
* Inside Out includes this in its discourse on the relation between a human and their (living) emotions. On one hand, when a human is awake, their emotions do have great control over memories and general emotional responses to certain things. However, when Riley visits her own Headquarters and asks about how much they control her reactions, the emotions say they only provide the general mood to react with. It's Riley who chooses how to move those moods into action.
* Inside Out: In Imagination Land, Joy, Sadness, and Bing Bong meet Riley's imaginary boyfriend. When Bing Bong, confused, mentions that he's never heard of him before, the boyfriend tells them that he lives in Canada.
* Inside Out. Inside Riley's mind, after Joy and Sadness control together for the first time, the two hug by resting on each other's heads.
* Inside Out involves Riley tearfully confessing to her parents that she misses their former home in Minnesota, who go on to comfort her by revealing that they also miss their old home and she's not alone in feeling that way.
* Inside Out is an elephant/cat hybrid made of cotton candy and can squeal like a dolphin.
* Inside Out is a philosophical and psychological comedy/drama/coming-of-age/slice of life/road movie/buddy movie/adventure/fantasy. Which elements are in play shift whether the film is focused on the human characters or the cast of emotions within their minds.
* Inside Out is one of Riley as a toddler running away from her father after a bath with underwear on her head and then dancing naked on top of a couch.
* Inside Out is such that she prevents Sadness from doing her job, even drawing a chalk circle and ordering her not to step outside of it.
* Inside Out is that a jingle from a chewing gum commercial is a recurring one of these for Riley. This is shown as being the result of two "mind workers" pranking Riley's emotions by sending a memory of the jingle up to Headquarters, causing Riley to hum it to herself and making Anger even angrier. Even Joy has gotten fed up with it.
* Inside Out is the only character in the film whose five emotions are shown to be of different genders, two male and three female. Every other character has emotions corresponding to their gender, which has caused fans to view Riley as genderfluid or non-binary, and just hasn't discovered that about herself yet. The name "Riley" being rather androgynous helps a fair bit.
* Inside Out is this, being the very embodiment of happiness and energy. Even the way she moves around is very flighty and energetic, full of prancing, twirling, and dancing.
* Inside Out is used in the flashback of Riley crying over dropping her ice cream.
* Inside Out. It's not very effective, given that Jordan is kind of a space cadet. Then the two end up bonding over their shared love of classic rock music.
* Inside Out, Jangles the Clown doesn't seem to realize he's wreaking havoc on the Dream Studio — he just believes there's a birthday party going on and wants in on it!
* Inside Out: Jordan, for Riley. The alarm that goes off on his head shows that he is shy around her, but because it's a repetition of "GIRL!", it's unclear if this means he has a crush on her or is nervous of girls in general. In the sequel short "Riley's First Date?", the two hang out together, but it's never confirmed if this is her first date (hence the question mark in the title).

* Inside Out, Joy and Sadness focus on waking Riley up while Fear is on dream duty, but the other emotions have no idea that they doing this to get back to headquarters and Anger and Disgust chastise Fear for waking Riley up during a nightmare. Anger comes up with a plan to make Riley run away.
* Inside Out: Joy does a squee when Sadness tells her that she knows the way through the cavernous halls of Long Term Memory.
* Inside Out: Joy gives the other emotions jobs to do for Riley's first day at school. Sadness' job is to stand inside a "circle of sadness" to keep Riley from being sad.
* Inside Out Joy tries to find Sadness so she can apologize and get the both of them back to Headquarters. She finds Sadness in Imagination Land, riding around on a rain cloud and feeling miserable and useless.
* Inside Out - made its world premiere). It took until December 23rd for Starz Kids to bring it back into daily rotation.
* Inside Out - "manó" is quite a general term in Hungarian for a small magical being).
* Inside Out. Many people who've seen the movie find him adorable and wish that they had an imaginary friend like him when they were younger.
* Inside Out: Needing to reach the train of thought, Bing Bong takes Joy and Sadness to a shortcut passing through the abstract thought chamber, ignoring the "DANGER" sign and warnings by Sadness of what lies within. As the chamber seems to extend infinitely, Joy goes with Bing Bong's plan, only for the mind workers to trigger the chamber. By the time they get out, they have missed the train.
* Inside Out: one with Disgust, Fear and Sadness who came to greet her in Dream Productions and two with the whole gang in Headquarters. First when she impersonates Joy, then after naming Possibility Island, just before the lucid dream breaks.
* Inside Out opens with the main human character, Riley, as a baby and then shows a few scenes of her life growing up before reaching the main events of the film, in which Riley is a pre-teen girl who has just moved to a new town.
* Inside Out originally wore a light yellow dress, but it was changed to lime green late in production. The majority of the film's merchandise still has her in the yellow dress.
* Inside Out personality, large glasses, and her short stocky appearance in general.
* Inside Out. Pops up a few other times throughout the movie as well, but this is by far the most obvious one.
* Inside Out, Riley meets a boy her age, who goes nearly catatonic on her. Inside his head, his emotions are running around like headless chickens, while a Red Alert klaxon blares, "Girl! Girl! Girl!"
* Inside Out. Riley's depression is a legitimate concern and is played as serious as expected and a result of being them being totally out of their element. But much of the humor comes from them being so over-the-top that it's funny. To whit, news of no dessert is treated as front page headline news and Riley's father's decision to put his foot down with regards to her attitude is treated as if they were launching nuclear missiles complete with simultaneously turning two keys to initiate the response.
* Inside Out, Riley's "Goofball Island" was established when she was running around after a bath as a toddler wearing only a pair of underwear, which was on her head.
* Inside Out: Riley. She goes through a two-day mood swing when she moves house, but is generally an optimist. When she is happy she sometimes does silly dances, slides down banisters and makes monkey noises. Also, thanks to Joy, most of her memories are happy or part-happy.
* Inside Out, Riley's Mom tells her that her father would never embarrass her in front of her friend, just before AC/DC plays loudly downstairs.
* Inside Out, Riley thinks she's just dreaming when she hears five little voices from inside her head. Then the voices are still there the next morning...

* Inside Out, Sadness briefly does this when she and the other emotions get frozen in Headquarters upon Riley getting a brain freeze.
* Inside Out, Sadness lies on the floor whenever she's being particularly mopey.
* Inside Out, she cries into her father's chest when they pull her in for a group hug.
* Inside Out. She spends most of the movie frowning, moping, crying, and sometimes making sarcastic remarks. But the one or two occasions when she does smile...
* Inside Out's promotional material as he plays a key role in the movie's plot.
* Inside Out. That being said, fans have taken to including Jangles the Clown, a being locked in the girl’s subconscious, as the film's villain, but he does not directly oppose the Emotions throughout the film and only has a single scene.
* Inside Out that plushies of him became one of the hard-to-find Christmas toys of 2015, selling for double the retail price; essentially, Bing Bong became the new Olaf.
* Inside Out that said it was the number one family film in America played every break.
* Inside Out, the emotions are shown residing in the heads of several minor characters in the real world.
* Inside Out, the emotions insert lightbulbs into the Console to give Riley ideas.
* Inside Out: the film is about learning to openly express and understand your emotions, while Chinese culture expects people to keep a "stiff upper lip" and deal with their feelings privately.
* Inside Out, the humans have normal names like Riley and Jill, while the mind creatures have names related to their job, like Fear and Sadness. The imaginary friend is named Bing Bong.
* Inside Out. Then when Joy and Bing Bong are both in the Memory Dump, Joy looks back on some of Riley's happier memories. One of them features a younger Riley being tickled by her dad.
* Inside Out, there is no mention of the lasting effects of parts of Long Term Memory crumbling and of Sadness "corrupting" some of the memories stored there that were once a different emotion. Especially notable because the movie does show that the Islands of Personality were eventually repaired/replaced/expanded after initially collapsing earlier in the film.
* Inside Out, the support staff of Riley's mind, which handle all the maintenance, are thoroughly unhelpful. They stick to their jobs even as the islands crumble, and serve as impediments to Joy and Sadness on several occasions.
* Inside Out, the two guards who guard Riley's subconscious get in an argument when one thinks the other took his hat. The problem is, rather than writing their name inside their own hat, both of them wrote "my hat" instead.
* Inside Out, this is how Joy views Anger, Fear and Disgust. While she considers herself the most important emotion and feels that things are going well when she makes up the majority of Riley's day, she understands and respects that Anger, Fear and Disgust, while "negative" emotions, exist to protect Riley from the various dangers in her life. The driving source of conflict in the movie is that nobody has any idea what Sadness is for other than making Riley miserable, causing Joy to do everything she can to marginalize her and limit her involvement in Riley's life, with disastrous results.
* Inside Out This was cut after the author saw the movie and realized that Dream Productions doesn't work like that.
* Inside Out throughout the movie is learning that Sadness, Fear, Anger, and Disgust have an important purpose in Riley's life.
* Inside Out treats all human beings (and animals, during the credits) as Genius Loci, though more in terms of the mind than the physical body. Riley is the Genius Loci who gets the film's primary focus.
* Inside Out use of this, using the split diopter effect (where two specific points in a scene are in focus, done in real life with two separate cameras) and even using different camera lens effects for different characters (using a spherical lens when focusing on Woody and an anamorphic lens when focused on Bo Peep). In other words, the movie looks so good because it imposes graphical limitations on itself.

* Inside Out version. She's not hated by the other emotions, they just don't know what role she plays in Riley's emotions, since she tends to make her happy moments turn sad. The only emotion that actively keeps her away is Joy.
* Inside Out was dedicated to Brian Smits, the software engineer at Pixar.
* Inside Out was filmed in 1991 and had several stories based in the future, including:
* Inside Out, we find out that Riley's teacher is apparently involved with him now.
* Inside Out, when Anger plants the idea for Riley to run away back to Minnesota, Fear questions how they'll travel.
* Inside Out, when during Riley's first day of school, she notices some popular girls nearby, and Joy is eager to make friends with them.
* Inside Out: When Joy and Sadness are catapulted back to Headquarters, they are tossed against the window, remaining there for two seconds before slowly sliding down.
* Inside Out, when presented with a memory retrieval chute that can instantly return her to Headquarters, Joy abandons Sadness rather than risk her corrupting the core memories by proximity, and because "Riley needs to be happy". This act of betrayal directly leads to Joy being plunged into the memory dump when the memory chute is damaged.
* Inside Out, when Riley arrives at the new place in San Francisco, Joy wants to calm everybody down but her soothing tactics are immediately torpedoed by reality.
* Inside Out. When Riley runs away, Family Island starts collapsing in her mind world. The collateral damage it causes to long term memory leads to Joy and Bing Bong falling into the memory dump while Sadness futilely reaches out to help them.
* Inside Out, which had a movie adaptation come out two months earlier.
* Inside Out while lucid dreaming. Though she's technically dreaming, she is able to access all parts of her mind, rather than just the part where her dreams take place. Because of this, her actions can affect her even after she wakes up.
* Inside Out, who are in charge of the decisions she makes, serving as the main characters. Most other mental concepts are depicted as places, such as the Halls of Long-Term Memory, Imagination Land, and the Train of Thought. It is shown through brief asides into other characters' heads that everyone's mind works this way.
* Inside Out, who is famous for his "angry yelling" comedy persona. Black also wears the same clothes for his stand-up act and often uses stories from newspapers as fodder for jokes. This is all very deliberate—during the first pitch meeting of the movie, the writers, perhaps jokingly, told the studio heads to imagine getting different people to voice the emotions, specifically remarking "We could get Lewis Black to play Anger!" Sure enough, that's exactly what happened.
* Inside Out) with the lyrics changed to be about Bing Bong, which might have caused some younger generations to associate the (actual) song with him.
* inside Peter's body trying to kill all of his sperm before he can have sex and give Stewie another sibling, and blasts his duodenum in an attempt to stall for time. Peter shouts "Oh geeze my duodenum's acting up!" and rushes into the bathroom.
* Inside Pulse forum members are usually referred to as "Insyders" when they're referenced on the main site. Member Cash Kerouac objected to this, feeling it silly and jargonish; thus, he's usually referred to as an "Outsyder."
* inside Reaper capital ships for processing, and then set off their payloads.
* Insider trading itself is a complicated (yet oddly simple) crime: if you trade on a stock
* In "Sideshow Bob Roberts", during Sideshow Bob's campaign for Mayor, Bart has this reaction to Bob's suggestion that "Councilman Les Whinen should do more thinking and less whinin'!" despite knowing that Les Whinen doesn't exist.
* In "Sideshow Bob Roberts", Lisa and Bart get Sideshow Bob to confess to rigging an election by suggesting that he wouldn't be smart enough to do it on his own.
* In "Sideshow Bob Roberts", Lisa argues with Homer when he tunes his car radio to a
* In "Sideshow Bob's Last Gleaming", Sideshow Bob manages to hide behind a sculpture of jet planes in flight that conveniently resembles his silhouette.

* In "Sideshow Bob's Last Gleaming", Sideshow Bob tries to make an escape in the Wright Brothers' plane. Jets are sent after him, but are physically incapable of flying slow enough to not zoom right past him. The pilots then try to walk after him with nets.
* Inside Straight series, features a rare heroic version of this trope, one Jonathan Hive. He appears utterly human until he disperses into a cloud of bright green wasplike motes; he can also detach as few as one at a time, and even tends to have a few wandering about misplaced.
* Inside the blast zone, the messy burnt bits are smaller and harder to notice.
* Inside the city itself, a healthy amount of the action takes place in or around Westinghall Plaza.
* Inside, the Fierce Pork Trooper immediately sees (or rather smells) through the disguise, but decides not to do anything about you and enjoy the show.
* inside the game world, experiencing it with their character's own senses instead of being at home with a headset and game pad. Naturally, they become deeply concerned about what's going on with their physical bodies, and what happens if their characters are "killed" in this state.
* Inside the orbit of Venus, you'd bake to death fairly quickly — but still not instantaneously, mind you. Even at Mercury's closest solar approach, equatorial surface temperatures top out around 700 Kelvin (~800°F, or 426°C) — this is only a third the temperature of your typical charcoal fire, and almost twice as hot as your average kitchen oven's highest temperature. Like putting your hand on a grill, it'd be harmful but survivable for brief exposures.
* Inside the parks, Mickey's Toontown at Disneyland is considered where Mickey and co. actually live. You can walk through Mickey's house, etc. (And presumably that's where he retires to when the park closes down for the night.) Walt Disney World had a similar area for many years, and to avoid a
* Inside the realm of the dub, Hikaru is given this as an additional character trait in
* inside the shell as well, as basically it was a big spherical shaped space station.
* Inside the stable in Redpine Town, is a weed grow operation, of a sort. By completing the stable's puzzle, a chest holding the Peace Badge, 4 herbs, and 20 herbs, appears.
* Inside to giving birth. While she does a serious number on her attacker, it wasn't enough since Sarah still gets killed at the end.
* In "Sidetracked", Perry has to work with agent Lyla Lollibery of COWCA (The Canadian Organization Without a Cool Acronym) to stop one of Doof's schemes on a train that runs along the border between the United States and Canada, due to the fact that each organization only has jurisdiction on one side of the train.
* Inside UFO 54-40 can't actually be reached from any option in the book.
* Inside UFO 54-40 series of books, as well as the current page image.
* inside Vicky's body so he can write a report on the body's cells, Timmy complains that he now has to write a report on "the wonders of the big universe". Cosmo and Wanda immediately extrapolate his previous wish and turn him into a planet-sized giant, prompting Timmy to complain that "you guys take everything too literal".
* Inside Washington, DC, what police department is responsible for a crime depends on location, time of day, the phase of the moon, and the condition of the president's dog. There is the DC police, there's the Secret Service, Capitol Police, FBI Police (really), Smithsonian police, National Cathedral police, various college police forces, and way too many Federal agencies trying to secure their own various headquarters...here's a handy
* Inside Woman the director of the company you're infiltrating has six physically identical female assassins in his employ. All with special abilities and codenames.
* Inside Woody Allen, a daily newspaper comic strip starring the film director.
* Inside Woody Allen: One strip features a store which runs on this trope. Suitcases are shaped like hearts, spades, clubs and diamonds; hand mirrors have a thumb and four fingers, etc. When Woody says he'd like to complain to the manager because it's "too literal" the clerk points to a door labeled "Head Office" which is shaped like a person's head.

* Insidious: Chapter 3 is set before the events of the first film, showing what Elise, Specs, and Tucker were up to before they become involved with the Lamberts.
* Insidious has one of these. Pity the characters never thought of looking at the pictures as a clue sooner.
* Insidious has the family fleeing one of these mid movie only to discover that the ghost are after their son rather than simply haunting the house.
* Insidious is a shrieking horde of violins, intentionally evoking the connotations of this trope.
* Insidious. It also helps that horror films in the 2010's were more diverse than what they had been in any previous decade.
* Insidious of him standing in the corner of another room as the camera tracks quickly past.
* Insidious One - Эскапист is specifically about escapism and fleeing into a better world of fantasy.
* Insidious, the entire "Tiptoe Through the Tulips" sequence comes out of nowhere on a well-lit afternoon.
* In Sigma's route, when Sigma looks down at his hand and sees it's bleeding white blood.
* In Sign, Balmung only appears in one episode, but rushes in to distract the Phase monster so that Subaru and company can escape.
* Insignia Rip-Off Ritual: A character being disgraced or demoted has the insignia on their uniform ripped off.
* Insignia Ripoff Ritual: To show a character being disgraced or demoted, the insignia on their uniform is ripped off.
* Insignificant 2019 has you playing as a person only three inches in height.
* insignificant and even trained one of them, encouraging him to surpass him.
* Insignificant Little Blue Planet: Earth depicted as boring and/or useless.
* Insignificant Little Blue Planet: Earth is regarded as unimportant in the grand scheme of things.
* In "Silence," assistant director Eldon Burke can be seen polishing the Torino. He later appears in "The Action" as a gambler and in "Photo Finish" as a patrolman.
* In Silence that will kill them if they don't either fix their car and drive away, or open up the armory and kill it.
* In "Silent Night," Marlee Matlin played a deaf mother whose deaf daughter was murdered by the girl's deaf boyfriend (played by Russell Harvard, who is also deaf).
* In "Silent Treatment", the girls do this to try to reach a phone. In this case, they had to since they were unable to fly.
* In Silver Chaos, Adonis and Might have to die in order to be together, then reincarnate and lose the memory of each other. A small déja vu will be left, though.
* In Silver's story, Silver is a native of the aforementioned bad future; he travels to the past (i.e. Sonic's time) intending to kill the "Iblis trigger" and prevent Armageddon. However, he thought that
* In "Silver War" some crack is made about Paris Hilton, both the heiress and the hotel — and the logical innocent innuendo follows... until Ziva
* In Sim Brother Network's "Sim Big Brother USA", Maya. Week 2, she gets in a huge physical fight with Shantel and becomes disliked. Only reason people voted to evict Shantel over her? Because Maya would make drama. However, Alex and Nicola became the new antagonists as they broke Duncan's Heart and rubbed it in his face after a night of drinking. When Duncan was near the
* In "Simian Says" (as well as the comic book story "See You Later, Narrator"), Mojo Jojo kidnapped the narrator and took his place, which causes everyone to do what he tells them until they get suspicious. The girls rescue the narrator
* In similar circumstances, Britain repurposed surplus lorries to mount the then-standard 2-pounder anti-tank gun, which had proven too fragile on its own carriage to stand being towed off-road in North Africa. The

* In similarly cathartic fashion. The scene ends in the middle of a shot of the dancing, and with the music continuing over the credits, implying that though our time with the characters has ended, this joyous dancing is going to go on without us.
* INS (Immigration and Naturalization Service) Division 6, one of J's cover stories in
* In Simon Morden's "Theories of Flight", the A.I. Michel declares his love for Petrovitch after finally comprehending the meaning of love. Too bad the man was already married. Still, rather cute how Michel always calls Petrovitch by his real name: Sasha.
* In "Simon Says", Concorde Robotics designed the Neural Archiving Project (NAP) as to a way to copy a person's memory engrams and transfer them into a robot. Although the company eventually abandoned NAP, Gideon Banks never lost interest in it and eventually used it to install his late son Simon's memories in a robotic body.
* In "Simon Says", the robot Simon has a partially constructed skeletal frame.
* In "Simple Simpson", no-one believes Homer can be Pie Man even after he reveals himself, having built him up into an urban legend. Subverted when Marge says she has always known Homer was Pie Man, Homer asks if it was the kiss that filled her in, but Marge replies she knew because it was obviously him in the costume and you'd have it be an idiot not to see that.
* In "Simpson and Delilah", the Springfield nuclear power plant has a highly coveted key to the executive washroom (just saying it's a fancy bathroom wouldn't do it justice). It's awarded to only the highest executives in the plant's hierarchy and it's so legendary that someone can just say "the key" and everyone will know what they're talking about. Homer briefly has access to it after a promotion.
* In "Simpson and Delilah", when Homer tried to buy a hair regrowth serum, but can't because it's way out of his price range. This upsets him:
* In "Simpsoncalifragilisticexpiala(Annoyed Grunt)cious", Krusty once tries to make a comedy show called "Krusty's Komedy Klassic". Not only did he spell "comedy" and "classic" wrong, the initials ended up being
* In "Simpsons Bible Stories", Bart (King David) trains with a flock of sheep in preparation for his battle with Nelson (Goliath II). "Bart the General" features a
* In "Simpsons Bible Stories", when the Simpsons sleep through church and wake up to find that the Armageddon has begun:
* In "Simpsons Guy", Peter and Homer's fist fight takes place across numerous iconic
* In "Simpsons Roasting on an Open Fire," Bart asks his parents for a tattoo for Christmas and Marge said no. Later, Bart gets a tattoo with "MOTHER" written on a heart, hoping it would flatter her. (It didn't, logically.)
* In "Simpsons Roasting on an Open Fire", Homer finds out that Mr. Burns won't be giving any Christmas bonuses, and he mutters "Thank God for the big jar [of money]". The scene then cuts to Marge being forced to spend all the money to get Bart's tattoo removed, and the mutters "Thank God for Homer's Christmas bonus."
* In "Simpsons Tall Tales," the episode starts with the family at the airport celebrating having won a trip to Delaware. When Homer notices additional fees tacked on to their plane tickets, he tells the ticket agent to waive the fees, when she doesn't, he shakes his fists in her face.
* In "Simpson Tall Tales", the episode's take on the legend of Paul Bunyan shows Paul (Homer) and his ox Babe
* In "Simpson Tide", Bart sings a short ditty of his 90s song "Do the Bartman" - even Ralph Wiggum comments "That is so 1991!"
* In "Simpson Tide" where all the guys join the Navy and their sub is filling up with water, their thoughts go to their loved ones and in Moe's thought balloon he's stroking his kitty and talking baby talk to it before angrily turning to the audience shouting, "What are YOU lookin' at!?"
* In "Simpsorama", after Homer, Marge, Bart, and Lisa end up in New New York in the 31st century, the plot cuts back to Bender in 21st Century Springfield with Maggie with the caption, "Meanwhile in the past (or if you're a Simpsons fan, the present)".

* In Singapore, nudity is a no-no for most movies. For example, the 2010 documentary
* In single-sex schools this can be the case. In an all-boys school, the women's room is often only used by teachers and is much cleaner. In an all-girls school, men's rooms are often just one toilet versus the normal-sized ladies room.
* In "Singularity", the Fifth Doctor mentions that World War V was fought in the 49th century.
* In "Singularity", Trip jokingly gives the line while scanning Captain Archer because he's building a custom-made Captain's Chair.
* In Sinnoh, Dawn's own catchphrase ("No need to worry!") was sometimes said to her as well.
* In "Sins of the Father", Worf's Klingon brother Kurn tells the crew "I shall try some of your burned replicated bird meat." Klingons are a species that
* In Sir August's underground lair, Mrs. Peel goes to disarm the weather control device while Steed seeks out and fights Sir August.
* In "Sir Ed-A-Lot", the Eds get pulled into playing servants to self-proclaimed Queen Sarah, and a tea party is just one of the embarrassing activities involved.
* insisted it was, it didn't matter that there was a funeral, and it didn't matter that the characters had moved on. Harras was the boss, and his word was law.
* insisted that everything was under control and there was no need to evacuate the town.
* Insistent Appellation: Someone insists on calling another character something different from what they want to be called.
* Insistent Terminology as "Sports Entertainment", it starts slipping into this territory. Especially if it's blatant enough to get The Universe(fans) to start booing about it.
* Insistent Terminology. In a similar vein, Daniel Boone once said, "I can't say as ever I was lost, but I was bewildered once for three days."
* Insistent Terminology: Someone insists on something being called X, not Y.
* Insistent Terminology: Someone insists on using a specific word to refer to something.
* Insistent Terminology, though there is very little difference between them.
* In "Sister Act", Lana and Lola start pretending to be the other in instances where one twin wants to get out of something she wouldn't like but the other one enjoys (such as Lana
* In sister comic "The Legend of Anne Bunny", Anne looks for her shipmate in a brothel. The first time she peeks into the wrong room, she slams the door and thinks, "I didn't know you could do that outside of space!"
* In "Sister III," Pandora, who has been attempting to create this situation for years, finally succeeds. It had previously been revealed that when this happens the "Will of Magic" must decide whether or not to reset everything so the rules are once again unknown to the vast majority and everyone has to start learning magic all over again. The Will of Magic bases its decision on whether or not to allow the world to remain unmasqued, on advice from extremely rare wizards called seers if any exist.
* In "Sister Planet" Venus is an ocean world with no landmasses. In a variation from the norm, it doesn't have a human-breathable atmosphere.
* Insisting that creators "give to fans" by doing things like conventions, DVD commentaries, and other things that indicate that they like the work as much as the fans do. Such fans may even insist that those creators think of those works as the highlight of their careers. The worst cases will demand that the creators craft the work specifically to their tastes and claim a right to do so because "they wouldn't be where they are without the fans".
* Insisting that creators tell the story that the fans want to hear. Or, to put it another way, failing to understand that most creators are successful by not giving fans what they ask for, but something they didn't even * insists in using the same technique over and over, initially not hitting his enemy, but eventually it does and he didn't change his technique, he's just doing it faster.

* insists makes the best lattes). The phrase "mortal fever" was bandied about.
* Insists on Being Suspected: The detective counts themselves as a suspect.
* Insists on Paying: A character who, even when offered a freebie, insists on using their money to pay for it.
* insists on staying at the Jamestown Base, instead of returning to Earth and leaving astronaut Ellen Wilson, the only surviving member of his relief team, alone up there. Knowing Ed is a navy pilot, Ellen successfully invokes this trope, as she is now the commander of Jamestown Base and has just relieved Ed of his duties.
* insists that one character was her counterpart, and a sudden dust cloud hides the character's replacement by Old West!Jade.
* insist to the hostess they have special permission from the owner as a personal friend to come in whenever they want without reservations to snap that she and her father are the co-owners of the restaurant, and throw them out on their rears.
* in situations where it is very dangerous. The fact that she couldn't even figure this out made her go past naïve and into straight-up stupid.
* In SI Units, all the base units were updated to provide a "fundamental" reference (for example, one second is defined in relation the frequency of radiation coming off a specific configuration of an atom, and a meter is defined as the distance light travels in relation to a (fraction) of a second). So those units could be accurately obtained somewhere off Earth.
* In "Six Minus Six" Agent Six loses six years of memory saving Rex from a machine that was going to delete Rex's instead (because Rex apparently goes crazy if he resets, and if that happens Six has to kill him). It was never fixed via
* In "Skateboard Rosie and the Soda Kids", Rosie distracts a pair of ferocious pit bulls long enough to get her brother behind a fence by yelling and then throwing a skateboard down an alley.
* In "Skiddley Whiffers", Dr. Doofenshmirtz claims "Fire is the leading cause of fire."
* In "Skiddley Whiffers", when Doofenshmirtz explains to Perry why he's trying to
* In "Skin Deep" Belle spends a couple of flashbacks wearing her gold ballgown when she is imprisoned in Rumplestiltskin's castle - even being implied to do a few chores in it. It's not until later that she changes into something more practical.
* In "Skin Deep", Sid Camden is a socially inept, lonely accountant with only one friend, his former co-worker Deb Clement. He believes that life has dealt him a bad hand. When he begins to use a
* In "Skinner's Sense of Snow", Bart forces Skinner to write "I ain't not a dorkus" (which Skinner calls "a grammatical nightmare"). Bart also shows
* In "Skinner's Sense of Snow", Principal Skinner plays a film, "The Christmas That Almost Wasn't Then Was", to pass the time with all of the students at school because there are no teachers (because it's a snow day, they faked an emergency meeting and are partying at a ski resort) and he absolutely
* In "Skin of Evil", Tasha's funeral speech was supposed to include an apologetic "Data, it
* In "Skipper", Rimmer travels to a parallel universe where the nuclear leak hasn't yet happened, and this trope is inverted, as Holly informs him "Nobody's dead" in much the same way that he did to Lister.
* In "Skits Behaves", Martha remembers wetting the rug a lot as a puppy.
* In "Skorpio", Archer and Lana have a moment in the middle of a shootout with arms dealers where Archer remarks on how amazing Lana's eyes are. He of course ruins it a second later by saying "I mean, not compared to your tits, but...", causing Lana to shoot him in the foot.
* In "Skrut" ("Скрут") by Maryna and Serhiy Dyachenko (in Russian) this is the main villain's backstory. The horrible spider monster used to be a knight who saved a little girl on a battlefield, and decided to raise her to become his wife. When she grew up she rejected him as a husband because she only could see him as a father. Betrayed by his beloved, the knight turned into a monster.

* In Skylands, the lads spend a lot of time falling off cliffs and screaming their heads off. Then at one point Smith screams yet again, and when the others ask if he died again, he replies, "No but I just jammed my knee into my desk!"
* In Skypeia, Luffy and crew bring down "God" Eneru and his followers, which also marks the reconciliation and end of a 400-year-war between the Skypeians and the Shandorians, who party together with the Straw Hats for days.
* In "Sky Police", Chief Wiggum is mistakenly delivered a jetpack intended for Brigadier General Clancy
* In "Skytanic", ISIS is called to come along on the inaugural voyage of a luxury airship due to a bomb threat. It's later revealed Mallory made the threat just to get a free ride and make her neighbor jealous. However it turns out that
* In "Slapsgiving", after Robin invites her new beau to Thanksgiving, Lilly remarks that the pictures will be "The three people I love most in the world... and Bob"
* In Slavic folklore, the process of "turning into a wolf" is sometimes interpreted very literally: one must turn around, or somersault, and land in a new shape. While holding onto a magic blade, stuck into a magic tree. If the blade is then removed by someone, the poor sorcerer-gymnast remains in the animal form. This would be the cursed variety — cursed by their own curiosity and lack of foresight. Evil sorcerers, on the other hand, usually keep track of the knife.
* In "Sleepless In Ponyville", Rainbow Dash saves Scootaloo from one of these.
* In "Sleepless in Ponyville," the Cutie Mark Crusaders go camping with Applejack, Rainbow Dash, and Rarity. Rainbow Dash tells some scary stories; the episode deals with Scootaloo's fear of them, but also how she wants to hide her fear in order to impress Rainbow Dash.
* In "Sleep Spells", when Marco tries to do an inkblot test on Star and asks her what she sees, she says "An inkblot! I win!"
* In "Sleep Trouble", Chuckie's father Chaz goes to the Pickles' resident to check on the babies and when he ends up covered in sand due to falling into the sandbox in the backyard, Tommy and Chuckie notice this and are convinced that the Sandyman is after them.
* In "Sleuth or Consequences", Lincoln gets ready to go to an Ace Savvy convention but is halted when Dad announces someone clogged the toilet last night. The clogger turns out to be Lucy attempting to flush a Princess Pony comic, but Lincoln decides to take the blame for it so she doesn't become a laughingstock, meaning he's grounded and cannot go to the convention, but Lucy makes it up to him by making him his own comic.
* In "Slice of Life", Dr. Whooves flails his hooves in the air when his "flameless fireworks" go off with
* In "Slides and Ladders", a lost Oswald begins checking various rooms in the hallways of the Mobile Unit van in order to find a way back to the bullpen. He enters the Cave Room, stating that "there's no harm in checking". A second later, the growl of a caveman is heard, and Oswald races back out with the caveman on his tail as he screams, "There's harm in checking!"
* In "Sliding Bobs", the kids wonder what would happen if Linda hadn't broken up with Hugo and started dating Bob because Bob didn't have his trademark mustache.
* In "Slink's Special Talent", Slink tries telling jokes as his talent. He gets the joke mixed up for a few minutes, then gives up when everyone else starts to get bored.
* In "Slipping", the victim is thought to have hung herself after going mad.
* In "Slow Love", Jake and Finn's tree-house gets dragged around by a giant snail. At one point it cuts to the bedroom, showing Finn's sword falling over and completely slicing through his bed.
* In "Slow March up a Steep Hill", Ward is talking to Erskine about Erskine's daughter's engagement. He uses the phrase 'king of the hill', and Erskine suddenly has an insight into the bank robbery he is investigating and abruptly leaves the room.
* In "Slow Your Roll", Opal and Orla perform a yodeling duet together in order to calm down a Madmelodia on the hunt for them. They get so into it that when Omar manages to unlock the door leading to the Mobile Unit van's Main Control Room, they stick around to perform a big finish before leaving.

* In "Slumber Party", Louise scares off Harley and Abby from the party by claiming that Gene has a feral, hunchbacked twin brother who communicates by farting, lives in the basement, and hates when people blink in his direction.
* In "slumber party", Strong Bad claims that at childhood slumber parties, Strong Sad was the much-ridiculed "kid who got picked up early 'cause he misses his mom", even when they were holding slumber parties in their own basement.
* In "Slumber Party", we never find out if Tommy is hallucinating or dreaming.
* In "Small Potatoes", a shapeshifter locks Mulder up and then shapeshifts to look like him, pretty much
* In "Small Potatoes" this is inverted. At first it looks like a woman has had sex with an alien. She has a child who has a tail and says that the child's father is from another planet. When Mulder and Scully investigate the case, they quickly learn that this woman is crazy about
* In "Small Worlds", we see Estelle, an old woman who tells Gwen about how she was in love with Jack's father decades before; turns out it was Jack, and the affection is still obviously there on his end despite his being, physically, several decades younger. His reaction to
* In "Smarty Pants", Timmy's head opens to get stuffed with books when he wishes he knew everything. Done again in "Emotion Commotion" when his wish to be emotionless causes his head to open and his emotions to fly out.
* In "Smile For the Ed" Eddy gets a week's detention for impersonating the principal, which Edd actually did (though Edd was trying to help).
* In "Smile Like You Mean It," the Bad Cop/Worse Cop game is played against a traitor on the force, with Bullock reprising his role as Bad Cop, and Gordon playing Worse Cop due to Barnes being long incapacitated since the last game of Bad Cop/Worse Cop. Bonus points for a hefty helping of
* In "Smoke on the Daughter", where Marge has Lisa enroll in a ballet class to make her live out Marge's own failed dream of becoming a ballet dancer. This is particularly
* In snack vending machines, the snack fails to be dispensed properly, just barely hanging off of the shelf that holds it.
* In "Snail Mail", when the plane is about to hit the ground, it stops in mid-air because SpongeBob discovers the plane ran out of gas. When Patrick refuels the tank, the plane hits the ground.
* In Snake Eater, Big Boss and EVA behind the waterfall, "It's alright Snake. From now on, I'll be your eyes." Not to mention every conversation involving The Boss or
* In "Snake Eyes", the profile indicated that they were looking for a gambler . . . in
* In "Snap Judgement", the 4077 suffers from elusive thieves and a Polaroid camera goes missing. Continuing in "Snappier Judgment," Klinger, who bought the camera back from black market peddlers, because he couldn't explain possessing it or why he delayed reporting it stolen, is arrested by military police and court-martialed for the theft instead. Winchester volunteers to be his legal counsel, while Hawkeye and BJ set out to catch the culprit. Because of Winchester's ineptitude in law and the unfortunate circumstances, Klinger is just about to be convicted when the real thief is brought into the court, absolving Klinger of the charges.
* In "Snap Judgment" and "Snappier Judgment", another rash of thefts includes Hawkeye's new Polaroid camera. Klinger finds the camera on the
* In "Snap Judgment", Klinger goes to the black market (called "Little Chicago" in this episode) to try and find Hawkeye and BJ's stolen camera. He succeeds and buys it back, but gets stopped by MP's and charged with the theft.
* In "Sneak Peek", Terry covers his little brother Matt's eyes when the news starts showing Paxton Powers cavorting with a woman at a party.
* In "Snooze You Lose", an insomniac Squidward goes for a walk and sees a billboard advertising beds, a homeless man sleeping on a bench, worm puppies sleeping in the window display of a pet shop, and a television showing
* In "Snowball Effect", Patrick attempts to make a simple snowball. Instead, he manages to make a snow cube, a snow pyramid, and a snow double-helix.

* In "Snowball Effect", SpongeBob whistles innocently after hitting Patrick with a snowball, and it actually fools Patrick (though Patrick isn't too bright anyway).
* In Snowdin, Papyrus ends up black and smoky after getting shocked by his own electric maze trap.
* In "Snow Way Out", the Loud kids eat three burgers each to try to find a winning ticket, and after their third burger, they all look groggy. They perk up pretty quickly, though.
* In "Snow White Blood Red" the killer is a mob assassin and is caught, but it remains unclear if the gangster he's taking orders from will be convicted.
* In soccer, an own goal typically happens in multi-player melees near the goal, when a defender tries to tackle an offensive player, or make a pass back to his own side, and accidentally knocks the ball into the net. It's also regarded as an own goal if a shot bounces off a defender into the goal, or if a defender or goal keeper manages to touch a shot but fails to stop it before it goes into the goal.
* In soccer certain teams are traditionally known for a style one could sum up as
* In soccer/football this is often called "diving" - though diving is often used as a more specific term for falling over and pretending to have been fouled without any contact from the opposition player whatsoever. If the referee concludes that this trope has been invoked, he/she is authorized to punish the one who pulled it. However,
* In social situations there is a strategy involving using the Wingman, a friend that can give even the most skilled of
* In societies were slavery was legal, slave catchers were tasked with capturing escaped slaves in order to take them back to their owners for a reward.
* In societies where duels were allowed, there were rules governing conduct. However, these tended to apply mostly to pre- and post-duel scenarios: seconds, duel locations, that kind of thing. In the Renaissance-Early Industrial West, combat with rapiers and its descendents was an inelegant, brutal affair where grapples, chokes, hidden pistols, trips, gouges, and so on were all fair. For a long time, calling someone a "good fencer" was basically calling him a ruffian and murderer. In the East, the flowery, classy duels of cinema were no more real. And most of those gun-fighting duels of the American West were pure Hollywood as well. Duels with dueling pistols were often gamed heavily as well. What we today would consider an "honorable duel" was actually fairly rare, especially before the 19th century.
* In "Society of the Blind Eye", "Lazy" Susan reacts with abject horror at the sight of... the gnomes trying to steal a pie from the windowsill.
* In "Society of the Blind Eye", Wendy vents her frustration over being unable to get "Straight Blanchin'" by Li'l Big Dawg out of her head after Soos becomes obsessed with it.
* In "Sock Opera", Bill Cipher offers Dipper a disembodied "head that's always screaming", which also ties its tongue in a knot as it does so.
* insofar as the money is good, anyway, while explaining his plan to sell them into slavery. It didn't backfire on him immediately, but the eventual results did nearly cost him his life and the lives of his entire command several times, so it probably evens out.
* In Sofia, Bulgaria, a new sign was installed to commemorate the 30th anniversary of the Russian cultural center. The "3" had soon fallen off, resulting in the sign saying "0 years".
* In software development, this trope is called "the second-system effect". It tends to imply a
* In software development, when trying to fix a stubborn bug, it is sometimes considered helpful to discuss the bug with another developer. The practice is considered useful even when the other person is completely unfamiliar with the code, perhaps not even a developer at all. The reasoning is that the act of having to explain it to another person forces you to step back from the problem a bit and challenge some of your assumptions. Lone developers will sometimes resort to discussing the problem with an inanimate object, a practice which has come to be called "talking to the Furby." And then there's

* In "So It's Come To This; A Simpsons Clip Show", Bart, planning to play an April Fool's Day prank on Homer, decides he needs to learn his father's weakness. We then see Homer get a beer from the fridge, commenting aloud, "Ah, beer. My one weakness. My Achilles Heel, if you will."
* In "So It's Come to This: A Simpsons Clip Show", Grandpa Simpson claims he slips into and out of comas all the time, then promptly falls asleep on his feet. He awakens just as suddenly, muttering "French toast, please!"
* In "So It's Come to This: A Simpsons Clip Show" Wiggum refers to code 8 after a beer explosion, prompting Lou to report "we need pretzels, repeat, pretzels!"
* In "Soldier of Misfortune" Dale once again tells a story to the gun club members about how he assassinated a Central American dictator. He twirls his gun and accidentally drops and discharges it hitting the cash register. This panicked the others and ruins Dale's reputation as president.
* In "Sollid Survival", Samosa is caught in an actual version of that same kind of snare by green fuzzy creatures lurking in the jungle.
* In "So Many Birthdays", Amethyst casually eats a moldy, 5-year-old tuna burrito without giving any thought about it. A few moments later, she clenches her stomach and doubles over, all while Pearl is explaining that the Gems can never die of old age...or food poisoning.
* In some academic fields, graduate programs are so selective that one or two B's in undergrad can be a serious liability, even if the student has all A's otherwise. For students who plan to apply for graduate studies in those fields, this can be a rational response.
* In some added irony in another episode it turns out he himself was victim to this from his ex wife.
* In some American cities, if not enough people show up for jury duty the judge will send out bailiffs to grab people walking by the courthouse to act as jurors. This tradition started all the way back in ancient Greece—where (in Athens at least), the bailiffs were enslaved Scythian archers and they used rope dipped in wet red paint to mark the citizens who had failed to show up when told.
* In some ancient legislations, such unions could be automatically upgraded to full-blown marriages, such as
* In some angles and feuds when a Heel is feigning injury such as an injured arm in a sling and claiming he can't compete and the match should be cancelled, sometimes a Face will toss something at them and the Heel will reach out and catch it with his "injured" arm, proving he was faking it.
* In some areas all vaporubs are called "Vicks Vaporub" or just "Vicks".
* In some areas, Amber Alerts are also sent this way to the local area, with the alert tones and the scroll across the screen being read.
* In some areas in Pakistan, they cook chickpeas in a deep pan full of sand, using the sand to conduct and diffuse the heat; basically, boiling in sand.
* In some areas of Sweden (such as Dalecarlia), people still occasionally use the name of the family farm as part of their personal name, regardless of whether the farm had a "male" or a "female" name. For example, a man living at a farm called Sara (a female name) might be named Sara Erik Persson. This naming convention is becoming increasingly rare, but used to be somewhat common before industrialization.
* In some areas of the United States, Hi-Lex (bleach) is used instead.
* In some areas, there are no (or very few) full-time firefighters in a given community. Instead, they have a force of
* In some Asian countries in the 90's, it was "Caring for the Ones You Love", complete with the slogan being sang jingle-wise. In Japan, from the 80's to 90's, it was "Fun To Drive", and later it became "Fun To Drive Again", during the time the advertising campaign involved now-grown up
* In some aspects, the Laundryverse is even more horrible as the standard Lovecraft universe, because the repercussions are discussed, and presented, in great detail: for example, instead of saying how a group of sufficiently determined madmen can very well unleash something capable of

* In some Bavarian homes there is a single wall between the kitchen and the living room. The fireplace built into the wall serves both as a stove and a heater.
* In "Somebody Goofed," an old man takes a similar approach when talking to a boy about an overdose victim, but this time, it turns out to not be the best idea. A man who turns out to be the Devil in disguise mocks his harsh stance and offers a more moderate alternative, thereby causing the boy to reject the old man's pitch.
* In some boss fights, it's faster to not do as much damage as you could on the first cycle through its movement pattern, so that the second cycle beats the boss while it's still in the first phase.
* In "Some Buried Bones," Nelly Furtado is suspected of killing a store security guard who catches her shoplifting. Turns out to be someone else, but she's still arrested for her crimes.
* In some car insurance commercials, things which cause damage, like a pipe which broke a tail light, a branch which broke a windshield, and a pot hole causing a flat tire, the things doing damage to talk with cliché accents. The pipe had a "Russian woman" accent, the branch had a "Brooklyn man " accent, and the pothole had a "redneck girl" accent.
* In some cases, details become more prominent on small screens, especially in HD. One example is
* In some cases, even the inhabitants of Gensoukyou have stopped clapping their hands. E.g., things from the outside world sometimes slip through the barrier, and one of the things that slipped through in the past was a scientific magazine that explained how echoes are actually just sound waves bouncing off surfaces. As a result of people learning this, the Yamabiko, mountain-dwelling spirits born from humans ascribing echoes to the Yamabiko shouting people's words back at them, are currently facing extiction via
* In some cases, ironically, the problem of the Continental Army was the reverse. New Englanders at least were small farmers and storekeepers who were too well aware of their dignity as middle-class folk to take to military discipline and needed a commander who could work with their cultural eccentricities before they became effective. Historian Fred Anderson draws a picture of that in several of his books.
* In some cases, it leads to the love of their lives, such as with Laura Roslin and Bill Adama. Just before the attacks, Laura had ended a decade-long affair and Bill had found out that his ex-wife (long-divorced) was remarrying. Forced to work together to protect the rest of humanity, the two eventually developed a close friendship that grew into real love. When Laura is kidnapped and presumed dead, Bill quits his job to stay behind on the slim chance she might still be alive, telling his grown son "I can't live without her."
* In some cases it really couldn't be helped, however: Laurel & Hardy and The Three Stooges had all passed on by then, and the surviving
* In some cases, liner notes will refer to songs that were removed from the album, an example those of
* In some cases the angelic Powers give the immortal one of a pair the choice to become mortal, which means they can spend eternity separated forever from their entire family, rather than from their spouse. And the children of most elf-human pairings were historically given the same choice, which potentially separated them from
* In some cases the characters mentioned or encountered are from the 19th century, but not from British literature. There are cameos for example of Auguste Dupin (created by Edgar Allan Poe) and Anna/Nana Coupeau (created by Émile Zola). Also there are references to even older characters. Issue second includes a reference to the character Lady Termagant Flaybum. Flaybum is a major character in an 18th-century novel concerning flagellations, and having a sado-masochistic tone.
* In some cases, the generic can be BETTER if the inert ingredients are different. A common example is generics that don't contain food coloring - they're preferable if you're allergic to coloring.
* in some cases they successfully block titan killer weapons from even scratching the orks massive numbers
* In some cases, things were filmed in New Jersey like some scenes at a train station that were actually filmed in Hoboken. After 9-11 some exteriors were filmed in Downtown Brooklyn filling in for the court and government buildings in Lower Manhattan which were inaccessible.

* In some cattle farms, the caretakers will surgically install a porthole in the side of the cow to allow them to monitor its digestion.
* In some circumstances, long-range communications occur in realtime, and in others they do not. Some
* In some college markets with fanbases in heavy farming communities, this gets even worse when they call it the Case IH Red Zone. Case IH is a farm machinery company whose vehicles are mostly red, to compete with John Deere, whose vehicles are mostly green.
* In some commercials for the early 80's electronics superstore chain Federated, pitchman "Fred Rated" (played by
* In some continuities, Cybertron's pre-apocalyptic war environment was pretty damn lethal as well. The exact features are never covered in detail and vary between continuities, but include nameless seas of mercury, acid and liquid helium, the Rust Sea (a sea-like area of "unstable planetary matter and molecular flux" that emits corrosive gasses), the Toxic Sludge Swamps, the Acid Wastes (an area so inundated with neutronic fallout that the frequent earthquakes, acid rain storms and other freak weather conditions are the least of your worries), the Devastator Winds (equatorial windstorms so fierce they can rip Cybertronians apart), and the Rust Spot (an area laced with every kind of hazard Cybertronians can imagine; nuclear winds, toxic sludge swamps, a hyper-corrosive hallucinogenic mist, vicious native predators, deranged cannibalistic tribal Cybertronians, etc)
* In some continuities, Dev-Em, a neighbor of Jor-El, also built a vessel to survive Krypton's destruction in.
* In some continuities Unicron was originally created as a quick and dirty terraforming engine by an alien named Primacron. He was meant to eat lifeless rocks and shit out planets suitable for habitation, but he decided to skip step two and absorbed planets of any kind into himself to increase his power.
* In some corners of the British Army, Ensign Newbie knows that he has gained his men's respect when they start calling him "Boss" instead of "Sir".
* In some countries Channel 35 is conveniently reserved for local RF electronics (ie VCRs or game consoles, for compatibility with very old TVs that do not have composite video input). This makes it very convenient to use the channel for test/fake broadcasts. Likewise, channel 2-4 on VHF band I are often also used for this case since band I was all but abandoned even by the 80s.
* In some countries, like Sweden, it's possible to find both versions in the same shop. The American version is the most famous, however.
* In some countries of the world where the majority of the population is light-or at least brown-skinned, this trope is actually
* In some countries, organ-harvesting is practiced under a policy of presumed consent, meaning that a deceased person's recoverable organs will be salvaged unless their survivors object and/or there's documentation saying that they didn't want it done. It's not "theft" because it's perfectly legal, but it can look like this to people from countries where
* In some countries, schools which are not generally military in approach may have optional military training organisations as official extra-curricular activities, such as the Junior Reserve Officers' Training Corps (JROTC) in the USA or the Officer Training Corps (OTC) in British private schools. There are several high schools in the U.S. where the entire student body is enrolled in JROTC, such as the Marine Academy of Science and Technology in New Jersey.
* In some countries they got around censors by making the pedestrians into zombies, but in the third game specifically titled
* In some cultures, drinks after work (usually just before knocking off for the weekend) never went away.
* In some cultures in South America, there are tales of half-dolphin half-humans (the river dolphins, botos, can turn into people who almost always wear white hats).

* In some cultures, these catastrophes were even considered deities. In other words, in the eyes of ancient cultures, we have effectively killed gods.
* In "Someday You Will Be Loved," the narrator leaves a girl an encouraging note about how she will find love in time...
* In some defense to Charles, some later material suggests she got bumped down there as a result of being out of the family for a while, as a similarly 'disinherited and later reinherited' family member Marrybell is the 88th princess and is notably older than Nunnally.
* In some democracies, candidates are nominated by and from a narrower group of professional party "members," rather than ordinary voters. Depending on how strict the party's formal membership rules are, and how small the membership is, this can result in nominations being dictated by an even more ideologically extreme, or simply eccentric faction of the public. This can actually present something of a paradox for small parties: the party knows on some level it needs to broaden their appeal, yet because the party membership is tiny and dominated by "true believers," it's hard for them to put forth more moderate or mainstream candidates.
* In some depictions, the Emperor of Mankind (a living deity) is so powerful that most mortals cannot gaze upon his true form (he occasionally disguises himself, both to hide his identity and to protect onlookers). Those who attempt to either die, are blinded by the power inherent in his visage (as happens to Astropaths in the ceremony that links their souls to His), or else their minds simply are unable to process what they are seeing. Even those who can safely look at him (generally those who are extremely powerful or have strong wills) see him as somewhat indistinct, with his features constantly changing and shifting. Some of his sons, the Primarchs, inherited this ability.
* In some documentary footage, Liam Neeson was talking about the first day of lightsaber training. And how both he and Ewan were making lightsaber noises while swinging the practice sabers.
* In some Drunk Driving ads, they have police officers blending into the background this way while a plastered group of friends stumble passed them, only to be hit with a security check on the road.
* In some early editions of nymphs actually use their nudity as a weapon. Their beauty is so great that even seeing a
* In some editions, an extremely high bluff roll can make someone believe anything, based on DM discretion.
* In some editions, Beholders have two minds. They process their data through the emotional part before transferring it to the logical part. Which means, if something is against a beholder's beliefs (which, through genetic memory always amount to
* In some editions it's explained that most of them have a common origin, although how canon this is in the current fluff is up in the air. One story goes that the Necrons were the first humanoids, the Old Ones created the Eldar, Orks and the seldom-seen apelike Jokaeros to fight them, then the Necrons manipulated the evolution of Earth's mammals to create a new
* In some editions, minotaurs have a racial ability to never be lost in a maze, and are immune to spells that would put them inside one.
* In some epic folk songs about Bulgarian rebel leader Delyo, he is described as invulnerable to normal weapons, driving his enemies to cast a silver bullet in order to murder him.
* In some episodes clothing damage is accompanied with a red line on his skin, representing that he and not just the clothes were cut, though there's never blood. In others, it's not, but he still cries out. And then tears off the damaged garment.
* In some episodes, he also wears his (neck)tie around his forehead as a type of bandana. Basically, staying within the rules of the dress code while looking nothing like everybody else.
* In some episodes we can see the "Number 9 Man". The concept was a society ranking system that would be used in the future. Of course it is a
* In some evil areas of user-generated worlds, blood can rain from the sky.

* In some Expanded Universe materials, it's implied that one of his later identities was Jim Morrison of
* In some fandoms, there are plenty of albums which get bad reviews but which fans will still talk about endlessly. Very commonly happens with
* In some films, it's the creators who break out the museum pieces. For example, the World War Two film
* In some folklore, vampires are all stricken with a debilitating obsession with numbers, if you throw a quantity of small objects on the ground in front of them (seeds, grain, beads etc.) they will not be able to resist the urge to pick it up and count it; this affords the victim time to either run away or kill the vampire. ("Three! Three mustard seeds!
* In some former Eastern Bloc countries, as well as Greece, there was an urban legend in the 1960s and 1970s of "the Black Volga" (Volga being a popular car in the region). The black car was sinister for vague reasons — most versions of the story alleged that
* In some French sources, "Blackguard" is translated "Chevalier noir", which is the French for "Black Knight".
* In some games, boss monsters will have basic enemy variants that are even more powerful than they are, given relative power levels. This led to the amusing situation of Geyzer, the first boss of
* In some games it's justified, with him being unable to do his more impressive feats of strength without finding a magical bracelet, gauntlet, glove, etc, that bolsters his strength.
* In some games of the Barbixas' theater presentation, like "Escolinha Improvável", involve one of the actors finding out what character the other actors are acting like, and the public always knows it before the game starts.
* In some games (such as Ars Magica) even the players will have several characters.
* In some games with vehicles, you can fall fatal distances, but survive fine if your fall takes you near a vehicle and you hit the Mount Vehicle key before you splat.
* In some incarnations, Superboy and/or Superman is the inspiration for the team. Hence the exception for him.
* In some instances, getting hung upside down in any tether isn't relegated to just snares but usually occur either by accident or as part of a story device. The 1951
* In some Internet communities this is referred to as "the Galbrush Paradox". Someone complains about there not being enough female or minority characters, only to then complain when those characters are depicted as equally flawed as the straight white male characters. The result is a
* In some interpretations, Judas followed Jesus more out of personal ambition than true belief, and he sold Jesus out when things weren't quite going like he expected. Judas is of the
* In some interviews, Sam Marin revealed that not only Benson is his favorite character to voice, he has the most similarities to him. In real life, Sam actually does get angry like Benson and is basically him in a gumball machine form.
* In some issues, Norman Osborn a.k.a. The Green Goblin has shown remarkable concern towards his henchmen, even sincerely asking if Venom/Mac Gargan wanted out of the game.
* In some iterations, Alice Margatroid uses her grimoire to shoot or cast spells.
* In some jurisdictions, the police will have a minor doing community service enter an establishment and ask for a pack of cigarettes and/or alcohol, also to see if any laws are being broken.
* In some languages the word for "magician" and "wizard" is the same - in German e.g. it's "Zauberer". Or "Magier", but that one can also refer to both. If you wanted to talk explicitly about one kind, you'd have to say "Bühnenmagier" (magician) or "echter Zauberer" (someone doing real magic).
* In some leagues, male beach volleyball players' uniforms are shirtless.
* In some live productions, the husband does this during the mock opera sequence

'Il Muto' (if the actor can handle it). "I shall not leave, but shall hide over there to obseeeeeeerve heeeeeeeeeeeeeeeeee-(five minutes later)-eeeeeer." Bonus points for also being an incredibly
* In some medieval cultures, long surcoats were worn over armor, and show up in medieval romances, epics, and other martial literatures of those cultures. So, for example, in
* In some military forces, Individual Body Maintenance is a euphemism for "taking a nap". This is often used to account for the whereabouts of the troops [to a superior officer] without having to admit that they're on an unscheduled afternoon siesta.
* In some more recent works, one or more of the above factions might have "
* In some movies or series, the rights are an inevitable part of every climax. In others, perps
* In some musical circles, it's considered a rite of passage for hand drummers (bongos, congas, and similar) to piss blood at the end of a long night of playing. In fact, they've been playing so long that they've broken down the muscles in their hands from the damage, and they're pissing out proteins that are leaking out of damaged muscle cells. The name for this condition is rhabdomyolysis, and it is common in marathons and other endurance events. Let
* In some non-English variants, the hero has been magically forced to forget her.
* In some office buildings, the doors are solid wood in a metal frame, which is a nuisance for firefighters trying to get through if the door is locked. On the other hand, as noted in the
* In some of the campaigns, a few enemy types wear helmets that you have to shoot off first before you can headshot them.
* In some of the commercials for Golden Crisp, mascot Sugar Bear came across as this. He was always pursuing Granny Goodwitch to steal her cereal instead of getting his own, even though she never did anything to him except try to hide from him so she could
* In some of the dioramas at the Denver Museum of Nature and Science, the artist painted in little elves "as a sort of signature of his work." Also, two dioramas have moving butterflies, which must freak unsuspecting visitors out.
* In some of the games, you essentially take part in this yourself if you decide to ship your first character's child with another child.
* In some of the watch books Detritus runs a Scare Em Straight campaign aimed at the
* In some online forums, you can block a particular person so that they cannot send you messages and you cannot see anything they post. When other people do not have them blocked, it can create surreal situations where you see people replying to posts you can't see, leaving you to guess what the blocked person is saying. If one of the other people are feeling
* In some other myths, they use a backup explosion in case the myth-related one still has a chance of going off unexpectedly.
* In some other pride flags, such as the bisexual, non-binary, and intersex flags, purple, which is a mix of blue and pink, is used to represent a mixture of masculinity and femininity. However, that's not always the case; for example, the purple in the asexual pride flag represents community and has nothing to do with gender.
* In some parts of America, Nintendo was a byword for "gaming console" throughout the 90s due to their enormous market share in the industry, especially due to its revival of the home console market after
* In some parts of California, hiking off-trail is ill-advised as you may stumble into a drug cartel operation (usually pot) and/or their booby traps. Or you might just stumble across somebody who already did... members of the Bureau of Land Management and Forest Service take these warnings
* In some parts of Japan, this trope is something of a running gag among the locals. Cars in Japan are right-hand drive, with the windshield-wiper and turn-signal stalks reversed relative to the United States, so American drivers unfamiliar with this setup will very frequently hit the wipers when trying to activate the turn signal. If you're watching a car brake coming into an intersection and the wipers come on instead of the turn signal, it's a dead ringer that they're new to the area.

* In some parts of Medieval Europe, it's thought only owls could abide the presence of ghosts, so an owl nesting near a house is a sign that it's haunted.
* In some parts of Sweden, fishermen used to believe that every village was infested with little invisible gnomes, whose main desire was to get out on the sea. To do this, the gnomes would follow the villagers around. If a fisherman didn't get rid of the gnomes before going out in his boat, it would mean terrible bad luck. So how did they get rid of the gnomes? Easy: Dungeon Bypass! Every fishing village would have a labyrinth (mostly a simple spiral) built from rocks as big as a head or so. Before going out, the fisherman would walk all the way to the middle of the spiral, the gnomes presumably trailing him. When he reached the middle, he would simply run across the stones, down to his boat, and cast off. The gnomes, too small to jump over the stones, would have to take the long way out of the spiral, and would be too late to sneak on the boat. Though one wonders why no gnome ever got the idea of waiting by the boats...
* In some parts of the West Indies, it used to be common to use animal blood at a boat's launching ceremony. Squeamish Americans and Europeans just use champagne, the wusses.
* In some paths your opponent will vote differently depending on what you chose. The first time it happens Sigma will show that he knows more than he should with this line:
* In some Pennsylvania prisons, guards are equipped with a distress radio that will call in reinforcements if they pull a rip-cord buttoned to their shirt, or if their torso tilts by more than 45°. Thus, if they get into a fight with an inmate and are incapacitated, the distress signal automatically alerts the entire facility.
* In some people, hyperactivity can provide them with a seemingly superhuman level of energy as well as mildly retarding the visible signs of aging.
* In some performances, after Angelica and Laurens finish walking down the aisle in "Helpless" and separate to make way for the bride and groom, the two share a significant look, referencing Angelica's soon to be overt and Laurens' subtextual feelings for Hamilton.
* In some places, being openly LGBT (of whatever variety) is considered unacceptable, along with any kind of non-heterosexual/non-reproductive sex. In these places (and historically far more) this would only take place in secret, with these acts being illegal, even capital crimes.
* In some places, long-haul truck drivers have this. More than a few have drug or alcohol issues during their careers and many have various misdemeanors as well. But it's difficult for companies to find a capable long-haul driver, which explains companies overlooking most infractions and the high wages plus pay per mile bonuses.
* In some places, some relatives use mental hospitals to get rid of unwanted persons, like in
* In some places, there's also straight-up theft of real estate. Usually, this involves a vacant property with a deceased or otherwise absent owner in a neighborhood with rising values. This con centers on the fact that in many jurisdictions, a deed to property must be notarized, and that a notary must have proof of the grantor's (i.e. seller's) identity to make sure that the person selling/giving the property actually owns it. In one variant of the con, the hustler presents false identity documents to the (usually innocent and honest) notary "showing" that the person in front of them (usually the hustler's partner-in-crime) is the owner;
* In some places with vagrancy statutes punishing those without fixed abode nor determinated means to gain livelihood, those deemed as vagrants could be punished for having expensive items without justifying their provenance, with the suspicion they might have stolen them.
* In "Somepony to Watch Over Me", Applejack finds Scootaloo hiding in Apple

Bloom's wardrobe. Scootaloo tries to deny it even though Applejack is
* In some poor villages of Africa where they have opted for Food Bank (filled with food aid for use when the harvest is lean and topped up by local farmers when the harvest is good) three people from the community are given keys and required to open it. Because as Josette Sheeran says;
* In some productions, the demons/witches that deliver the misleading prophecies to
* In some Quick Arena battles, sometimes the conditions for winning a match are such that normally powerful attacks become useless or not worth it. This happens even if the attack is known to do 90-100% damage most of the time (matches where an opponent must be bounced off a wall, hit with a soul charged attack, while taunting, etc etc).
* In some rare instances an aircraft will have an ejection seat that drops the pilot
* In some regions of France, the colours never got switched, and pink is still male while light-blue is female. Another thing is that on municipal campsites the restrooms are sometimes only indicated by colour. Cue outsiders used to this trope accidentally walking into the wrong bathroom.
* In some respects, this is similar to the example of airliners above, at least for the actual spacecraft - a conical capsule is pretty much the most-proven shape for re-entry at translunar velocities. The Orion capsule, however, will be bigger, carry more people (4-6, as opposed to Apollo's 3), and be capable of 'loitering' unmanned in orbit, so
* In some risque art peices (no, we're not linking any), this is done by somene's
* In some season 7 episodes, Twilight states to be fluent in Old Ponish, averting this trope. However, in the finale, the author of one such book, brought to modern days from a thousand years ago, speaks the same English (or whatever language you are watching the show) as the main characters and understands everybody just fine.
* In some sections of Los Angeles, San Francisco, and New York City, the use of intense speech patterns and a theatric eloquence at parties, among friends, or even during family squabbles is the norm.
* In some sects of Zen Buddhism, a monk walks the room during meditation sessions with a light, flat stick. When a meditating monk loses his focus because he starts to get tired, he will lean forward to get a light slap between the shoulder blades with the stick, which triggers the reaction to make him fully awake again.
* In some sense, every measurement system started out this way. It's only when people start actually using it that it moves from "fantastic" to "mundane". For instance, the metric system started when the French decided to just abandon all the old systems and start over from scratch.
* In some shorts, a main character will be married or have a girlfriend who will
* In some shows the pairs aren't explicitly stated in the script, but that generally won't stop most theater companies from pairing people up anyway. There are only two pairings at the end of
* In some Spanish-speaking countries, the song "Pluma Pluma Gay" is more popular/better known than "Dragostea din tei", the song it parodies.
* In some species of butterfly, the males will emerge from their cocoons before the females and upon finding a female almost ready to emerge, will mate with her the moment she's breaking through or while she's
* In some sports leagues, if a championship winner is found to have been using steroids or other kinds of drugs, then the second place competitor will get the award. This happened in the 2006 and 2010
* In some sports leagues, when a city regains a sports team after an old one moves away or folds, the new team often takes up the legacy, history, and often the name of the previous team.
* In some states, all it takes to have your own legal private police is a license to operate a railroad. The railroad president can appoint anyone as railroad police (or can appoint a chief of the railroad police with the power to do the same), and even though they are private employees of a commercial organization, they have the same power as the state police or the highway patrol anywhere in the state. If the railroad operates in multiple states, the railroad police typically have authority in all of the states the railroad operates in. Some states require the governor to recognize the railroad (California) and some states merely require the railroad apply with a circuit court to get permission to appoint railroad police (Virginia). Practically every major US freight railroad has its own police force, as do many rapid transit services.

* In some states (e.g. Colorado) that allow common law marriages it is possible to wind up married to someone merely by referring to them as your spouse, provided all the other conditions have been met (cohabitation, holding themselves to be a couple in the eyes of the community, etc.)
* In some states it's illegal for someone of the opposite biological sex to go into the other bathroom, with most of the conservative arguing points very unashamedly claiming that
* In some states, like Pennsylvania, it's still legal to get married without an officiant present, although the couple still has to get a marriage license beforehand.
* In some states, one has to announce their intent to use deadly force before they can be legally justified to defend themselves against an attacker.
* In some stories, Coyote is even singled out by God to be a more important teacher of life lessons than the other Animal People. Usually, this is because he and God are friends. Given that half the lessons we learn are because Coyote gets his ass handed to him because of his own dumbfuckery, it could be a case of
* In some stories, one way of recognizing a fairy disguised as a human is that their emotional reactions may make no sense to us, laughing at tragic things and crying at happy ones.
* In some strips , Dad was seen going to work sporting a black hat (either a fedora or a homburg, from the looks of it), although men his age hadn't been seen with hats since the early 1960s at the latest. Occasionally he'd wear a
* In some Tagalog dialects, "kiki" is slang for "young woman's vagina" Unfortunately it is also a Japanese name, adding new, terrible meaning to things such as
* In some team or contact sports (usually American-style football), a rare yet extremely touching form of remembrance is the sports equivalent of a "missing man" tribute, where if a player has died, their position on the field will be empty for one play.
* In some teams, the whole point is that every member has exactly the same power (e.g., the
* In "Something About Harry", Harry Longworth and his partner Parker use an energy weapon on humans whose bodies have been occupied by the alien parasites. It turns the humans' bodies into green slime but leaves the parasites intact. The parasites are then placed in a special container.
* In "Something Beautiful," Jimmy notices a valuable Hummel figurine in Mr. Neff's office and enlists a burglar, Ira, to break in and steal it. Unfortunately, on the night of the burglary, Mr. Neff has gotten kicked out of the house by his wife and is spending the night in his office because he did the tasteless decision of trying to buy her a vacuum cleaner as a gift. Poor Ira's left trapped under Mr. Neff's desk until he's able to call Jimmy to show up and provide a distraction for him to escape.
* In "Something Blue", Marshal and Lily try to feed each other at their wedding with the cake. Lily is completely drunk and sees Marshal's face twice or thrice, and she falls down.
* In "Something in the Walls", Sharon Miles determines that the creatures that live in the walls and in anything with a pattern can be prevented from coming through if she surrounds herself with items that are plain and entirely one color. As such, she paints her room at the Crest Ridge Sanitarium white and covers each crack that appears. She also refuses to place a checkered blanket on her bed. In spite of all her precautions, however, the creatures manage to come through a crack in her wall and
* In something of a change for Bond films, the Soviet hit team at the beginning of

* In something of an inversion, there have been many cases of repeating the same two notes through a particular line (or lines) of lyrics, which is only saved by the change in chords (the first line of each verse of
* In something of a play on this, Stringer Bell tries to get drug syndicate meetings to run according to
* In something of a subversion, creatures capable of interstellar space travel who were only looking for raw materials would probably steer clear of Earth. The tiny moon of Titan (one of Saturn's 62 moons) has hundreds of times the hydrocarbons (oil and gas) that Earth has, Europa (one of Jupiter's moons) has twice the volume of water Earth has and is one of many tiny moons to have more water than we do, and even our own Moon is amazingly rich in titanium. And this is only what we have in our comparatively tiny solar system, all of which is uninhabited (and unguarded
* In "Something Ricked This Way Comes" he creates a robot with artificial intelligence for the sole purpose of getting him butter when he's eating.
* In "Something Ricked This Way Comes", when Summer is screwed over by
* In "Something Smells", when SpongeBob jumps on a boat's windshield and blinds the driver with his horrible breath, the boat stops and suddenly explodes
* In "Something Smells" when SpongeBob jumps on a boat's windshield asking the driver if the former is ugly, his rancid breath blinds the driver, who puts the boat to a complete stop and it explodes for no particular reason, leaving behind only the charred frame.
* In "Something Wall-Mart This Way Comes," the townspeople hold funeral services for two different stores (
* In "Something Wicked", an immortal creature called a shtriga drains the life force from people, mostly children.
* In some towns and cities around the globe, some people (especially pre-teen boys) routinely used (or use) this kind of transport on tram buffers to avoid paying the fare. This is particularly common in India, Bangladesh, Indonesia, and South Africa, where the trains are the best way to get around both within cities and between them, but are often overcrowded.
* In some traditional southeast Asian cultures it was formerly considered an act of friendliness to give someone the wet betel quid out of your mouth. Several 18th and 19th-century accounts describe European envoys' need to overcome their disgust at this.
* In some traditions, this may actually be part of a wedding ceremony, or even what constitutes the wedding/marriage entirely. Usually, the groomsmen or the soon-to-be-in-laws will "kidnap" the bride with her and her family's knowledge.
* In some TV runs, Biff's line "You cost 300 bucks damage to my car, you son of a bitch" is changed to "...you son of a butthead."
* In some US states and localities, "nexus" laws are in effect, allowing schools to punish students for any infractions going to or coming from school. For the purposes of certain crimes (like fighting or drug offenses), some state laws decree the jurisdiction of the school extends to within a certain radius (such as 1000 feet) of the school premises.
* In some variants, on arrival, the heroine finds that the wedding festivities have gone on for thirty days without the hero having consummated the union.
* In some versions, Arachne openly boasts that she is superior to Athena. In another, it is Arachne's mother who says her daughter surpasses the gods. In another, Athena simply notices a highly skilled mortal and challenges her to a weaving contest.
* In some versions, a scourge (cat-o'-nine-tails) is essentially the same except its damage isn't quite so pathetic.
* In some versions (depends on which adaptation you're reading) the Sirens did the same thing after Odysseus' crew escaped from them. This may be an exaggeration of the original story, however, because their success record wasn't perfect. (Jason and the Argonauts escaped from them as well, though Odysseus was the only one who heard them and lived. Jason and crew survived because Orpheus drowned out their music. Butes, who had really good hearing, also heard them, despite Orpheus' effort, and lived, but he only survived due to literal divine intervention, so it might not have counted.)

* In some versions, Fantozzi and the other "revolutionaries" eventually burn the copy of the film
* In some versions Heimdall is this as well. He made the same trade as Odin, except he gave up an ear. He's the sole watchman of Asgard, with sight second only to Odin, and unmatched hearing in his remaining ear. And at Ragnarok, he fights Loki to the death.
* In some versions, human adolescents appreciate Klingon heavy metal. It is apparently pretty much the same thing as our heavy metal, except that Klingons do it and it's in their character, so it becomes "alien". Their opera, on the other hand, is supposedly without any direct real-world equivalent.
* In some versions, "It" masquerades as his copilot, who begs him not to open the airlock.
* In some versions, mermaids who took human form could always be identified because the hem of their dresses would always be wet, no matter how hot the day was or how long they were in human form.
* In some versions of fluff, sorcerers get their inherent magical powers from a distant ancestor (usually draconic).
* In some versions of her myth, Medusa was a famously beautiful priestess of Athena. In Ovid's late
* In some versions of Madden, if your team is lining up for a game winning field goal with a few seconds left on the clock. The camera has a more dramatic angle, the sound will quiet down except for an audible heart beat (complete with a slight rumble in your controller with each beat), and time slows down as the ball sails towards the uprights.
* In some versions of Microsoft Word, typing in "zzzz" and running the spellchecker will cause it to provide the alternative spelling "sex".
* In some versions of the comics, Supergirl routinely uses Kryptonian profanity, which is represented in Kryptonian alphabet, so we have no idea what she's saying. Clark normally avoids this trope due to being a goody-two-shoes. However, he has occasionally said "What in the name of Rao" and similar phrases.
* In some versions of the joke, the inmate proclaims this out loud, and another inmate is the one who says "I said no such thing!"
* In some versions of the myth, Atalanta was the only woman on board the Argo in
* In some versions of the myth, Perseus had a special sword that could cut the armored neck of a Gorgon. Athena and Hermes gave it to him.
* In some versions of the tale, it went one step further - anyone who saw the light, other than its wielder, was hit with a full-on
* In some versions of Tristan and Yseult, Yseult falls in love with Tristan, who doesn't love her back or even know about it (and is her bodyguard as he brings her to her
* In some versions, Sisyphus's final fate does not bother him at all and he actually finds solace in pushing his boulder since it gives him time to himself to think for all eternity. For all the gods involved, this is a source of unending frustration for having one mortal they were never able to humble.
* In some versions, the black knight is King Pellinore, whom Arthur fights early in his reign. Pellinore first unhorses Arthur with a lance before dismounting to beat him with a sword too; he actually breaks Arthur's sword in the process. Merlin rescues Arthur with magic and brings him to the Lady of the Lake, who gives him Excalibur and, more importantly, Excalibur's sheath, which has the magic property that no one wearing it may be cut. With it, Arthur is able to beat Pellinore, after which
* In some versions, the Dullahan's horse is not only also headless, but its head floats alongside it as it rides. Its head is just as horrific and rotten as its master's head, and is
* In some versions, the other brothers try to force the princess to marry one of them. She keeps them away by clawing at the eyes of whoever comes near her but quickly recognizes the youngest brother when no one else does and welcomes him back.

* In some versions, the theme music and various stingers will be melodramatically organ-based (akin to radio and early television soap operas)
* In some versions, though, it was just because she rejected his sexual advances.
* In some versions, Tom forgets (or hasn't heard), and opens a shutter for light to work by.
* In some way, abilities can be considered this trope, when they are passed to Pokemon temporarily by using Entrainment or Skill Swap. When such situation happens, fighters with originally obvious
* In some ways, though, it's quite a subversion. The Dyad Institute's villain status comes not from their science necessarily, but from their objectification of human life, disregarding the clones' well-being and their very bodily autonomy for the sake of profit. It's their intention behind the human cloning, rather than the act of cloning itself, that drives them to villain status. In fact, some of the less predatorily capitalistic members of Dyad were occasionally portrayed in a good light, such as Delphine Cormier, Aldous Leekie and Ethan Duncan.
* in somewhat amusing fashion). She gets blown across the room and lands painfully on her rear, resulting in a big bruise for her trouble.
* In "Somewhere Over the Railing," two female friends shoot online videos of their own pranks on each other, and one of them uses an airbag to place under a chair and try to trick her friend into sitting on it. Her friend doesn't fall for it and causes the former girl to land on the airbag instead, which sends her flying over the railing of the second floor of the house and landing fatally on her spinal cord down the floor below.
* In some works, this takes the form of user error: It is strongly implied (if not outright stated) that the phlebotinum
* In some zones of Mexico (particularly the states of Michoacán and Veracruz, which have the quite unlucky combination of thick forests and heavy cartel activity), it is ill-advised to travel at night through forest highways, especially if you don't know the road. Although there are safer federal highways, other, more remote roads can be very dangerous. They are dark and often neglected, and you risk falling victim to muggers playing a
* In "Somnambula", the Big Brother Ponies, despite starting out as would-be rescuers themselves, are snared by Somnambula's magic and need to themselves be saved by Kyrie, Spike, and the baby ponies.
* In Somnia, a game being developed in Russia and greenlit for release on Steam, is a dystopian dieselpunk RPG that takes place in a decaying art deco space station.
* Insomnia, as questions arise as to whether Dormer shooting fellow detective Eckhardt in the mist was truly an accident.
* Insomnia. By his own admission he's only ten years old, and looks it, but he behaves like a grizzled warrior who's seen too many battles. And that's just the tip of the iceberg, as Tatl explains in this rant from chapter 38:
* Insomniac Games, although Insomniac completely owns the right to the IP. However, Insomniac were purchased by Sony in 2019, with the rights to Sunset Overdrive being owned by its parent Sony.
* Insomniac Games (as in, the couples involved in these sorts of things might not always be stable), as Madison turned it down, left Tyler a month later, and then started dating his half-brother.
* Insomniac Games as the several of these darker games by these studios are as well-received as their earlier lighter entries.
* Insomniac Games games involve some poor soul getting eaten, squished, falling into lava or at least smacked around a bit.
* Insomniac Games is renowned for their light-hearted, colorful and cartoony platformer franchises, (
* Insomniac Games made for the game, and it was put in so late in development that they didn't even have time to record new dialogue for it.
* Insomniac Games stated on their forums that this would remain true until a future game or continuation would directly contradict it.
* Insomniac Games, they tried to start playing up the combat aspects of the game over just jumping around and collecting things, and they even tried to avoid calling it a platformer in development (which didn't stop critics from calling it one anyway).

* Insomniac Games was pleased with the effort Toys For Bob went through for the
* Insomnia: Detective Dormer has specific information leaked to the press about the number of items found in connection to the murder of Kay so that the killer will go back to the cabin where he murdered her to remove more evidence. The cops are waiting for him (having already discovered the cabin through Kay's journals), but they didn't know that there was an underground passageway beneath the cabin which then allows the killer to get away.
* Insomnia Episode: An episode that focuses on a character being unable to sleep.
* Insomnia. It straddles the line between downer and bittersweet. He redeems himself for his sins and kills Kay's murderer, and he ensures that Ellie Burr maintains her integrity. On the other hand, by doing so Dormer ensures that a large part of his life's work will be undone when his dishonesty gets out.
* Insomnia, like its Norwegian original, takes place in a small community above the Arctic Circle during the summer, when the sun never sets.
* Insomnia, screenwriter Hillary Seitz, director of photography Wally Pfister, production designer Nathan Crowley, and editor Dody Dorn. Of course, the option can be made to listen to the tracks combined for a more traditional listening experience.
* Insomnia veteran LAPD Frank Dormer is introduced this way,, having thirty years of prestigious cases under his belt, and picking up all kinds of useful details that the initial investigation had missed in the victims room and on her body, while conducting a clever trap against the killer which only fails due to a clumsy mistake.
* Insomnia, when a person's aura turns black, it's time for the Reapers to come.
* Insomnia, when Dormer first enters Finch's apartment, he picks the lock using a credit card.
* Insomnium's original lineup consisted of Niilo Sevänen (vocals and bass), Markus Hirvonen (drums), and two guys named Ville on guitar. After Ville Vänni left the band, leaving Ville Friman as the only "Ville" in the band, his replacement was...another Markus.
* insomuch as distance has any meaning in the Outlands of their inhabitants reaches some critical mass that makes them merge with their "home" plane.
* Insomuch as one can cover up a song they wrote with a different band: "Do Ya" was first written by Jeff Lynne as a late single by The Move - it later got much more exposure when he remade it with
* In "Sonic Breakout", Sketch Lampoon is imprisoned by Dr. Robotnik for making an unflattering caricature of him in his latest issue of
* InSONICnia egged Sonic's house, so Sonic gets revenge by ordering 1000 pizzas under their name and address.
* In "Sonic Rainboom", both Rainbow Dash and Rarity say out loud to no one in particular what they're going to do next at some point, but only on one occasion each do they look at the audience while doing so, demonstrating the vague relationship such comments can have to
* In "Sonic's Song", Scratch and Grounder attempt to catch Sonic in one of these. Sonic dances to the song dedicated to him in it the entire time, and escapes from it just before Scratch and Grounder pounce at him. The trap doesn't go off when they land in it, and they try to figure out what's wrong. Grounder then sees it was switched off, and turns the switch on,
* In Sonic's story, Sonic walks in on Knuckles doing this to Dr. Eggman stealing the Master Emerald towards the end of Hidden Palace Zone.
* In Sonic Super Special #8, Sonic falls victim to this. Snively zaps him with a ray that allows him to run even faster, but at the same time, ages him every time he uses his "Super-super speed". Also qualifies as a variant of
* In Sonnet 105, the poet protests that his devotion to his beloved should not be considered "idolatry" (worship of idols distracting from
* In "Son Of Celice", Orko accidentally creates a chimpanzee with a rabbit's head when he means to summon a gift for the king of Tahrin.

* In "Son of the Wacko World of Sports", after Roderick Rat sabotages his high dive, Buster retaliates by dressing like
* In "Sons and Lovers", Aeryn Sun suggests sex would be a practical means of relieving the
* In "Sons of Mogh", Worf accuses Dax of dressing in a revealing outfit to distract him during a sparring session. Dax scoffs at the idea that
* Insontis II even after being age-regressed. In the 12th chapter, he says, "Such error is understandable."
* Insontis II: Groping for a Vulcan term to explain his and Spock's relationship, Kirk settles on "pi'kine", which according to the footnotes, means "little shield-partner."
* In "Soos and the Real Girl," Mabel, when faced with impending death (
* In "Soos and the Real Girl", the start menu of a Japanese dating sim has an option which means "Spontaneous Combustion" in Japanese.
* In Sophie Kinsella's book "Undomestic Goddess" the main character Samantha makes a mistake that causes her client to lose 50 million pounds. Actually,
* Insopportabilmente Donna”). More recently, she seems to be in a more or less stable relationship with a guy called Nicola.
* In "So Totally Spaced Out", this is how the Gigglepies are defeated.
* In "Sotto Voce," a locksmith's wife is kidnapped so that he will assist in a crime.
* In Sotto Voce. As a result, Zelda has a hard time expressing her love for others.
* In Sotto Voce, mentor, maternal figure, guard, companion, lover, etc. The current Zelda and Impa happen to be of the rare romantic incarnation.
* In "Souab's Deadline", Mr. Souab's business (he's a grocer) were slow and his supplier gave him one week to pay his debt. Meanwhile, Enzo, the manager of World Mart, was given one week to bring 100% of its potential customers like he promised his plan would.
* In Soulstorm, flyers in general are very good at this. Just fly them straight towards the target, overshoot a bit, then demonstrate the joys of
* In "Sounds of Silence", Applejack asks Autumn Blaze why the other Kirin have taken a vow of silence.
* In "Sound the Alarm", when Caprice calls the phone service while trying to cancel the delivery of her typo-ridden text to Marylin, she receives a message relating to payment.
* In "Soup Or Sonic," Wile E. survives a rocket ride apparently unscathed, so he turns around and walks away - revealing a small flame on his tail. He walks over a hill and out of sight, and then jumps up from the pain.
* In South Africa, many items are priced ending with 99c, which is odd, because the lowest monetary denomination is 5c. Stranger still, when purchasing them, the number is almost always rounded down to 95c, resulting in the change being a 5c piece which is regarded with almost universal ire.
* In South America, "dentista da meia-noite" (midnight dentistry) is a common practice in which the grave robber breaks into mausoleums and steals gold teeth from the corpses.
* In South America, teams situated on the Andes, be it national squads or clubs, are usually feared because the altitude
* In South America there is the legend of the Encantados, pink river dolphins that change into men so they can seduce and/or abduct human women. Unexplained pregnancies? Hey, blame the dolphins. Who
* In South Australia Family First MP Dennis Hood had a law passed, where all R rated films in South Australia (eg:
* In southern Alberta, there was a long-time bachelor who, upon hearing of a recently-widowed woman with several little mouths to feed, offered to marry her so that she'd have someone to help support her and her children. His actions were seen as hugely honourable by the community.
* In Southern California, a Metrolink rail ticket can get you on every bus for free or at a discount - unless you happen to be going to or from Santa Monica.
* In Southern California, where these snacks are found in every convenience store, truckstop, and grocery, nobody thinks twice about the name.

* In South Korea it's almost the same, you only move your finger one to the left. Effectively flipping somebody off in the process.
* In South Korean boy band BEAST's song "Shock", member Junhyung says "This song is not over!". Then the song ends.
* In South Korea, the anime came first due to a ban on Japanese cultural products preventing the game from being imported.
* In South Korea, the first two seasons premiered on Tooniverse in April 2014, 3 1/2 years after its original debut (which, by the way, was longer than it took for South Korea to release more anime and to release the Nintendo DS Lite after they completely lifted the ban on Japanese cultural products in 2004). Seasons 3 onwards were released exclusively on Netflix.
* In South Korea, when a phone conversation is over, the callers simply hang up. Saying goodbye is not needed, although they may make a certain "Hmm" sound, indicating that they're about to hang up.
* In Soviet Russia, ┳━┳ ︵╯(.□.╯)
* IN SPACE! after reformed villain Major Threat boards the Skullship and proceeds to kill him with kindness:
* IN SPACE!. A lone Pak (a highly intelligent, super strong, long lived creature) gets stranded on a primitive world. He introduces the natives (who have Bronze Age technology) to technology in steps, hibernating for unknown periods between each step. He needs to do this to escape the primitive world, by reaching the ramscoop level.
* IN SPACE! and during the initial contact the dialogue between the ships captain and the sonar man is almost identical to the spaceship allegory, including the initial bearing of the shadowy contact, and the ship's course change to determine whether the contact is genuine or a sensor malfunction.
* In "Spacecase", Dexter volunteers Dee Dee to go with the aliens in space. Along with realizing she may get harmed by the aliens, he begins to miss her and admits he can't even work at his lab without her presence. This prompts him to go and rescue her from the aliens.
* in space). During that time, you can ONLY use Rinoa's 2nd limit break. Once Rinoa and Angelo reunite, that is when you get access to both limit breaks.
* In Space, Everyone Can See Your Face: Having lights on the inside of a helmet makes it largely impossible to see out of it in an otherwise dark environment, but otherwise we would be unable to see the actors' faces.
* In Space, Everyone Can See Your Face: Somebody's face is visible through a space helmet.
* IN SPACE! featured this style of play often in its printed adventures, with alien animals filling in for the monsters.
* In spaceflight, only one orbital rocket launch has ever occurred on the Leap Day: a Japanese ionospheric research satellite, ISS-1, on February 29, 1976. American astronaut Jack Lousma was born on February 29, 1936.
* in Space had Goldar and Scorpina in the first season, and the second and third seasons had Goldar and Rito Revolto.
* In Space have Earth in a much smaller role or not used at all thanks to its more cosmic focus.
* in space. He is also the only one to wear them even though he is by no means the only one who digs tunnels.
* in space. His influence is so great, he still manages to fulfill this role despite only setting foot on the player's ship once in-game.
* IN SPACE!) is brain-damaged, so he sees everything as it was prior to his awakening, when Necrons were the only living creatures in the galaxy, and so thinks captured enemy leaders are rival Necron claimants to the Throne. His bodyguard has no such problems, and is always regretful to announce to his master that his latest guests have suffered an "unfortunate accident".
* In Space — all three had various interior sets (mainly the Astro Megaship and the interiors of Terra Venture's command tower and the Lightspeed Aquabase) which would be shot on tape, but however they did it, it would have even smootherlooking footage than the normal American stuff.

* In Space. Not a single Disney-era Ranger charted. In this case, first production company wins. Though it helps by the cast staying around for a lot longer than most of the other Rangers, rather than being replaced every year.
* In space of more conventional guns. But a shell from a Nova Cannon fires a massive, exploding shell at relativistic speeds, and is capable of destroying entire squadrons of kilometre-long spacecraft, thousands of kilometres apart, in a spectacular explosion.
* In "Space Pilot 3000", Fry learns that anyone who refuses the job assignment programmed into their career chip gets
* In "Space Pilot 3000", Leela informs Fry that those who refuse the jobs assigned by their job chips will be fired.
* In "Space Race," Rufus shines a light on the plight of Katherine Johnson, a black woman who was the linchpin of the Apollo 13 project, but was relegated to the basement and ignored by history. She's happily surprised when Rufus calls her his hero, but utterly gobsmacked when an elderly white man (who is another time traveler) says the same thing.
* In "Space Seed", Lt. McGivers has several portraits of historic conquerors in her quarters, including
* In "Space Seed", Spock refers to the Eugenics War, which occurred in the 1990s, as
* In space, showers are sonic; Captain Sheridan raves about the fact that his quarters have a water-based shower, which was not the case on the warship he commanded previously.
* In Space!). So there are three different racial remnants who all disagree on exactly which bits of their former culture should be remembered.
* In Space, There Are No Emotions, the (autistic) main character, Simon, states during a monologue that he dislikes people who speak in sayings and metaphor.
* In SPACE, the two astronauts had hinted during interviews that they were considering invoking this trope. Unfortunately, the shuttle launch ended up being postponed to May 2011 and the opportunity was lost.
* In SPACE. They are the Imperium's only source of "digital weapons", miniature one-shot versions of full-sized weapons normally used by the Imperium that can be worn on a finger.
* IN SPACE version of this game has combinable gun cards, leading up to a "Bananafanafofaser Bobaser Dazer Maser Shmaser Raser... of DOOM", which actually would follow through with the 'of doom'ing as it would be insanely powerful.
* in spades, the last time he summoned them, it was because his girlfriend dumped him.
* in Spain in 2011 when a suicidal woman loaded her car to the top with gasoline cans, rear-ended a lorry, and survived with no damage due to fire. The trope was thus invoked, exaggerated, inverted and averted.
* In Spain it was gag dubbed as "Humor Amarillo" (Yellow Humour), and was quite popular in the early 90s. It was briefly revived in 2006-2007 and reruns are syndicated.
* In Spain "Me cago en la mar" (I shit in the sea) has "Me cachis en la mar". In some areas that is shortened to "cachi la mar". In Spain, many cuss words have similar euphemisms, though "joder" (fuck) probably is the word with the most substitutions: "joer", "jope", "jolín", "jolines", and more.
* In Spain, mobile phone company Airtel (merged into Vodafone in 2001) launched a
* In Spain, Portugal, and Cuba, the equivalent of a snipe hunt is hunting "gamusinos"/"gambuzinos", an even more jerkish version, since (unlike the snipe) the gamusino does not even exist. The term ultimately comes from the Provençal word "gambozi", meaning "lie".
* In Spain, the penalty for pickpocketing is a small fine as long as the suspect only tried stealing a certain amount (or nothing, if they didn't actually manage to get anything). As a result, a particularly "successful" theft can easily be what gets a serial pickpocket sent to jail.
* In Spain, the Pink Panther is more associated with a pink sweet bun children love eating than with any of the movies. At least the Pink Panther appears on the package.

* In Spain, The Santa Compaña ("Holy Company") is a deep-rooted mythical belief in rural Galicia and Asturias. It is also known under the names of "Estadea", "As da nuite" (The Night Ones), etc. It may be related to Odin's Wild Hunt, or the Breton Celtic westward processions of the dead to the End of the World. Many different versions can be found; however, the common image is a procession of the dead or souls in torment that wanders the path of a parish at midnight, led by a living person carrying a cross and a cauldron of holy water. The person carrying the cross must never turn around or renounce his duty in leading the Santa Compaña; he can only be freed from his duty if he manages to find another person to carry the cross and the cauldron, and to avoid this obligation the person who sees the Santa Compaña pass by must draw a circle on the ground and enter it, or he can also lie face-down. There is also a version of the legend resembling even more the Wild Hunt, called the Corteju de Genti de Muerti ("Entourage of Death Folk"), found in the rural Extremadura, in which the souls take the form of corpses riding horses.
* In Spain, to call a young child "mono/mona" (basically, calling them a monkey) is a compliment, basically saying that they are very cute.
* In "Spanakopita!", Billy Quizboy has a dream inspired by the fact that his archenemy is ruining his Greek vacation. The enemy is animated as a
* In Spanish and Portuguese there are still two places named America; the country better known as United States and the continent of America (North and South America are considered one single continent in the Latin world), whilst this is not the case in English and other languages were North America and South America are two different continents thus America can only be applied to the country. This causes a lot of controversy as many Spanish and Portuguese-speaking peoples find offensive the use of America in reference to the United States and their citizens. The term American (
* In Spanish, as well, it's not uncommon to swap the word for "shit" with the word for "Wednesday" ("Mierda" and "Miércoles", respectively); be it mid-word or deliberately from the start.
* In Spanish, "Cazar" is "to hunt" and "Casar" is "to wed." In Latin America and some parts of Spain, the pronunciation is identical. The word "esposa", which means wife, also means handcuff. Same goes for the plural "esposas".
* In Spanish-speaking communities, they fear El Coco. They tell their children, "Duérmete niño, duérmete ya... Que viene el Coco y te comerá." In English, it loosely means, "Sleep child, sleep now... Or else el Coco will come and eat you."
* In "Spare That Rod", Walter Denton and Stretch Snodgrass alter a ten-year-old letter they find addressed to a previous principal. The letter was from the head of the board, accusing the principal of being "flagrantly dictatorial" in his management of the school. They use a typewriter to readdress the letter to Principal Conklin.
* In "Sparkly Star Switcheroo", the babies (sans Piggy and Rowlf) form a team of thieves to swap out Summer's Sparkly Star painting for a non-sparkly replica when Piggy thinks the painting is for her when Summer meant to give it to Rowlf. Animal is seen eating popcorn as he watches the monitors in the Muppet Bus, having taken on the job as the lookout.
* In "Spartacus: War of the Damned", when the rebels capture the city of Sinuessa en Valle, a guard manages to escape, find the Roman army, and inform them of what happened. Even though it is pointed out he did the smart thing because if he had stayed, he would have surely been killed and the army would not have learned of the takeover, Julius Caesar angrily calls him a coward and kills him on the spot.
* In Sparta, women were allowed to compete in athletic competitions, and they did so just as buck-naked as the men did. Spartan men were allowed to watch as part of the process of choosing a wife, leading to some to complain the young men weren't choosing wives based on their character.
* In "Speak of the Devil," Matt Murdock visits the art gallery run by Wilson

Fisk's girlfriend Vanessa Marianna, hoping to tease some information out of Vanessa. While Matt is talking with her, Fisk shows up and Matt has to make some awkward small talk with him about the tenancy dispute Fisk is having with one of Nelson & Murdock's clients to avoid blowing his cover.
* In Special 4: Kitten & Tzeentch play a Children's Card Game, Tzeentch, Chaos god of trickery and schoolyard bully,
* In "specially marked", Strong Bad says that the best cereal box prizes are found in cereals named after sound effects, like "Smacks, pops, puffs, blasts, and... um, gunshots in a crowded mall."
* In "Spectacle", a young man decides that the only way to get the police to actually
* : Inspector Bloch, Dylan's former superior from Scotland Yard, is always in need of some anti-emetics and often complains that they don't make them as effective as they used to do.
* Inspector Brackenreid once suggested it to Dr. Ogden. It was when Detective Murdoch and she had a falling out, and he began a relationship with a young widow.
* Inspector Canardo hasn't been shown eating the treats Canardo bribes him with during the autopsy but he did say that he drinks the alcoholic stomach content of people that are brought to him (autopsy is a lot like cuisine, you must taste all the sauce).
* Inspector Canardo when they killed a member of Rasputin's gang to take the drugs he was transporting.
* Inspector Chingum and is about the character Inspector Chingum moving to Shantiwood to fight supervillains sent out by No Baal, the owner of Crime Academy.
* Inspector Chingum, the city of Shantiwood has a big sign reading "SHANTIWOOD" in the same style as the Hollywood sign.
* Inspector Clouseau, interrogating Ballon, innocent at the time but eventually one of the four murderers in the case he is on, in the process.
* Inspector Elliot gathers all of the circus folk in the centre ring for
* Inspector Flintlock is a xenophobic cop who hates all immigrants, especially "illegals." Never mind that the Free State is so isolationist that even if someone sincerely wanted to immigrate legally, they probably
* Inspector Forsooth's Whodunits, even citing the classic example of "the English professor who 'committed suicide' and left a note filled with grammatical mistakes."
* Inspector Gadget (1999): Sanford Scolex (aka. Dr. Claw) and Dr. Brenda Bradford.
* Inspector Gadget (2015), Antoine Durand voices the Inspector, who was voiced by his father (Luc Durand) in the original series.
* Inspector Gadget (2015) records her dialogue for Penny in Los Angeles.
* Inspector Gadget 2, as she can feel emotions and even cries at one point.
* Inspector Gadget 2: At the beginning of the film, Gadget arrests an elderly woman—who turns out to be Chief Quimby's mother—for drag racing and driving without a license. In reality, she was only going .3 MPH over the speed limit and accidentally left her wallet at home. While Quimby chews Gadget out for this, it is mentioned that the latter had arrested a group of girl scouts the previous week. Their crime? Selling cookies that were three days past expiration date. Riverton's crime rate has fallen significantly since Claw's imprisonment, so Gadget is bored due to the lack of real crime. Of course, Claw escapes from prison soon after that.
* Inspector Gadget 2, but viewers are divided. Some like it for being more faithful to the original cartoon than the first film (Gadget and Claw are no longer referred to by their civilian names from the first film, Gadget is more bumbling with Penny having to essentially do his job for him and Claw speaks with a gravelly voice and hides his face under a hat.) and others hate it for those same reasons along with its recasting of every character except the Gadgetmobile and weaker special effects. Then there are those who hate it, but still think it's better than the first film.
* Inspector Gadget 2, Dr. Claw's evil plan is to freeze time so that he can rob the Federal Reserve in Riverton.

* Inspector Gadget 2 has The Blue Monkey, which is where Claw is getting his henchmen from. Gadget goes in undercover and ends up getting beaten up by the patrons until G2 shows up and saves him.
* Inspector Gadget 2 is set in the fictional Riverton, Ohio but was filmed in and around Brisbane, Australia with an Australian supporting cast. The commentary track on the DVD notes that actors would occasionally lapse back into their natural Australian accents.
* Inspector Gadget 2: One of G2's own gadgets it's splitting herself in a half, so her legs can work as separate combatants.
* Inspector Gadget 2 smile! Better yet, she's still gap-toothed in subsequent scenes.
* Inspector Gadget 2 so that her legs work as separate combatants. Since she's a robot it's no problem.
* Inspector Gadget 2: The titular Inspector Gadget falls in love with his successor G2. Keep in mind that Gadget is a cyborg and thus still part human, while G2 is a fully robotic android. Despite being a robot, G2 is somehow able to return Gadget's affections. While they don't have sex (since this is a kid's movie) they do kiss at the end.
* Inspector Gadget) after he seriously injured himself by... slipping on a banana peel. A surprisingly realistic depiction for a children's cartoon.
* Inspector Gadget alternates between being saved by Brain (who often takes the bullet in the process) and sheer luck. And it's hilarious.
* Inspector Gadget and his tamed tiger. As usual, Gadget is completely oblivious to the fact he's in any danger, thinking they just want to help.
* Inspector Gadget and she's just a young girl, Penny fits this role more often than not, with her and her dog Brain helping crack every one of Gadget's cases behind the scenes.
* Inspector Gadget, a series of very minor crimes committed by MAD agents, when plotted out on a map of Metro city, spell out MAD. The intent of this plan was for Gadget to figure this out and be waiting for them at the final crime scene, where they had laid a trap for him.
* Inspector Gadget, a van that could turn into a police car. On the villain's end of the show, Dr. Claw had the Madmobile, a limo that could turn into a personal airplane or submarine.
* Inspector Gadget both show the titular characters being much more competent than they are on their respective shows. Gadget even comes close to catching Dr. Claw in his opening, which never happened on the show.
* Inspector Gadget, Brain the intelligent dog bites the evil Dr. Claw, ripping off at the same time his blue boxers (no nudity, it's a Disney movie).
* Inspector Gadget, Chief Quimby is disguised as a Mall Santa in one of the series' more memorable extended gags.
* Inspector Gadget, Claw's henchman Sykes at one point screams "Mama" when Dr. Claw tries to use him to get Bradford's technology to work.
* Inspector Gadget)" could count; he's warning people that he's about to activate a gadget, knowing full well that it might not work according to plan...
* Inspector Gadget/Cuckoo's Nest (Taiwan; credited as the latter only).
* Inspector Gadget did 65 episodes and was then renewed for an additional 21. The second season replaced the voice cast (Except for Gadget, Brain, and Dr. Claw) due to voice recording moving to Hollywood after being outsourced to Toronto for Season 1. (The characters mentioned were already having their voices recorded in Hollywood.)
* (Inspector) Gadget doesn't seem to be known by any other name other than his title/rank.
* Inspector Gadget does the same, but also has some one-time villains with no connection to M.A.D. or Dr. Claw.
* Inspector Gadget: Dr. Claw's henchman Brick reaffirms a news report that Riverton's Federal Reserve branch is "impen—impreg—really hard to get into."
* Inspector Gadget English-language season introduced this when it was absent in the first 65 episodes.

* Inspector Gadget episode "A Star Is Lost", Gadget, Rick Rocker, etc. are tied up with reel-to-reel tape and put on a conveyor belt that goes through a record pressing machine. Similarly, in "Quimby Exchange", the characters are frozen in blocks of ice and sent towards a chopping machine.
* Inspector Gadget episode "A Star is Lost" has a dart-shooting piano and an electrified harp in MAD's music studio.
* Inspector Gadget episode featured a search for a potato-based one of these, in the old hand-cranked version.
* Inspector Gadget episode "Gadget's Clean Sweep," where the main characters go back in time to 19th century London to stop M.A.D. from killing Gadget's ancestors of the time (Char and Chimney Gadget, both of whom are chimney sweeps). In many scenes, there is some kind of fog shown throughout London, and we even have characters disappearing and reappearing in the fog.
* Inspector Gadget episode "King Wrong", Gadget is assigned to the far-off country of Pianostan to protect its unhappy king, who bears a striking resemblance to Gadget.
* Inspector Gadget episode "The Infiltration", which takes place in England, features Chief Quimby posing as a guard to give Gadget his assignment. Gadget tries to take advantage of the situation by telling the Chief to say nothing if he could have a raise. The Chief just hands him another message that says 'No'.
* Inspector Gadget featured Gadget racing to find a MAD-planted bomb hidden in an amusement park. Unbeknownst to him, he's been carrying the bomb all along. It's concealed inside a cheap carnival prize he won at the start of the show.
* Inspector Gadget film use this to make the protagonist's car slip, eventually making it flip over and tumble.
* Inspector Gadget from an electrified chicken, but comes out unscathed.
* Inspector Gadget, Gadget chases one of the villains into a cave while another one is running out. The villains run into each other, and then Gadget run into them.
* Inspector Gadget: Gadgetmobile does this to Gadget during their first meeting.
* Inspector Gadget, Gadget's hat includes a scrolling marquee that displays the Miranda rights during an attempted arrest.
* Inspector Gadget gets pantsed by his robotic double during their big fight scene.
* Inspector Gadget gives Penny more flaws, though she still looks far more competent than Gadget.
* Inspector Gadget "Going my way?" Turns out it did make him go their way...
* Inspector Gadget has an inversion: Dr. Claw frequently punishes his cat for laughing with him.
* Inspector Gadget has a tofu restaurant called O'Ronald's (read: McDonald's) as a major plot point.
* Inspector Gadget has Gadget skating in front of the DiC logo. The hammer from his hat rises to dot the "i", and then he stumbles off screen.
* Inspector Gadget has Scolex Industries, which produces technology such as robots and androids (such as the RoboGadget line).
* Inspector Gadget. Heart symbols go sliding across it during an intimate moment.
* Inspector Gadget, he gets irritated when the Inspector incorrectly conjugates a Spanish verb and corrects him.
* Inspector Gadget. He has robotic parts, but several episodes imply that he used to be human. For example, he still has basic human needs such as hunger and sleeping.
* Inspector Gadget he's in danger. Brain, the dog, also qualifies for this trope on occasion.
* Inspector Gadget, inevitably she stumbled across more than her fair share of conveniently placed sharp things.
* Inspector Gadget infiltrates an important police meeting as Gadget himself. When the real one shows up, he accidentally knocks down Chief Quimby with his mallet, prompting Quimby to order the other one arrested.
* Inspector Gadget: In "Monster Lake", Dr. Claw swaps a road sign to send the Gadgetmobile plunging off a cliff.

* Inspector Gadget: In one episode, Doctor Claw's scheme involves using a growth serum on plants. His henchman uses it on a Venus flytrap to sic it on Gadget. As usual, Penny and Brain have to rescue him, subduing the creature with knockout gas.
* Inspector Gadget: Inspector Gadget's niece Penny, so much so that she and their dog Brain are the ones who actually do most of the work.
* Inspector Gadget: In "The Infiltration", Brain escapes Gadget in this manner. In the stairwell, Gadget performs his own version of this with the Gadget Copter... only to crash into a chandelier.
* Inspector Gadget involved burglaries being committed by teleporting the stolen goods through telephone lines. Since the houses being burgled would be empty, a trained squirrel would be used to knock the receiver off its hook at the right moment.
* Inspector Gadget is all too happy to help any civilian (or, more frequently, unrecognized MAD agent) he sees with any minor problem he even believes he perceives them having, usually completely derailing whatever he was doing before then.
* Inspector Gadget is never shown on screen, only his gloved hands. Even then, we don't know if they're gloves or mechanical parts. While the live-action films and his toy show a human-looking man, the cartoon is more ambiguous, especially with the deep, guttural voice he speaks in. While other cartoons do show he has family, including a very human-looking nephew, this doesn't necessarily mean he is or was human.
* Inspector Gadget is normally a bumbling buffoon who only shows his (admittedly massive) competence when he knows the people he cares about are in danger. Here, he's a no-nonsense badass capable of quick and precise pre- and mid-combat analysis of his foes.
* Inspector Gadget) is seen at the party as a guest named "Mr. D.I.C."
* Inspector Gadget, it's revealed that Gadget was taking part as part of the investigation and could not claim the prize. The official winner is someone else.
* Inspector Gadget know who Penny is) sees her on his security camera and points her out to his uncle Claw, who in turn says that he has no idea who she is or why Talon is suddenly so obsessed with low-value coins.
* Inspector Gadget, Kramer. Options include an Opera hand, a Sushi hand and a Medieval Fair hand (which is just a mace ball attachment).
* Inspector Gadget: MAD assassins try to bump off Gadget by poisoning the hors d'oeuvres at a party he's attending. Brain gets rid of them by dumping them in a nearby potted plant, which promptly wilts and dies.
* Inspector Gadget, MAD went around the world causing chaos for... some reason.
* Inspector Gadget makes it clear that the only thing still real about Gadget is his brain.
* Inspector Gadget — John Brown is an average Joe security guard at Bradford Labs until Sanford Scolex raids the lab, resulting in a confrontation that leaves Brown with a broken body. Brown is re-built into a better than new, if bumbling, cyborg detective: Inspector Gadget. Gadget has all sorts of technology and comedic gadgets built into his rebuilt body.
* Inspector Gadget might have been if he'd been rebuilt out of Maxwell Smart instead of Alex Murphy.
* Inspector Gadget, most notably in the opening sequence of "The Coo-Coo Clock Caper."
* Inspector Gadget movie, featured a collar that translates dog language to English, which they put on Brain.
* Inspector Gadget movie has Gadget as an injured police officer who gets converted into a cyborg by the experimental Gadget Program.
* Inspector Gadget movie where Gadget requires a computer chip in order for his cyborg body to function. However, after the chip is taken out and smashed by Claw, it turns out that he can still operate without it.
* Inspector Gadget. Naturally, this goes about as well as expected, with Gadget getting his Finger Key stuck in the keyhole and his foot stuck in the slot.
* Inspector Gadget nemesis Dr. Claw tried to team up with a Yellow Peril villain on two separate occasions. First the "Great Samurai Waruda" who hailed from Japan, then later the nefarious Mr. Chow from Hong Kong.

* Inspector Gadget never use the same evil plan twice, he always hires a new specialist agent for each new plan (but uses the same generic mooks for everything else).
* Inspector Gadget Oddly enough, its trunk is large enough to accommodate Claw's escape jet.
* Inspector Gadget often does this while proclaiming "I'll get you next time, Gadget!".
* Inspector Gadget...only he'd just fallen down the stairs! From a banana peel, no less.
* Inspector Gadget, particularly if it's the same character at different ages or two distinct ones such as father and son. Heather is not unlike an older Penny, but the two girls are clearly different.
* Inspector Gadget. Possibly justified in that we're never shown exactly how much of Gadget's body is still organic enough to be affected by a vacuum.
* Inspector Gadget: "Quiz Master" featured a MAD plot to hypnotize contestants on a game show (including Gadget himself at one point) to do Dr. Claw's bidding with the phrase "Going my way?"
* Inspector Gadget realizes that they are his enemies. Then again said agents include three specific mooks that are ALWAYS there and Gadget doesn't recognize them either, so odds are Doctor Claw knows there's nothing to worry about.
* Inspector Gadget rectified this by having Claw's left hand be smashed by a bowling ball and replaced with a mechanical pincer.
* Inspector Gadget revival series has been in development since at least 2012, but series co-creator Andy Heyward has been hyping it up since at least 2009.
* Inspector Gadget Robo-Gadget, who's not so much impersonating a police officer as he is downright smearing the police officer's good name by committing all sorts of crimes.
* Inspector Gadget robot buddy. He's got everything he might ever need at his fingertips, and all he needs is someone who's paying attention to hang around and tell him.
* Inspector Gadget Saves Christmas concluded with "Gadget and the Red Rose", which involves Dr. Claw bringing a old gangster out of retirement to eliminate Gadget. Despite how the plot sounds, it plays out like an ordinary episode. The only clue that it was the final episode was the very ending: Gadget had been lured into the trap by the old ladies pretending to be his fan club, and even after they're arrested Gadget still believes they're his biggest fans. The episode ends with Gadget proudly saying he owes everything to his fans, and holding an autographed picture up to the viewer, which winks.
* Inspector Gadget, sending them adrift, towards a (perhaps somehow recently unfrozen) waterfall.
* Inspector Gadget's less complicated technologies inflates his coat like a giant balloon, allowing him to float over obstacles.
* Inspector Gadget: Spreads across several iterations of the franchise—the larger MAD henchmen tend to talk like this. Corporal Capeman, who somehow manages to be even dumber than Gadget, also speaks with this kind of a voice.
* Inspector Gadget starred Matthew Broderick. Though the film was a critical disaster and despised by fans, it made enough money to spawn a direct-to-DVD sequel... starring French Stewart. Ironically, the latter was more faithful to the cartoon show that spawned it.
* Inspector Gadget's teeth are shown to be these in "Prince of the Gypsies." They can pop out of his mouth and fly around by remote control.
* Inspector Gadget take place in a gigantic machine which creates the letters of the title.
* Inspector Gadget that has enough punch to lay waste to the unfortunate car.
* Inspector Gadget. The episode begins with him thawing out of the iceberg he had been trapped in.
* Inspector Gadget, the Health Spa from the episode of the same name has one.

* Inspector Gadget, there's Robo-Gadget, an evil android duplicate of the real Gadget built by Claw. Aside from his telescoping limbs, all his gadgets are destructive things, like scythes, rotary blades, and tommy guns. Still, he's barely any more competent than the real thing. (Maybe even less so, seeing as the real thing is able to trash him.)
* Inspector Gadget The rest of the Metro City police only turn up at the end of the episode, except for the two or three shows where Inspector Gadget is framed; then the entire department turns up to arrest Gadget himself.
* Inspector Gadget There was also a video game that showed half his face that used the same design.
* Inspector Gadget. The sequel series, taking place two years after the first show, shows that Brain had a breakdown between shows and was moved to a riverside house. He's fine around Penny, and warms up to the robot sidekicks that took his place, but is terrified to see Gadget or even hear the word gadget.
* Inspector Gadget. The surprise, in this case, being the Gadgetmobile slamming into the back of Claw's limo.
* Inspector Gadget. The title character's entire body is literally made of this trope.
* Inspector Gadget. This also happens whenever a MAD Agent gets caught in whatever explosive trap they had planned for Gadget.
* Inspector Gadget, though she always hides herself from her Uncle (and often gets caught by the villains instead).
* Inspector Gadget toyline had a toy Dr. Claw with his face shown, the package hid his face and you could only see by opening it. Since his face isn't revealed at any point in the show (and the toy is infamously goofy-looking), its canonicity is questionable, that design went into the SNES videogame.
* Inspector Gadget visited such a country (a top-secret police convention was being held there). Uniquely, he insisted throughout the episode that it was all for the tourists' benefit. There was even a haunted castle; unsurprisingly, it was Dr. Claw up to his usual hijinks.
* Inspector Gadget was one of these: a ditzier version of Brenda (Gadget's creator) with enhanced breasts and a skintight purple bodysuit. The novelization (a kids' tie-in) gives her a line where she states that she's Scolex's "pleasure unit." Understandably, the real Brenda is more than slightly horrified.
* Inspector Gadget, whenever Frank Welker wasn't available Dr. Claw was instead voiced by Don Francks, father of Cree Summer who voiced Penny.
* Inspector Gadget, which come out melted. He says it's "too hot" for him, but they try to dump it on him anyway.
* Inspector Gadget. While not being much of a blowhard himself, he nevertheless suffers greatly from Gadget's bumbling.
* Inspector Gadget, while technically a cyborg, has telescoping arms and legs, as well as various tools that extend of all parts of his body.
* Inspector Gadget), who can never quite remember why he keeps that guy on the payroll. ("Why do I put up with him?") The tradition even remains in later series when Chief Quimby made a guest appearance.
* Inspector Gadget, who even incorporated gadgets into the title character's body.
* Inspector Gadget, whom we honour for unintentionally saving the day.
* Inspector Gadget), who was subsequently dubbed over by the more Don Adams-esque Jesse White, who himself was replaced with Don Adams himself for the rest of the show.
* Inspector Gadget with Dr. Claw who often oversees his minions' operations this way.
* Inspector Gadget, with Gadget blissfully unaware of the MAD agents out to do him in.
* Inspector Gadget would come out, as if his equipment has a "when all else fails, hit things" directive. Occasionally he would make a remark like, "One of these days, I've got to get these gadgets fixed."
* Inspector George Gently: At the end of "Son of a Gun", the skinhead leader Jonjo Burden is blinded when the Sten gun he is aiming at Gently backfires. It turns out the boy he was forcing into modifying it hadn't finished boring out the barrel.

* Inspector George Gently: Colonel Darwin in "Gently with Honour". He is so obsessed with defeating the communists that he subjects his men to unauthorised drug experiments, tortures and murders them, and then commits further murders to cover up his crimes.
* Inspector George Gently episode "Gently Between The Lines". A local decides that a squatter living in an empty house is a pedophile because of his interest in a young boy (he is actually teaching the working class boy about poetry). This has tragic consequences.
* Inspector George Gently: Gently delivers one to a rapist and murderer in "Gently With the Women".
* Inspector George Gently: "Gently Going Under" features a half-siblings version. The girl's father had an affair with the boy's mother while her husband was away at the war. When the relationship is discovered, the father tries to move away and take the daughter with him but she is already pregnant. The boy's mother tells her the truth, causing her to attempt to abort the child.
* Inspector George Gently in "Gently Among Friends" is hiding the extent of his financial troubles from his wife, even while he is pawning their belongings and passing their disappearance off as theft.
* Inspector George Gently: In "Gently Between the Lines", a prisoner who died in the cells actually succumbed to liver damage sustained in a beating he received before he was arrested.
* Inspector George Gently: In "Gently Liberated", the discovery of the body of a man who went missing in 1962 causes Gently to reopen the case, as his wife had been convicted of his murder on flimsy evidence despite the lack of a body.
* Inspector George Gently: In "Gently Upside Down", Gently investigates the murder of a 17-year-old schoolgirl and discovers that she was having an affair with one of her teachers (who happens to be the father of one of her best friends). It turns out the teacher has a history of this.
* Inspector George Gently: In "Goodbye China", Gently uncovers a pair of police officers running an off-the-books detention centre for young offenders where they attempt to beat some respect for the law into them.
* Inspector George Gently: In "Son of a Gun", Rachel has her long hair cut short to allow her to infiltrate the skinhead subculture (and wears a wig when she is in the police station).
* Inspector George Gently: In the episode "Peace & Love," the murder victim has a matchbook from a particular bar in his pocket. Played with slightly, in that the barman remembers him even though he only went there once because he swiped all the matchbooks.
* Inspector George Gently is set in the 1960s, when such practices were widespread. However, Gently himself is fiercely opposed to it and will come down hard on any officer he finds indulging in police brutality. This becomes especially relevant in "Gently Between the Lines", when Gently and Bacchus are asked to investigate when a suspect dies in police custody, seemingly after being assaulted by three officers during a riot. Gently's superiors expect him to just sweep the whole incident under the rug, but they underestimate Gently's devotion to justice.
* Inspector George Gently is the main reason why he decides to go get checked out at the hospital.
* Inspector George Gently: This exchange between Bacchus and Gently at the end of "Son of a Gun (after Gently has faced down a Sten gun wielding skinhead):
* Inspector George Gently uses the social upheaval of the sixties as the basis of some of its plots, such as how birth control was only legal if one was married.
* Inspector George Gently - with the world weary but essentially decent DCI George Gently and and angry young man DS John Bacchus.
* Inspector Hans Kemp has one near the end of "He's Loose" in the musical version of
* Inspector Jacques Clouseau of such caliber that he was the very reason the world was in danger to begin with, though...
* Inspector Javert: A detective is obsessed with capturing and turning in someone accused of a crime, regardless of whether that person is truly guilty.

* Inspector Javert: A law enforcer is obsessed with turning in a wanted criminal, regardless of whether the person is truly guilty or not.
* Inspector Javert: An enforcer of the law who is obsessed with capturing someone accused of a crime, regardless of whether the person is truly guilty.
* Inspector Javert: Firmly believes that someone is pure evil and aggressively pursues them in order to punish them.
* Inspector Javert for pursuing the outlaw beyond devotion to the king: Robin Hood killed his relative in a dispute over deer hunting.
* Inspector Javert for when the person is aware that they're causing damage, pain, or death but justifies it as upholding the law against "good" criminals.
* Inspector Javert. He then puts on a leather jacket and shades and spends the rest of the film ripping apart a secret government conspiracy while simultaneously hunting down a North Korean master assassin.
* Inspector Javert is off stopping real criminals when he's not trying to arrest Jean Valjean.
* Inspector Javert tendencies provoke the events of the Spirited Away and Atonement chapters.
* Inspector Javert: We know without a shadow of a doubt that you're no good to the core and we will stop at nothing to make sure you get your proper punishment!
* Inspector Juste Volerti has a fixation on finding the Viridian Killer, who in the revolutions eighteen years ago sniped many people and cost Volerti an eye, two legs, and an arm.
* Inspector Lestrade plays the game and interacts with NPCs and game systems in the exact same way the player does. Preventing him arresting the wrong person can be difficult... unless you wait for him to get in a hansom cab, then tell the driver of
* Inspector Lestrade series, reveals himself to be this in the third game. He admits to Layton that his right-hand officer, Constable Barton, makes a metric ton of mistakes and probably should have been fired — but Chelmey will not allow him to be, because Barton tries hard and means well and Chelmey trusts and is fond of him.
* Inspector Lestrade: Where this detective is good at getting the pieces of a problem, they are lacking in skills with observation because of their sheer incompetence.
* Inspector Lunge loses his family and eventually takes an unpaid vacation of several months to try and catch Tenma. He's so determined that, while dying of blood loss he handcuffs himself to Tenma to try and stop him from escaping.
* Inspector Lynley Barbara Havers in all her awkward, bitter, broken glory, and changed her mind. To this day Small's performance is lauded as one of the best aspects of the series.
* Inspector Lynley been used as a punching bag, and in fact, Barbara obviously nails Lynley a time or two before he can get through to her and she recognizes him.
* Inspector Lynley by fans with good reason — but Lynley/Havers is still the favourite by a considerable distance.
* Inspector Lynley?" Clearly, this time she trusts him not to go off the deep end.
* Inspector Lynley, for one), but what the hell, here's just a few examples which do:
* Inspector Lynley; however, he trusts her so absolutely that, although he goes a bit to pieces whenever she's threatened, he follows this trope anyway - partly because he's just that honorable, and partly because if he didn't, he knows full well that she'd give him a tongue-lashing he'd never forget.
* Inspector Lynley. She tries to be stoic throughout their conversation but ultimately gives up, at which point she tries to say Please Put Some Clothes On, but then changes her mind half-way and becomes even more embarrassed. Lynley understands exactly what's going on but finds it amusing anyway.
* Inspector Lynley, whereupon she absolutely falls apart and sobs hysterically into his shirt while he kisses her hair and clutches her close.
* Inspector Lynley who killed Eugenie Martin until he is murdered in the same way.

* Inspector Mackenzie of Scotland Yard is this to Bunny and Raffles, the criminal protagonists of the
* Inspector Megure and Superintendent Matsumoto have pretty nice moustaches as well.
* Inspector Monroe - The officer responsible for actual operational activities and shift manager for the station. Monroe was actually an active officer for most of his tenure on the show (1990-2002), involved in numerous operations and being heavily involved with actual policing but towards the end of his time, he became more and more of a desk jockey. The reasoning for this was because of the show's descent into a
* Inspector Morse and Kevin Whately respectively, to the point that Dexter started writing the characters with the actors in mind.
* Inspector Morse, a red 1960s Jaguar Mark II. The car became so iconic of the character that the novels written after the TV show started included it with no explanation of the change, even to the point of putting it on covers (art images, not photos from the show).
* Inspector Morse: At least two examples, one (dedicated to the proposition that all women are harlots) created by the Reverend Geoffrey Boyd, and the other (dedicated to an obsession with Morse himself) created by Hugo DeVries.
* Inspector Morse at the scene, he was also holding the murder weapon.
* Inspector Morse before the fourth season, however, so we never find out whether or not it actually went anywhere.
* Inspector Morse featuring a young Morse as a rookie cop in the 1960s.
* Inspector Morse feels a minor pain in his arm but either fails to realise or (more likely since his cardiologist had given him several warnings earlier in the series) simply chooses not to believe what's really happening. When we next see him, he's lying on the ground and someone is frantically calling 999.
* Inspector Morse had an interesting variation. A female office worker is being hassled by a creepy co-worker. When she leaves he starts chasing her in his own car, and by the time he gets her to stop she's quite hysterical — it turns out he's trying to warn her about the man he saw jumping into the back of her van.
* Inspector Morse has a subverted example: the short story "Morse's Greatest Mystery" is about the "one case he never solved", which is something as minor as someone stealing £20 from a Christmas charity box. Morse claims to have got the culprit, but it turns out he just replaced it with his own money. It turns out the "mystery" of the title refers to the cynical, materialist Morse beginning to understand altruism.
* Inspector Morse has been sick in the novels, and even on good days he is pretty squeamish about crime scenes.
* Inspector Morse: In "Service Of All The Dead", the identification of the first victim (by a fellow churchgoer) is a crucial part of the plot.
* Inspector Morse, Inspector Lewis actually refers to "that eureka moment".
* Inspector Morse: In "The Wench Is Dead", Morse is laid up in hospital and passes the time by reinvestigating a murder case from Oxford in 1859, which he suspects resulted in three wrongful convictions. (The murder case is fictional, but inspired by a real 1839 case.)
* Inspector Morse in which Morse believes the the trope is in play, but it turns out it really was an accident. However, the investigation uncovers an art fraud ring and at least one actual murder takes place during the episode.
* Inspector Morse is a fan of cryptic crosswords. Several of his novels give a crossword clue early in the book, and reveal the answer in a later chapter.
* Inspector Morse is played in a major key, for the first time in five years.
* Inspector Morse novel "Last Bus To Woodstock", a don recites what the narrative calls a "tired old joke" about rape: "Confucius, he say girl with skirt up, she run faster than man with trousers down, eh?"
* Inspector Morse (of course) – the opening bars of the theme music are supposed to spell out MORSE, but some fans argue that the gap in the middle of the M (two dashes) is slightly too long and so it actually spells TTORSE (T is a single dash). Also the opening theme sometimes tells you who the murderer is, but it has been known to lie.

* Inspector Morse once used this as a plot point; Morse noted that if someone were truly Oxford-educated as he claimed he would know his Greek roots well enough to spell "realize" with a "z", not with an "s".
* Inspector Morse personally than when they subsequently escalate to setting his house on fire.
* Inspector Morse pretty much does this one straight all the time, which is especially ironic considering that in real life Oxford has had barely any murders in the past 50 years.
* Inspector Morse relationship with Sergeant Lewis, a Geordie. In the original novels, Lewis is an elderly man and is Welsh. Kevin Whately, who plays Lewis, initially didn't think he'd be cast when he learned of the description of the book character. Colin Dexter, the author of the novels, not only praised Whately's performance as Lewis but also commented that if he could start the series over, he'd write a Lewis who was like his TV counterpart.
* Inspector Morse, starring Morse's sergeant/sidekick). This allows more stories about Morse on TV, even though both the character and the actor have died.
* Inspector Morse tendencies in the books were dropped for the TV series. As a result they were also considerably played down in the subsequent novels.
* Inspector Morse "The Dead of Jericho", Morse (who has no official standing in the case) makes a surreptitious investigation of the crime scene, and is caught by Detective Constable Walters. Once Morse has satisfied him about his motives for being there, Walters asks him how he got in. Unwilling to reveal the real answer (which involves bribery) Morse attempts to use this trope as an explanation:
* Inspector Morse turned out to be the case in some previous Morse mysteries) and curses his own incredible stupidity in picking up the knife like some brainless civvie.
* Inspector Morse who comes down with the flu. In the TV adaptation of the same name, the entire case takes place over a span of a few days (save for the court sequence at the end, which is a few weeks later) and thus drastically cuts down Bell's role, having Morse leading the investigation from the start.
* Inspector Ninzaburo Shiratori decided to become a policeman instead of a lawyer thanks to a chance encounter with a pint-sized Manic Pixie Dream Girl
* Inspector Rex, but in the Italian seasons there is Filippo Gori, who often scolds his team, especially the main inspectors, and wants the cases to be deemed as closed as soon as possible even if the real murderer has not been discovered.
* Inspector Rex: Chief Filippo Gori admires Lorenzo Fabbri and his successor Davide Rivera for being skillful policemen but hates their willingness to bypass the law.
* Inspector Rex had "Der Puppenmörder", featuring Christoph Waltz as the doll-obsessed villain of the week.
* Inspector Rex in earlier seasons of the show. Elke Wilkens played a minor character in season 7 before acting as Nikki Herzog.
* Inspector Rex: Inspector Marco Terzani starts out with stubble, but it later grows to a short beard.
* Inspector Rex: In the episode "Das Donaukrokodil", the murderer prepares a bath for her sister with strange algae (water of the Danube) and eventually drowns her. The killer leaves the body at the Danube.
* Inspector Rex, Marc tells a man he's interrogating that he's the good cop here, and when asked about who the bad cop is, he points to Rex.
* Inspector Rex. One of the characters is agonizing over which wire to cut. He can't come up with anything, the timer runs out — and his colleague had pulled the detonator out of the explosives.
* Inspector Rex: Stockinger got his own series after he was transferred to Salzburg. It lasted two seasons.
* Inspector Rex, the main characters face off against a satanic cult that murders women and leaves their bodies so that they form a giant pentagram.
* Inspector Rex:The protagonist is a dog who is very smart and has saved his "comrades" (including his owners) and single episode characters.
* Inspector Sheridan right as he's trying to gain control of the Nexus...

* Inspector Spacetime) gets an American adaptation which, courtesy of Pierce, is so bad he bypasses the Heroic BSOD and goes straight for the hate.
* Inspector Spacetime tendencies (and occasionally still does). They go on to form a team called the Barefoot Bounty Hunters.
* Inspector Spector: he sold his soul to Satan to be the world's greatest detective.
* Inspector Tequila has to outrun an exploding hospital at the end of * Inspector Todd is Axel Foley's boss in the Detroit Police Department. He gives Foley a hard time about his
* Inspector Willoughby, in the Walter Lantz cartoon shorts, until he became—well—
* Inspector Willoughby shorts features a man trying to escape prison. During the last attempt, he tries to ram the gates but then Inspector Willoughby just opens them and informs him he's been pardoned. He then wants to be let back in prison.
* Inspector Zenigata. Cagliostro doesn't even acknowledge it, being the asshole he is.
* Inspector Zenigata is drawn with a squarish face, befitting his role as
* In speech (as opposed to singing) verisimilitude is not in the pitch or the timbre, as there's a fairly large overlap in both between male and female voices. For about the upper two-thirds of the tenor range and about the lower two-thirds of the alto range, speech mannerisms, subtle and less so, dominate. Skillful manipulation of these can produce a convincing voice (male, female, or genderless) in almost anyone of any sex or gender. For that matter, a person's timbre is more flexible than most people give it credit for.
* In "Spelling Bee My Baby" Francine locks Akiko in the basement to ensure that Steve would win the spelling bee. She later lets her out after realizing that Steve truly loves her.
* In "SPF", Peanut is seen cleaning a gun while pointing the barrel to his face.
* In Spice Girls vs. Hanson, Marilyn Manson gets one on both combatants by crushing them under the light rigging.
* In Spider Robinson's short story "True Minds", the great romance novelist Philip Rose and his wife Dr. R.V. Walton cannot have sex for very tragic reasons. Decades ago she took the opportunity to join the research team on a space station, only to find out that one of the downsides for humans living in that environment for too long is that they can no longer survive on Earth. Even worse, Philip also has a congenital heart condition that ensures he would never survive the difficult trip to space. The only contact the couple has had with each other for most of their married life is through a monitor. Both are absolutely committed to each other as well, so they refuse to have sex with anyone else. This is even more frustrating for Philip since he's a famous romance novelist with many admirers who have offered themselves to him.
* In "Spies Reminiscent of Us", Stewie is knocked out, and he can't set up the cutaway properly. This leads to him standing in an empty white room. Then, famous athlete Wilma Rudolph runs by. Stewie comments: "Obviously, she had something to do with the gag, but I didn't hear the setup, so I don't really know the context." Later in the same episode, the cast meets Vladimir Putin, who shows them a Russian Cutaway Gag, which consists of
* In "Spike at your Service", some of this seems to have rubbed off on Spike, as he's made a list of things to do on his free day. Although the list only contains three entries which he works off in a minute (leaving several yards of blank paper).
* In "Spike At Your Service", Spike kicks a mushroom that hits a cat off-screen.
* In Spike's first appearance, Giles mentions that he got his nickname by driving railroad spikes through his victims' heads. Three seasons later, "Fool For Love" reveals that, before he became a vampire, Spike was a fop best known for his atrocious poetry; one of his "critics" claims that he'd rather have a railroad spike driven through his head than listen to it.
* In Spike's introductory episode, Angel tries this with Xander as the prisoner, using

* In "Spins a Web", the General does when the class re-enters the bus through a vacuum tube. When he does so, Arnold, who somehow wound up sitting in the overhead bin,
* In "Spiral" Ben appears to be about to kill Dawn with a fatal injection, having been told doing so would give him a normal Glory-less life, but it turns out to be a morphine shot for Giles.
* In "Spiralling Shape", the eponymous "hypnotic and strange" shape "will make you go insane", despite which "everyone wants to see that groovy thing".
* Inspirational Insult: A character gets inspiration from the insults hurled at them.
* Inspirationally Disadvantaged: A disabled character is given special treatment by the others.
* Inspirationally Disadvantaged: A disabled person gets special treatment by everyone else.
* Inspirationally Disadvantaged and became a decorated Battle of Britain veteran.
* Inspirationally Disadvantaged, not a straight example (even if it still garnered protests among release for this).
* Inspirationally Disadvantaged that only those who compensate for their disability by being brainy or active by proxy deserve a second chance but God forbids they ever angst over the loss of their mobility.
* Inspirational Martyr: By dying, a person rallies more to their cause.
* Inspiration for the Work: How the creator came up with the idea for their work.
* Inspiration Manifestation consumed by the desire to reshape the world according to her own creative whims and enough magical power to do so with little more than a thought.
* Inspiration Manifestation", he's definitely giving the same spirit in his look at Spike when Rarity starts going off the deep end.
* Inspiration Manifestation", Rarity has made her creative contribution to the Foal and Filly Fair, nothing bad has happened, and she's about to return the book to Spike... and at this point, we're only eight minutes into the episode. She decides to hold onto the book for just a little while longer...
* Inspiration Manifestation", Rarity looks very good for someone who's spent the day crying and devouring ice cream, and only very slightly below her usual standards. Of course, this being Rarity, she immediately fixes her mane to its usual pristine state when she perks up.
* Inspiration Manifestation", Rarity slams into Spike rather hard to prevent him from revealing the existence of the spell.
* Inspiration Manifestation", Rarity tells Spike that he's her favorite dragon. It's not like the competition's very strong, since every other dragon Rarity's ever met has been a "ruffian," by Rarity's standards.
* Inspiration Manifestation spellbook, her eyes glow a sickly green color and she becomes more and more obsessed with making everything pretty.
* "Inspiration Manifestation" spell over Rarity when Spike finally tells her that her "improvements" aren't making things better for anypony. He also tells Twilight she looks awful at the end after she's spent the entire day cleaning up Rarity's mess.
* Inspiration Manifestation, the episode looks to be implying that the book came from Sombra but backs off before stating it, leaving it open to speculation.
* Inspiration Manifestation", Twilight goes through a lot of offscreen trouble to clean up Rarity's mess. She eventually had to call in backup from Luna and Cadance, and it's made clear that the whole ordeal caused a great amount of stress.
* Inspiration Manifestation", when he tries walking in the bulky crystal armor Rarity puts him in.
* "Inspiration Manifestation", when Rarity literally paved the streets of Ponyville in gold.
* Inspiration Manifestation, you would think that someone who has spent his whole life around a unicorn that specializes in magic and is an expert in spellbooks would know a tome of dark magic when he sees one.
* Inspiration Nod). It's particularly funny/odd because the people of the series seem to otherwise know that fictional works are fictional.

* inspiration villain named Mister Maniacal successfully killing the superhero Justice Joe. Later on in the comic however, it's mentioned that Maniacal was soon killed by a lynch mob afterwards.
* Inspire and Joust, the headline mechanics for The Grand Tournament set. Inspire is a triggered effect that activates when you use your Hero Power, and Joust reveals a card from each deck and gains a bonus if yours costs more. They were touted as ways to slow the meta. That failed. Both mechanics were doomed from the start - Inspire requires you to pump 2 extra mana to trigger the effect. Since it's repeatable, the Inspire can't be too powerful, and since the minion can be played on-curve without Inspiring it, it needs to be statted like its base mana cost. This created cards that can only be safely played two turns ahead of their stats, all for a mediocre effect. Joust has more potential, but Blizzard was apparently afraid of the effect, since the cards were all hopelessly terrible if the Joust failed. Since no deck could possibly build for a 100% Joust success, they didn't pan out either. While Joust actually has made a few scattered returns, Inspire was never brought back.
* inspired anthology series, "The Moneymaker" (aired October 31, 1956). Ironically, the real Juettner made more money from the movie than he did in his entire counterfeiting career.
* Inspired by…: A work that draws influence from another work in terms of plot, characters, themes etc. but isn't a direct adaptation.
* inspired by Ixtl if not removed. Surgically removing them will be nearly as traumatic.
* Inspired by Phoebe's sailor, Ross later treats Rachel by getting hold of some Navy whites and attempting the "
* Inspired by Takamura, Brian Hawk's trainer eventually finds another similar prospect in a 17 year old kid by the name of Woli, who as a result of grown up on a tropical island and spending his days climbing and jumping through trees with monkeys, is an unbelievable athlete. At the time of his match with Ippo, Woli
* Inspired by the cooking war going on over Yuji, Whilhelmina tries to do this for Shana. It doesn't turn out well- apparently
* Inspired by these groups, the Order of the Dragon was an monarchical knightly order established to defend the cross against its enemies — more specifically, the Ottoman Empire which was expanding over the Balkans. It was an Catholic organization since many of its members swore their allegiance to the Pope, but many Orthodox Christians partnered up with them. Among its most famous members include as
* inspired "Come On, Do the Jerk" by The Miracles and "Cool Jerk" by The Capitols.
* inspired in its many incarnations. Particularly in the "Supreme" series, in his own mini he uses it to blast through his analogue of the Joker, Whiteface, to create an anchor as he jumps after a baby he threw off. Then proceeds to kill him (Whiteface, not the baby!) by ripping out his guts with it.
* Inspired use uses psionics). Their hatred for arcane magic mostly boils down to it being a force they can't use themselves and have only a limited understanding of — it's not something they risk keeping around.
* Inspire to survive the crash. The alien lifeform that entered Jake's body was travelling on board a ship with his mate, his child, and others when it collided with a meteor. His mate and child were killed in the collision while all of the other survivors were converted into electrical impulses and eventually vanished into the ether, leaving only the relevant alien.
* inspiring burning jealously saying she’s pathetic just because Shoya “won’t look her way”.
* inspiring/hopeful, since they can charge a GL ring to 300% and counter red, yellow, and orange rings).
* Inspiring some works of above, a theory that existed in the late nineteenth century and the very first part of the
* Inspiring the Xena reference above, Zeus's mother Rhea lovingly palmed her youngest son off on a centaur to raise on a beautiful island (so her husband wouldn't

* In Spite of a Nail — Tiny changes have made the world almost the same but the differences are critical (or wildly different, but the characters are still the same and still together.)
* In Spite of a Nail: Everything's the same in the alternate timeline or reality in spite of the key difference.
* In Spite of a Nail: In spite of one change, everything's the same as it was in the original timeline.
* In spite of being completely new to gaming, she's able to build a monster 9th level fighter using only the Players Handbook and a combination of feats that only exist in this movie that the
* In spite of being employed by and holding a rank in the state military, Edward Elric in
* In spite of being yet another one of countless American works that tend to focus on the
* In spite of coming to respect each other and battling across the Wasteland together, Max and Furiosa in
* In spite of coming within spitting distance of one another at various points throughout the film,
* In spite of having seen the neat things that can be done using a Modifier, Sebastian will never have the option to ask anyone about how to get one until someone mentions he'll need one.
* In spite of her youthful appearance, Flayn has a very antiquated manner of speech in contrast to her peers. Like Ferdinand, she avoids contractions, but also speaks in a direct manner befitting someone much older than her.
* In spite of his attempts to become a better man, Eric Crawford is very much like his father Owen. They are both ambitious, ruthless, and willing to step on anyone that gets in their way. In "God's Equation", he comes to feel guilty about all of the terrible things that he has done, something that Owen never does. Mary proves to be cut from the same cloth as her grandfather. Also in "God's Equation", Eric mentions that she possesses the same clarity of purpose as his father, which is probably related to their lack of morals.
* In spite of his Jujitsu gimmick, which would seemingly put them at odds, Kyle O'Reilly of reDRagon is a huge
* In spite of how popular the supporting cast members may be, most storylines pretty much amount to them holding off the
* In spite of its attempts to cater to both crowds (and then some) via multiple scenarios,
* In-spite of its strange nature, it is an incredibly versatile quirk that is good for offense, defense, and capture, him being able to overpower and capture an entire league's worth of Nomu's and being able to block a direct attack by All-For-One. All-For-One himself makes an observation that his super-abilities are almost completely reliant on skill and thus rejects it for its low power level, implying that while "Fiber Master" is versatile, it relies on practice and technique for it to be the least bit useful.
* In spite of never using the same actors (or even narrator) twice for them, adverts for the respiratory aid Symbicort always use the same exact script framed around a grandfather telling his grandkid(s) the story of
* In spite of not actually believing someone could resist it. She was the feared and uncontested leader of Clerville's organized crime until she decided to retire.
* In spite of (or, more likely, because of) its relentless mockery of rednecks,
* In spite of Starfire's obvious beauty, Ms. Alien Eye-Candy is still a
* In spite of such setbacks, however, both House Tyrell and Dorne were destroyed by the Lannister forces. First, Tyrell fell to the treachery of House Tarly who kills the last Tyrell and House Dorne was swiftly extinguished by their need for vengeance over the survival of the House which leads to the demise of the family. Even then it was not enough to delay Cersei's downfall as the deaths of Missandei and Rhaegal cause Daenerys to cross the
* In spite of swiftly conquering Earth's standing militaries, the Muge Empire in

* In spite of the ever-present supernatural elements of the setting, * in spite of their cute appearance. Cubs have sharp claws and can scratch with plenty of force. They also have sharp teeth for biting.
* In spite of their Norse roots, when you combine the quasi-Semitic language with their lost homeland and usual status as a minority in lands ruled by other races, many writers (including Tolkien himself) have considered them * in spite of their vicious assassination attempt, the Bride is still alive because he thinks so highly of her and doesn't want her being killed like "some rat" in her sleep. He says that if she ever wakes up, they'll finish the job. She woke up alright, and she was pissed.
* In spite of the number of channels it runs, the variety of movies it shows, and its attempts both past and present to make more mainstream original programming, * in spite of the Vorlon making immediately clear they're simply much older aliens), leading to an immense blunder during their war against the Centauri: already furious at the Drakh for retreating their forces and costing them a battle in a war they were already slowly losing, upon finding out they were followers of the Shadows they mobilized a large part of their fleet to sterilize their homeworld, weakening their frontline and allowing the surprised Centauri to launch an offensive nearly unopposed before the survivors of the attack to the Drakh homeworld could rejoin the main front. To make things worse, after losing the war the Orieni found out that the Drakh were actually nomadic and only a small part of them had settled on that world specifically to better manipulate the Orieni...
* In spite of this, Unseen University did get stolen once, but that was just a student prank.
* In "Splish Splash Splosh", Rosie and Charlie were the only ones who liked Thomas' mud splashing game while Emily, James and Sir Topham Hatt complained.
* In "SpongeBob in RandomLand", SpongeBob and Squidward return to the Krusty Krab from a delivery to find the customer, who they were supposed to make the delivery to, complaining that he never got his order. SpongeBob gives him the order, but Mr. Krabs cries and points to a microscopic disclaimer reading "
* In "Spongebob Meets the Strangler", the Tattletale Strangler disguises himself as a bodyguard to get close enough to SpongeBob to strangle him for turning him in. However, SpongeBob's frequent delays, culminating in
* In "SpongeBob Meets the Strangler", when the Strangler is being arrested, the police not only cuff his hands but also his legs, thumbs,
* In "SpongeBob's Bad Habit", SpongeBob develops a habit of biting his nails at work, and cannot stop. After several failed attempts, he goes to a hypnotherapist to try to resolve the issue. The therapist discovers SpongeBob subconsciously implemented the habit from Squidward and breaks it, and it seems everything is okay... but then SpongeBob sees the doctor in the full light, Hans the hand, and starts biting
* In "SpongeBob's Last Stand", police officers arrest SpongeBob and Patrick before abandoning them in the
* In "SpongeBob You're Fired", Spongebob's reaction to getting fired by Mr. Krabs causes him to cry so much that he floods the Krusty Krab with his tears. Squidward then drains them off by making a hole with a cranking hole maker.
* In "Sponge Guard on Duty", Larry says, "What's that on your nose?" and Spongebob replies, "White stuff."
* In "SpongeGuard on Duty", SpongeBob attempts to save Patrick from drowning by drinking all of the water in Goo Lagoon. Despite SpongeBob using a straw, he somehow sucks Patrick up as well.
* In "Spongeguard on Duty", SpongeBob claims to be as cool as lifeguard Larry, "and if I'm not, may I be struck by..." he is interrupted by
* In "SpongeGuard on Duty", SpongeBob goes to the beach, where he gets jealous of Larry. He imagines what it would be like if he were a lifeguard, cutting to live-action footage of someone in a SpongeBob mascot suit in a lifeguard tower.
* In "SpongeGuard on Duty", SpongeBob imagines being a lifeguard, represented by live-action footage of a person in a SpongeBob mascot costume standing in a lifeguard tower.

* In "Spontaneous Combustion" after doing a performance of the Stations of the Cross with Cartman playing the role of Jesus, Stan and Kyle then take him up to the hill and crucify him for real. They do this with the intention of having him die and have a resurrection, which Kyle intends to give to his father.
* In sports, coaches and management praise the "character" and contribution to "dressing room culture" of athletes when they have nothing positive to say about the athletes' contributions to the actual game.
* In sports leagues with promotion and relegation systems any club that has spent a long time in one league without moving up or winning a championship is a good example of this, as they have been good enough to avoid relegation but not good enough to actually move on. Any team from a lower flight that wants to avoid being sent back will have to be able to contend with them and any team going for a championship will have to be able to consistently beat teams of this class. Everton in the English Premier League is a good example of this, having spent more time in the top flight than any other club but has yet to win the Premier League. Its less common in leagues with fixed membership where taking a couple losing seasons is considered to be far less of an issue and there is no real need to cling to a middle position in order to keep your spot in the league. This is considered either a bug or a feature depending on what side of the Relegation vs franchise debate you fall on.
* In sports, the "Wounded Tiger" and "Ewing" theories both assert that a team known for one or two-star players is more likely to thrive when said star(s) are not playing. The point being that opposing teams will write them off as they would a wounded tiger, not realizing that a wounded tiger is a very dangerous creature. So for instance, when Deron Williams is nursing an injury, either watch out for the New Jersey Nets or prepare to be baffled and ashamed in defeat; the wounded tiger is on the prowl. Similarly, after LeBron James and Shaquille O'Neal left them in the summer, the now-starless Cleveland Cavaliers opened the 2010-2011 season... by beating last season's runner-up squad, the Boston Celtics. This was both an incredible upset and a slap in the face to LeBron, whose Miami Heat had lost to the Celtics the day before, and Shaq, who now played for the Celtics. And shortly after breaking a record-setting losing streak, the "Cleveland Cadavers" showed they were still alive... by beating the previous year's
* In sports, this is a term called "fair play." It's seen as a very classy move for a sportsperson to admit to screwing up and take a penalty when they deserve it if a referee missed the call. By the same token, it's seen as a mark of class to not take an advantage one didn't deserve.
* In "Springfield Up", Ned Flanders says Homer is "the kindest, sweetest, most generous man to ever drive through my living room."
* In Spring, what appears to be a nature spirit offers Jack a chance to rest.
* In "Spy Buddies" when everyone is revealing themselves to be someone else in disguise, SpongeBob rips off Squidward's face revealing his flesh. He then angrily takes his face back and walks away.
* In "Spy Buddies", when SpongeBob and Patrick follow Plankton down the sidewalk while looking at him through a magnifying glass, he catches fire and puts himself out in a conveniently nearby cup of soda. He almost immediately gets ignited again by the exhaust from SpongeBob and Patrick's
* In "Squeaky Boots" as Pearl opens her birthday present to see it is a pair of cheap fishing boots, not the Flipper Slippers she wanted.
* In "Squeaky Boots", Gary also becomes annoyed by the squeaking from SpongeBob's boots, retreating into his shell and coming out with earplugs.
* In "Squeaky Boots", just when Mr. Krabs thinks the boots squeaking is gone, he starts hiccuping and they sound just like the boots squeaking after he fried and ate them.
* In "Squeaky Boots", Mr. Krabs eats Spongebob's boots because he couldn't stand the constant squeaking. This backfires at the end of the episode when he gets the hiccups and makes the same squeaky noises.
* In "Squeaky Boots", Pearl is heartbroken over Mr. Krabs buying her a pair of $2.00 fishing boots for her birthday instead of the Flipper Slippers she wanted that all of her friends are wearing. She bawls and outright rejects the boots, leaving Mr. Krabs to wonder what to do with them.

* In "Squid on Strike", SpongeBob takes Squidward's words about "dismantling the oppressive establishment" to heart and destroys the Krusty Krab.
* In "Squid's Day Off" as Squidward realizes that he's wasting his time running back to the Krusty Krab.
* In "Squid's Day Off," Mr. Krabs' attempts to retrieve a dime that's fallen down the drain end with him losing his arms and hurling backwards across the room until he crashes into the opposite wall and collapses a shelf. The shelf tilts, and a pot, a glass, a pan, a coffee mug, a treasure chest, an anchor, a buoy, and an old-fashioned diving suit (in that order) all fall on his head, creating
* In "Squid's Day Off", when Squidward is left in charge of the Krusty Krab, he hallucinates that SpongeBob is spying on him to see if he's really doing errands, when SpongeBob has actually been sitting at the cash register the entire time. When Squidward runs to the Krusty Krab, clad only in a shower cap and
* In "Squidtastic Voyage", SpongeBob and Patrick get shrunken down and end up in Squidward's body, where they end up in Squidward's central nervous system, causing Squidward to do random stuff. When Sandy tells Squidward that he's not in control of his actions, he kicks Sandy in the butt, dryly excusing himself by stating that he's not in control of his actions.
* In "Squidtastic Voyage", Squidward accidentally swallows his clarinet and starts making clarinet noises.
* In "Squidville", after SpongeBob and Patrick accidentally destroy Squidward's house, Squidward tells them "I would rather tear out my brain stem, carry it into the middle of the nearest four-way intersection, and skip rope with it than go on living
* In "Squidville" during the montage of Squidward's life in Squidville quickly becoming a rut.
* In "Squidville", Patrick mistakes the intercom at the entrance of Tentacle Acres for a drive-thru, and he tries to order some food.
* In "Squidville", Patrick's bad breath (from eating fried oyster skins) goes through the intercom of the Tentacle Acres gate, knocking out the security guards.
* In "Squidville", SpongeBob and Patrick are at the gate to Tentacle Acres, where Squidward has moved. Patrick mistakes the intercom for a take out window and makes an order.
* In "Squidville", Squidward interacts with an ad for a planned community
* In "Squidward in Clarinetland", Squidward goes through a very surreal area made of clarinets, then appears in his locker. Did it really happen? Was he hallucinating? Or did he just fall asleep in his locker and dream the whole thing?
* In "Squidward the Unfriendly Ghost" when Squidward pretends to be a ghost and orders SpongeBob and Patrick around:
* In "Squid Wood", Squidward shakes SpongeBob repeatedly, causing several game pieces to fall from his pockets.
* In "Squilliam Returns", when Squidward tries to imagine Squilliam in his underwear his body is a photograph tinted blue.
* In "Squirrel Jokes", Sandy makes SpongeBob stop making offensive jokes about squirrels in the hard way, by inviting him over to her house where she behaves stupidly like the squirrels described in his jokes, taking out SpongeBob's water helmet as a vase for the flowers he brought to purposefully dehydrate him, at which point she shoves a gardening hose into his mouth inflating him, then assumes that he wants more and attaches the tube to a bigger water outlet. By the end of it, SpongeBob is overinflated to the point of filling every inch of the treedome.
* In "S.R.819" Mulder and Scully have one day to find out who poisoned Skinner and they need to find a cure as well.
* Insta-Death Quick Time Events in general, because it's sometimes damn near impossible to know exactly when to push the Square/X/B button, the game only gives you about half a second to react, and each death counts against your score. They were so hated that they were basically removed from the sequel, largely replaced with climax style button mashes that

* Instagram and Hipstamatic are iOS apps that apply filters to the pictures they shoot to replicate wonky optics, aged film, and other characteristics of old film cameras to produce pictures that look like old Polaroids and the like; they in turn were inspired by the current popularity of
* Instagram frequently showed ads that were probably by the same company that referenced
* Instagram's camera logo, which may appear fully rendered or in a minimalist style (only the outline, lens and flash dot).
* Instagram updates in 2020 invoke this trope, having moved around the buttons to encourage users to explore other features of the app by accidentally clicking on the buttons by habit. For example, the Post tab could be replaced with the Shopping tab.
* "Insta-Gran" was originally titled "Geri-Antics", this title would later be used for a season four episode.
* In "Stakeout", Amy and Gina react poorly to the way they are depicted in a children's story that Terry has written for his daughters. Terry finally gets fed up with them and yells at them over how silly they're being. Unfortunately, they're in an elevator and Terry doesn't hit the button for the floor he wants until after he's finished, meaning that — as Gina lampshades — instead of being able to storm off impressively the second the doors open, he instead has to hang around with them in awkward silence until they reach his floor.
* insta-kill monster in the Karamari Hospital DLC, but in Endless Mode is an actual chasing enemy that obstructs your screen in thick black fog.
* In "Stalker", one of Hollywood actress Rita Lake's murderous stalkers turns out to be a cop.
* install a garage door opener on his own. One of his attempts to get his garage door open involves a big balloon, which fails when a bird pops the balloon.
* installing a rootkit your brain. Helios uses the the more HAL-esque flat voice, coupled with irregular voice patterns.
* installing a UV light by your doorstep and inviting him over for tomato juice!
* In "Stall Monitor", Mrs. Johnson is intent on seeing Rita and Lynn Sr. for Parent-Teacher Conference Night, and Lincoln, worried about what she is going to tell them, tries to stop them from attending with Clyde's help. As it turns out, she was actually telling them what a great student he was, not a bad one, but as a result of trying to stop her, he gets grounded for a week, along with a week of detention.
* installs a laser eye for himself, though it will fry his brain if left on for too long.
* In "Stampylonghead"'s 2014 Halloween special, he tells the story of an evil pig who transforms into a zombie pigman by night called Mr Porkchop. He was originally a human pig shepherd who was trying to raise the largest pig in order to win a competition. A witch offers to grant his wish for a pig larger than every other in exchange for all his other pigs. When he agrees, she just turns him into a Pigman and takes all his pigs.
* Instances exist of good or good-leaning Skrulls, such as Ethan Edwards (
* Instances of 1st class petty officers in dress whites serving coffee to officers while underway onboard a carrier border between the strange and the ridiculous. One, wardroom personnel on "cranking" duty would be very junior personnel. Two, they would almost never be required to wear dress uniforms in such duties; since they're working in the wardrooms and the galleys, they'd only get dirty for no good reason. Three, they're serving coffee. Every Navy officer and sailor from admiral on down knows to get their own goddamn coffee.
* Instances of eating massive quantities of food or eating non-food items are
* Instances set in the "Intranet" are made entirely out of Tron Lines and colorful binary code, including the NPCs.
* In "Stannie Get Your Gun", Roger tries to trick Steve into thinking he's adopted, which Steve doubts at first until he hears his parents arguing about his sister Hayley's anti-gun views.
* In "Stanny Boy and Frantastic", Stan gets a compound fracture in his leg after falling down a stairwell, leaving his bone visibly sticking out. He's fairly chill about it but mentions that he's about to go into shock.

* In "Stanny Tendergrass", when the mistreated employees of Roger's country club turn on him and he talks to an angry old woman with a crossbow, who is the daughter of a woman whom Roger married and then killed and wants her mother's fortune:
* In "Stan of Arabia, Part 2" a camel does this when Francine strips down to her underwear while singing about how much she hates living in Saudi Arabia.
* Instant A.I.: Just Add Water!: Turning machines sentient is easy-peasy.
* Instant Allegiance Artifact that alters one's mind and can make someone change sides.
* Instant Armor's Bounty Hunters also forms a large revolver, which is as dangerous as it is cool-looking.
* Instant Awesome: Just Add Dragons! — Dragons make anything better.
* Instant Awesome: Just Add Mecha!: This otherwise okay show suddenly becomes kickass when a mecha appears.
* Instant Bandages: Someone instantly gets bandages after being injured.
* Instant Birth: Just Add Water!: Labour leading into birth much quicker than in real life.
* Instant Book Deal: A character writes a book that immediately becomes published and an overnight success.
* "Instant Cash," where a contestant can, in exchange for the amount of his lead, take a 1-in-3 shot at selecting which box held a mini-cash jackpot (two had $100, the other $1,000 plus $1,000 per show until claimed).
* Instant Cooldown — Nuclear reactors/bombs return immediately to normal conditions once explosion is averted.
* Instant Cooldown the core. When used on a reactor already undergoing a runaway reaction, it tipped it over the edge into an actual explosion.
* Instant Costume Change: A superhero instantly changes from their regular clothes into a costume
* Instant Cultured: Several prominent smart folks have come out in modern times without engaging in so-called "smart people" activities.
* Instant Death Bullet: Fictional bullets can cause a person to drop dead of a chest or gut shot, even when a real person could probably keep moving (or talking, or moaning) for another few minutes.
* Instant Death Bullet: Shooting one bullet is enough to kill someone.
* Instant Death Bullet trope, sometimes people don't even realize they've been shot or otherwise don't realize how badly they're injured until the adrenaline wears off, resulting in people running around or moving with potentially fatal gunshot wounds, or not realizing what being shot feels like. Additionally, combat reflexes can be dependent on your culture to some extent; a culture which hasn't been exposed to firearms very much doesn't know that hitting the dirt in response to gunfire reduces your likelihood of getting hit, and thus may be more likely to remain standing while being shot at. This may look like incredible, inhuman bravery to people who are more familiar with firearms.
* "Instant Death" Radius, though it naturally required a high Strength score to be effective.
* Instant Death". Which is more sensible than it sounds, as if you block his bite with a weapon then the weapon will take 1d8 damage. If he bites you somewhere armoured then 1d8 may not be enough to actually bite into your skin. Once you take 1hp from his bite however, it's time to make a new character.
* Instant Death: Yogiri's true form is an invincible void that embodies the end of everything. It cannot be destroyed by anyone or anything perhaps barring his own Instant Death ability, which he would never use on himself anyway. It is eternal and cannot be erased by anything, granting him this.
* Instant discouragement: Once they all know what they're supposed to do, they open the door, notice it's raining and call the whole thing off. This
* Instant failure: Once they all know what they're supposed to do, they step out the door and immediately one of them trips over and breaks a leg. This never occurs in shows where the heroes are professionals.

* Instant Family, Ellie's younger sister has been trying to get pregnant for years, with her husband making snarky comments about her desire to try fertility treatments. Ellie and Pete never tried conception, but eventually decide to take in three foster children, making them parents first. Ellie's sister then says that her example has inspired her and her husband to adopt as well (not only because it's cheaper, but that is a factor). The last scene of the movie is Ellie and Pete officially adopting Lizzie, Juan, and Lita, and the sister is in the audience holding hands with a young boy she's presumably fostering... while she's visibly pregnant.
* Instant Fan Club: A character who is so awesome around school that they have a group of admirers.
* Instant Fanclub). Both she and Minto grow to see their respective objects of affection as people rather than ideals.
* Instant Fish Kill: Can be comedic if the event that kills large amounts of fish is relatively innocuous.
* Instant Fish Kill: Large amounts of fish immediately die when something happens to the water around them.
* Instant Gravestone: When someone dies, they turn into a tombstone on the spot.
* Instant Home Delivery. Waiting for a month for backorders is already frustrating enough in real life, so why would that be included in a game intended to be enjoyed?
* Instant Home Delivery: When a character orders something, the product gets delivered to them mere moments after they're finished ordering.
* Instant Humiliation: Just Add YouTube!: A character gets humiliated from an embarrassing video of them getting posted online.
* Instant Humiliation: Just Add YouTube!: A character gets humiliated from having an embarrassing video of themselves posted onto the Internet.
* instant-kill (it turns into a chainsaw). The aforementioned final battle even gets a mention as a story in the Library.
* Instant Kill launches the character to the moon, where they smash upside-down into the ground so hard most of their upper body's imbedded in it.
* Instant Knots and throw people around. He's able to fight a horde of villains with mutation quirks (which he can't erase) using only his martial arts skills.
* Instant Leech: Just Fall in Water!: Fall in suspicious water, emerge covered in leeches.
* Instant Leech: Just Fall in Water!: Someone gets leeches stuck to them as soon as they enter water.
* Instant Leech: Just Fall in Water!: Whenever a character accidentally falls into a body of water, especially a stagnant one such as a swamp or pond, and comes to discover a leech - or more - attached to them somewhere.
* instantly and correctly deducing that they are actually buying ammunition for an attack on Anaphylactic Man's fortress. (He sells it to them anyway.)
* instantly, and then drain the life of their victim to recoup the health loss. With proper talents they can also have damage reduction comparable to wearing mail with Soul Link and Demon Armour.
* instantly change state at certain temperatures: milk curdles, sugars and starches will caramelize, spices will burn, yeast will die etc. If one of those things happens when it wasn't supposed to the result will likely be a difficult to clean up inedible mess. On the other hand, certain beloved recipes were almost certainly discovered this way.
* instantly). For instance, Pteppic, heir to the throne of Djelibeybi, notices himself manifesting some pharaoh powers before he even gets news of his father's death.
* instantly growing into a sentient mutated vine cluster from inside the body and scything through people nearby.
* instantly masters it: He can't copy or cancel-out Holder Magic (i.e. any magic that relies on an object such as magic cards or magic swords rather than a person).
* Instantly Proven Wrong: Someone says something, then something happens to prove them wrong.

* Instantly Proven Wrong: When your lie offends the universe so badly that it exposes you on the spot.
* instantly restored your health.. It was downplayed after the 1.9 Combat update, that made the regeneration at full hunger much faster (though still consuming the same amount of saturation or hunger points).
* instant maple and ginger oatmeal and what they do in their spare time.
* Instant Mystery, Just Delete SceneA scene is skipped so the viewer doesn't know what happened there for the sake of mystery and suspense
* instant ramen imported into Canada, and many Canadians refer to the dish as "ichiban", regardless of the actual brand, unless they live in an area with large East Asian populations and are therefore exposed to multiple brands or properly cooked fresh ramen in restaurants. The word itself is Japanese for "number one".
* Instant Roast: Burning a live animal in big heat equals fully-cooked meal.
* Instant Roast: When an animal's fur or feathers get burned off, they look like a roast that's ready to eat.
* Instant Runes adopt different geometric shapes dependent on the class of magic the caster is using. There are at least 4 known variations, 2 of them corresponding to major schools of magic and one to magical specialization.
* Instant Runes app selection that Oz describes as "Like Apple had started making tarot cards".
* Instant Sedation: A character is drugged and is instantly knocked out.
* Instant Sedation: Because we don't have 15 minutes of valuable airtime to waste watching a tranquilizer go into effect.
* Instant Sedation dart, her response is annoyance at the person who shot her and sip of her cocktail.
* Instant Sedation drug injections so he will be the one to be taken and tortured by the Vians.
* Instant Sedation: Someone instantly conks out after being sedated—how convenient!
* Instant Seduction: Seduction for women emphasizes passive attributes; for men, it emphasizes their actions.
* Instant Soprano: A man talks in a high-pitched voice immediately after getting hit in the crotch.
* Instant Soprano cause the victim to speak or scream at a higher pitch.
* Instant Soprano: Getting hit in the groin causes a man to have a high-pitched, feminine-sounding voice.
* Instant Soprano: When a man gets hit in the balls, it makes his voice higher.
* Instant success: The convoluted scheme for breaking into the bad guy's vault becomes redundant when they get there and find the door has been left ajar. This is particularly effective when the instant success is achieved by good old common sense, such as the scene in * instant to the most talented and, frankly, sensible (most of the time) witch of her generation, and leaves in no doubt whom she intends to take over her steading, laying it out in her will. It's also subverted in another way; Granny's greatest ability is that she teaches others how to make themselves better and that they should do the same to others in turn, so when the elves come again they're facing entire armies of people who can stand up to them.
* Instant Turn-Off: A horny character stops being aroused after learning an unpleasant detail about what's turning them on.
* Instant Turn-Off: Someone loses their arousal very quickly for X reason.
* Instant Web Hit from that episode showed that others thought she was really cool for playing the "Swamp Monster of Danville".
* Instant Web Hit: If somebody posts something online, it'll go viral instantly.
* Instant Web Hit the video's popularity (at the time, YouTube hadn't yet worked out a way to compensate creators for their videos). Instead of real money, they get a theoretical check for $10,000.
* Instant-Win Condition: Abused mercilessly whenever both possible and quicker. Including glitches or oversights than can warp players to the very end of a game.
* Instant-Win Condition, civilian buildings only exist to give you Victory Points.

* Instant-Win Condition of defeating her, at which point Ramza will call for the others to surrender, claiming that he'll spare them if they do. He'll still say this if the player has elected to kill all of Miluda's minions first.
* In Staphorst Groeit Het Geluk (1959) by J. Van Dorsten has a farmer couple falling in each other's arms on a hay barrack.
* In "Starcrossed", Cass Trenton is the best hope of winning the war against the Hing as she is carrying a parasite that can kill them.
* In "Starcrossed", Hro Talak insists on fighting Green Lantern / John Stewart
* In "Starcrossed", she helps the Thanagarian invasion force defeat the League and conquer the Earth, because she believed the occupation of Earth was necessary to defeat the Gordanians, which was in the best interests of both her home planet Thanagar and Earth. (Though she
* In "Starcrossed", the Hing won control over large areas of Earth after they invaded in 2050.
* In "Stardrive", Avon decides to sneak past the detection grid of a planet by hugging close to an asteroid.
* In "Stardust City Rag", Elnor grabs two phaser pistols and points them at Bjayzl's female bodyguards, and later, Seven of Nine shoots Bjayzl and her goons with a pair of phaser rifles.
* In "Stardust City Rag", Seven of Nine offers herself as payment for Maddox, for secretly personal reasons, but rationalizing that her Borg components would be a fair trade. Raffi hides a small transport enhancer on her person which will blend in with her implants and rigs the cuffs to come off whenever Seven wants, allowing her to get the drop on Bjayzl.
* In "Starfog", when Graydal hears that there are planets where some women do not bear children owing to population control, she immediately concludes that her ship, which they believe can not return home, must stay on the frontier world.
* In "Stargate", Timon says that the aliens were extremely tall and thin prior to
* In "Stargazing", a kid tries to have Starscream do good deeds due to the Christmas spirit. At the end, Starscream still doesn't care for others, but he wishes the kid Merry Christmas.
* In stark contrast from her Greek counterpart, Venus is one-specifically, the Goddess of
* In stark contrast to being unintelligible in the movies, Chewbacca in
* In stark contrast to other elven characters in Jackson's films, Thranduil, played by
* In "Star Mort Rickturn Of The Jerri", Morty and Summer fight over use of Rick's invisibility belt. Both being horny teenagers, they immediately use it for basically the same thing, Summer using it to spy on an attractive male neighbour, sneak into his bedroom, and smell his stuff, while Morty sneaks into the high-school cheerleaders' showers. It's so predictable, Summer immediately guesses exactly where Morty is going to go with it.
* In "Star Mountain," Dora and Boots attempt to reclaim the necklace that Swiper threw on top of Star Mountain. Before they can, Swiper (as this) comes on a snowboard to try to steal their rope. (strangley enough, his tail is also covered with snow.
* In Starr's first appearance, he is instructing an anti-terrorist unit. He is introduced as saying to always kill the women first, as the female terrorists they encounter will invariably be far more competent and dangerous than the men.
* In "Starsky vs. Hutch", a girl Starsky is dancing with hops up and down after he accidentally steps on her foot.
* In Stars, Neptune does this with Uranus when the latter is knocked off a building, complete with their gloves starting to slip off.
* In "Startrain", Ladybug has the newly empowered Pegasus teleport an entire train back to Earth after defeating the villain that had turned it into a spaceship. However, his aim is off and he crashes it through Elizabeth Tower in London. Again, Ladybug magics that damage away.
* In Star Trek XIII: Beyond, Krall's shoulder armor has a spinning disc that serves no purpose other than to look awesome.

* In Star Vs., Ludo has an army of rats that helped him invade Mewni.
* In Starz' defense, they don't seem to have as many licensing deals with movie studios as HBO does.
* In "Stasis", Earth's resources are severely depleted to the point that half of the population is placed in stasis for 72 hours at a time.
* In "Stasis", most species of plants are either extinct or endangered.
* In "Stasis", under the guise of a relocation programme, the Elite plan to murder the Alphas and convert their bodies into fuel, which will provide enough energy to power the City for 3.4 years.
* In "State of Flux", a traitor tells the Kazon how to mask their spacecraft from Voyager's sensors, but Tom Paris happens to see something there using his Mark One Eyeball.
* In "Static", when investigating murders at the docks, Clark Kent claims to be an officer to the coroner, who believes him.
* In St.Curtis, everyone seemed to be having a good time, with the St. Curtis Arc seemingly shaping up into a breather arc, then the army of Hell decides to break the
* Instead, an alternative term for God's first name is Tetragrammaton, which basically means "four letter word".
* instead got Tap shoes experience, who can blame Jason for being a bit cynical?
* Instead, he started over-achieving to such a degree that the others pushed themselves harder and harder to catch up, eventually culminating in a class-wide nervous breakdown that publicly humiliated the teacher.
* instead of asking the woman who does this every day of her life for help. When Gordon noticed, he ordered the women to let Julia cook; she quickly turned the sinking ship into an overwhelming victory.
* Instead of becoming the Unabomber, Ted Kaczynski instead becomes the pseudo-leader of an online anarchist/primitivist cult known as the Forest Fellowship.
* Instead of being a single man who uses Lazarus Pits to extend his life,
* instead of being based on a historical or mythological figure and that he's been keeping a tight lip about his past.
* Instead of being killed by police during a killing spree, Charles Whitman
* Instead of celebrating his success in turning the company around financially,
* Instead of closing the opponent's line of attack while advancing into distance to deliver a thrust, as a fencer is supposed to do, they spend a lot of time artfully swatting at each other's blades from out of distance, meaning that they aren't even getting close enough to hit each other. To be fair, a lot of this is hard to notice unless you slow the footage down because the film-makers make the characters look like they're at closer range through some clever
* Instead of full-screen eyecatches, some shows just display the logo in the corner before going to commercial.
* . Instead of getting rescued by Pluto and spending the game talking to the Twilight Town trio, she goes on her own adventure, earning her own Keyblade (instead of being handed it by Riku), honing the fighting skills she gained from her time trapped in Sona's body, and fighting a new foe.
* Instead of immediately segueing into the "Attack of Mynd" storyline after the Halloween strip, Mynd would spend a whole week reading the entire webcomic, while the other characters continued to harass him. This would have culminated with his discovery of the
* instead of Kirito with new character Yuuki, her helping Yuuki's guild, the Sleeping Knights, to defeat a particularly deadly Aincrad boss, and her fraught relationship with her mother.
* Instead of limiting dungeon runs per day like x-legend's other game
* Instead of meeting the robopsychologist Merton Mansky at the regional offices of US Robots, managing director Elliot Smythe and robopsychologist
* Instead of Midday or Midnight Lycanroc, Ash's Rockruff would evolve into a
* Instead of parents, another character may intervene to stop the argument, perhaps lampshading the silliness of it all.
* instead of Rohypnol and the lyrics aren't quite so blunt about it, but in essence it's the same. Another of their songs jokes about the advantage of visiting a country whose word for "no" takes a very long time to say - by the time the girl's said it "it is usually too late".

* Instead of saying 'Bela kuca' (White House), a Serbian news anchor once said 'Bela kurac' which means 'white cock'.
* Instead of sending her on a plane to Hong Kong, the Runaway girl follows the Joestar group in
* Instead of shooting Tommy Guns, the rival gang throws eggs and donuts through the window.
* Instead of simply seizing the soulstone from Marius and killing him quickly, Baal used an illusion to disguise himself as Tyrael, forced Marius to relive his horrific adventure with Diablo, and convinced Marius to give up the soulstone willingly... and then revealed his true colors before finally killing Marius.
* instead of standing around waiting while members break off and attack one or two at a time.
* , instead of starting his long-term plans after escaping, Golden Lion Shiki takes over Impel Down, then levitates it with his Devil Fruit, before giving the World Government the ultimatum: remove their jurisdiction from the Four Blues and allow him to move island and nations wherever he wants, or he will release every prisoner into the capital of Marie Jois. Needless to say, they were forced to comply.
* instead of the correct words, does so because it is getting close to meal time and she's hungry.
* Instead of the expected fire effects, movieverse Jean Grey/Phoenix gets Tainted Veins and
* Instead Of Three Wishes has the protagonist of the titular story fitting the trope. Her honest smile "could make flowers bloom early" and stuns the elf king who's known her for a while when he finally sees her smile for real.
* Instead of turning to incorporeal mist and hiding, the High Priest of Hel possessing Durkon's body decides to fight with Roy instead, and attempt a
* Instead of using all of the fingers on their fretting hand to hold down notes, some players make things more difficult by choosing to forgo the use of their pinky, or their pinky
* Instead of using Helena's Nail to turn himself into a monster to fight Alucard, Anderson uses the nail on
* Instead of using their names, Lois describes Clark at least once as "tall, dark, and bumbling" and on another occasion as "tall, dark, and single" and Davis/
* instead opting for a sequence of the two of them and Kobayashi going out to buy school supplies.
* Instead, she might marry Arthur since he held her hand after their sword fight.
* In "Stealing First Base", Bart asks Grandpa for help with his latest
* In Stephen Gallagher's "The Last Rose of Summer", a 1977 science fiction production for Manchester's Picadilly Radio, the protagonist is attacked by rats in the dark buried streets below a future city.
* In Stephen King's one-minute play, "An Evening at God's", The Almighty is sitting at home in his recliner, drinking a beer and attempting to watch a sitcom on TV. Hanging in front of His face, blocking His view of the TV, is the Earth. Annoyed, He casually reaches out and crushes it, destroying the planet.
* In Stephen Lawhead's second Song of Albion book "The Silver Hand", Llew gets a new hand and his Bard gets new eyes in a magical lake.
* In Stephen Vincent Benét's 1937 short story about life after global annihilation, "By the Waters of Babylon", the narrator must elude a pack of wild dogs while exploring a destroyed city.
* In "Steven Floats", when Steven is stuck floating in the sky, having an
* In "Steven's Birthday", Connie does a spit-take with a juice box upon learning that it's
* In "Steven's Dream", when Steven tries to question the Crystal Gems about the palanquin he saw in his dream, Amethyst doesn't know what it is but Garnet and Pearl are clearly trying not to tell him anything. He begins a
* In Steven Soderbergh's two-part series about the real-life Ernesto "Che"

Guevara, Che (played by Benicio del Toro) is mostly shown as a freedom fighter in Part 1. In Part 2, his revolutionary movement doesn't catch on and he's seen as a terrorist.
* In "Stewie Griffin: The Untold Story", a cutback shows Peter launching himself into the air with a catapult. A guy with an open window is gushing about his stacked dominoes, his priceless ming vase and his hemophiliac baby. And just then Peter... lands harmlessly outside the man's window, stands up and congratulates him on all the nice things he has.
* In "Stewie Griffin The Untold Story", Stewie's reaction to Ron (previously Meg) getting a sex change after college is "she went to college?!"
* In "Stewie Kills Lois", Peter is on trial for allegedly shooting and killing Lois while on a luxury cruise. When being questioned in court, the following exchange occurs:
* In "Stewie Kills Lois", Stewie throws out some crayon drawings of Lois getting bloodily killed to get Brian off his back about her "disappearance". Peter's friends then come by the trash and find the drawings, believing that Peter drew them (since his handwriting is already so poor).
* In "St. George and the Dragonet", St. George finally nabs the fire-breathing dragon on these charges:
* In "Stick Figures in SPAAACE!" the protagonists are shocked to learn that the member of their spaceship crew with a square head and who's called Bandroid is, in fact, an android.
* In "Stick", two of Wilson Fisk's men jump Karen after she visits Elena Cardenas. She is saved when Foggy shows up and takes them both down with his softball bat. At the beginning of the next episode "Shadows in the Glass," Matt
* Instigator happen, regardless of whether it would be logical or in-character.
* In still another book a young lady the Judge has taken on as a temporary assistant makes a sincere effort to seduce him. She apologizes afterward but adds forlornly; "I like you." The Judge assures her that he likes her too (though he hints it's because he reminds her of her happy childhood days with her father), and because he likes her he thinks she deserves better than being the fourth wife of a District Magistrate. Thankfully she appears very taken with a dashing captain.
* In still another episode, a situation similar to this was presented to Will as part of his CIA psychology test. It was essentially, if you were given a gun with one bullet and told to shoot your mother or your father, who would you shoot? Sydney tells him (paraphrasing) that the answer is to shoot yourself, as attacking the mother figure indicates you would first betray your friends/mentors and attacking the father figure indicates you would betray your country. We're never shown what answer Will selected.
* In still another episode, Zim was seen experimenting with shooting chickens into orbit with a planned trajectory that intercepted the sun.
* In still another same-sex example, British women's internationals Helen Richardson and Kate Walsh married in 2013, both taking the surname Richardson-Walsh. They won Olympic gold medals with Team GB in 2016.
* In still another strip, Jason discovers that Fun-Fun Mountain sells 128-ounce Slurpees.
* In "Still", Castle does this while Beckett was trapped on a pressure-plate activated bomb;
* In "Still Life", Daniel Arnold discovers a Kodak 100 camera in an antique trunk that he bought at an auction. After he develops the photos, he finds that they are of a
* In "Still Life", the 86-year-old Professor Alex Stottel is the last surviving member of Dr. Levinson's expedition to the Amazon River basin, where they encountered the Curacai, in January 1913. Stottel was a 13-year-old boy at the time.
* In "Stimpy's Fan Club", Ren reads a letter to Stimpy about a fan being embarrassed because he wets the bed. Ren is about to answer back with an angry letter about how he's going to tell on him when Stimpy stops him, saying that wetting the bed is nothing to be a shamed off; in fact, "You and I still do it." At which Ren suddenly covers Stimpy's mouth in the hope that no one heard.

* Instinct from her. She is elated when Clark's Kryptonian lineage has the stamina to match her.
* Institute Coursers are among the most feared adversaries in the Commonwealth: they're as humanlike in appearance as Gen 3 synths, and as strong and relentless as a
* Institute of War retcon, the half-dragon Shyvana played the trope straight, being born to a human mother and a shapeshifting draconic father, but persecuted for it by true dragons. In the current lore, her situation is closer to an inversion: she is instead the result of a mortal, male human’s magic mingling into a dragon egg, and the villain of her backstory is her draconic mother.
* Institutional Allegiance Concealment: A character must go undercover and gets rid of anything that could reveal their true identity, particularly their affiliation with a known organization.
* Institutional Allegiance Concealment: A cop or spy is granted a full false identity when going undercover to infiltrate a criminal organization.
* Institutional Allegiance Concealment: Databases are updated to reflect the new identity of someone going in undercover.
* Institutional bigotry. Most people who lived back when racism, sexism, or other forms of discrimination were societally acceptable likely considered themselves to be moral and decent people, even if they did things like participate in lynchings. In general, most such people
* "Institutional Fail" involves a child who died from neglect, despite the fact that she was supposedly getting regular home visits from the department of child services. This leads to a discovery of serious systemic problems in the department.
* institutionalization was more humane, and that isolation and lack of education tended to make mental defects worse.
* In "St. Olga's Reform School for Wayward Princesses", part of the security at the eponymous
* In "Stool Pigeon" by Kid Creole and the Coconuts, the title character is an ex-con who makes a deal with the FBI. In return for immunity from prosecution and help in setting up a new life, he visits his crooked friends, gets them reminisicing about the cons they pulled together, and records it all with a hidden wire.
* In "Stop me if you heard this" by Jim Holt, about joke history and philosophy, he claims "Kalamazoo", the town in Michigan, as worlds only one-word-joke (arguing that the "z" phoneme is the most funny in English language).
* In "Stop or My Dog Will Shoot", Santa's Little Helper as a police dog catches Snake who then gets off on a technicality.
* in stores that companies have studied how to prevent it from happening. Customers who do this tend to leave the store quickly without buying anything. In his book “Why We Buy: The Science of Shopping” (2000), Mr. Underhill expounded on the dangers of “butt brushes” (if the aisles are too narrow and people brush up against each other when they pass, they tend to leave the store).
* In stores that don't sell age-restricted products, secret shoppers are still hired by head office.
* In stories when Cain is serving with the 597th Valhallan it's also usually mentioned that there are several other regiments on the same planet (most notably "Duty Calls", where he notices a young Commissar who shows enough signs of competence that he wonders how he did later on).
* In stories where Superman's people the Kryptonians are brought back for any length of time some of them are depicted as looking down on non-powered humans. It's the entire shtick of
* In "Storm Front" Captain Archer is urged by one of the people in the
* In "Stormy Weather 2", he once again akumatizes the same weathergirl as in the pilot episode, again just giving her a power boost while keeping the same concept. While she apparently escalates to being able to
* In-story, a fair bit of the plot is driven by Shulk having visions of future events that he either wishes to cause or avert. The results run the spectrum from
* In Storybrooke, the curse has placed them in a loveless marriage and actively prevents them from being with their beloveds (with a little help from Regina), even when Kathryn realizes David loves Mary Margaret (Snow White) more than her and

* In-story, Chandra has done possibly the biggest "Kill it with fire!" feat so far:
* in-story equivalent. Every fan of the relevant baseball team is a suspect.
* In Story Mode a Rancor gets eaten by a beast bigger than it and the evil general guy gets eaten by it as well.
* In-story, most mages think Evangeline is like this, but those who have actually
* In "Story of the King Who Would Be Stronger Than Fate," the title monarch orders Nur Mahomed to join the army and then has him repeatedly sent on dangerous missions in the hope that he'll be killed instead of fulfilling his destiny to marry the king's daughter.
* In-story, Regius of the Council of Six wields the Genesis Weapon Yonohate. Despite being a decidedly ordinary-looking Japanese katana in stark contrast to all of the futuristic sci-fi weaponry in the game, it's rumored to have enough power to destroy a planet, and is kept sealed at all times.
* In-story, the Flying Island of Tipaan, a luxury resort run on the backs of the Svenjaya, an oppressed servant race. The four at least manage to alleviate their lot.
* In-story, the spell Meteor is treated much like a nuclear weapon that a madman has acquired. The phrase Aeris uses for it is even "Ultimate Destruction Magic," sounding similar to the phrase "Weapon of Mass Destruction."
* In "Straight and Narrow", Rusty Dobson confides in Charlie Walters that, after his father left a year earlier, he became a troublemaker so that his corporate executive mother would pay attention to him. He says that the plan worked too well given that she sent him to the Milgram Academy to be straightened out.
* In "Stranded", a nerdy teenager with an interest in science is neglected by his sports-oriented father, who
* In "Stranded", Kevin Buchanan is continually neglected by his father Alex, who frequently claims that he has no time for him but seems to have all the time in the world for his elder son Josh. Tyr'Nar takes advantage of Kevin's distant relationship with his father to convince Kevin to help him. Kevin's mother Danielle admits that she likewise spends far more time with Josh than she does with Kevin.
* In "Stranded", Kevin Buchanan's elder brother Josh is a jock and a genuinely nice guy.
* In "Stranded", the shapeshifter Tyr'Nar has telepathic powers. This allows him to read Kevin Buchanan's mind and assume the form of the US Air Force captain on the box which one of Kevin's many model planes came in. He later poses as Cindy Parker after reading Brad's mind.
* In "Strange Bedfellows", Fran Fine comes home from a party drunk and stumbles into Maxwell Sheffield's room without realising it. He is doped up on cold meds, so in the morning, neither can recall what happened.
* In "Strange Music" the narrator finds in her dead grandfather's loft a trunk full of antique dolls with mouths like those of a ventriloquist's dummy, all but one of which are missing their lower jaws; the one with its jaw intact is a
* In "Strange New World", the Enterprise manages to find a previously unknown Earthlike planet. T'Pol (the Vulcan representative and science officer) says that standard Vulcan policy for examining a new planet is to perform surveys from orbit for a week before flying down. Archer says that those are Vulcan protocols, not human. Human protocols, apparently, involve flying down to the planet right away and walking around without any safety gear. Predictably, this results in disaster. Furthermore, the technobabble explanation as to why the environment was bad for human biology is something that would have been picked up almost immediately, implying that absolutely no scanning at all was performed before they started breathing the air and
* In "Stranger in a Strange Land", Dean has been possessed by the Archangel Michael.
* In "Stranger in Possum Meadows", Danny Wilkins is placed in cryostasis aboard Scout's ship as

* In "Stranger in Possum Meadows", the Wilkins' dog Biff barks at Scout, who is an alien who intends to
* In "Stranger on the Shore", Del used this to get Denzil to accompany him on his booze cruise to France. Denzil tried to back out but Trigger reminded him "It was your idea!", as this page is too.
* In "Stressed Western", the Legends try putting their hands together in a circle for a
* In "Stretch Has A Problem" she's fit-to-burst when she thinks Walter needs her at his side during the State Basketball Championship. She doesn't miss a beat when she finds out its actually Stretch Snodgrass.
* In "Stretch Is In Love Again", Miss Brooks cheers on a dead tired Stretch Snodgrass when he runs the wrong way and scores on Madison.
* In "Strike Up the Band", Henry and Mr. Wilson chase a purse snatcher who tries to hide from them by posing as a mannequin in a department store display. He
* In strip 711, Haley buys from cosmetics company Aton (A parody of Avon).
* In strip #913, Tarquin makes one last attempt to reconcile with Nale, even after
* In "Striper the Kitty", the singer thinks he has a pet cat, when we know that Striper is really a skunk.
* In strip number 4555, Marten's mischievous robot buddy Pintsize has just gotten a more lifelike humanoid body, and is bothered by how he feels inhibited from acting and speaking as crudely as he did before. When the rather bosomy Willow says it was nice meeting him, he tries to answer with, "And it was nice meeting YOUR TITS," except he gets stuck on "TI—" without being able to say the rest. Some alternatives, "Your ju—" and "Your baz—" also stick in his throat, causing him much consternation. Willow giggles that she’s going to start calling breasts "Tijubas".
* In "Strong Arms of the Ma", Homer walks out of the bathroom at Moe's Tavern to find Marge tearing the place apart in a steroid-fueled rampage, then silently walks back in.
* In "Strong Arms of the Ma", when Marge suffered from agoraphobia after being attacked by a mugger. Marge, living in the basement, starts working out with the equipment Homer bought and later becomes a bodybuilder and starts abusing steroids.
* In "Strong Bad Classics", Strong Sad babbles nonsensically while high on anesthetic after having his wisdom teeth removed.
* In "Strong Bad is in Jail Cartoon", Strong Bad and The Cheat's cell is just an upended cardboard box with three cans labeled "FOOD", "WATER", and "EWW".
* In Strong Bad's email where he creates his own candy bar, he keeps making the viewer think he's going to cover it in chocolate, but keeps changing it to something else like: "cover it with smooth, rich, creamy...pepperoni!" Eventually, he does top it off with chocolate and calls it "the ol' BBC" (Boring, Brown Chocolate).
* In "Strong Bad Sings", the announcer suggests that one might consider paying nearly $100 for Strong Bad's music collection. He then touts the entire product actually costs $193.75.
* In "Stronger (What Doesn't Kill You)": "I guess there just isn't a market for a pop star who wasn't supermodel-hot or rail-thin making an album full of bitter breakup songs." (Rolling Stone cover dealing with
* In "Strong Poison", the murderer tries to escape from Lord Peter's flat by climbing out of the bathroom window. It doesn't work, not least because it's a three-storey drop to the ground.
* Instructing new soldiers to jump up and down on a 50+ ton armored vehicle to test the suspension.
* Instructional Dialogue: The style of Plato's writings about Socrates.
* Instructional Film and is shocked to find that all the American inventions are now credited to the Russians.
* instructional videos that were common at the time, such as low video quality, abrupt scene transitions, and poorly done edits.
* Instructive Level Design: Objects in the levels are assembled such that the designers don't need to say anything to you.

* Instructors in the French Foreign Legion are loud, profane/obscene, and will harshly punish recruits for any sort of disobedience (one favorite is to have a recruit march laps in boots with no laces while carrying a rucksack full of rocks with the straps replaced with wires). This is because the Legion recruits people from all over the world who don't speak French and they need to quickly foster unit cohesion while making sure everyone knows exactly what's going on.
* Instructors may ignore the grade that's based on your assignment and test scores in favor of giving you a higher grade, often if they believe that you've made enough of an improvement in understanding the course material over the academic quarter/semester/year. For example, if you needed a 70% to pass the course, but you got a 69.9% and your last two tests were 95% each, they may just give you the pass as if you got a 70.0% anyways. Or even bump you up to a B instead of a C.
* Instructor Zephyr about their endeavors to bring down the Government closes off when he hears they're getting intel from pirates, he is sympathetic enough to their cause to keep their secret.
* instructs her owl to steal one of Harry's shirts while delivering him a letter.
* Instrumental covers of pop songs as background music: Between the 1950s and the mid-1990s hardly either an elevator, supermarket, or a department store/shopping mall wouldn't feature instrumental knock-offs of popular songs and standards in the background (also known as "mood music" or "Muzak", after the main company in the business). But by the mid-to-late 1990s, they began to be regarded as uncool, and in some cases, they were seen as a form of mind control to bolster shopping. And the advent of new sound technology (namely CDs) by then phased them out in favor of the actual songs that kind of music covered.
* Instrumentalities Of The Night series, where in order to combat gods (or "Instrumentalities of the night" if you are into that One-True-God thing) the Papacy of Brothe manufactures iron bullets with a silver jacket. Making thousands of pure silver rounds is expensive, and so long the instrumentality is struck with a fast-moving silver object, he'll go down fine.
* Instrumentality Of Man includes light-based and biologically-based computers, robot copies of dead people, robot police, the elimination of unhappiness, by measures escalating to putting the terminally unhappy to death, an underclass of animal-people who are without rights, the immortality drug stroon, ornithopters, telepathic computer interfaces, and other proto-Space Opera and proto-cyberpunk tropes.
* Instrumentality Of Mankind: To survive on alien worlds, some humans have been so modified that they look more alien than human. Inverted with the Underpeople, who are animals modified to act and look human.
* instrument and stage prop by Finnish punk rocker Maukka Perusjätkä.
* Instrument of God: The main character, 246, ends up crossing over into another universe where his life is actually being recorded and is part of a major TV show that a lot of people watch, so he visits a fan convention where he answers questions about the show, but nobody there is aware of the fact it's not really a show, and that the life that's being filmed is really what happens to him.
* Instrument of Murder: A character who has a musical instrument that doubles as a deadly weapon.
* In "Stu & Stewie's Excellent Adventure", Stewie tries to help Stu lose his virginity to his coworker Fran. He sort-of succeeds, but Stu is so pathetic that Fran leaves unsatisfied, Stu having cried for 40 minutes after intercourse (which itself
* In "Stuck Be a Piglet," Piglet is covered in dried mud and can only talk out of the side of his mouth. He's also stuck in the dried up mud puddle and one point, Darby asks him how he's doing.
* In "Stuck in the Middle with You", Crowley (not quite the King of Hell at this point) introduces himself to Ramiel like his name should mean something. Ramiel responds with silence broken only by the sound of a cuckoo clock.
* In "Stuck in the Wringer", SpongeBob gets glued to his wringer no thanks to
* In "Stuck on the Roof" when Squidward's face gets stuck to the grill, his face gets ripped off and sticks to it when he pries himself loose. It's fairly more graphic than the "Spy Buddies" example.

* In "Student Government Day," Harriet Conklin is elected "Mayor for a Day." At the assembly, in front of the
* In "Stupid Sidekick Union", Stimpy walks out when the eponymous "Stupid Sidekicks Union" calls a strike. Ren auditions scabs to replace him... from a scab
* insubordination. In both cases, only a good chewing-out by Steve Jobs himself made him relent somewhat.
* In "Substitute Agents", Olanda tells Oxley that she's happy being in the Maintenance department, stating that she doesn't like the danger that comes with being in the Mobile Unit department. Oxley argues that there's no danger in being a Mobile Unit agent. As the pair step into the van, they find that the Van Computer's alarm is going off.
* In succession, Britain revealed several white women with a soul inspiration (
* in succession. In the first case he is a giant among dwarfs; in the second, a dwarf among giants.
* In "Suckers," a casino security chief arranges a fake murder...which is a cover for the theft of a priceless antique... which is a cover for a heist from the casino's vault...
* In "Suds", Patrick tries to cure SpongeBob by plugging his pores so that bubbles don't come out when he sneezes, Instead, the bubbles build up, making SpongeBob bigger with each sneeze, until he looks like a beach ball the size of the Krusty Krab.
* Insufferable Genius: A character who is highly intelligent, but tends to be rude and condescending to everyone who isn't as smart as they are.
* Insufferable Genius: An intelligent character who acts condescending and rude to those who have lower I.Q.s than them.
* Insufferable Genius: An intelligent character who is so prideful of their genius that they're condescending to everyone who isn't as smart as they are.
* Insufferable Genius female sidekick in 1970. Until the 2018 season teamed up the first ever female Doctor with three different companions, two men and one woman. (Which as previously mentioned was something of a throwback to the very first season in 1963.)
* Insufferable Genius: I look down on dumbasses and dimwits like you because I'm a genius!
* Insufferable Genius is offended, he starts acting in a theatrical and overblown manner, comparing everything to an incoming end of the universe.
* Insufferable Genius, nobody wanted to be her friend, nobody liked her much.
* insufferable genius robot Kryten, who counts as an early example of the snarky, sarcastic robot archetype.
* Insufferable Genius saving a classmate in a carriage accident, and ultimately became a heroic and benevolent character thanks to the positive influence of his friends and loved ones.
* Insufferable Genius self, failing to see why Penny doesn't view them as better than gold (they include a free grammar check or an afternoon at the museum where he points out all of their mistakes).
* Insufferable Genius that I thought was the keynote for this evening: 'Everybody have fun tonight. Everybody Wang Chung tonight.'"
* Insufferable Imbecile: A character who is both an idiot and a jerk tends to be played for comedy, especially if the humor revolves around their stubborn idiocy getting them into trouble.
* Insufferable Imbecile: Duuh, I would rather hit my head with a hammer and break shit than hang out with you bitches!
* insufferable who seems to go out of his way to offend and irritate everyone around him.
* Insufficiently Advanced Alien: Aliens that are more primitive than human beings.
* Insufficiently Advanced Alien: Aliens that are more primitive than humans.
* Insufficiently Advanced Alien: Aliens that don't make sense because they managed to travel to Earth but otherwise seem to have no idea what technology is or how it works.

* Insufficiently Advanced Alien: Otherwise advanced aliens who lack some crucial technology.
* In "Suite and Sour", Leni misreads Lynn Sr.'s name as "Mr. La-ood".
* In "Suited for Success," after Rarity shows the others the dresses she designed for them:
* In Suite Life of Zack & Cody, London tries to advertise her telethon to help the homeless by sharing her experience helping them in a very, blunt, matter.
* insular dwarfism, in which large animals become smaller due to the limited resources available. This has occurred with elephants, hippopotamuses, dinosaurs, and even a species of prehistoric human. Such creatures can often be found in the same environment as examples of the phenomenon's opposite.
* Insult Backfire: Someone tries to insult another person, but the other person either takes the insult as a compliment or is too stupid to understand the insult.
* Insult Backfire that one... a better example would be Malcolm's attempt to derail Geoff Holhurst's leadership bid:
* Insult Backfire, though. While Lee would’ve preferred not to have his property seized, he considered it an honor for it to be used as a final resting place for soldiers.
* insulted Ash as a trainer from her is probably the stupidest thing anyone has ever said in possibly all of anime history.
* insulted Texas, SpongeBob hides behind a tree that Sandy karate chops in half, and him with it. His two halves go back to running before rejoining.
* Insult Friendly Fire: Insult one person with an insult that unintentionally offends another person you didn't mean to insult because it also applies to them.
* Insult Friendly Fire: Someone tries to insult another person, but they inadvertently insult one of their own allies.
* Insult Friendly Fire: The speaker intends to insult someone they don't like, but insults a friend instead.
* insulting A by saying it has as much B as C, where C doesn't have any B at all, and then further insulting A by saying that C has more D, where C doesn't have any D either.
* insulting the audience in their promos during the rise of his popularity.
* insulting the opponent as a form of art, all the comebacks have to rhyme.
* Insult Misfire: A person gets insulted but misinterprets who the insult is aimed at.
* Insult Misfire: Someone insults another person and the person misinterprets who the insult is aimed at.
* Insult of Endearment: Rude nicknames being used by friends vs. kind nicknames being used by enemies or at least insincere people.
* insults at each other until Renji insults Bazz-B's mohican. Bazz-B's so enraged, he reveals he had really liked Renji's tattooed eyebrows. Renji is utterly thrilled, but Bazz-B tells him it's too little, too late. Meanwhile, a disbelieving Rukia snarks their behaviour in the background.
* insults Nagato's dead best friend Azuki. Nagato throws the first punch, but Asakura has no qualms against fighting back.
* Insult Swordfighting duels always give you the option to wittingly insult your opponent with "you're ugly!" and "you're stupid!" These insults automatically fail, with the only rebuttal being "is that the best you can come up with?".
* insult swordfighting, Guybrush must memorize the insults and comebacks used by his opponents to make them easier to defeat. When fighting the Swordmaster, Guybrush learns a unique set of insults that cannot be countered by other pirates. Using them is pointless, because they prevent you from learning new comebacks, and by the time you've met the Swordmaster the only reason you'd have to fight other pirates is to learn new comebacks.
* insult that Izuku's former friend Katsuki used to belittle him (it means 'useless'), but Ochaco came to use the name after a misunderstanding, thinking it sounded encouraging. This completely changed Izuku's outlook on that name, to the point he decided to adopt it as his superhero alias; while Katsuki looked angry about that, Ochaco was very touched.

* Insult to Rocks insult them with a noun, but that'd be insulting to the thing (e.g. "I'd call you a pig but that'd be rude to pigs.")
* insult will prevent him from being a true father. When he sees the human protagonist with a son, he makes a sad smile.
* In Sumerian myth, Inanna wanted to marry the farmer Enkimdu, but her brother Utu wanted to her marry the shepherd Dumuzi. Dumuzi confronts her and argues, scornfully comparing the dates and other foods the farmer could give her to the cheeses, yogurts, and other dairy products he could. This won the day. As a consequence, her temples maintain massive herds of sheep for the offering of butter and cheese necessary for her worship.
* In Sumia and Chrom's supports, she bakes him a series of savory pies (a bento in the Japanese version) in hopes of both winning his heart
* In summer 2017, there were multiple instances of TV Land playing an ad for K-Y Yours and Mine (a sexual lubricant) twice during the same advertising break (usually with one different ad in between).
* In "Summer Belongs To You", Candace and Jeremy attempt one as they cement their
* In Summer, Jack crosses a desert, and is attacked by strange shadowy creatures. His sword passes right through them. He almost overexerts himself in the heat trying to fight them off, but
* In "Summer Sucks", Cartman is forced to take swimming lessons with first graders, and is mocked by Stan who claims the first graders all pee in the pool. True to Stan's prediction, whenever Cartman must pass by them, the water turns yellow as the children pee in the pool. Many "Oh, weak!" comments from Cartman ensue. When the pool reopens after
* In "Summerween", Grunkle Stan decides that in the end, the titular holiday isn't about costumes, candy, or scaring people. It's a time for the whole family to get together and celebrate what really matters: "pure
* In Sumo, a rikishi getting promoted to a rank where he's completely over his head isn't a big deal; he'll simply have a terrible tournament and be demoted. The exception is ozeki. Reaching the rank requires an exceptional record over three tournaments, generally at least 33 wins (out of 45) and one runner-up at minimum. However, he cannot be demoted unless he has
* In "Sumo Of The Opera", the Italian Scallion (played by Larry the Cucumber) sits on a whoopee cushion that was placed on a stool, after his trainer Mikey (played by Pa Grape) tells him to sit down.
* In "Sunday, Cruddy Sunday", Wally's Superbowl tickets are revealed to be fakes because the hologram is missing, there's no such team as the Spungos, and they seem to be printed on some kind of cracker. Which is still edible.
* In Sunset's first Loop meeting Leman Russ, she used a chainsaw to break Tirek's captives out of his prison. It made enough of an impression that she got pardoned for her earlier crimes.
* In "Sunshine Makers", the evil gnomes have a murky spray that can counteract the happy effects of the good gnome sunshine milk.
* In "Sunspot's Night Out", Cody goes missing and Mitchell leaves a trail of dog treats for him to find. Jet and the gang stumble upon the trail while trying to find Sunspot, who's also missing. Jet almost eats a dog treat, but his friends warn him not to.
* In Super Bowl XLV, Green Bay Packers safety Nick Collins ran an interception back for a touchdown, putting the Packers up 14-0, in the same play where the Pittsburgh Steelers lost an offensive lineman to injury. Combining this with a bit of
* In Super Bowl XLVI, the New England Patriots, trailing the New York Giants 21-17, got the ball with 57 seconds left on the play clock, but the subsequent drive was riddled with incomplete passes (plus one instance of Brady getting sacked) and the Patriots were ultimately left on their own 49-yard line with five seconds left in play. With no alternative, Brady threw a Hail Mary which actually came down just about perfectly over the end zone, but Giants safety Kenny Phillips managed to get his hands on the ball first and knock it away from the Patriots' recievers. Tight end Rob Gronkowski attempted to dive for it as it fell but couldn't get there fast enough, and the ball bounced to the ground to end the game.

* In Super Bowl XXXIX, Donovan McNabb completed a pass to Terrell Owens, giving him an open-field run to the endzone. However, Owens hadn't fully recovered from a leg injury from earlier in the season, so instead of scoring a touchdown like he would have on a healthy leg, a Patriot defender was able to catch up and tackle him from behind. The Eagles proceeded to fumble on the next play and went on to lose the game by 3.
* In Super Bowl XXXVI in the 2001-02 NFL season between the New England Patriots and St. Louis Rams, Rams wide receiver Ricky Proehl would catch the game-tying touchdown pass by Rams QB Kurt Warner with less than two minutes remaining, which left enough time on the clock for Patriots QB Tom Brady to lead a drive that brought the Patriots into field goal range before stopping the clock so that kicker Adam Vinatieri could take the field to kick the game-winning field goal as time expired, giving the Patriots their first-ever Super Bowl win. Two years later, in Super Bowl XXXVIII, between the Patriots and the Carolina Panthers, Ricky Proehl, who now played for the Panthers, caught the game-tying touchdown pass by Panthers QB Jake Delhomme with less than two minutes remaining, which left enough time on the clock for Patriots QB Tom Brady to lead a drive that brought the Patriots into field goal range before stopping the clock so that kicker Adam Vinatieri could take the field to kick the game-winning field goal as time expired, giving the Patriots their second Super Bowl win.
* In "Super Donkey Kong Bros", when Donkey Kong calls Toadsworth an old man after accusing Mario of stealing the Great Banana:
* In "Super Friends: Rest in Peace", Apache Chief wears a lead suit in order to find and dispose of the Noxium Crystal, which acts as kryptonite to all superheroes.
* In "Supergirl Lives", one of the main characters, Winn, is on the Moon, and he beats an alien with a rock and exclaims "I'm not the red shirt! I'm not the red shirt! You're the red shirt!" This references Winn's love for Sci-Fi.
* In Superhero comics, one-in-a-million chance is code for 100% certainty.
* In "Superman vs. Goku", Superman's heat beam bounces harmlessly off Goku's arm.
* In Superman/Wonder Woman #2, Apollo insults the latter hero for "slutting around" with an alien. Superman gives a brief
* In "Super Pfff", when the Weather Girl perceives that both of her love interests don't like her anymore, she attempts suicide by driving her car to the tornado created by the spinning of T-Bone the dog.
* In Super Robot Wars Alpha Gaiden, if you fully upgrade the walker machines (some of the most useless mechs in the game) and sell the WMs, you get a ton of useful items you couldn't get otherwise. It seems to be a
* In "Super Squatter", Meatwad evidently makes smoothies out of spoiled hot dogs, but he couldn't make them at the moment because of Shake refusing to pay the bills and rendering the blender inoperable. He tries to get around this by
* In "Superstar", everyone in Jonathan's world is hot for Jonathan. Buffy, looking for clues, asks Giles if he has a Jonathan Swimsuit Calendar. He replies "No! ...yes. It was a gift!"
* In Super's Universal Survival Arc, when Goku and Jiren square off for the first time. Goku tests things out by going Super Sayian 2, but Jiren doesn't even react to the punches. He switches to base God Form and this does make Jiren move...but only enough that he only needs his
* In supplemental materials, Cisco attempts to help Bates remember and he responds negatively to it. He apparently doesn't want to remember.
* In support of the restoration effort after the Notre-Dame Cathedral fire on April 15, 2019 and to let players see the game's painstaking recreation of the cathedral,
* In supports, Leo comments that he started out training with swords, but eventually switched to using magic instead in order to avoid
* Insupu the kids build a mansion with a functioning modern kitchen from wood and raffia stings.
* insurance-based amusement park then cuts to show the Progressive team standing in an empty parking lot saying it was probably a bad idea.

* Insurance Fraud wiser to the usual tricks than fictional ones tend to be. Fictional examples are largely based on either exceptional cases, or early cases from before the insurance companies wised up.
* insurance money, Harry. You know that blow job you always wanted, Harry?" [Mimic blowing the ashes off the table.]
* In "Surf and/or Turf", Ocean Flow offers to show Twilight her children's baby pictures, much to the embarrassment of her son, Terramar.
* In "Surf and/or Turf", the CMC has to decide if Terramar can stay with his hippogriff dad Skybeak in Harmonizing Heights, or with his Seapony mother Oceanflow in Seaquestria. A musical number follows; Sweetie Bell suggests the former, while Scootaloo settles on the latter. The song eventually turns into a quarrel between them which soon ends with one of these.
* insurgency against Erudite this is simplified so that only Tris, Four, Caleb, Peter, and Jeanine figure much.
* Insurgency. Moreover, regular grenades and even just bullets will kick up smaller dust clouds as well.
* Insurgent, driving Tris to sacrifice herself and turn herself in at Erudite HQ.
* Insurgent, she leads the coup to take over Chicago and dismantle the faction system, and is a key player in the subsequent war between the factionless and the former faction members.
* Insurgent, Tris can't bring herself to use a gun, but has no problems using a knife.
* Insurmountable Waist-Height FenceAn obstacle that looks as if the player character should easily be able to get across it proves impassable in gameplay.
* Insurmountable Waist-Height Fence to climb over the fence, for some reason.
* In "Surprise!" Francine embarrasses Catherine by getting on the microphone at her sweet sixteen bowling party and announcing "Catherine loves Shawn!", then making kissing noises into the microphone. Catherine retaliates by chasing Francine out of the bowling alley.
* In "Surprise", Hercules navigates another maze by somehow leaving a trail of oil from a rather small jar. When it's time for him to leave, he throws down a torch that ignites the oil, creating a flaming trail back to the entrance.
* In "Surprise Party," Lamont, Grady, Bubba, Rollo, and Esther throw Fred a surprise party on the night of his return from St. Louis. After Fred comes home and makes a mess of his own party, he overhears Lamont trying to mend Grady's broken feelings by telling him he was just as good a housekeeper and businessman as Fred; now with Fred's feeling's hurt, he wanders off into the night to a nearby bar to drown his sorrows, but returns later to pass out on the couch. The episode ends with the morning after and Fred's massive hangover.
* In surprising frequency doctors are confronted with a patient, of either gender, who in act of self-pleasuring or some rather kinky consensual sex have managed to jam something in one of their orifices. The excuses for how that particular object got there range, the most common being, "I tripped and fell on it" (
* Insurrection and insisted he would be healthy by then even though he had a broken jaw at the time. 450 urged him not to do it, saying if Carlitos had no concern for his own health he should think about friends and family.
* Insurrection in order to fight off an alien incursion. When the authorities back on Earth demand that status quo be restored, the colony goes into open rebellion and renames itself Liberty, then seeks to inspire other colonies to also rebel.
* Insurrectionist Inheritor: The worthy heir is the one who rebelled against, stood up to or even tried to kill the deceased.
* Insurrection the Enterprise-E crew has a gray dickey-like object on their dress uniforms, however, Captain Picards’s is white.
* Insurrection). Therefore, if they are acting as diplomats or ambassadors, then they need to be easily identified. Many times in the various series, characters disguised themselves to blend in when on a hostile planet. In the original it was usually via costume, and in the later series surgical alteration was used to transform the characters. However, somewhat justified in that Starfleet personnel, as their name suggests, are on board a spaceship most of the time and are thus in theory unlikely to be personally shot at (though this doesn't explain why away teams didn't wear subdued colors as a matter of course).

* In "Survival Instinct", Captain Janeway asks Kim and Paris if they won a tennis-like game they were playing against some aliens. Paris assures her they did, and Kim chimes in, "We kicked their...rackets."
* In Survival Island (a custom map that eventually starts having slight relevance to the main plot that is billed as Season 2), they are in a slight hurry at the start to get coal for torches. Near the end, they again go looking for coal, this time to
* In "Survival of the Idiots", Patrick is knocked out by Sandy and says "Hot wings", as
* In Susanna Clarke's "Tom Brightwind or How the Fairy Bridge Was Built at Thoresby" (set in the
* In Suzanne Finnamore's 'Split,' she admits to having sex with her ex in the midst of their messy divorce, even though he's theoretically with The Other Woman (the same one he left Suzanne for) and she claims that sex is The Best. Ever.
* In SVU, Olivia tells Dale that he only has to kill Elliot, and he can be her new partner and lover.
* In "[S] Wake", Dream Feferi barely has time to notice Jack before he unceremoniously slices her in two and leaves her for dead.
* In Swan Eaters, there's actually an evil triplet, Ivan. Peter, the more simpleminded triplet, and Clover, his younger sister, who is chose as Olwen's apprentice instead of him are his favorite victims, and he often lusts for power.
* In "Swan Song", Castle can totally see why a lead singer going solo would provide his bandmates motive for murder:
* In "Swarm of the Century", a Parasprite ignores Fluttershy's offer of a single apple and eats her entire stock
* In Sweden, about 300 "witches" were burned between 1668 and 1676. Most of them admitted to having committed witchcraft, and were rewarded by being decapitated before the burning. The only one to be burned alive was Malin Matsdotter, to whom this was punishment for refusing to admit anything. Before she was burned alive, she noticed that one of her daughters (the one that had accused her) stood in the crowd and told her and everyone present that her daughter now belonged to the devil. She (reportedly) did not scream when she was burned. It was probably due to a sack of gunpowder being placed around her neck out of mercy.
* In Sweden, Henrik Schyffert made a highly successful career playing the straight man to Johan Rheborg's and Robert Gustafsson's Wise Guys, cutting his teeth as the show host in
* In Sweden, it's not uncommon to find a centuries old "Church of Doom" in any given village, town or city. Technically just a local variant of the Latin
* In Sweden, most cartoons are dubbed by professional voice actors but sometimes they get a celebrity or two
* In Sweden's 2014 general election, the anti-immigrant Sweden Democrats ran an ad showing crowds of Muslim women in burqas lining up to get welfare benefits while an elderly woman with a stroller was left high and dry. The ad played on the fears of the party's xenophobic base and swept the Sweden Democrats into being parliament's 3rd largest party.
* In Sweden Santa Claus predecessor Julbocken (Christmas buck) a creature in fur and with a goat-bucks head that gave presents to nice kids and butted naughty once with its horns.
* In Sweden, the sign-off is "Vän av ordning", literally "friend of order".
* In Sweden, those who own a television must pay a yearly fee. Sometimes, controllers visit people who have not paid, to check if they own one. What follows is a paraphrased urban legend of one such visit.
* In Swedish, Norwegian and Danish the word "gift" (pronounced "yift" in Swedish/Norwegian, but with a hard g just like the English word "gift" in Danish) means both "married" and "poison", one wonders if this was made so on purpose...
* In "Sweets and Sour Marge," a man jumps off the ledge of a building just as

* In "Sweets and Sour Marge", Homer tries to use reverse psychology on a toucan. It doesn't work, for precisely the same reasons that it wouldn't work on the toucans in the real world.
* In "Sweet Seymour Skinner's Baadasssss Song", Bart knows where Principal Skinner lives because he pulled this prank on the principal in the past.
* In swimming, flip-turns, or the underwater transition they do at the end of the pool to get going in the opposite direction. Especially backstroke. Every swimmer knows how many strokes they need to take prior to executing their turn once they reach the "flags", factoring in their own top speed and stroke/body length. However, in the US several lap pools are measured out to be 25 yards (especially older ones) while others are 25
* In Swing Kids (about teenagers in Hitler's Germany) one of the kids is forced into the Hitler Youth, and is assigned to deliver some small boxes to various people, all of whom scream after he leaves. He decides to open one and discovers a wedding ring and some ash - he'd been delivering the remains of people who had been executed and cremated.
* In "S'winter", Doofenshmirtz prepared a trap at the front door, but Perry evaded it because the maid forgot to lock the back door.
* In "S'Winter" when Stacy makes her cameo near the end, she's overlapped by two other background characters and isn't blinking, possibly lazily edited in at the last minute.
* In "Swiss Family Phineas", during Doofenshmirtz's explanation of how he wants to start a chain of "Institutes of Evilology", one of his student's lab tables has what is clearly
* In "Switch the Flip", Stewie encourages Brian to offend God by telling him, "Say something you couldn't say on TV." Brian looks up, says, "Hey, God..." and the rest of his speech gets censored.
* In "Switch the Flip", Stewie, in Brian's body, goes to get a job at the community college, a professor is fired for having sex with one of his students even seven minutes.
* In Switzerland, the lowest coin is 5 Rappen, but prices like 29.95 Fr. are rather rare. Now, Aldi, a German supermarket chain, expanded into Switzerland and introduced the .99 prices. Many people hate this with passion because you mostly get useless 5rp coins back and therefore boycott it. Aldi is cheaper than any other supermarket here, but because of that, almost no one uses it.
* In Sword of the Stars II: The Lords of Winter, we will meet the creators of the Zuul, the Suul'ka. From what we know about them,
* In "Sworn to the Sword", Steven reads a book titled, "How to Talk to People"
* In 's "Wow! It's Made" series, there's one narrator who treats certain workers cruelly, using them to make various items. In one short, he even declares he's the king.
* Insylum: The Sleep of Reason Breeds Monsters has players taking the role of insane asylum patients who have their memories wiped by The King in Yellow and journey into a disturbing dreamscape called the Night World to recover what they have lost.
* In "Sympathy for the Devil", Owen surprises Brooke by being naked in the backseat of her car in an attempt to seduce her. She's not amused, kicks him out and drives off with his clothes leaving him naked on the streets where he's quickly arrested for public indecency.
* In Synthesis and Destroy, the Citadel is also shown exploding, with the Presidium, the structural core of the station, collapsing. Through inference of its holding station instead of orbiting when the Reapers brought it to Earth, the billion-ton ward arms would be falling Earthward and possibly causing five extinction event impacts. The Extended Cut changes this into having the Citadel instead look like it should be condemned and dismantled, with holes in the Wards' bases, and a huge chunk out of the Presidium (which again is the structural core of the station). Control averts this.
* In "Syzygy" Scully sees what appears to be a torch-bearing mob in the distance, though when they get close it's revealed their torches are of the battery-powered kind and their 'pitchfork' is a single shotgun.

* In 'Table 34', Jess and the gang go to a dating convention for East Indians. Each are inducted into the event and have to take part in activities. After kissing Nick the night before, Jess is still uncertain about her feelings for him. Her boyfriend Sam arrives and they take part in a team activity where a hula-hoop must travel from one end of a circle to the other. Each member holds hands and the couples deemed compatible have less trouble moving the hoop from one to the other. Jess struggles to move the hoop to Sam, which Nick views as a sign of their incompatability. In a later exercise, Jess and Nick have to make a table out of newspapers. Those with tables that can hold a phone book have better success as a couple. Of course, the two construct a sound table that is strong enough for Nick to stand on.
* In tabletop RPGs, while storytelling-oriented Game Masters tend to leave these things to players, there often are
* In "Tabula Rasa", after everyone loses their memories, Buffy has to tell Spike that he's a vampire and they're both pretty confused that he seems to be one of the good guys. This leads to a playful
* In "Tabula Rasa" a spell causes the Scooby Gang to lose their memories. Anya begins to try various spells in the hopes of reversing it, at one point conjuring up a skeletal swordsman which Giles fences with, all while shouting at Anya to 'try another book'.
* In "Tacking Into the Wind," it being impractical to throw anyone through a window on a space station, the room where Worf and Gowron duel is conveniently supplied with a static tactical display inexplicably printed on a huge vertical sheet of glass, for Worf to be dramatically hurled through.
* Intacto makes use of this. One of the games that play has its players wearing blindfolds and running full speed through a forest. The winner is the one who is able to avoid the trees longest.
* In Tag Force 4, however, although the heart system used in the previous two games still exists, you arn't forced to pick one person to tag team with until you finish their particular storyline. Instead, Each day you can talk to and give items to different characters and eventually choose them as your partner if you ask them. If you ask to partner up with a character when they have 2-and-a-half hearts or more, it is the only time they will ask you to edit their deck (otherwise you have to ask an NPC to force them to let you for the price of a hefty 10,000DP).
* In "Tails In Charge", Tails witnesses Scratch and Grounder build a giant mousetrap in an attempt to catch him. They use a
* In "Tails, You Lose," Zak is conducting a game of freeze dance with the song "The Wings on the Dragon," a variation of "The Wheels on the Bus." He conducts and sings the song very slowly, leading Wheezie to complain that fast music is better for the game. Zak responds "Is not." "Is too!" comes in, and they're off until Wheezie snatches the baton and conducts the game to a fast version of the song.
* In Taiwan and some parts of China, the next of kin sometimes hire entertainers, especially strippers, to perform at funerals. Notably, the funeral procession of Tung Hsiang, a Taiwanese politician, included fifty pole dancers. Part of the logic is that having lots of mourners at your funeral is a mark of prestige, and naked ladies are a good way to bring people in. (The Chinese government frowns on this practice and considers it fairly embarrassing on the global stage, but they haven't had much luck in getting it to stop.)
* In Taiwan, selling betelnuts is done by pretty young women who attract customers by wearing very,
* In Taiwan, there's also New Taipei City, formerly known as Taipei County—not to be confused with the capital of the Republic of China, Taipei, one of two enclaves of New Taipei (New Taipei City is called "Xinbeishi" in Chinese without "Tai", "beishi" itself is already a common abbreviation for Taipei City inside Taiwan, but the city declared itself "New Taipei" in English for better understanding of its nature by foreigners).
* In "Take Back Your Mink", he tells her that "Miss Fine" is pregnant and "Mr. Sheffield" is the father, neglecting to mention that

* In Takeshi's route, when trying to think of a nickname for the Kid, Coco suggests "Pablo Diego Jose Francisco de Hora Juan Novecino Marie de Los Remedios Siburiano de la Santessima Trinidado Luis Picasso". The Kid decides to just stick with "the Kid". (The scary thing is, this is based on the full name of
* In Talador, part of the city has Legion demons called "Concubines of Lust" and "Nefarious Madams", along with many mortal Legion members. It's pretty obvious what the purpose of the place is.
* In "Tale of Tiger Claw", it is revealed that Tiger Claw had his tail cut off by
* In "Tales from the Omnitrix," the Tennysons tell campfire stories that are shown in different animation styles, resembling those of
* In "Tales from the Public Domain", after finishing the Hamlet portion of the story, Homer claims that it was made into the film
* In "Tales from the Resistance: Back to the 2nd Dimension", Phineas and Ferb's dad gives them his sports equipment for them to play with after
* In "Tales of a Third Grade Nothing", Stewie, Brian, and Frank Sinatra, Jr. renovate their old nightclub into the swanky pLace, which is initially a success, only for everyone there to leave once Andy Dick shows up.
* In Tales of VS., during Stahn's story mode, Khang screams this when Phillia decides to fight along side with Stahn against him.
* In Talia's body. Flirting with Old!Bruce, complete with a smooch later:
* In talking about getting an education, Wilson, who has led an extremely vivid life anyway, admitted that he worried that all his studies of great writers, philosophers and leaders would be useless in the real world. Then Tim moved in next door, letting him call on that knowledge and wisdom
* In Tall Cotton, by Charles G. Hulse. Tots, a boy growing up during the Depression, has sex with boys and girls his own age, and with men. His male cousin, a few years older, then reveals that he is in love with him.
* In Tamie's route, it's inverted. She's fine with pursuing Masaya, but he's not,
* Intangibility, especially when the character can't be attacked or restrained in any way, and/or they can still affect the physical world while intangible.
* intangibility punch—or, as she calls it, "that magical fisting thing you do"—and speculates he could make a lot of money out of it. Subverted in a later conversation, when she suggests using it to remove sharp objects from people.
* Intangibility quirk makes him drop his clothes because he phases right through them.
* Intangibility quirk that causes, among other side effects, his clothes to fall out of his body, so he fights naked against the entire class 1-A, which also causes some surprised reactions.
* Intangibility. This is most common in modern works; ghosts in older stories are more likely to be solid, and some can even pass for living humans.
* intangible concepts such as memory or eyecolor, or even the thief's own soul, ensuring that death will never hold her back.
* Intangible Price: Does a treasured childhood memory sound like a fair price?
* Intangible Theft: Stealing an abstract concept, something like a name, or something that exists but isn't a physical object (like a smell or a shadow).
* Intangible Time Travel: You can only time travel as an astral being.
* In "Tankin' It To The Street", Kahn shows off his new gigantic SUV, but it's so big it won't fit in his garage.
* In "Tanks for the Memories", Rainbow Dash and Tank become a part of a massive snowball that crashes into Ponyville.
* In "Tapestry," Picard relives the days leading up to when he lost his original heart. Although everyone in his dream/memory/time-travel/thing sees him as a 19-year-old, he is still played by Patrick Stewart, so the audience sees him as a bald 40-something. Approaches this trope when he sleeps with one of his friends, who is of course an actual 19-year-old.
* In "Tarzanimal", the babies put banana peels on their feet to use as roller skates.
* In "Taste Buds", Chowder's tongue is strengthened and ends up dominating the rest of his body, dictating what he will eat and beating him up if he does not comply

* In taxonomy, the Ur-Example of a newly-classified species is called a "type specimen". It retains this special status permanently, even if other specimens are subsequently collected which are of better quality; many long-extinct species have fragmentary pieces for their type specimens, even though complete fossils have since been found.
* in Taylor's head Lisa is able to create entire landscapes for Taylor to visit while dreaming, or in self-hypnotic trances.
* In T.C. Boyle's post-apocalyptic short story "After the Plague," the narrator must take precautions against packs of starving neighborhood pets: "I took to walking round the neighborhood with a baseball bat to ward off the packs of feral dogs for which Alpo would never again materialize in a neat bowl in the corner of a dry and warm kitchen."
* In "Tea at the Treedome", after SpongeBob and Patrick temporarily dry out in Sandy's water-free house, they become a photograph of a sponge and starfish.
* In "Tea at the Treedome" as SpongeBob unspectacularly returns to his seat after triumphantly convincing himself that he doesn't need water to live.
* In "Tea At The Treedome", Sandy describes the air in her treedome as the "most
* In "Tea at the Treedome", Sandy mentions that she needs to breathe air, and SpongeBob replies, "Me too!" Then he goes to Patrick and asks him what air is. Naturally, Patrick gives him the wrong information and
* In "Tea at The Treedome", the episode where SpongeBob meets Sandy, SpongeBob goes to Patrick for advice about the mysterious concept of "air". Patrick claims she means "putting on airs", or fancy talk. His advice is to go to Sandy's and 'When In Doubt, Pinky Out'. This causes SpongeBob, an aquatic animal, to slowly dry out in Sandy's "treedome". Patrick enters at one point, and the duo ends up completely drying out, but Sandy saves them with water-filled helmets (which become standard attire when visiting her). So, not only is Patrick's advice misguided, it's even dangerous.
* In "Teach a Man to Ice Fish", Orla, Oswald and the other Arctic agents manage to slide the Arctic precinct's large computer across the floor by making it icy. However, Orla and Oswald find out that the outlet they need to plug the computer into isn't on the bottom floor — it's on Arctic Mr. O's desk, which is on an elevated floor that has no ramp.
* In "Teacher's Aide", Miss Peters' dog Muffin barks at her after she is possessed by the spirit of a gargoyle because he can sense that there is something very wrong with her.
* In "Teacher's Convention", Miss Enight relays a message to Walter Denton that Mr. Boynton was "laid up" and wouldn't be attending the convention with Miss Brooks. Walter tells Miss Brooks, leading her to cancel. Mr. Boynton wasn't the least bit sick.
* In 'Teachers', Jess attends a workshop for teachers in the area. She is paired up with her co-worker Ryan, who she is pining for but hasn't asked out because he is her inferior. Despite her professionalism, the two work perfectly together in the team-building exercises. In one scene, Ryan must navigate her through an obstacle course while she is blindfolded. They make record time. As Jess reaches the end, she trips, but Ryan catches her in his arms.
* In "Teachers Union", Clyde and Lincoln try to get Mrs. Johnson and Coach Pacowski together because they hope the coach will go easy on them during gym class once he and Mrs. Johnson are a couple.
* In Team Fortress 2 proper, The Heavy has a taunt much like this, although he doesn't do it out of rage, and there are no board games on the table (instead there being some soup and other cooking objects).
* In "Team Homer", Homer forms a bowling team with Moe, Apu, and Otto, with Homer getting the sponsorship money out of Mr. Burns while he's high on ether. When Mr. Burns finds out, he wants to join the team, so in order to appease him (and maintain their funding) Otto has to go. However, he still helps them win indirectly when he accidentally knocks over the bowling alley's prize-grabber machine, which causes a big enough impact that it knocks over Burns' pins and wins them the tournament.

* In "Team Homer" Mr. Burns, delirious from huffing ether, tries to drill into Hans Moleman's brain, and it cuts to black as Moleman moans "Oh no... my brains...!"
* In "Team Homer", Mr. Burns's performance is dragging down Homer's bowling team, so Moe says Burns might end up having a little "accident". As Burns limps into the bowling alley, complaining of a knee injury and saying he'll have to withdraw, Moe leaps out (in a ski mask) and bashes his knee with a tire iron, popping it back into place and allowing him to stay on.
* In Team RWBY's defense, Robyn Hill's Semblance basically made hiding the truth from her completely impossible.
* In "Tears of a Clooney", Francine doesn't seem bothered when her hand gets full of glass after she punches a window.
* In "Tears of a Sea Cow", when Dermott is convinced that an attack by The Monarch is an alien invasion, he stows a cigarette lighter as a booby trap against anal probes.
* In "Techno-Team", Stavros Garkos uses robot copies of his soccer team's members during a match. Some parts fall off during the game's second half.
* In "Tech Support", the boys wander into a computer tech support office and are mistaken for new employees. Naturally they attempt to use the office computers to look at porn, but a power outage shuts them down before they can actually see any of it.
* In "Teddy and the Bambino", Teddy changes Toby's diaper when she has to look after him. As if the odor causing Victor to faint
* In "Teed Off", Ed Bighead has been asked to deliberately throw a golf match against the CEO of his company. In fact, he has confederates in this plan secretly (but not-so-subtly) dropping pianos on the balls after Ed hits them. It works well at first, but then Heffer discovers that Ed's allies are cheating and starts cheating in Ed's favor. Like with the pianos, no one notices Heffer doing anything (despite him being extremely conspicuous), and
* In teen sitcoms, some girls have the Wheel of Excuses for what they'll say to turn down a boy they don't want to date.
* Integra fit this trope when she was younger. She shot her uncle in cold blood immediately after it was made clear that her new pet would do it for her, earning her more of said pet's difficult-to-gain respect. Additionally, Manga flashbacks reveal she was capable of ordering around full grown men like they were lapdogs.
* Integra searching for someone to adopt as her heir. Dropped when canon revealed her position would be government appointed in the future.
* Integra's hair falls down past her rear and is a very light shade of blond to boot.
* Integra sometimes wears one too; when she does, it's a brown one, styled somewhere between a trench coat and a greatcoat
* Integrated Speakers: for unbound holograms though, since a holographic female computer avatar holding up an Etch-a-Sketch with her dialogue would be too funny.
* integrate the story only some of the time can all gain benefits from boots that really shouldn't fit them, and even if they have multiple legs, can only have one pair.
* Integration. Everyone realizes this is too big a coincidence to actually be one.
* Integration, Flash Sentry's mother is one for him due to her obsession to have grandchildren. She even stole the spark plugs to Flash's car to try to get Princess Twilight to spend the night at their house. Flash came to terms with his mother being crazy years ago.
* Integration it is revealed that Apple Bloom once lied that she had a coltfriend from the Crystal Empire. Applejack and Rainbow Dash also note that this might be the case with Princess Twilight's relationship with Human Flash Sentry because they have never actually met him. Averted, however, as Twilight and Flash actually are in a relationship.
* Integration tells them that that's actually good, because hating the responsibility means not only will they'll be able to handle it better than most ponies, they'll truly manage to keep any decisions like that to an absolutely last resort.

* Integration: This is one of the main plot lines. The human world is slowly gaining more magic stability and pretty soon it will be impossible to hide magic from the population outside of CHS, so the ponies in Gaia (pony world) and the humans in Terra (human world) work together to prepare for official contact and for the two worlds to become inter-dimensional allies. Sunset and Princess Twilight also have plans for when contact is made, Sunset planning to help the citizens of Terra adapt to the magic they will receive and Twilight hoping to bring technology from Terra over to Gaia.
* Integration Twilight learns that the human version of Bon Bon is named Sweetie Drops and tries to ask her about this. Bon Bon panics and makes a break for it, demonstrating her acrobatics and revealing she has Runes that let her resist magic before being caught by Twilight's guards. She has this reaction afterwards.
* Integrity and Faithlessness, Fidel and Miki have been friends their whole lives, Fidel's father having taken Miki in after her parents died, and Miki is the easiest party member for Fidel to gain affection with.
* In "Telephone Rock", Little Jerry and the Monotones ask the operator to "put some rockin' and rollin' on the telephone." Eventually the operator calls the police on them. At the end of the song, Big Bird says "I wonder how they got that piano in there?"
* In television markets serving two or three states, ads for financial services such as title or payday loans might be useless in another state because of usury laws against them in one state, while another allows them; likewise some laws have been passed to disallow loan agreements with members of the military (some operations take advantage of them being overseas to charge insane amounts of interest).
* Intellect devourers, which actually look like really big brains on four legs, can
* Intellectual Animal: Animals that are smart enough to do things normal animals can't do.
* Intellectual Animal gives up on stealing Randy she tells the unmated male foxes in the forest that she'll mate with whichever one wins a series of lengthy challenges, and then her estrus runs out before they're done.
* Intellectually Supported Tyranny: Intellectuals are not inherently good, and can sometimes back oppressive regimes.
* Intellectual Property are meant to avert this trope by giving certain rights to people who produce intangible products such as digital media.
* intellectual types of warfare. Cavalry and Infantry officers thought of themselves as warriors rather then technicians.
* Intelligence (2006) is partly about an organized crime group engaged in the marijuana trade.
* Intelligence agencies that normally cooperate (such as the American and British agencies) will start keeping things closer to their chests if they think their ally has a mole or a leak.
* Intelligence, but also to demonstrate that the machine was tampered with).
* IntelligenceCollects and studies information on the enemy. They also make sure the enemy can't collect accurate data on your forces. In the field, they may be interrogators who question prisoners, intercept enemy communications, infiltrate databases, or go in disguise to contact the locals.
* Intelligence Equals Isolation: Being smart prevents you from relating to other people from your peer group, which in turn makes it very hard to make friends.
* Intelligence Equals Isolation: If you're smarter than your peers, nobody will want to be around you.
* Intelligence Equals Isolation: Intelligent people are loners with no friends.
* Intelligence Factor a bloodsport, as injuries are rare and there have been no fatalities.
* Intelligence Factor are Psychic-types. The Grimmsnarl and Hatterene chapter says that the Ghost, Dark, and Fairy types are derived from a psionic field as well, with Ghost coming from spirits of the dead and the other two from emotions.

* Intelligence Factor: Beheeyem abduct sheep-like Pokémon a lot because the resemble cute animals from their homeworld.
* Intelligence Factor called Pokérinians, from the planet Pokérin. Beeheeyem are known as Ohbem on their homeworld of Ohba.
* Intelligence Factor, Ludicolo communicate through dancing, while Roserade convey simple messages through scent. Porygon2 communicate with each other through encryption that even the Universal Translator has trouble understanding. Malamar communicate by flashing lights on their bodies.
* Intelligence Factor, the Porygon evolutions' thought processes are described as being complete opposites. Porygon2 are entirely emotionless and focus on tasks like a computer would, yet they still have desires to do things. Meanwhile, Porygon-Z has chaotic emotions that seem to change every few seconds, and its behaviours don't follow the Vulcan idea of logic.
* Intelligence Factor: Urshifu society revolves around training themselves until they're strong enough to fight in wars.
* Intelligence Factor will kill anyone who looks at them. For good reason, Dr. Bashir doesn't want this to become public knowledge.
* Intelligence lore that sends lightning bolts and meteors raining down around the enemy's ears.
* Intelligence making you a total outcast is something of an exaggeration of how high school works — if anything, you'd probably be pretty cool if you could make gadgets like Peter does! As such, rather than
* Intelligence mentions in an early episode that he's the fifth generation of Vaughns to go off to fight for his country, but the first one to come back.
* Intelligence uses the U.S. Cyber Command which is a real agency, in a fictional way. For all intents and purposes, the real CYBERCOM seems to be more of a D.O.D function through the Armed Forces. CYBERCOM on Intelligence seems to be more of a technology focused sort of CIA, despite the Armed Forces pictures located in the main hall of the fictional CYBERCOM. It seems like it's just a tick more advanced than the real thing-even using a modified version of the actual CYBERCOM's emblem.
* Intelligent and Armed Devices franchise are always depicted as being loyal to their users, and have on several occasions given them a much needed pep talk or demanded to be given dangerous upgrades to better protect them in battle. This loyalty goes both ways, as it is stressed at multiple points that Devices are first and foremost a mage's partner.
* Intelligent Device also had the devices of the three Aces and the Wolkenritter placed inside Vita's collection of stuffed bunnies.
* Intelligent Device, and she fights barehanded whenever she gets at close range.
* "Intelligent Falling" seem to have developed into quite a phenomenon.
* Intelligent Forest: A forest that is itself a massive, intelligent organism.
* Intelligent Gerbil: An alien that's basically like a sapient, bipedal version of an Earth animal.
* Intelligent Gerbil: Sapient aliens that resemble non-sapient Earth animals.
* Intelligent Qube gets an honorable mention. It has a Q so it can be shortened to IQ. The European version goes for the more hard-hitting "Kurushi".
* intelligent starships themselves, like Moya, are adapted to work with the pilot species, and, in general, to have human-like creatures living inside themselves. The degree to which the DRDs (repair 'bots) inside Moya are biological and part of her, vs. being mechanical and independent, is somewhat unclear as well.
* Intelligent Systems series, due to it being one of the most popular classes in the series.
* intelligent, which can mean either intelligent or wise (having acquired knowledge). But given who said that, it was unlikely he knew the difference either.
* Intelligible Unintelligible: A character can only speak gibberish, but everyone else understands them perfectly.
* Intelligible Unintelligible: A character who isn't able to speak in anything other than gibberish, yet is understood by the other characters.
* Intelligible Unintelligible: The character talks gibberish, but the other characters have no difficulty understanding them.

* Intellivision, however, and that debacle played a huge role in the company's 1983 discontinuation of Intellivision.
* Intellivision speeds up until you remove it. If you cut a part out of order, you only have a few seconds to resolder it before that bomb explodes. Short circuits also occasionally occur, requiring you to use the fire extinguisher to prevent an explosion.
* Intel's current line of Core processors have specific models designated by i followed by a number (i3, i5, i7, etc).
* Intel's Extreme Edition CPUs have been priced at $999 or more for the opportunity to own the (usually) fastest and most core-packed processors currently on the market that are not among their professional/corporate oriented Xeon server/workstation line
* Intel's Xeon processors — oddly enough, not really targeted at the "extreme" gaming crowd (they're mostly designed for use in commercial servers, where their support for multiple sockets, multiple CPUs per socket, and error-correcting memory are more useful).
* In "Tempests", Earth's offworld colonies sought their independence but lost the ensuing war against Earth. Many colonists feel that Earth authorities treat them poorly because of the war.
* In "Temporal Edict", Lieutenant Shaxs addresses Boimler as "Brimler."
* In "Temporal Edict", when Commander Jack Ransom enters the arena for his
* In "Ten Cents a Dance", Jack watches from the sidelines as a long-lost love waltzes back into Dana's life during a dance marathon.
* Intended Audience Reaction is intentionally invoked by the authors or creators.
* intended feature ("alienating effect"). By discouraging the audience from relating to any of the characters (which was dismissed as a form of escapism), the goal was to draw attention away from them and towards the socioeconomic system that shaped them, and by extension, that same system which exists in real life.
* intended herself and exist as her own person outside of her predetermined role (and even then, she can be pretty ruthless for a good guy!).
* intended to avert this. The earliest concept art involved a lot of stark, metallic architecture and sterile lighting, but ultimately the Collectors felt too out of place in such an environment, and so the Collector Ship was reworked into the “insect hive” appearance it had in the final game.
* intended to be sentient have occasionally featured, such as "Tin Man";
* intended to feature in the finale at some point, but by the time they got there, they realized they didn't have the budget for it.
* (intended) which involves JD imagining scenes of what his future will be like, including getting married to Elliot, who bridal carries him.
* intending to get 100 sex friends mixed signals she sends out and her own sexual insecurity have so far prevented this, as will probably the genuine feelings for Kosuda she developed.
* intending to get drunk, it requires immediate application of liquor.
* Intending to help them to fix their relationship, Daniel talked Asuka about how much she meant to Shinji and how much he had done for her, and he revealed Shinji that Asuka constantly dropped hints that she liked him, but he missed them all.
* intends to do with Ella (i.e., cutting off her ability to feel emotions) during the "Dissent" quest.
* intend to harm her, but, as Benson explains to Dodds, it doesn't matter: he may not have meant to hurt her, but if the girl did not consent and he did it anyway, then it was rape no matter what his intentions.
* intense mean she cannot stay away from him so she follows him and practically tackles him to the ground. Light thinks, "This is the first time I've felt like punching a girl".
* Intensified horrifically with the Utopia expansion, which adds new and specialized slave castes, with the former mineral and food producers being filed under Chattel Slaves. Other new categories include Domestic Servants, a caste of butlers and maids, Battle Thralls, a caste of warriors and

* Intensity when he tells the protagonist that his parents were most loving, caring people that he could have ever wanted... but he killed them anyway.
* intent and gives him a full punch that sends Satan flying out of the ring and destroying a wall.
* intentional A rookie airman unintentionally launched a missile at a USSR target. The Soviets assumed that this was an intentional strike, and let the missiles fly.
* Intentional Engrish for Funny and most likely not an intentional choice.
* intentional have been assassinating or kidnapping people that develop technology the government considers a threat.
* Intentional Heartbreaker: A character pretends to love someone, only to dump them later.
* Intentional Heartbreaker: Dating someone with the intent to break up with them.
* Intentional Heartbreaker: I date people just for the pleasure of breaking up with them, though they should be lucky I even bothered to talk to them at all!
* Intentional Heartbreaker: Toying with someone emotionally by dating them with full intent to dump them later.
* intentional" In 1998 Disneyland redesigned Tomorrowland to deliberately go "Retro-Future"... that is, they stopped even trying to be prophetic and went for the future-as-envisioned-by-Jules-Verne look (essentially, part steampunk and part art deco). For some of the area this worked, but apparently it didn't occur to anyone that it would turn what was then Space Mountain, an iconic gleaming white structure visible from a significant fraction of the park, into what looked like an enormous pile of greenish-brown doggie-doo. A notable exception is the Carousel of Progress, which touts a "Great Big Beautiful Tomorrow" that's at least a decade out-of-date despite Disney's efforts. Carousel of Progress is supposed to showcase "cutting edge" stuff in its last scene... the last minor tweak in 2010 finally added a flat screen TV to a scene written in 1994.
* intentionally bad at that time, but most commenters didn't get the joke.
* Intentionally created, in the Pegasus Galaxy, Stargates that terminate in orbit around planets without including a warning system. In fairness, sometimes even the gates on planets opened into environments that had become non-survivable in the intervening centuries, and of course hostile beings may lie in wait at other gates, so anyone with a lick of sense will send a probe through first.
* intentionally fatal to ride. Called the Euthanasia Coaster, this ride would start with an incline over 510 meters or 1,670 feet tall, which is over 400 feet taller than the Empire State Building. This climb would last two minutes, giving riders time to contemplate their decision to get on. Once it reached the top, the occupants would be given a choice whether they want to continue or get off. Those who stay on would then experience a drop at over 360 kilometers or 220 miles per hour. The coaster would then travel around seven different loops, each getting progressively smaller. These would maintain a constant force of 10 G's on the riders for one minute, forcing blood away from their brains and ultimately killing them. Urbonas designed this ride with the intent to give terminally ill people a euphoric and painless death.
* intentionally incompatible's system notably is fine with murder and theft but heavily penalizes disrespect and hunting sentients for food specifically), or in the hands of a particularly cruel storyteller added to the character as a second, orthogonal meter similar to D and D's order-law grid, requiring the player to track both how good a monster he is and how good a human he is to determine the balance between the two.
* intentionally. In her defense, she had been convinced she was actually undergoing a VR-based test where she was required to act as "unconventional" as possible, with complete freedom to do what she wanted (after years and years of being the proper, uptight, by-the-books member of their team).
* intentionally in order to force-terminate a thread rarely works. (All the same, shouting "Hitler!" is a fun way to express your opinion that a thread should be put to rest.)
* Intentionally invoked in a Denny's commercial. A girl tells her grandmother that Denny's has a Hobbit Menu. The grandmother responds, "I know. Apparently, they based

* Intentionally invoked with the case of the Austrian town of Fucking (officially pronounced "Fooking," * intentionally kept that way so the park could chase money from TV networks regarding their record-breaking attraction. Schlitterbahn Kansas City closed in 2018.
* Intentionally leading your troops into a tight spot from which there is no way of escape without fighting.
* intentionally messed with the slipstream during the start of the Long Night to get rid of any easy paths to their system; cutting off the 'freeways' and only leaving a long, twisting 'dirt road' leading in or out.
* Intentionally naming something "(untitled)" can give a piece an air of mystery as if it were some forgotten, recently-discovered cryptic relic.
* intentionally neglectful. As beret-wearing beatniks, they believed that children ought to be free and unrestrained and thus provided no guidance or discipline at all. This resulted in young Ned being incredibly violent and destructive. After some time, they finally gave in and had to seek psychiatric help to calm Ned down. On the other hand, as an adult, Ned is an outstanding father.
* intentionally, neither of which are really conducive to athletic performance or endurance, even as they taper off when the pregnancy is terminated.
* intentionally news re-enactment in "I Should Have Never Gone Ziplining".
* intentionally off-key rendition of "White Christmas" while Vanna accompanied him on a piano.
* Intentionally played for laughs with Slither. The god of a bandit cult, you arrive at the boss area to see an ominous crucifix, which fire swirls under as some of the most epic and ominous music the game has plays, and what emerges is...
* intentionally shoots Agent Mulder in the shoulder to stop him from killing his father's murderer. He's been put out to let the drugs wore off and they have driven for two days to New Mexico. He wakes up at Albert Hosteen's, their new ally and a translator from Navajo code. Obviously he wonders what happened and he thanks Scully for taking care of him.
* intentionally stop short of the kiss, as the lead up to the kiss (the "drumroll") is the most romantic part, and the kiss itself could be disappointing.
* intentionally; the idea being to charge only the crimes with which they have the best evidence. It has also been known for the government to only charge the number of crimes they need to ensure a life sentence; this way if those sentences are somehow invalidated or the criminal somehow paroled, they can immediately arrest and charge the criminal with the other crimes they weren't accused of the first time, ensuring that they're kept off the street.
* intentionallyThe implication that electronic-sounding pop music (and only electronic-sounding pop music) is singled out for employing the same studio trickery, autotune, drag-and-drop editing and effects processing that almost all modern recording studios have access to in all styles of music doesn't help matters. This is also true with live performances and "mimed" TV appearances.
* intentionally" to make him realize where the "killer" could have hidden the "body."
* intentionally to meaningfully counter-argue any of her points to her face, only when she's out of earshot, so she's shielded by the writers from ever having to admit she might be wrong or address a meaningful counter-arguement to any of her views.
* intentionally would be willing to keep her around after that), leading to the protagonist taking over as the new leader of the community. Since the next season is the final one and focuses back on Clem who leaves to go find AJ, this is probably the first time a community actually manages to keep standing by the end of the story.
* Intentional Mess Making: Making a mess on purpose for whatever reason.
* Intentional Mess Making— Dirtying or breaking something on purpose.
* intentional murder of three people, even suppressing evidence that the man was drunk. It soon becomes obvious that his actions are motivated by the fact that the drunk driver who killed his lover Claire received a light sentence.

* intentional on the part of the Russo Brothers, with Joseph Russo stating they didn’t “gravitate” towards the idealistic Captain America and wanted to show a relatable, complex, and even flawed Steve Rogers.
* intentional. The Nails increase strength and aggression by manipulating their victims' brain chemistry while also having the effect of making them unable to enjoy anything except fighting and killing. Even worse, the Nails slowly degrade the person's brain, slowly killing them. And they can't be removed without killing the host either since the Nails also function as a replacement for the parts of the brain that were removed in the process of implanting them.
* "Intent! It's Fucking Magic!" on the blog Genderbitch. Shorter, more G-rated form: actions like telling racist jokes and outing people against their will cause harm, whether that was your intention or not, so just don't do them.
* Intent on getting the fight with Luffy that he has waited for without Lucci getting in the way,
* Interactive Action Movie" which plays out like a CYOA game, where viewers can click annotations to decide the actions to take. Its possible to get Hariff "killed" in at least 4 endings.
* Interactive Comic is full of this. Most main characters (the humans and trolls, in particular), were named by fan suggestions, and the comic has entire albums of fan-submitted music.
* Interactive Comic takes places in a medical facility no human would want to be treated in.
* Interactive Fiction art pieces, where the PC, an art critic, meets her. Of course, having come to life spontaneously (or so she says), Galatea is not like the rest of the pieces...
* Interactive Fiction, can crush an item you forgot to collect from said mailbox.
* Interactive Fiction games involve locked doors that must be unlocked or circumvented — you can't just break them down. Unless the developer has specifically allowed you to climb or attack bits of scenery, you usually get a default message saying you can't.
* Interactive Fiction games use this to let the player configure his character.
* Interactive Fiction game, where part of the backstory details Satan's arrival on Earth to punish humanity for their sins and his construction of a hellish citadel to house his legions in New Jersey. Apparently it was a few years before people realized something was wrong.
* Interactive Fiction has a text command ('HETERONORMATIVITY OFF') to turn the story into a lesbian romance. There's also a much wearier response for 'PATRIARCHY OFF'.
* Interactive Fiction, images projected by the slide projector are Portal Pictures.
* Interactive Fiction is about escaping from a dangerous situation with purely natural causes. There's nothing that can be pinpointed as an antagonist besides nature.
* Interactive Fiction loves this. One-room games where the player must use everything in the room are common—if there's a wad of gum in the trash can, sooner or later that will be an important wad of gum. From playing these games, audiences come to expect this, too, making it a self-fulfilling cycle: If your game mentions the walls, players will get mad if the walls aren't fully implemented.
* Interactive Fiction. Most of the game is framed by the captured spy PC telling the story to an interrogator. If the PC gets themselves killed, the interrogator will interrupt: "And then you died?", forcing the PC to backtrack.
* interactive fiction not uncommonly comes with an 'undo' command, allowing the player to simply take back moves if desired. (This is for example the default in games written with Inform 7 unless explicitly disabled by the designer.)
* Interactive Fiction of potential letter-wrangling and object transformations, and it pulls it off beautifully. To list just a handful of examples of the game's staggeringly expansive implementation:
* Interactive Fiction places you in the unlikely role of a vase on a shelf, waiting for the right dramatic moment to plummet to the floor.

* Interactive Fiction sports a hulking Asian butler with a pronounced physical resemblance to Oddjob and utterances such as "Next time, have appointment!"
* Interactive Fiction starts with a sequence where you have to get into the escape pod.
* Interactive Fiction, the antagonist casts this on the Guild of Enchanters; they continue the meeting without much difference, despite being frogs and newts.
* Interactive Fiction, the founder of the American Verlac clan, Croseus, got his entire family accused of witchcraft, and only he and his youngest daughter escaped being burned.
* Interactive Fiction. The game promises a sequel, which of course never came.
* Interactive Fiction, the green crystal rod found under the tree is described as smelling "blue", among other things.
* Interactive Fiction, the player character (known as "White") is attempting to stop "Black" from changing the past, although neither side is really in the wrong.
* Interactive Fiction, the player controls several genies of various sort (a classical wish-granting genie, a malevolent destructive genie, and an enslaved magical servant.)
* Interactive Fiction. There is an in-game explanation for why your character has the unique ability to save, reset, and go through the day over and over. The game won't end until you stop playing it or take drastic action.
* Interactive Fiction wherein the Witness in question brings along his daughter and then leaves her behind while he makes his rounds. She doesn't fare so well.
* Interactive Fiction, where you couldn't figure out what to do with a bucket and in frustration typed "KICK THE BUCKET". The game was happy to oblige.
* Interactive Fiction, where you need to toss away enough items to raise your balloon to a safe altitude — and the only things left to toss away are the numerous oddball mementos smuggled by your partner, which he just won't let you get rid of that easily.
* Interactive Fiction, which is based on the author's real-life experiences on coming to terms with her bisexuality, has the main character start out completely clueless about her bisexuality despite many extremely obvious signs of it like her constantly wearing flannel, having numerous LGBT friends, and joking about having a "girl crush" on a beautiful female coworker she can't stop thinking about for some reason.
* Interactive Fiction While your tongue is stuck, all descriptions come back muddled, as if the narrator ith thalking with ith thung thuck to a thlagthole.
* Interactive Fiction, you have very limited time to hide or destroy all evidence of your supernatural powers before your room is searched. One of the damning pieces of evidence is your book, years in writing, that describes faraway lands (which you couldn't have possibly written without using your magic.) If you don't manage to hide it, other options are either to destroy it (at which point the character bleakly remarks he'll never be able to muster up the energy to write it again) or magically change its apparent authorship, so that someone else is credited for your life's work.
* Interactive media example: in the episode "Moaning Lisa", the B-story is that Bart constantly beats Homer at a boxing video game. After Homer trains at the arcade and is just about to beat Bart, Marge unplugs the TV, and Bart announces his retirement from the ring with his undefeated win record.
* Interactive Narrator: The characters interact with the narrator of the story.
* Interactive Narrator: The narrator and the characters directly talk to each other.
* Interactive Narrator: The narrator and the story's characters directly speak to each other.
* Interactive Narrator: The narrator interacts directly with the characters.
* Interactive Story Buddy toys, are iOS only as well, to the annoyance of Android-device-owning parents.
* Interactive Webcomic has Dr. Phage, a giant talking virus with a huge ego and an obsession with tacky bow ties.
* InterceptorLight, fast fighter whose primary purpose is to catch and destroy

Bombers before they can strike the capital ships. They can also be deployed to catch up with recon craft to neutralize them. Real Life air Interceptors traded capability for speed, and as a result was less maneuverable compared to Fighters. In scifi, Interceptors tend to avoid this as technology allows for a more capabilities than their space fighter counterparts.
* Interceptor pulls this at the end to shoot down the bad guy's stealth fighter, despite being unarmed.
* Interceptors, these craft sacrifice maneuverability for performance (such as speed and armament). However, this meant against regular Fighters, Interceptors had a disadvantage being unable to maneuver. In SF this isn't always the case - since shields or new technology could provide improved protection than a typical fighter.
* Interceptor: The titular Interceptor from this short-lived game show wore a long black coat. This made him easily identifiable for the contestants, though in some cases he took it off to disguise himself.
* Interceptor, where the X-COM Company sends a force to the Frontier to protect human colonies.
* Intercept, the enemy missiles fly in a high-density formation with clusters of small far-away missiles interspersed with the occasional faster and closer ones above them. You're limited to 3 shots on the screen at once, but there will be more missiles on the screen at one time than that especially near the end. With all the small far-away targets and the 3-shot limit, your base most likely will get hit a few times.
* Interchangeable Asian Cultures: Cultural stereotypes of China, Korea, Japan, etc which treat the people from all these different regions as being exactly or mostly the same as each other.
* Interclass Friendship: A notable friendship between people of different social classes.
* Interclass Friendship: Friendship between two people who have a significant income gap.
* Intercom carries over the universal information of the human mind found in Mind Manuals. They even use it as a way to show the potential and the dangers of actually trying to bring a host's individual psyche inside itself during Lucid Dreaming.
* Intercom, continues to explore different directions in which to take the many characters, introduces new characters that aren't carbon copies of previous characters, shows the consequences of the film, and has a new premise which isn't just a straight rehash of the original.
* Intercom has Joy greet Riley this way when she first enters headquarters.
* Intercom has on several occasions drawn inspiration from her own work's TV Tropes pages.
* Intercom. Only this time, Riley's going to be visiting it! And talking to her emotions!!
* Intercompany Crossover to get him to unleash his full imagination, but going that far Joker finally goes "I never imagined..." and when he does the Shaper Of Worlds promptly ceases giving life to Joker's whims leaving him defeated.
* Intercom, Riley starts to feel this way about the physical world, due to how much nicer and more exciting the former is.
* Intercom. The intercom in question exists in Riley's mind, and is occasionally used by her emotions to speak to her as a "conscience"-type voice. Rather than accidentally leaving it on after using it, however, one of them accidentally damages it, without realizing they had also activated it in the process. Most importantly, it's stuck—they can't turn it off. They realize this when Riley asks "who said that?" immediately after Disgust says something.
* Intercom when you think about it is pretty sizable. You have the main 6 characters (Riley and emotions, with Joy and Fear being slightly more important), Supporting cast students and parents plus THEIR emotions, coaches, teachers, mind workers. There's a lot of characters in this story compared to the film, even if some of them aren't as complex.
* Intercom, with things in Headquarters happening immediately (and by extension the Islands since they're linked to it) while everything else moves slower in comparison.

* Intercontinuity Crossover: A crossover between two different stories that are not (normally) set in the same universe.
* Intercontinuity Crossover: A crossover between two works that are not set in the same universe.
* Intercontinuity Crossover. A monster of Shinkenger's world with powers stolen from Kamen Rider Diend, with the Diend Driver in its possession.
* Intercontinuity Crossover gains the power to explode people's heads with his laugh.
* Intercontinuity Crossover joined universe isn't "real" they get a glimpse of the real two universes, and Hal Jordan & Barry Allen are especially disappointed about being dead, and in Jordan's case learning that he destroyed the Corps. Both still want to fix things though, because that's what they think is the right thing to do.
* Intercontinuity Crossover: Two vastly different series converge into a shared reality.
* Intercourse with You, but the song begins with "I'll always think of you inside of my private thoughts/I can imagine you touching my private parts/With just the thought of you/I can't help but touch myself." It doesn't help that she starts moaning in the background towards the end of the song.
* Intercourse with You, half this trope, down to the title (who is a transparent allusion to the way "Rosie Palms" is known in Spanish). To add controversy to the mix, part of the lyrics are taken from real letters that the Liberator Simon Bolivar sent to his lover Manuela Saenz.
* Intercourse with You: Many of the biggest hits of the '90s had sexual lyrics that were more explicit than earlier decades. The music videos themselves also featured more and more scantily clad women moving their breasts and buttocks around.
* Intercourse with You song about a killer and Final Girl, with the twist being that the Final Girl is just as dangerous and sadistic as the killer.
* Intercourse with You: Song lyrics sounding sexual, usually intentionally.
* Intercourse with You song, was repurposed as a song to raise up breast cancer awareness following lead singer Chrissy Amphlett's death in 2013, with various artists such as Olivia Newton-John covering it.
* interdiction fields, the ship will stay there for 15 minutes to be pounded to death. Super-capital ships that are facing certain destruction usually accept the latter because they are designed to shrug off obscene amounts of pounding anyway.
* Interdictor cruisers are all well and good, but there are only so many of them and the gravity wells they project are relatively small. The * interdimensional cable box that her birth prevented the aforementioned wealth and fame.
* inter-dimensional. Some are also conquerors and an organization founded to oppose said conquerors.
* Interdimensional Travel Device: A gadget that lets you travel between universes.
* Interested tropers are directed to Spider Robinson's "The Blacksmith's Tale", in which one character describes going through the Disneyland with a
* interesting (a middle-school teacher requested things to make her sex ed class memorable):
* interesting, and their society is oppressive and incredibly Orwellian, and will resort to "reeducation", genocide, and using conquest as a first option if it suits their purposes. Given how a Tau society and how they interact with their neighbors, planet to planet, can be pretty diverse, and these two opinions aren't mutually exclusive.
* interesting application ruins the New Republic's day the first time he shows this off.
* interesting beer, go to America. We can't guarantee quality, but that is where the experimentation is. Within the US, certain regions have reputations for either consistent quality or consistent inventiveness; Washington and Oregon (which are near America's biggest hops fields) are most prominent, but Michigan (which has some of the most successful craft breweries and draws on the state's agricultural bounty and abundant supply of clean water) and California (one of the early centers of the craft beer movement) are also highly reputable.

* Interesting case. Although The Joy remains relatively calm, she is not shown smiling through much of the game. The Sorrow, on the other hand, is rarely seen unhappy, even as
* interesting dynamic with Dean On the show, God himself appears in the final season and laments that the character never behaved the way he was intended and was "broken" from the start, which many fans took as the writers expressing frustration at the popularity of the character and by extension, the Dean/Castiel ship.
* Interesting example, actually. Tally might be anywhere from Normal Ugly up to at least Common beauty. The thing is that no natural beauty can compete with the pretties, so all non-pretties are considered equally ugly.
* Interesting exception: According to Plutarch, King Leonidas told his wife before he left to fight the Battle of Thermopylae that she should "marry a good man that will treat you well, bear him children, and live a good life."
* Interesting fact: "Fabricati Diem, Pvnc" is actually all that remains to the battered Watch sign, which at one point read in full "Fabricati Diem, Pvncti Agvnt Celeriter," which means in
* Interesting in that Krishna is an Avatar of Vishnu, one of the three most important gods in Hinduism. So basically, God ordered him (or gave him the idea to) to cheat.
* interesting list of purchasable items. Sometimes up to and including costumes and bondage gear.
* Interestingly, a Bill James fan started doing statistical analysis on the 2008 Presidential election, putting his sabermetrics expertise to work analyzing voter polls. Nate Silver is now the head of the enormously well-regarded FiveThirtyEight blog, originally on
* Interestingly, according to supplementary material, these zombies are stated to be corpses revived by the Netherworld's natural miasma.
* Interestingly, a commonly used language assessment tool indicates that "would of" is a regional variant of British English and should be marked as correct.
* Interestingly, a conversation between the ship's navigator and one of the (illusory) survivors of a crashed ship in the first pilot suggests that the
* Interestingly, a later episode has the team go back to a world where they left ex-Colonel Maybourne and find out that the has adopted a variation of this. Since he can read Ancient (he taught himself when he was still on Earth), he is able to make predictions based on some writings he found by a time-traveling Ancient name Janus. The villagers make him their king and he lives in luxury (the ending reveals he has multiple wives). However, when a Goa'uld threatens to take the planet, Maybourne has no choice but to try to get his people to leave by convincing them that all he told them came from the tablet. While they understand, they refuse to let him step down, as everything he did after becoming king (e.g. a crop-rotating system, a watermill) are all his accomplishments.
* Interestingly, all of the Doctor's own long-term love interests in the new series somehow saved his backside during their first adventure together - or the first
* Interestingly, a lot of video games set in Ancient Egypt avert this. Whether that's because the developers
* Interestingly also a subversion – Rose is shown playing piano in both these episodes to accompany Dorothy singing, but Betty White couldn't really play at all and is miming for all she's worth.
* Interestingly also averts the "Necromancers are evil" bit. Necromancers start every game neutral like all leaders and its up to the player do decide how they are going to play. Its even possible to make a necromancer that specializes in Creation Magic. Having said that most spells with a good alignment specifically wont work on the undead, where as most of the spells that do are evil aligned. Also you HAVE to convert cities you obtain to undead to control them, which counts toward evil.
* Interestingly, although this trope is strongly associated with the

* Interestingly, an early Batman story showed that the Riddler's insanity is such that he is physically incapable of committing a crime unless he leaves a clue. (His father used to beat him when he lied ... so once dear old Dad was out of the way and only the consequential neuroses were left, he learned to tell the truth in extremely sneaky ways to get around them.)
* Interestingly, another episode had Spacely sign a contract George wrote up that prevented him from being fired for life. So Spacely made him his shoe-shine boy.
* Interestingly, apart from Penny's psychotic mother, no one seems to mind;
* Interestingly, a real life example of this could be the covert actions of the Church during World War II (They saved an unknown number of Jews and may have passed information to the allies), though not very many people know about that and it may be a bit too controversial for a TV Tropes article. There is also The Pope's Legion (The Papal Zouaves) which was a multi-national force of volunteers intended to stop an invasion by Napoleon and maintain the independence of the Church.
* Interestingly, a shot to the limb with a regular gun will, rather obviously, immediately raise suspicion even if they can't see who shot them, but a tranquilizer dart to the limb generally won't make them act any differently, short of catching sight of you when they look in the direction the dart came from, until it takes effect and they fall asleep a few seconds later. Same for
* Interestingly, at least one job that is assumed to be Spesh-only can be done by an extremely-skilled Natural. This is shown in the novel where a Natural becomes a starship navigator, a job that requires one to memorize the multidimensional map of the galaxy and be able to plot a safe and fast course through FTL. He turns out to be a pretty good navigator.
* Interestingly, at the very beginning, he gets a letter from a would-be superhero calling himself Johnny Snow. Horrible immediately makes it seem as if Snow is an Ineffectual Sympathetic
* Interestingly, at this point there's more than a few gags that the show was becoming a
* Interestingly, Austen takes the opposite approach to the trope in her next novel
* Interestingly averted in the old Windows 95 WinTrek game and its clones. While beam power dissipates, photon torpedo power does not, and since it's grid-based accuracy doesn't have to be all that clear either. Just point in their general direction and fire. No matter how far, the torpedo averages 200-250 points of damage.
* Interestingly averted with player characters; over the course of the series, the available types expanded to every combination of
* Interestingly, back in the 1840s it was Kentucky, not Florida, which had this reputation, according to
* Interestingly, Balmung is among the very few cases of a winged character who can use them to fly. A non-player example somewhat includes the avatars seen in GU, such as Skeith (moreso in its third evolution), Innis (not the straightest example since such wings were incorporated in the form of a halo on its back), and Tarvos (who had what appeared to be large wings attached to
* Interestingly, basically everything that happens, however, is the consequence of one hero trying to fight Fate by going back in time, borking the entire space-time continuum. So, you
* Interestingly, before being partnered with Detective Allen, Montoya was paired with
* Interestingly, before either was born Kitty wanted a girl but wound up with the selfish and promiscuous Laurie, while Red wanted a son but wound up with the goofy and nerdy Eric, so they both wound up
* Interestingly, Black Widow seems to fall into this role for Avengers more often than not. She's quite the emotional support to Hawkeye, Cap, and even Tony especially in
* Interestingly, both Lynde and Ghostley each had a recurring role on the TV series
* Interestingly, by far the most notorious of all English clubs for hooliganism is Millwall, which isn't in the Premier League at all and hasn't been for quite some time; their most famous chant is "No one likes us; we don't care," which should tell you all you need to know. Groups of Millwall supporters have been known to fight each other (thinking the other group supported their opponents), and in 2017 one Millwall supporter stood up to three knife-wielding terrorists with the battle cry, "Fuck you, I'm Millwall!" (they kept stabbing him, but he

* Interestingly, Cactuars also do this, even though they're not fiends in the traditional sense, and chocobos which aren't fiends at all! However, you're not really supposed to kill the latter.
* Interestingly, Ceres played the trope straight before inverting it: upon discovery in 1801, it was classified as a planet, along with Pallas, Juno, and Vesta, until further researches shrunk their size while countless small, similar bodies kept popping up. Thus, they were all re-categorised as "minor planets" (asteroids),
* Interestingly, conscripts were rarely called upon to serve in colonies during the Age Of Imperialism. Most colonial armies were made up of long-term volunteers who were both skilled in military arts and interested in spending a long time serving under difficult circumstances in faraway lands. There is also a different reason why large armies were rarely deployed overseas: disease. Most European imperial powers quickly realized that cramming huge numbers of soldiers (who largely had never left home in their lives) into ships and sending them to exotic locales was a rather stiff challenge to the immune system.
* Interestingly, considering the general bleakness of Mervyn Peake's
* Interestingly, Dale's last line of the series is ambiguous enough that it could be seen as him telling Nancy that he's known all along.
* Interestingly, Darth Vader talks like this in the first Hungarian dubbing of
* Interestingly, despite being a maniacal world-conqueror, Cobra Commander is apparently
* Interestingly, despite having a character portrait, Mr. Edogawa was never important to either the plot or social link system in
* Interestingly, despite his claim in Ep. IV that Anakin was already a great pilot when they first met, Anakin seems to
* Interestingly, despite signs of budget problems, the Prize Puzzle is still a regular element on the show, currently offering a $7,000+ trip to the player who solves the puzzle. However, they stopped giving out the $50,000 cash award to Sony Rewards card holders in Season 29. In Season 30, they switched to awarding a flat $5,000 to Spin ID members.
* Interestingly, despite Teal'c often trying to be emotionless, it was often clear from his face alone what he was feeling at the moment. Also, as seen in interviews,
* Interestingly, despite the ability to take a gas giant, squeeze it into a rock, and turn that rock into a lush world, you can't de-toxify a planet. Possibly, an oversight on the part of the creators. The only alternative is to
* Interestingly, despite viewing all other races as potential slaves, if they admit anyone to speak to their leader, they do not want to hear words like "beg" (e.g. I beg of you). Begging is for slaves, not those who have been shown the courtesy of being treated as more than slaves.
* Interestingly, diesel subs are in general much quieter than nuclear boats. That's because on the nuclear sub the reactor cooling must be on
* Interestingly, earlier in that season there were hints of a love triangle over Becky (the aforementioned wife), but
* Interestingly, Emily is actually enjoying her new life more than her old one and is beginning to disagree with Ash's desire to return to the way things were.
* Interestingly enough, 4.0 did away with the nine-point axis, and replaced it with a sliding scale of five alignments:
* Interestingly enough as of 2014, heated roads are being tested in the Netherlands (along with glow-in-the-dark roads powered by solar energy and friction from traffic); Google is developing a driverless car; rear-view cameras (some of which utilize thermal imaging for night viewing) are now mandatory on all new cars sold in the US; vehicle elevators are in regular use in some car parks and warehouses; and as for underground roadways, the Big Dig certainly qualifies.

* Interestingly enough as part of the crew recreational media, since space can get kind of boring, too.
* Interestingly enough, a trucking company run by a Sam Kholi has also adapted the slogan on their trucks, and has continued to do so after the Amarillo's travel center's closure. It's reasonable to say that any trucks with the message these days are for the trucking company and not for the travel center.
* Interestingly enough, "Auld Nick" is used in Scots as another name for The Devil. Which may be coincidental, but would certainly explain a lot.
* Interestingly enough, celestial "monsters" (such as Devas, Planetars and Solars) were often vastly more powerful than most of their fiendish counterparts (Demons, Daemons, Devils, etc.). A single Planetar or a Solar could flatten multiple Pit Fiends or Balors. However, they were also less numerous, so it was generally assumed to balance out.
* Interestingly enough, despite her overwhelming popularity her in-ring wrestling style is one more expected for a heel. She uses an illegal submission hold, is very aggressive, screams a lot and will ram her opponent's face off the canvas sometimes just for the hell of it.
* Interestingly enough, Diane's special appearance briefly shows her seemingly invoking Rarity — before Rarity even
* Interestingly enough, earlier D&D editions had healing spells in the necromancy school. But since necromancy was categorized as magic over life forces, it made perfect sense.
* Interestingly enough, early on, they have a fight that prompts Bud to toss his wedding ring down the toilet. He quickly fishes it back out. It turns out to be
* Interestingly enough, Eugene also defied this trope with his own father, who was a Fighter just like Roy. In other words,
* Interestingly enough have one as well that's been shown to let them feel each other's presence, helps Renamon identify him as Beelzemon, and at one point allows her to hear him screaming when he gets electrocuted by a herd of Chrysalismon.
* Interestingly enough, Hayate, looking back on her childhood in Sound Stage M4, laments that she feels as though she hasn't grown up since then. Signum then responds that she has grown up at a reasonable pace, and that by comparison, Fate grew up too quickly.
* Interestingly enough, in most real-time fluid simulations (especially those used in games), the actual "fluid" is really just a mass of granular particles that act like this trope. You can see a video of it in action
* Interestingly enough, in the '99 original, you can lop an enemy's head off with the Enforcer.
* Interestingly enough, it comes to the forefront most noticeably when they're fighting
* Interestingly enough, it's initially averted, then the aversion subverted, because a mid-game conversation points out that the Scurge originally didn't have any sort of sentient thought. It only began to develop such after absorbing enough sentient life that it began to form its own collective mindset and began planning its escape.
* Interestingly enough, it was heavily implied the Hamato Clan was this regarding
* Interestingly enough, Jim Starlin originally conceived Thanos as an
* Interestingly enough, Onizuka is for seemingly unrelated reasons the name of the man's wife's and daughter's pet dog, who hates him and has apparently been trained to pee in his shoes. ...Actually, both this series and its chronological prequel do a lot to show everybody getting in everybody's (even their own) way regardless of whether they're trying to. The closest thing there seems to be to a moral is something like "You can only help being
* Interestingly enough, Sailor Moon herself will invert this trope sometimes, one example in the first
* Interestingly enough, Shikamaru seems to be developing into this for the Konoha 11 Group. Makes sense,
* Interestingly enough, Shiryu of the Rain has a massive chin, and while he once served as

* Interestingly enough, some episodes actually had realistic lasers on the hand-held guns. When they fired their guns, there was a small flash from the barrel, and an invisible laser hits the target pretty instantaneously.
* Interestingly enough, some members of both the Bandit clan and the Dragon clan had their species represented in some cards before the expansions made them into playable races.
* Interestingly enough, splinter faction LulzSec once had a hack attributed to them which was actually committed by someone else. They ended up (somewhat reluctantly) taking responsibility anyway.
* Interestingly enough, Tamara mentioned that they profit from making
* Interestingly enough, the Air Force has been trying to retire the plane for YEARS, because it's not a multi-million dollar superjet like the F-22 or F-35. Never mind the fact that it does its job better than anything else could ever hope to do, never mind that the money they're spending on the new, futuristic looking and highly advanced planes could probably refit the entire fleet of aging and falling apart A-10's, and never mind the fact that it's so tough that even when
* Interestingly enough the Dark Side KOTOR ending came pretty close to overwriting the canon LS ending and averting this with a deleted scene produced for
* Interestingly enough, the English word "mist" is a word borrowed from Old German and originally had connotations of the steam rising from a freshly-deposited pile of dung. As time went on, the romantic light-fog association remained and the unromantic origin quietly disappeared.
* Interestingly enough, the exact opposite was true for Swedish witch trials, at least during the first waves. Only people who confessed were executed, since they were afraid that a guilty person who hadn't confessed and gotten absolution before death would haunt the living. However, most people accused didn't know this, which was used against them in the hopes that they would believe that confessing would save them from execution. The first woman sentenced to death for witchcraft in Sweden was known as Stor-Märet, and she was brought to the execution site, blindfolded, and had her head positioned for beheading. Stor-Märet insisted that she was not guilty and was not executed. However, her luck didn't last too long, as she was tried again later on during a stage of the witch trials where refusing to admit guilt didn't save you, and that time around she was beheaded.
* Interestingly enough, the first game plays with this trope a bit in terms of your options of NPC allies: classes that specialize in one form of warfare (Soldier, Adept, Engineer) are given to female characters (Ashley, Liara, and Tali, respectively). On the other hand, hybrid classes (Vanguard, Sentinel, and Infiltrator) are provided by males (Kaidan, Wrex and Garrus). However, the
* Interestingly enough, the only major countries left outside the EF are the
* Interestingly enough, the Representatives were also deputies of the National Assembly, meaning that the commissars were elected parliamentarians.
* Interestingly enough, there was a period/continuity where Hulk's identity was secret from
* Interestingly enough, the second season episodes begin with The Crypt-Keeper fighting against The Vault-Keeper and The Old Witch for the rights to host the episode.
* Interestingly enough, this could actually work - someone falling with a parachute will tend to fall in the "boxman" position, spread-eagle with their belly towards the ground, and may remain that way for some time before deploying the chute. If someone else left the plane shortly after them and fell with their arms and legs tucked against their body, face towards the ground, then they would have a much higher terminal velocity, and could catch up with the would-be parachutist... though pity them if they miss their target and must now contend with falling towards the Earth with no means of slowing their descent.
* Interestingly enough, this symbol was used in the original series as a symbol for the
* Interestingly enough, this trope became their downfall for about a decade. In the 1940s, when the Klan was on the verge of a major comeback after a series of scandals, mass defections, and a huge IRS auditing, a turncoat leaked details of all their secret rituals to

* Interestingly enough, this turns out to be the reason Orochimaru from
* Interestingly enough, this was a conscious decision on the part of the writers, who, during commentary for
* Interestingly enough, this was part of the culture of the Argentinean Army and a cited reason for their poor performance in the Falklands war with Britain. A patrician officer class seeing itself as a higher order of creation, privileged with better accommodation and rations, shrugged off the fact the men they commanded were living in half-flooded foxholes on cold half-rations as if it were none of their concern.
* Interestingly enough, to actually get rid of a servant, you have to avert this trope. No matter how thoroughly you kill them, as long as their reaper is alive, a servant can always regenerate. Aside from taking out the reaper, the only way to disable a servant permanently is to put the servant's
* Interestingly, even long after this campaign started, some of their restaurants offered a steak biscuit on the breakfast menu. As of the most recent menu re-vamp, it is gone.
* Interestingly, fitness videos were a popular "visible" porn stash. While not exactly "
* Interestingly for a conspiracy, their overall intentions are almost wholly benevolent. They want to better the lives of humanity by protecting them from the dangers of magic and all the other supernatural monsters out there, and the
* Interestingly for a show that involves them battling at least one pagan god every season, this is quite rare. All the pagan gods (up to date) do accept sacrifices, and do eat humans; however, the majority of them simply kidnap and kill people rather than have someone sacrifice the person to them. A repeat of "Scarecrow" didn't occur again till the eighth season in "Heartache", where they battle a cult sacrificing people to the Mayan god of Maze.
* Interestingly for this trope, the 'rulesiness' of Ambient Magic makes it maligned in-universe: Academic Mages are often contemptuous of what they see as limited, folksy magics bound in the superstitions of the temple-folk who teach it. Unlike the Tortall-verse there doesn't seem to be any conformation of magics beyond these human ones: whereas in Tortall we meet the gods and see their god-magics, there's no conformation of any god's existence in the Emelan-verse; there are no magical creatures (e.g. dragons, unicorns etc).
* Interestingly, Gaheris Rhade, a Nietzschean in the series, was quite depressed at what a race of self-absorbed bastards his species turned out to be. In his own words, "Our people were meant to be living gods,
* Interestingly, giraffes have the same number of neck vertebrae that almost all mammals (including humans) have, which is 7. In birds and reptiles, the number varies.
* Interestingly, hairdos seemed to be slightly more plausible in the first two generations with some minor exceptions, while from the third onwards they've been getting weirder and more elaborate.
* Interestingly, having a large group of friends means something entirely different in professional wrestling. Factions comprised of more than 2-3 wrestlers are typically called "stables", and their primary function in story telling is usually to have members of the stable assist other members in their matches and post-match beatdowns... which is dirty play and against the rules. As a result, the aesops associated with this trope are usually averted: the heroes are loners who fight alone against the odds, the villains are cowards who come down to the ring with all of their friends in tow.
* Interestingly he also makes this offer to her at the end of act 1, where a younger and more fiery Elphaba rejects his offer out of hand. It seems that in Act 2, Elphaba is less fiery and more willing to consider alternatives, if still just as passionate.
* Interestingly, he is capable of all of the above, good and bad, in the
* Interestingly, he's still generally seen as a high energy clown, probably because that's how he usually acted in real life.

* Interestingly, he started his career as a 50's-60's pop singer, gearing towards a slightly more adult audience; after his first couple of decades on
* Interestingly, Hirt's "Java" and Alpert's "Whipped Cream" are both better known now for being used by others: "Java" in a
* Interestingly, his tactics actually do nearly win the battle. The only reason the battle is lost is because Scorpius orders his command ship to retreat when he finds where Crichton is and the rest of the fleet to cover them. As a result, only his ship makes it out.
* Interestingly, however, the Doctor himself is often The Watson, asking the natives of whatever time and place he's landed in
* Interestingly, if caffeine had only been discovered in modern day, rather than centuries earlier, based on its bodily effects and addictive potential, it might've been evaluated as a dangerous/controlled substance.
* Interestingly, if he tries to pursue her in the Bonus Mode part of the game, Hajime is this for Peko Pekoyama. Hajime develops genuine feelings for Peko but Peko makes it very clear to him that she only has eyes for her childhood friend, Fuyuhiko.
* Interestingly, in all the previous books, Adrian is shown as a self-confessed miser with a pathological fear of debt, which made this sudden transformation into a reckless overspender rather unconvincing.
* Interestingly, in a short film on the DVD, the witch explains more of the backstory for the
* Interestingly, in at least one case turning a lover results in the relationship collapsing. Daniel Molloy begs Armand to turn him, but Armand knows it's Daniel's fragile humanity that interests him. It's only when Daniel's liver starts to shut down thanks to his constant drinking that Armand is forced to turn him. The relationship does indeed end shortly after, especially since Daniel goes insane.
* interestingly in contrast with their, always angry and downright brutal bastards.
* Interestingly, in each of these cases there's something of a catch though. Stiles has ADD, meaning he's smart but struggles to focus, Lydia hides her IQ to avoid
* Interestingly, in notes published elsewhere the authors say that their use of titles like Count, Emperor, etc. were intended as
* Interestingly, in real life, Selection is a brutally difficult training and weeding-out process, and soldiers that get through it are considered by the rest of the world military
* Interestingly, in some insects, such as the cockroach, the only reason decapitation eventually kills them is that they eventually starve to death. No head means no mouth.
* Interestingly, in something of a subversion, he was being very literal. That passage is about the importance of
* Interestingly, in the Soviet and Russian army, kitchen patrol was always considered a
* Interestingly, in "The Tyranny of King Washington" DLC, it appears that this is the effect of the Apple that was given to
* Interestingly inverted in one episode where Homer, going crazy with
* Interestingly, it is implied that the strain of being the girl/boy back home for their respective friends is what drew them together in the first place. They wound up happily married by the end of the series.
* Interestingly, it's actually Ray who's the first to do this: he mocks Slimer over the radio, who then slimes Peter in revenge since he heard Peter's radio.
* Interestingly, it's also suggested in the codex that some degree of terraforming is taking place on Earth in an attempt to undo the environmental damage that resulted from present day burning of fossil fuels.
* Interestingly, it seems this is confined to Earth; humans living elsewhere are no less (and possibly more) advanced than the other spacefaring races, and aid Earth with minor technological advances slowly so as not to repeat the errors of the past.
* Interestingly, it's often proven after the fact that Cameron made the right call. For example, Sarah is horrified when Cameron kills Enrique just because he

* Interestingly, it's suggested that they are all interconnected through...
* Interestingly, Jason manages to make working engines despite claiming that no one knows how internal combustion engines work anymore.
* Interestingly, Johnny Reb actually only paid lip-service to racism when he was first created — to a demon, all humans were alike. Centuries of being stuck in the bodies of racists, however, has imprinted him with a racist mentality in turn.
* Interestingly, Jordan plays with this trope as the seals are gradually weakening (and outright breaking in some cases) without any outside influence. This is generally put down to The Dark One breaking free of his prison, because the seals are the focus of the magic that's doing the actual imprisoning, so although they're invincible normally, as the magic gets damaged so do they.
* Interestingly, Joss is also considered to be evil by these very same fans for the angst he puts his characters through, bordering on misanthropic. If the Cult of Joss were an actual religion, it would be a
* Interestingly (jury's out on whether it was coincidence or deliberate), this dovetailed with a general editorial push to de-fang the Joker and have his crimes revolve around elaborate robberies or pranks instead of murder - the result being that, in-universe at least, the State not frying the Joker
* Interestingly, just like Hitler dabbled in the occult, so does Ming often visit an order of priests in order to have his future read. This is done in a ritual where a priest is stung by a scorpion and spouts prophecies before a painful death. These predictions usually come true.
* Interestingly, KISS vocalist/guitarist Paul Stanley wasn't even a Paul to begin with - he was born Stanley Bert Eisen, and apart from those who knew him before Wicked Lester and KISS, it's hard to find someone who still refers to him as "Stan".
* Interestingly, Lara's first kill in the game is a deer she hunts for food. She actually
* Interestingly, late-game weapons double as literal Elemental Baggage - if you need a stream of fire, you can just pull it from your flaming disc weapon. Which uses up a whole lot less ink then making it appear out of thin air. Same goes for your final rosary and glaive; Her rosary contains the ice element while her glaive contains thunder. As far as techniques that have you connecting two targets on-screen with a line, this just leaves the water power (which was obsolete in just about every way but one at that point) and the vine power (which was incredibly circumstantial and was mainly used for transportation).
* Interestingly, Lisa Kudrow and Matt LeBlanc wanted this for Phoebe and Joey with no intent to turn it into a relationship later on, but the executives backed out.
* Interestingly, many of the doors in the hallways slide up into the ceiling despite the fact that there are pipes running along the ceiling and through to door's frame, meaning that
* Interestingly, many of these fans seem to overlook the fact that the above paraphrased line, which was taken as a fandom rallying cry after Harmon was fired from
* Interestingly, Miho may have done him a favor, since Largo's heightened paranoia allowed him to intercept one of Erika's crazier fanboys before he could reach her. Whether
* Interestingly, Morrison fled from this genre-bending as far as he could after a certain point in his run, making the good guys and bad guys as unambiguously traditionally super-hero/super-villain in their morals and adventures, despite still keeping the more exotic outward trappings introduced earlier.
* Interestingly, much like Valve has a habit of hiring good modders, EA bought Trauma Studios (makers of
* Interestingly, Napoleon's 1812 invasion of Russia is actually a subversion despite what many people think. Most of the fighting happened before the winter properly began, although e. g. the battle of Krasnyi and the crossing of the Berezina were straight examples. However, most of the losses sustained by the Grande Armée actually occurred in the summer and were not caused by combat. Because of heat, poor hygiene, typhus and dysentery the army had already lost half its strength before the first major battle (in August).

* Interestingly, Niles is spot-on here. In common law, battery is any offensive touching. Assault can be either an attempted battery or placing someone in reasonable fear of imminent bodily harm. You don't even need to touch someone to complete an assault and the guy poking Niles is a textbook definition of battery.
* Interestingly, no matter what background you select for Shepard, the manner in which you got that scar is never addressed.
* Interestingly none of the Jesuses wavered in their belief. They simply concluded that the other two were insane.
* Interestingly, novels set later in that universe—like 1974's
* Interestingly, one admiral treats it as a genuine test of the Navy and human ingenuity, while the other one (with a personal dislike of Dodge) deliberately rigs the wargame in order to prove "his" Navy's superiority. And to get a promotion.
* Interestingly, one episode linked Buddhism to an alien philosophy about seeking
* Interestingly, one exception to the 'no laugh track in the OR' rule was in the episode "The Novocaine Mutiny", specifically, during Frank's flashback to the incident that caused him to charge Hawkeye with mutiny. It's actually a pretty handy tell that Frank is lying about what happened: note
* Interestingly, one of the flaws of this strategy is pointed out here. When people are sufficiently paranoid they often become desperate. It nearly gets Michael in serious trouble.
* Interestingly, one of the potential buyers for the Rafale was the Libyan government of Muammar Gaddafi...which France took a leading role in overthrowing by using their own Rafales to bomb the hell out of his military. Perhaps the new government formed by the rebels, which both saw the Rafale in action and has considerable reason to be grateful to France, will finally provide Dassault the opening they need?
* Interestingly, one of the rare victims in the series who plays this completely straight is a morally upright
* Interestingly, one theory of the domestication of chickens suggests that chickens were originally tamed for purposes of cockfighting, and that the meat and egg uses were secondary to the fighting use for centuries.
* Interestingly, part way through season 3, the show was pulled from air, and only made available to watch online. While some feel that this was merely an example of continuing
* Interestingly, Phobos is faced at his normal state only in the very end: in the first arc he's powered up by the magic he stole from the planet Metamoor,
* Interestingly played with for the Long Night. The Battle of the Bloody Gate (also known as the Battle of the Last Alliance) is acknowledged as the battle that will one way or another decide the war. Humanity wins and the Night's Queen is killed...but since the Others
* Interestingly played with in the season 7 finale when Brennan is being framed for the murder of the victim of the week. Brennan remains hyper-logical throughout, while other characters fall apart. It's pretty predictable that Booth and Angela will get emotional, but when Cam starts crying because she doesn't want to turn over evidence that will get Brennan arrested, you know the situation is serious.
* Interestingly played with regarding Tom - while the fandom has a very frequent tendency to make him
* Interestingly played with. Sanji spends his experiences with her trying to find the proper term to call her, (at least in the subs) ranging from "miss" to "ma'am" to "hag" to "girl." Kureha continues to beat him senselessly until Sanji simply calls her a lady.
* Interestingly played with the Cult of Skaro — Dalek Sec has a higher pitched voice than any of his followers, but as it turns out, he is also slightly less evil than your average Dalek — not that it's saying all that much.
* Interestingly, pools can also lead to "empty worlds" where nothing exists yet (allowing some characters to

* Interestingly, prior to it Robin indicates that he wants her to do this. Which could mean he knows about it...
* Interestingly, recent versions of Civilization 6 have a gameplay option called "Tech Shuffle" to allow technology to be (more or less)
* Interestingly, Revelation 5-6 and 8:1 speak of a scroll that is believed by scholars to be the title deed to the Earth. Now to whom could it belong?
* Interestingly Romulans have green blood (copper-based). This means the ships are
* Interestingly, said alien mummy subverts most stereotypes typically associated with mummies; its bandages actually are very thin but strong
* Interestingly, Scott is the same way with Ramona, though in his case, it's less about being stuck than simply not liking his past self, so he constantly reinvents himself in an effort to be a better person. Except he's actually kind of an asshole, which he eventually comes to realize and deal with.
* Interestingly, she sees Ash as strong even in the original timeline, pointing out that even occasions where he didn't explicitly
* Interestingly, Siberia can provide the woods-wise settler everything he needs: safety, shelter, game, fish, berries, mushrooms, and arable land. In the 1970s, Soviet surveyors, using helicopters, found previously unknown
* Interestingly, somewhat downplayed with modern Hinduism. The three gods of the Trimurti, the supreme Divinty, are Brahma, the creator, Vishnu, the preserver, and Shiva, the destroyer. Although Brahma is worshipped, he he has far fewer followers than either Vishnu or Shiva.
* Interestingly, Soval, despite being a Vulcan, seems genuinely sad about
* Interestingly, Spencer manages to avoid most of the mistakes mentioned in the second paragraph of the page description. Instead of relying on abuse and torture like many examples, his manipulation was much more subtle, to the point where
* Interestingly, Stalfos show up in practically every Zelda game, except for
* Interestingly, Stop-Motion animation also received a reinvigoration, as it became apparent that some aesthetics are better suited to Stop-Motion than CG; one of the best examples being
* Interestingly subverted in one episode, where she decides to use magic to interfere with other people's lives (usually aesops in the show are about her using magic for herself) and does three different things to do so. She injures a first-string football player so Harvey would be called up to the main team, rigs a class president election with Jenny winning instead of Libby, and implants knowledge of how to perform "lead to gold" alchemy to her science teacher. The first two changes are self-limiting, with both Harvey and Jenny getting
* Interestingly, Terrans don't have any fighters or carriers until the technology is provided by the Mantis. Yes, humans have forgotten how to build carriers and can't build
* Interestingly, that's a rarity. Planets are almost always referenced by their computer designations, and you never, ever hear "P3 what?!" "The one with
* Interestingly, the above mentioned Knights of the Cross don't actually require Faith in
* Interestingly, the above tallies quite well with what Europe apparently looked like a few tens of thousand years ago.
* Interestingly, the adjoining camp filled with Polish PoWs is run more like a concentration camp, complete with prisoners not being fed and being forced to work in a nearby munitions factory.
* Interestingly, the advanced "humans" were actually a hugely diverse group of different
* Interestingly, the advent of digital music purchasing has led to the resurgence of an even
* Interestingly, the author also used this exact name confusion thing in
* Interestingly, the author later wrote two prequel novellas (with a third on its way), starting with
* Interestingly, the axe version of the Doom weapon actually has a backstory instead of just randomly shouting DOOOOOOOOOOM!
* Interestingly, the book goes into long detail, in an almost lamenting tone, that suspects actually fear the police less and less. In the old days, a suspect thought to have shot a cop was essentially in a race for their life to turn themselves in at a precinct completely across town, where they would

* Interestingly, the Camel Archer and Keshik (the unique Knight replacemets of the Arabs and Mongols, respectively) are not as weak against pikemen as other mounted units, because they're ranged attackers instead of heavy cavalry.
* Interestingly, the captain says nothing after Mitch and Trey start a fight with the
* Interestingly, the crescent is not so much a symbol for Islam as for the old Turkish empire.
* Interestingly, the Cybermen (and their expies the Movellans) originally existed merely to exist. They follow the economic theory that the first duty or purpose of any organisation is to continue to survive.
* Interestingly, the defibrillator is actually a real ECG monitor(Zoll), but, unfortunately, is somehow showing Ethan's ECG tracing without being connected to him at all. Meanwhile, Ilsa shocks him with metal paddles (the shock is actually supposed to be delivered through adhesive patches that conduct electricity, especially out in the field), in the
* Interestingly The Dolls actually fit this better for Shadaloo being unthinking killing machines albeit
* Interestingly, the dominance of NYC in popular consciousness frequently leads non-New Yorkers to assume that anyone who is from New York is necessarily from Manhattan. Because of this, there are strong tensions between the more rural and conservative upstate New York and more urban and cosmopolitan metropolitan area. Not to mention the divisions among the boroughs, Staten Island, and the non-Brooklyn and Queens parts of Long Island...
* Interestingly, the dwarf word for Littlebottom's name seems to be "Sh'rt'azs", which sounds rather like "shortarse".
* Interestingly, the episode "The Slaver Weapon" features the only example in any 'canonical'
* Interestingly, the fact that Nick is a cop tends to calm down some of them, since they rightly assume that there'd be questions if suspects and witnesses suddenly went missing or were found dead, all connected to cases of the same detective. Adalind, whom Nick is forced to protect as a witness at one point, points out that if he kills her, it won't be a Grimm killing a
* Interestingly, the famous poster used as the page image actually depicts the woman as around 200 feet tall. Perhaps she just wasn't big enough for the poster artist?
* Interestingly, the first appearance of something called a Sun-eater was very different from later interpretations, being a fiery giant that new legionnaire of the month "Marvel Lad"
* Interestingly, the flagship Titan for the series (the Colossal Titan) follows the Law better than its smaller counterparts; since it is exceptionally massive even by other Titan's standards, its anatomy has changed in order to better support its massive frame. It has no skin and proportionally tiny arms and head to cut down on excess mass, while it's torso and legs are extremely large and well muscled in order to support its frame. It is also almost never seen doing anything other than standing in one spot and kicking something, so it doesn't normally have to worry about the bodily stresses it would undergo by ambulating.
* Interestingly, the Freedom's wings (and by extension the Destiny's and Strike Freedom's, which are both based on the Freedom's) contain the HiMAT System
* Interestingly, the game rules themselves go out of their way to prevent this particular scenario from being commonplace. Among other factors, an aerospace unit trying to make a ramming attempt needs to roll dice to determine whether its pilot or crew is
* Interestingly, the girl's actress returned to the franchise a couple of years later in
* Interestingly, the Greek myth writer Hesiod thought this about women. While, he acknowledged that women were necessary for the human race to continue,

* Interestingly, their God is frequently depicted as female, and many of the church's evangelists are women. The menfolk, such as Kaufmann or Vincent, are more interested in earthly matters and tend to mutiny. Their mythology is also very confusing: According to their myths, humanity came first, in a world without linear time and death, and
* Interestingly, their older brothers Jon and Robb have this too (Jon has the Stark look like Arya, while Robb has the Tully look like Sansa) but, in contrast, Jon and Robb are extremely close as brothers.
* Interestingly, the last two examples are very similar to how a native Mandarin speaker would speak English, since that is almost exactly the way it is said in Mandarin ("we not know" rather than "we know-not").
* Interestingly the Latino Dub keep basically the same exchange just, naturally, switching the order of the languages.
* Interestingly, the latter example has the Space!Nazis picking the inhabitants of a neighboring planet as their "subhuman" enemy. The planet's name? Zeon ("Zion" is a synonym for Jerusalem).
* Interestingly, the leader of Rogue Squadron, Wedge Antilles, is sometimes cited as an
* Interestingly, the live-action adaptation itself has this trope occur, too. Here, the Beast's library contains a magical
* Interestingly the Magic versus Science idea tends to come off as one sided on the Technocracy's part. Most Tradition Mages (except the
* Interestingly, the majority of TF2 players had the Proof of Purchase hat when the game first went free-to-play;
* Interestingly, the Many Worlds interpretation of quantum physics can be interpreted in a way that this is how Star Trek-style transporters work. They kill you here and build a clone out of the atoms that are somewhere else. Normally, quantum physics is interpreted as only having one of each particle, but it could be interpreted as that there's multiple particles, and the alternate universes where two are swapped is just as likely. As such, there's a universe, just as likely as this one, where the atoms you're being built of now made you up before. You're effectively being transported to an alternate universe where your atoms are already there. Alternate you gets transported to this universe by the same method.
* Interestingly, the more well laid-out properties of the Minovsky Particle are actually more from
* Interestingly, the movie has that this was subverted in her backstory - she sold herself to Hades to save her lover's life, and the
* Interestingly, the name of the film has nothing to do with telekinesis (telekinetics are called Movers in the film). Pushing is actually a
* Interestingly, the North American version seems to dual-wield both versions of this. You can buy Mobile Suits with real money, but only the S-Rank units, C-Ranks (usually
* Interestingly, the novelizations claim that the treatments are only available to the higher-ups. This
* Interestingly, the ogres, who worship the Great Maw, seem to be the only truly monotheistic race.
* Interestingly, the only cartoon that actually featured Bugs Bunny directly in the Army didn't debut until after WWII — 1952's
* Interestingly, the onscreen depictions mainly skew towards the idea of inter-species sexual relations being widely-accepted (at least in the Federation) so long as they involve the opposite-sex, but same-sex relations even within a species seem to be very, very rare. In the instances where such do appear, they are either connected to demonstrations of
* Interestingly, the originally planned but abandoned story for 3 would have taken this "research" further and revolved around the above mentioned negative effects of playing around with physics like this. Some of the groundwork for this story can be seen in 2. Specifically over use of the Mass Effect wreaks havoc with Dark Matter, ultimately leading to low mass stars going supernova at a "young" age. The Reapers knew this but didn't have a way of preventing it, so would periodically wipe out advanced civilizations as a stopgap measure to restrict the use of the Mass Effect and thus stave off the eventual damage.

* Interestingly, the original premise for the game was entirely based around cargo cults, until the creator had a better idea.
* Interestingly, the original Via Damasco transmission usually comes from outside inhabited space. Most people think that it's the
* Interestingly, the passage quoted at the top of this page, from the King James Version, is actually a rather iffy translation. The term "witch" is a more recent invention of the English language, and of course no particular method of execution was prescribed. The word used in the original language roughly translates to "sorceress" with "
* Interestingly, the Qunari make no distinction between themselves and members of any other race that choose to follow the Qun. The second game has two elven fugitives willingly convert to the Qun, thus gaining the Arishok's protection. As far as he's concerned, they're now his brethren, and he has no intention of handing them over to human authorities. It doesn't hurt that they only became fugitives because they killed their sister's rapist (who was a city guard).
* Interestingly, the rare use of a "mundane" (magic-free) play can be a very effective strategy, not only as a surprise tactic, but also a regular one, causing the opposition to waste counterspells on a magical offense that never materializes...and
* Interestingly, the real Japanese spy pronounces the phrase correctly, confusing the spy.
* Interestingly, there are no straight examples involving characters that go to actual prison (most of whom were rather hardened before they went in), but the trope is played brutally straight for a group home. Good-natured
* Interestingly, there are rare times when Monk seemingly forgets his phobias and awkwardness and just acts like a normal person. However, this happens rarely, and he has no memory of it. This is revealed when a rapper (played by
* Interestingly, there are two variants of Negi's Super Speed above, with the lesser version not having Super Reflexes
* Interestingly, there are variations of this in both the last episode filmed (Gene Kelly, in which Fozzie Bear only appears in the background of the closing number) and the last episode aired (save for the opening trumpet note, Gonzo doesn't appear in the episode).
* Interestingly, the reason Wally was off on the other world was to deal with his speed-powered twin kids who were receiving the same treatment- they're chronologically less than two but look eight or so,
* Interestingly, there's a real-life instance of this subverted to ridiculous levels. The exact location escapes me, but following a rumor of gold on an island, decades of treasure hunters have dug over a hundred feet down looking for the loot, because "If the previous guy didn't find it, maybe it's just a little bit further!" Considering that the shaft is now deep enough to be prone to flooding, and the gold was supposed to be from the 19th century... Chalk this one up to not knowing when to quit. How would the original owners have put gold hundreds of feet down?
* Interestingly, the sands of the Sahara actually does behave much like water, due to its extreme age and the resultant smoothness of the grains. Of course, that's only relative to
* Interestingly, the Scarrans tried to pull a fast one on Scorpius and told him that his father was a Peacekeeper male who raped a Scarran female. He quickly figures out the truth, though.
* Interestingly, the season finale of Season 2 introduced a new Inquisitor, the Jedi Hunters that served as main antagonists for the first two seasons, called the Eighth Brother who wears a full-faced helmet. Guess who dies in his first appearance.
* Interestingly, these come back as plot points on at least two occasions. In "Return of Harmony," Twilight's re-reading of her own friendship reports break her out from her depression and convince her to fight for her friendships. In "Twilight's Kingdom," specific entries in their journal show the mane six how to open the box given to them by the Tree of Harmony.

* Interestingly, these conditions are calculated by SBURB itself. Under mind control to be evil and get killed? It's considered a Just death for example.
* Interestingly, the sequel has revamped the damage system, and the pulsed lasers are no longer as weak as before. Each armor section has a pattern. That pattern is damaged differently by different weapon types. For example, mass drivers provide more damage overall but don't provide much penetration. Lasers specifically do a lot of damage to the armor in
* Interestingly, the series' last chapter has Aizen himself giving one about
* Interestingly, the ship's figurehead, when animated, is decidedly unladylike and is in no way dainty.
* Interestingly, the show was originally planning on doing this on purpose with the murder of Laura Palmer; part of the reason for the
* Interestingly, the slasher film did not always contain this trope: in the 1974 Canadian film
* Interestingly, the South Korean villagers the North's propaganda speakers were aimed at got so used to it that they eventually just wound up treating it as background noise, like how city dwellers treat the sound of city traffic. One time, when a visiting journalist asked one of the villagers about it, the villager actually had to pause what he was doing and listen for a bit to figure out what the journalist was talking about. They got that used too it. Needless to say, they also didn't actually listen to what the North Korean speakers were saying, much less put any stock in them.
* Interestingly, the standoff is a result of each man disarming the other. Spike has Vicious's sword, Vicious has Spike's gun. In a Shout-Out
* Interestingly, the starting wanzer Kazuki pilots, the Zenith RV (misromanized as Zenislev), is the super prototype of the next game, Front Mission 4, obtainable in Elsa's scenario. Since 4 canonically happens before 3, this indicates how much Wanzer development has progressed.
* Interestingly, the Tau eschew this aspect of warfare altogether; their infantry squads carry no heavy weapons. All anti-tank warfare is conducted by either their own tanks or
* Interestingly, the term may have been borrowed from The Medallions' "The Letter", which mentioned "the
* Interestingly the The Tommy Westphall Universe Hypothesis has been discussed in mainstream academic circles, especially as a philosophical exercise on logic. One example of this is Cornell University’s scholar Brian Weatherson article
* Interestingly, the transformation gun doesn't have this effect, even on normal humans (though it is implied that it did before Tedd perfected it; when Elliot uses the transformation belt, which is based on an earlier version of the TFG, he is incapacitated for several minutes — and his later cat-hybrid transformations reflect this as well). "Ok, I need an aspirin, a ball of yarn, and thirty-seven pounds of catnip, stat!"
* Interestingly, the UFC itself has a policy against letting fighters have stage names, and very few fighters are allowed to compete under nicknames only (IE, Andrei "The Pitbull" Arlovski is fine, but not "The Pitbull"), unless it's been a long established personal name they're widely known by. This includes Mirko Cro Cop (rumors are the UFC dropped his last name Filipović because it was too hard to say for American fans, despite him using it when he was in PRIDE), Kimbo Slice (because no one is going to pay to see Kevin Furgeson fight), and
* Interestingly, the Von Erich Claw was originally named "The Iron Claw" to reinforce the Nazi gimmick. The Iron Claw became the common name for the move afterwards.
* Interestingly, the way that human/alien hybrids in the galaxy actually
* Interestingly, they also feature "Sprites," a form of free roaming AI
* Interestingly, the Yamato Gun seen in the game and in one cutscene (Emperor Arcturus I's acceptance speech) have different visuals. The version in the game is, basically, a big yellow-and-black pulsing blast that travels to the target. The cutscene version is a bright-red energy beam.

* Interestingly, they both were on equal footing during their childhoods. Castle went to boarding school, and his family was only moderately wealthy; Beckett attended a prestigious high school and probably would have had even more opportunities had her lawyer mother not been murdered.
* Interestingly, they give him several lines of dialog in the sequel.
* Interestingly they have none of the grand schemes that the other guilds do. The problem is that their parties turn everyone involved into a
* Interestingly, they made light of the fact that neither Will Smith or Tommy Lee Jones reprised their roles in the animated series by having Jay and Kay comment on the choice of actors for the Hollywood movie made within the series (with the characters onscreen in the movie trailer looking like dead ringers for the original movie actors).
* Interestingly, they met because of her resemblance. Paul Dini has always had an attraction to Zatanna, and a mutual friend convinced him to meet with her by showing him one of her publicity photos.
* Interestingly, the Zuul, while avoiding this trope, also avoid the
* Interestingly, this actually has a reason within the war game: the game was actually being used as a training sequence for a few of the Mainframers, and Bob was actively wasting time to give them a chance to get the feel for playing the games without getting nullified. The User's avatar was even a tank that had managed to get itself stuck between two obstacles.
* Interestingly, this also happened with a piece of set. The show lost the lease on the house used for the Gilbert house, so in the show, it was burned down.
* Interestingly, this can be subverted as each Archetype can take powersets that use the same power concepts, but with different effects; for instance, a
* Interestingly, this element has actually become embraced by much of the Transformers fan base—when a new toy is released of a character who was once well known for having a variety of repaints, demand will rise among fans for recolored versions of that toy representing his recolors from prior series. In addition to the aforementioned Starscream, Bumblebee being recolored as Cliffjumper is a common recurring theme, with a
* Interestingly, this happened twice with Canadian alt rock group Len. The band scored a U.S. Top 10 hit with "Steal My Sunshine" 1999, and some minor success overseas a year later with the single "Kryptik Souls Crew" before their fame waned. Lead guitarist Brendan Canning decided to split off, and subsequently formed the supergroup
* Interestingly, this is actually somewhat realistic, tactics-wise. Japanese battle plans called for hundreds of torpedoes to be launched in the general direction of the enemy fleet from stupidly long ranges in the hopes that this would disable at least some of the enemy ships before the main fleet engagement; this is why they developed the "Long Lance" in the first place. Of course, this large surface fleet engagement never materialized, and so the ships outfitted to fulfill this role were never used as anything more then AA support.
* Interestingly, this is a Gibbs rule and not an agency rule. When Gibbs yells at Tony for violating the rule in season 8 with someone on another team, Tony informs him that NCIS has no rules forbidding agents from dating each other and that they can even be married. Good news for
* Interestingly, this is a similar case to the problem with different cultures: Animals who share the same environment need to understand each other, even if they aren't of the same species. Dogs and cats can't understand each other — but not because they are not related, but because their ancestors lived so far apart. Desert foxes and Egyptian wild cats can understand each other, while wolves share part of their body language with lynxes and brown bears. Also, when cats and dogs live together long enough, they start understanding each other.
* Interestingly, this is one of the few things Vader and Obi-Wan agree on. In the end, a
* Interestingly, this is probably the nicest thing Xykon has ever done. And it involves imprisoning souls. Granted, it's pretty certain he didn't
* Interestingly, this is said to be part of the assassin training the

* Interestingly, this only works the first time the quote is seen as a
* Interestingly, this reflects the interaction of the five colors of mana, each of which is used by a member of the Gatewatch.
* Interestingly, this relationship does end up apparently shocking Rose's mother, but she's such a bitter and unlikable person at this point that nobody cares. Also, it's not entirely clear if she is actually shocked or just pretending to be to
* Interestingly, this series plays with the trope with another character: April, a devout
* Interestingly, this synchronization only applied after Sam arrived, replacing someone. The leaps themselves were instantaneous from Sam's (and the audience's) point of view, but appeared to take a random amount of time in the future, often several days.
* Interestingly, this universe's magic is, at times, more scientific than the local "scientific" esper powers. The program that creates espers can be best summed up as "plug kids into the machine and hope for the best", and produces
* Interestingly, this was changed when the scene was adapted for the first
* Interestingly, this was originally going to be the scene where Skywise
* Interestingly though, in something of an inversion, as far as the superior parent, Bud and Kelly actually prefer
* Interestingly, though Metcalf went through this trope in film and television, her theatre experience has always tended toward the dramatic. She got her start as a member of Chicago's legendary Steppenwolf company, and has played many serious roles in everything from Edward Albee's
* Interestingly, though Númenor was definitely meant to invoke Atlantis, Tolkien's notes state that the Atalantë bit was purely coincidental. Prof. Tolkien wondered what "the Downfallen" would be in a certain in-universe language and got "Atalantë".
* Interestingly, throughout history the weight of a soldiers gear has maintained relatively similar. Many accounts exist of the arrival of new gear or military philosophies trying to increase loads, however the most successful example of new gear often come with reduced weight in a effort to avoid these encumbrance issues.
* Interestingly, Tiny Temple is this for Tiny, which at first makes it stand out compared to the other tracks which have no such theme. This actually
* Interestingly, under 3e/3.5e, demons are Always Chaotic Evil, even when they aren't — sort of. It's possible for a demon to have an alignment other than Chaotic Evil, but chaos and evil are such an integral part of their being that for magical effects, they
* Interestingly used on an episode where a man is on trial for manslaughter; specifically, he a trained psychologist accused of pushing his daughter-in-law to suicide. On the witness stand, he confesses to murder. The problem being that if he's found innocent of manslaughter, he can't be tried for murder for the same crime; double jeopardy. (He's convicted of man 1, and Adam Schiff points out that if he
* Interestingly, very few characters in Yami are actually amoral people: because the "good-teacher" attribute is mandatory to qualify for the One Shadow Nine Fists, several of the ten martial artists in the group come across as being not so much evil as simply being dedicated to their philosophy—once the reader gets to know their personalities—and in fact a number of them
* Interestingly, Visser Three actually shows far more effectiveness, restraint, and... well,
* Interestingly, Watt and Sushie are aversions. Sushie otherwise looks like an ordinary Cheep-Cheep except for purple and orange coloring, and Watt, a Sparky, has only a pacifier (to signify that she's young). There's still some
* Interestingly, WCW's title scene actually adhered to this rule during its existence. From January 1991 through March 26, 2001, of the 19 different men who held the
* Interestingly, we later learn in the second series that there is a
* Interestingly, when they face off against another crew, they end up getting the mastermind to turn over a painting to its rightful owners. When asked if he likes feeling like a good guy, he points out that they're still thieves and are just fooling themselves.

* Interestingly, while Bugs, Tweety and Speedy tend to actively outsmart their foes, the roadrunner
* Interestingly, while the two characters from the modern world (Toki and Kon) have very mysterious pasts, most minor characters' backstories have been explained.
* Interestingly, Willis's usual dub voice actor in Spain, Ramón Langa (and a popular actor in the country in his own right) also threatened to walk out if the Spanish version of
* Interestingly, Woolery zig-zags this trope, as he is well-known for hosting
* Interestingly, you can normally roll out of the way if you're quick enough, or if you can find a ladder, the shadow
* Interestingly, your actions in the game will reflect whether or not you will restore the nation to its former glory or turn it into a dictatorship with many cities nuked into rubble. Essentially, if you avoid damaging cities, you're good. If you frequently damage cities and/or use nukes, you're bad.
* Interestingly, Zihark from Path of Radiance has one on his right cheek; literally the only good guy that has one (even though they all fight every other day!).
* Interesting observation: Mount Desert Island in Maine was discovered by French explorers, so the "desert" is pronounced as per the French pronunciation of the word, which sounds like "dessert," that is, of course, unless you speak the local dialect, where it is pronounced how it sounds. And you thought Newfies had it bad...
* Interesting, particularly, in that this is a typical way of causing a Prophecy Twist, but unexpected once another "escape clause" has been mentioned.
* interesting pictures, and her teacher is concerned. Turns out she saw her (underage) big brother and her stepmom doing it.
* "Interesting," replied St. Peter. "Next?" The second man said, "I was minding my own business, riding one of those stationary exercise bikes on top of my apartment building, when the screws came loose, and I fell off the edge of the roof. I grabbed for dear life onto the first open windowsill I saw, but then some idiot started pounding on my fingers. It must have been my lucky day, because I landed in the bushes, alive and unharmed, but then that same idiot threw his refrigerator out the window and crushed me to death with it!" "That, too, is horrible," said St. Peter. "And you?" The third man replied, "OK, picture this: I'm sitting, butt-naked, in a refrigerator..."
* interesting side effects, which include: 1) not turning past halfway through the can, requiring one to spend time rewinding it back to the starting point; 2) not working unless at 100% battery power; and 3) (while indeed leaving a non-sharp top) making the can's edge so razor sharp that one is afraid to scoop anything out of it (also not allowing the food to be re-covered by the top).
* Interesting side note; the best of them in both cases (Vetinari and Lu Tse) are those who ditch most/all the (stereo)typical ninja stuff.
* Interesting Situation Duel: Swordfighting while running up and down the edge of a cliff is considered pretty normal here.
* interesting situations. For example, if someone tears off your arm, you better damn well grab his arm (or other body part) with the severed limb so he can't throw it down to the ground to disqualify you.
* Interesting subversion. "Uncle Martin" always refers to himself as a Martian, as does Tim O'Hara - however, that's in English. There is an actual Martian language as evidenced in several episodes. The audience what
* interesting take on "threat level", as evidenced by his Michael Scarn film "Threat Level: Midnight".
* Interesting that the distinction might be meaningful in Ravana's case. Long ago he raped an apsara (basically, a minor goddess) and consequently was cursed: should he try to rape another woman, he would immediately die. But the curse said nothing about killing or threatening murder...
* Interesting, the Decepticon Ravage was part of one such guard for the last surviving Autobot Overlord...and promptly betrayed him in favor of Megatron. His Autobot counterpart Nightstalker, though, sacrificed himself for his liege.

* Interesting the scientist who built it did so believing that it could be used a means of peace
* interesting thing about this single-episode teamup is probably that Shego seems to be downright jealous...
* Interesting Times. After his Luggage (a sentient trunk on legs) starts following a more 'feminine' model (its toes are painted, etc) around, he is first bewildered at the general idea, then realizes that he's never had a proper reason for thinking of his Luggage as male. "True, it had a homicidal nature, but so had a lot of the women Rincewind had met."
* Interesting Times also show that to get it through the pack ice of the Hublands, the Horde fitted it with skis.
* Interesting Times, although an ambiguous version of this trope (his plans to conquer the West, i.e. Ankh-Morpork, are depicted as hopelessly naive).
* Interesting Times, although unlike Roundworld's version, nobody remembers who wrote it. Because all the ruling classes of the Agatean Empire fight according to the Five Rules and Nine Principles, warfare is much more organised and civilised and mostly consists of short periods of excitement followed by long periods of checking the index. (The Silver Horde, on the other hand, don't fight according to any rules at all.) It's also noted that the majority of generals follow the tactics by rote, with no understanding of the logic behind them or the underlying philosophy; the result is that the country is effectively in a permanently stalemated civil war.
* Interesting Times a "misbegotten wretch". Mister Saveloy, who wrote the list, is shocked. In something of a lampshade hanging, it's noted at one point that whilst Truckle isn't actually USING swear words, somehow the 'civilised' equivalents end up sounding equally crude.
* Interesting Times analogue demanding they be sent a wizard — Rincewind in this case).
* Interesting Times (and even then, the walls in their heads did a far better job).
* Interesting Times and screams heard from a distance indicate it's not pretty.
* Interesting Times barbarian heroes.) Then, later, protagonist Rincewind discovers that if he just wears a farmer's hat; nobody looks at him.
* Interesting Times, but has mastered all the Orientalist arts of his culture. Nobody concentrates!
* Interesting Times, Cohen advises Teach (a geography teacher who joined the Silver Horde out of curiosity) to imagine the enemy is everything he hates in order to work up a good beserk:
* Interesting Times, Cohen and the Silver Horde are more or less free to roam about the castle, due to being the only ones who think to walk through the paper walls.
* Interesting Times: Cohen the Barbarian and his Silver Horde are appalled at the use of poisoned food because while the approved barbarian method of trickery is inviting your enemy over to a feast, get him roaring drunk then kill him (any barbarian stupid enough to fall for it deserving it), you never know when you might get hungry yourself.
* Interesting Times due to a book based on his misadventures written by Twoflower from the first two books, but also because of his strange tendency to survive otherwise fatal situations. People think it's because Rincewind is some kind of powerful and wise wizard, but it's mostly a combination of being favored by The Lady and his own attempts to remain a breathing coward.
* Interesting Times features a couple of deserters who are cowardly even by the standards of the trope, but are quite happy to cut Rincewind's head off if they're completely sure he can't fight back. Luckily (so to speak), the Lady intervenes.
* Interesting Times have the Gods playing a heroic roleplaying game, aiding their own heroes with quests and maps while setting up random encounters for their opponents.
* Interesting Times. He considers the worst part of having this name to be the unlucky number.

* Interesting Times in Basic Firestarting. When Rincewind dies, the average spellcasting ability of the entire human race will increase.
* Interesting Times. In fact, this actually becomes a plot device later on.
* Interesting Times in more to keep everyone inside, rather than other people out. According to the leaders, there is nothing but ghost and vampire filled wasteland outside it.
* 'Interesting Times involved six deaths - the last one being his father. At least he died happy that his son was carrying on a family tradition.
* Interesting Times, it is mentioned obliquely that the upturned middle finger is the gesture used in demon banishing spells, which Rincewind uses to test his control of an army of clay soldiers: "Seven thousand terracotta middle fingers stabbed toward the ceiling."
* Interesting Times, it's mentioned that "Argh!" translates in certain Discworld languages as "Your wife is a big hippo", "Hello, thinks Mr. Purple Cat", or "I would like to eat your foot" depending on inflection. This becomes a running gag, where various characters' screams are literally translated into these phrases; at one point, Rincewind screams "Argh!" and another character responds "What's that about a hippo?"
* Interesting Times Japan stand-in, they're just too deferential to go through with it, instead shouting slogans like "we humbly suggest reasonable change within a respectable time frame if that's not too much to ask!"
* Interesting Times, Mad Hamish recalls fighting in the Battle of Koom Valley.
* Interesting Times mentions that there's a sort of truce between Ridcully and Vetinari because Vetinari could have Ridcully executed, but Ridcully could turn Vetinari into a "small amphibian" and squish him while jumping on a pogo stick.
* Interesting Times of Imperial China, has a lot of this. As Cohen puts it "You can't even go to the privy without a piece of paper."
* Interesting Times plays this mostly from the warrior's side, Cohen and his band (six old 'heroes' and a teacher, with only the latter being under 80 years) go up against five armies, and are making a pretty good go of it for a while. Justified in universe because they're Conan-style heroes, and Discworld runs on this sort of narrative. It also helps that the vast majority of the soldiers are barely trained and poorly equipped conscripts with terrible morale, with the exception of a few samurai, which Cohen kills by fighting dirty.
* Interesting Times possible translations. (Even more, considering the abundance of homophones.)
* Interesting Times reacts violently to a merchant calling him "venerable one" while trying to purchase an apple.
* Interesting Times, Rincewind asks Cohen the Barbarian how old he is. What century is it? Ninety to 95 years.
* Interesting Times, Rincewind finds a statue of One Sun Mirror, founder of the Agatean Empire, on a pedestal of gold in a lake of quicksilver beneath a huge artificial hill built by the Forbidden City. He notes the inscription on it, which simply says "One Sun Mirror". The implication being that no-one standing there could fail to know who that was.
* Interesting Times Rincewind gets to do this to a native of the land he's visiting (because of the all the various peoples that have emigrated to Ankh-Morpork, they have much better stuff than the isolated and somewhat xenophobic Agatean Empire). It's turned around on him when he brings up The Luggage, only to be reminded that it came from the Empire and they have plenty more.
* Interesting Times (Rincewind), giving him an excuse to declare war on Ankh-Morpork in the future.
* Interesting Times, Rincewind is approached by several beautiful, scantily-clad women who explicitly say that all of their men have died out and they need his help repopulating their island. However, due to years of living alone on a desert island, Rincewind's mind has deteriorated somewhat and he thinks they're offering to make him some mashed potatoes. To be fair, they did promise him they'd satisfy all his desires, and at that moment, Rincewind happened to desire potatoes, having lived off coconuts and fish for far too long.

* Interesting Times - Rincewind isn't sure what to expect of the Agatean Emperor, but "the mental picture had room for a big fat man with lots of rings". The actual Emperor is a very old man on his deathbed.
* Interesting Times, Rincewind the Wizard is sent to the Counterweight Continent because he is the only one to understand the language — somewhat.
* Interesting Times: Rincewind, trying to hide his foreign origins on the highly-xenophobic Counterweight Continent, is asked by a suspicious restaurateur about a specific man on a specific road. He quickly declares he's never heard of the man or the road... only to find out the man is a high-ranking government official that everyone would need to deal with and the road is the main street through the capital. It works out, however, as the restaurateur is the local equivalent to CMOT Dibbler and is quite pleased to meet a foreigner.
* Interesting Times, Rincewind was nearly taken in by a tribe of woman warriors who lost their menfolk to a very specific plague. Then he's summoned back to Ankh-Morpork by wizards.
* Interesting Times suggests that whatever process allows the Luggage to dynamically react to its environment is more a facsimile of thought than actual thought.
* Interesting Times, the Agatean Empire's entire ruling class is more or less like this, although with very specific rules. It's perfectly acceptable to assassinate your own parents, but not the Emperor himself - the "correct" move is to put him in a position where you have leverage.
* Interesting Times the concept, claiming the leaders making such speeches are usually the only ones with decent armour.
* Interesting Times, the narrator claims that a simple word like "aaargh" can, in a certain language from Klatch, mean "More boiling oil, please!" which can have interesting implications for those uttering it.
* Interesting Times. The soldiers assume that they're being attacked by Lord Hong and start fighting. It's noted later that these fights actually killed more of the soldiers than the terracotta warriors.
* Interesting Times, the throne room of the Agatean emperor is described as indicating to all viewers "look at me, I can afford to waste all this space".
* Interesting Times. The wizards have never seen one before, conclude that it's a giant rat and wonder if it's naturally one inch thick and deep-fried.
* Interesting Times (though given their age, it's unlikely they'd have managed to rape either).
* Interesting Times To be precise, the goal of writing poetry was also to test candidates' linguistic proficiency, an extremely important skill for anyone whose job more or less boils down to interpreting and writing various texts. Unfortunately, the job in question was about shoveling animal manure, not handling paperwork. Similarly, Lord Hong came to the conclusion that the examination for weapons maker should have more to do with proving the applicant knows how to work with iron rather than write poems about it.
* Interesting Times to their teacher's satisfaction, despite several tries and repeated demonstrations of the proper technique.
* Interesting Times Twoflower's daughter Pretty Butterfly inherited her Rincewindian view of the world from her late mother.
* Interesting Times, Twoflower the tourist, and he went above and beyond painting Rincewind as a great hero and magus. Once again putting Rincewind in the hotseat, just like old times.
* Interesting Times used, but turned out to be unreliable, so the watchmakers moved on to clockwork.
* Interesting Times when Cohen and his Silver Horde learn from a local that the claiming of the throne of the Agatean Empire is traditionally accompanied with "seas of blood" and/or "a mountain of skulls". The Horde eagerly begins quizzing exactly how many skulls this precisely means(because skulls don't stack well), and their informant gets testy: "I don't know how big a mountain! A lot of skulls!"
* Interesting Times, when Cohen the Barbarian has become emperor, he makes Twoflower grand vizier. And the first order he gives him? "Bring me tea."

* Interesting Times when he thinks what the man has to say is relevant.
* Interesting Times When the Silver Horde conquers the corrupt and decadent Agatean Empire, they summon all of the previous emperor's servants, councilors, and concubines, reveal what has happened and encourage them to continue serving the new regime. The lord chamberlain declares that he would rather die than betray the Emperor and gets his wish, keeping anyone else from voicing similar thoughts.
* Interesting Times, where the Lady outwits Fate as her die flipped gently onto a point, spun round, and came down a seven.
* Interesting Times, who is liable to order people tortured to death or rewarded based upon the slightest whim (since no one ever dared to tell him that this is wrong).
* Interesting to note is the Harry Potter wiki, which is fan-made but very extensive, has a
* Interesting to note that Model H can use the lower screen to display the enemy's/boss' weak point and
* Interesting to note that Oliver Hardy was a Freemason in Real Life.
* Interface by u m a m i uses a lot of scary and creepy surreal imagery to unsettle the viewers.
* interface gear are very form-fitting and futuristic, but they also have very... bulky extremities which disrupt the sleekness.
* Interface: Greeting Robotics seems to have control of the mysterious Cerebral Electricity, which seems to manifest in many parts of society and civilization; the advertisements on television seem to show that the corporation has a presence everywhere and is monitoring people. It has enough power to convince multiple countries and investors to create KAMI and are able to make a speech in the freaking UN about it.
* Interface - "Outside Looking In", "Not With Me", "Fire In the Sky".
* Interface Screw and empty your ammo - a death sentence if they're accompanied by a squad of normal mooks.
* Interface Screw assume you're playing on a CRT television from around the time where the game came out (2002). Newer televisions have more varied graphics between brands and models for things like volume meters or "no signal" screens (which would be displayed when the console is turned off), making these effects much less convincing.
* Interface Screw is filled up, the game becomes impossible to control.
* Interface Spoiler rather than a direct spoil. The fact that the sound test isn't part of the gameplay but an extra should make it come under 'interface'.
* Interface, where a woman blatantly creates sentences from her hand and the bag to send messages to half of her father's brain. (The other half just thinks she's cheating.)
* Interface with a Familiar Face: An AI is given another character's face and voice.
* Interface) with his uncle George Jewsbury; they were originally published as by "Stephen Bury".
* Interfaith Smoothie) and possibly Mormonism (forming a new nation in the desert after the rise of a new prophet and violent conflict with America-equivalent Cygnar).
* Interfaith Smoothie was convinced it was the Christian God, and is essentially trying to replace God as the central figure of Christianity—and it doesn't help that it also conflated the idea of venerating Jesus's sacrifice with just venerating pain and torture in general. This manifests in abrupt and inexplicable instances of staunch Christians and churchgoers performing bizarre sacrificial rituals that usually end in live cicadas crawling out of someone's orifices.
* Interference. This was usually accomplished with the use of heavy weather conditions, which also helped isolate the characters. Imaginative writers could use interference to give only partial information to the protagonists, which they can then
* Intergalactic demons seem to speak impeccable Japanese, although at times, various aliens speak their native tongue, such as Frieza, though it makes you wonder why they choose to speak the earthlings' language in the first place.

* Intergalactic Thanksgiving, he pulls the cord one more time in frustration. You start to hear the sound of something falling. The King then runs into the courtier...still standing there waiting for the punchline. Gucci looks up... Cue giant SPLAT!
* Intergang is run by the feuding father and son Bill Church Sr and Jr, who have a
* Intergang itself sometimes has elite mook squads of its own, like the "Wall Crawler" assassins seen in some
* Intergenerational Friendship: Friendship between two people who have a significant age gap.
* Intergenerational Friendship Ironically, the situation means it's the adults who are being groomed to actively avoid contact with children.
* Intergenerational Rivalry: As its name says: when two people of different generations become rivals.
* Intergenerational Rivalry, in which there is a generation gap between rivals. Although neither trope is mutually exclusive and can sometimes overlap.
* Intergovernmental Agency of Fiction. Once the existence of the Stargate program was revealed to various other nations who were invited to cooperate in it, the IOA was set up as the main forum for the international alliance and the governing entity for several projects related to the Earth's defense and galactic exploration (most notably the Atlantis Expedition and the Ancient weapons platform in Antarctica). As time goes by, it also slowly begins to acquire a more hands-on capacity, including a Field Operations Division to combat alien threats on Earth, and at least one former CIA agent that's seen accompanying an SG-team and representing the IOA's interests. However, the lion's share of the field work is still left to other agencies, with the IOA remaining mostly an administrative body.
* Interim Coalition of Governance so they wouldn't bother them anymore.
* Interim Villain: This villain is introduced to fill in the void before the real villains arrive.
* Interiors by Dean Barrett, each character is accompanied by a second actor representing the character's inner monologue. Partway through the play, the inner monologues realise they can hear each other, and start holding their own conversation independent of the external conversation taking place at the same time.
* Interior Scroll, a performance piece where she reads from a scroll literally pulled from her vagina.
* Interiors of an abandoned factory is turned into a supernatural cornfield that eats trespassers in
* Interlude instead. The random encounters even drop the same weapons, despite some of them being for party members you don't even use in the section.
* Interlude, Saori asks if tankers at Miho's old school, Black Forest, are required to salute their superiors, but Miho says that it isn't entirely necessary and that she believes most of them aren't doing it correctly. Yukari once gives Ami Chouno, their instructor, a salute, prompting Ami to point out that it's not entirely correct, but not a bad effort for a civilian.
* Intermediate deities, gods of common and popular concepts with wide appeal
* Intermediate Documentary Filmmaking-style practical gag out of it. And when Pierce still does it on the third act, he barely manages to outrun an irate Jeff.
* Intermediate Magic Knight: This rank is further divided into 5 classes, with the 5th class being the lowest.
* Intermission 2, which lies between Act 5 and Act 6, shows the true form of the elusive
* Intermission drink order becomes a clue to another character that her masked captor is affiliated with John.
* Intermission). Nowadays, intermissions in film are much, much rarer, particularly ones that look anything like the one in the film, and even home releases of films that do feature intermissions tend to cut them out.
* In termites, all castes are split between male and female but, depending on the needs of the hive, can change caste. If any of the queens or kings in a colony dies, another will change to take their place.

* In term of size, heavy walkers of human factions can be roughly categorized into three tiers: dreadnought, knight, and
* In terms of actual fics which are more or less this on a broader scale,
* In terms of aerial tactics, NATO forces were built around long range missiles, highly manuveurable fighters with advanced countermeasures to "jink" enemy missiles and achieve local air superiority, allowing for direct air support. The Soviet doctrine on the other hand, was focused on fast, short-legged, one-off interceptors, which would scramble at the first sign of American aircraft, fly directly towards them, and perform a fly-by attack with missiles. On bombers, both sides started out with an emphasis on high-and-fast bombers, with the USAF deviating towards low-flying stealthy and highly effective designs like the B-1B Lancer and B-2 Spirit, while the Soviet Union retained the large, highly vulnerable high-flying supersonic bombers like the Tu-160, which relied on using cruise missiles instead of bombs to offset it's extreme vulnerability.
* In terms of a more literal example of an actual bullet, the crossbow bolts he fires are silver tipped.
* In terms of appearance, the pointy-eared Drule from the fifteen-vehicle version of
* In terms of artillery, there's the 88mm Flak 36 gun. While normally used in the
* In terms of atomic secrets, the Cambridge Five in England were far bigger coups for the Kremlin than anyone in the States. It was the German scientist Klaus Fuchs who gave the crucial information that sped up the Soviet atomic program (yet he was imprisoned where the Rosenbergs, who were not as decisive, were executed). The role played by espionage in determining the Soviet program is also debated, since the Soviets discovered the Manhattan Project by simple deduction on the part of its physicists.
* In terms of body language, someone pulling off their glasses generally means that they're either trying to artificially make you more receptive to them by removing a barrier, or they're about to lie to you, removing their glasses so that they won't be looking you (clearly) in the eye.
* In terms of characters, the Eternals/Guild Wars Characters are among some of the most powerful characters in the game. In order to get one though, you have to fully upgrade an Infinity Plus One Weapon known as the Revenant Weapon. Months of grinding are needed to gather all the materials to gather the weapons, you can only get enough copies for one fully uncapped weapon only once every time the bi-monthly Guild War event comes around, and each Eternal corresponds to a different weapon type, meaning that if you want all ten Eternals, you'll need to fully upgrade at least ten different weapons. And have fun going to through the lengthy process to fully uncap the guild war character.
* In terms of commanders, there is both Andy from Orange Star and Hawke,
* In terms of Elder Tribal Heads, there are many details that contrast the brother duo of Suleyman Shah and Korkut Bey. Whereas Suleyman shows nothing but praise for his son Ertugrul, Korkut
* In terms of film, equally well parodied/referenced by the "Token Black Guy" in
* In terms of gameplay, presentation, level design and part of the soundtrack,
* In terms of heroic examples, Ertugrul and his beys have done this a handful of times. For instance, they wore face-concealing articles in season 4
* In terms of human characters, Team Skull is treated as a group of nuisances and losers
* In terms of individual characters, though, special mention must go to Dirk's auto-responder.
* In terms of Magitek as "combination of technology and magic", Arthur's flying car is a notable example, and there's also the entire Misuse of Muggle Artifacts Office, which shows that such things are possible but illegal in the wizarding world. This is simply a matter of maintaining
* In terms of manga anthologies, this trope is the reason Shonen magazines are so popular. With fare like
* In terms of monster cards, there is one archetype that stands out: Worms. Worms are all LIGHT-attribute Reptile monsters. All of them are hideous, unearthly abomination, but some take this just a step too far. For example, Worm Solid is a melted mass of flesh, eyes, and teeth, shoved into a glass prism barely larger than it is.

* In terms of new media technology, there's some overlap with this and
* In terms of non-relationship connections, during their senior year Asahi and Youko both decide that they want to become teachers and help out young people with secrets; at the end of the chapter, we learn that Genjirou had the same wish, but was unable to carry it out because he had to leave school during his senior year.
* In terms of other languages, Oliver effectively serves as the face of not only the PowerFX line, but all of the English-speaking Vocaloids in general.
* In terms of parody characters, Tamara was most delighted at playing Furiosa in
* In terms of people, Caleb Denecour was this. Originally part of the main Achievement Hunter group, his speaking roles dropped significantly after an incident in
* In terms of public speaking, the glasses removal trick can actually work fairly well, if done carefully. For example, some people first learning how to handle witnesses in court, or doing opening or closing arguments, will start fidgeting with their clothes or their glasses. One way to take the latter and make it work is to channel it; when you get to a question or line in your argument where you're really trying to make a point, draw attention to it by taking off your glasses and using them as a "prop" if you will by gesturing with the hand you have them in. (Granted, over doing it will make you look hammier than
* In terms of pure skill, however, Jagganoth is outdone by Solomon David, the Demurge of Pride. While lacking Jagganoth's prodigious strength and
* In terms of raw damage, mages can't even come close to competing with hasted fighters. What made mages powerful, and a pain as enemies in modded games, were their ability to cast and dispel self-buff protection spells. This is exactly why the Kensai/Mage class combo was arguably the most popular combo, as it combined the best offense with the best defense in the game, leading to brokenness even with the challenge mods, which are significantly harder than unmodded.
* In terms of raw damage, warriors and wizards both gain skill levels and stats from using physical attacks or magic respectively. However, warriors get weapon upgrades for the quadratic element. Wizards can still hit elemental weaknesses for massive damage and pierce high defense, but in terms of base damage a warrior will usually outperform a wizard.
* In terms of real names, rather than just codenames, both of the Cauldron boogeymen have this - Contessa's first name is Fortuna, as in lucky, and Number Man's surname is Wynn, like 'win'. Very appropriate for two capes with some of the most absurdly broken powers in the series.
* In terms of reciprocated examples, Jack Noir and Snowman illustrate it best, Vriska and Eridan used to be in one but broke up before the start of the series, Eridan seemed to briefly feel this way for Sollux but was rejected, and Karkat likewise felt this way for John but ran afoul of the fact that humans don't have these types of relationships and that
* In terms of rock reviews, there's a bevy of them but notable examples are
* In terms of sharing birthdays, it should be noted that statistically speaking, there is a 50/50 chance that a random group of twenty-three people will have at least two people who share a birthday. Increase the size of the group to 75, and the odds increase to 99.9%
* In terms of the demons' good counterparts, in season 4 the writers decided to take a different direction and angels first appear, despite Dean's
* In terms of the show, Finn is a Blue Boy to the Pink Girl Bubblegum. Also red/yellow flame Princess.
* In terms of the theory of relativity, time travel would take the appearance of a
* In terms of the Xenos races, the Guardians can be considered this for the Eldar, as they are Eldar taken from non-military paths in times of need and used as foot troops. The Tau tend to employ the denizens of worlds that they conquer as its defenders, at least those that give themselves over to the Greater Good. Humans from Tau-controlled worlds are referred to as Gue'vesa (literally 'human helpers') and used as auxiliaries.

* In terms of this trope's five broad categories, Lord Renly Baratheon is strongly defined by his Lack of Athleticism, Lack of Aggression, and his Open, Emotional Personality (specifically his compassionate side).
* In terms of units themselves, Musketeers in the third game are very much this trope. They're your basic ranged unit, but due to their
* In terms of units, there is the Black Boat of Black Hole that can drive up alongside other units and replenish their health. Sasha even remarks how strange it is that Black Hole is using technology that "
* In terms of using two actual swords at once, there is a master named Giacomo di Grassi who wrote on the subject, using rapiers. His conclusions were the following: Teach only to the most experienced, who have to be practically ambidextrous. Don't use in war or against armored opponents. In general, defend with one and strike with the other. It's often argued that he only put this in as a curiosity for the rich.
* In terms of writing medium, text messaging on phones can be this. Even if the other person doesn't have one, you can still hold up what you've typed on yours for them to read.
* Internal Affairs, and while he regularly gets called on exaggerations, he manages to get Cassandra so hooked on the story that she never questions that first lie, and he does all this while in a darkened room with an armed and armoured woman in black demanding the truth — at swordpoint, occasionally — without losing his cool.
* Internal Affairs antics winds up with her tracking him right to his confrontation with the bad guys.
* Internal Affairs: A police unit tasked with investigating misconduct within the police department itself.
* Internal Affairs crime like real-life detectives rather than just blasting bad guys through walls.
* Internal Affairs" features the fourth chicken fight where Ernie the Giant Chicken sets his own hand (wing?) on fire to attack Peter.
* Internal Affairs. Greevy and a reluctant Logan aren't so sure, and do their own investigating.
* Internal Affairs officer Raymond Avila, is following him, so he arranges to meet Avila's wife in a cafe where he discusses some innocuous business. He then assaults Avila in an elevator, taunting him about having sex with his wife and throwing a pair of panties in his face (which don't even belong to her).
* Internal Affairs officers, the Alpha Lanterns, the cyborg conversion surgeries they pushed deadened the volunteers' minds to the point of eliminating any form of personality due to their connection to the Book of Oa. And to add insult to injury, their so-called infallibility turned out to create perfect hosts for Apokoliptian entities during the Final Crisis and the production facilities were easily subverted by the Cyborg Superman afterwards.
* Internal Affairs, there was no failsafe in place to stop them from being hijacked by Hank Henshaw, the Cyborg Superman, whose Kryptonian-based technology has traditionally been billions of years behind the Guardians. Possibly justified by Cyborg's machine empathy.
* Internal Affairs to set her up. Thankfully, her coworkers managed to trick the guilty party into confessing of the frame up.
* Internal consistency was optional before regularized spelling came into vogue, and in fact one of the things done by the people responsible for regularizing spelling was making the spelling reflect the origin of the words. Even if the result did not make that much sense phonetically, and it meant you got silent letters which would make learning to read even harder than before, they felt obliged to spell it rather like it would be spelled in French. Thankfully, later dictionary editors decided to not try to inflict some of the more bizarre ones — thus why, for example, we use the spelling 'Shinjuku' instead of the (technically)

* Internal decapitation, in which the skull is forcibly separated from the spinal column but the soft tissues of the neck remain intact, can be survivable if the injured person receives artificial respiration and other care. If the spinal cord isn't broken, a full recovery is also possible.
* Internal Deconstruction: Works which deconstruct aspects of their own premises or settings.
* Internalized Categorism: A person believes that being part of a group that's discriminated against makes them guilty of the negative stereotypes associated with that group.
* Internalized Categorism people, it really makes me feel insecure and hate myself.
* Internalized Categorism: Possesses a nondestructive trait that causes self-hatred, which makes it destructive.
* Internalized Categorism: This can affect members of racial, ethnic and religious minorities as well as women, and the problem can be compounded when a person fits more than one category and believes the worst of more than one group. When a queer person believes all the worst stereotypes about queer people, trouble follows, often for them and occasionally for others.
* Internally, the pure detectives tend to look down on Mac's team, seeing them as nerds/geeks. Danny notices this when he becomes a sergeant for a few episodes.
* Internal Monologue that "The steering lock on a smaller bike breaks pretty easily."
* Internal parasites such as liver flukes often have unique thermo/chemoreceptor organs used to navigate within the bodies of their hosts, so they can settle down in the right organs or move to the lungs, bladder, rectum or nasal passages to release eggs.
* Internal Reformist at that point) to break up with her and go back to Sam.
* Internal Reformist: Someone who tries to improve a corrupt system from within.
* Internal Reformist to bring Hanako and Yorinobu over to his way of thinking, but the contrast is still jarring.
* Internal Retcon: Pretending something happened a different way from reality, because the truth would be dangerous.
* Internal Reveal comes at the end when he has Yuna Send him in front of everyone. But it's strongly implied that Kimahri already knew about this, as he had encountered the dying Auron. None of the others really seem all that surprised either, though, and it's very possible they had already figured it out too.
* Internal Reveal - Something known to the audience is now known by a character
* Internal Reveal: The audience already knows the secret but one of the characters is just finding out.
* Internal Reveal: The characters find something out that the audience already knew.
* Internal scenes set at NBC Studios on the titular 30 Rockefeller Plaza in Manhattan are actually filmed at Silvercup Studios in Queens.
* Internal Security comes to power, they reorganized the security apparatus into the ruthless State Security.
* internal source. Iroh explained that the bender's body heat was the source of their bending. When Zuko was enduring hypothermia in Season 1, he was easily floored by Katara until the sun came up.
* Internal strife within the Order finally led to its end during the War of Righteousness. Many details of the war have been lost, but it is said that half the population of the Iliac Bay was wiped out during the decade-long war and the Order's headquarters, a monastic complex at Lake Canulus, was razed.
* internal who planned the heist in Ariel, rather than Mal, who is usually the one making the plans.
* International airlines like Qatar Airways, Korean Air and Emirates have very purposefully vague ads for their companies, so they can air anywhere and not offend anyone.
* International Arms Merchant: Globe-trotting freelance gunrunner, basically a corporate lobbyist without the corporation and far more unscrupulous. Frequently sell to terrorist groups and large criminal organizations, and tend to pop up as minor villains or information sources in spy movies.

* International Brotherhood of Jazz Dancers, Pastry Chefs, and Nuclear Technicians on the seniority list.
* International Channel was a channel aimed at Asian Americans. It was renamed AZN Television in 2005, and ultimately shut down in 2008.
* International Comic Continuity, you'll often see characters from one member's series appearing in another member's.
* International Coproduction: A work is made by companies based in different countries.
* International Coproduction: A work that is made by companies based in different countries.
* International Date Line, an imaginary concept that is part of the basis for time.
* International Economics with Maurice Obstfeld included a box about a dispute about banana quotas in the European Union titled "Do trade preferences have appeal?" and containing the sentence "At the time of writing, efforts to negotiate a resolution to Europe's banana split had proved fruitless." Sadly, the dispute has been resolved and the text will have to be deleted. Krugman later told an interviewer that this line was the favorite thing he had ever written.
* International Fixed Calendar divides the year into 13 28-day months, plus one extra day at the end of the year outside the weekday cycle (and a second in leap years between June and the new month Sol). George Eastman of Kodak was a proponent, and a 13-period calendar was in use internally at Kodak until 1989.
* International Fleet Review of varying countries. It all concluded in a huge reenactment of the Battle of Trafalgar, which occurred on that day 200 years ago.
* International Geophysical Year, a scientific event in 1957-8 that was the USSR's excuse to launch Sputnik into space, thus kicking off the "rocket age" for real.
* "International" gives us the memorable moment of Bill Bailey riffing on the series bonus "Nobody Knows" by asking if he would get a bonus by waving it when
* International Guerillas (see the Literature entry below). Rushdie himself opposed this decision even though he disliked the movie because he felt banning it would have only made it popular. The government relented, allowing the movie to be aired and sure enough, it faded into obscurity.
* International Guild of Laborers: basically a big trade union to help Shadowkind not get taken advantage of in the workforce.
* international intrigue subseries, it is further clarified that the International Fleet, while normally neutral toward Earthside conflicts, will severely punish any nation that uses nukes.
* Internationally competitive gymnasts usually compete as a unified team from Great Britain (Ireland not included),
* International Man Of Mystery: "Allow myself to introduce... myself."
* International Moron Patrol featured Roger doing this... then falling flat on his face.
* International Organization for Standardization-Standard Urban Grocieries
* International phone calls (professional and private) are often quite a challenge since both sides not only have to check their schedule, but also to figure out which time it is at whose place. There is a reason that there's websites dedicated to nothing but calculating the time of multiple places.
* International Pop Song EnglishAn artificial accent used by singers all around the world.
* international recognition. Regardless, Sakurai is also on record as saying in "Mr. Sakurai Presents "Terry Bogard", that "whether or not the character is fun to play as is more important than whether the character is new or old, or whether the character is recognizable to everyone."
* International Rugby Challenge, though "Having Electrodes Attached To Your Genitals And Being Flogged Senseless With A Knotted Rope" would probably be just as bad.
* International Saimoe exists as a contest of what anime character does this the best.
* International Secret Intelligence Service (ISIS), and Organization of Democratic Intelligence Networks (ODIN) in

* International Showdown by Proxy between American Joe Louis and Nazi Germany's Max Schmeling.
* International Showdown by Proxy: Sports (or some other mundane activity) representing conflict between two countries.
* International Super Star Soccer Deluxe for the SNES introduces a bonus match against an All-Star team with perfect stats after you win the World Series. Not only is this team supremely talented, but all your players are tired or very tired.
* international title treats the Self as clearly separate from the body, which is merely a Shell. To the series' own definition, a "ghost" is a person's soul converted into digital data as a result of cyberization. At this point, it can technically be stolen away from you if a hacker is powerful enough to do so.
* International Version has 2 modes: New Game Plus and New Game Minus. New Game Plus is achieved simply by beating the main game, and while nothing carries over, all characters start at level 90, making the game substantially easier (though not as much as you think, as the game is extremely gear-dependent for damage and defense). New Game Minus is unlocked for completing Trial Mode, and puts all characters at level 1 and have them gain no experience. The completion requirements were removed from the PC, Xbox One and Switch versions of the game, allowing you to choose the New Game Plus/Minus modes from the start.
* International Waters) awards one million points for the final question (while pre-final-round scores tend to fall in the single or low-double digits). Even repeat guests who are fully aware of this gag often seem to lose track of it and worry about meaningless early-game leads.
* International, with him adding that if she'd been wearing glasses, that would been the moment where she dramatically whipped them off to underscore her point.
* International Wrestling and The Dominican Wrestling Federation had an evil Ecuadorian in Savinovich Hugo and an evil German in Hans Mueller.
* International Wrestling, Lightning Hernandez made use of a belt with spurs on it.
* International Wrestling" Lightning Hernandez that was none the less easy on the eyes.
* Intern Clark Edison is a suspect in the murder of someone he went on an expedition with.
* Intern Dana ends up stuck in the forbidden dog park (Do not take your dog to the dog park. Do not go to the dog park. Do not look at the dog park. Do not think about the dog park.), and notes that although it looks like it's the size of a city block when you're standing still, she was able to walk along one of the black walls that surround it for two weeks without reaching a corner.
* "Internet access will be available while we're above 10,000 feet."
* Internet Archive Many older PC games not available through digital distribution platforms such as Steam or GOG.com can also be found.
* Internet Archive version, and removing the awkward textual and visual censorship that had been inflicted on the Windows version.
* Internet Archive. While it is best known for the Wayback Machine, it is also home to the largest online library, not only housing digitised books but also audio files, video files, software and images. And yes, it is registered as an actual library: it was done so by California in 2007.
* Internet as a popular way for households to go online, as it's fast and cheap.
* iNternet: A Tale of Unspeakable Cruelty and Terror And it's 100% played straight.
* Internet Backdraft: You said something innocuous and somehow touched off a flamewar.
* Internet by older people and those in rural areas that still lack reliable high-speed internet access. The company maintains its dial-up service to this day.
* Internet comedian Adam Buckley has torn apart many songs on his YouTube channel
* Internet content, a handy demonstration of what rock bottom looks like.
* Internet critic, reviewer and commentator DaftPina has received some flak and hate from fans of
* Internet culture has developed the term "Edgelord" as a pejorative label for
* Internet distribution has also sparked a similar resurgence of self-publication in literature and film, which was long ago common in both fields but had fallen by the wayside in the interim. In film in particular it had become synonymous with

* Internet e-mail forwards and postings will often feature things from almost everything mentioned in the * Internet example: fanfiction.net. If yaoi fangirls were dragonflies, this site (the
* Internet Explorer's blue lowercase "e", with a golden ring around it.
* Internet Historian "Raycon Good, Wires Bad", and snips a random wire, immediately setting the bomb off.
* Internet Historian's take on the 9gag meme rock. The idea was to preserve 2017 meme culture for the future by carving the best memes from that onto a 27-ton limestone slab. The problem is that a lot the memes were already approaching, or exceeding, a decade at that point. The IH has nothing but contempt for the stone, saying it's just "lying there, under the sand. Waiting for future generations to find it, then cringe at." He then "subtly" encourages the viewer to finish what 4chan started by going to Spain and melting the stone with vinegar.
* Internet Jerk: Anonymity on the Internet encourages people to be assholes.
* Internet Jerk: I'm an asshole because it's the internet (or any other anonymous setting) and I can say whatever the fuck I want! If you're offended, then fuck off, you butthurt piece of shit!
* Internet kerfuffle community listed the many ways in which they like their men like they like their coffee:
* "Internet Killed The Video Star" by The Limousines has a repeated lyric "The kids are disco dancing, they're tired of rock n' roll/don't bother telling them that drum machine ain't got no soul." Though, this appears to be less of an overt science diss, so much as commentary on the modern youth culture failing to give enough credit to yester-year artists and musicians, and is arguably even a bittersweet passing of the torch to this next generation.
* Internet meme commented that they are "what you see before you die." On the other hand, "they've got a pepper bar!"
* Internet meme of Jonathan Fleming, the photograph of the picture that would become the "hipster doge." Fans of the breed advise against first time dog owners owning them. While not bad pets by any means, Shibas are quite a stubborn breed (to the point where many call them "cat-like") and could be hard to handle for inexperienced owners.
* Internet memes, particularly anything based around parody of a certain subculture. For instance, "le monkey face" was originally created as a parody of derivative and formulaic "rage comics," but it didn't take long for it to be unironically adopted. And then there's the phenomenon of MLG montages, which were designed to mock overproduced and obnoxious gameplay videos, but quickly developed a fanbase of people who viewed it as simply being the same as those videos, but with more of the stuff they liked (namely, lots of editing and effects combined with loud and unpleasant music).
* Internet Movie Car Database. Wiki about the vehicles that are used in films and TV.
* Internet Movie Firearms Database. Wiki about the guns that are used in films and TV.
* Internet Movie Plane Database. Wiki about the aircraft that are used in films and TV.
* Internet musician Rob Scallon has several videos where he sings a song entirely backwards, and then reverses the recording so that it comes out sounding forwards, but strange-sounding. He has done this with renditions of "We Wish You a Merry Christmas" and "
* Internet Oracularity is a really meta example that's somewhat hard to explain without spoiling the joke itself.
* Internet Personality Vangelus has an appropriately awesome name, like "Dankuuken". That is in fact the sword's name, and Vangelus' Subtitles (which are pretty shocked themselves) promise that he didn't look the name up before filming.
* Internet psychic Talisman and virtual anarchist Spooky Boogie from

* Internet Radio has no censorship whatsoever. No Holds Barred Radio was one of the pioneers of it and the title is exactly what it is:
* Internet Safety Aesop: A character does something irresponsible on the internet and has to deal with the repercussions.
* Internet Safety Aesop: Started in the mid-1990s as more people began using the internet.
* Internet Safety Aesop: Think before you post and never give away personal information.
* Internet Safety Aesop: Think before you post, never give away personal information, and never meet up with strangers from the internet.
* Internet Scamming in Ghana) Socrate Safo, the director of Sakawa-related films, is described as "The Martin Scorsese of Ghanian internet fraud-based gangster films."
* Internet sensation Science Bob has been in three episodes: "The Quad Test", "No Ifs, Ands, or But-ers" and "She Blinded Him with Science (Bob)"
* Internet Stalking: It's been around since the internet became more widespread.
* "Internet" talks about going online with the intention of finding information... and finding only smut.
* Internet term. It's also become shorthand for "Tim Buckley", who has his own unique set of emotional cripplements.
* Internet Tough Guy is essentially this. They'll go on spectacularly long rants and speeches about how they'd kick their opponent's ass if they met in person, than crumple like wet paper the second something potentially dangerous or scary appears - see the aforementioned Navy SEAL copypasta.
* internet trolling in progress and pose as a member one or both sides of the debate and making ever inflammatory comments toward to other side. This will ensure that the flame war stays hot and both sides don't make even the slightest progress towards reconciliation. Some of the more ambitious trolls will post in the community their identity is in but its often simply as easy as creating an account.
* Internet-using wrestling fans in general have been called "the IWC", or "Internet Wrestling Community".
* Internet video critic usually makes sure to point out which episodes have too many cooks by calling a bloated writing credit "the wall of text" or something similarly sarcastic.
* Internet writing circles take the form of shared universes. Some such universes have been around continuously since the mid-1980s.
* Intern Finn Abernathy had a similar issue with his stepfather. He actually threatened to kill him when he beat Finn’s mom. Only his fear of Booth and Brennan hunting him down stopped him.
* Intern Meredith Grey begins dating attending Dr Shepherd, and eventually marries him. Their age gap is no more than 10 years, but it still causes amusement with Shepherd's friends, who call her "the 12-year-old". The age difference between the actors is only four years, thanks to
* Interns, the role of Dr. Phil Richards is played by Odin Biron. Like his character, Biron was born in the US and moved to live and work in Russia. In addition, Richards states that he was largely raised by two fathers. Odin Biron came out to his parents as a teenager, although he's forced to downplay that in Russia due to the homophobia prevalent in the country.
* Interpersonal relationships are taken into account in the synergy of characters. In the Knights of Favonious Jean is considered the glue keeping them together, she has great healing and elemental cleansing to get any team through any conflict. Xingqiu and Bennett are great support who work best with their in lore friends, Chongyun and Razor.
* Interplanetary Revolution from 1924 shows fearless Marxist cosmonauts landing on Mars, and overthrowing the Martian ruler, who sits still during the whole rhubarb looking displeased about this development. The implication is that hereditary monarchies (we are looking at you, Britain) do naught but pontificate and bellyache.
* Interplanetary Transport Network could be considered an inversion of this. It's a network of routes that a spacecraft could use to travel between planets while consuming little fuel. However, travel via this network is also very slow.

* Interplanetary travel is like crossing the street. Cubert and Dwight built a craft capable of doing it; they found it in an ad in a comic book. In another episode, Fry laments that he'll "never get into space" because his brother got to Mars first. Leela points out, "You went [to space] for donuts this morning."
* Interplanetary Voyage: A story that focuses on the difficulties of a space voyage.
* Interplanetary Voyage in order to study the wondrous ways of the universe.
* Interplay Entertainment but fiercely devoted fanbase. A lot of Black Isle's creative team works at Obsidian now, so there is some justification for lumping them together.
* Interplay of Sex and Violence: Violence and sex happening around the same time as each other.
* Interplay of Sex and Violence: Violence and sex happening around the same time as each other, or even using violence as foreplay.
* Interplay PC game included a content disclaimer in the manual regarding some dated tropes in Tolkien's works. Notably the depiction of wolves, smoking, and the usage of the term "black". The disclaimer mentioned that the game was simply being faithful to the era in which the source material was written when wolves were misunderstood animals, smoking wasn't seen as a harmful addiction, and to describe someone or something as "dark" or "black" simply meant evil as opposed to a racial description.
* Interpol Agent Shi-Long Lang, from the ambigiously Asian country of Zheng Fa, has a slight fixation with wolf metaphors and themes.
* Interpol are notorious for this. The fact that the band have never issued official lyrics either on their website or their album sleeves only makes it worse.
* Interpol is the second codifier for the genre. They led the revival movement for the genre, and pretty much every Post-Punk band after was influenced by them.
* Interpretative Character: A character that can be depicted in any number of ways as long as they retain a few defining traits.
* Interpretative Character: As long as they keep a few defining traits, a character can be adapted in many different ways.
* Interpreter of Maladies has "The Third And Final Continent", which features an Indian couple who have had an arranged marriage slowly adjusting to life in America. Ultimately, they come together after the man's landlady formally accepts their marriage, signifying their inclusion into American culture. On the other hand, "This Blessed House" revolves around a couple who have had an arranged marriage and cannot properly communicate with one another, with the husband grudgingly acquiescing to his wife's eccentric needs.
* Interpreter of Maladies has two stories, "Mrs. Sen's" and "When Mr. Pirzada Came to Dine". Both involve children who become fascinated by an adult, and when the adult leaves them in the end, they lose their naivety toward the world.
* interpret every metaphor literally. This ruse was so successful that their stupidity became as legendary as their intelligence. Examples include trying to plant salt on their fields, marking a spot on a boat to remember a sunken treasure, and finally burning the whole city to get rid of a cat.
* Interpreting ambiguous information with a focus on how it favors one's own beliefs.
* Interpreting "cool" as its' other definition, believing it means "chilled".
* "Interpretive Dance": The dance recital serves as an opportunity for Troy, Britta, and Abed to show off their dancing skills.
* Interpret the Signs from Theros block displays the set symbol for Dragons of Tarkir, which was released about a year later.
* Inter promotional example, and a rare one considering it involved WWE but Primo Colon's instant hostility toward Curt Hawkins and Zach Ryder upon the announcement that they were members of "La Familia"
* Interquel: An installment of the series that takes place between two previously released installments.

* interquel dresses in a black "ninja-like" outfit and a guy not only has a magic-themed power and Renumeration, but he also dresses like one as well.
* Interquel, goes into further details about just how you ended up in the situation that the second game says you did. It doesn't change the outcome, but it does provide an explanations for what happened to a different party (they left on various tasks) and how the player, regardless of alignment, ended up imprisoned with those five members.
* Interquel to focus on what Olaf was up to between his creation during the famous "Let It Go" sequence and his first meeting with Anna and Kristoff.
* Interregnum tales are set in this stage. Rarely, this can end with humanity's extinction.
* In "Terrible Swift Sword", Boyd infiltrates the US Army base where the promicin procured from Isabelle is stored by posing as Dennis Ryland. As such, he is able to steal all 17,432 units of Isabelle's pure promicin in the possession of the government.
* Interrogated for Nothing: Someone is tortured for information, but they truly don't know anything.
* Interrogating the Dead: Getting information by interrogating dead people.
* interrogation. All that other characters will say of them is that they are "sickening" and too horrible to describe. In one plot line, the player is captured and suffers it first-hand: The game dialogue will only tell you that what you experienced is too awful to remember, and that for the rest of your life whenever you even attempt to recall what you have been through, you will lapse into incoherent, terrified screaming.
* Interrogation by Vandalism: Damage to property (or threatening to) is illegal anyway, let alone when used to get information.
* Interrogation FlashbackThe story is told via a character being pumped for information.
* "interrogations"—after Rokossovskiy's third objection, Stalin approached the marshal and put a hand on his shoulder. Rather than ripping off the epaulet or having him purged again, though, Stalin simply said: "Your confidence speaks for your sound judgement," and deferred to his (immeasurably-better) judgement. Rokossovskiy's campaign went on to be one of the most decisive victories of the entire war.
* In "Terror from the Phantom Zone", the three evil Kryptonians are exposed to red kryptonite in the end. One of them, Hul, gets turned into a metal statue.
* In "Terror from the Phantom Zone", the three evil Kryptonians Hul, Logar, and Rom-Lok wear lead suits to expose Superman to red kryptonite, which caused him to suffer
* In "Terror of the Zygons", the Doctor is shot in extreme closeup like this when he uses his
* Interrupted Bath: A bathing character is interrupted by something, forcing them to stop.
* interrupted by a fire in NBC's studio. NBC was able to switch to the Japanese feed of the game. Fortunately unlike the below example, the game had been decided by that point so not much was missed in the dead time.
* Interrupted Declaration of Love: A character attempts to confess their love, but is interrupted.
* Interrupted Declaration of Love: Character tries to confess their love for somebody but is interrupted.
* Interrupted Declaration of Love—A character begins to declare their love for another, but then there's an interruption.
* Interrupted Declaration of Love: Someone is interrupted while trying to confess their feelings.
* Interrupted Intimacy: A couple are walked in on while they're trying to have sex.
* Interrupted Intimacy: A couple is about to have sex, or are in the midst of the act, but another person interrupts somehow. They have to stop to deal with the interruption.
* Interrupted Intimacy becomes pregnant, and Rafe confesses that he's secretly married her. Cromwell is floored. Rafe is equally floored that he was even able to keep it a secret given that it was going on more or less under Cromwell's nose, and Cromwell is not usually the man to miss a trick.

* Interrupted Intimacy: Someone walks in on a couple having some "alone time".
* Interrupted Suicide: A character is prevented from committing suicide.
* Interrupted Suicide instead of Shouya (who accidentally fell and ended comatose after saving Shouko).
* "Interrupter" sketch. Conan attempts to introduce his next guest but is interrupted by the Interrupter, who finishes Conan's sentences throughout the rest of the sketch, eventually leading to the Interrupter revealing self-deprecating and disturbing facts about himself. Sometimes the sketch would end with the Interrupter beginning the sentence and Conan interrupting him instead, or another character (such as a therapist or female Interrupter) would appear to interrupt the Interrupter.
* interrupting her date. So she makes a point of kissing Owen to let him know she's not just making an excuse to run out on him.
* interrupting her). Then when that thing happens, Bob turns to Alice and says, "Why didn't you tell me?"
* Interrupting Meme the practice of yelling "fuck her right in the pussy" at news reporters.
* interrupts him about the child audience, but other viewers think it refers to unseen animal kids and Simba.
* In "Terry and Korvo Steal a Bear", we only see brief glimpses of the family's adventure, as the focus is mainly on the residents of the wall.
* Interscene Diegetic: A character is singing, the scene changes, but you can still hear the singing.
* Intersections in Real Time, and warned that his captors are tired of Sheridan’s refusal to confess and are willing to kill him and use manipulated footage to make it appear that Sheridan did confess.
* Interservice Rivalry between the Wehrmacht (the regular armed forces, which controlled the weapons procurement process) and the Waffen-SS meant that early in the war, the Waffen-SS relied heavily on captured foreign weapons.
* Interservice Rivalry in the United States Military is this trope with a helping of good nature humor (usually).
* Interservice Rivalry the officers who are supposed to get shot at — unless one is in Combat Control or Pararescue.
* Interservice Rivalry: Two branches of the government have a rivalry that sometimes affects their work.
* Interservice Rivalry with the Naval Academy's Midshipmen, but perhaps in keeping with the tendency for a black knight to be a villain and for the villain to lose, as of 2018 they trail the series 60–52.
* Intersex Tribulations: Characters are perceived as unusual because they are born intersex. If not that, then they internalize negative feelings towards being intersex.
* Interspecies Adoption: A being adopts a child that is a different species.
* Interspecies Adoption: A character is adopted by parents who are a different species than they are.
* interspecies couple, Nicholas and Yngvild, definitely qualify as this, as he's a human and she's a norn, making her about 2.4 meters tall.
* Interspecies Friendship: Friendship between beings of different species.
* Interspecies Friendship: Friendship between individuals of different species.
* Interspecies Friendship: Two animals of different species befriend each other.
* Interspecies Reviewers approaches this topic with a certain amount of frank levity. Grand Mage Demia, who has her own stake in the adult entertainment industry, uses her "business" to fund her research, and markets some of her discoveries and creations in terms of said adult entertainment in order to recoup research expenses and raise funds for more projects. She has employees running facilities for 'enjoying' gender-bending potions and water-based magical slime, maintains a large crew of Decoy Doll clones that dominate the Succu-girl scene in her hometown, and she actively discusses this trope when she talks about how it was more lucrative for her to market rings of fire resistance towards men eager to have sex with Salamander fire spirit women rather than to have them only as niche specialist gear for adventurers looking for a source of fire resistance.

* Interspecies Reviewers catering to every fetish imaginable in a fantasy setting.
* Interspecies Reviewers come from a peaceful fantasy world full of monster-girls, and all sorts of races and species. Their goal is to review what it's like to sleep with as many of these ladies as they can.
* Interspecies Reviewers, it also made its target audience much clearer and ended up getting a bigger fanbase that way.
* Interspecies Reviewers potion is only allowed in specifically sanctioned establishments, because that one has applications that go much further than harmless consensual fun.
* Interspecies Reviewers removes her brain to pass the time between guests without succumbing to boredom.
* Interspecies Reviewers, Zel ends up sleeping with one of these when the reviewers (sans Crim) visit the undead brothel Necrowife. He gives her a six out of ten.
* Interspecies Romance: A human and a non-human who end up in a romantic relationship.
* Interspecies Romance is that one can sometimes tell if the actors had had a falling out by how they interacted on screen.
* Interspecies Romance. She is a very powerful mage, while he was a dwarf, which is an entire race of muggles. It was nevertheless a very happy relationship until his death.
* Interspecies Romance: Someone falls in love with a different species.
* Interspecies Romance, Sonic and Elise have very different heights. Sonic doesn't even reach Elise's shoulders. This results in more than one gag.
* Interspecies Romance: Two animals of different species fall in love with each other.
* Interspecies Romance: Two people from differing sapient species have a romantic relationship.
* Interstate 13 was a highway proposed in the early 1960s that would have connected Fayetteville, North Carolina to Norfolk, Virginia via US 13 and US 17. Despite local interest, highway officials were far less interested in building said interstate, meaning that the proposal did not get very far before being scrapped. It wouldn't be until five decades later that an interstate proposal connecting Norfolk to a major North Carolina city (Raleigh instead of Fayetteville in this case) would get past the cutting room floor, in the form of Interstate 87 (no relation to the existing I-87 in New York).
* Interstate 170 (US 40) in Maryland. The ghost ramps were scheduled for demolition in summer 2011.
* Interstate 189, a southern bypass of Burlington, Vermont, was to have continued to the north and curve into downtown Burlington. However, it was never built due to presence of toxic waste, so the highway
* Interstate 60. Neil dreams and sees vision of a mysterious girl. When he embarks on his adventure on the mythical Interstate 60, he finds and rescues her from prison. They discover that they are, in fact, soul mates.
* Interstate 60, O. W. Grant, who is (mostly) benevolent in granting wishes, considers messing with people to be the best form of entertainment there is.
* Interstate 60, O. W. Grant, will grant wishes this way if he doesn't like you or thinks your wish is boring.
* Interstate 60, the protagonist Neal comes across a town called Morlaw while on the titular road, in which all the residents are lawyers and everybody sues everybody. While in a lawyer's office, Neal sees an ambulance driving by, with a HORDE of other lawyers running after it.
* Interstate 60. When Neal asks how he can be driving down a highway that doesn't exist, he's literally offered several possibilities.
* Interstate 76 centered on armed cars doing battle with each other. In addition to the usual complement of machine guns, rockets, and the like, the player carried a handgun that could shoot at a ninety-degree angle to the direction of travel. Kills with the handgun were preferable because they not only killed the opponent instantly but left the opponent's vehicle intact to be scavenged at the end of the mission.

* Interstate '76 games have weaponized muscle cars. The first game, being a simulator of sorts, realistically deals with the difficulty of aiming a fixed machine gun from a bouncy car moving at 100mph.
* Interstate '76) says "Damn, I'm so good, they should name a car after me." His name? Taurus.
* Interstate '76 than an enemy (since if you were driving fast the shell would come down right in front of you).
* Interstate '82 which is possibly the first video game weapon that's more effective in the hands of the player than the AI.
* Interstella 5555 among others were previous alien victims of the Earl de Darkwood, kidnapped from their worlds in a sinister plot to acquire gold records.
* Interstella 5555 are revealed to be robots when, after an explosion, parts of their skin burn off and reveal metal.
* Interstella 5555 becomes obvious when, after his car is crushed by a truck, the damaged cyborg emerges from the flaming wreck, and he has a red eye visible behind his sunglasses, like the Terminator.
* Interstella 5555: During the song "Crescendolls", we see a Brazilian dancer in a skimpy carnival costume.
* Interstella5555, losing to the main characters in a music contest. One of the two members has LEDs on his helmet forming a broken heart symbol.
* Interstella 5555 starts with the premise that humans from Earth are kidnapping aliens.
* Interstella 5555, the main characters, an alien music group, are put in a machine that changes their memories to make them believe they are human.
* Interstella 5555, the pilot Shep powers up his guitar shaped ship to rescue them by having his command chair slide into position as all of the ship's readouts light up in sequence.
* Interstella 5555 with its own pop band, who are kidnapped and disguised as humans so they can be "the next big thing."
* Interstellar, all crew's visors are transparent with no protective coating.
* Interstellar, as its flight mechanics are completely different from traditional rockets and only receives thrust with the sun in direct line-of-sight.
* Interstellar bankrupt through trying to catch up; they did this to discourage the idea of space travel, so that people wouldn't try to look for ways to leave the (dying) planet Earth. The main character Cooper was a former NASA employee who was pretty disgusted by this.
* Interstellar by detaching himself from the spaceship to ensure Brand's safe onward travel to Edmunds planet. Apparently, resources weren't enough for both of them to survive.
* Interstellar, Cooper and the NASA team visit a planet caught in the gravitational pull of a large black hole. After roughly three hours on the planet, they return to their vessel to learn that 23 years have passed on Earth's time.
* Interstellar, Cooper, at Murph's insistence, sets out on a new voyage through the wormhole, alongside TARS, in order to find Amelia on the new planet.
* Interstellar, Cooper finds out that NASA detected an artificial wormhole near Saturn decades prior and has sent a dozen manned missions through it to map out the space on the other side and determine the habitability of the planets there. This version appears as a sphere (when Cooper points out that he expected something different, the onboard physicist explains that the wormhole is a projection of multi-dimensional space on our limited three-dimensional perception. He even provides the classic example of folding a piece of paper and puncturing it with a pencil, explaining that a hole in three dimensions is a sphere). Visually, the wormhole appears to distort space around it, and the other galaxy can be seen through it. Apparently, the wormhole has multiple destinations, as it's mentioned that twelve planets have been discovered on the other side, while only three are present in the chosen system. Presumably, other destinations are reached by entering the wormhole at a different vector.

* Interstellar, Cooper regularly tells TARS to change his honesty and humor settings to 75%, 60%, 95%, or some other arbitrary percentage.
* Interstellar". Crossing a black hole's event horizon left the hero in a four-dimensional representation of every moment his daughter's room/library ever had.
* Interstellar effects, Cooper visits his daughter Murph on her deathbed decades later (from her perspective) when she's already an elderly woman and he's still a middle-aged man.
* Interstellar features TARS and CASE, the former of which is more prominent due to his witty and snarky programming (though his humor settings can be altered).
* interstellar government almost always forms, with humanity as a major member.
* Interstellar is only referred to as Cooper in the film itself, but the script reveals that his full name is Joseph A. Cooper.
* Interstellar jokes early on in the movie that he could flash a little cue light on his display any time he makes a joke to Cooper. This is mentioned again later on.
* Interstellar Pig than anything else — an incredibly annoying embodiment of ADHD that uses its reputation as an object of great power (religious or otherwise) to planet-hop like some kind of obnoxious freeloading tourist.
* Interstellar remaining crew) before accidentally killing himself; and the remaining group of two humans and two robots was separated (with one human and one robot each) indefinitely. While the film ends with one party preparing to go rejoin the other, we do not get to actually see this happen.
* Interstellar saved the astronauts' asses on several occasions and closest thing they showed to hostility is a little back-talk which they were programmed for. TARS even goes into the middle of a black hole, to get the information that can save humanity.
* Interstellar. She even shouts "Eureka!" out of joy, throwing her papers everywhere after writing the solution on them.
* Interstellar slingshots the black hole Gargantua in order to get up to the speed needed for the onward flight to Edmunds' planet.
* Interstellar, so there's silence after this point despite the subsequent destruction.
* Interstellar takes place far enough into the future for there to be the launch of an interstellar mission, yet close enough to the present for farms and pick-up trucks to look twentieth-century.
* Interstellar, TARS asks Cooper why he's whispering, as the rest of the crew has been placed in suspended animation and can't overhear their conversation.
* Interstellar, TARS is rather crass with his gallows humor, often plugging at inappropriate times, given that his humor setting was originally set at 100% before it was modified by Cooper.
* Interstellar that Earth has now become. It's about twenty-five minutes before NASA is even brought into the film.
* Interstellar: The extrasolar planets are given flatly descriptive, preliminary names, each based on the surname of the explorer sent to study it: Miller's Planet, Mann's Planet, Edmunds' Planet...
* Interstellar, the hero refuses to take his daughter with him to the mysterious location, so she hides under a blanket in his car. By the time he notices her, it's too late to send her back and both continue the journey together.
* Interstellar, the protagonists keep a close eye on Earth time, even as they pass by areas that suffer from Relativity weirdness. This adds dramatic tension as they watch time pass by that their planet is running out of.
* Interstellar, there might have only been a few million people left. Them seemingly all being American ties logically to corn being the last of the big 5 staple crops to die out. Corn is not one of the higher ones. Rice and wheat sustain the vast majority of the world.
* Interstellar: the teaser trailer presents a rather Romanticist view of space travel - "because our destiny lies above us."

* Interstellar, the unspecified countryside of the US Midwest was shot mostly in southern Alberta and other neighbouring Canadian prairie provinces. Iceland's glaciers, highlands and coastal shallows were used for filming the different environments of the three extrasolar planets visited during the course of the storyline.
* Interstellar: The WB and Paramount logos are sepia toned, representing the dry and dusty state the Earth is in.
* Interstellar to find messages from his children on Earth, who, due to proximity to a black hole, have grown up in what was a matter of hours for him and have pretty much given up on ever seeing him again. Not a moment of lost hope, but definitely a low point.
* interstellar travel in it being just improvised by a crew (with an enterprising use of the plastic aggregate from a cargo and water from propellant tanks) in an unused hold of this huge-ass freighter hauling cargo between various Outer System colonies and outposts, but it's the intent that counts here, and the ship herself was big and comfy enough to feature here.
* Interstellar travel takes place at just below the speed of light, so travel times between even neighboring star systems can be years or decades. This is mitigated for those inside the ship by the relativistic effects of near-light-speed travel, reducing the time they experience to months or years. Still, many passengers and less-essential crew elect to spend at least part of the journey in a state of suspended animation.
* "Interstellar war catches up with three unusual humans stranded on a backward planet." —
* Interstellar Wars it is specifically stated that there is an aristocratic Vilani culture and a commoner Vilani culture.
* Interstellar Weapon: A weapon fired from interstellar space or a star system that will hit targets light-years away.
* Interstellar Weapon: A weapon that will hit something light-years away.
* Interstellar WeaponYou fire it and it hits a target in another solar system.
* Interstellar we only hear sounds from inside the spacecraft and spacesuits in all the outer space scenes.
* Interstellar, where humanity ventures on a newly discovered wormhole.
* Interstellar, who can’t figure out a way to help those still on Earth and is alone and prepared to set up a new colony with genetic samples on the one life-bearing planet that the expedition found.
* Interstellar with rather charming and helpful personalities. TARS in particular cracks jokes and develops a rather snarky friendship with Cooper over the course of the film.
* Interstitial Actual Play are separate entities despite their similarities, and agreeing that referring to the latter with the former's name would be equivalent to deadnaming them.
* Interstitial Actual Play characters crossing paths to save the world) and ramps it beyond what one could possibly imagine.
* Interstitial Actual Play. Criss admits he wasn't a Keyblade master and actually flunked out of Yen Sid's tutelage, but the others are glad he felt comfortable sharing that with them, and Roxanne grows closer to him (symbolized by her Mastery link with him becoming a Heart Link).
* Interstitial Actual Play, Criss Angel becomes a mentor to Marche after the latter stumbles into the bubble-world that Criss had to make when he was sucked into Gummy Space.
* Interstitial Actual Play, Criss Angel's Bugatti can transform into "Angel 1" and deploy a pair of high-powered gun-turrets named Siegfried and Roy.
* Interstitial Actual Play don't bat an eye at a strange man in a cloak playing card games in their gym while asking them who's the most hateful among them. Even the main characters take a while to notice, since Marche is distracted by the game and Roxanne thinks his aesthetic is normal.
* Interstitial Actual Play, Edith has a move that can accomplish this and she uses it on Larxene, though we don't see the results until several episodes after her initial death. This also occurs with Roxanne, as her death leads to the restoration of her Somebody Ennora.

* Interstitial Actual Play foreshadow the reveal that Roxanne is actually the Nobody of Ennora.
* Interstitial Actual Play has a lot of potential, but she tends to give up or wash out of anything that requires too much effort (like college).
* Interstitial Actual Play has Criss Angel's Bugatti, which can fly and travel through Gummy Space. It can also deploy a pair of drone turrets in a fight.
* Interstitial Actual Play, he acts like a proper student in an attempt to regain that feeling.
* Interstitial Actual Play, he has been boiled down to two character aspects: an amicable fellow and a plucky fighter.
* Interstitial Actual Play. He uses a series of successful moves to turn the Smoke Monster back into the Man in Black, who he then kills with a single punch.
* Interstitial Actual Play is this several times over, since he spent his game lost in another world and has now become lost in several others .
* Interstitial Actual Play, it can also be used to disguise herself as a Dusk and sneak up on Luxord.
* Interstitial Actual Play join the party near the end of the first season. Though they're not so much evil as "mean, but in an endearing way".
* Interstitial Actual Play occurs out-of-focus and in the background of the fight between Criss and Xigbar.
* Interstitial Actual Play sees two pop up during the Door to Darkness one-shots.
* Interstitial Actual Play the two of them are ex-boyfriends. By the end, they're clarified as gay and bisexual respectively.
* Interstitial Actual Play toy she held on to after being sucked out of her world.
* Interstitial Actual Play: When having to choose between wielding her Keyblade and steering the Bugatti in a fight against Heartless, Roxanne instead jumps out of the car and into the car-heartless to take control of it instead.
* Interstitial Actual Play. When Ms. Darbis asks her to introduce herself to the class, she just claims that she's been going to the school for the past four years. Everyone buys it.
* Interstitial Actual Play. When Scott tries to defend Edith against Doctor K sniping at her for wanting to leave to other worlds, Edith snaps at Scott, claiming she can handle things herself.
* Interstitial Actual Play while he wears a suit of power armour built out of his car—complete with a mullet made out of floor mats.
* Interstitial Actual Play, who is even played with The Chosen playbook.
* Interstitial Actual Play world and thus change form accordingly. Marche becomes a Cockatiel, Edith becomes a mouse, and Criss Angel becomes a bat. Subverted with Roxanne, who is already an anthropomorphic dog-person. She becomes human.
* Interstitial Actual Play world. In-universe, the cast all look like they're in their twenties, which helps actual twenty year olds Edith and Roxanne blend in.
* Interstitial: Our Hearts Intertwined can easily be this due to its focus on Mastery Links and moves like "For Your Own Good" and "Magical Teacher".
* Interstitial: Our Hearts Intertwined gives characters the option to come back after their Harm Clock is filled at the cost of losing their playbooks, their Links, or owing a favour to a dark force. The move "I'm Sorry About the Ice Cream" from The Friend playbook also allows this if the player is willing, though on a mixed success the resurrection is delayed and the character has forgotten something important.
* Interstitial: Our Hearts Intertwined has a few moves require you to take Harm as a cost, regardless of roll.
* Interstitial: Our Hearts Intertwined has The Anachronism, a playbook all about being this on top of being a normal fish out of water.
* Interstitial: Our Hearts Intertwined has The Chosen playbook, naturally. The moves are designed around dishing out extra damage and protecting both yourself and your friends.
* Interstitial: Our Hearts Intertwined has The Light and The Friend based around this, as they get bonuses for forming strong connections with their friends and protecting them.

* Interstitial: Our Hearts Intertwined has The Linksmith, a playbook all about manipulating people's memories in order to control them and gain their trust. As such, the playbook has a trigger warning right at the top to ensure everyone playing is comfortable with it.
* Interstitial: Our Hearts Intertwined has the move "If There's No Door, Then I'll make One" from The Prodigy lets you create your own path forward, be that metaphorical or literal.
* Interstitial: Our Hearts Intertwined: If a character takes "Taps My Head Three Times" from The Chosen playbook, they are deemed "not smart enough to be manipulated it" and can easily be interpreted as this.
* Interstitial: Our Hearts Intertwined is about playing characters who have lost or been separated from their worlds. Though considering the entire premise is about characters travelling to worlds other than their own, anyone could fall into this.
* Interstitial: Our Hearts Intertwined is all about being cruel and manipulating others, but since it's a playbook, any player could take up that role.
* Interstitial: Our Hearts Intertwined is designed to facilitate these, as one can imagine from the actual play described in the podcasts folder above. The mission statement is to play as existing characters, throw them together, and take them to worlds contradictory to their own.
* Interstitial: Our Hearts Intertwined lets you play as one, and even induct additional characters into the hive as you advance.
* Interstitial: Our Hearts Intertwined: Light Links with other players are this mechanically, as the represent friendship and romantic relationships with others, and any move that uses them draws on this power. The Chosen and The Friend are based around this even more than others.
* Interstitial: Our Hearts Intertwined players using The Anachronism playbook can have this as their motivation, especially if they use the move "This Is Not Inevitable", which allows them to stop an ally from dying on a full success.
* Interstitial: Our Hearts Intertwined relies on this to survive - if it loses all its Links, which represent one's memories of another character - then everyone forgets about them and they cease to exist.
* Interstitial: Our Hearts Intertwined: The Amalgam can incorporate other characters into their system as they progress. Those who take the "Equal and Opposite" move also have a rival who is the fusion of the rivals of all the Amalgam's hearts.
* Intertrack (Mexico City, then Cuernavaca. Merged with Doblaje Paris.)
* Intertwined Fingers: Two people lock fingers with each other, showing that they're in love.
* Intervening in the internal politics of the Goa'uld System Lords has frequently backfired, causing a consolidation of power where before there were fragments and internal fighting.
* Intervention — the "interviewees" for the "documentary" are usually so stoned that they don't see what's coming, or to remember seeing previous episodes on television. (And that's if the person isn't already homeless or hasn't already sold the TV for drug money.)
* Interventions, when Nikki informs Willow that Sylar is potentially more powerful than Peter; Spike immediately slams his head against the steering wheel at that news as he speculates on just how screwed they are facing someone that powerful.
* Intervention" that Kelly played Xander for his fight scene. He went on to be Nicholas's stand-in throughout the rest of the series.
* Intervention, the crash landing alien spaceship version is used. When real aliens visit the site on the centennial of the event, it is widely believed to be a hoax.
* Intervention", when Spike gets himself a robot that looks like Buffy, because he can't get the real one to like him, this is the Scoobies reaction.
* Intervention", when Spike gets the Buffybot from Warren to use as a sex toy, Tara ultimately decides to tell Dawn that he made it with the intent to play checkers with it. Dawn, of course, isn't fooled for a second.

* interview. Carver invented a character for the sake of the story, and the invented character has gone on to be included in subsequent biographies of Chekhov!
* interview, Chris Hemsworth referenced this when speaking about their relationship in the sequel, as well as what it was throughout the first movie.
* interview, considering he was stripped and scrubbed down afterwards, he could not have survived being flung several hundred yards in the air in a metal box.
* interviewed by Vanity Fair a few years later. While he was surprised by the reaction, he thought it was cool to have garnered such a response.
* interviewed here on the character in preparation for the Arisia 2016 performances.
* Interviewer: "What does 'Help Me Make It Through The Night' mean to you now?"
* interview fan, and in said interview he also points out that "the original Japanese versions will always be there for them to enjoy and, despite what they believe, no one can ever take that away."
* Interviewing Leather focuses primarily on the interview of the supervillainess rather than seeing her in action.
* Interviewing Leather is a short story about a freelance writer for a music magazine who is sent to interview a supervillain.
* Interviewing Leather, when Todd Chapman is exploring the scenes of Dynamo Girl's heroics, he mentions seeing the city councilman she caught a bullet for.
* Interviewing Trey), the supervillain Jack O'Knaves mentions how his parents were killed right in front of him.
* interview, in response to being asked a leading question about whether she would compromise herself for the sake of a relationship.
* interview meanwhile references various characters from the previous games through tv shows, ads and the occasional NPC conversation.
* interview on December 30, 2014, who said that he was partly responsible and has stated that he's not fond of the film:
* interview revealed that Freeza and King Cold are mutants among their own race, hence why they are exceptionally strong compared to the vast majority of them. In the manga proper, the Ginyu Force are also confirmed mutants.
* interview seem to be related to Yoko trolling, whether it's his managers or the readers.
* Interviews with Monster Girls, and goes to great lengths to avoid seducing anyone.
* Interviews with Monster Girls are actually humans born with genetic mutations that cause them to exhibit traits of the monsters found in folklore.
* Interviews with Monster Girls, both Machi and Satou find Takahashi's muscular and imposing physique to be absolutely ravishing. All of the monster girls enjoy being hugged by him, since it offers an opportunity to feel his muscles.
* Interviews with Monster Girls does this after drinking too much juice.
* Interviews with Monster Girls features a Dullahan schoolgirl known as Machi who carries her head separately from her body.
* Interviews with Monster Girls has the succubus Sakie Satou, who falls for Tetsuo Takahashi. This is because Tetsuo is one of the few males to actually be partially resistant to her succubus charms, which are always in effect. Because of her attraction towards him, she even tries to be sexier around him to win him over.
* Interviews with Monster Girls. In-series, they prefer the term "demi".
* Interviews with Monster Girls. Kyouko and Tetsuo-sensei eventually come to the conclusion that pre-modern dullahans probably gained the reputation because if they dropped their head while crossing running water they'd be pretty screwed.
* Interviews with Monster Girls, Sakie, the succubus math teacher falls for biology teacher Tetsuo when he doesn't display any lust at all after direct physical contact with her. Later she learns that he was just trying not to let it show to avoid making her feel awkward, but by then she's already head over heels.
* Interviews with Monster Girls, since she attempts to tone down her beauty by wearing very baggy clothes and even then is still considered a world-class beauty.
* Interviews with Monster Girls society, so that supports for Demi-humans is considered social welfare, and any crime performed by them are handled in the human justice system. To begin with, the government rations blood to vampires.

* Interviews with Monster Girls, Takahashi sees a photo of Hikari at night, noticing that her eyes flash like animals' ones, and explains her why they do this. Several animals have a membrane in the back of their eyes that reflects back the light, and this is shown with an animation of super-deformed smiling Hikari faces bouncing against said membrane. Hikari means "light" in Japanese.
* Interviews with Monster Girls, the demi-humans can be called this, being humans born with traits of fantastic creatures.
* Interviews with Monster Girls when she almost drops her head out of carelessness and downplays the accident. He later apologizes for it.
* interview that he needs to write down his entire schedule for the day in a notebook, with a typical entry reading something like "Rise 5.30, breakfast 6.30, piano 8.30". He even ticks all the items off and makes a new list at the end of the day.
* interview that quickly went viral for why he wasn't the most respected journalist at CNN.
* Interview with a Vampire. Wracked with guilt over his own recent transformation, Louis is wandering the backstreets alone when he finds a little girl who has just been made an orphan by the plague. Desperate with hunger, and thinking he can perhaps grant her the mercy of a quick death rather than catching the plague or starving to death on her own, he feeds and takes her to the brink of death. Lestat then pops in and, deciding it would be fun to have an eternal vampire daughter (not to mention something/someone to help bind Louis to him), he turns her. Louis spends years (if not decades) blaming himself for taking her mortal life, and while Claudia forgives him (she sees vampires as predators and thus has no moral problem with him having killed a human girl), she comes to hate her other "father" Lestat for making her an eternal child.
* interview with MPAA chairwoman Joan Graves, the defunct distributor Trimark Pictures (then known as Vidmark) aimed for an R rating for all their direct-to-video releases in the 1990s, and as such would often resubmit them to the MPAA with added F-bombs.
* Interview with the Vampire addresses this matter by saying that vampires don't cross running water because they're territorial and streams often serve as natural boundaries for hunting territory.
* Interview with the Vampire) as seen by the protagonist of the sequel in question.
* Interview with the Vampire, Cruise was placed on an elevated platform in some scenes, interacting with 5'11" Brad Pitt and other actors playing vampires.
* Interview with the Vampire. Daniel, however, becomes so enamoured with the idea of living forever as a supernatural being that he asks Louis to make him a vampire. Predictably (and understandably), Louis flips out.
* Interview with the Vampire for not getting the point of his story, then drops him to the floor.
* Interview with the Vampire had visible veins on their faces, too, but that was as much due to their creepily transparent porcelain white skin as it was to their veins being full of freshly drunk blood.
* Interview with the Vampire It also turned Armand into this, where he was a cherubic young redhead (though no less creepy) in the books.
* Interview with the Vampire laments that he can remember the last sunrise he ever saw on the day he was turned in all its vivid detail, but can't seem to remember any sunrise before it.
* Interview with the Vampire, Lestat turns on the radio at the end to start the end credits music. Naturally, it's "Sympathy for the Devil".
* Interview with the Vampire. Louis stands in a darkened room with his human interviewer and tells him, very calmly and very thoroughly, that he is going to step across the room and turn on the light. The man is baffled, wondering what the big deal is. When Louis moves, at a speed he later assures the man is nowhere near his top speed and in turn nowhere near the speeds of many other vampires, it appears to human perception that Louis' arm grew to incredible lengths to reach the light switch and turn it on, while to Louis, he very deliberately reached out his arm, walked across the room, turned on the switch, and walked back to where he had been standing.

* Interview with the Vampire nature, but after a moment of shock, Daniel simply rationalises that away. Eventually, he is forced to use superspeed to drive the point in.
* Interview with the Vampire, particularly when Louis' manor is on fire.
* Interview with the Vampire, perhaps the only actually evil vampire we meet.
* Interview with the Vampire starts as an innocent girl, but when turned to a vampire she gradually becomes more jaded and evil while retaining the appearance of a child.
* Interview with the Vampire) the book has been published to the world. Then Lestat himself took over that custom and started writing his adventures, with each successive book referencing the former one.
* Interview with the Vampire. They didn't...and the movie went on to be a commercial success (it made $223.7 million against a budget of $60 million), was generally well-received critically, and was nominated for a bunch of awards.
* Interview with the Vampire while calling on other vampires to do so as well.
* Intervision Song Contest per se, but rather, one of Poland's biggest music festivals.
* InterWorld and Michael Reaves, takes place in a continuum of parallel universes, with a purely scientific society at one far end and a purely magical counterpart at the other fighting over the totality of existence.
* InterWorld features a multiverse organized as an arc, with the worlds on one side being ones where magic is in control, and worlds on the other where science is the dominant paradigm. Each end is ruled by a multiplanar empire, one representing Magic and one representing Science, which are both trying to take over the entire multiverse. There is a third organization, made up of different versions of the main character, who fight both sides and have the ability to travel freely between worlds, who move about the center of the arc.
* InterWorld, the protagonists can travel through universes. One particular line is "I went for a walk. Then I went for a Walk."
* In "Teso dos Bichos", the cat scare is the actual plot (they might be possessed by a jaguar spirit, you see).
* In "Testing, Testing, 1,2,3", Rainbow Dash accurately describes Twilight's tendency to "get all freaked out about tests".
* In "Texan Apocalypse", World War III happened when the Cuban Missile Crisis went nuclear. Unfortunately, the Soviets were unaware the US had something like
* In "Texas Showdown", Able Team are sent to infiltrate a mercenary army after two previous attempts resulted in the agent's deaths. Carl Lyons says the
* In Texas the 1824 flag and the famous "come and take it" flag are gaining popularity as a non-racist alternative to the use of the confederate flag to represent southern pride and other anti-centralist values.
* In "Texas Tom", cowboy Tom plays the guitar and "sings" to a very pretty kitty cat.
* In Thailand, and many other countries/cultures heavily influenced by
* In "Thanks a Lot, Binky", after professional wrestler Slam Wilson (AKA Uncle Slam) easily defeats his opponent, General Mayhem, Slam further humiliates Mayhem by stripping off Mayhem's clothes and diapering him — all on national television!
* In "Thanks for the Memory", the characters wake up four days after the opening scene with no memories of these days, a half-finished jigsaw completed and two of the characters with broken legs.
* In "Thanksgiving," Sgt. Renzulli is revealed to be betting on horses on the side, and owes about $10,000 to his bookie. After hearing about it from Jamie, Frank bails Renzulli out but makes clear it's a one-time offer.
* In Thanos Quest, the Elder of the Universe known as the Champion was portrayed this way. Many fans consider this to be bad writing, as he was previously portrayed as the most skilled martial artist in the universe, having mastered fighting styles from all over the cosmos and possessing billions of years of experience.

* In that animated adaptation, Mr. Jones dies after setting explosives in the windmill, because
* in that both versions of the disease are transmitted by eating infected corpses.
* In that case how they successfully decelerate Starbug to land on any of those planets and then accelerate to get back to Red Dwarf is another issue...
* In that case, the problem is also that the people searching for them have sensors that will detect carbon dioxide being breathed out of the reeds. So Kevyn has Schlock lay over them like the
* . In that chapter, Molly and Arthur Weasley organize a torch and pitchfork mob of witches and wizards to pay a visit to Harry's abusive relatives.
* In that episode, and its companion piece "Games Ponies Play", he's not invited back to the empire
* in that episode and without training, while in heat. There's a lot wrong here, starting with the fact that estrous is an immediate disqualification from dog shows. The idea that an unevenly hocked dog with no prior experience, an amateur handler and a disqualifying (as well as obvious and terribly disruptive to the other dogs) medical condition could win any sort of legitimate major dog show is as accurate as saying Carrie Bradshaw could enlist and play for the NFL. The only thing remotely justifying about it is that the judge was enamored with the handler- but even that wouldn't have helped her get all the way to the show ring.
* In that exact same episode/chapter of the light novel, there's a really steamy, passionate scene where Princess Henrietta
* in that fateful game of tag rhetorically asks if he should propose to Lum... only for the last part of the conversation to be picked up via microphone and overheard by Lum.
* In that HSBC ad, a woman ran away from a date's home, because of all the trophies of animals. And also because she believed that the mother was stuffed too.
* In "That Old Black Magic," before Timmy was old enough to go to the exciting amusement park Adrenaland, his parents took him to Escalator Land, an amusement park that just consisted of an escalator. Timmy was bored, but his parents were thrilled. At the end of the episode,
* In that or another piece, Jaffee has "if censors had their way." Some older men are sitting around talking, one says "I played poker last night and was dealt a royal
* ...In That Order: A list of horrific things ends with "and in that order".
* in that Otto's divorced father marries Ana's widowed mother first when the two children are just ten years old. Then, as they are living together in the same house, a teen romance gradually develops between Ana and Otto into a full-blown sexual relationship which, however, they manage to keep completely secret from their parents/stepparents to the end. Curiously, the possibility that the relationship between two opposite-sex stepsiblings could ever go beyond familial love never does seem to occur to either of their parents/stepparents or much of anyone else, which is why the two are able to conceal their nightly liaisons from them so easily.
* In that particular example, much is made of the fact that he's got next to no poverty-level survival skills, having been trained nearly from birth to be a megabusinessman. It's only after his parents are forced to cough up
* (in that particular way, that is). He records a lengthy lecture she gave him on what would happen if she let him check and he found out he was wrong, namely that he wouldn't be able to stop loving her and would come up with all kinds of arguments about male homosexuality being purer and more intellectual than heterosexuality, citing historical examples, until he wore her down — and he pretty much admits it. He also continues calling her Bellino (her masculine alias) interchangeably with Teresa (her real name) in the narrative for some time after revealing her actual gender; make of that what you will.
* in that profession, so if you run into a man in Lancre whose name is, say, Sam Cooper, you can be certain that, whatever his job actually is, it will have absolutely nothing to do with barrels.
* In "that Purple Girl": Penn Lays eyes on the titular princess and imagines himself doing a

* In that same area, rails that aren't even ankle-high stop you from jumping off of a conveyor belt even though you did a knee-high jump to get on it in the first place & will do another one to get off.
* In that same cartoon at the start, the goat tells the projectionist to run the film backwards so he can re-examine the title card.
* In that same episode, another juror, when asked to state his occupation, claimed to be "between jobs". Doof thought he said that to get out of jury duty and that it wouldn't work. He
* In that same episode ("Brief Candle"), all of the inhabiants of the planet aged at over 200 times that of normal humans as they life span was only 100 days.
* In that same episode, it shows the gang not paying attention to the half-time show from a past Super Bowl, since it's never exciting; besides, then it was only
* In that same episode, it's revealed that the misunderstanding is over Frank showing Earl a picture of Billie. The audience never sees the picture, but the picture is described in detail. Frank bought Billie a tattoo (as well as a promise
* In that same episode, Lovejoy works with an antiques specialist who embodies several Jewish stereotypes, including
* In that same episode, Sean says that for once, he doesn't feel space-sick. Immediately after saying this, he starts to feel sick (complete with
* In that same episode, we have this exchange between Barda and Scott's assistant Oberon:
* In that same episode, when various fish are accidentally burned, they become photographs of fish sticks.
* In that same mirror universe episode, Sisko orders a run at the aforementioned Klingon juggernaut, which mirror-O'Brien dubs "pattern suicide".
* In that same season, Hanna-Barbera was developing a show with the title "Stop That Pigeon," which featured a jelly-bellied Red Baronesque figure and a dachshund with pilot's goggles. It evolved into
* In that same storyline another character said: "It only looks like magic if you can't do the math."
* In that same story, Namor founds a new Cabal, consisting of himself, Thanos, Corvus Glaive, Proxima Midnight, Maximus the Mad, Black Swan and an alternate universe's Terrax. They assembled to deal with the the omniversal destruction problem, and were actually doing better than the Illuminati, though only because nobody on the team was bothered by murdering billions of people on a regular basis (in fact, most of the group liked it).
* in that same timeline Sayaka Miki chops off the head of the witch Elsa Maria with her sword. And then she
* In that same vein, Alan Burnett revealed that he once wrote an episode in
* In "That Sinking Feeling", Baljeet and his childhood friend Mishti, in a flashback from before she "
* In "That Sinking Feeling", Candace expresses a wish that Jeremy was more romantic: "Like
* In "That Sinking Feeling" when SpongeBob and Patrick's lawns are separated because of Squidward drawing a border around his, Patrick attempts to mail himself to SpongeBob. He squeezes himself into the mailbox, then it tips over and explodes.
* In that situation, though, it's because nobody on the ship was paying attention—presumably if Wash was in the pilot's seat instead of playing...
* In "That's Lobstertainment!", Fry, having been trapped in a tar pit for hours with Leela, wants to eat his shoe. When Leela figures a way out, he still suggests having shoe and proceeds to eat it.
* In "That's Lobstertainment!", there is a Parallel Universal Studios side-by-side with the Universal Studios.
* In "That's Lobstertainment", the searchlights are used to cause plane crashes so they can be filmed for use in their movies.
* In "That's One Gigantic Pumpkin, Jet Propulsion!", when Jet and Sydney catch him spying on them, he says he has to go water his dumplings. Later, when he's with Lillian and Mindy, he says that he has to go do something completely different from what they're talking about.

* In "That's the Way the Money Goes" by M, Robin Scott himself appears to be in a luxury car as a meter maid comes to ticket it. The "car" slips away, revealing the M frontman to be sitting instead on
* In "That Stinking Feeling", Spinelli gets her first crush. The others make fun of her for being a "boy lover".
* in that the uniform style is described as quite old and used by both the Republic Navy, from which the Imperial Navy inherited it, and many planetary security forces, many of which were disbanded with the Rebels buying or stealing their uniforms and weapons-or just belonging to surviving planetary defense forces whose worlds support the Rebellion.
* In that vein, according to Amoridere, Toki is this to a degree in that she sometimes tosses traffic/driving laws to the side and does what she wants, which often involves doing U-turns, doughnuts, and driving in reverse, all mostly occurring on a freeway and/or in heavy traffic, along with driving on top of other cars, doubly so when she wants to go somewhere fast. She also drives while doing something else, like changing diapers, for example. Unlike the aforementioned Brownie, she doesn't seem to get any sort of punishment for that.
* In that vein, most of the "theme park" Zones in the entirety of the series invoke this both in-game and during play; all of them... except for
* In that vein we also have Jiraiya, who is the strongest of all three Sannin, could kill three paths of Pain (up until then, that was practically impossible), permanently kill one path, and was the master to Naruto himself. Not only that,
* in that very issue's machine for contacting the afterlife, which everyone present knows about.
* In "That Which Redeems", there's a non-magical example that also confusingly combines it with
* In the 100th episode, "My Name Is Mac Taylor," a grieving boyfriend turned murderer tries
* In the 100th Spider-Man anniversary issue, in fact an issue only depicting what a 100th anniversary story would be like, Venom has been modified to be able to control and travel through electronics.
* In "The 101% Solution", Tanner gets -1% on his math exam, despite Templeton telling him this grade is a mathematical impossibility.
* In the 10th century, the main language of Scotland was Scots Gaelic. Despite this, the main characters of
* In the 10th movie, he is also the only of the crew to remain conscious after being
* In the 11th American Season, four previous players were invited as "guests" to give their insight on the current game being played. Danielle stated that she wanted
* In the 11th book, General Mat uses a small group of mounted scouts to lure a legion of cavalry into a defensive position maned by crossbow men. Then, once they're committed, he hits the enemy from behind with his own cavalry. It's the only stand-up fight he offers during an incredibly successful guerrilla campaign, and he completely
* In the 11th chapter of Bearquarter's Toy Story 2, Mabel and Sherman share a tearful argument before Jimmy delivers a
* In the 12/18/2011 strip of "Retail," employee Val crowd surfs through the line of customers to get to the register.
* In the 1220s and 1230s, Hungary had a dire problem with a nomad incursion, the Cumans. Turned out the Cumans were themselves
* In the 12th one, a guy gets stabbed with a knife. His reaction? "A knife! My favorite!"
* In the 1380 CE Battle of Kulikovo, both Russian and an unspecified Tatar Khanate's armies put forth a
* In the "138th Episode Spectacular", Troy McClure describes the Simpsons as "America's favourite
* In the 13th movie, Zorua, when asked who "Meema (what he calls his mother)" is, replies with "Meema is Meema." Nobody even tries to point out how unhelpful this answer is.

* In the 1.3 update, various monsters based on horror monsters now appear, such as
* In the 14th chapter, Valerie Payne ends up by mistake in Shendu's solitary cell in Hollowland's penitentiary. He convinces her to stay with him and not venture in the main cell block, reasoning that her chances to leave the prison healthy and sane are better with him (
* In the 1500s, the Portuguese introduced modern cannons and arquebuses. These were quickly reverse-engineered and popularized in Japan, changing the way warfare was done there forever. They even copied Spanish galleons in the early 1600s, but these designs were
* In the 16th century, a naval arms race prompted Mediterranean navies to switch from free, volunteer oarsmen to almost all
* In the 16th chapter, Delilah Rangler comes to Grace's property in order to report Jake her progress on the assignment he has given her. Beans threatens her with a gun, only for the bobcat to whip out her revolver and point it back at Beans until Jake arrives.
* In the 1700s, Marie Camargo, who was one of the first star ballerinas, caused quite a stir when she shortened her skirts a few inches to reveal her ankles. She did it in order to show off her fancy footwork, but the
* In the 17th episode of season 5 "Brotherhooves Social" there is a reverse version with one of the judges of the Sisterhooves Social event, when he realizes Orchard Blossom is really
* In the 1800s, there was a Mexican politician by the name of Antonio de Padua María Severino López de Santa Anna y Pérez de Lebrón, better known as Antonio López de Santa Anna, President of Mexico and "
* In the 18th century, there was a Turkish fad (some of you may remember it from
* In the 18th century there were Molly Houses. Taverns that were notorious for housing men who would partake in orgies, cross dressing, and gay marriages. Though how much of this
* In the 18th episode of season 2 Elena legally gets ownership of the Salvatore house. The brothers even have to stand outside while the paperwork is filed.
* In the 1920's and 1930's, as aircraft grew larger and governments began to panic over the possibility of serious aerial bombing by bomber fleets,
* In the 1920's, General Motors launched their Companion Make Program which introduced smaller divisions within Oakland, Oldsmobile, Buick, and Cadillac to close price gaps between the makes. The companion makes all ended up failing... except for Oakland's: Pontiac, which outlasted Oakland by seventy-five years and was only chosen over Buick for shutdown because
* In the 1920s, pink was deemed more appropriate for boys due to its close associations with red. Blue was assigned to girls since it was more “delicate and dainty” and had close ties to the imagery of the Virgin Mary. This practice continued until the 1940s, when the gender colors were reversed and became the stereotypes that we are still familiar with today.
* In the 1920s, the Gershwin song "The Man I Love" was cut from two different musicals in their pre-Broadway tryouts, and was ultimately written out of a third show which reached Broadway after a three-year production hiatus. This didn't stop the song from becoming a
* In the 1920s, this trope received a major subversion in mainstream fashion from which it didn't fully recover for decades. As part of the radical new look of that decade, bobbed hair, often worn jaw-length or shorter, became all the rage. At first very daring, it quickly became so popular that within a few years, outside certain cultures and demographics, most women had bobbed hair. Long hair continued to be worn and appreciated by some
* In the 1920's World Chess Champion Jose Raul Capablanca was unbeatable. In one particular 8 year span, he never suffered a single loss. His style defined coolness and precision at that time. He was challenged by Alexander Alekhin, a man who never won against him. Alekhin's style was fiery and risk loving, or in other words, he was easy prey for Capablanca. In 1926, Capablanca's cool and precise style sat down to meet Alekhin's—cool and precise style! In the months preceding the match, Alekhin completely analyzed and dissected Capablanca's style (such preparation was unheard of during that time). He determined that the only way to win was to out-Capablanca Capablanca. He tightly controlled his aggressive and risky tendencies. He even agreed to easy draws because that was how Capablanca would play that position. It worked. Alekhin became the next World Chess Champion.

* In the 1929 song "I Got a Code in My Doze," the singer has a cold and sings, "
* In the 1930s and 1940s, not only did the top women's wrestlers draw just as much and sometimes more than their male counterparts in the USA, but the very best were considered equals. Over the course of five years, the top woman draw in the country, Mildred Burke, wrestled 200 men and only lost to one of them. After Mildred Burke and promoter Billy Wolfe got divorced though, Wolfe got Burke banned from the
* In the 1930's and '40's, Lily Pons portrayed the title role of Delibes'
* In the 1930s, Australian radio broadcasts of cricket overseas weren't actually done from the ground. The commentary was based on ball by ball telegraphs, and sound effects such as canned applause and an artificial bat-on-ball sound were used. The trope didn't come into play because listeners knew the difference from having listened to local games; "synthetic broadcasts", as they were known, were abandoned in 1938 when shortwave reception had improved enough that the action could be delivered directly.
* In the 1930s every animation studio tried to copy Disney, often ending in
* In the 1930s, Guy Bolton wrote several comedies for the London stage as Stephen Powys, a pseudonym officially registered to his wife for tax reasons. The postwar production
* In the 1930s, Kirsten Flagstad and Lauritz Melchior also became household names for their joint performances of Wagner's music dramas.
* In the 1930s, Le Corbusier designed and lobbied for his 'Plan for Algiers' which included a city-spanning concrete motorway running across the roof of a viaduct-like megastructure that would house 180,000 residents. He never convinced anyone to go ahead with the idea.
* In the 1930's, the Met's next biggest box-office combo was Norwegian soprano Kirsten Flagstad and Danish tenor Lauritz Melchior, who sang Wagner's music dramas together so frequently that both became household names, an honor rarely accorded to Wagnerian singers at the time.
* In the 1930s, the Soviet Union experimented with mounting rockets on tanks, producing
* In the 1935 jazz standard "The Music Goes Round and Round", written by Ed Farley and Mike Riley, the lyrics actually say "the music goes
* In the 1939 animated short “Breakfast Pals”, the first advertisement to feature
* In the 1940s, American sinologist Homer H. Dubs elaborated the hypothesis that the Chinese village of Liqian was founded by Roman survivors of the Battle of Carrhae, taken east by the Parthians and then captured again by the Chinese at the Battle of Zhizhi in modern Kazakhstan, some two decades later. This idea rested on supposed Caucasian features of the inhabitants, the similarity between the name Liqian and the word Legion, and a mention in a Chinese chronicle of the capture of enemy soldiers in a "fish scale-like formation" at Zhizhi, that Dubs interpreted as a description of the Roman Testudo. Dubs' hypothesis has not been confirmed by either archaeology or genetics studies done in Liqian.
* In the 1940s and 50s, angel gimmicks were common in North American wrestling. These tended to be very muscular short men with an abnormal feature of some kind who could rend er opponents unconscious with a palm strike, * in the 1940s and that favoring technophile solutions over subsidizing peasants in order to fundamentally fight hunger would not have been a too uncommon mindset at such a time.
* In the 1940's George O. Smith wrote a number of stories about Venus Equilateral Relay Station. Despite suffering from
* In the 1940s, Marie Wilson often portrayed this trope (e.g., the Ann Sheridan/Dennis Morgan musical "Shine On, Harvest Moon").

* In the 1940s, the Kay Kaiser Orchestra recorded a song called "The Bad Humor Man".
* In the 1944 original, Twain is called away by Tom Sawyer and Huckleberry Finn, and they walk down the road to heaven together while Halley's Comet zooms by overhead.
* In the 1946 short story "A Logic Named Joe" by Murray Leinster, the network of "logics" (i.e. computers) suddenly develops greatly enhanced information processing abilities and starts providing information on everything from how to cure hangovers to how to commit
* In the 1950 novelty song "The Thing", the narrator finds a box, which has something in it that scares and disgusts everybody. When the lyrics call for it to be named, the vocals simply pause for three drum beats.
* In the 1950s, French paratroops needed anti-tank firepower that could be both launched with the soldiers and still keep up with them on land. The need was filled by the
* In the 1950s in the UK, a train of empty coaches was approaching its destination when the driver realised the hard way that the couplings were connected, but not the brake pipes. Nobody was injured, but the damage bill was probably quite expensive.
* In the 1950s, Judy Glover was so popular that when Buddy Lee found a woman who looked like her, she was hired with the ring name Judy Grable on the hopes fans would think Grable
* In the 1950's juvenile novels by Ivan Southall starring Australian
* In the 1950s, NWA LA introduced the "Beat The Champ" Television Title, with the added stipulation of the current "champion" taking on randomly selected challengers for five weeks, having to pay the former champion 100 USD if he failed.
* In the 1950s short story "Business as Usual in Times of Transition" a department store trying to adapt to the sudden introduction of
* In the 1950s the British manufacturer of Coventry-Climax engines discovered the hard way that "Climax" in German has only
* In the 1950's, the Orion Project studied different ways of directing nuclear explosions. Certain configurations do produce planar outflows of plasma (consider a column of high-density gas in a vacuum. It can only expand towards the sides).
* In the 1950s, the Univac I computer executed operations so slowly that the engineers made a different "beep" occur for every type of instruction. This allowed programmers to tell, for instance, if the machine was executing a long loop, had stalled, etc. Only the Univac I did this, it was used almost exclusively in a back room at the U.S. Census bureau, and the beeping computer was quickly retired when faster computers were built in the late 50s. However, when the machine was new, the marvelous "artificial brain" was demonstrated for TV news and documentaries. The "beep-beep-boop" sound then got a life of its own because there wasn't really anything else in a TV computer to tell the audience that the computer was doing anything. Soon, all TV computers had to produce a series of beeps of various tones. The original Star Trek avoided this by having the computer's voice say "working..." in a monotone instead of beeping, but the show then did it anyway as the sound of an old punch-card tabulating machine was dubbed in after the computer voice. The beeping sound was mandatory in TV-show computers well into the 80s, until the trope happened in reverse. The common man began using home computers and the pointless, sourceless beeps came to be properly seen as idiotic.
* In the 1951 short story "Roll Out The Rolov!" by Christopher Anvil, a
* In the 1953 movie, the waves of soldiers are depicted as being used as a "heroic sacrifice" which while at best a distraction, is giving the scientists time to figure out how to stop the Martians. The military's top scientists
* In the 1954 short '"Dog Pounded'', Sylvester tries to retrieve Tweety from a dog pound by
* In the 1960s, filming was nearly year-round, so characters — including the Doctor — were often written out of episodes to give the actors a holiday.
* In the 1960 short story "Egocentric Orbit" by John Cory, the first men launched into space withdraw into themselves and refuse to talk to anyone, such is the ego-boosting effect of seeing the entire world revolve around them.

* In the 1960s, Jack Pfefer's heavy use of this trope nearly killed off the Chicago territory when he was the promoter. He was largely responsible for launching the career of
* In the 1960s, the Italian football/soccer team AC Milan had an iconic defender who captained the team named Cesare Maldini. A few decades later, his son Paolo Maldini ended up playing the same role for Milan in the 1990s and 2000s.
* In the 1960s, the UK was invaded by Ignatius and Tony, the Borg Twins of Malta.
* In the 1968 Harvard-Yale game, Harvard got the ball back with less than four minutes left against undefeated and heavily favored Yale, trailing 29-13. What happened next? Harvard drove down the field, scoring a touchdown with 42 seconds left in the game. The two-point conversion made the score 29-21. Harvard got the ball back on an onside kick (expected onside kicks are recovered by the kicking team less than one of every five tries). A couple of plays later, as time expired, Harvard scored another touchdown. They then converted another two-point conversion to tie the game, which then ended. The next day's Harvard Crimson headline read
* In the 1970 episode "I.A.D.: The Receipt", two officers are accused of stealing $800 from the victim of a homicide by the victim's associate. Neither side can produce a receipt for the personal effects the officers took into evidence, including the money. Friday and Gannon, again, are sympathetic but professional.
* In the 1970's, after being decimated by whaling, (especially in the Antarctic), some thought that the blue whale had reached this state. Fortunately, there were more left alive than people thought, and their numbers are increasing.
* In the 1970's a group of Australian feminist activists set up the Elsie Refuge for domestic violence victims in Sydney, but were unable to get any government funding. Eventually the Minister of Social Welfare Bill Hayden turned up unannounced at the shelter, only to be curtly refused entry as no men were allowed on the premises, until the activists realised who he was and rushed out to bring him back (after Hayden talked to the women who'd taken shelter there, they did get their funding).
* In the 1970s in the UK, a female journalist who had been in a bedroom with a former Ugandan cabinet minister during a dinner party claimed they had been "discussing Uganda". The satirical magazine
* In the 1970's, Miss Clairol Hair Color made things very tricky for all productions of the show SOUTH PACIFIC, and they got to the point when Nellie sings "I'm Gonna Wash That Man Right Out Of My Hair" — because everyone in the audience was thinking, "wait, isn't it 'wash that GRAY right out of my hair'?"
* In the 1970s, radio station KOME in San Jose, CA (98.5 FM, now KUFX) had slogans which played with the sexual connotations of its call letters, such as "Don't touch that dial, it's got KOME on it!", "KOME all over your radio dial", "You've got KOME
* In the 1970s the idea of the Doctor travelling around wildly in space and time had been largely dropped in favour of earthbound stories thanks to the show's
* In the 1970s there was a children's book about a young girl who attracted friends from among the "popular" girls by carrying her witch aunt's book of spells and home remedies, which she
* In the 1970s, the Romanian government made efforts to attract a larger number of tourists from Western Europe as a source of hard currency. They naturally received inquiries about visiting the castle from
* In the 1970's, when the BBC, still smarting from the impact of pirate radio on its listening figures and jealous of any competition, sabotaged its principal (and only) pop radio competitor Radio Luxemburg by deliberately giving out the answers to the previous night's Fab 208 write-in competition during Radio One morning shows. Otherwise, it could do nothing at all about a rival station broadcasting in English and using English DJ's from another country entirely. (Later in the decade the BBC had to adopt other methods of sabotaging legalised commercial radio offering competition to its services.)
* In the 1970s, young heir John Paul Getty III got his ear cut off a la Electra King and sent to his grandfather as a proof of him being kidnapped. He was rescued in the end, but ended up drug-addicted and later comatose.

* In the 1970 World Cup, England goalkeeper Gordon Banks pulled off what has been acclaimed as perhaps the greatest save of all time. Playing Brazil, Banks initially dived to his right, caught wrong-footed by a striker called Pele. Pele, among many others, looked on in incredulous disbelief as Banks somehow changed direction in mid-air, rolling round as he dived, to get a fingertip to the ball and nudge it round a post for a corner.
* In the 1971 TV Movie "The Death of Me Yet" we're introduced to Doug McClure and Meg Foster as a young couple in a typical American town until he's "called up". It seems he's been drafted but
* In the 1974 Christmas special, "Jessica's First Christmas", Frank gets a job at the same firm as his neighbour Mr Jackson, who is already angry at Frank over the fact that his one-year-old daughter cries loudly every night. At one point, Frank finds Jackson's folded coat and thinks he sees something moving under it, so he puts a lit pipe under it to smoke out the "animal", setting fire to it, and then further ruining it by soaking it in water. When Jackson sees the damage done to his coat, he empties tea into the bag Frank is carrying... which turns out to be the head of the firm's bag.
* In the 1974 rough draft of "The Star Wars", the Starkillers (later "Skywalkers") were said to hail from the planet "Aquilae", and the movie began with them returning to their home planet to defend it from the Empire. Ponda Baba ("Walrus Man"), the tusked alien who accosts Luke at the Mos Eisley cantina, was later revealed to be an "Aqualish", one of several species hailing from the planet Ando.
* In the 1977 novel "The Adolescence of P-1", by Thomas J. Ryan, the protagonist writes a self-modifying hacking program and sets it loose (this is one of the earliest depictions of a computer virus/worm). Over time it grows in sophistication and becomes sentient, and goes looking for its creator. It has goals (primarily self-preservation) but no morality.
* In the 1978 Superman movie, the director decided to dub over the voice of the actor playing teenage Clark Kent with the voice of Christopher Reeve, suitably softened to sound younger. Many fans never noticed this awesome voice acting.
* In the 1980 heavyweight fight between Randall 'Tex' Cobb (who had one of the most durable chins in the history of boxing) and Earnie Shavers (widely regarded as the hardest puncher in heavyweight history) Cobb, who was not known for great offense, won the fight by simply
* In the 1980s, a local TV station in St. Joseph, Missouri used an (instrumental) clip from
* In the 1980s and 1990s, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch had Joe Pollack, who seemed to hate nearly every film that was released and came off as a bitter old man most of the time. He would especially pick apart films on small details (for example, he trashed
* In the 1980s, electronics superstore The Federated Group hired Shadoe Stevens to produce advertisements for them. Stevens went on to star as "Fred R. Rated" in over 1000 of the
* In the 1980s Lebanon's Hizbollah mounted a successful (eventually) resistance against Israeli invasion with financial and troop support from Iran.
* In the 1980s, Mothers Against Drunk Driving did a successful "think of the children" push against drunk driving and against drinking and purchasing alcohol by people under 21. It was so successful that it rarely comes up anymore: The mandated-for-highway-funding bans on drinking under 21 are now over 21 years old.
* In the 1980s, Smith's Crisps used to have TV adverts featuring little singing potatoes: "
* In the 1980's, the letters of the Beverley Swimming Pool sign started falling off, leading to the sign reading
* In the 1980s, there was a country music band from Muscle Shoals, Alabama called The Shooters. After they broke up in 1990, lead vocalist Walt Aldridge went on to become a songwriter and producer, while bassist Gary Baker became a collaborator of country-pop songwriter Frank J. Myers (who formerly played guitar for Eddy Raven, but left that role to pursue songwriting full-time), scoring big hits with John

Michael Montgomery's "I Swear" (later
* In the 1980s, the Southern Pacific Railroad was contemplating merging with the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railroad. The holding companies merged, and were so confident enough that the ICC would approve it, that they began repainting locomotives into a new unified "Southern Pacific Santa Fe" paint scheme that combined Southern Pacific's "Bloody Nose" Red with Santa Fe's "Yellowbonnet", including the letters SP or SF and an adjacent empty space for the other two (as SPSF, the reverse order of the holding company). Most nicknamed this the "Kodachrome" paint scheme since it resembled a box of Kodak camera film, a kind commonly used by railfans. The merger was opposed by the Justice Department in 1985 and denied in a 4–1 vote by the Interstate Commerce Commission on July 24, 1986, who ruled that such a merger included too many duplicate routes and was therefore monopolistic over west coast freight rail service. Unfortunately, many, many locomotives and cabooses had been repainted into Kodachrome by this time, and the initials SPSF were jokingly changed to "Shouldn't Paint So Fast" by railfans. These two railroads would end being merged in 1996 with other railroads in the West: Southern Pacific would be merged into the Union Pacific Railroad, while the Santa Fe was merged with Burlington Northern to create the Burlington Northern Santa Fe (more commonly known as simply the BNSF).
* In the 1980s, the US Air Force bought and installed a $7,000 coffee maker on a jet. The reason the coffee maker cost that much?
* In the 1980s, they used "Mack the Knife" with product-specific lyrics as "Mac Tonite" to promote longer operating hours. To drive the point home, the commercials featured a character also called "Mac Tonite", a lounge singer with a moon for a head.
* In the 1980s TOGO, the leading amusement ride and roller coaster designer in Japan, and operator of several theme parks in their native country, began to make a larger push to become an international leader in amusements and roller coaster design, capitalizing on the publicity of the installation of their brand new invention, the Stand-Up rollercoaster, in King's Island park near Cincinatti. After nearly two decades of moderate success internationally, including the construction of Shockwave at King's Dominion and Viper at Six Flags Great Adventure, their success ended with the construction of Windjammers Surf Racers at Knott's Berry Farm in 1997. Knott's had intended the ride, which was actually two looping wild mouse style coasters that were set to race each other, to replace the beloved-but-decaying Soap Box Derby Racers coaster, but almost immediately the park started experiencing issues with the ride, ranging everywhere from defective headrests that hurt riders, severe structural issues like misaligned track, and, most egregiously, a serious design flaw in the track layout that meant that, ironically, Windjammers was incapable of completing its run if it encountered even a small amount of wind. After trying and failing to save the ride, Knott's closed it down in 2000 and sued TOGO International. The backlash at the poorly designed ride and the ensuing legal battle killed TOGO as it once was, forcing it into bankruptcy. Today TOGO only exists as a company in Japan, mainly specializing in ride maintenance and parts supplies, not as a ride designer.
* In the 1980s Weetabix breakfast cereal was advertised in the United Kingdom by a group of wheat biscuits in white T-shirts, dungarees, and big boots. The faintly "London gangland" effect of this outfit emphasised the double meaning in the slogan "Make it neat wheat, mate. If you know what's good for you."
* In the 1980s, Wimbledon took on this mantle during an era when they were known as "the Crazy Gang". One opponent told the newspapers that he expected every team to have a hard man, but he'd never known a team to entirely consist of hard men.
* In the 1981 NFL season, the Baltimore Colts lost all but 2 of their 16 games. Who were those 2 wins against? The New England Patriots in week 1, and the Patriots again in the final week.
* In the 1982 version, Emily Brewster becomes the flamboyant and effeminate Rex Brewster.
* In the 1985 story arc where we see Marvin get his stuffed rabbit Floppet, it briefly floats away on a bunch of balloons. Marvin's dad Jeff chases the toy down and catches it after chasing it by car.

* In the 1986 Smythe Division Final, the Edmonton Oilers and Calgary Flames were tied 2-2 in the third period of Game 7 when defenseman Steve Smith skated out from behind his net and passed the puck off his own goalie's skate into the net. The Flames would go on to win the game 3-2 and series 4-3, denying the Oilers the chance to be champions for a third straight year.
* In the 1986 World Series the Boston Red Sox, leading the Series three games to two, led 5–3 going to the bottom of the 10th inning of Game 6, and were three outs from a championship. The first two New York Met batters made quick outs. The Shea Stadium scoreboard operator prematurely flashed the message
* In the 1988 NCAA Tournament Round of 32, Vanderbilt faced heavily favored Pittsburgh. Vanderbilt's Barry Goheen
* In the 1988 relaunch of the series, the pilot episode featured John DeLancie as an assassin who intentionally used Indy Ploys: he never chose how he'd kill his target until the very last moment, improvising his plans as he went along, specifically to not be predictable.
* In the 1988 World Series, Los Angeles Dodgers manager Tommy Lasorda knew that star slugger Kirk Gibson was too banged up to play in the field or run the bases; the only way he could be of any use to the team was to go to the plate and hit a home run. With the Dodgers trailing the Oakland Athletics by one run with two out in the bottom of the ninth inning of Game One, rather than send Gibson to the plate with a chance to tie the game, he sent utility player Mike Davis to the plate instead. After Davis worked a walk, Lasorda
* In the 1990’s radio spoof ‘’The X Fools’’, Agent Smoulder and Sulky discover the crop circles are being created by a secret conspiracy of English nerds armed with rulers and string who call themselves
* In the 1990’s, there was a series of ads for Kelloggs Smacks that pitted Dig’em Frog against a mean housecat named Kitty in a series of
* In the 1990s and early 2000s, multiple baseball stars used performance-enhancing drugs such as steroids in order to boost their statistics. For example, Mark McGwire (1998) and later Barry Bonds (2001) broke the season records for most home runs. It was an open secret that at least some of these high-performing athletes were utilizing banned chemical assistance to perform their feats, and while no one was exactly shouting "yay steroids!" in public, the audience's acceptance of their use and cheers of approval for their users amounted to a tacit endorsement. By January 2004, the MLB set rules to suspend players if they tested positive for PEDs. Originally a player would be suspended for up to a whole year after four offenses, but the rule was quickly changed to a lifetime ban after three offenses. In his 2005 autobiography
* In the 1990s, Brazilian actors Wendel Bezerra and Raquel Marinho voiced
* In the 1990s NOW Comics adaptations, the writers went so far as to
* In the 1990s, RTG licenced Mekton to a Japanese company to produce a
* In the 1990s, the Brazilian Ministry of Justice forbid sales of the
* In the 1990s, the Irish National Dairy Council produced a commercial in which one child asks another how many bones a body's got. The life-sized posing doll sitting next to them gets up to sing to them how a child's body has more bones than an adult's and that bones need calcium.
* In the 1990s, the major manufacturers of motorcycles at the time were trying to top themselves over who could make the fastest road-legal production motorcycle. This started with Kawasaki's Ninja ZX-11, then Honda's CBR1100XX Super Blackbird, before topping out at Suzuki's Hayabusa. Then at 2000 they all agreed to stop doing this in fear of government regulations being imposed on them. However, Italian manufacturers MV Agusta with their F4 R 312 and Ducati with their 1199 Panigale R made faster bikes in the late 2000s before being toppled by Kawasaki in 2014 with the Ninja H2R.
* In the 1990's the messages on Sweethearts candies were updated to things like "E-mail me".
* In the 1990s, there was an ad on the back of a magazine for Amazon.com's Spanish-language site, depicting the book cover "Cien anos de soledad" (Gabriel

García Márquez's
* In the 1990s, this became Metallo's power — his head couldn't just operate without a body, it could seize control of any machinery and turn it into a body. In the absence of convenient machines, it scuttled around on spider-legs.
* In the 1990s UK adverts for Coco Pops, Coco's gang included a male giraffe named Shorty and a female hippo named Hefty. The 2010 adverts feature a female giraffe and a male hippo (names unrevealed).
* In the 1992 election George H. W. Bush was talking to a group of unemployed citizens and read the lines out "Message: I care."
* In the 1992 Olympics, Rozalia Galiyeva of the Unified Team was pulled out of the all-around final in favor of Tatiana Gutsu, who had the ninth-highest score in qualifications but was initially bumped out of the final due to the (at the time) three-per-country rule because the team believed Gutsu, who was usually a strong competitor but had an off day in qualifications, had a better chance of medaling. Gutsu ended up winning gold.
* In the 1993 Canadian federal election, the Progressive Conservatives ran an ad that (at least in popular perception) was a scare campaign targeted at the Liberal leader Jean Chrétien's facial disfigurement caused by his Bell's palsy, suggesting he would be a national embarrassment in the office of Prime Minister because of it. The Tories went from 156 seats to 2 in that election. The ad lost them ten percentage points in one day as Chretien leapt at the opportunity to give a speech about being a little guy who was
* In the 1993 game, The gatling gun is the best all-around weapon, with only Lasers and Gauss being more powerful (but with limited ammunition), and becomes a staple of enemies during Atlantic Accelerator. However, kinetic bullets are completely negated by the Energy shield.
* In the 1994 Caribbean Cup qualification match between Barbados and Grenada, Barbados needed to win the match by two goals but were only leading by one (2-1) near the end of the match, so they purposely scored an own goal to force overtime.
* In the 1994 Olympics, figure skater Tonya Harding's ex-husband Jeff Gillooly and bodyguard Shawn Eckhardt ordered an attack on Nancy Kerrigan, another skater and Harding's biggest competition. After the news broke,
* In the 1997 direct-to-video "Big Bird Gets Lost", Maria helps Big Bird remember both her (555-1234), and Granny Bird's (555-6789) phone numbers.
* In the 1997 MLB season, the Florida Marlins, a young expansion franchise that was only playing their fifth season in their history would go on a hot streak in the postseason, upsetting the "Team of the 90s'" Atlanta Braves team in the NLCS. In Game 7 of the World Series, a Latino player for the Marlins (Edgar Renteria) would hit a base hit with the bases loaded into shallow center to give the Marlins their first World Series. Four years later, the Arizona Diamondbacks, an even younger team, playing only their fourth season, would go on a hot streak in the postseason, defeating the Braves in the NLCS. In Game 7 of the World Series, a part-Latino player for the Marlins (Luis Gonzalez), would hit a base it with the bases loaded into shallow center to give the Diamondbacks their first World Series.
* In the 1997 reunion movie (one which fans consider canon to the original series), Boss Hogg had died several years earlier; this was brought out in a scene where Sheriff Rosco P. Coltrane – by this time Boss's successor as county commissioner – reflects on and mourns Boss's passing. This reflects the real-life death of Sorrell Booke in 1994, more than two years before the reunion movie was filmed.
* In the 1998 ad for Hostess cup cakes, a boy torments a doll by fake-feeding it a cup cake toy. The doll angrily comes to life demanding to get a cup cake with a creamy filling.
* In the 1998 NFC Championship Game between the Minnesota Vikings and Atlanta Falcons. Late in the game, Vikings ahead by 7, they bring out Gary Anderson, the only kicker to make every field goal and extra point during the regular season. But he missed a routine 38-yard field goal wide left, allowing the Falcons to get a touchdown to tie the game in the final 2:07. Atlanta promptly won in overtime.
* In the 1999 episode "Sunday, Cruddy Sunday", a TV screen shows a slightly surreal ad in which a car pulls up at a service station somewhere in the middle of the desert. Then the doors of the car open, and loud rock music blasts as a group of....well, whores start shimmying and vamping for the camera. Only then does the ad reveal that one of the girls is wearing a crucifix, and a lascivious male announcer states: "The Catholic Church. We've made a few...changes." It's then cut immediately to the Simpsons' living room, where Lisa notes: "These Super Bowl ads get weirder every year."

* In the 1999 NFL season, the Buffalo Bills started Doug Flutie who had returned to the NFL after a successful career in Canada. Coupled with a strong defense, Flutie had clinched a playoff berth before the last game was played, and his backup Rob Johnson played an excellent game to close out the season. The following week, Johnson remained the starter (though no one will take credit for that decision) and lost to Tennessee on one of the biggest miracle plays in NFL history. To double the sting, the Bills would not make the playoffs again until the 2017 season, eighteen years later. It's still a sore enough subject to start arguments in a Buffalo bar.
* In the 19th and 20th centuries it was the Russian nobility and upper classes, and not the Russian middle-classes or industrial workers, that made up most of the country's political radicals and dissidents. The Russian middle class was both weak and tiny, due to the power of the (state-run)
* In the 19th century miners used to keep small birds for the purpose of detecting gas. From the troper's perspective, this would have been a
* In the 19th century, some people in Egypt put out one of their eyes in order to escape the army. It was followed by an order to form a regiment out of one-eyed men.
* In the 19th century, the bullfighters wore long hair ("coleta") often secured in a bun. Traditionally, the hair-bun was severed to indicate the torero was leaving the profession. This created the Spanish expression "cortarse la coleta" (Cutting the long hair) as a synonym for leaving a job.
* In the 19th Century, the final exam for British Army officers included the question "How do you dig a trench?" as a test of whether the candidate had an officer's mentality. Candidates who gave an answer involving the actual physical actions required would fail the test. The correct answer was "I say, 'Sergeant, dig me a trench!'" If he was in the Navy, officer candidates would be expected to know what they were ordering the hoi polloi to do — they'd still make the PO do it, but they'd know what would be involved.
* In the 19th century there was even a rule in most prisons not to feed lobster to the prisoners more than a few times a week since it was considered cruel towards them. Although, being the 19th century, this probably refers to the
* In the 19th Century, the sun never set on the British Empire. From
* In the 1st century AD, among the inventions of Heron of Alexandria was the aeolipile, the first steam engine. While the aeolipile was a mere curiosity, Heron had also invented
* In the 1st Degree engages in this. Of course, she is working for the mayor and she is a witness in a murder trial. Her reputation and image are important to her as a result.
* In the 1st Degree goes into this trope when it comes to questioning the witnesses: Why were you seen searching the body after the shooting? You were just trying to do CPR? Why would you do CPR if the victim is dying from a bleeding neck wound?
* In the 1st Degree is lying!" Later on, Granger brings up Ruby, "the woman Tobin loved", at which point Tobin growls under his breath "That lying whore!" It becomes pretty clear that Tobin does not seem to like women very much.
* In the 1st Degree on it, Looper had to explain that her tyrant of a mother told her to stop swearing. Then she says "And I don't want any crap this time" to Tobin when she was interviewing Tobin. Does "crap" count as a minced oath or not?
* In the 1st Degree plays with this trope. Certainly you, the prosecutor, can try to badger the witness into confessing. However, it does not seem to work very much.
* In the 1st Degree plays with this trope. While the prosecutor is required to poke holes in Tobin's testimony in order to get first-degree murder, it could be argued that Granger achieved it because Tobin had a total meltdown right there in the courtroom and revealed too much information.

* In the 1st Degree strongly indicates that this occurred between James Tobin and his girlfriend Ruby Garcia. She is said to be completely under Tobin's thumb, and they did get into a fight over a love letter Zachery Barnes sent to her. Played completely straight.
* In the 1st Degree. Tobin found out that his girlfriend Ruby had a one-night stand with Zack. Tobin was so jealous and furious that he decided that Zack had to pay for this with his life.
* In the 2000 animated films and TV series based on German children's book series
* In the 2000 cartoon "Homestarloween Party", everyone gets together at Homestar's Halloween party to tell a round-robin scary story that quickly goes off the rails.
* In the 2000 Olympics, Russian gymnast Svetlana Khorkina withdrew from the vault final so that her teammate Elena Zamolodchikova, who qualified in ninth place (first reserve), could take her place, with the agreement that any prize money Zamolodchikova received would be split between her and Khorkina. Zamolodchikova won gold in the final.
* In the 2000s- after 60 years of wearing the same clothes- Suske and Wiske received a new hip, modern updated outfit. This created such a backlash that the creators were forced to return to their original clothes.
* In the 2000s and 2010s there was a tendency for British people to assume that all prestigious and/or
* In the 2000s, the Hollywood club scene meant you couldn't go a week without hearing about the wild partying of young celebrities like
* In the 2000s, when late-night anime became popular, allowing for voice actors themselves to appear on television,
* In the 2001 anime, we have a scene where Yuki offers his umbrella to Tohru on the way home from school, much to Kyo's dismay.
* In the 2001 cartoon "The House that Gave Sucky Treats", Homestar and friends go trick-or-treating... at
* In the 2001 Sci Fi Channel telefilm "Threshold" an astronaut infected with alien DNA let loose moth-like carriers that infected other people. The government found the hybrids all had B negative blood and, furthermore, the hybrids had stolen a list from a blood bank so they could track down their targets. The title comes from the other governments of the world declaring the invaders had to be stopped before they reached a critical population or Southern California would be nuked to stop them.
* In the 2001 version, the victim's teenaged stepdaughter Linda turns into a stepson Lionel.
* In the 2002 cartoon "Pumpkin Carve-nival", Homestar organizes a pumpkin-carving contest, and
* In the 2002 Pennsylvania 500 at Pocono Raceway, while sitting under the second red flag of the race after 27 laps due to a rainstorm (the first red flag happened on the very first lap after Steve Park (along with then-teammate Dale Earnhardt, Jr., who didn't flip) flipped into the infield and ripped out a section of guardrail on the inside of the track),
* In the 2002 revival, the Angel of Death decided to slack off from his job for a day, which had some
* In the 2003 anime, Hohenheim flirts with Maria Ross and Maria clearly likes him back. This isn't in the manga and is out-of-character for his manga interpretation.
* In the 2003 anime, Ishvalans have dark skin and red eyes, but their hair is brown or black. In the manga, Ishvalans have white hair on top of having dark skin and red eyes. Scar is the one young Ishvalan who keeps his white hair. As a child he had black hair but it lightened for reasons unspecified. It was grey even was
* In the 2003 anime, one of the Elrics lampshades this, realizing that they were only on par with some of their opponents due to their enhanced nature. The idea of someone using automail by choice instead of necessity only comes up once in the 2003 anime (when a rich man tries to buy parts from Pinako's old rival), and is treated as a completely foolish idea.

* In the 2003 Antwerp diamond heist, which is one of the largest at over $100 million, the criminals were largely caught thanks to littering when they made a rather unlucky choice of where to dump their trash and it was quickly found the next day by an annoyed resident.
* In the 2003 National League Championship Series, Chicago Cubs fan Steve Bartman went after a foul ball at the same time left fielder Moisés Alou was trying to catch it. Other Cubs fans heckled and threw stuff at Bartman until security had to escort him out of Wrigley Field, and given after the incident the Cubs went from a 3-0 lead to a 8-3 defeat, Bartman was tormented enough to change his phone number and have police cars outside his house, along with being labeled a physical example of the Cubs' jinx. Of course, the fact the Cubs had such a disastrous collapse, and the Florida Marlins won not only the ensuing game 7, but the World Series afterwards, shows there was more to this defeat than a single fan's interference.
* In the 2003 version, Baxter Stockman slowly goes through worse and worse events: first he's crippled, missing an arm and an eye whilst being confined to a wheelchair, only being able to fight in an Utrom Exo-Suit. And then he's just a head on a mechanical spider body until he's allowed to use an Utrom suit... until 'that' is destroyed and he's left a brain, eye, and spine floating in a tank, confined to robot bodies. In the episode "Same as it Never Was", Stockman is in a tank connected to Hun, himself stuck in a wheelchair.
* In the 2003 Women's World Cup, Sweden took a 1–0 lead through Hanna Ljungberg late in the first half. Germany equalised just after the break thanks to Maren Meinert. Neither team scored again in regulation time, sending the match to extra time, which then operated under the golden goal rule (i.e. pure sudden death). Cue Germany's Nia Künzer ending the match and claiming the World Cup eight minutes in.
* In the 2004-05 NFL playoffs, the Philadelphia Eagles entered with a 13-3 record and the #1 NFC seed, defeating the #6 seeded wildcard Minnesota Vikings in the NFC divisional round and the #2 seeded Atlanta Falcons in the NFC Championship Game before making it to Super Bowl XXXIX and being defeated by the New England Patriots. Thirteen years later, in the 2017-18 NFL playoffs, the Eagles once again entered with a 13-3 record and the #1 NFC seed. This time, they defeated the #6 seeded wildcard Falcons in the NFC divisional round and the #2 seeded Vikings in the NFC Championship Game and made it to Super Bowl LII, facing the Patriots once again. However, this time, the Eagles won against the Patriots, avenging their Super Bowl XXXIX loss and winning their first-ever Super Bowl.
* In the 2004 cartoon "Halloween Fairstival", Strong Bad tries to help the Cheat cure a case of the hiccups at the eponymous Halloween event, which features Coach Z's "haunted locker room", Bubs'
* In the 2004 US Presidential Election, Dick Cheney and John Edwards stated conflicting numbers regarding the Iraq war's casualties... and both men
* In the 2006 cartoon "Happy Hallow-Day", Homestar and friends try to figure out why it's still daylight out on Halloween night.
* In the 2006 election, the Liberal Party, afraid of losing government, ran ads against the Conservative Party and Conservative leader Stephen Harper in particular. The ads featured a cold female voice-over, Radio personality Bill Carroll on CFRB 1010 noted the "Paid for by the Liberal Party" text in some appeared above Harper's lips, in effect giving his a mustache like Adolf Hitler.
* In the 2006 World Cup, Italy was this. Won the Cup, without ever losing a match, right when Italian football was trying to tame the storm of the Calciopoli match-fixing scandal. In the 2012 European Cup, they even managed to tame the ultimate Badass Crew of this generation of association football, Spain, with a draw. However, in the final of the tournament, they got crushed by Spain, with a 4-0 as result. In 2018, they suffered a severe case of
* In the 2007 cartoon "Jibblies 2", the Horrible Painting in Strong Mad's closet escapes and terrorizes the citizens of Free Country USA into getting "the jibblies".
* In the 2007 NFL playoffs, the New York Giants finished with a 10-6 record, beat the Tampa Bay Buccaneers in the Wild Card, the Dallas Cowboys in the Divisional, and the Green Bay Packers in the NFC Championship in a game decided by an overtime field goal by Lawrence Tynes, before facing the AFC number one seeded New England Patriots in the

* In the 2008-2009 La Liga, Real Madrid (who needed a win to continue challenging uber-rival Barcelona for the league) were drawing 2-2 against Getafe in the 87th minute when a Getafe striker, Casquero, was tripped in the penalty area by Real defender Pepe. Getafe were awarded a penalty kick and Pepe was sent off, leaving his team a man down. Casquero stepped in to take the penalty himself, and did
* In the 2008 Canadian general elections, the New Democratic Party ran ads against the Conservative Party and Bloc Quebecois, portraying them as corrupt authoritarians and useless good-for-nothings respectively, followed by scenes of
* In the 2008 cartoon "Most in the Graveyard", Homestar and friends explore the old cemetery behind the King of Town's castle and run afoul of a carnivorous undead sheep.
* In the 2008 edition, the Travellator, an inclined treadmill which the contenders must climb with the aid of a rope, becomes a golden snitch
* In the 2008 summer Olympics, one competitor of the woman's free swim had a prosthetic leg with a "flipper" on it.
* In the 2008 US presidential election, Hilary Clinton's clothing and appearance got a
* In the 2008 Virgin Comics revival of the classic 1950s British space hero
* In the 2008 Wisconsin Supreme Court election, candidate Michael Gableman ran an ad against his opponent, incumbent Louis Butler, where he highlighted a case in which Butler, then a public defender, represented a man accused of raping a young girl, stating that, "Butler found a loophole. [The defendant] went on to molest another child." While this was technically true in the sense that both statements (that Butler found a loophole, and that the defendant later abused another child) were accurate, the ad was
* In the 2009 cartoon "Doomy Tales of the Macabre" Strong Sad, angry about not getting invited to his friends' Halloween party, writes a story in which the others suffer all sorts of weird karmic punishments.
* In the 2009 Israeli national elections, the Kadima party assumed victory since they won the most seats, one seat more than the runner-up Likud party. However, since Israel uses a parliamentary system, the winning party is required to form a coalition government made up of the majority of the parliament. Kadima was unable to do since the smaller parties were aligned with the Likud, leaving Likud the actual winner.
* In the 200th episode "How Your Mother Met Me", it occurs repeatedly with Ted and the Mother.
* In the 2010 Big Ten basketball tournament, Michigan led Ohio State 68–66 with 2.2 seconds left and the Buckeyes needing to drive the length of the court. What
* In the 2010 Christmas Special, the Doctor says he is a friend of Santa's, providing a photo of him and Santa at Frank Sinatra's hunting lodge in 1952.
* In the 2010 film, The Traveler, the malevolent ghost Mr. Nobody whistles the first lyrical sounds of Mozart's Lacrimosa as he goes about killing the police officers who had him murdered. Best seen
* In the 2010 game, the Marine character watches the Predator character's ship blow away the
* In the 2010 NBA playoffs, you saw this one a lot—there were ads for the new
* In the 2010 New York gubernatorial election, there was an incident between two third-party candidates. Libertarian Warren Redlich accused Anti-Prohibition candidate Kristin Davis of circulating a libelous attack mailing about him, calling her a "dirty whore" with the "dirty" referring to her dirty campaigning tactics. Davis, the madam of the brothel that former governor Eliot Spitzer frequented (which is why he was the "former Governor") replied by denying the allegations that she was a whore and explaining that she was only a madam, never a prostitute. She never responded to the allegations of dirty campaigning.

* In the 2010's, Sony Pictures decided to redub a lot of their old material (ranging from
* In the 2010s, the claim became popular that national food chains like McDonald's and Starbuck's maintained "secret menus" of unadvertised items. This idea resulted in some headaches, since the employees weren't trained ahead of time to make these nonexistent items. Thus, for example, if you went into a Starbuck's hoping for a "churro frappuccino," you'd have to either hope that some employee there had read the same rumors as you and learned on their own how to make one, or be prepared to explain it yourself.
* In the 2011 Aprils Fools even, America and Spain end up wearing "Sexy Waiter" outfits, too. America is embarrassed, Spain is amused.
* In the 2011 Women's World Cup quarterfinal against Brazil, the USA were down 2-1 in extra time when Megan Rapinoe crossed a ball in to Abby Wambach, who headed it home to tie the game in the
* In the 2012 feature film adaptation, a little girl gets lifted by a bunch of balloons. When a bullet pops them and she falls onto a big cake, she says "That was awesome!".
* In the 2012 Halloween event, the boss Merasmus will sometimes will sometimes disguise himself as a random prop, similarly to the Prop Hunt game mod.
* In the 2012 Olympics, several Chinese and South Korean badminton teams realized that if they lost in their first-round,
* In the 2012 Orange Bowl, a West Virginia player celebrated by tackling the Orange Bowl mascot.
* In the 2012 playoffs, the Falcons just narrowly subverted the trope by winning the Divisional Playoffs with a field goal after the Seahawks overcame a 20-point deficit with less than a minute left in the game. However, the Falcons ended up double subverting the trope by falling short in the NFC Championship against the 49ers.
* In the 2012 reboot, Krista Sparks/Dollface receives a small cut on her face, which her mind envisions as a monstrous necrotizing infection over her entire mouth, leading to her getting her
* In the 2012 relaunch, Photon, formerly a male character, becomes Lady Photon. Their race apparently switches genders every seven years.
* In the 2012 series, who sent the Perfect Large Numbers to attack Kinnikuman and why are the Devil Chojin involved in this especially Goldman/Akuma Shogun? The person is not other than Chojin Enma.
* In the 2013 football season, Clemson was undefeated, ranked #3 in the country and seen as a serious national championship contender...until suffering a
* In the 2013 Korean production, Death spends half his scenes providing a male example of
* In the 2013 New York state Section 1 Class AA high school championships, with Mount Vernon leading New Rochelle 60–58,
* In the 2013 season, the head coach of the Pittsburgh Steelers was standing just a little too close to the out-of-bounds area as an opposing team's running back was headed for the endzone. While the coach jumped out of the way, it was clear that he'd done it to distract the opposing player, and the coach was fined by the NFL.
* In the 2013 series, contestant Matthew Wright actually listed a whole bunch of things he didn't like about the jungle's wildlife, and what scared him/grossed him out. You know, in front of a prime time audience wanting to see someone humiliated. Guess who's now pretty much stuck doing the trials for the next few weeks?
* In the 2014/15 NFL season, Marshawn Lynch answered reporters' questions with the same thing over and over.
* In the 2014-15 playoffs, Manning went one-and-done in the playoffs for the
* In the 2014 cartoon "I Killed Pom Pom!", Homestar goes into a panic when he believes he's murdered Pom Pom, and desperately tries to cover up his "crime".
* In the 2014 FIFA World Cup, German attacking midfielder Mario Götze had been sparingly played throughout the tournament and started on the bench in the final against Argentina. He entered the game as a substitute in the 88th minute and went on to score the championship-winning goal

* In the 2014 game, he can steal a person's earrings without them noticing.
* In the 2014 MLB National League Championship Series, the San Francisco Giants played the St. Louis Cardinals for the second time in three years, and for the Giants, it was their third time in said series in five years. The teams split the series in St. Louis, and San Francisco won the first two in San Fran. Going into the bottom of the 9th inning of Game 5, the score was 3-3. Two Giants got on base and Travis Ishikawa stepped up and hit a 3-run walk-off home run to win it and send the Giants to the World Series for the third time in five years.
* In the 2014 World Cup quarter-final between Brazil and Colombia, a record 54 fouls happened (with only 4 yellow cards, showing the referee was condescending). The defeated Colombians had both the game's punching bag in James Rodriguez (who even managed to get a penalty kick, which he scored) and the dirtiest player in Juan Zuñiga (
* In the 2015-16 postseason, the Clippers didn't wait until the Semifinals to do their fizzling out this time. This time they blew an early 2-0 series lead to lose to the Portland Trail Blazers in six games, losing both Paul and Griffin on the way.
* In the 2015 anime, Etoile is reunited with "the spoiled rich boy" that she had met three years ago. They talk and Etoile says she heard King Andragoras and Prince Arslan has two twisted horns, abnormally wide mouths and black tails. Cue said rich boy looking nervous/appalled because he
* In the 2015 cartoon "The House that Gave Sucky Tricks", Strong Bad brainstorms all sorts of bizarre and
* In the 2015 episode "Danger on Level C", Danger Mouse's reaction to Greenback's latest monster is a sarcastic "A
* In the 2015 FIFA Women's World Cup, dark horse team England saw their cup run end rather tragically this way in the semifinal against Japan. The game went into stoppage time 1-1, at which point a Japanese player crossed the ball into the final third and English player Laura Bassett attempted to clear while sliding, but got the angle wrong and sent it into her own goal off the crossbar. They went on to defeat Germany in the 3rd place match.
* In the 2015 reboot, Lara is incapable of surmounting any obstacle that isn't painted white. Grab onto a random ledge? Nope. Grab onto a random ledge with a smear of white paint? No problem. This will, of course, force the player to go the long way around even if there is a shorter, more obvious route if only Lara wasn't so fixated on only interacting with white painted objects.
* In the 2015 season, The Miz was brought in as a new judge to replace the disgraced Hulk Hogan. The final three for his first episode consisted of the out-of-shape fan favourite ZZ, generic blonde Amanda and then Mada, who was possibly the most well-rounded of the remaining competitors and who had real potential for a future in the wrestling business. Miz made the bizarre decision to use his once-per-season save on Amanda "because she's hot", leaving ZZ to win the public vote and thereby eliminated Mada.
* In the 2015 season, the New York Giants wore patches honoring Ann Mara, matriarch to the Mara family owning the team, and a #16 decal to honor Frank Gifford, who played for the team from 1952 to 1960 and from 1962 to 1964.
* In the 2015 Special "The Husbands of River Song" the Doctor not only finally decides to see through his date with River Song on Darillium after centuries of running away from it, but via
* In the 2015 story "Under the Lake"/"Before the Flood", the deaf military scientist Cass was played by deaf actress Sophie Stone.
* In the 2016-17 playoffs, the Clippers would outdo the previous year's choke by losing in the first round to the
* In the 2016 Christmas special, "The Return of Doctor Mysterio", new companion Nardole acts somewhat as the heart, and it is heavily implied that this is why he is now travelling with the Doctor.
* In the 2016 revival, Rory has interactions with all three major ex-love interests. She shares a nice moment with Dean, where they both fondly remember their time together, but it's clear that they've both moved on. She finally breaks up with Logan for good. Jess, however, is still around, and implied to still have feelings for her. This did not go unnoticed by

* In the 2016 Rio Games, Michael Phelps retires and leaves 19-year old prodigy Katie Ledecky to step up to the plate. Perhaps best exemplified by this
* In the 2016 season, Cowboys QB Tony Romo suffered a back injury during a preseason game against the Seattle Seahawks, and his replacement, Dak Prescott, guided the Cowboys to an NFC-best 13-3 record since their last Super Bowl run (Super Bowl XXX). To make matters worse for Romo, he was on injured reserve the previous season. Romo would eventually retire at the end of the season.
* In the 2016 US election, a piece in The Yale Record helpfully explained that it would not endorse a candidate on account of being a tax-exempt 501(c)3 organization, then went into glowing detail on a candidate it was emphatically
* In the 2017-18 NFL Playoffs Divisional Round, the Minnesota Vikings took on the New Orleans Saints. The Saints were ahead by one point with 10 seconds left, neither team had a timeout, and the Vikings were about thirty yards outside of field-goal range.
* In the 2017 European Youth Olympic Festival, Italian gymnast Alice D'Amato agreed to withdraw from the uneven bars final so that her teammate and close friend Elisa Iorio, usually a stronger bar worker, could compete. Iorio won the final. In a
* In the 2017 Gymnastics World Championships, all eyes were on American gymnast Ragan Smith to win the USA's seventh Worlds/Olympics women's all-around gold in a row. When Smith fell to an ankle injury in warm-ups, the only American who could keep the streak alive was sixth-place qualifier Morgan Hurd, who had struggled in competition throughout the year, and many fans consequently believed it would inevitably be broken...but Hurd hit her best meet of the season and won gold over Canada's Ellie Black by a tenth. In the quadrennium that followed, Hurd proved to be one of the top gymnasts on the USA national team and a major contender for the 2021 Tokyo Olympics.
* In the 2017 reboot, Gizmoduck's real name is changed from Fenton Crackshell to Fenton
* In the 2018 Champions League final, between Liverpool and Real Madrid, Liverpool - who were already suffering from an injury crisis - got the short end of the stick twice. First, their star forward, Mohammed Salah, wound up with a shoulder ligament injury so bad that it was believed to be
* In the 2018 Edition of the game, Scout specialists with the Level 3 Skill Vanguard are able to relay targeting information to their comrades, granting them re-rolls to hit against enemy models close to the Scout.
* In the 2018 Edition of the Giro D'Italia Chris Froome went into the race as a favourite but crashes before the race even began and further crashes during the race along with a somewhat poor performance during the middle stages most had ruled Froome out of even a top 10 finish. A stage 14 win would bring him somewhat back into the race but he would follow up by losing time the following day. What no one expected was that on Stage 19 with over 80 kilometers of tough mountain riding to go Froome would launch and attack so aggressive that it quickly dropped some of the best climbing cyclists in the world. Froome would then continue to gain time on everyone else and move from fourth position in the GC to First gaining over three minutes on reigning champion Tom Dumoulin. He would successfully defend and extend his lead the following day to secure his win and secure a place in history as the first British cyclist to win the race the seventh cyclist in history to win all cycling grand tours and the third in history to hold the titles of all three tours and the only one to do so in the modern era calendar.
* In the 2018 Indycar series season, Robert Wickens was launched into the catchfence in a two-car crash, causing him to break his arm, both ankles, and a vertebra in his back, and taking him out of the rest of the season. Later updates revealed that he is currently paraplegic, due to a bruise on his spinal cord, but he hopes to be walking again within two years, and his team has said that the car is his if he recovers sufficiently, making it an open question of whether it's this or a

* In the 2018 NFC Championship game between the New Orleans Saints and Los Angeles Rams, Saints QB Drew Brees' pass to Tommylee Lewis was ruled incomplete after Rams' Nickell Robey-Coleman made contact, resulting in what should have been a pass interference call. No call was made, regulation ended in a 23-23 tie, and the Saints eventually lost in overtime, 26-23. Several Saints fans took out billboard space in Atlanta (where the Super Bowl was played) to complain, and others sought to file a lawsuit to annul the game at the point of the penalty and have it replayed. There were even rumors that some Saints fans tried to find which hotels the officials were staying at in order to assault them.
* In the 2018 "ReAnimated" collaboration, Backslide lines up a shot and then hits the ball with his
* In the 2018 remake, one of the subjects is a gay guy himself, though semi-closeted; while going through his actual closet, the Fab Five discover some of his fetish gear. As a joke, Tan gets him to model a chest harness for the other four, who are very appreciative. Antoni in particular seems legit rather than jokingly flustered and excuses himself to get a cold drink.
* In the 2018 season, the Seattle Seahawks wore "PGA" patches to honor team owner Paul Allen.
* In the 2018 story "It Takes You Away", blind character Hanne is played by blind actress Ellie Wallwork.
* In the 2018 US House elections, Rep. David Valadao was up by over 7% on election night and the AP and most major media outlets declared him the winner. Three weeks later, after counting the large volume of absentee ballots, his opponent TJ Cox pulled ahead by a few hundred votes and the AP issued a rare retraction and declared Cox the winner. (Valadao would have the last laugh though, as he won the seat back in 2020 even as Joe Biden was easily winning it at the presidential level).
* In the 2018 World Championships, the Russian men's team lost to China by less than half a tenth of a point and they took it quite badly. Artur Dalaloyan in particular spent a long time crying and unable to stand up. The situation reversed the following year when Russia won over China and Sun Wei had the same exact reaction.
* In the 2019 NFL season, the San Francisco 49ers finished 13-3. Not only were all 3 losses against bird-themed teams, their division rival Seattle Seahawks, the Baltimore Ravens, and the Atlanta Falcons, but all 3 losses were thanks to last-second plays: the Seahawks kicked their game-winning field goal in the last seconds of overtime, the Ravens also won with a game-winning field goal,
* In the 2019 reboot, while he doesn't appear to possess that ability, he grabs a chainsaw from his girlfriend's workshop, coats it in what may or may not be
* In the 2019 World Artistic Gymnastics Championships, after Chinese gymnast Liu Tingting melted down in the team final (falling three times and likely costing the team a medal), the Chinese federation decided to pull Liu, the fifth-place all-around qualifier, out of the all-around final, allowing Tang Xijing, who had placed 21st in qualifications but had a much stronger meet than Liu in the team final, to compete instead. Tang won the silver medal behind American Simone Biles, generally considered the greatest gymnast of all time.
* In the 2020 live-action, Akutsu sets Ryuji on fire, and Masaki's coat while Eikichi is wearing it. Ryuji gets badly burned, but it's a
* In the 2020 NFL season, the Denver Broncos found themselves without a quarterback when their entire QB corps had to be quarantined due to COVID-19 exposure. They ended up having to bring in Kendall Hinton, a practice squad wide receiver who had also played second-string quarterback in college, to fill the position. It seemed like it could have been the setup for some crazy underdog victory story, especially since the New Orleans Saints were also not starting their No. 1 quarterback
* In the 20s, a Klansman could meet at a Klavern to have a Klonversation with the local Kleagle. Don't know the rules? Don't worry, they're all laid out in the Kloran. (Apparently, the Klan had the same naming conventions as the
* In the 21st and 22nd World Tournaments, Goku ends up making it to the Finals, but loses to Jackie Chun/Master Roshi and Tienshenhan respectively (Roshi's legs are longer than Goku's, giving him more strength to his final kick while bad luck on Goku's part in the form of a truck meant that Goku ringed out before Tien).

* In the 21st century, however, the curse was completely inverted. The tenth film overall and last
* In the 21st episode of the third season, Nabu claimed that the reason he had stowed away on the Specialists ship was so he could practice his invisibility spells against monsters living in the area the Winx were travelling to. Nabu's ability to turn invisible hasn't been seen again since this episode. (Although it's possible that he used this ability off-screen during season 4's episode 20 when he went to the nature fairy Diana's castle to try to save the Specialists, but this is just a theory...)
* In The 24 Hours of Le Mans, the drivers of closed top cars have two bottles, one for windshield washer fluid and the other for their sport drink. Sometimes the crews get them confused, and mix them up, leaving the poor driver with a horrible tasting drink during their stint and very clean teeth afterwards (fortunately, the washer fluid's not harmful, just disgusting).
* In the 260s BC, a group of mercenaries called the Mamertines holed themselves up in the Sicilian city of Messana, having seriously pissed off Carthage, the closest thing that the Mediterranean had to a superpower at the time. The Mamertines asked an up-and-coming Italian city state called Rome for help. Cue twenty years of the Romans proving they are the bigger fish in that particular pond, and Carthage was forever after relegated to "slightly smaller fish."
* In the 29th century, all identities are known except Superwoman. When Kristen Wells goes back in time to investigate this, she ends up using futuristic technology to become Superwoman herself.
* In the 2 Hunters video, Dream is falling off the edge of the End and into the void. George then kills Sapnap. And then we see a few Ender Pearls drop right into Dream's hotbar.
* In the 2nd game, an Ogre Mage named Madulf and his followers, a few Gnolls and other Ogres, are initially blamed for the attacks on the village in Umar Hills. You can kill them...or you can listen to his side of the story. Madulf explains that he and his men were just tired of fighting and arrived here hoping to live in peace. They are also in the same boat as the villagers since his men are also being killed by the same dark force. Madulf and his men just want to be left alone and allowed to trade goods in the village in peace. Helping them to do just that nets you a hefty amount of experience.
* In the 2nd opening, our four main heroes come across giant worm monsters to which they are promptly eaten and slimily regurgitated or defecated back out...
* In the 2nd season Section 9 and other Japanese law enforcement agencies take on the Individual Eleven, which was said to be an anti-refugee terrorist group, as well as militant refugees who wish to remain in Japan in order to be naturalized Japanese or seek asylum for themselves or for their loved ones.
* In the 3.0 and 3.5 editions, characters receive heavy penalties when attacking with two weapons. You can receive lower penalties by using a light weapon in your off-hand or by using a single double-headed weapon. Several feats can be taken to lower your penalties further. There are specialized weapons for certain tailed races that can act as a second or third equipped weapon with special training.
* In the 31st episode of Shippu! Iron Leaguer the boxing match between Kiai Ryuuken and Dyke Dyson ends with a Double KO via
* In the 3.5 corebook, there's a nearly-sarcastic note that you can't use bardsong to improve a Move Silently check.
* In the 3.5 core rules, clerics were able to gain power by revering a cause.
* In the 3.5 player's handbook, a priest of Pelor, the quintessentially good deity of Greyhawk, is seen using a Symbol of Pain spell, which good aligned gods cannot grant. What happened was that they reused some artwork from the 3.0 PHB of the priest using the pain aspect of the Symbol spell, which was originally an unaligned spell.
* In "The 37's" the crew come across long-lost aviatrix Amelia Earhart and her navigator Fred Noonan, who gets shot during the episode. Being unfamiliar with medical technology of the 24th Century, Fred assumes he's going to die and admits to Amelia that he loves her...only for the Doctor to tell him he'll be just fine.

* In the 3rd Edition of the game, the technologically proficient House Van Saar are known to capture, breed, and cybernetically enhanced Necromundan giant spiders for various purposes. In-game, Van Saar gangs can purchase these cyberarchnids as pets from the Campaign Trading Post.
* In the 3rd edition reboot, the aforementioned "Oriental Vampire" was renamed the
* In the 3rd Edition sourcebook detailing the gods used in campaigns,
* In the 3rd Punic War, the Romans raised an army, then razed the fields in Carthage.
* In the 3rd (technically the first, excluding the timeline and prologue) chapter,
* In the 3 season 4 finale specials, when the Spies' moms learn about their "secret" identity (as much of a secret as three teenage girls in colorful catsuits chasing criminals on the street without EVER covering their face could have), they get to meet the Spies' boss, Jerry. Then there comes a short running gag of Sam's mother unable to remember Jerry's name for the life of her, and keep browsing around other similar-sounding ones like Gary, Harry, Larry, etc.
* In the "40K Rejects" series by Mini War Gaming dot com, in Episode 3 (
* In the 48th episode, it's revealed that the main antagonist of the series is in fact
* In the 4th ed. "Demonicon," it's said that, when a demon lord dies in the Abyss, and the Abyss is tired of playing with said ex-demon lord, a tomb materializes in the layer known as the "Blood Rift." The tomb is inevitably filled with the deceased's favorite possessions, both treasure and servants.
* In the 4th Edition, hitting an elder treant with a fire attack sets it on fire, causing ongoing fire damage... but also lets it do extra fire damage with its melee attacks.
* In the 4th expansion raid Throne of Thunder, the 9th boss, The Dark Animus, is a robot that must go through a lengthy activation sequence before you can fight him, and says all sorts of funny dialogue while he's at it, meanwhile you fight his lesser sized replicas. At one point during his activation sequence, he says: "Setting Doom level to 15000 milli-dooms"
* In the 4th game in the series, Riley Miller qualifies, being your squads engineer as well as having been a research scientist prior to the game, she also goes out in the field as a mortar expert.
* In the 4th season episode "Boom", Simmons gets mad at Fitz for heroically helping to throw Shockley out of the plane, because he could have been blown up.
* In the 4th season episode where Dr. Orpheus goes inside Rusty's mind (not to be confused with the 4th season episode where Brock and the boys go inside Rusty's body), he meets "Eros" and "Thanatos", who look and sound like Billy Quizboy and Pete White, respectively.
* In the 4th Toei Hero Next movie, "We are Bounty Hunters" (starring the cast of
* In the 50s and 60s highways/motorways proved to be examples of this trope for 6-(Europe) or 8-cylinder (America) sedans. Before them, the roads were either speed-limited or too bad for getting the cars to top speed, so customers who weren't buying their cars for racing stuck with 4-(Europe) or 6-cylinder (America) cars. But motorways/highways were places where drivers were able to legally get their cars to their top speed, so that the benefit of having a bigger engine became noticeable.
* In the '50s and '60s, television roles were considered this for actors, as acting on TV was the kiss of death as far as Hollywood movie casting went at the time.
* In the 50s and earlier, masked wrestlers were considered one of the worst things in wrestling. Only pathetic undercarders wore masks, so that people wouldn't see who it was getting their asses kicked. (This often occurred, even later, with "Parts Unknown" wrestlers like "Mr. X"; in other words, known performers who are put out there to fill a slot on the card and do the job.)
* In the '50s and early '60s, electric guitarists strove to eliminate feedback and distortion in favor of a clean sound. The emergence of heavy rock in the mid-late '60s prompted guitarists like

* In the 5th Edition Imperial Guard Codex, one of the special characters, Sergeant Lukas Bastonne of the Cadian Shock Troops, earned the highest award a soldier in the Imperium can earn in their lifetime by refusing to leave one of his soldiers behind on a zombie-riddled planet. Of course he had to execute the man because he showed symptoms of the same plague that caused the zombies in the first place, so whether this is a backhanded subversion or not is debatable.
* In the 5th episode, Gopal and Tok Aba mistake them for their rice-selling friend and
* In the 5th season episode "I believe the Children are our Future", popular myths are coming true (joybuzzers kill, itch powder really works). Cue Dean walking out of the bathroom with furry palms...
* In the 5th season finale, Nick happily examined the intestines at the scene while the experienced cop threw up.
* In the 60s and 70s, British Leyland worked on a hatchback that would replace the original Mini. However, such a design had never reached production. Instead, a bigger hatchback was designed and released in 1980 as the Austin/MG Metro.
* In the '60s, the Los Angeles Lakers were this. Led by Elgin Baylor and Jerry West, the Lakers were often expected to dethrone the Boston Celtics, yet even when they jumped to leads in Finals series and later on added
* In the 60s, Volkswagen ran a series of ads in the US making fun of the VW Beetle. These had taglines like "Think small," and "0 to 60?
* In the 60s, Yakov Kostyukovsky read in a newspaper that a few Swiss people tried to smuggle jewels in an orthopedic cast. He took that idea, and the result was
* In the 6th one, a man tells another man that carrots are good for his eyesight. His response is to
* In the 6th season, Brandon receives a new weapon that generates wind gusts when he twirls it.
* In the 6th season opener, Cory and Topanga want to get married after she proposed to him at their high school graduation. Everyone thinks they have eloped, though they didn't actually go through with it. Their families try to fake being happy for them until Cory's mother reveals that she's completely against it ("This is a mistake, and I do not support it. Why couldn't you [Topanga] have just gone to Yale?") This leads to awkwardness when they reveal they hadn't gone through with it, and wish to know why exactly it would have been a mistake.
* In the 6th volume, we learn that Julis-Alexia van Riessfeld and Orphelia Landlufen were this as well.
* In the 700th issue of the series, which has Supes walking across America to get to know the common man more, he stops at a local diner for lunch. Outside is a reporter very heavily implied to be
* In the '70s, '80s, and '90s, Japanese electronics were considered the best, thanks to Sony's innovative Trinitron and Walkman products. Also, there's a good chance that more than half of the whiteware appliances around you have Japanese names.
* In the 70s and 80s, quite a few top-tier talents contributed to adaptations of films at Marvel and DC.
* In the 70's and 80's, Turkish filmmakers had this strange habit of doing remakes of blockbuster movies like
* In the '70s Grover frequently appeared as a door-to-door salesman, usually calling on Kermit the Frog. Each time he'd be peddling a different item, and always something a frog would have no use for: earmuffs, toothbrush, nose warmer, etc.
* In the '70s or thereabouts, there was a commercial for an electric shaver featuring a cop who needed a really clean shave to pose as a woman for a stakeout. At the end of the ad, another cop studies him and remarks, "Face is terrific!" then grimaces and adds, "But that body!"
* In the 70s, science fiction critic Charles Platt pied magazine editor Ted White in the face at a convention. Sadly, White didn't see the funny side.
* In the '70s, the golden age of English Freestyle wrestling, villains were often Americans who thought they could bully everyone else 'cos their country was so big and powerful. Examples include the Iron Greek (played as American, not Greek) and The Mighty Quinn (may actually have been Canadian, but played as Brit-despising American).

* In the '70s, there was a talking Redd Foxx doll aimed at children. This would be the same Redd Foxx who is famous for his "You Gotta Wash Your Ass" routine. The toy actually includes several of his famous punchlines and catchphrases, which obviously had to be
* In the 7th season, Scotty's mother falls victim to one of these, though he doesn't realize it until he talks to another victim (he thought it was just a mugging). When he tracks the guy down, he finds
* In the '80s and '90s, Japan was the dominant force in the video game industry. Producing many different iconic and groundbreaking franchises. However, by the PS3/X360 era, they began to fall off the map, largely due to the overwhelming burden of developing for HD consoles, the surge of quality Western titles, and AAA Japanese developers trying too hard to cater to the Western market. However, from around 2015, Japanese developers began to skyrocket back to stardom with a string of critically and commercially successful games that put the nation back on the spotlight of the gaming world. The fact that Japanese games as of 2015 onwards are readily available in
* In the 80s and 90s, paleontologists asked themselves: what were the ancient seashores like? Real ancient, pre-Cambrian and early Palaeozoic. Current consensus is that without higher plants, erosion from wind and water was very rapid, and land was very flat low plains with occasional vertical rocks. There was no such thing as riverbeds; water flowed into the seas as an even layer all over the shoreline. Sediments were carried far into the sea, resulting in far stretches of shallow waters. There was no distinct border between sea and dry land, no shoreline, just kilometres of shallow pools and mud, that got slightly wetter at high tide. Creatures like modern mudskippers would thrive in such environment. Even in the deeper areas, a great deal of iron was suspended in the water, turning it a sickly green color. It wasn't until certain unicellular organisms began producing oxygen as a waste product that the iron content of the oceans dropped considerably (due to the oxygen binding to it, turning it to rust), leaving them their current blue hue.
* In the '80s and early '90s, it was the embodiment of modern entertainment. In the late '90s and early 2000s, it became "the kiddy company" due to competition from Sega and Sony and the censorship of certain games like * in The '80s. As the 2000s wore on, she continued to make hay about the issue, but was roundly ignored by everyone. In 2010, she became the main architect of a consumer advocacy agency designed to prevent such a thing from happening again, and in 2012, she was elected as Massachusetts' junior Democratic Senator.
* In the '80s, Björk dated bandmate Þór Eldon (both were in
* In the '80s Coke repeated the trick with Robin Beck's "First Time", which also made the UK #1.
* In the '80s Detroit station WKBD had Count Scary (Tom Ryan), a wisecracking
* In the 80's, Dr. Pepper ads were extremely common during broadcasts of
* In the 80s, Ford decided that the 4th generation Mustang would be a Mazda 626-based FWD coupe. Instead, due to public outcry, the 4th generation Mustang was an RWD car, and the FWD coupe was released as the Ford Probe, slotting below the Mustang.
* In the 80s in the UK, Lyons Maid released a Bananaman ice lolly, based on the character from
* In the '80s, it was broadly hinted that the original cartoon shared a universe with the
* In the '80s the series actually moved to something closer to the current format with an experiment during the Colin Baker era of splitting stories into two 45-minute episodes (as is done now) and with a few Peter Davison stories clocking in at two 25-minute episodes (not much longer than a stand-alone 45-min episode from post-2005 series). Another thing worth mentioning is that, especially in the Eccleston and Tennant eras, there were complaints that some writers (often those who grew up watching the 63-89 run) were scripting stories that were more suited to 4x25mins rather than a single 45min episode meaning that sub-plots were resolved extremely quickly, there was poignant dwelling on the death of characters the viewer had only known for about 15 minutes, etc, etc.

* In the '80s, the Soviets had developed their own version of the Space Shuttle, the Buran/Energia. Despite the similar looks, it was supposed to combat most of the deficiencies of the Shuttle's design. Unfortunately, the project was cancelled after one (unmanned) test flight due to the fall of the Soviet Union .
* In the '80s uber low-budget yet oddly entertaining Mexican supernatural slasher titled
* In the '80s version, both Beast Man and Clawful had Starscreamish tendencies. Beastman only passively resented Skeletor and intended to wait for a good moment, but Clawful threatened to overthrow Skeletor to his face and then laughed off his threats. (Of course, Clawful was dumber than a box of hammers, especially in the remake. Clearly, he wasn't a threat.)
* In the "8-Ball" variant of pocket billards, you win if you legally sink the 8-ball (no other balls of your pattern remaining,
* In the 8th episode of the series Yuri sneaks up behind a guard and strips naked behind a revolving door, she knocks on the door to get his attention and shows him her bare leg behind the window, she then motions for him to come to her, he excitedly follows her and we hear sounds of her beating him up and she comes out wearing his uniform.
* In the 8th episode "They've Got A Secret", the living ship Moya decides that her passengers pose a threat to her unborn baby. Using just one D.R.D. (a little robotic repair drone), Moya proceeds to glue Aeryn Sun to the deck - instantly neutralizing her in a non-lethal manner. In the following 80 episodes and the two hour mini-series, not one of the crew ever thinks of using this same tactic on the endless stream of hostile and dangerous beings that board the ship despite the fact that they have hundreds of D.R.D.s at their command.
* In the 90s anime, the Sailor Wars happened millennia ago when countless Sailor Senshi united to try and defeat Chaos. That proved impossible, so the legendary Sailor * in the 90s became a generic name for any gaming console, and a lot of popular NES-era games were unknown because they were neither sold nor pirated.
* In the 90s, British primary school children were treated to a rather well-done fire safety animation called 'Frances the Firefly'. The aforementioned Frances lives in an insect village, but she can't fly very well nor glow as brightly as the other fireflies. So, a bratty cockroach persuades her to use a large match instead, which results in her burning off her wings, dropping the match in pain, and burning most of the village down.
* In the 90's, Gap made a commercial for Khaki pants showing people dancing the lindy hop. The commercial did a better job of making people all over the USA start signing up for lindy hop lessons than making them buy the pants.
* In the '90s he never hit the Top 40, but did manage two Top 5s on modern rock. Surely one of them must've been "I'm Afraid of Americans", right? Nope, one was "One Shot" from the abortive Tin Machine project, and the other was "Jump They Say". Also surprising is that "Americans" only reached a measly
* In the 90s, many Georgians took to selling their national fast foods (often with ingredients of poor quality and/or dubious origin) on the streets in large Russian cities.
* In the '90s there was talk of putting Dennis in jeans, but the public backlash against changing his
* In the 90's, the UK satellite channel UK Gold, which focused on older BBC and ITV programs (now known as GOLD and dedicated to comedy, had an entire ident set based around this, from 1994 to 1997. It concerned the UK Gold logo forged on a gold brick, as a man labored to do it.
* In the '90s, they made it to the World Series twice and lost both times: in 1995 to the aforementioned Braves, and in 1997 to the Florida Marlins.
* In the 90s, they picked up their instruments again and played hip-hop alongside alternative rock, funk, jazz and hardcore punk, making two albums (

* In the 90's, this was common on syndicated children's shows. For instance, on
* In the '90s Zorro Adam West had a cameo in a season two episode as a scientist named Dr. Wayne.
* In "The 9-8", a huge fight breaks out between the cops of the Nine-Nine and their counterparts from the Nine-Eight, who had to share headquarters.
* In the 9th/10th novel, Yasumi absolutely qualifies. No surprise, considering her true identity:
* In the 9th episode, E Company passes by while some French soldiers execute German soldiers they found hiding with little more than a shrug. This serves as a quick introduction to
* In the 9th millennium, however, the cataclysm of the FTL Wars (brought on by the discovery of
* In the 9th one, a boy asks his pregnant mother "Can Suzy come out to play?" The mother says "Sure", and the baby then casually bursts out of the stomach an run off with the boy.
* In the 9th OVA, a retelling of the Drum Kingdom Saga that adds Robin and Franky, they do this to Dr. Hiriluk.
* In the above examples the chemicals being mixed tend to be dangerous when brought together; the example with Kari is used to make gun cotton, while the "blur with blur" were some of the
* In the Abrahamic story of Genesis, it is said that God removed one of Adam's ribs and then used it to create Eve.
* In "The Abrasive Side", Spongebob is established as a doormat by letting everyone cut in line for the bus despite promising Patrick he'll be first in line.
* In the abridged equivalent of the mentioned "Waking the Dragons" episode, the check Kaiba wrote instead reads, "All of Joey Wheeler's money". Even the rules of money are not safe from Kaiba's screwing.
* In the absence of the Jounin Captains, during the Chunin Exam Arc, Sasuke and Neji stepped up as levelheaded leaders of their three man squad, while Ino and Kiba became headstrong leaders for theirs.
* In the "A Clockwork Origin" the nanobots, after becoming larger, devour the ship, Farnsworth's new house...and most of the crew's clothes. And Amy and Leela look as
* In the "A Clockwork Syringe" quest, one of the insults you can use while interrogating a zombie pirate is "Yo momma has enough chins for 99 range!"
* In the Act 6 Intermission 3 walkaround games, some of the Pre-Scratch Trolls are revealed to be Flanderized versions of their "dancestors." In particular, Cronus Ampora reflects all of the worst, most recognizable traits in the fandom's vision of Eridan (i.e. his romantic troubles, douchebaggery, and hipsterism), while Meulin Leijon is an exaggeration of how the fandom sees Nepeta (i.e. shipping and cat puns).
* In the actual game there's a total of one mission in the entire game taking place in our solar system, yet the only body you land on is the Moon. It's the quest you have to take in order to open your specialization talents (e.g., a Soldier can become either a Commando or a Shock Trooper).
* In the actual lore, Luther would have been the single greatest hero of all time on Caliban, if one of the primarchs, Lion El'Johnson, didn't happen to land on that particular planet. At this point, it is almost bordering on a tragic subversion, since, while Lion El'Johnson is physically powerful, tactically brilliant, and very quick to analyze any situation, he is an absolute moron with dealing with people. Luther isn't quite at Lion's level, but his charisma ends up making him more effective than Lion in most situations. Several major issues caused accidentally by Lion El'Johnson probably would not have occurred under Luther.
* In the actual manga, Pain's plan to end all war turns out to be a subversion. First he claimed that he wants to achieve utopias by harnessing the power of the tailed beasts to make a weapon of mass destruction that could destroy a country. If a war was started with one side lacking ninja, they would turn to Akatsuki, who would wipe out the entire opposing nation. After this, most countries would be too scared to start a war. However,

* In the actual movie, a group in the parking garage lock the zombies outside a chain-link fence, then set them on fire when they realize that they're getting through. The zombies do burn enough to die, but that may be justified by the group dousing them in gasoline beforehand.
* In the Adam short, Ilia looks the same age as she does current time. The flashback took place while Ghira was still leading the White Fang and Blake was a preteen.
* In the adaptation of the fifth volume, the reason for most of Ao Amai's actions during the Last Order story are never explained. The anime states that he secretly implanted Last Order with a virus which will infect the Misaka Network within a few more hours, potentially causing all of the Sisters to "run out of control" (with no further explanation of what that means). Neither Amai's motivation nor his plan is never explained, beyond a throwaway line about him being heavily in debt. Also, several of Amai's actions throughout the story are seemingly inexplicable: he kidnaps Last Order again for unclear reasons, yet then proceeds to just stay with her in his car in a nearby street instead of fleeing the area with her (despite suspecting that Accelerator and Yoshikawa are on to him). All this is explained in the book: Amai was bankrupted when the project failed, and ended up owing vast sums of money to some criminal organizations. He's found new sponsors among enemies of Academy City who are paying him to make all the Misaka Sisters go berserk and start killing people indiscriminately (which is what the virus is designed to do). He kidnaps Last Order because he's worried the virus will kill her before it activates and he's trying to keep her alive until then. The reason he can't flee the area is because the whole city has gone on high alert due to Ouma Yamisaka breaking in (to find Index), meaning there are security checkpoints blocking off every neighbourhood. And the reason he ultimately decides
* In the ad "Night Terrors" by Progressive Insurance, a man representing the competition has a nightmare about an ad featuring a live ventriloquist dummy, Kevin. He wakes up to realize it's a real ad and he tells the very dummy in it, who sleeps in the bunkbed above him, that he freaks him out.
* In the "Advanced 2nd Edition" monster manual, the picture for vampire showed
* In the adventure "A Thousand Words", Powder used a layered series of withdrawals to remove the funds from his bank account to pay for the warehouse. If the
* In the adventure "Hunger," The Computer decides to replicate some of the worst falsehoods of Soviet and Maoist science and apply them to food production. As the people in charge of one such facility, the Troubleshooters watch as
* In the Adventure mode of the game, humanoid bosses often wear creepy items like "elf bone earring" or "human nail crown". It is not mentioned directly, but, with the extensive killings lists and overall badassery of the owners, the game strongly implies that these items are made from the remains of their previously slain enemies.
* In "The Adventure of Silver Blaze", Holmes and Watson travel to Dartmoor to investigate a crime of disappearance of the great race horse Silver Blaze and the murder of the horse's trainer, John Straker. Straker has been killed by a blow to the skull, assumed to have been administered by prime suspect Fitzroy Simpson with his "Penang lawyer", a clublike walking stick. However, Holmes is able to demonstrate that Straker had been attempting to lame Silver Blaze in order to
* In "The Adventure of the Blue Carbuncle", Sherlock Holmes deduces that the owner of a lost hat must be an intellectual, because it is a big hat,
* In "The Adventure of the Cardboard Box," the killer is a sailor who murdered his wife and her lover in a fit of passion, then cut off their ears and mailed them to his wife's sister, who had encouraged the affair. He's sympathetic not because of what he did, but because he clearly regrets it and was in fact deeply in love with his wife; he even says that he would have spared her life if she hadn't started wailing over her dead lover's body.
* In "The Adventure of the Comic Book Crusader", Ellery is not pleased with a comic book series about him.
* In "The Adventure of the Lion's Mane", Fitzroy died with his back covered with dark red lines as though he had been terribly flogged. Sherlock Holmes found out that the victim was attacked not by a human but by a lion's mane jellyfish.

* In "The Adventure of the Priory School", Holmes deduces the direction a bicycle was heading by the fact that the hind tire track passes over the front tire track. However, the hind tire would pass over the front tire tracks regardless of the direction (unless the bicycle was in the process of turning at the time).
* In "The Adventure of the Sinister Scenario", the script based on Ellery's novel is said to be not only horrible, but getting worse with each revision.
* In "The Adventure of the Sussex Vampire", Robert Ferguson sends Holmes a letter supposedly on behalf of a friend, to ask him to study the friend's wife's inexplicable vampiric behaviour. Holmes reads it, and immediately instructs Dr. Watson to take down a wire: "Will examine
* In "The Adventure of Vittoria the Circus Belle", the killer stabs the eponymous Vittoria to death and then places the body in the tiger's cage to be mauled by the big cat. However, the body is not as badly damaged as the killer had hoped and, after a brief examination of the corpse, Dr. Watson is able to determine that the tiger could not have inflicted the fatal wound.
* In The Adventures of Little Carp Aoqi the seahorse often gets mistaken as a female due to his pink coloring and feminine poses. In addition Bubbles, the main character, also often gets confused to be female due to the constant comparison to him and his grandmother. They are even
* In "The Adventures of Twill Ongenbone and His Boy Jabari", following Stan's nihilist tirade about him forcing himself to trudge through his twilight years, Steve's teacher declares "Life dismissed." and jumps out the classroom window to his death.
* In the adventure "Whitewash," a low-security Infrared (black) hallway is accidentally painted over with high-security Ultraviolet (white) colors, leaving an entire sector's labor force unable to get to work. So many people report the situation that
* In the adventure X12 "Skarda's Mirror", the bandit warlord Skarda uses the title magical mirror to act out this trope, selling or giving it to his enemies so that the
* In the "Advise and Consent" series by Alan Drury, Walter Dobius embodies this trope, with assistance on the TV front from Our Anchorman Frankly Unctuous (that is the name actually used.) Note that Walter is not, repeat, NOT Walter Lippman.
* In the Aeroplane Over the Sea by band Neutral Milk Hotel the narrator often alludes to Anne Frank. Fan interpretations include the pairing of Jeff Mangum, the writer and singer of the album, with Anne Frank and the belief that Jeff actually is in love with her. The lyrics, many of them sexual in nature, seem to be the main reason people come to this conclusion.
* In the aforementioned 2017 season, the New Orleans Saints' opening game would be an away game against the Minnesota Vikings at U.S. Bank Stadium, where they would lose 29-19. Their season ends in the playoffs at the same stadium, with the Vikings winning 29-24
* In the aforementioned fanfiction, the Ice Queen is just as creepy towards Fionna (if not moreso),
* In the aforementioned kidnapping incident, the kidnappers quickly realized that without the narrator to say things like "And just then, a familiar figure entered the room", the plot could not progress. So they let him go.
* In the aforementioned superhero bit, his mother smacked him so hard that his butt fell off, which prompted this legendary quip from his friends: "It's
* In the afterlife, Roy's mother Sara appears as a young woman even though she lived to old age. She explains that his father Eugene looks like a wrinkled old man because he always
* In the Aftermath episodes, the silhouettes of several concept designs can be seen in the audience.
* In the aftermath of a battle, Shinji and Asuka find that their Evas have run out of power and collapsed in a very suggestive position. Asuka immediately blames Shinji and calls him a perv while accusing his Eva of molesting hers.

* In the aftermath of accusations that CNN threatened to DOX a Reddit user if he posted hateful messages again, CNN clarified that this wasn't their intention and was merely trying to state they made no deal with the Reddit user in question. At least one forum poster pointed out that CNN wasn't helping its case because claiming that you don't like to think of what you're doing is blackmail is the first thing anyone says when they blackmail you.
* in the aftermath of King Cold and Turles' attack on Earth. The surviving ships are full of technology far ahead of Earth's so the government claims it all both to advance technology in general and to hopefully be able to fight off future attacks on their own without having to rely on the Z Fighters.
* In the aftermath of Nirnaeth Arnoediad, Huor (Man) prophesied to Turgon (Elf) that new hope would spring from the two of them, saying "...from you and from me a new star will arise." This later proved to be true, for his son Tuor wedded Turgon's daughter Idril, and their son was Eärendil The Mariner, who sailed to Undying Lands to plead mercy for Two Kindreds. Eärendil himself was set to sail to sky with Silmaril on his ship, thus becoming the Morningstar.
* In the aftermath of the Assassination of Abraham Lincoln, several military men and some other people used torches, rifles, guns, swords to clear every theater goers out of the way just as Dr Charles Leale and 6 men were carrying the dying Abraham Lincoln, who was still in his shirt in place as his coat was either on him or wrapped around his body.
* In the aftermath of the disaster that destroyed the Russian submarine
* In the aftermath of the killing of Osama bin Laden, Disney attempted to trademark "Seal Team 6" in the hopes of making an
* In the aftermath of the Secret Empire (a conspiracy to take control of the United States led by a thinly-veiled version of then-president
* In the afterward to the Melody Malone novel "The Angel's Kiss", Amy assured the Doctor that she and Rory met this fate after being
* In the Agartha Singularity, Scheherazade's ultimate plan is to summon the
* In the Agatean Empire, almost everyone's name is number-adjective-noun, such as Nine Turning Mirrors and Six Beneficent Winds. Two Little Wang is particularly disgruntled about this. Some characters lack the adjective and run it into one word (Twoflower, Ninereeds).
* In the age of "gentlemanly" warfare, bright uniforms were used to actually help soldiers stand out amid all the smoke (it wasn't until just over a century ago that smokeless gunpowder was invented). This was actually a morale booster, as soldiers were assured that their fellows were still around amid the chaos. Blingy uniforms could also help to show troops, subordinate officers, and couriers where the commanders were to aid in battlefield communication.
* In the Age Of Sail, drums were commonly used to sound the alarm, since they could be heard throughout the ship. This was not only done when they had spotted an enemy, but would also sometimes be done as a matter of routine at daybreak, as this was the time they were most likely to be sighted by an enemy, meaning it was best to be prepared for a fight.
* In "The Age of Steel", the Cybermen are stopped when the program preventing them from feeling emotions is disabled - upon realizing the nature of the
* In the Age of X… shared hallucination thingy, mutants referred to humans as "preaks". Because they are what came before.
* In the age when computers were massive mechanical machines composed of gears and pulleys, the inventor Charles Babbage was twice asked "If you input wrong figures into the machine, will it produce the right answers?" He wanted to smack the stupidity out of the guys that asked the question (he didn't because both of them were members of Parliament). An understandable mistake in that age, as people weren't used to such a Literal Genie as a computer.
* In "The Agreement Dissection" Sheldon lists the offences Leonard committed in the teaser as happening on April 28th, the original air date.
* In the "A Hand of Aceys" storyline, a gate clone attempts to murder the original version of himself,
* In the Aincrad arc, Sachi, the only female of the Black Cats of the Full Moon, was a girl who hated fighting, but also the kindest and nicest of all of them, and her death is what drove Kirito to go solo for so long because he was unable to protect her as he promised. To drive the point home, she preemptively recorded a message for Kirito, telling him that he shouldn't blame himself if she died and that she was happy she could meet him.

* In the Air Force Cadets, you line up for food in rank order, lower ranks eat first, higher ranks eat last, although this is the case in all types of cadets, not just Air.
* In "The Airport", Elaine and Jerry are coming off a trip to visit a relative and do a show respectively. However due to a cancellation, they have to take a different plane to get back home and only two seats are available: a First Class and a Coach. Jerry quickly snaps up the First Class seat and poor Elaine has to endure in the latter where she pretty much deals with all the subjects of this trope: Annoying passengers, cramped seating, horrendous airline food and losing her luggage because she was mean to the handler and he put it on another flight in revenge. At one point she tries to sneak into First Class, but is quickly forced back to her seat. All the while Jerry meets a nice girl and pretty much has a wonderful flight.
* "In the Air Tonight" does this as well. When the drum solo kicks in, Collins' black-and-white visage suddenly transforms into a blazing, brightly-colored, and VERY angry thermographic image.
* "In The Air Tonight" for the drum part. So you can turn the volume way up seconds before.
* In "The Aku Infection", a dog freaks out and starts barking at Jack, even though he's usually a
* In the Alabasta Arc, Nami tears the skirt of her dancing girl outfit in order to fight better against the assassin Ms. Doublefinger.
* In the Alabasta Arc, specifically in the Alabasta civil war, our heroes have deemed that the situation is too far gone to be resolved by purely peaceful means. Luffy deduces that there's only one other way to solve the conflict: Beat Crocodile, the guy behind it all. His crew was initially surprised about Luffy's plan but it works in the end.
* In the Alabasta arc, Zoro comes up against an adversary whose body is made of steel. With no option to retreat, it becomes a "cut steel or die" scenario. No points for guessing the outcome. It's even lampshaded to an extent, when Zoro declares, after learning of his opponent's ability, that he will be able to cut steel by the end of the fight.
* In the Alamut Hassan, leader of the Ismailis, had a personal regiment of African eunuchs of massive stature bearing maces. They stood within the fortress never saying a word just glaring at people. One thinks Hassan deliberately put them at the top of his extremely tall stairway just to give people a scare.
* In the Alan E. Nourse story "The Martyr", immortality threatens to cause cultural stagnation, because people who have been made immortal hang on to their positions of influence forever (stultifying the ambitions of new talent) and feel no pressure to get anything accomplished.
* In the Alchemist arc, a mind-controlled Esper girl uses magic against Touma, which causes serious bleeding due to an Esper's incompatibility with magic. After she's knocked unconscious, Aisa Himegami
* In the Alestorm song "Nancy the Tavern Wench", the eponymous Nancy's tavern is such a hive.
* In "The Alien Mummy", the Alien Mummy turns Superman and Wonder Woman into gold statues. They are still conscious and can see and hear. Wonder Woman is able to use telepathy to break the mind control the Mummy put on El Dorado. While El Dorado is fighting the Mummy, he tricks him into standing in front of Superman, who blasts the Mummy with his heat vision, destroying his amulet and turning them back to normal.
* In the Aligned continuity, Cybertronians are dependent on Energon. Granted, there is essentially oceans of the stuff, right up until Megatron corrupted the Core of Cybertron and it eventually had to be shut down.

* In the all-around final, Russian Viktoria Komova, who had had the top qualifying score in the all-around and ended the third rotation trailing Gabby Douglas by less than four-tenths of a point, was the last competitor to perform on floor exercise. Komova outscored Douglas on floor, but not by enough of a margin to make up the difference, and ultimately placed second to Douglas by about two and a half tenths.
* In "The Allergy", upon being hit with a large number of acupuncture needles, Gumball declares "I can smell dancing and taste purple."
* In the alpha session, Dirk initially names Jane the leader "in spirit" while claiming that he will be in charge of all actual planning and strategizing; however, he later admits that he was wrong, and that the real leader all along was Roxy — the one who had always worked the hardest at making the whole team get along and cooperate with each other despite all the conflicts and teen drama that plagued their session.
* In the alpha session, Dirk (Rose's genetic father) takes on the Smart Guy role as the team's chief strategist (though he does have an AI double to help him out).
* In the Alpha timeline, the Condesce floods the Earth, artificially turning it into an Ocean Planet to make it more hospitable for an aquatic alien such as herself.
* in the Alpha universe admires Dad's clothing so much, he makes it mandatory for the population to wear it.
* In the alpha universe, Dave Strider made a massive fortune by manufacturing objects with 3-D jpeg artifacts. He made so much money that he could afford to dispose of his unsold wares
* In the Alpha universe, the Draconian Dignitary became the Condesce's second in command after Jack Noir was imprisoned by Prospit.
* In the alpha version of the game, Fox slowly raises his tail, also like a white flag for surrender.
* In the alternate ending, Audrey was eaten after she died and Rick Moranis' character got eaten too.
* In the alternate ending where Manny chooses to be evil, he and Frida are confirmed by
* In the alternate future (courtesy of Biff), Doc holds up a newspaper where the front page story is about how he was proclaimed insane and committed. While he is a strange, prominent figure in the town, it doesn't really merit the front page. Particularly implausible is the fact that "Doc Brown" is used to identify him in the banner headline, while the sub head refers to him as "local inventor" or whatever. Because yeah, only a minority of readers would require clarification.
* In the alternate universe episode, Phoebe in this timeline is a successful stock broker, but the stress of her job causes her to have a heart attack. When Ross tells her that having a heart attack is a sign that Phoebe should slow things down, Chandler jokes that having a heart attack is a sign that she should have died instead, causing everyone in the hospital room to shoot him dirty looks.
* In the Alternate Universe of Episode 4, she never dyed it, but dialogue and her screen name imply she wants to.
* In the alternate universe seen in "There But For the Grace of God", the Goa'uld actually succeed in conquering Earth and killing the counterparts of SG-1 (except for Teal'c, who never defected from Apophis in this universe). (Teal'c got to die offscreen when the base was programmed to
* In the Alton Brown episode, he takes a swig of one of the mid-grade sauces and comments on how he could improve it.
* In the Amagai filler arc, Lurichiyo, the heir to the Kasumioji clan, is set to mary Shun, who actually looks forward to being married to her. One of her friends has a similar arrangement, which she is not very happy about, and arranges to meet Lurichiyo and her other friends one last time before she's married.
* In the Amazon Basin, people originally lived in small tribes that were basically family groups. Because everyone was related in some way, the men's only real option was to raid one of the other tribes that they were always at war with. This was important for them not only because women carried on the family line, but they were the only ones who knew how to make the sacred cheecha beer.

* In "The American Dad After School Special", Steve revealing that his new girlfriend is chubby makes Stan horribly self-conscious about his own weight and begins excessively dieting, with help from an enthusiastic coach named Zach. However, despite Stan's best efforts he keeps gaining weight, and it appears as though his family is sabotaging his diet by injecting his vegetables with fat so as to make him feel bad and apologize to Steve. However, after being sent home from work after passing out during a physical, the family confronts him about his weight issue and state that he is really anorexic. At that point, it's revealed Stan wasn't getting fatter, he was suffering from a delusional state of mind and lost so much weight he was practically a walking skeleton. His personal trainer also turned out to be a hallucination, and Francine and Hayley's "sabotage" was really an attempt to make Stan better.
* In the American military, junior enlisted members who are single live in the barracks, and are expected to eat most of their meals in the chow halls.
* In the American military, KP duty is an occasional privilege for trainees in Basic Training, though they don't handle any of the food. The trainees are typically kept busy washing dishes, mopping floors, and cleaning up messes, at least in the Air Force. It is considered a privilege because, while it can be back-breakingly exhausting, the trainees can eat whatever they want for mealtime and get to avoid doing Physical Fitness training for a day.
* In the American release and the original radio version, the word "Belgium" is a terrible profanity in every location except Earth. As the single worst swearword in the universe, it is brought up (appropriately) when the ship crashed into a 15-mile high statue of Arthur Dent Throwing A Cup At The Nutromatic Machine.
* In the American remake, Tea admits that she lets her parents set her up with the sons of family friends to keep them in the dark about her lesbianism.
* In the American South, it's pretty common for people to get rid of their hangover by... having some more booze the next morning (
* In the American version, Andy and Erin role play Andy breaking up with his current girlfriend so he and Erin can start their ship. They play it with Erin reacting a few different ways.
* In The Amory Wars: In Keeping Secrets of Silent Earth: 3, Wilhelm Ryan is captured and being sentenced to death by a council of 78, with only one of them refusing. When the representative explains his refusal and leaves, Ryan makes this declaration:
* In the Ancho-V Games stage, ther are platforms with propellers on them; shooting the propellers will move those platforms and ink will rebound off of the propellers in the process. The damage that the propelled ink causes is negligible, but
* In the ancient days of Calimshan, a war took place between the people of the namesake djinni Calim and those of the marid Ajhuu. The end result was Calim sinking the city of Ahjuutal into the Shining Sea. Eventually, many centuries later, the ruins were located relatively close to the surface by local fishermen, mostly intact.
* In the ancient days of YouTube, there was a video gag dubbing a cutscene from
* In the ancient past, King Farahn and Queen Siphaniana were deeply obsessed with one another, and the schemes they came up with to control one another ultimately resulted in the destruction of their kingdom. In the modern day, King Farahn and Gwynn herself believe Gwynn to be Queen Siphaniana's reincarnation. King Farahn gives Gwynn power and protects her for this reason, but also keeps her under a tight grip. And since Gwynn has not inherited Queen Siphaniana's obsession with King Farahn, she has been finding his possessiveness difficult to deal with.
* In the ancient world (aside from the Hebrews — see above), honoring another nation's deities was considered a friendly gesture. Cyrus of Persia, for example, paid homage to Marduk, a Babylonian god, while allowing the Jews to rebuild a temple to their own god.
* In the Andes region, there's the story of the Pishtaco, a cadaverous humanoid who murders people to steal their body fat and organs. What it does with the fat depends on the story; in some versions it eats the fat, while in others it sells the fat to corporations to use as machine lubricant. While the fat-stealing aspects are old, the idea about the Pishtaco stealing organs and working with corporations is new; folklorists attribute this to locals's beliefs that factories from the USA and other developed countries are exploiting them. This myth is more dangerous than it sounds; visitors to the regions have actually gotten

* In the Andrew Garfield film, after he's injured fighting the Lizard and needs to get across town as soon as superhumanly possible, construction workers (led by the father of a little boy Spidey saved) line up their cranes to give him a clear path, and a news chopper
* In "The Android Invasion", it's revealed Styggron convinced Crayford that he only has one eye. Near the end of the story, the Doctor tells Crayford to take his eyepatch off, and he discovers the eye under there.
* In the Android saga, this was going to be averted by the heroes suggesting to leave the city and fight Android 19 and 20 elsewhere. It is the subverted with Android deciding that destroying the city and everyone in it would give the fighters a place with no people. It is
* In the Android Saga, when a motorist yells at Dr. Gero for blocking the road, Gero retaliates by grabbing him by the throat and strangling him so hard that his head * in the Anglosphere and nowhere else, in which the candidate with the fewest first-choice votes is eliminated if no candidate gets a majority, and the second choice votes on those ballots are added to the other candidates. Repeat until somebody gets at least 50%+1 votes.
* In the "A Night and a Day" video, Yol Gurro drinks a cup of some unidentified coffee blend. Before, he had been quite stoic; after drinking, he dances wildly, shoots laser bolts from his feet, and flies.
* In the animated adaptation, the Head Archangel, who is Nanael and Hachiel's boss, took his place instead.
* In the animated adaptation this often turns comical, with one attempt to tunnel into the Abbey repulsed with a vat of
* In the animated movie, the Beast was troubled, angry, violent and hostile, but he wasn't completely without remorse, as mentioned in the animated movies example above. In the live action film, he's much more uncaring and has no second thoughts about imprisoning Belle in a tower.
* In the animated movie the Bimbettes were just silly airheads without any real malice towards anyone, but in this version they act more snobbish, disdainful, and actively dislike Belle. When Gaston has Belle locked up alongside her father, they actually laugh at her expense.
* In the animated series episode "Grandma's Visit", Ralph tries to annoy Sarah's grandma by preparing several pranks, only to fall victim to his own tricks or have the prank not work out as he intended. One of his attempts was to put a whoopee cushion in a chair where he intended Grandma to sit, which instead is sat in by Sarah's dad.
* In the animated version of' Krispy Kreme Doughnuts routine, the donuts inside the box look terrified as Gabriel tells them in detail how bad they're gonna get it.
* In the animated version of "The Labyrinth", Iznogoud is about to paint a sign on the magic labyrinth in which he plans to permanently trap the sultan (who keeps getting distracted by other games and activities) when a policeman walks up and fines him for vandalism. Iznogoud tries to explain to the policeman that he is the grand vizier, and so outranks the policeman; the unimpressed policeman retorts, "And I'm the Queen of Sheba!"
* In the animated version of the story "Incognito", Iznogoud persuades the sultan to go out
* In the animated version, they identify themselves to civilians as Division 6 of whatever real governmental agency would sound appropriate. So for episode dealing with alien plants, they'd identify themselves as Department of Agriculture, Division 6, an episode dealing with extraterrestrial drugs would have them calling themselves Drug Enforcement Agency, Division, 6, and so on. It's later revealed that "Division 6" is the name of the branch of M.I.B. they work in.
* In the anime adaptation, he did it again to Fuuma Kotarou, but since the way to the sky was obstructed by a castle, he crashed there, leaving quite a hole. Also later, his Megaton Punch catches

* In the anime adaptation, the battle is less one-sided, as Gray Fox
* In the anime, a filler episode focuses on a hanyou called Gyu-oh, who appears to be human, but who turns out to be human by day and a youkai by night. His father was the human and his mother was a bull-youkai.
* In the anime, after Kobayashi's tried explaining what a seesaw actually is, Tohru and Kanna start using it to launch each other sky-high.
* In the anime, after Saitou casually drops the fact that he's married (and the manga has to add a
* In the anime and manga, Utena Tenjou refuses to wear the standard girls' school uniform on the ground the rules don't specify who has to wear which. However, she doesn't wear a boy's uniform either, but a modified jacket from the boys' uniform options plus
* In the anime, Anju Kitahara has more than one whiff of this, being a
* In the anime, Archduke Gorgon was apparently a Dr. Hell's ally. In the last chapters we learnt he was a
* In the anime, a similar scene has Kagome yelling some more at him because she's embarrassed at having broken down in tears.
* In the anime, Boa Hancock does this for Luffy at the beginning of every episode while they're on the boat in transit from The Island of Women to Impel Down.
* In the anime, both of the Grant boys show traces of this: older brother Brian is one for Ginny, younger brother Michael is another for Miki. They mellow out later. Ironically, Michael's most direct rival for Miki isn't Yuu... but the
* In the anime Cluster Edge, artificial soldiers are created by the government to fight wars. The soldiers have no memories and therefore no emotions due to being raised in test tubes. A right's activist gives memories to one of the main soldiers, Chrome, and although Chrome is self aware and very human, he still doesn't believe himself so.
* In the anime, "damn," "bastard" and "hell" are thrown around semi-liberally (a given, because "hell" is a part of the name of one
* In the anime episode "Bulbasaur, the Ambassador", Jessie, James, and Meowth stow away on an airship, accidentally get locked in a freezer, and end up frozen into blocks of ice. After they thaw out, they're fine.
* In the anime Erina is more straightforward with her words (also happening in
* In the anime especially, Shadow Naoto. Said Shadow is seemingly quite playful, and breaks down into tears at rejection, and is generally quite lovable with its oversized lab coat. Until Naoto pushes too many buttons, at which point the Shadow stops being so cute and childish and proceeds to
* In the anime, Faye Valentine regularly invokes this trope for her own benefit (
* In the anime filler episode focused on Tsu's internship, Seal Hero Selkie does his best to appear adorable, despite the fact he has a very muscular physique and masculine features. None of his crew believes his attempts make him cute in any way...except Tsu herself.
* In the anime, Heiji himself has one with the 30-something restaurant owner Heishirou Bizen.
* In the anime, he is reduced to scavenging in a junkyard to survive.
* In the anime, I-401 comes under torpedo attack from her sister submarines I-400 and I-402 as one of the more significant battles.
* In the anime, Ichigo did this to Ishida after catching on to his tailing him from school from back in the latter's introduction arc. Ishida, who could sense his tail's presence from the get-go, didn't give a damn.
* In the anime, Isley ends the war in the north, because he does not want any more Awakened Beings from his army to be killed in battle (indirectly, he also rescues many warriornesses).
* In the anime, Itachi uses a genjutsu that makes the victim feel like a crow is crawling out of their mouth.
* In the anime itself, any of Lupin's attempts to bed Fujiko begin and end similarly.

* In the anime, it's noted that Goh's parents were heavily concerned on Goh not having a social life because he spent all his time in front of his computer to search for Mew. This fanfic shows that they did
* In the anime, Jibanyan mentions that he loves an idol group named Next Harmeowny,
* In the anime, Jonouchi (and on occasion Honda) is infamous for making a bizarre as hell creepy smile that is very much in the
* In the anime, Joriri joins the Keroro Platoon officially during an episode of the 6th season. However, because
* In the anime, Kenshin goes there alone and then Seijuuro Hiko shows up to talk to him.
* In the anime, Mei bursts into tears in Keitaro's chest when she thinks her step-sister Naru doesn't love her.
* In the anime, Mila-Rose is made very dark-skinned, as is her superior, Tier Harribel. In the manga, Mila-Rose is paler and Tier Harribel seems to be a
* In the anime, Naru experiences the death of her first love as he is impaled in front of her and bleeds to death in her arms. Furthermore, because he wasn't even human and his body apparently disintegrated on death, she can't confide in pretty much anyone (including her family). While she clearly reacts to this in the episode itself and two episodes later it's shown she was out of school to grieve, she resolves it rather quickly at the end of that episode and is pretty much her old self again.
* In the anime Navarone Arc, the Straw Hats are focused solely on escaping the G-8 base with their acquired gold. In
* In the anime, Omega-Xis uses the Andromeda Key to blow up a planetoid as a diversion to get away from his pursuers; Cygnus managed to trail him despite such efforts.
* In the anime, one would probably be very confused as to why Guts has an entire knightly order working for the Holy See trying to follow his tracks and seemingly convinced that he's
* In the anime, on the plane ride that kicked off the America arc the characters mix up Cerberus and an identical looking stuffed animal.
* In the anime, Piccolo's name appears as "Piccoro" on Dr. Gero's interface.
* In the anime, Ranma had to go through special training to learn a move that would let him defeat Happosai without using any strength, but collecting energy from the surroundings and then releasing it. He learns it, but it takes him lots more to grab the scroll containing the cure for his condition, which Happosai himself had among his clothes.
* In the anime, Ryoma gets a slap to the face from Tezuka for being arrogant and rude during the Senbatsu arc. In the same arc, Kevin Smith gets slapped by his coach for talking back to him.
* In the anime, Saito can't understand anything anyone is saying just after he is summoned to be Louise's familiar. Bothered by his nonstop babbling, Louise casts a silence spell on him. Instead, it magically translates everything for him.
* In the anime, Sakura's sempai Rei Tachibana is the star of Tomoeda Primary School's track team. And then she found a strange sort-of ferret that turned out to be a Clow Card...
* In the anime, season 2 (Japanese season number), Keroro stole Natsumi's body to find her "weakness", but the situation quickly devolved into a
* In the anime series, Ataru steals Lum's bikini by using a sticky dart gun to latch onto and pull off her
* In the anime series proper, Cell was more-or-less a straight villain. In the video games, however, he steps it up on the ham, with each new release making him even hammier.
* In the anime series, she's a closeted lesbian who is secretly in love with her childhood frenemy Shiori Takatsuki,
* In the anime series, Trip loses his respect for Alder after seeing him act lazy and foolish. He later regains his respect for him after Alder
* in the anime, she proceeds to post Tsukasa's misdeeds to the Phan-Site, turning Tsukasa into a Mementos target. Afterwards, she texts an apology to Makoto and invites her to come to her house and share her Buchimaru collection.

* In the anime, Shin tries to make Yuria think Kenshiro is dead and murders two henchmen who reveal Kenshiro survived in front of Yuria.
* In the anime's "Let's Pop Together" song, one of the comments scrolling by during the video is "what are they even parodying?". For the record, the music video for
* In the anime's third episode, Grell accidentally makes skull shaped topiary out of EVERY bush in the manor. "His" repeated suicide attempts also count.
* In the anime, Syaoran has Sakura (Gentleman) and Meiling (Scoundrel).
* In the anime, Tetsu and Karada make a great couple. In the manga, Tetsu
* In the anime the Duke of Orleans tried to invoke this by having a very girlish and young-looking henchman impersonate
* In the anime, the Egyptian God Cards cannot be affected by any card effect apart from each other's (for more than one turn), and in Ra's case, not even that. However, in the first duel with The Seal Of Orichalcos, it does raise Obelisk's ATK. Apparently, because the Orichalcos is more ancient, it has more power than the Egyptian Gods. This in and on itself makes little sense as at the end of the arc the Egyptian Gods battle the Great Leviathan, essentially the God of the Orichalcos, and kick its ass.
* In the anime the outcome is different. Kohta briefly reciprocates Yuka's feelings with a kiss, but almost immediately after forgets he ever kissed and it's never mentioned again. At the end of the anime he appears to have gotten with no one, but it is hinted Lucy returns to him.
* In the anime, the Professor also gets one when she comes up with the idea of giving Sakamoto the scarf that allows him to speak.
* In the anime the teacher never explained why the boys were in the Special Class. While in Uesugi and Kozuka's case one can immediately guess (lopsided grades), and in Wakatake's case the reason was given in Episode 3 (Highly fluctuating performance, which also earned his epithet "The Wave"), the reason Kuroki is there was never discussed. In the novels, the explanation is
* In the anime, Tomoya beautifully (and nervously) confesses to Nagisa just like any normal guy would.
* In the anime, two one-shot characters, Princess Ori and Kengyu, are a play on Hikoboshi and Orihime, as well.
* In the anime, two younger Amazons, Ling-Ling and Lung-Lung, also fell for Ranma, much to his consternation and Akane's annoyance.
* In the anime Usagi's little brother Shingo develops a crush on Ami. This really isn't all that unreasonable given that the age difference between them is just about 4 years (Shingo's around 11, Ami is 15) exactly the same for his older sister and Mamoru, in fact the Ami/Shingo pairing isn't even all that uncommon in fan fiction. It helps that Shingo is often presented as more mature than his sister.
* In the anime version of this scene, Student A just gets hit in the head with a rolled-up magazine.
* In the anime version, Ryouko Momoi agreed to temporarily be Namura-sensei's beard in regards to Meiko Akizuki; he thought he wasn't worth all the trouble Meiko had already gone through, and wanted her to be free.
* In the anime version, this is technically subverted, as Ichika is totally oblivious to the romantic desires/intentions of his friends. Even when they confront him directly about dating him, it goes right over his head.
* In the anime version, when Nami sees a lion with a freaky face in the Thriller Bark arc, she gives up the ghost out of fear.
* In the anime, when Meiling shows up at school for the first time, she goes to a rather freaked out Syaoran and tells him that she wanted to walk to school with him. Then she calls him a bad boy and glomps him in tears, making him freak out even more.
* In the anime, when the Shikon Pearl is contaminated by Tsubaki the evil
* In the anime, Yamato is voiced by Rika Matsumoto, Pokemon's Ash original voice actress, and the episode title used a "De Arinsu" verbal tic, rather than Keroro's

"De Arimasu". The narrator even had to make it clear that the viewer still was watching Keroro after a few minutes into the episode, before the recurring Keroro characters appeared in the story.
* In the anime, Youhei and Ookusu catch Noma and Takamiya peeping on other two people (
* In the anime, Yusuke appears to leave the real Sayuri painting (his mother's
* In the anime, Yuuka is seen groping her during the beach party in episode 13 (they were both drunk). And when Usui was made principal of the school and ordered the girls to bodypaint each other, Yuuka chose Takaki. She paints her midriff, but the overhead camera angle and Takaki's moaning makes it appear she's going down on her.
* In "The Annoying Red Planet", Detective Murdoch asks Constable Crabtree why he was summoned to a scene where a man's body is hanging high in a tree. Crabtree draws Murdoch's attention to the lack of
* In the "Ants in the Plants" game, ZZ makes a joke about leaf-cutter ants, and a trumpet goes "Wah-wah-wah-wahhhhhhhh" in response.
* In "The Anvil Chorus", Plucky similarly complains about an opera he's expected to perform, in which
* In "The Ape", Miss Simian mentions a teaching award that took her 754 years to get.
* In the Apocalypse book that ended the series, a sidebar details the horrific fates of the aforementioned writers. Cannibalism is involved.
* In the Apocalypse War arc, the captive Chief Judge was given brain surgery that removed any desire to resist interrogation.
* In the apocryphal book of Enoch, the archangel of the afterlife Ramiel is
* In the (apocryphal) Infancy Gospel of Thomas he killed a couple of kids for getting in his way, and then drove his teacher insane, and then took away people's voices when they got upset about it. Joseph convinced him to fix everything, but it wasn't until some kid accidentally died near him and he got unfairly blamed for it that he apparently started to realize what a social nightmare it is to make everyone hate you with your superpowers, and started ingratiating himself. When he brought the kid (Zeno) back to life, he was really annoyed.
* In the apocryphal Questions of Bartholomew, it seems this extends to the Devil as well. After Jesus's disciple, Bartholomew, asks to see Satan so he can ask him some questions about his fall from grace, Jesus has Satan hoisted out of Hell in chains. The sight of this causes all the disciples to
* In the Apollo 13 incident, the Lunar Module essentially functioned as a makeshift escape pod for much of the flight.
* In the Apollo Justice arc, the Gavin brothers. You have the older brother Kristoph Gavin, defense attorney extraordinaire. Always a calm, cool and collected person who is not afraid to own your ass in court while being very courteous.
* In "The Apology", Jerry dates a woman who undresses immediately after getting home. When Jerry himself tries doing it, she is unimpressed and breaks up with him.
* In "The Apology", she says that the signature on Gumball's report card is "the most pathetic attempt at forgery I've ever seen in all my 300,000 years of teaching, and I taught during the Stone Age!"
* in the Appalachians) and so don’t count either. Even then, the Northwest Territory was still inhabited by Native Americans, English fur traders who retained their citizenship after American independence, and settlers from the former New France, so Marietta can only be the first pioneer city if one discounts everything else.
* In the Appendices, Tolkien recounts the War of the Dwarves and Orcs, which broke out after orcs killed Thrór, heir of Durin and desecrated his body. After the final battle of that war, the dwarves had to cremate their dead, being too numerous to bury them in the traditional stone tombs, and earth burials being unacceptable. As a consequence, to say of one's ancestor that "He was a burned dwarf" came to be a boast that he had fought and died in this battle.
* In the April 9, 1986 strip, Orson finds a book of jokes and claims that he's in the mood for a good laugh. Upon opening the book,

* In the aptly named episode "Brian's A Bad Father", Brian becomes one when he meets up with his son Dylan Flannigan and discovers his television connections. He then exploits these (and Dylan's kind nature) to improve his failing writing career in the TV business. He's found out and disowned by the end of the episode, leading him to be kicked off the writing board. Brian and Dylan do reconcile by the end of the episode.
* In the aptly named episode "Pee", the entire plot revolves around this when a waterpark reaches critical urine mass and turns into a massive pee tsunami, trapping everyone inside the park.
* In the aptly-named story "Poop!", Bertie brings his dog Whiffer to a party, but he poops, so Bertie picks it up. One thing leads to another, and the poop ends up landing in the pool.
* In the arcade game Rastan Saga (releases outside Japan as simply "Rastan"), the attract mode's
* In the arc concerning Sheridan's capture and imprisonment, the EA interrogator notes that they want him to make a public confession, where a
* In the architects sketch, after Mr Wiggin's tirade of insults towards the city gents, they simply reply "Well we're sorry you feel like that."
* In the arc "The Family Man", something that's gruesomely killing families turns out to just be an old man with a big knife. And the mysterious beastie that's eating people outside the town of Doglick in "Good Intentions" turns out to just be a giant boar. Notably, the titular Family Man scares John more than most supernatural villains in the series.
* In the arc where Hannelore's mother sends her a personal assistant she doesn't want, she consistently calls them "Taffy" and ignores their quiet correction that "It's Tilly, ma'am." Given Hannelore's irritation at the situation, it seems like
* In the area of commercials, the definitive Motor Mouth is no doubt actor
* in the area of-surgery at that, since they have to link up all the nerves.
* In the Argentinian and Spanish versions, Lalo tracks down the witch who turned him into a woman, and she agrees to turn him back (after laughing for a while). They hold hands, she starts her mystic chanting... and promptly falls backward, dead.
* In the Argentinian "March to the Flag" a difference in word split created out of whole cloth the brave hero General Susvín: the original lyrics are: "cuando triste la Patria esclavizada/con valor sus vínculos rompió" ("when sad the enslaved Homeland/bravely her ties broke"), but the last verse is also understandable as "... con valor Susvín culos rompió" ("bravely, Susvín ripped assholes").
* In the Argent Tournament, players can joust against fellow tournament participants on horseback, as well as against the Scourge's undead minions in other daily quests.
* In the "Argument Clinic" sketch, a man goes to the eponymous clinic for an argument, but all he receives is negation — which is to say, this.
* In "The Aristo-Cat", Hubie and Bertie play a series of pranks on a millionaire's spoiled cat who doesn't know how to take care of himself after he drives his mistress's butler to quit. After getting chased around by an angry dog, the cat ends up in his bed, where he's convinced the whole thing was a dream. Then it turns out the dog and the mice are in bed with him too.
* In "The Ark in Space", the Fourth Doctor attempts to talk Noah into shutting down the stack before the creature feeding off its energy is strong enough to break out, causing Noah to blast him unconscious with a stun pistol ("If you'd been down there with me, Noah, y—"). After several minutes of plot has elapsed, Sarah wakes him and he announces, "—ou wouldn't find it so amusing." He then complains he was "cut off mid-sentence! I could have been saying something important.... I
* In "The Ark", Rodney is stuck somewhere in the space station looking out at space. He starts panicking when he spots a piece of equipment hurtling toward the glass from outside. It hits... and nothing happens. Rodney's relief quickly turns into terror as the glass starts to crack. He only just gets into his space suit in time.

* In the Arlong Pirates, Arlong has Chew, Kuroobi and Hachi as his officers.
* In the "Armadeaddon" storyline, there's apparently nothing unusual about the idea that a prop-replica bat'leth in a comic book store would be a fully functional zombie-killing weapon. (Similarly, in a
* In "The Armageddon Game", O'Brien and Bashir are helping a planet destroy their stocks of a biomechanical virus called Harvesters. Unfortunately the weapons are so terrible the inhabitants are determined that no knowledge of how to make them should survive, even in the hands of Starfleet personnel.
* In the armed forces, obviously everybody has to wear uniforms that cause them to more or less dress exactly the same. For example, the current-issue US Army uniform is the Army Combat Uniform — exciting name, right? The shirt worn under the "blouse" is just a tan t-shirt. Any tan t-shirt can be worn under the blouse with anything on it, as long as it doesn't show when the blouse is on. Depending on the chain of command, the blouse may not be allowed to be removed if the shirt underneath is non-uniform. Since most Soldiers wear t-shirts with unit-specific designs on them, this isn't often a problem. Another example would be the wearing of unit-specific baseball caps instead of the issue headwear. This is more common in the Air Force, and it's
* In The Army Now: Bones and Jack, two misguided guys, join the reserves in order to put a permanent end to their unemployed status. However, they soon realise that there is more to being in the army than meets the eye.
* In the "Army of One" chapter, we find out that the eponymous Doctor of
* In the "Army Protection Racket" sketch, the Colonel stops the sketch because it's poorly written and he didn't get any funny lines. A Mafioso character (Michael Palin) mutters that he was just too lazy to write a proper punchline, which he denies.
* In the army, this is known as "Fragging." The idea is that squaddies become fed up with being ordered to their deaths and shoot one of their superiors in the back (or face) or throw a live grenade at him, then blame it on the enemy. One soldier even wrote a nasty letter to the munitions plant who manufactured his grenades because they failed to blow up his seargeant.
* In the "Arrival" DLC, we finally get a look at Admiral Hackett, and it is quite clear from the number of scars on his face that he has
* In "The Arsenal of Freedom", a simulacrum of a Starfleet captain unquestioningly accepts Riker's claim that his ship is called
* In the Artorias of the Abyss DLC, the Chosen Undead is thrown back in time to Oolacile, a citystate of magic users which
* In the Aschen arc, an apparently peaceful alien race covertly take over the Earth by promising the humans advanced technology in exchange for their friendship but are secretly sterilizing the local population. Ten years down the road after
* In the Ask Researcher Twilight, Twilight has turned Rarity into one of these.
* In "The Assassination of Abraham Lincoln" a first season episode of
* In "The Astral Prison", Mumm-Ra transforms into the Nether Witch, which is implied to be an alternate identity he regularly assumes.
* In the "Atlantis Attacks" story of a Spider-Man Annual, Spider-Man and She-Hulk are trying to stop a rampaging Abomination. She-Hulk gets knocked out and the fight moves on to a bridge. Spidey notes that all the civilians are clear, and Abomination is focused solely on him. He muses that maybe he can end this now, by putting everything he has into one, tremendous ... PUNCH!!!
* In the Atlantis Sourcebook, a parasite called a Brain Feeder is said to "...excrete a chemical that anesthetizes the area of the brain it is eating..." This would be unnecessary, as there are no pain receptors in the brain, and therefore it can't feel pain.
* In "The ATM with a Heart of Gold", Simon punching his name in on Mr. Wilson's Dial pad becomes
* In the audio commentary for Stage 21 (the infamous "pizza festival" episode), it's actually directly stated that head writer Ichiro Okouchi thought that the plot at that point in the show was getting very serious and wanted to give everyone a break.

* In the audio drama "The Natural History of Fear", characters with the voices of the main cast live in a totalitarian city with its own version of
* In the audio story "The Runaway Train", an aquatic alien race to whom oxygen is poisonous sent a terraforming device to Earth which would've turned it into a
* In "The Audit Couple", Felix lets it slip to an IRS agent that Oscar is behind on his taxes and tries to cover his tracks by saying that he moved and became a transsexual by the name of Rhonda... Rhonda Pencilcup.
* In the August 25th, 1996 strip, Garfield made a wood-and-brick one-sided replica of an old well and alerts Odie that Timmy fell down in it. He alerts Odie to save him, and so Odie does dive through the "Old Well", but cause it's a trick by Garfield, Odie only gets his face grounded hard, and Garfield tries tricking him again that now Timmy's "climbing up the water tower".
* In the Australia Day promo, Deadpool has a personal grudge against the country of Australia for producing
* In the Australian version, rather than threatening Kakeru with silence, Yuji threatens to 'break up with him.'
* In the autistic community, the term "allistic" are used to refer to the dominant/most common brain type, due to the negative implications of calling nonautists "normal", as that would imply there being something wrong with autism in general. Said terms are sometimes used in a
* In the autobiography of former UK Cabinet Minister Ed Balls, he describes an occasion in 1998, when he phoned
* In the Automatron DLC, Junkbots, Swarmbots, Tankbots, and Scrapbots are heavily modified Protectrons, Mr. Handys, Sentry Bots, and Assaultrons, respectively, and in turn have their own sub-variations (Cybermech, Servomech, Integrated, Quantum, etc.).
* In the AVA short "The Virus", Second Coming uses a drawn hammer in an attempt to destroy the virus program. This just causes it to hatch, releasing a powerful spider-like monster that actively starts destroying the computer and attacking the stick figures.
* In "The Avatar State," an Earth Kingdom general attempts to induce the Avatar State by putting first Aang, then Katara in danger.
* In the Avengers themselves, Captain America is the leader, overlapping all four types. He's level-headed but also inspiring and capable of pushing a plan through opposition.
* In the aviation community, sending the new guy to take "exhaust samples" by way of holding a trash bag up to the exhaust vents of turning engines. Hilarity ensues. Or how about sending the new guy to Maintenance Control for the keys to the airplane?
* In the AVM short "The Rollercoaster", Yellow builds an intricate roller coaster... But fails to account for Minecraft physics. Instead of gracefully flying off a ramp and to the finish line, the minecarts just drop off the edge.
* In "The Awakening", Beth Carter suffers from alexithymia which prevents her from feeling emotions. However, she receives a revolutionary brain implant developed by Dr. Steven Molstad which allows her to access the full range of emotions for the first time. Beth moves in with Molstad's colleague Joan Garrison so she can slowly adjust to the outside world and learn how to process her emotions in the normal way. While staying in Joan's apartment, she begins to have strange experiences such as
* In the Aztec religion, celebrations to Xipe Totec, the god of fertility, required that sacrifices be flayed alive during the Vernal Equinox. The priests would then go about in the skins for some time.
* In the Azure City siege, the death knight has hobgoblins throw themselves at the wall and die by the hundreds so that their bodies will create a ramp he can ride up.
* In the Babylonian Talmud, Chapter 82a of Tractate Yoma mentions pregnancy cravings for non-kosher food. The passage discusses a pregnant woman who craves pork on Yom Kippur! (Yep, despite that pork is the most (in-)famous non-kosher foodstuff and Yom Kippur is the only fast ordained by the Torah and the most important and holy day of the whole year, it's still allowed! Still, check with your rabbi first.)

* In the Back by one of his own men after uncovering a plot to assassinate President Santiago. He doesn't actually die but he's comatose until "Revelations" in season 2. The security man who shot him (who is still above suspicion at the moment) then guns down his co-conspirators in cold blood and claims to the other guards that they took a shot at him. The other guards go along with this, despite the deceased's PPG clearly not having been fired, because it's a fellow cop (their beloved boss) who got shot.
* In the Back died, but the NYPD's reaction was largely the same as in a straight example.
* In the background canon however, this is played with. After discovering Warp travel, humanity quickly went on to become one of the most extensive and technologically-advanced civilizations to have ever existed, surpassing even the
* In the background Dark Elves do this with slave troops (one story has them herd their recently captured slaves onto the battlefield where they shoot them down to serve as cover, interfere with the enemies' cavalry and to demoralize the enemy (it works)) though it doesn't happen in the game itself.
* In the background of "Secret of My Excess", Derpy Hooves interrupts a private moment between Lyra and Bon Bon, two ponies who are
* In the back of a school field trip bus they moon the cars behind them while slowly going up a mountain road.
* in the back of one of these. Not only did it strike a chord due to its sexual liberation themes, but because customized Chevrolet vans — the van itself is implied to be a post-factory conversion job — were starting to become popular with young adults in the mid-1970s.
* in the back seat of an occupied police car, the cop in the front seat notices, but then dismisses it.
* In the backstory, a godlike being called Adonalsium was broken into 16 pieces called Shards. Each shard had an Inent which defined its purpose (EG. Honor, Endowment, Ruin), and 16 people claimed claimed the shards. Because any two shards are equal in power and thus unable to overpower another, their conflicts consist largely of using people on the planets they're struggling over to gain an upper hand.
* In the backstory, Anri the Hero and Princess Artemis of Archanea weren't allowed to marry since
* In the backstory, Asuka went from considering herself the top pilot and a prodigy child to regard herself as an ugly, scarred, worthless freak and a failure due to being
* In the backstory, a supernatural entity decimated an entire cluster of villages with an outbreak of the Rash. The entity's plan boiled down to smuggling an infected person into one of the villages, having the person be part of a large gathering during their
* In the backstory, brothers Rengist and Kargor both fell in love with the same lady, Dozhdirena the Queen of Rain. She loved Rengist and married him, but only a year later, Kargor kidnapped her and stole his brother's memory. Dozhdirena let herself be starved to death rather than accept Kargor.
* In the backstory, Eldred summons a powerful demon called Marduk and charges him with destroying the armies of his political rivals, who are rebelling against the empire he was stewarding. Marduk obliges by
* In the backstory, Electro is mentioned as having killed cops that J. Jonah Jameson blamed on Spider-Man. In the present, Mr. Negative's attack on City Hall causes the deaths of several cops, including
* In the backstory for the Skypiea Arc, historical explorer Montblanc Noland reportedly found a city of gold on one of his voyages. His king was
* In the backstory, his company was one of the major financiers of the
* In the backstory, it is strongly implied that Pelinal Whitestrake, the legendary
* In the backstory, King Vrage the Gifted in the First Era forged a Nord empire that stretched across northern Tamriel, encompassing Skyrim, Solstheim, High Rock, Hammerfell, most of Morrowind and parts of Cyrodiil. After ruling for 78 years, Vrage the Gifted died and King Borgas took the throne to continue his father's conquests, but he was slain in battle with the Bosmer only a few years later. As Borgas was the last of the line of

* In the backstory, Madara Uchiha was the First Hokage's Number Two. Unfortunately for the rest of the world, he developed an
* In the backstory, most of the Great Houses trace their lineage back to a great
* In the backstory of Lina Inverse's homeworld (The "Red World" according to
* In the backstory of Robert's Rebellion, the Kingsguard at the Tower of Joy was the last stand of the Targaryen forces who refused to surrender. Ned Stark managed to slay them and then found out they were protecting Rhaegar Targaryen's last surviving son.
* In the backstory of so you don't get the chance to heal - but certain magic lores (the Lore of Life for normal people and the Lore of the Vampires for the undead) can restore lost wounds to bigger/more important models and/or add models back to the unit, simulating the casualties being either brought back to fighting fitness or literally reanimated from the ground.
* In the backstory of "The Return of the Archons" and "The Apple", mind control/brainwashing was used to make the population docile and happy.
* In the backstory of the series proper, a war was fought between rival Great Mages, aptly termed the Mage Wars. It culminated in the total and near-simultaneous destruction of both enemies, along with their respective strongholds, which were filled with magical artifacts. The resulting Cataclysm gouged vast craters and
* In the backstory of the setting, the empire of Netheril ultimately fell (and magic across the Realms was diminished from what it once used to be) because its wizard-rulers convinced themselves that the "gods" were really just other wizards who knew tricks they didn't feel like sharing. Eventually, one wizard called Karsus
* In the backstory, one of the reasons why the Forerunners fell to the Flood was because the former's AIs had started defecting en-masse to the latter due to the "logic plague", whereby the Flood indoctrinated and reprogrammed the AIs into believing
* In the backstory, Ozymandias attempted to form a super team called "Crime Busters" in the hope of better solving street-level crime. The Comedian then reminded him that it's meaningless in the fears of the atomic bomb.
* In the backstory, Perturabo suffered heavily from this, due to him and his legion being typecast as siege experts. They would get assigned either brutal meat-grinder sieges or garrison duty, with the latter featuring such madness as ten Iron Warriors guarding a planet with a population of millions — with the completion of a planetary campaign rarely heralding anything other than assignment to another meat-grinder. This was so prevalent that prior to the Drop Site Massacre, traitor marines constructing fortifications for Horus' forces were heard asking why the Iron Warriors weren't doing the work. This is particularly grim given that the Emperor's Children, another Space Marine Legion, were given special honours (such as being permitted to wear the Emperor's aquila on their breastplates, something no other Legion was allowed to do) because
* In the backstory, Piotr Vorkosigan made full General in his early twenties. There was a war going on at the time, and the Emperor wasn't able to give him more substantial rewards for his services like supplies or reinforcements. Despite this, Piotr proved himself a
* In the backstory, Prince Aaronev Sturmvoraus put his own daughter in a machine that, if it had worked, would have completely overwritten her mind with the one of the woman with whom he was madly in love. Instead, it grievously injured her.
* In the backstory, Princess Carolyn got pregnant as a teenager by the son of her mom's employer, and the boy agreed to marry her despite his well-off parents' reservations. Unfortunately, she suffered a miscarriage and the boyfriend's parents immediately cut her off. Fortunately, however, as she's able to go to college in California rather than get married at eighteen.
* In the backstory, Princess Pirlypat was cursed by the Mouse King and Mouse Queen to turn into an ugly nutcracker doll. Drosselmeyer eventually consults an astrologist who divines the solution in the stars - a young man who has never shaved nor worn boots must crack the uncrackable nut Krakatuk between his teeth, present it to the princess with his eyes closed, and take seven steps backward without stumbling...

* In the backstory, Queen Carolina was a stunning-looking woman and a power-hungry
* In the backstory, Queen Skywynne had a son, Jushtin. She was happy with him being Mewni's first male ruler, and he proved to be a great diplomat. But between his low magical ability and the weight of tradition, the people disliked him, and Skywynne eventually had a daughter Solaria to take the throne instead. Jushtin stepped aside without complaint. In hindsight,
* In the backstory, Richard briefly attempted a threeway with the lesbian couple he roomed with in college,
* In the back story, Roland's constantly joking best friend Cuthbert prefers a slingshot to a gun. In a possible subversion, the quiet, intelligent, and psychic Alain gets to use a machine gun at one point, and enjoys it very much.
* In the backstory, Selina Kyle went straight, fenced all her remaining goods and left Gotham entirely after she learned she was pregnant with her daughter Helena. It didn't help that Helena's biological father Bruce Wayne was murdered by the Joker less than a month after she was conceived. They managed to live a mostly normal life for ten years — until Black Mask II appeared on their doorstep and demanded Selina start working for him as Catwoman again. Selina said no, and long story short, it ended with her dead and Helena being taken in by her adoptive brother Jason Todd, who would raise her as his own daughter and (reluctantly) train her to be a vigilante like the rest of their family.
* In the backstory the Confederacy responded to an independence movement on Korhal IV by glassing the place with nuclear missiles. The whole plot kickstarts when Raynor, marshal of a tiny little backwater colony, joins the Sons of Korhal terrorist group out of spite against the Confederacy's suspiciously lengthy response to a Zerg infestation (and imprisoning him and his men for acting on their own). The Confederacy is basically using the Zerg invasions as a convenient tool to put down rebellious worlds and unite all Terrans under its banner out of fear, though this
* In the backstory the Ellimist's race had a love of strategy video games... and were promptly annihilated by another alien race that saw a transmitted tournament, didn't grasp the concept, and thought they were mass-murdering lunatics who must be stopped.
* In the backstory, the Emperor outlawed all religion during the formative years of the Imperium (except for the
* In the backstory, the Eugenic Wars between genetically engineered and other humans lead to genetic augmentation becoming a forbidden technique. They apparently got over this in later years; genetic modification for mundane purposes (correcting congenital defects, for example) is perfectly okay, but physical and mental augmentation is still illegal. In
* In the backstory, the girls' mother Patty was in a love triangle between her Muggle husband Victor (Prue, Piper, and Phoebe's father) and her own whitelighter Sam (Paige's father).
* In the backstory, the Imperium itself was this during the Emperor's reign and mankind's golden age. Almost everyone else is
* In the backstory, the inhabitants of the planet Rebirth fled Cybertron to get away from the war. Over time, a trio calling themselves the Optimus took control, and became utterly fascistic, stamping down on any dissent, leading to the rise of a violent rebellion identified as the Malignus. Then, during the 21st century the Decepticons showed up, and the planet got involved in the war again. The end result was the entire population of Master were forced off their world by humans and made to live on Cybertron, under the thumb of a
* In the backstory, the Minbari were this kind of alien towards humans, engaging in a kind of holy crusade to destroy humanity due to a terrible misunderstanding. They only change their minds and stop just short of destroying Earth when they discover that the human they captured for study not only has the soul of a Minbari, but is the great Valen (a figure who is as important to the Minbari as Jesus and Mohammed

* In the back story the Old Ones super-advanced race who seed life across the galaxy and fought the Necrons and their C'tan masters. Unlike their rivals in the Necrons, who used mechanical technology advanced enough to overcome physics, the Great Old Ones reputedly specialized in psychic and biological technology. They achieved great feats of psychic ability, and they used created the Orks and the Eldar.
* In the backstory, the Orieni see the Shadows and all their minions as worth of extermination for opposing the Vorlon, that they worship as their Living Gods (
* In the backstory, the player race (Kushans AKA Hiigarans) were an aggressive, expansionistic race that the Taiidans battled and had nearly extinguished. The galactic outcry for mercy was such that they allowed the Kushan to leave and settle on a planet in the galactic rim after swearing to never use/develop
* In the backstory, the reign of the legendary Storm King Andronicus Valois ended and the Long War began when sealed a treaty with Mechanicsburg by marrying the sister of the then Heterodyne, who he had fallen in love with. She turned out to be a typical Heterodyne who spied on him, corrupted him into becoming a monster that his allies were barely able to contain, and destroyed his Empire.
* In the backstory, there's Brynden "Bloodraven" Rivers, an albino sorcerer bastard who ruled as Hand of the King about a hundred years before the main timeline. Everyone was afraid of him and his spy network and supposed use of blood magic.
* In the backstory, there's Heinrich Kemmler, a necromancer from the time of the World Wars (and a serious appreciation for
* In the backstory, the rival city-states of Vos and Tarn went to war with each other, and the city-state of Iacon (the seat of power of the Autobots) opted to remain neutral. Emirate Xaaron urged his fellow councillors to take action and send peacekeepers to put an end to the war, but the High Councillor Traachon declined and even believed it would be to Iacon's benefit if Vos and Tarn destroyed each other. They actually did destroy each other with photon missile strikes, but the survivors of both cities rallied under a charismatic gladiator of Tarn who pointed out the Autobots could've done something,
* In the backstory, the Valyrian Freehold was the greatest and most powerful nation to exist due to learning the art of taming and riding dragons to conquer their enemies and carving out an rich empire on the back of slaves.
* In the backstory the war between the Necrons and the Old Ones was this, starting as the biggest case of
* In the backstory, the warlord Chin the Conqueror managed to overrun all of the Earth Kingdom save for the city and the peninsula where Avatar Kyoshi, then took a look at the Outer Wall and decided it was easier to try his luck against
* In the backstory, this is how EarthForce successfully destroyed a Centauri base in 2175: many times EarthForce squadrons had chased Centauri privateers (employed by House Jaddo's rivals to "protest" Jaddo's monopoly of Earth-Centauri trade) to Centauri Royal Navy base but had not attacked, but one day the human ships suddenly fired a volley of nukes, with the Centauri caught by surprise because, in their complete technological and military superiority, they didn't expect them to be so suicidally stupid.
* In the backstory, this was an early cause of contention between Tamaki (who was raised by his French mother) and Kyouya (pure Japanese). Tamaki kept suggesting all sorts of activities that Kyouya hated, but Japanese politeness required him to participate anyway. Eventually he got so pissed off that he snapped at Tamaki that he wasn't interested in his latest random scheme—which is a
* In the backstory, this was Mordeth's role in the city-state of Aridhol, leading to its transformation into Shadar Logoth. His new incarnation as Padan Fain pulls this trick several times, to the Seanchan High Lord Turak, Lord-Captain-Commander Pedron Niall of the Children of the Light, Elaida's White Tower, and Lord Riatin. All associations are brief, as Fain's MO is to manipulate, use, and abandon authority figures in the process of getting what he wants.

* In the backstory to the William Barton military science-fiction novel
* In the backstory, twenty kings banded together to form the World Government. Those kings went on to take their families and live in the Holy Land Mariejois, but one family opted out of that part of the plan and stayed in their own lands. The 19 other families went on to become the Celestial Dragons, one of the most
* In the backstory, Tywin purged the Reynes of Castamere in a single fell swoop and did a two-fer with the Sack of King's Landing where he dispatched Gregor Clegane to murder Rhaegar's children, while Jaime, albeit for entirely different reasons, murdered King Aerys II.
* In the backstory, we have the First Contact War. Started when the turians encountered the humans breaking the law. The humans being obvious newcomers and a completely unknown species were politely informed through pictographs that what they were doing was illegal... Oh wait wrong card, actually they proceed to attack without warning or given reason, entering a skirmish war with the human government, and then proceed to attack and occupy a colony, killing presumably hundreds of human civilians in the process (it's mentioned they weren't shy about using
* In the backstory, when the Emperor and Horus are having their final battle of a great galactic civil war, the Emperor is beaten and horrifically wounded, due to his refusal to kill Horus (who was his beloved son before being corrupted by Chaos). A lone warrior (
* In the backstory, when the Terrans make their appearance on the galactic stage, the Drengin, wanting to test them, secretly convinced a race called the Xendar to attack. The Terrans responded by rapidly militarizing and beating the Xendar all the way back to their homeworld, at which point the Drengin exterminated the Xendar so their involvement would not become known (all other races assumed that the Terrans wiped out the Xendar). The Terrans immediately went back to their usual diplomatic selves, confusing and scaring the hell out of the
* In the Back. That's every character killed. Ace feigned death, and the Snake that was dead in Door 3 was not the actual Snake that you met. Snake would probably still die, though.
* In the Back: The best place to stab or shoot someone if you're a cowardly and treacherous bastard.
* In the "Back to Neverland" film that used to be shown at The Magic of Disney Animation, when turned into a cartoon character,
* In the Bad Future when the Herald of Andraste expresses their anxiousness over what will become of them, Dorian offers some gentle reassurance.
* In "The Baffles Puzzle" she was trapped at the bottom of a pit by a
* In the Baha'i faith, a couple cannot get married unless they both get the consent of their parents. If one of them vetoes it, they'll just have to wait until the grouch keels over (or just become
* In "The Bakersfield Expedition," Penny, Amy, and Bernadette decide to read a single comic book to try and understand why their boyfriends (
* In the Balance plays with this with the hero being offered a choice between order, chaos, balance, excess, meta-balance, etc.
* In "The Baljeetles", Baljeet is worried about getting a failing grade in a rock-and-roll music camp. He's actually disappointed, even
* In the Balkans, there are legends of weather-controlling sorcerers who can turn into snakes, eagles, or other animals. Usually these are good guys who protect their home villages, but then they're also prone to attacking neighboring villages.
* In "The Ballad of Badbeard", Dr. Doofenshmirtz has a pair of crocodiles, both named Susan, in his new evil lair. "I named them after each other!"
* In the ballad "Zu Bacharach am Rheine" by the Romantic poet Clemens Brentano, the world is first introduced to Brentano's creation, the magic-wielding Loreley, who brought doom on whoever fell in love with her. The local bishop has her arraigned before his ecclesiastical court, but he cannot condemn her because she is so beautiful:
* In "The Ball", after Wander saves the people of a tennis ball-shaped planet from a giant puppy, the episode ends with him and Sylvia passing by a yarn-shaped planet and hearing the distant meows of a giant kitten.

* In the ballet Le Corsaire, Conrad, Medora, and the pirate crew have gotten away and are sailing over smooth waters when a storm hits and sinks their ship. All is seen to be lost. Then the moonlight shines on Conrad and Medora, the sole survivors. Everyone else in their crew is dead.
* In "The Bands Break Up" both Kimber and Stormer feel disrespected by their respective bands, storm out to drown their sorrows (in
* In "The Bank Shot Job", Nate finds himself trapped in a bank that's being robbed while using an earpiece to communicate with the rest of his team. He manages to cloak everything he says to them under the guise of a conversation he's having with the corrupt judge who's right next to him. Eliot, by contrast, simply walks to the other side of the police line after they've set it up and stares intently at the bank, having a conversation with Nate without even bothering to have a cover story. When a policeman tries to tell him that he needs to be on the other side of the tape, Eliot turns and growls,
* In "The Bank Trick", a bank teller misreads Didi's surname on her shredded debit card as "Pridklers." Didi
* In "The Barn Dance", Mickey's head briefly turns into a donkey's after Minnie gets mad at him for his clumsy dancing.
* In the Baroque period, heroic roles were often written for castrati, whose unbroken voices were synonymous with virtue and heroism on the opera stage. The broken normal male voice was usually assigned to villains or servants.
* In the "Bartman Begins" story from the episode "Revenge is a Dish Best Served Three Times" (2007), The Serpent (Snake Jailbird) makes a string of four snake-related puns while stealing some jewels. Krusty
* In "The Bart-Mangled Banner", Dr. Hibbert is banned from the library for reasons
* In "The Bart of War", Bart and Milhouse drink a "40-year-old novelty beverage" they find in Ned Flanders'
* In "The Baseball Game," Bolt is pressed into playing duty while serving as honorary team
* In the base game, black holes can produce dark matter, which can be used, among others, in some ship reactors to power them.
* In the base game it was possible to use large amounts of decouplers as an insanely powerful propulsion system.
* In the base game, the Mongols. Their armies of horse archers are terrifying in open field battles... but when you fight them in your cities or at a bridge, they just turn into fodder for your spearmen, archers and crossbows. As for
* In the "Base under siege" parody story "Destiny of the Destinoyd", we get this:
* In the "Basic First Aid" episode, a rap song about the importance of first aid shows Sprinkler performing a freestyle in a
* In the Basilica of Saint Dominic, Michelangelo has a traditional sculpture of an angel that looks like a young boy except for his
* In "The Batman Plays a Lone Hand", Bruce tells Dick that he's becoming too much of a bother and he cannot remain
* In the battle against Jimmy, Gray is able to read his movements by watching the way his muscles contract. As Jimmy's style is based entirely on landing accurate hits, the sudden evasion knocks him off-kilter.
* In the battle at the end, Jake and his Toruk lead the Na'vi flyers in a diving ambush on the RDA's gunships. Their bows, shown to lack the power to penetrate the gunship canopies when fired up from the ground, are much more effective with the force of a diving Ikran behind them.
* In the battle before the Black Gates, Legolas attempts a Foe-Tossing Charge when Aragorn is about to be crushed by a troll. Unfortunately, being an elf, he lacks the muscle mass for proper foe-tossing and doesn't get very far. Pity none of them are dwarves.
* In the battle before the gates of Mordor, the heavily outnumbered and surrounded Army of the West break ranks and charge into the enemy, whereas in the book they hold their formations on higher ground and let the enemy come to them. Also, in the film version they arrive on war horses but inexplicably dismount and attack on foot.

* In the Battle City arc, the villains often pulled a few of these and
* In the "Battle For America" strips, little America fits this as he is almost obscenely adorable and, when told to choose between England or France as an older brother, picks the former out of sympathy.
* In the Battle of Agincourt in 1415, the English returned to their base after kicking French butt and discovered that a small group of French knights had slipped past them during the fight and killed the guards watching over their baggage. This episode is recreated in a scene in Shakespeare's Henry V.
* In the Battle of Blackwater Rush, Jaime, Bronn, Dickon and the entire Lannister-Tarly army get two massive ones in quick succession. The first is when they see
* In the Battle of Blackwater, Tyrion Lannister approves the normally inept King Joffrey's decision to join the troops on the city walls as "soldiers fight better for a king who's not hiding behind his mother's skirts". Of course Tyrion is the one
* In the Battle of Endor, Admiral Ackbar apparently didn't expect to
* In the Battle of Gronder Field, it's claimed that the poor intelligence and visibility causes the battle to devolve into a chaotic
* In the Battle of the Blackwater ballistae and an improvised mantlet are seen, the latter made by turning a boat upside down; the boat has already been fitted with wooden supports to hold it above the ground so as to protect those manning the battering ram.
* In "The Battle of Zaofu", Varrick, of all people, tries to do this to the people holding him captive. He manages to blow up the train, preventing Kuvira from getting the spirit vine technology, and only lives because Bolin saved them both.
* In the battle scene early on, which is a border skirmish between one of the Alethi highprinces and a rival highprince from a neighboring kingdom, both sides' troops are largely undisciplined spearmen, and when the battle is joined it becomes a chaotic melee where the battle mostly consists of small groups of soldiers are fighting at random. The only spear unit that fights effectively is Kaladin's platoon, who maintain a tight, wedge-shaped formation that easily drives back anyone attacking them.
* In the battles with Roy and Wendy, if one of Roy's attacks is successfully countered, the giant boulder he throws will fall backwards and land on Wendy's head, causing her to trap him in one.
* In the 'Battle to Eradicate Christmas' special, Dr. Raichi and Hachiyack are re-appropriated into various forms of Santa...namely a Santa that's decided to eliminate evil the hard way. Which means most of the heroes have gotten on his naughty list: Goku because his lust for battle has endangered everyone, Trunks because of his meddling with the time stream, Piccolo for his father's actions in trying to conquer the world
* In the battle with Hodir, players can free NPC allies from being frozen in ice; they have seemingly been frozen for a while, and appear to suffer no ill effects. The same happens with a
* In the battle with Lonato, Catherine declares that she will be the one to strike him down. However, in the actual fight, her AI is programmed to
* In the Bay-verse, almost as immediately as the first movie begins the Decepticons kill a bunch of humans and when the Autobots arrive to prevent further human casualties,
* In the BBC's "Dick Barton - Special Agent" (a 1972 re-recording of the lost original serial "Dick Barton and the Secret Weapon"), the heroes are lured into a room by the villain, who traps them there with a pack of bloodthirsty rats.
* In the BBC's flat racing coverage, Willie Carson, a five-foot-tall ex-champion jockey, employs one of these to be seen in the shot with his much taller co-host Clare Balding (5'7").
* In the BBC tv-movie "Arrivaderci Millwall", a gang of English soccer hooligans leave behind calling cards on the bodies of their victims saying, "Greetings! You have just met Millwall!"
* In the beachfront battle, none of the German soldiers survive, but they do take a few of the Amazons with them (including, notably,

* In "The Beacon'', Emily uses her laser canon to blast through a wall to reach Entrapta. No one in the room is injured from being within a few feet of a massive explosion. Also, Emily's blast was hot enough to melt a hole in the metal wall, but none of the characters suffer ill effects from the heat or fumes that would have logically resulted.
* In "The Beacon", the people of Mellweather believe that a lighthouse called the Beacon chooses one of them to be sacrificed every year. If the chosen one does not die,
* In "The Beacon to Elsewhere", the Interstellar Police Authority play a similar role, but their jurisdiction also extends to Earth and other planets.
* In "The Beaked People" she shot one of the title creatures with an energy rock
* In the Beast Pirates, Kaido has the All-Stars as the executive officers of the crew, among them being the Three Calamities named Jack, Queen, and King.
* In "The Beast With A Billion Backs", a portal opens to an alternate universe, home to only one sentient being: Yivo, the infinitely huge, love-lorn ball of tentacles.
* In "The Beauty Contest", Fred and Barney are chosen to be the judges for a
* In the "Be Careful What You Fish For", Miss Emily is the negligent owner of the Tiny Tots Preschool and Stewie brings it to Brian's attention. When Brian tries to confront her, he sees Miss Emily sunbathing and resorts to running interference with Stewie until he can have sex with her. He finally has Miss Emily arrested once he finds out she has a live-in boyfriend named Devin whom she never mentioned.
* in the bedroom. Though an almost equal number describe how hard it is for a metamorph to find someone that's interested in them for more than their powers.
* In the beginning, Danny and Rafe decide to play chicken with their planes and say the following:
* "In The Beginning" gives one to Mary Winchester. Despite objections from her family, John decides to propose to Mary. He takes her out in his new car and is just about to ask the question when
* In the Beginning, hundreds of civilians are evacuated as Earthforce and any ship capable of fighting try and buy time fighting the Minbari, so that Mankind will still survive.
* In the beginning in one episode where Homer takes the kids to school, he uses a GPS which gives him the distances in meters. The confusion leads him through a construction zone.
* In The Beginning lure a Minbari Cruiser into a trap. This is justified as the cruiser wasn't going to help, it returned to finish them off.
* In the beginning, Magic tournaments were often dominated by big, flashy spells, things like dragons, angels, and demons. Then one player got the idea of using small, crappy creatures that most players ignored for a fast beatdown, with the idea being that a big, flashy spell is no good if the other guy is too dead to cast it. A few nearly one-sided tournaments later, the "weenie" archetype that we (Magic players) all know and love was born.
* In the beginning of "Hip Hip Parade," Buford gets angry that he and Baljeet both dressed as vegetable samosas for the parade, abandoning Baljeet for the episode.
* In the beginning of "Poppa's Got A Brand New Badge" with a heatwave occurring causing the power plant to reach full capacity. What causes the city-wide blackout?
* In the beginning of Stars, Haruka and Michiru are caught by Nehellenia's crones in the Sunshine 60 building.
* In the beginning of the Cold War, the Soviet Union blocked all land access from West Germany to West Berlin, expecting that this would force the Western Allies to give up control over West Berlin. Instead, the Western Allies ran the Berlin Airlift, which managed to establish a successful supply of West Berlin for several months, making the Soviets give up when they realized their ploy was not going to work.
* In the beginning of the episode "DW the Copycat" with D.W. herself in Arthur's fantasy, imagining her like Brain.
* In the beginning of the episode "Oh No! Yono!", Ron has to babysit his little sister, Hana. Hana proceeds to crawl on the walls and ceiling and destroy the house. Then a couple of nights later, Ron and Kim both babysit Hana, and the same thing happens, with Hana even climbing on top of the refrigerator and jumping off. Luckily, Ron catches her.

* In the beginning of "The Farnsworth Parabox," Leela tries to turn down Fry's constant requests for a date by telling him she has "sweaty boot rash." However, Amy's disgusted reply implies that this might be true, or at least that Leela's boots really smell.
* In the beginning of the manga, Fuyuki is a grade schooler in the 6th grade and Natsumi is a 8th grader. Shortly afterwards, he graduates and moves to another school for his 7th grade. In the anime, Fuyuki is already in 7th grade from the start.
* In the beginning of the movie, the Heroine's brother pulled this trick on her.
* In the beginning of the season 3 finale (and almost series finale) of
* In the beginning of the sequel, Darth Vader orders Starkiller to destroy a droid that looks like Juno Eclipse, but he can't. The game's novelization includes a scene where Starkiller is confronted by a Juno droid again, as well as droids of his friends and father, but this time he declares that dreams and memories have no power over him anymore and destroys them all.
* In the beginning of the Sinnoh arc, Dawn has no clue how to get to the Sandgem Town lab and so she runs into Professor Rowan by complete accident. Her Piplup is even worse, though it may run in its evolution line...
* In the beginning of the Vietnam War, they used to run through the muddy creek beds at Parris Island. That is, until an instructor left seven recruits there until after the tide came in.
* In the beginning of Thriller Bark, Usopp dismissed the ideas of an invisible man, ghosts and zombies. Each being the cause of his imagination, a weird looking bird and a "under grounders" type of human race respectively. He acknowledges having met a walking talking skeleton a few hours earlier, being the product of a devil fruit, but still dismisses the unusual phenomenon. They all end up being related to devil fruit users.
* In the beginning, Post-Crisis Kara behaved as an emo, self-centered, angry, bratty teen due to Kryptonite poisoning. However, she began dealing with her issues, got cured, and developed into a kind, compassionate and cheerful woman.
* In the beginning she was socially shunned because of this trope— it didn't affect her sanity, but she was
* In the Beginning shows that she had been studying humans since before the Earth-Minbari War.
* In the beginning, someone will (usually; there are exceptions) say, "Oh, [greeting]! Welcome to Sesame Street!".
* In the Beginning: The Bible Stories a young Moses and the future pharaoh involve in this. This is how the latter discovers Moses is a Hebrew (he was circumcised), and despises Moses for it.
* In the beginning, The Count seems to like Albert when in reality he only views him as a tool for his revenge.
* In the beginning the Germans' only towed anti-tank gun was a 37 mm, which worked against lighter tanks but got the nickname "door-knocker" from its inability to deal with heavier ones. The machinegun-armed Panzer I and the Panzer II with a 20 mm autocannon weren't really even capable of fighting other tanks. Their main anti-armor tank, the Panzer III, just had a 37 mm while they waited for the 50 mm upgrade. The Panzer IV was originally intended as an infantry support tank, so it had a low-velocity 75 mm. With that in perspective, they had some real tough nuts to crack.
* In the beginning, the group splits off for certain reasons. Mike and Jess went off to check the guest cabin for private time. Matt and Emily went back to the cable car to retrieve Emily's missing bag. The rest stay at the main lodge doing various tasks. Notably,
* In the beginning, Theon's torture is conducted by men dressed like the Ironborn. They are actually Ramsay's men, and Ramsay kills four of them to gain Theon's trust.

* In the Beginning, There Was Man involving the God Emperor of Mankind and His Primarchs.
* In the beginning, the series' setting is the aftermath of the Battle of Sekigahara (a turning point in Japanese history), and the story deals with how the main characters, who fought for the losing side and have survived, must fight their way out from the battlefield.
* In the beginning, Tooru asks what Hori sees in Miyamura. He "sees" it, later on. After the
* In the Beginning TV movie reveals that Londo was afraid something like this might happen and counselled EarthForce to send a single unarmed ship to initiate First Contact with the Minbari. Since the humans were still riding on their surprise victory over the Dilgar, they arrogantly assumed they can handle anyone and ignore him. Boy, are they proven wrong. Sheridan also thought it's a bad idea to send an impulsive commander to a First Contact situation, but his concerns were brushed aside.
* In "The Beholder", there are two examples. Patrick Tarloff's parents were killed when their single-engine airplane crashed in the vicinity of Fort Yukon,
* In "The Belchies", when Bob and Linda discover Tina's diary entry that details how she, Gene and Louise snuck off to the abandoned taffy factory, there's an unrelated aside that states, "Also, if boys had uteruses, they'd be called 'duderuses'", which, despite their worries about their kids, Bob gets a chuckle out of.
* In "The Belchies", when Louise falls into a pit trap in an abandoned factory, Tina suggests everyone form a human ladder to help get her out. It almost fails, until Louise uses the taffy dummy she "befriended" as a bridge between her and the end of the chain.
* In the Beldrobbaen clan, one member suffering from teenage angst hates it for its
* In "The Bells", a vengeful Grey Worm kills several Lannister soldiers by spearing them from behind, even if they're running or have already thrown down their arms.
* In "The Belly of the Beast", Perry was going into a flashback of how he escaped, which Doofensmirtz took advantage of by attacking him.
* In the beloved two-parter "Hollywood Swinging", Martin and his friends go to Hollywood so he could appear on
* In "The Best Christmas Story Never Told", Roger becomes rich in the past when he invents disco after Stan accidentally drops a mixtape after going back in time. When disco inevitably dies out and he goes broke, he attempts to jump through the window of his high-rise, only to find that it's reinforced.
* In the Best Ending, Sekai and Kotonoha discuss what to give Makoto for Christmas, they reveal that they're both pregnant and they've both decided that their "present" is telling him.
* In "The Best Lazy Day Ever", Dr. Doofenshmirtz invented the Ugly-inator, which was designed to make everyone else ugly so he'd look attractive by comparison. He gets shot by it himself and is unaffected, suggesting that he was already too ugly for it to have an effect.
* In "The Best Man", Robin barely got to "Barney, I..." when Barney's phone rang.
* In "The Best Night Ever", Rainbow Dash ends up saving the pie of one of her heroes this way at the Grand Galloping Gala.
* In "The Best Night Ever", Rarity sees Prince Blueblood in Crush Vision, with sparkles around him.
* In "The Best Night Ever", the ponies are running away from the chaos they've caused at the Grand Galloping Gala and Rarity drops her glass slipper. Pinkie Pie lampshades the trope of
* In "The Best of Both Worlds", the Borg have decided to invade the Federation. To facilitate this, they abduct and assimilate Captain Picard in order to gain his knowledge of Starfleet's capabilities and tactics.
* In "The Best of Both Worlds", the first team to try to rescue Picard from the Borg is composed of the following: Commander Shelby (acting first officer), Lieutenant Commander Data (second officer), Dr. Crusher (chief medical officer), and Lieutenant Worf (tactical officer). In other words, the two most senior officers below the captain, and two officers one would desperately want to be at their posts —

* In the Beta and early release there were reports of people occasionally mining clam meat from mineral veins.
* In "The Bet", Bobert blows up the nurse's office with the nurse still in it, and the nurse just puts a bandage on her charred body (which is
* In the Bethesda games, you can take meat from practically any animal you kill, including
* In the Betty White episode, they do another one of these where they talk to an old lady who owns a bakery and came on the show to talk about muffins of various kinds.
* In the Bible, Moses' birth mother Yocheved was his nursemaid and Moses probably knew he was Hebrew since childhood. Virtually all modern adaptations of the story have him not find out until he is an adult, which is useful in that it adds another layer of
* In the Bible, the battle between David and Goliath is depicted as a
* In the Bible, when an angel appears to someone, his first words to the terrified mortal are usually some variation of "Don't be afraid."
* In the Biblical story of Abraham and Isaac, in a forerunner to the Milgram experiment, God runs an experiment to determine the extent of Abraham's faith by commanding him to sacrifice his beloved son on an altar. At the last second, though,
* In "The Bifrost Incident", any contact with the Old Gods is bad for people's minds.
* In "The Big Bank Robbery" after Wilma clobbers Barney with a vase, mistaking him for one of the bank robbers, Betty asks if he's ok, he replies "Eightball in the corner pocket, Fred".
* In "The Big Blow-Up," Francine grabs Arthur's glasses off his face and puts them on during an argument she and Brain are having over a soccer game, claiming Arthur's not trustworthy because of his bad eyesight.
* In "The Big Cheese", Dee Dee greets Dexter at breakfast with a cheerful "Morning, poophead!"
* In The Big Con, Maurer explains how if the con didn't go quite as smoothly as it should have done, somebody would get mad at the con man and punch him, when he would release the cacklebladder he prepared earlier, leaking blood everywhere. Now the victim of the con would believe he was guilty of/an accessory to murder and would be happy to run away, no further questions asked.
* In "The Big Fairy Share Scare!", Chloe's wish that everyone in Dimmsdale should want to share causes Vicky to give her chainsaw to a hulking brute in a hockey mask who proceeds to wreak havoc.
* In "The Big Fat Kill", Dwight appears to know this about Wallenquist and is counting on it. He makes a point of killing all of the men Wallenquist has sent so he'll conclude that fighting Old Town is more trouble than it's worth. The idea of escalation never seems to come up.
* In "The Big Flush", the parents take the kids to the pool, which they assume is a giant toilet. The whole episode revolved around them trying to find the flusher, and trying things such as the high dive and the sauna thermostat (when they do the latter, they accidentally
* In "The Big Game", there's former high school football star "Snakehips", whose high score in the big game won him a job as a vice-president.
* In "The Biggest Douche in the Universe", Stan goes into John Edward's house and looks at his books. They are called, "How To Be A Psychic!", "Cold Reading: The Trick of the Psychic!", "Make Women Believe You're Psychic! Then Have Sex With Them!", and "How To Sixty-Nine With Yourself!".
* In "The Big Job", while Kim and Shego fight in San Francisco, Ron and Señor Senior Junior each drive around the block

* In the Big L song "Lifestylez Ov Da Poor and Dangerous", he boasts that "once a burglar broke into my house, and I robbed him!".
* In the Big Mom Pirates, Big Mom has her three of her children Cracker, Smoothie, and Katakuri as the Three Sweet Commanders, the executive officers of the crew.
* In "The Big Shot", Ren tries to take his mind off Stimpy having left to become a big Hollywood star:
* In "The Big Tick" from the original series, the planet is attacked by a tick-like alien which destroys other planets. When doing so, The Great One injects its tentacles deeply in the planet to its core, devouring it from the inside out.
* In "The Big Umbrella", the king of a nameless Ruritania gets deposed by a military coup, and winds up in New York with no money. (A character remarks that this is happening so often nowadays that ex-kings are becoming something of a nuisance.) This particular ex-king gets a job as a prize-fighter, which gives him some useful skills and acquaintances when he goes to get his throne back.
* In the 'Biofab War' space opera series by Stephen Ames Berry, written back in the 80s, one of the most feared fates that can befall a person is to be 'brainstripped', to have their brain forcibly used as a CPU for the control system of enormous space battleships called 'mindslavers'.
* In the biographies of the characters appearing in the vignettes in
* In "The Bird-Bot of Ice-Catraz", the penguins that were covered in
* In the bird world, the King of Disproportionate Cacophony is the European Starling. His... song (to human ears, it sounds more like a series of ultrasonic squeals and shrieks) is grating to anyone who is
* In the Bitch Pudding special, when she's given juice by the Shlorps, she says, "This tastes like moose dick!"
* In "The Bitter End" Jamie Reagan and his partner Vinny Cruz are lured into the Bitterman Housing Projects by a Latino gang with a beef against the NYPD. It's an ambush, and Vinny is fatally shot. By the end of the next episode, the NYPD, with Mayor Carter Poole's blessing, conducts a massive sweep of the Bitterman Projects, rounding up over 47 members of the Los Lordes organization for various charges including conspiracy to murder Vinny, an assassination attempt on the Mayor (which leaves the Mayor paralyzed and confined to a wheelchair), narcotics possession with intent to distribute, enterprise corruption, racketeering and a number of other criminal offenses.
* In "The Bitter End" Jamie Reagan and his partner Vinny Cruz are lured into the Bitterman Housing Projects by a Latino gang with a beef against the NYPD. It's an ambush, and Vinny is fatally shot. End of the next episode, the NYPD, with Mayor Carter Poole's blessing, conducts a massive sweep of the Bitterman Projects, rounding up over 47 members of the Los Lordes organization for various charges including conspiracy to murder Vinny, an assassination attempt on the Mayor (which leaves the Mayor paralyzed and confined to a wheelchair), narcotics possession with intent to distribute, enterprise corruption, racketeering and a number of other criminal offenses.
* In the Blackbeard Pirates, since they grew in numbers after the time-skip, Blackbeard has the Ten Titanic Captains (Jesus Burgess, Shiryu, Van Augur, Avalo Pizarro, Laffitte, Catarina Devon, Sanjuan Wolf, Vasco Shot, Doc Q, and one unnamed member) as division commanders of the crew.
* In the Black Cat Pirates, Django, Captain Kuro's first-mate, who has Siam and Butchie.
* In "The Black Gorge", Radarr is suspicious of a seemingly harmless animal who eventually
* In "The Black Hand", a man is shot to death on a streetcar. The severity of the wound and the lack of a blood trail mean he couldn't have been shot anywhere else, but no one heard the shot.
* In "The Black Jet", Harm and Mac gets Keeter out of an Iranian prison.
* In "The Black Knight," Dr. Konrad Krueger, the titular medieval-themed robber, is thrown off his helicopter down a dam. However, he survives and returns in the final issue.
* In the "Black Magic Police" sketch, when a reporter dramatically asks, "Just what are the police up to?", an especially stupid-looking cop looks up from a book he's reading and answers, "Oh, I'm up to page 39, where

* In the Black Trailer, Blake and Adam carry out a train heist. Their cargo is guarded by a
* In the Black Trailer, Blake and Adam storm an train filled with Dust to steal. However, when Blake realizes that Adam is going to blow up a train with civilians still on it, this is what leads to her
* In the Black trailer, which serves as an introduction to the character Blake Belladonna, the background music is "From Shadows", a song with lyrics about people suffering
* In "The Black Turning Funnel Part 2", Calvin's Plan B is rocketing straight towards the tornado.
* In "The Black Vipers", Jack is seen flying away after being deceived into losing a bag full of Shen Gong Wu. You can see the Glove of Jisaku on his hand as he flies away. The Glove of Jisaku has the power to attract other objects - even other Shen Gong Wu. He even used it to steal a bunch of Wu at once in an earlier episode. Yet he doesn't use it here.
* In "The Blair Witch Hangover", Rebecca and Tacoma wake up after a night of heavy drinking, Rebecca looking rumpled and flopped on top of Tacoma and Tacoma in a
* In The Bleachers featured a race car driver who forgot something on his mental checklist.
* In the Blessed Realm of Aman, all animal and plant life remains in a state of youthful adulthood after reaching maturity. The Hounds of Oromë, which
* In "The Blind Leading the Blind Date", Felix asks Oscar if he knows his date's last name. When Oscar responds with Kellogg, Felix says "I don't even have to turn around to know there's a cereal box behind me."
* In the Blink 182 video for "Feeling This", two teens make out through a glass window.
* In the Blood, because his half-brother Kai acts the same way around first Ranmaru, and later Masa.
* In "The Blood Brother" and "The Ship," Penny is presented as a devotee of contemporary fluff pop groups like
* In the Blood: Family members tend to have similar personalities, behaviors and/or moralities.
* In the Blood: in Part 2, Jotaro's grandfather Joseph was brash and prone to picking fights, but even he feared reprisal from his grandmother Erina after accidentally using his Hamon to fire a bottle cap at a corrupt constable's finger and snapping it, and he becomes quite cross with people who upset her.
* "In the Blood": With Matt Murdock causing problems for the Russian gang, Anatoly and Vladimir Ranskahov decide to accept Wilson Fisk's offer of support to their criminal venture. After seeing that Matt has made short work of the guys who had kidnapped Claire, Anatoly personally goes to Fisk to tell him that he accepts the deal....and ends up interrupting Fisk's date with Vanessa. Fisk is so pissed off by this intrusion of his privacy that he proceeds to beat Anatoly unconscious, then decapitate him with a car door. Then Fisk sets in motion the machinations to eliminate the rest of the Russians, including Vladimir.
* In "The Bloody Doors Off", Starlight finds herself in increasing danger from Vought Industries and Stormfront in particular, so has Frenchie cut the tracking chip out of her.
* In "The Blue Butterfly", Castle finds an old PI's diary from the '40s. Throughout the episode, we cut to his imagination of the events depicted in the diary, with the regular cast filling the roles. Castle is the PI, of course, and he provides narration in this style.
* In "The Blue Geranium," a superstitious woman receives warnings that various flowers in her room will turn blue with each full moon. She is found dead in her locked room after the
* In "The Blue Plague", the camera zooms into Gargamel's mouth as he laughs at the end of his version of "Mean, Sour, Crafty, And Cruel" from
* In "The Blunder Years", the family goes to a nightclub/restaurant. Homer gets hypnotized by a stage hypnotist, and unearths a traumatic childhood memory and starts screaming. He continues screaming as they leave, he tips the valet, drives home, brushes his teeth, and lies in bed. The next day

* In "The Blunder Years", when the Simpsons family tries to find out why Homer cannot stop screaming after being hypnotized, Homer starts flashing back to his greatest moment: the clip of Homer (almost) jumping across Springfield Gorge in "Bart the Daredevil", when Lisa interrupts him, saying "Everybody's sick of that memory!"
* In "The Bob Next Door", a new neighbor moves in and greets Bart with a "Hello, Bart", revealing he has Sideshow Bob's voice. Cue montage of clips with Bob saying that line.
* In the bodice-ripper novel "Whisper To Me Of Love'', the hero, who
* In "The Bodyguard," the dog catcher's truck drives away with Spike the bulldog penned inside. Jerry Mouse pursues the truck, hoping to free Spike a second time. Tom Cat pursues Jerry Mouse because that's what Tom
* In the body of a Deinonychus and trying to blend with the pack, Will Reilly of
* In "The Boiling Rock", Sokka is disguised as a prison guard, and becomes victim to this trope, twice.
* In "The Bonfire of the Manatees" The Simpsons minus Homer went to Christmas theme park, which is dreary and rundown. The reindeer aren't happy because of the crappy environment, and their Santa ends up in a body bag. They only went there because Homer gave them the tickets so the house could be used by the local mob to pay for his football debts. Its implied the park is in such a dismal state due to it being off-season, the episode taking place in August.
* In the bonus case of the first game, "Rise from the Ashes", a chief prosecutor is accused of murdering a detective. Miles Edgeworth, who was also accused of murder 2 months prior and declared innocent of the incident, steps up to be the prosecutor of the case. The people in the gallery are against Edgeworth because they still think he's a scumbag of a lawyer that would do anything to get people a guilty verdict (which was his rumored reputation for years) and others think he had used forged evidence to convict a serial murder on a case several years ago and is only stepping up now so that he can become the next chief prosecutor.
* In the bonus chapter of the first season of Kurumu gives Tsukune the usual
* In "The Bon Voyage Reaction", Sheldon again references this trope when Leonard is offered the possibility to go on an expedition, suggesting to Leonard:
* In the book, although not in the film, when Teague and his men encounter
* In the book, Charles's cousin Jasper warns him off of Anglo-Catholics
* In the book, Combferre and Courfeyrac are the Enjolras's second and third in command of Les Amis de'l ABC. In the show, they're shunted off to the side in favor of Marius and Grantaire, who receive much more attention.
* In the book "Complete Arcane" for 3.5, the Prestige Class of "Blood Magus" is described as "formerly deceased spellcasters who, when returned to life, gain an understanding of their blood's importance..." They can create a homonculous as explained above, but they have many other abilities as well, a particularly frightening one being "Bloodwalk". With Bloodwalk, a Blood Magus can teleport by entering the body of a living creature the same size or bigger, either leaving peacefully or
* In the book, Elphaba's sister Nessa was born without arms. Since this would be exceptionally difficult to portray with actual actors, the musical changed it to her having been born with deformed legs and being in a wheelchair.
* In the book, Eowyn says the line "Do you not know?" to Faramir, in order to let him know that she has fallen in love with him. In the movie, her relationship with Faramir is downplayed, and her feelings for Aragorn emphasised, so the line is kept the same, but said to Aragorn instead.
* In the book, in order to go to the Capitol, Katniss has to participate in combat training before she is cleared to go. This section is omitted in the film. Instead, she just sneaks aboard a ship carrying supplies to the Capitol, after which District 13 plays along. Star Squad 451 is still the same though.
* In the book it's made clear this only applies if they fight; if they just hand over the valuables they can go. This was

* In the book, it turns out that this was Robby Jackson, Jack Ryan's friend (played by
* In the Book of Acts, Paul and Barnabas were mistaken for avatars of Zeus and Hermes when performing some miracles in a Greek city. It was a
* In the "Book of Enigmas" arc, Kshin finds a mysterious Book (whose pages constantly change) in Mandrake's library. Over the next few episodes, the Book helps Kshin to solve a number of mysteries, before it is eventually revealed that it is really a being from another dimension who was turned into the Book and banished to Earth.
* In the book of Ephesians, Paul the apostle says that God seals believers in Christ with the Holy Spirit, that, according to Calvinist theology, means that they forever belong to God and could never be lost. This seems to go hand in hand with what Jesus said in
* In the book of Esther, some translations have Haman plotting to impale Mordecai on a sharp pole. After his treachery is discovered by the king,
* In the book of Job, Job gets this four times in a row. Four servants come in, one after another, to inform him that all his livestock have been killed or stolen, all his other servants have been killed, and even his children are dead. In less than a day, his entire estate was reduced to himself, his wife, and these four
* In the book of Job, Satan appears to be less of a fallen angel, and more of a wanderer. As he enters the court of God each time, God asks him where he has been, and Satan says he's been "roaming throughout the Earth and going back and forth on it."
* In the Book of Judges, Rahab was a prostitute living in the city of Jericho at the time that the Israelites, under the leadership of Joshua, were coming in to conquer it. Joshua sent spies ahead to scout it out; they found refuge in Rahab's house, even though she knew full well what they were up to. (Joshua 2) Because of this, Rahab (and her family) was spared during
* In the book of Judges, when Gideon captured Zebah and Zalmunna, he tells his firstborn son Jether to put them to death with his sword, but the narrative says Jether refused to do it because he was still just a youth. Zebah and Zalmunna goad Gideon to
* In the book of Philemon, Paul encourages the titular Philemon to free his slave Onesimus.
* In the book of Samuel King Saul is convinced that his head general, David, is his Starscream, but he is
* In the book of the original radio series scripts, author Douglas Adams explains this as the reason every alien in fiction can speak perfect English. Everyone has a Babel Fish in their ear.
* In the book, one attack at a dockyard was foiled by the crane operators using the cargo containers as barricades and simply dropping them on the zombies to crush them.
* In the book page visible at the end, the narrator states that the Trapper has nothing left to say and prepares for a "long quiet."
* In the book, Peter's mother was a standard Victorian woman. In this version she was a fairy who led
* In the book, Pom Pom defies this by sharing the trophy he's awarded with
* In the book "Ramona Quimby, Age 8", Ramona overhears her teacher Mrs. Whaley say something about "my little showoff" followed by "what a nuisance!". Ramona thinks her teacher believes she's a showoff and a nuisance, but in actuality, she was calling her a showoff in jest and saying that when she accidentally cracked a raw egg onto her hair, it was a nuisance for the school secretary to have to wash it out.
* In the book Sam has the vision, limited to the Shire, as it's a temptation to see if he will give up the quest
* In the book, Sam interrupts Gollum at a moment when he is having second thoughts about his betrayal of Frodo. He accuses Gollum of "sneaking" about, putting Gollum on the defensive and hardening his resolve to feed the hobbits to Shelob. In the

* In the Books&Braun series by Pip Ballantine and Tee Morris, this happens to Mr.Books and starts the whole plot by getting him into the situation from which Ms. Braun rescues him.
* In the books, as well as being the medic, she's an accomplished biochemist, a genius, and a
* In the books, Brienne is unfailingly kind and stubbornly idealistic, recoiling at the thought of killing and treating everyone around her with an unfailing fairness. In the series, possibly thanks to the writers
* In the book's Christmas Past sequence, Scrooge's former fiancée Belle first appears when she breaks off their engagement. But
* In the books, Daenerys occasionally has sex with her handmaid Irri as a kind of stress relief (indicating that she's bisexual since she also enjoyed having sex with Drogo), but in the show, she's discomforted when she gets a little
* In the books, Glinda has no feelings towards Fiyero and if anything is
* In the book, she was about to take a man as her mate, because Richard wasn't supposed to return home for about three centuries, and the magic of the Confessors had to live on. Right before she does, she learns Richard is back.
* In the books, it is explained that creating things works off your own creative energies, which is why it's much more exhausting to make a door than to blow it to pieces. Also, the inability to destroy things doesn't come from the conservation of energy, but from the universe itself - which is, apparently, alive and says "No you don't!" to attempts at unmaking, something it doesn't even allow the gods to do. Long story short: It's magic, it plain doesn't
* In the books, Lord Wyman Manderly hosts several Frey guests whom he murderously despises, but doesn't want to violate Guest Right (like the Freys infamously did). Upon finding out that his hostage son was released, he gives the Freys parting gifts, which indicates that their guest stay is over,
* In the books Mama gets exasperated at the way that Sister keeps begging for the newest accessories, in a subtle
* In the book, Smaug attacked Erebor 174 years before the dwarves set out to reclaim it. Here, only sixty years pass between the two events.
* In the books, Ramsay marries a childhood friend of Sansa who is pretending to be Arya Stark and only a few know or suspect it's not the real Arya, with only Theon knowing her true identity. In comparison, the show simplifies the matter by having Ramsay marry the real Sansa Stark. This changes the context of Theon rescuing Ramsay's bride. In the show, due to the bride being Sansa, the rescue is an attempt to redeem himself to the Starks for betraying them. In the books, since Theon is the only one attempting to rescue her for being an innocent victim instead of her family name, the rescue is an attempt to redeem himself in his own eyes and/or that of the gods.
* In the books, Ramsay's relationship with the first Reek, and his subsequent torture of Theon to turn him into a
* In the books Robb Stark requires several swings during his execution. It's subverted in the show and the show writers had already did that with Theon and wanted to show
* In the books, Sansa can spout historical and literary trivia and identify Renly and Barristan purely by
* In the books, students at Hogwarts tend to be referred to according to their houses ("a first-year Gryffindor" or "a third-year Ravenclaw" and so forth), even though the books are meant to be told from Harry's perspective, and Harry isn't in a position to be keeping track of which house each and every student belongs to. In the films, the Hogwarts robes are given
* In the books, The Groke wears skirts (yeah, thats not her skin). Though so does Hemulen...
* In the book, the Bishop of Digne is given at least a dozen chapters to explain his life in Digne and establish what kind of person he is, and presumably keeps in contact with Valjean, as the latter receives a letter when he dies. In the show, he is introduced in "Prologue/The Bishop", not even given a name beyond "The Bishop", and never seen again. Justified, in that spending that much time on a character whose effect on the work can be summed up in under ten minutes would completely wreck narrative flow (not that that ever stopped Victor Hugo).

* In the book, the "eaten" pieces (and Ron) were dragged off of the board, unconscious. In the movie they were destroyed, though they had the decency to aim at Ron's horse rather than Ron's body. The ones left simply left the board after the game was over.
* In the book, there's another reason. Nessa shares his religious zeal, more than Elphaba or their brother, Shell. That may be a chicken and egg situation.
* In the book the whole "fear no nightly noise" speech was said by Tom Bombadil in his house in the Old Forest on the borders of the Shire. When they decided to cut Bombadil from the film adaption they gave this line and some others to Treebeard in Fangorn forest. This changes the meaning of the line from "no matter what you hear tonight, it won't harm you" to something more like "sleep tight, don't let the bedbugs bite".
* In the book, Wickham was a militia officer who claims Darcy swindled him out of his promised fortune. In the web series, he's a swim coach who claims Darcy refused to pay for his promised college tuition.
* In the book you would think everything is done once the Ring is destroyed, but then we have the Scouring of the Shire, which was left out of the movie for both this reason and lack of time.
* In "The Boom Boom Womb", a deeply religious, fanatical pro-lifer delivers a package containing a bomb to the Boston's Women Clinic, an abortion clinic where Dr. Chandler is performing community service. As soon as the bomber leaves, it explodes, killing the clinic's administrator Dr. Francine Kennedy and injuring several other people. Chandler is physically unharmed but is traumatized by the experience. The bomber later plants another bomb in St. Eligius and calls Dr. Auschlander with a bomb threat demanding that the hospital cease all abortions. Although the police are able to locate the bomb, the bomber plants yet another in a cleaning cart later that afternoon. The next day, the bomb detonates in the vicinity of the hospital gift shop. Chandler is badly injured but survives. Ehrlich has a near miss as he left the gift shop moments before the explosion. The bomber turns himself in at Chandler's bedside so that his arrest will shed light on the issue of abortion.
* In the Boothill graveyard near Tombstone, Arizona, there's a grave that reads:
* In "The Boscombe Valley Mystery", the killer is elderly and dying, and Holmes agrees to keep it quiet so as to spare the man's innocent daughter the knowledge of her father's guilt. Holmes does insist on taking his confession, however, in case the man currently being accused cannot be cleared by other means.
* In "The Boscombe Valley Mystery", the killer murdered a blackmailer - mostly to protect his daughter. According to his words, if the innocent suspect had been sentenced by the court, he would have confessed to the murder. And he was terminally ill.
* In the both seasons of the anime, Ciel’s ring has actual plot importance, although this trope only applies in the second season because in the first season it serves an entirely different purpose. It
* In the bottom of the ninth inning of game six of the 1985 World Series, umpire Don Denkinger called Kansas City Royals baserunner Jorge Orta safe on a close play at first base. ABC's replay showed that St. Louis Cardinals pitcher Todd Worrell managed to get to first base and took the toss from first baseman Jack Clark at the base before Orta reached it. Cardinals fans will blame this call for costing them the championship and Denkinger was hounded by them for years. However, Orta was the first batter of the inning. The Royals eventually loaded the bases and it was the fourth batter of the inning, pinch-hitter Dane Iorg, who got the hit that scored two runs to give Kansas City a 2-1 victory. The Cardinals could have still won the series the next night in game seven, but were still unhinged by the events of the previous night and the Royals won 11-0, claiming their first
* In "The Bounce Lounge", Star and Pony Head are trying to get one of their old friends to help them save the Bounce Lounge, and their friend prefers to stay at another club. Star asks Pony Head if she's thinking what Star is thinking. Pony Head says yes and her horn starts glowing. Cut to police sirens and the group standing outside the burning nightclub, which Pony Head saying she thought that's what Star had been thinking.

* In the Bount arc, it is revealed that the Soul Society previously used Jokai Crests to produce Reishi. They stopped using them and sealed the rest away under giant concrete blocks after one exploded and destroyed a 1/10 of the Seiretei, but now the
* In the Bount arc, Kariya force-feeds some purified spirit energy to a reluctant Mabashi -
* In the "Bowser Junior's First Grade!" series of videos, Cody has a
* In "The Box", Anais believes that the unmarked box that was delivered at their doorstep could be dangerous when opened like Pandora's box, the Ark of the Covenant,
* In "The Box", Anais' theory as to what's in the mysterious box that arrived at the Wattersons' doorstep is that it causes a zombie outbreak across the entire planet. As a reporter questions how it began, it then cuts to the family finding the box containing an injector and some containers of presumably mutagenic chemicals, which
* In the boxing match, the blasphemous Capaneus scares off any challengers due to his sheer size until Alcidimas stands up. Trained by the legendary boxer Pollux, the smaller boxer is able to dodge most of Capaneus' lethal blows and jab him until he nearly goes down. Its the humiliation of that near-knock out that enrages Capaneus to the point of beating Alcidimas to death. His comrades stop the brute and Capaneus is rewarded a palm branch while Alcidimas gets the compensation prize of his life.
* In the boxing world, Antonio Margarito was a feared power puncher that had knockout power in both hands and a rock hard chin. Even the great Floyd Mayweather Jr. seemed afraid to fight him, or so his critics will have you believe. Margarito was a big middleweight that could make the welterweight division. His most famous victory was against Miguel Cotto, whom he battered savagely that night, breaking his jaw. Then came the night Margarito was to fight "Sugar" Shane Mosley. Mosley's trainer discovered Margarito's people loading his gloves with liquid plaster, which got hard after getting wet. It already had dried blood on it, suggesting it was used many times before. After
* In "The Box," Jake and Holt combine this with more traditional interrogation techniques...
* In "The Box, Part 2", Arvin Sloane allows Jack Bristow to cut off his finger with a wire cutter so he could turn off a security system that required a fingerprint scan.
* In "The Box", the unfortunate combination of an ultrasound weapon and dental fillings causes a dwarf's head to explode.
* In "The Boyfriend Complexity", Penny pretends to get back together with Leonard because he's the only boyfriend her father has ever approved of. In one scene, she says to Leonard, "You know what I've been doing for the last hour?" and Leonard asks, "Dreamily doodling 'Mrs. Leonard Hofstadter' in a notebook?" Penny has tired of the whole charade by this point, so she's not amused.
* In the Boy Scouts of America, which follows a pseudo-military styling, one's rank is indicated by a badge worn on the breast pocket. Increasing in rank generally requires completing a set of tasks and going up for review by higher-ranking Scouts (for the lower ranks) or the adult leaders (for higher ones). Like the military service bars, other adornments can also be earned.
* In the Boy Scouts, they have something called the Buddy System, whereby you
* In "The Boys of Bummer", after Bart makes a mistake in a baseball game, the crowd turns against him and throws beer at him, to the point where Chief Wiggum hurries him in to his police car,
* In "The Boys of Bummer", Bart asks Lisa if they're going to visit his pet bunny Fluffy. Lisa tells him that he died and Homer buried him in the backyard ("though not in that order").
* In "The Boys of Bummer", Lisa mentions that Bart had a rabbit named Cottontail that Homer apparently

* In "The Boy Who Cried Wolf" puppet skit, the boy gasps when he sees the wolf approaching him before the wolf reveals to the boy that he isn't really evil.
* In "The Boy Who Knew Too Much," Bart running down a hill is a recycled shot from "Kamp Krusty" although flipped horizontally and with the other characters removed.
* In "The Boy Who Knew Too Much" Moe is handed one of these in the middle of a courtroom after he submits a obviously phony alibi to cover for Mayor Quimby's nephew. He lamely tries to pass it off as his laundry.
* In "The Boy Who Knew Too Much", when Homer is reviewing the instructions of the jury, he asks Principal Skinner to explain not only "sequestered" and "deadlocked" but also "if".
* In "The Boy Who Knew Too Much", when Mayor Quimby's nephew Freddie was accused of having assaulted a waiter for
* In "The Boy Who Would Be Queen", Timmy becomes a girl after he mocks Wanda's idea of wishing to turn into one (to find the perfect gift for Trixie Tang), noting that he did say "I wish" and "girl." This does allow him to think like a normal girl; after some humorous jabs at him by his godparents, Timmy gets back at them by wishing they switched genders, becoming Cosma and Wando.
* In "The Boy Who Would Be Queen", Timmy tries to figure out a gift Trixie would like. Cosmo mockingly suggests he could only figure it out if he used a wish
* In the B-plot of "Murdoch Takes Manhattan", Brackenreid and Crabtree are investigating a murder at a private club of "puzzlers" and Crabtree suggests making a chart and using Murdoch's chalkboard. Brackenreid tells Crabtree to get a chalkboard for him. Later, Brackenreid gets frustrated and pushes over the board, which in turn breaks his bottle of scotch. Even so, Brackenreid's
* In the B-plot of "Tom Tucker: The Man and His Dream", Chris starts going out with a girl who looks extremely similar to Lois.
* In "The Brain of Morbius", the Doctor only makes the leap of inspiration to recognise the face of Morbius when high on
* in the brain with a gun strong enough to break your wrist or dislocate your shoulder if you are not careful.
* In The Brat Pack, Moon Maiden is extremely clear on her view of relationships -a woman warrior doesn't need a man for anything but her own amusement. When her sidekick Lunar Lass turns up pregnant, she flips out and pressures her to give herself an abortion with a wire hanger.
* In "The Brave And The Bold", Flash is arrested for a robbery he did while he was under mind control. Once cop repeatedly yells in his face, demanding to know where the stolen goods are and saying he knew all along superheroes couldn't be trusted, while his partner calmly offers Flash coffee and says he can help him if he cooperates. Green Lantern bails Flash out before it can escalate.
* In "The Brave and the Bold", while in a lab, Flash tries offering a banana to a gorilla in a cage (unaware that it's
* In the Brazilian dub from the second season on, Kara and Alex are voiced, respectively, by Mariana Torres and Adriana Torres, who are sisters in real life.
* In the Brazilian dub he's replaced by a jaguar called Boi Chá voiced by journalist Ricardo Boechat. Other countries also had their own version of the character (with
* In the brazilian film "God Is Brazilian", God decides to go on vacation and comes to Earth because one guy, who lives in the middle of nowhere, has the moral requirements for the job. He spends the whole movie trying to find this specific man, who turn out to be an atheist (
* In the Brazilian Juicer Walita ad, the host shows the product's sturdiness by using it to get raw cassava juice. Raw cassava is much harder than any kind of fruit (it's supposed to be boiled - and it takes quite a while to boil it to the right point - and then either fried or used in soups), but the funny part is that raw cassava is actually toxic. So, on the course of the ad, there was a huge yellow disclaimer explaining that while it can make cassava juice, you are not supposed to drink it.
* In the Brazilian Portuguese dub, May and Max were voiced by siblings Tatiane and Thiago Keplmair.

* In "The Breaking Point", the first instinct of now Captain Winters when Easy Company's attack stalls is to rush into the field and personally lead the attack. He is quickly stopped by Colonel Sink, who reminds him that he is the XO (2nd in command) of the entire battalion and that it isn't appropriate for his position to rush in and bully his way into command regardless of the circumstances; he has other officers for that now. With great reluctance, he snags another lieutenant and sends him out to assume command of the attack force. This is actually a subverted example in that as a captain, Winters is actually
* In "The Bride of Mojo Jojo" (issue #24) Blossom uses her ice breath to encase Mojo's bride (whom he named Zsa Zsa) when she is about to go postal after the girls rescue Mojo from being squeezed to death by her. It is subverted when the ice causes Zsa Zsa to short circuit and explode.
* In The Brilliant Light Of Day: Marisa Kirisame fails to defeat Shinmyoumaru Sukuna before she can start an incident, and goes home to sleep in frustration. She has a nightmare where Reimu dies and she is unable to do anything about it. When she wakes up, she finds Seija Kijin in bed next to her, who had followed her home to convince her to join their revolution.
* In the British Army, there is a sort of informal convention that implicitly dictates that, in the parellel hierarchy of military wives, the Colonel's Lady is "first among equals". This is reflected in the informal status given to the Regimental Sergeant Major's wife. (the RSM is the most senior enlisted soldier). Whilst this bestows informal power, the wise postholder will understand she is only there as a mirror of her husband's rank and will go about using the status informally and gently - to suggest, rather than order, and to use it in ways which support her husband in his job, and be constructive in the wider Batallion family.
* In the British CITV show Emu, villainess Sophie gets pecked on the derriere at least twice by Emu in the one episode!
* In the British civil service they have been known as "boxers" as according to the mythology the only address they give for their department is always a PO box.
* In the British House of Commons, only the Speaker has a chair. Everyone else sits on benches. Historically, the Speaker was not allowed to leave the chamber all day while the House was in session, so the chair used to be flanked by curtains and functioned as a toilet. When necessary, the Speaker could draw the curtains, lift the seat and do his business without ever disrupting the session. It no longer functions as a commode but apparently the sewer system underneath still exists...
* In the British Raj, the number of guns used in a salute varied depending on the status of the person being saluted. 21-gun salute was limited only to highest ranking Indian princes and high ranking British generals and officials. However, the British viceroy was entitled to a 31-gun salute while the British king, as the emperor of India, was entitled to a 101-gun salute.
* In the British version, at least, the "prize" was to read the show's closing credits in the style of the host's choosing.
* In the British version we have Mamma Cherri. When Ramsay tried her food, he actually cleaned his plate — which is something that he has
* In the Bronze Age Superman story "The Turnabout Trap", Mister Mxyzptlk decided to make Superman's life miserable by gender-inverting the people in Superman's world so that his girlfriend Lois Lane doesn't exist, as she has been changed into Louis Lane. Superman realizes who is behind it as he sees among the pictures of Superwoman's enemies that Mxyzptlk didn't gender-invert himself (and made Superwoman and Clara Kent separate people, since Mxy wasn't aware Superman had a secret identity). At the end of the story, when Superman gets Mxyzptlk to undo his magic, he meets the real Louis Lane, who turns out to be Lois' cousin. This story likely served as the inspiration for Earth-11.
* In "The Brotherhood", Captain Overton identifies a stash of drugs this way (specifically, he knows it's Crank (crystal meth) rather than Crack (cocaine)).
Harm
* In the Brotherhood series of films, the hero always wears white boxers, while all the other villanous characters wear black underwear.

* In "The Brotherhood", the gang leader yanks Harm's Aviator "wings" off his uniform to remind him who has the leverage in their negotiation for the Marine officer the gang is holding.
* In "The Brothers Solomon" the brothers John and Dean decide that the only way to get their dad out of his coma is to provide him with a grandchild, they decide to prepare for this by playing with kids, a mother comes by and takes her girl away from them thinking them to be child molesters, they try to explain that they just wanted to play with her and get her some ice cream, the next day they attend a hearing for the misunderstanding and because they are so innocent from living in isolation they have no idea why they are there.
* In the BSD world, OpenBSD and DragonFly BSD owe their existence to the fact that their founders had disagreements related to the development of NetBSD and FreeBSD, respectively.
* In "The Buddy", she does finally manage to make friends with Jamie.
* In the bug collection assignment arc, Calvin is trying to do the aforementioned project on the day it's due. He gets 4 bugs (out of the 50 he needs; also, one of them is actually a ball of lint) before he has to go to class. Susie snarks that if he labels them scientifically in the next 30 seconds, he might get an F-Plus. At the end of the arc, Calvin tells Hobbes that he got an D-Minus-Minus on the assignment.
* In the Buggy Pirates, Buggy the Clown has Mohji and Cabaji, his first-mate and chief of staff respectively.
* In "The Bully," a new student at boating school starts picking on SpongeBob and threatens to kick his butt. SpongeBob tells Mrs. Puff about the bullying,
* In "The Bully", SpongeBob frets about getting his butt kicked at boating school when Patrick misdials and SpongeBob answers the phone.
* In "The Bully", SpongeBob is on the run from his new classmate, who has threatened to "kick [his] butt". As he runs past a city block, he screams and points in the general direction of the bully, but the people around him think he's referring to a polite old man, and beat the old man up accordingly.
* In "The Bully", SpongeBob is threatened by Flats Flounder and spends most of the episode trying to avoid him. But when the time comes for Flats to beat him, it turns out that SpongeBob's spongy body absorbs the blows, leaving him unharmed. Flats continues hitting him until he's completely exhausted and falls over.
* In the bumper arc where the Beatles are lost in a desert and Ringo inadvertantly creates a rainstorm, John says "You must've done a rain dance" with George's voice.
* In the bumper panel on a Sunday strip, Garfield's just been tossed out of an all you can eat buffet and complains that that wasn't all he could eat.
* In the bumpers of "Supermarket", Miss Naughty slams the doors onto the third customer who tries to leaves the store. She did this to both Mr. Bump and Messy, but this backfires when Mr. Strong goes through.
* In the "Bungle in the Jungle" mission, Crazy Bill calls the player character "Clive". Unless the player has coincidentally named their monster Clive, this qualifies.
* In "The Bunker," a missile scientist works for an enemy state because they have captured his wife.
* In The Buoys song "Timothy," the singer and two others are trapped in a mine cave-in, when another person, Joe says he would "sell his soul for just a piece of meat."
* In "The Burning Bridge", the captain must keep his fleet united despite a message from Earth that could disrupt their mission.
* In "The Burning," Elaine borrows Puddy's car, and discovers all of his presets are programmed to Christian Rock stations. As an experiment, George suggests she changes the presets to see if he'll change them back, which he apparently does.
* In "The Burns and the Bees", Prof. Frink uses a perfume to attract bees. Moments after using it, an incredibly sexy woman walks up to him begging him to marry her and she will support him for life. Frink only states that she isn't a bee, deems the perfume useless and throws it away.
* In "The Bushwackers", Wonder Woman had her belt removed and was locked in the jail of a ghost town. The

* In the business world, in addition to the usual trope, we have Drunk With PowerPoint. This describes the way that some people have of trying to use every single tool offered by the Microsoft program, PowerPoint. The result is the presentation equivalent of those
* In "The Butler, The Husband, The Wife and Her Mother", Fran Fine makes
* In "The Butterjunk Effect", Fry accidentally sleeps with Amy, thinking she is Leela, because he didn't turn the lights on.
* In "The Butt of the Jake", Jake's butt inflated so big it eclipsed the sun, shocking a nun (who mistakes it for an eclipse) and offending a hipster blogger. There's also a scene where Jake sits on his head at the lunch table and drinks soda through his butt. This episode was banned for being "too butt-filled".
* In "The Butts Family", Applejack insists that her new tree is not, in fact, Rarity's tree which was recently stolen. The name "Rarity" carved into the new tree's trunk? Anyone named Rarity could have carved that.
* In the Buu arc, much of the behavior and actions of Goten and Trunks (and
* In the Buu Saga, Goku has a visible 'this is gonna to suck' reaction when he comes to the conclusion that he had to merge with Mr. Satan, permanently, in order to have even a slight chance against Buu after he absorbed Gohan, Goten, Trunks, and Piccolo. In the Japanese version, he wonders if he will become weaker from the fusion.
* In the Buu Saga, it's established that Gohan has taken over his father's role as the key protector of the world (as the finale of the Cell Saga supported). In the manga, the beginning of the Buu saga even starts off with Master Roshi saying that the series will continue "just a while longer" with Gohan as the main character, while in the anime, the intro and outro sequences for the Buu saga focuses on Gohan as the lead protagonist. A good chunk of the Buu arc either focus directly on Gohan or a good amount of side-character stalling while Gohan trains on the Kai Planet to awaken his dormant powers, presumably arriving at the last minute to save the day much like how Goku was previously portrayed. However, Gohan ends up being absorbed by Buu, leaving his father to take over as
* In the Buu Saga, Piccolo, in a desperate attempt to stall for time while Goten and Trunks train, attempts to exploit
* In the Buu Saga, Spopovich is very much this for Babidi and he is completely sadistic as he
* In the Buu Saga, Vegeta and Goku fought their way through Buu's body to rescue Gohan, Goten, Trunks, and Piccolo.
* In the Buu Saga, Vegeta falls under Babidi's mind control, becoming Majin Vegeta. However, it turns out that Vegeta is
* In the Buu Saga, Vegeta figures out since Majin Buu can regenerate
* In the Buu Saga, when Bulma tries to revive all the people killed by
* In the "Buying a Bed sketch", a man carries his bride like this across a field,
* In "The Cactus Kid," a relatively serious gunfight between Mickey and Pegleg Pete takes place in the dark, with flashes of light illuminating their silhouettes.
* In the Cadet Corps, a call for volunteers means everyone has to raise their hands. The "volunteers" are consequently picked at random (that or they're the last ones to raise their hands).
* In "The Cafeteria Strike", Walter Denton starts a student petition against the terrible food in the school cafeteria:
* In "The Cakes" ,Bolt misconstrues Mittens's evasiveness regarding her having gone to use the litter box, taking her "making a cake" euphemism literally.
* In "The Cakes", Mittens peevishly puts forth a blizzard of euphemisms for doing a bowel movement in
* In "The Calculus Affair", Tintin drives a stolen tank to the Bordurian border, only to find the road blocked by heavy trucks and the border protected by anti-tank obstacles — so he drives the tank straight through the guardhouse.
* In "The Call", Norman Blane sees a commercial for a classical music CD that he can order by phoning 555-4421. However, he dials 555-4412 by mistake and is connected with Mary Ann Lindeby.

* In the calypso song "Man Piaba", made famous by Harry Belafonte, the narrator is a young man trying to find out about sex; however, all the adults he ask get flustered and end up lapsing into gibberish when they try to answer. The song's end reveals that he lived to be 93 without ever losing his virginity or even learning what sex was.
* In "The Calzone," a male friend of Elaine's loses a bet he makes with her about actors in
* In the Cambridge Latin Course series of plot-oriented textbooks, a bitter British chieftain attempts to kill his rival chieftain with a
* In the Camelot Singularity, the Lion King believes the Incineration of Humanity cannot be stopped, so she starts a project called the Holy Selection. She will choose 500 people she deems worthy and absorb them into Rhongomyniad so they can survive. She is emotionless and does not care about everyone else that will die. The heroes end up stopping her.
* In "The Cameo", his girlfriend Tracey says she’s attracted to him, but doesn’t like him very much and speaks disparagingly of him. Not without reason.
* In the campaigns, your A.I. controlled allies will complain about this if you kill the enemy they're targeting; even if you're the one who actually landed the majority of hits on it.
* In the campaign, the Execution mechanic lets you finish off a wounded enemy in a spectacular rain of blood and gore. Two enemies can have the Execute command used directly on them without wounding: Gretchin and
* In the campaign, the final mission turns into this after you successfully complete your objectives only to have your evac craft shot down. Your units resign themselves to heroic deaths,
* In "The Camping Episode", Patrick's magazine features a photograph of a bear.
* In "The Camping Trip", a drunken Simon attempts to express his love for Carli by climbing through her bedroom window at 3 in the morning. Unfortunately, he ends up in her kid brother's bedroom. This later leads to a very awkward conversation between Simon and his father about why it is never okay to touch children.
* In "The Camping Webisode", Koden tells Alex and Seth not to beat up Andy for Frets, Martha asks "why", and Koden, knowing
* In the Canadian A&W "Two for One Mama Burger" commercial with helium balloons, the balloon the employee releases at the end flies around and manages to hit the manager in the face and stay there as it deflates. You can tell the actor playing the employee is barely containing his laughter.
* In the Canadian Armed Forces it's typically a Lieutenant in charge of a unit with a Warrant Officer (or acting-lacking Sergeant) serving as his second in command. The Warrant Officer is
* In the Canadian Football League, the most famous is Gainer the Gopher, mascot for Saskawetchan Riders mascot
* In the Canadian House of Commons, you're not allowed to refer to another MP by name. You must say "the Honourable Member for [District]" or "the Honourable Minister of [Portfolio]" or the like. This is a carryover from British tradition, when Parliamentarians referred to each other by their districts as a form of
* In the Canadian Military College system it is unofficially hammered into new officer-cadets that it's the sergeants and warrants who really run things and if a newly minted officer pays careful attention to their sergeant then one day they might be allowed outside without a chaperone.
* In the Canadian province of Ontario, all bottled wine must be sold either directly by the winery that makes it, or by the Liquor Control Board of Ontario (LCBO). The sole exemption is given to the Wine Rack, which existed before the legislation was put in place.
* In "The Canal" Baron Seagoon insures his nephew Neddie against various unlikely fatal accidents - all of which he has of course arranged. The
* In the cancelled chapter, Anne is manoeuvred into visiting Mrs Croft, but then she's afraid Frederick might be there as well. She tries to get out of there and asks Admiral Croft to allow her to leave her card and explain it afterwards.

* In "The Candidate", when Felicity Smoak finds that Oliver has bought her a fern and packed a lunch to celebrate her first day back as CEO of Palmer Technologies, she jokes, "Who are you?" Flashback to a mercenary on Lian Yu holding Oliver at gunpoint, asking the same question.
* In "The Canine Mutiny", Bart applies for a credit card under the false name "Santa's Little Helper" (the family dog). He has horrible handwriting, though, and the card comes back issued to Santos L. Halper.
* In "The Canine Mutiny," Bart uses the credit card he got in the dog's name (it makes sense in context) to buy a lot of expensive stuff, which makes Lisa suspicious.
* In the canon episode "Sideshow Bob Roberts", the Springfield Republican Party had their meetings in a spooky castle in a place like this. One member of the group is even an
* In "The Cape and Cowl Conspiracy", like most times, Batman can send a grappling hook through a glass window like it was nothing. Then it was subverted when Batman was unable to break a large lightbulb by just throwing his utility belt at it, and had to throw a pole at it like a spear. Then, two minutes later, he throws the belt at a glass wall,
* In the capital city, all marriages are celebrated during a single yearly festival in the summer. There are also four seasonal coming of age ceremonies in which all children born during that season fifteen years ago legally become adults. The seasonal coming of age for people born in the summer comes
* In the Captain Amagai arc, Amagai is haunted by his father's death and wishes he could avenge it.
* In the Cardassian Empire, Interservice Rivalry is endemic, particularly between the Central Command and the Obsidian Order. In the first
* In the card game Gloom, the description for Butterfield ("the lurking butler") is "Whatever it is, he did it." Another card is "..Was Betrayed by the Butler", with the flavor text "Like you're surprised."
* In the Card Game "Hearts", traditional rules make the Queen of Spades into this. In a game where scoring points is bad, and every heart grants one point to anyone who collects one, the Queen of Spades, in particular, gives
* In the Cards", minus a modest commission. Think of those poor orphans.
* In the Care Bears episode “A Rhyme In Time”, Gram reads Hugs and Tugs a story about safety after they get into danger. The book scares them, as they imagine things like smoke being full of monstrous creatures, hot liquids as lava, a bathtub as an ocean, and being chased by bottles of poison. Fortunately, Gram calms them down, and the twins are happily talking before bed.
* In the Carpathians, a stillborn child couldn't be buried in hallowed ground (as unbaptized), and (particularly if it had been born under a caul, or had teeth) was believed in danger into turning into a vampire spirit.
* In The Cars video, '"You Might Think"', lead singer Rick O'Casek imitates
* In the cartoon and early games it was played as romance. Later however they avert this, from
* In the cartoon "Billion Dollar Limited". train-hijackers start out by shooting Superman. Fair enough, naturally it doesn't work. Then they start tossing tear-gas grenades at him. Since Supes hadn't yet gained Super Breath or the like in his power set, they work surprisingly well.
* In the cartoon "Cool Things", the following exchange occurs when Homestar spots Strong Sad through a pair of
* In the cartoon "Frigid Hare", Bugs and an Eskimo are stuck in an ice ledge that breaks with every noise they make. At one point the Eskimo starts to sneeze, and Bugs stifles it just in time... but then sneezes himself, sending the ledge completely vertical and on the brink of plummeting.
* In "The Cartoon", George dates a woman who looks a lot like Jerry. When she ends up cutting her hair short (almost identical to Jerry) it weirds George out to the point that he leaves the woman, and decides to take a break from Jerry for a few days.
* In the cartoon "Happy Birthdaze", he brings new friend Shorty to Olive's house.

Shorty uses the bathroom to wash up, and when Popeye opens the door, a flood of water washes him down the sewer in the road.
* In the cartoon, "Johny Smith and Poker-Huntas", Johny Smith (Egghead) is about to executed. Meanwhile, Poker-Huntas is listening to the radio when a news bulletin about the execution is announced. Poker-Huntas exclaims, "Ooh! I'd better get going!" To which the announcer replies, "Yes, you'd better, sister, if you want this picture to have a happy ending!"
* In the cartoon "Oily Hare", a Texas oilman lowers dynamite down Bugs' burrow to blast for oil. Bugs sees the "present" and throws a party. The oilman is then confounded when he detonates the dynamite and hears noisemakers instead of explosions.
* In the cartoon "Pink Pajamas", a man that wants to quit alcohol and calls his A.A. sponsor to help him, all because he saw
* In the cartoon Rio is very overprotective of Jerrica, gets jealous easily, and is in a
* In the cartoon, Riot liked Jem (but not Jerrica) while Jem didn't like him back. In the comics, his feelings are requited however she's still in a relationship with Rio.
* In the cartoon "Satan's Waitin", he is depicted as a Hector-esque bulldog, as Sylvester,
* In the cartoons featuring Daffy Duck and Porky Pig as Western lawmen, scrawny Daffy rides a glorious steed, but portly Porky rides a diminutive burro that looks as though he can't carry so much as a heavy quilt. Their nemesis, outlaw Nasty Canasta, can also be spotted riding a horse that's much, much too small for his enormous figure (but being a
* In the cartoon "The Hungry Goat", Popeye's commanding officer leaves for a day at the movie theater, and warns him not to harm the goat. Later, as Popeye is about to throttle the goat for eating the boat, the goat warns that the admiral could be watching them right now — and sure enough, he is seen silhouetted against the screen, taking his seat. At the end of the cartoon, the admiral sees the damage being done to his ship and runs back. He asks Popeye where the goat went, and we see the goat sitting in the audience, laughing.
* In the cartoon, "The Return of Pluck Twacy" from the episode "New Character Day", Ticklepuss (based on the obscure
* In the cartoon "Weclome Back", Bubs remarks that he spend the month-and-a-half hiatus trying to sell baloney sandwiches "at the beach". Cut to Bubs by himself on a tiny island that's almost too small for his truck.
* In "The Cartridge Family", Homer purchases a handgun to protect his family. Marge, however, fears for her safety and the safety of her children from a trigger-happy husband. She takes herself and the kids to the "Sleep Eazy Motel" replete with neon sign. The moment Marge arrives, part of the neon fails, leaving "Sle azy Motel" as the surviving moniker.
* In "The Cartridge Family", when Homer gets kick out of the Springfield's NRA chapter, he has his membership card ripped up and is told to turn in his
* In the Cascadia arc, the Northern Confederacy 'rents' the Japanese Navy for their battle with Cascadia for one dollar. It is unclear exactly why the Confederacy cares about environmentalists on the far side of the continent, but the Japanese make out like bandits when the Pacific Northwest gets carved up.
* In the case of adaptations, this complaint is simply bundled in with how completely it reproduces its source.
* In the case of Amy Winehouse, her idolization of Spector crosses straight into
* In the case of a War in Heaven between two Awakened Empires of any type. Both will readily vaporize you into spacedust if you don't take their side. If you're not with them, you're against them.
* In the case of Barty Crouch, Jr., it's implied that he was convicted on flimsy evidence because the public was crying for blood.
* In the case of bees and wasps, leaving the pupal stage of development is usually the point where they can actually start inflicting harm on humans. Plus, if you're actually close enough to an opening cocoon, you run the risk of being stung - either by the occupant or by the rest of the hive.

* In the case of birds, ducks, geese, and other web-footed birds are the most likely to be drawn without claws showing.
* In the case of both classes, the Soviets had sound technical, doctrinal, and political reasons for building them the way they did.
* In the case of California serial killer Ricardo Ramirez, known in the media as the "Night Stalker," the mayor held a televised news conference which indicated that the key components of the investigation were ballistics evidence and footprints found at the crime scenes. This gave Ramirez the opportunity to dispose of his weapons and shoes.
* In the case of Charles Augustus Milverton, Holmes and Watson actually witness the murder of the title character, an utterly odious blackmailer, but opt not to report it. a) They were burgling the man's house at the time, making it difficult to explain how they saw the crime committed; and b) Holmes has a great deal of sympathy with anyone who was a victim of the blackmailer striking back at him, and c) the killer is implied to be
* In the case of eating Tweety, when Sylvester finally did that in the final episode of
* In the case of Elona, the designers specifically tried to imagine what the old north African empires would look like had they existed for another few hundred years, and had magic. The results were
* In the case of extraterrestrial life, there are several approaches. For some Buddhists this is precisely what Buddhist scriptures talk about when talking about these realms; other planets or dimensions and its inhabitants. Other Buddhists think that in the event of the discovery of intelligent alien life forms they should be classified as part of the human realm disregarding their look (even if they are
* In the case of Germany and Japan, who lost WWII utterly and completely but became stable, functional democracies with incredibly powerful economies, you could argue that they
* In the case of G'Kar, the character's death was actually seen on-screen before the actor died.
* In the case of Hank and Dale, there's a very good reason for it; they were apparently paddled in school when they were younger and it's implied in the aforementioned episode that they got it pretty bad, to the point that just
* in the case of Itachi using Tsukiyomi (a genjutsu he barely understood) on Sasuke. The result? A homicidal sociopath that kills enemies and prisoners at every opportunity and brutally murdered at least one classmate before he graduated.
* In the case of Jinenji, Kagome and Inuyasha thinks, his mother was a mountain witch, and his father was a human. As they learns, that Jinenjis mother is a human women with a horrifying temper, the inversion of this trope is
* In the case of Latin America, Toonami ads were cut considerably after the block was moved from afternoon to midnight in the schedule (not so much initially when the move was only in Mexico, but it did when the move spread to the rest of the Hispanic diaspora), but some of the series and movies were displayed on commercial breaks during the last full year of the block on air.
* In the case of many Jumping Puzzles, having a Mesmer (or Scourge) there (or being one yourself) might be considered this due to their portal ability, allowing people to completely skip everything as long as the Mesmer is able to complete it... AND IT STILL COUNTS!
* In the case of minor characters, Cee Cee's love interest John Perry is renamed John Pierce. Bertie's ex-husband also changed from Michael Barron to Michael Essex, and her Aunt Neet
* In the case of Mordheim, that particular comet and a few other astral bodies are made
* In the case of Neimi, she also has this with Garcia (late 30's/early 40's, and the father of Ross who is around Neimi's age)
* In the case of one Gen IV candidate, the Molten Salt Reactor, this is
* In the case of pre-colonial India, one of the most important and influential rulers in Indian history was Sher Shah Suri who extended the Grand Trunk Road, re-organized the Royal Postal Service, and invented the Rupee, the currency of all later rulers, the

* In the case of Rainbow parties, no one actually did them. If there had been a few cases, then it was because they got the idea when the news claimed that everyone was doing it (a claim that was based on one story in a book).
* In the case of shamans and spirit warriors, the animal spirit linked to the dead person's soul needs to be called out by a (living) shaman before the soul can be taken up by the gods. This creates a puzzle - what happens to the soul of the last shaman left? Even the gods are't sure.
* In the case of Shelford, he famously had his scrotum ripped in a ruck, playing for New Zealand against France in 1986. It is "famous" because, with one testicle dangling free, he calmly asked the doc to stitch him up
* In the case of Spain, the clock wasn't just stopped — it was
* In the case of the 1st mentioned character, the reveal was at the end of the initial appearance. The 2nd wasn't actually revealed until a subsequent appearance.
* In the case of the aforementioned Vehicons, the common Mecha-Mooks are simply Spark-less drones often under the control of the
* In the case of The Beatles, Capitol removed tracks and added singles and filler to them so that they could release 'new' albums later on. A particular
* In "The Case of the Cola Cult", a large group of mice in tunics worship a soda brand.
* In "The Case of the Cola Cult" Gadget loses confidence in herself after several of her inventions fail, and Monterey, Dale, and Zipper are especially hard on her (Chip attempted to support her, but was distracted when their contact on the case interrupted in need of immediate medical attention). Feeling she has no other purpose, Gadget quits the team. Discovering that Bubbles, the Coo Coo Cola Cult's strongman, had
* In "The Case of the Discontented Husband", this plot goes completely wrong as the man falls head over heels in love with Parker Pyne's assistant and says so in front of everyone (she herself has no feelings for him, since it's just another job to her).
* In the case of the Doctor, the show provides a notable justified version of this trope. Thanks to the regeneration plot device, Time Lords are in fact
* In the case of the eponymous character himself, they keep on trying to avert this, but it never takes. Their first big attempt in one of his more recent series was making him into an underwater retread of the King Arthur story. This was followed by having San Diego turn into an underwater city and all of the inhabitants turned into merpeople so that Aquaman could fight crime. "Sub Diego" proved somewhat popular and managed to last until the book was reworked to star a new Aquaman. In universe the arc played the trope straight for all it was worth for the new inhabitants who had their entire lives upended and often dealt with boredom over now missing all the on land activities and amenities they took for granted.
* In the case of the Florida State University Seminoles, their Tomahawk chop and war cry chant got passed on to the pros via the Atlanta Braves. It's a somewhat stereotypical portrayal of Native American tribes, though at least in FSU's case they have been supported by the Seminole Tribes of Florida (the much larger tribes in Oklahoma are more ambivalent, but for the time being they're not actively opposed).
* In "The Case of the Freaky Frequency", Ezra's elderly neighbour is complaining about her broken doorbell and wants Ezra to fix it. Ezra brushes this off as he and the others are in a hurry to get to the ice cream shop. However, he later realises that the broken doorbell is key to solving the mystery of why cars aren't locking near the ice cream shop.
* In the case of the latter, he was probably more concerned with the abusive
* In the case of the main games, Kyo Kusanagi had the spotlight stolen from him years earlier in KOF '99, with K', who in turn got it stolen by Ash Crimson. Since Ash was a
* In the case of the Quran, one must make a distinction between reading the Quran and

* In the case of the science fiction story "Deadline", which featured a fairly accurate description of the atomic bomb — in 1944.
* In the case of the second target, it is all the more satisfying, considering you're sitting on the ledge
* In the case of the Taurons this is probably not an accident. As the soldiers of the early Roman Republic were mostly farmers who served military duty as well, there is an obvious parallel to the Taurons, who place great reverence in the soil in which they grow their food, yet are also
* In "The Case of the Unsolved Crime", Carmen and henchman Sam O'Nella steal the Pantheon from Rome, Italy. However, Carmen, punishing Sam for a past betrayal, ditches him immediately after the heist, leaving him with a thousand-ton stone monument of a white elephant. Sam unsuccessfully tries to sell the stone to be used in paper-weights before being caught.
* In the case of Tidus the term 'genius' applies only very loosely. But his ditziness becomes the deciding plot point when
* In the case of vampires, this is explained as them wanting to sound more refined than they actually are, a sort of denial. One sourcebook describes using the word vampire in a meeting of the more "civilized" Kindred as being akin to shouting "motherfucker" in church.
* In the cases where we can't escape from a predator using the environment or chase it off with thrown projectiles, our agility and range of motion can serve us very well in a fight. Very few animals can spin, bend, and twist their bodies in as many directions or as quickly as we can. We don't tend to think of humans as being particularly capable fighters compared to most animals, but bear in mind that modern humans are rarely in peak physical condition. In the wild, we might very well come off as
* In the case the film was based on, the verdict was overturned on a technicality (the fine assessed was higher than the law allowed).
* In the case where a clone needs to be distinguished to an earlier version of himself / herself who is no longer alive, the common usage in
* In the case you don't have enough credits for the aforementioned ship insurance, you can make a loan to pay for it. Your loan limit is based on your current rank and 10% of all your earnings is deduced until you finish paying up the loan, but you still have some coverage against permanently losing your ship and upgrades in case of lack of money.
* In the Castle of Ordeals, Red Mage operates a lever controlling a door that repeatedly mutilates Black Mage.
* In "The Castle of Terror", ghosts are normally insubstantial and harmless. But the countless ghosts in the ruins sense Conan's vitality and crave it so badly, that they combine whatever energy they retain and manifest as a giant blob of multiple faces and limbs. This ghostly amalgamation is corporeal and Conan can hit it with his sword, but any cut he makes instantly seal up without a trace. This is one of the few times where Conan is forced to flee an enemy with no hope of defeating it.
* In the Castle of the Night. All of Von Krolock's victims have their souls implanted in Pricolici wolves, which are ravenous beasts that kill innocents who try to leave his castle's premises.
* In the Castle of the Night has Count Nicolai Gabriel von Krolock, who kills or tortures his henchmen and followers the moment they're useless to him. He even had Kryder cut out his own tongue after his brothers begged the Count to be "merciful" to him for screwing up one of his tasks.
* In the Castle of the Night who can handle himself against Hardestadt in a proper swordfight.
* In the Castle of the Two Sisters, after a few false starts DV proceeds to bypass the palace traps by blasting through doors and walls with magic.
* In the "Cave of Lovers" episode, Aang and Katara lean in to kiss just as their torches are about to go out... it's left up to the audience to decide whether or not they actually did kiss before the cave's secret was revealed.

* In "The Caves of Androzani", Peri throws herself into the Doctor's arms with a terrified squeal in response to
* In the Celadon Gym, Erika's Leafeon summons a long-lasting Rain Dance, that hampers Ash's Pokémon with type advantages against Erika's Grass-types. When he realizes he won't be able to win if he doesn't get rid of the rain, he does... with
* In the Cell saga, future Trunks is considered a very handsome man by his mother Bulma.
* In the Cent arc, they do this to a drunken bard by dunking him in the nearby river to get info for an emissary.
* In "the chair" Strong Bad has said in the past that his mask is a part of his body, yet he takes it off, but
* In "The Challenge from Beyond", co-authored by a number of authors, Lovecraft finally gets the plot rolling by having the protagonist mind-swapped with an alien bent on conquest.
* In the Champion's Ballad, there is a non-verbal one where Mipha asks Sidon to protect their home from harm if anything were to happen to her. Sidon wordlessly nods in agreement and strikes his familiar "I believe in you" pose.
* In "The Change", Tobias and Ax apparently wet themselves when Jara Hamee
* In "The Changing Face of Evil", Gul Dukat disguised as a Bajoran convinces Kai Winn to align towards the Pa-Wraiths. Winn's assistant finds this out and a conflicted Winn stabs the assistant in the back.
* In the "Chao Races and Badnik Bases" story arc, Rouge the Bat and Amy Rose recruit Cream the Rabbit and her Chao, Cheese, for
* In the chaos consuming South America post-WWIII, Uruguay collapses into a collection of bickering warlord fiefdoms (leading to Spain eventually invading in order to restore order), while Brazil undergoes a
* In the Chaos forces, Warpsmiths fill this role. They're basically Techmarines, only evil, and almost to a man they're obsessed with nailing meat, metal and daemonic essence together.
* In "The Chaperone", when the chaperone for the guys' party passes out drunk right before it starts, Micky does himself up as "Mrs. Arcadian" to appease the father of the girl Davy is in love with.
* In the chapter 9 of the Redux a distraught Asuka goes to Shinji's room to seduce him. When she is trying to make something more than kissing, Shinji stops her. Trembling, she asks if he does not like her and he tells he does, but he is not ready and he is afraid of hurting her.
* In the chapter called "That's Not a Potty", Pumpkin has one in the garden, leading her to poop in a pot plant. Then, Pound has one in the mall, leading him to pee in a teapot.
* In the chapter "Falling", it turns out that one of Riff's ex-girlfriends (he has a
* In the chapter "Summer Vacation", Zoe feels attracted to Torg after he does something heroic (if stupid). Even Kiki comments that they're going to smooch. But when Zoe starts telling how brave she thinks he was, he obliviously says that if
* In the chapter "Typographical Number Theory," "djinn" is an undefined term used in place of "natural number" in setting out the five
* In the chapter where the astronaut from the International Space Station is interviewed, he mentions one zombie that chased after a small animal in the desert. When the animal burrowed under the sand, the zombie started digging for it, even as sand continued to pour back into the hole, filling it just as fast as it was dug. The zombie was digging nonstop for
* in the character page of the printed version of the script that his given name was Norman Arriaga; "Belize is a drag name that stuck".
* In the Charlie Daniels song "Uneasy Rider", the protagonist attempts the heroic version of this when he stops at a bar in Jackson, Mississippi, and the rednecks threaten to hurt him for looking like "one of those long-haired hippie-type pinko fags." He accuses one of them of being an undercover FBI agent who's trying to infiltrate and destroy the

* In the Cheat Commandos episode, "Two Parter: Part One", after getting kicked out of the Cheat Commandos, Gunhaver, Silent Rip, and Crackotage get jobs at a pizza joint. When
* In the Cheat Commandos short "The Next Epi-snowed", the ego of lead actor Crack Stuntman is getting way, way out of hand, so the show's writer A. Chimendez inserts himself into the show as "Agent Chimendez" so
* In the Cheezic Federation of Tang Soo Doo, you start off as white, go to orange (instead of yellow in other schools), then blue, then green (which are three degrees), then red (three degrees again), then Apprentice Black (either have red and black belt, or you wear the Black Belt Gi with a red belt, then First Degree Black. You either get white or RED tape when you increase in degrees.
* In "The Cherry-on-Top-inator", after hearing her co-workers talk about how the eponymous gadget helped them in ways that it isn't intended to be used, Oona, who is going through gradual
* In the Cheshire, Connecticut home invasion murders of July 23, 2007, career criminals Steven Hayes and Joshua Komisarjevsky broke into the house of Dr. William Petit and his family. They tied up Dr. Petit in the basement after cracking him over the head with a bat, then took his two daughters and wife hostage. Petit's wife was forced to withdraw money from her bank by the two criminals. After that, the two crooks, Hayes and Komisarjevsky, proceeded to rape Petit's wife Jennifer and younger daughter Michaela, then strangled Jennifer, and proceeded to set the house on fire with gasoline they purchased that morning. Dr. Petit managed to get out alive. The two criminals then attempted to flee after setting the fire but were stopped and arrested about a block away.
* In the "Chickenlover" episode, Officer Barbrady steps down because he's illiterate, and Cartman comes on as temporary replacement. Throughout the episode, Cartman is
* In the Child Ballad "Geordie" (Child #209), a woman pleads for her husband Geordie who is condemned to hang, convincing the King to commute the sentence to a fine. In the Scottish version sung by Maddy Prior and June Tabor (as the Silly Sisters), she doesn't merely plead— she brings all the fighting men of Clan Gordon ready for action, to make sure the King listens. In Joan Baez's version, presumably related to others called "The Death of Geordie", her plea fails. See also
* In the childhood section of the game, when Pankraz is with you, you can't control your movement at all, you can't choose to initiate dialogue, you can't do anything but follow right behind him on autopilot. Well, of course you can't do anything; he's your dad, he's the party leader, not you. You're a secondary party member when he's around!
* In "The Child", Pulaski mispronounces Data's name as "dah-tuh" by mistake.
* In "The Children", he kills Shae, and then coldly shoots his father with a crossbow.
* In the children's book "A Cup of Orange" by Nathan Bryan, Katie entices Giggo the fox by showing off her interesting tea party acoutrements. When he is close enough, she captures him and ties him up, forcing him to participate.
* In the children's book "Bea and Mister Jones" Mr. Jones is tired of his job in advertising, and his daughter Bea is tired of kindergarten. They decide to switch. Bea dresses in daddy's suit and becomes the hero of the advertising company by coming up with the perfect motto for a product, and Mr. Jones becomes the teacher's pet at the kindergarten because he can recognize the colors, and could rescue a boy stuck up a tree.
* In the children's mystery "Who's Got Gertie? And How Can We Get Her Back?", two twelve-year-old "detectives" are following a suspect, but as she already knows who one of them is, they need a disguise. A trench coat, sunglasses and an ugly hat are pressed into service, although since it's July, the trench coat was not the best choice.
* In the children's picture book "Aunt Isabel Tells a Good One," the
* In the children's series about the talking dog called Himself by Kenneth and Adrian Bird, our canine hero comes up with a plan to raise money without giving away his ability; have his owner Timothy pose as a ventriloquist. Everyone's impressed by Timothy's ability to 'throw his voice' to his pet dog while eating and drinking on stage. At one point a jealous rival guesses the truth and demands Timothy be arrested for fraud, only for it to be pointed out that you can't charge someone for putting on a fake talking dog act when the dog really can talk!

* In the children's song "I'm Being Eaten By A Boa Constrictor", the snake swallows its prey feet-first. This is backwards from how snakes normally feed (granted, doing it the right way around would make for a much shorter song...) Another problem with the song is that boas kill their prey
* In "The Children" the two character duos wandering the Riverlands and the Mountains of the Moon bump into one another by chance.
* In the Chilean comic "Zombies en la Moneda", the country is invaded by -obviously- zombies, however for the protagonists some of the moments of greatest danger come from things like neo-nazis, police crazed by stress, a girl psychopath who is also a
* In "The Chimes at Midnight", a pair of time travelers from far in the future in order to kill a superhero, the Black Eagle, before he gains his powers. The episode ends with the reveal that their information on the Black Eagle was incomplete. Specifically, he already
* In "The Chimes of Big Ben," he refuses to tell the new Number Two whether he takes sugar with his tea, so Number Two looks it up in his file ("Does not take sugar"). He then puts three lumps of sugar into the tea himself just to give Number Two the finger.
* In "The China Problem," when some of the boys react badly to the 4th
* In the Chinese Dance part of the "Nutcracker Suite", performed by dancing mushrooms. The tiniest one (called "Hop Low" by the animators) has trouble keeping in step with the rest.
* In the Chinese Invasion Alarm myth, Kari and Adam use construction cones as these to help them hear the faint beats emanating from their sunken drum. It doesn't help Adam, but Kari does hear the drum responding to the pickaxes digging through the rock below.
* In the Chinese tale "Beauty and Pockface", Pockface takes Beauty's place after she visited her family, and weeps and wails about how he never really loved her because he no longer does after she contracted smallpox.
* In the Chinese tech tree, it becomes apparent that Wargaming's definition of "never got off the drawing board" really means "an engineer idly doodled it on a napkin while waiting for his coffee to be served and then threw away". Fortunately most of the more egregious examples are premium or collectors vehicles...
* In "The Chinese Woman", Jerry mentions to Elaine he has a thing for Asian women.
* In "The Chips Are Down" when Ulrich finds out that Yumi may have to move to Japan due to financial issues, he memorizes the day's winning lottery numbers, reverses time, fills out a lottery ticket, and hands it to her family.
* In "The Choice", Aggie Travers' telekinetic powers begin to develop when she is about ten. They typically manifest when she is angry or upset, most often when other children make fun of her. Her school suspends her as a result of the numerous injuries to these children which Aggie denies causing. Unsure of how to handle their troubled daughter, her parents Joe and Leslie hire a nanny named Karen Ross. What they don't realize is that Karen was sent by a secret organisation of women who possess the same telepathic powers, which diminish as they grow older. Karen is able to teach Aggie to channel and control her powers.
* In "The Choice", House wakes up in an underage neighbor boy's bed after a night of binge drinking. While still creepy, it's not nearly as bad as it sounds—it was meant to show House was having problems with his sobriety.
* In the chorus of the Dar Williams song, "The Babysitter's Here", a little girl describes her hippie babysitter as having hair so long, she's able to sit on it.
* In the Chorus Trilogy, they're seen as incredible heroes by the Chorusian armies, but still get absolutely steamrollered by Felix (who himself is goofy enough to qualify for this trope). Felix himself doesn't take them all too seriously once he gets to know them,

* In "The Chosen People," Hawkeye tries to say, "Your presence is welcome in our camp," to Korean officer Sam Pak, but Pak tells him he actually said, "Your uncle has gas from eating cabbage." Hawkeye tries to say something else in Korean and Pak responds with, "I'm sorry to hear that. Your uncle with the gas is now pregnant."
* In the Chris King/Vicki Grant series, it showed up once, albeit in circuitous fashion. The dial turned Chris into a hero named "Any-Body" — a hero with shapeshifting powers that Chris used to take the form of Naiad, a villainess, in order to trick another bad guy.
* In the Christmas episode, after Bushroot hits him with a snowplow, he says "All I want for Christmas is my two front teeth" before passing out. As a bonus, he is in fact missing his two front teeth.
* In the Christmas episode, Leela sings of the toy-making Neptunians, "You did the best you could I guess, and some of these gorillas are okay...." The Neptunians, not used to even this much, cheer, "Hooray! We're adequate!"
* In the Christmas episode, Lois stays calm throughout the disastrous shenanigans that have been going on. Peter gave the presents away? Another family benefits. House caught fire? At least no one got hurt. No turkey? We can work something out.
* In the Christmas episode, "Season's Greedings", they find out the Wade of that world died at birth, along with her mother.
* In the Christmas Episode, when Haruhi hits Kyon, after a short time, Kyon's ghost emerges from his body. Oddly enough, it remains until later on.
* In the Christmas Red Band trailer, Deadpool starts the trailer by pausing it and giving a short explanation on how this isn't your typical superhero movie.
* In the Christmas Special, "Christmas Tree of Might", Amond of the Turles Crusher Corps was
* In the Christmas special, Jellal does this for Erza after she drunkenly accepts a dare to walk home naked on a snowy night.
* In the Christmas Special, there's an interesting twist in that it's breaking up a somber moment: when the crew reflects on how they're spending Christmas Eve away from home and family, Soundbite cuts them off with a loud "
* In the Christmas special, when Billy enters Santa's office and looks at his desk, he makes the computer monitor explode when he splits the screen open with a pen.
* In "The Cigar Store Indian", Jerry gives the titular object to Elaine as a gift after a fight while she is with a group of her friends; he also includes a card full of Native American stereotypes ("Let's bury the hatchet. We smoke-um peace pipe!"), which he insists on reading aloud, then chants a "war cry" while rocking the statue. One of her friends (who Jerry has a crush on) gets visibly upset and leaves. Jerry asks why she got so upset...and is promptly told that she's Native American. He still ends up getting a date with her, and on the date he constantly does things that make him look racist (like stopping himself from saying "Indian giver" and "scalper" and replacing them with awkward
* In the cinematic trailer, a young boy says that Doomfist's punches could level skyscrapers. When he was finally added to the game, this was obviously not the case in order to keep him balanced (although his punch is one of the only one-hit kills in the game).
* In "The Circle", Odo deputizes petty crook and gambler Quark because he needs the Ferengi's underworld contacts to gather information on who's supplying weapons for an coming
* In The Citadel DLC in Mass Effect 3, Liara attempts to invoke this trope. When the mercenaries you're fighting complain that her drone is annoying with the way that it keeps telling them how badly they're going to lose, she orders it to lower their morale by being even more annoying.
* In the Citadel DLC Tali brings over one of her favorite musicals, a quarian-turian romance. Which, if you romanced her, you'll notice she stole lines from in the previous game.
* In the Citadel DLC, your love interest will turn up to give you a hand while you're still in civilian clothes, and will take a moment to study your backside and comment on your outfit. If your romantic interest isn't part of your regular team

(Jack, Miranda, Traynor, Cortez, Kelly), it'll be Liara, and she'll
* In the City Elf origin, you're being forced to get married, but then a drunken human noble lord comes and ruins your wedding and kidnaps the women. If your character is female, then your fiance ends up being murdered by the lord's men. If your character is male, your fiancee ends up rejecting you after you rescue her from being raped and likely killed, claiming that "Grey Wardens can't have wives or families."
* In the city, gold and silver are abundant to the point of being worthless, while copper is rare and expensive. The church bells are made of gold, as are many other things, including regular cutlery (
* In the City Hunter Movie "Death of the vicious criminal Ryo Saeba", after getting drunk one night, the titular character Ryo sees a helicopter filming him from his hotel room and
* In "The City of New York versus Homer Simpson", town drunk Barney Gumble is declared the evening's designated driver. Of course, that's the night that Duff Beer spokesman "Duffman" shows up to put on the party that Barney won (but obviously can't take part in).
* In "The City of New York vs. Homer Simpson", a flashback shows that Homer went to New York City in
* In the "City of Stone" arc, Demona casts a spell that turns the large majority of Manhattan's population into stone during the night hours. Leaving aside all the physical damage that is likely to have occurred, the fact that Manhattan in effect stops working from dusk to dawn (which, given the fact that the story takes place in early November, would be from roughly 8:00 p.m. to 6:00 a.m.) for two consecutive days should have caused a nationwide panic, and had notable economic impact. One of the episode cliffhangers is David Xanatos stuck in a helicopter with a
* In the city of Telmissus in Asia Minor, an ox-cart was said to be tied either to a post or its own shaft with a fiendishly complicated knot by the cart's owner, a man named Gordias; the knot itself became known as the Gordian Knot. It was said that whoever could untie the knot would conquer the world. Alexander the Great managed to untie it by cutting it in two with his sword. (This is the legendary version usually told; the real version is not so simple. In a sense, the story as told is something of a Dungeon Bypass for the story as it actually happened.)
* In the city-state of Far Madding, men are financially dependent on women, have no political representation, are raised from birth to be obedient towards women, and can never hold any position of authority over a woman.
* In the City Watch, the roles are reversed. People tend to respect Commander Vimes (a no-nonsense and bad-tempered unshaven figure in battered armour), but everyone seems to genuinely
* In the civilian gun industry, a lot of countries have what's called the grandfather clause, where gun control legislation doesn't apply to any gun first sold before the legislation was enacted. This means a lot of older guns in circulation have nifty little features that can't be sold on modern guns.
* In "The Clan of the Duck," when Chuckie and Phil decide to wear dresses for the day and meet other babies who mistake them for girls, Phil tells them his name is "Phillian" and calls Chuckie "Chuckina."
* In the classic cartoons, Bugs' "victim" invariably regards the result as attractive, although it looks rather silly to the audience. 'Cause everyone agrees
* In the classic era (pre-1992), Bull Bushka was this in spades, especially to his main target, Les Moore. Late in their high school years, they became friends. Bull has since mellowed – he would reveal years later he was abused as a child – and although he is still Bull in many ways he is one of Les' closest friends.
* In the classic science fiction story "What's the Name of That Town?" by
* In the classic series, the Master had a weapon called a Tissue Compression Eliminator which would shrink people down into doll-sized versions of themselves, killing them in the process.
* In the classic series, the two races on Skaro seem to be defined by hair colour

— the
* In the classic series this tended to happen when the Doctor revisited somewhere he had been before, sometimes centuries later, most notably in the second half of
* In the classic series, we have the Krynoids. A Krynoid is a monstrous plant that
* In the classic version, the oldest of Immortals don't recall having ever lived as mortal beings. It's implied that they simply can't
* In the claymation short shown after the third and final act of the episode "
* In "The Cleopatra Problem", Cleopatra says Peg's "totally freaking out" catchphrase with her.
* in the Cleveland headquarters over a number of girls who've been raped and tortured. What they don't know is every girl there (all twenty six of them) is a Slayer who adores Xander. Faith openly tells them that they're only leaving the building alive because Xander told the girls not to hurt them.
* In the Cleveland, Ohio area, the advertisment signalling the start of the annual month-long I-X Indoor Amusement Park event (
* In the Cleverbot video, Evie accuses Fluttershy of mistakenly calling her "Tom", even though Fluttershy did no such thing.
* In the Clifford Simak short story "Drop Dead", stranded planetary explorers survive by eating a native Shmoo-like animal that conveniently drops dead when approached.
* In the Cliffport arc, there is a character in the Cliffport Police referred to only as chief, and he superficially resembles the trope with his cigar munching ways and his tendency to combine cliched lines with
* In the climactic battle of the serial "The Invasion", most of the UNIT members are actual British soldiers of the Coldstream Guards. Highly impressive, considering
* In the climactic fight with Jack, Darkness repeatedly fires fire out of his hands and weapons he's holding and causes fire to blaze up at a distance.
* In the climactic race, team owner Larry Dennitt gives Cal team orders, through Cal's crew chief, to take out Ricky so as to keep Ricky from getting past Jean Girard. When Cal refuses to comply, Dennitt orders his third car, Ricky's old #26 ride, to wreck Cal so that Cal can't give Ricky a push. That would be really stupid to pull off in real life since NASCAR monitors radio communications, and the officials would see this as an attempt to manipulate the finish of the race, especially since the #26 shoving Cal into the wall took out most of the field. This would end with all of Dennitt's teams (minus Cal) receiving huge fines, point penalties, as well as the suspensions of several personnel, as evidenced by what happened in real life to Michael Waltrip Racing when they were caught attempting to manipulate the finish of the 2013 Federated Auto Parts 400 to get Martin Truex, Jr. into the Chase
* In the climax, after Peter spares Hook's life in return for the latter vowing to leave and never return, Hook tries to do this to Peter as soon as he turn his back to crow in victory
* In the climax, Candace attempts to invoke this by bringing their mom out to the battlefield to see it. She believes that the "magical force" that always sweeps away her brothers' activities before she can show their mom will take care of things.
* In the climax, Cat ends up hanging over a tall bridge when Lung knocks her over, but Fa drags her back up in time.
* In the climax, he's talking on the phone with the guy he's after, and holding the guy's brother hostage. When the guy tries to buy him off, the protagonist holds the phone up so the brother can talk and blows his fingers off with a shotgun.
* In the climax, it turns out that they're actually arm cannons, and he uses them to demolish Zim's robot army.
* In the climax, Jake makes another example before he fills with bullets the
* In the climax, Lamia pulls a variant. After seeing her sisters dead, she pretends to let Tristan and Yvaine go... then catches them just as they're about to leave, and explains that she was just giving them space for a joyful reunion because if she'd killed Tristan outright while Yvaine was still broken-hearted, Yvaine would have been no use for the ritual. (And her sisters? Eh. More for her!)

* In the climax of Act 6, there is a three-way between Terezi and Dave and Dirk on one side, Spades Slick on another, and Jack English on the third. Both Jacks are equally hostile to everyone.
* In the climax of "Crusaders of the Lost Mark", Diamond Tiara learns to stand up to her overly abusive mother Spoiled Rich, to the point of calling her out of raising her to be the
* In the climax of Deadfire, the final encounter is a battle against
* In the climax of Judai's duel with Yubel, we see the latter preparing to Fusion Summon a monster that will
* In the climax of "Operation: T.H.E.S.H.O.G.U.N.", Numbuh Four bursts into Shogun Roquefort's throne room, only to find the villain sprawled out on the floor, Numbuh Two having defeated him already. Numbuh Two apparently has made a
* In the climax of "SpongeBob SquarePants vs. The Big One", the Flying Dutchman is sent to Davy Jones' Locker where he is met by a live-action Davy Jones (of the Monkees fame).
* In the climax of the above duel, Yugi pulls off one of the biggest comebacks thus far with the help of this trope. He starts with 100 LP versus Noah's 10,000, has no cards on his field or in his hand. He topdecks Card of Sanctity which effectively lets him draw cards until he has six, and those six cards form just the right combo that allows him to win the Duel on the spot.
* In the climax of the film, Bruce leaps off the Grandmaster's ship to take down Fenris as the Hulk... except he doesn't transform and splats to death on the Bifrost.
* In the climax of the long-running Nodoka storyline, Ranma's mother accidentally goes flying up and over a cliff overlooking the ocean. Ranma doesn't bother trying to catch her from solid ground: he leaps down to catch her mid-flight -defying the known laws of physics-, reaching out with his hand and pulling her up mere instants before they hit the rocks below. Then he hurls her (sheathed) katana at the cliff face hard enough to embed it in the rock, providing a small (but sufficient) foothold.
* In the climax of "These Are The Voyages...", Trip rigs an explosion powerful enough to rip through walls, and only his lungs are damaged. "If he held his breath, he'd probably be fine!"
* In the climax of "The Secret Box", at first the "secret" of Patrick's secret box is revealed to be nothing but just a string ("a SECRET string!"), but once SpongeBob has left, Patrick reveals
* In the climax, Sarah Connor appears on screen at the same time as the T-1000 is mimicking her. This shot was achieved using
* In the climax when Bellwether strikes Nick with a night howler pellet, he goes savage, advances toward Judy menacingly and bites her...then she fakes death as it's revealed they faked it to trick Bellwether into revealing her scheme.
* In the Clone Wars, Jedi Knights, while not soldiers by trade are all commissioned as Generals. Masters are High Jedi Generals or Senior Jedi Generals depending on the size of their Command. Padawans were all made Jedi Commanders, outranking the Clone Commanders.
* In the closing credit sequence, the normally uber-serious Tigress is seen sporting an improvised mustache of noodles, impersonating Master Shifu in the same way Po had done earlier. Shifu, for the record, is
* In the closing credits for episode 231 it's hinted that NPG bodyguard
* In "The Cloud", Freakazoid manages to beat the Lobe by telling him his latest plot (to forcibly turn people into
* In "The Cloud", Lieutenant Tuvok tells off Ensign Kim for making the "junior officers" nervous. Both ranks are regarded as junior officers, as is anyone below the rank of Commander. This confusion may be due to them both being department heads (Kim in charge of Ops, and Tuvok in charge of Tactical/Security).
* In "The Clouds," Soapy ordinarily calls Mittens "Queen of Clubs" or "little missy."
* In the Clovers' 1959 song "Love Potion Number Nine" the lyrics go: "

* In "The Clown Stays in the Picture" Captain Horacio McCallister gets his leg blown off with a shotgun by a Mexican gang member, but there is no blood to be seen.
* In the Coast Salish tale S-Hal-Ikun, the title character has been changed by a great bird called Thunder, and if he opens his eyes the lightning will flash and if he removes his hat, the thunder will come. This does not contribute to good relations with his neighbors.
* In ''The Coconut Nut," the narrators relatives use coconuts as cannonballs when fighting off "theives."
* In the CoDominium universe, genetic engineering is a crap shoot — the Saurons
* In "The Cold Equations", Captain Thomas Barton communicates with Commander Delhart and the Ship's Records clerk over a video phone. Marilyn Lee Cross later uses it to talk to her brother Gerry.
* In "The Cold Equations", Group One's base on Woden was damaged by a meteor storm and its supply of the serum for kala fever was destroyed. Captain Thomas Barton's Emergency Dispatch Ship is on a mission to replenish their supply when Marilyn Lee Cross stows away.
* In "The Cold Equations", the Ship's Record clerk is a woman. In the
* In the Cold Open of "The Pontiac Bandit Return", Det. Jake Peralta is undercover, dressed as Santa on a stakeout. Then suddenly his nemesis Doug Judy appears and Jake chases him in the very impractical costume. Then he and his partner Rosa Diaz search for him in a lot where they sell Christmas trees. After Jake gets him, they knock down a heater and some of the trees immediately catch fire. Jake, happy to have caught Judy & still dressed as Santa, sees a couple of kids that happen to be in the lot and yells at them: "Take a good look, kids. THIS IS WHAT HAPPENS WHEN YOU'RE NAUGHTY!"
* In the Cold War-era Eastern Bloc, the term "Udarnik" was coined to describe exemplary, super-productive groups of elite workers who were known and expected to push themselves to the limit in their jobs. They accomplished as much as a work quota of 270 percent of per month and were valued by the state as labor leaders and propaganda tools. Unfortunately, the norm-breaking accomplishment of becoming an Udarnik came at the cost of substandard quality for the goods they produce, lack of work safety regulations and lack of concern for personal health which supports the popular myth that some Udarniks died of deadly exhaustion. Just to show how pointless it was to achieve the title of Udarnik, the western equivalent to that honorary title was "Employee of the Month".
* In "The Collectors", one of the alien races captured by the Kasorlans cannot survive in Earth's atmosphere for more than two minutes as it is toxic to them. The atmosphere in their cell is equally toxic to humans.
* In the Colonists story arc, the climax is to either fight off the Protoss to try and see if the Zerg infection amongst the colonists can be arrested and perhaps cured, or to side with the Protoss and mercilessly burn out all of the infected. Your choice is always the correct one: Choose the former, and the game reveals that there were only a few infected colonists, who are easily contained, and Dr. Hanson leaves the ship to work on researching a cure. Choose the latter, the infestation is far more widespread, and Dr. Hanson goes insane and infects herself, turning into a monstrous human/zerg hybrid that Raynor has to kill.
* In the colored-boxed set versions (BECMI — Basic/Expert/Companion/Master/Immortals) you ascended around 36th level and became a god. You could keep playing to near-omnipotence and choose to return to mortal form. Going through two entire cycles of mortality and rising to omnipotence caused you to
* In "The Color Yellow", Bart has just finished helping Willie by blasting the tree stump out of the ground:
* In the Colosseum tournament, Sai does this to "Lucy" (a disguised Luffy).
* In the column "Lemon Harangue", he talks about his father's unerringly awful car buying instincts:
* In the comedic version, expect the box with the body to go missing, get mixed up with an identical-looking box, or have all kinds of people wanting to open the chest for all kinds of innocent reasons.

* In the comic book ad "The Amazing Spider-Man in the Free the Cap'n Mystery", Spider-Man confronts the Sogmaster, who had previously left Cap'n Crunch in prison in the Cap'n Crunch commercial "Tidal Sog".
* In the comic book and various adaptations thereof, Ben Grimm and Johnny Storm of The
* In the comic book tie-in Batman comes up with the idea of disguising the Bat-boat as a fishing boat to sneak into Arkham City. It works brilliantly...until he tries it a second time, where the boat winds up blown up with a rocket. Lampshaded by Batman.
* In the comic "Feels Like Home", royalty from the country of Yuwabe arrive in Arendelle. Yuwabe is clearly an African country, with the queen's name (Mahereb) and their enjoyment of cassava implying it's a counterpart to a West African country.
* In the comic, his first flight had him unable to control his speed, and ended with an intentional crash landing because he couldn't figure out how to stop.
* In the comic "Operation F.O.R.G.E.T.". After known boy hater Numbuh Eighty Six/Fanny Fulbright accidentally gets decommissioned, she's shown to be a boy-loving maniac. This hints that her
* In "The Comic Pusher", with vintage comic books. Of 2000AD, at that.
* In the comic "Regeneration," we get this little line in a flashback:
* In the comics, after the Professor teleports Earth's population to the dinosaur age, minus Fry, Bender, Leela and Cubert, the Omicronians show up to salvage the uninhabited Earth, unless our heroes can display one hundred Earthlings, proving Earth still has people. This trope may have been Fry's idea, earning him a slap from Leela.
* In the comics, a Guardian of the Universe (specifically Krona) found out (with severe and unpleasant consequences) and so the rest of the Guardians wanted/needed to make sure it never happened again. (Details vary depending on when the specific telling of the story was written.)
* In the comics, Alfred is usually proper and polite in dealing with others and
* In the comics and original series, Dewey was just as smart as his brothers, the latter indicating at times that Dewey was slightly more intelligent than Huey and Louie. Here, he's by far the dumbest of the triplets, having little to no sense of caution, and is heavily implied to have suffered brain damage from being dropped as an egg. Despite this, he still shows some moments of intellect during adventures from time to time.
* In the comics and other media on LEGO's website for EXO-Force, this is how Meca One became a cunning and vindictive leader of a robot revolution against the humans.
* In the comics, Andrew clones some demonic species that had long since died out.
* In the comics and the MCU, the Red Skull is a heartless, unrepentant Nazi and one of Marvel's vilest villains. In
* In the comics, Batman would occasionally disguise himself (often impersonating
* In the comics Black Mask is a brutal mob boss, fond of torture, not afraid of anyone, and has no problem going head-to-head with any member of the Bat-family. His only appearances in
* In the comics, both Captain Cold and the Trickster are pretty sane bank robbers with gimmicks. Here, Cold is a hitman and the Trickster was pretty much a testing ground for
* In the comics, Buffy treats the Slayer army as a real one, however as she was a shockingly bad instructor and Xander is the only one with any military knowledge they make do as amateurs.
* In the comics, Deacon Blackfire is an incredibly clever and charismatic cult leader who temporarily conquered the city and was able to defeat and humiliate Batman the first time they fought, leaving Batman so broken that he even considered retiring. In
* In the comics, Dr. Morgan Michaels was merely an anglicized alias used by

* In the comics, Eddie Brock's grudge against Spider-Man was caused when he published an article incriminating a man he thought was a serial killer, only for Spider-Man to catch the real culprit. This publicly shamed Eddie, causing his company to fire him, his father to disown him, and his wife to leave him. Here, Eddie is a sleazy
* In the comic series from Devil's Due, Rock 'N Roll leaps at the chance to rejoin the team when he hears it is being reformed as it means he can ignore dress regulations and is allowed to regrow his beard.
* In the comic series, Willow asks Satsu if the sound Buffy makes during
* In the comics, Faith screws up. Again. This time working as a bodyguard for Kennedy. She's protecting a wannabe rock star, who is into underage girls, when her father storms in and Faith finds this out she attacks him, the rocker turns into a demon, and Kennedy has to intervene. When Faith explains what happened she is most upset not that their client was attacked but the suggestion she condones what he did.
* In the comics, GoGo's name is Leiko Tanaka, though the character is
* In the comics, Harry Osborn became an armored hero known as the American Son for a brief period. He eventually gets the armor in the show too, but is inexplicably called the Patrioteer instead.
* In the comics Hell falls more in line with the DCU (or at least Vertigo) conception of Hell, even dealing with events from other comics (like Lucifer leaving, and the resulting power vacuum). It's much more of a Biblical Hell, with the fire and brimstone, desiccated wastelands, and a wide variety of bizarre and horrible demons finding unique and terrible ways to torture people. It seems to work on its own internal rules, however, which mostly serve to keep the demons in check against one another, and to a lesser extent against humans. Of course, after being flipped off by Constantine one to many times the devil (not Lucifer, but the Devil) starts breaking the rules.
* In the comics, it's shown that Pyro views anything that isn't on fire or otherwise being subjected to violence and mayhem as being dreadfully dull, boring, and colorless. It's only once they start burning things, or see things being burnt, that any joy or happiness can be perceived.
* In the comics, Jonathan Kent has black hair and was a preteen before getting a
* In the comics, Jon mentions that in high school, he had a mad crush on the head cheerleader, which didn't end well: "Ever had a pom-pom
* In the comics, Mary Jane Watson's Aunt Anna in the comics was a sweet-natured woman who even showed gratitude for Spider-Man saving her life. Here, she's an ill-tempered crone who treats Peter Parker like dirt in spite of how nice he is to her.
* In the comics most of the games cast resembled their counterparts in the DiC cartoons at the time (the earliest comics mirrored
* In the comics, Mr. Negative's minions are called "Inner Demons". In "Return to the Spider-Verse, Part Three", he calls them "Dragons".
* In the comics, Mr. Negative was only out to take over the New York underworld. While he's still ruthless and taking advantage of the Kingpin's fall from grace, the game sees Negative have more sympathetic reasons for his actions, namely
* In the comics, Negan got his iconic leather jacket from an abandoned store. Here, he bought it for $600 prior to the outbreak, though the real Lucille hid it and later gave it back to him as an "anniversary gift".
* In the comics, Nightwing is open to Damian becoming Robin (he actually replaced Tim Drake in order to bring Damian into the Batfamily) and gladly supports and guides him even before he got the mantle. In
* In the comics, Norman Osborne, the Green Goblin, is a deranged sociopath. In the cartoon, due to behind-the-scenes issues, he couldn't become the Green Goblin until some ways into season 4, which means we get three seasons in which he is a sane man who has gotten in over his head in working with the Kingpin, but sees no way out without putting his son in danger.
* In the comics, Ralph Dibny, the Elongated Man, is a slightly goofy
* In the comics she learned English (and probably Romany) by tackling and kissing Dick Grayson...the beginning of what is

* In the comics, some planets happened to have Transformer-sized humans. Which explains the Pretenders, but
* In the comics Superman tends to be a lot closer to this trope than his animated counterpart, mainly because he consciously
* In the comics, their original backstory was that they evolved from naturally occurring gears, levers and pulleys. Uh... yeeeeeah. This was eventually quietly forgotten in favor of the Primus origin, in which the Transformers were to be his trump card against his
* In the comics, the Rhino's real name is Aleksei Sytsevich, with his original name, Alex O'Hirn,
* In the comics, the robotic Toyman replacement was called Toyboy. But in
* In the comics, The Shocker was a genius inventor who created his own gear and a pragmatic tactician who evaded capture many times.
* In the comics, the Supreme Intelligence is basically a giant floating head, but has nonetheless often been referred to with male pronouns (or none at all), and has always been voiced by male actors whenever it showed up in TV shows and video games. In the film, however, the Supreme Intelligence takes on a form unique to whoever it is talking to, meaning that when it appears onscreen to commune with Carol Danvers, it looks like the aforementioned Mar-Vell and is once again played by Bening.
* In the comic strip, Charlie Brown and Linus are in different classes, while Peppermint Patty, Marcie, and Franklin all go to a different school. The animated adaptations (including
* In the comics, very soon after he has defected to the Rebellion Soontir Fel darkly hints that he's a
* In the comic the characters do learn from experience, they've worked out that they want to avoid firearms when possible before issue 1, and as time goes on they seek a fortified position, learn to set watches, train with polearms, regularly thin the dead population in their area to prevent buildup, and are rightfully suspicious of anyone claiming authority.
* In "The Coming of Shadows", the Centauri Emperor announces his plans for a peace treaty with the Narns, just
* In the commentaries to one of the books, Rich admits that Vaarsuvius is (by level 15 or so) pretty much a living god, capable of single-handedly affecting the outcome of the battle. The plot often conspires to prevent them from having too much of an impact.
* In the commentary "Building the Mote In God's Eye", Niven and Pournelle note that some version of this trope is required for any sort of stable interstellar government — if a ship can just appear out of nowhere within attack range of a planet, there won't be any
* In the commentary for one episode, one of the directors recalls the following line in a script: "The town riots, more than usual."
* In the commentary for that episode, they mention that they considered having him accept Bulma's later offer of staying the night, what with her being single and thus very interested in his, ah...
* In the commentary for the prequels, they talk about how Yoda's CG design had to compensate for the visual effect of Yoda being a puppet in the older films. For instance, Yoda's ears wiggling when he moved was originally a side effect of the material used to create the puppet, but they actually replicated the ear-wiggling when he went CG simply because audiences had already accepted that Yoda's ears are just supposed to do that.
* In the commentary for the same video, he mentioned that he did not include the infamous "
* In the commentary, Lindsay says that the Chick and Critic have a "history". TGWTG shippers punched the air in joy.
* In the commentary producer Julie Gardner expressed her belief that Harriet Jones, former Prime Minister wasn't dead and had escaped through a trap door.
* In the commentary, the author admits that although he didn't know it at the time of writing "splanch" is actually a real word, but means something entirely different (it's a style of house architecture).

* In the commentary, the designers admit that there were a few bypasses that play testers stumbled upon, allowing them to skip portions of the puzzles. Many times, they decided to leave it in because the shortcut was less intuitive and a bit more challenging to use. Still, knowing how to do this could save some time.
* In the commentary, the writer explains this joke to be from a 1934
* In the comments section on reviews of games that have either not been publicly released yet or have
* In the commercial for cat litter, it showed cats doing the potty dance, a method of leaning forward on their hind legs with their paws on their crotches,
* In the commercials for Push Pop, the cartoon character uses the Push Pop itself to slide across a rope between buildings.
* In the common route, Sasami invites Mr. Producer over to her house. The screen then
* In the Commonwealth military, it's common for company commanders to be majors rather than captains.
* In "The Companion", a woman who seems like an obvious suspect for an earlier suspicious drowning leaves a suicide note before presumably drowning herself; her body is not found. In fact, she
* In "The Companion", the victim was a rich relative of the killer, whose family needed the money to cover medical expenses.
* In the Company of Men, another take on the "Dangerous Liaisons" concept, a man named Chad, incensed at his girlfriend for leaving him, convinces a schlub named Howard to get revenge on womankind by targeting and psychologically tormenting a vulnerable deaf employee. When the plot backfires and Howard falls in love with her, he returns to Chad, who shows him his girlfriend lying in his bed. When he demands to know why then, did he encourage him to go down this road in the first place, Chad replies, "Because I could".
* In the Company of Ogres elf meat and many get killed when they break off fighting and start eating elf corpses.
* In the compilation release "God Loves You Very Much", Annie is voiced by Maggie Roberts (who began voicing her in "The Little Drummer Boy"), while her singing was provided by Ally Nawrocki (who'd previously voiced the character starting with "Minnesota Cuke and the Search for Samson's Hairbrush" through "Sweetpea Beauty"). By the time "Merry Larry and the True Light of Christmas" came out about two years later, Maggie was capable of providing her own singing.
* In the CONCACAF Champions League, Mexican clubs tend to be this to other North American clubs, especially MLS (USA and Canada) clubs. In fact the last time a non-Mexican club won the tournament was in 2005, when Costa Rica's Deportivo Saprissa won the title with a 3–2 aggregate win over Mexico's UNAM Pumas in the final. Back then it was still called the CONCACAF Champions' Cup.
* In the Confederacy, meanwhile, Union sympathizers (especially in Appalachia) found themselves terrorized by the secessionist governments, to the point where northwestern Virginia (a solidly pro-Union area in a Confederate state)
* In the Congo-Léopoldville, on September 5, 1960, an English lesson on the national radio network was interrupted by official announcement from Prime Minister Lumumba and President Kasa-Vubu dismissing each other.
* In the "Conky" episode during the vet clinic scene, Randy and Lahey get shot with tranquilizer darts and Conky the hand puppet's head is blown apart with a gunshot while still on Bubbles' hand. The show is a
* In the Conqueror set, there will be a small chance that, instead of the usual boss charts, you'll get
* In "The Conscience of The King", Kirk very nearly becomes this for a massacre he witnessed in his youth, as he finds that seven of the other eight witnesses have been killed off in the preceeding years, and an attempt is made on the life of the eighth, a subordinate of Kirk's named Kevin Riley. Fortunately, McCoy is able to pull Riley through.
* In "The Contest", George is at the parents' house, starts reading Glamour, then gets caught by his mother, who injures herself as a result...

* In "The Contest" Jerry notices a woman in an apartment across the street walking around naked. He tries to ignore her in order to win the titular contest. Kramer gives up on the contest because of the woman and he ends up in bed with her.
* In the context of the game itself, Aerie is likely the second woman you meet (Jaheira being thrown at you at the very beginning, Viconia likely being the last you find because the game forces you to go to Waukeen's Promenade before it will allow you to travel to the Government District). But both the game and Viconia react like she joined your party for a time in the first game, even if she never did.
* In the controversial 18th episode of the original series "Beauty and The Beach", a character of the day is an unattractive,
* In the convention NP strip with a puppet, Melonpool makes comments about
* In the convention of U.S. Presidential and other races, once the final results are published and the loser phones the winner to concede defeat, in this conversation they are expected to treat each other as worthy opponents — whether or not they actually feel this way. The losing candidate's voters also tends to respect the winner of a presidential election and gives him a "honeymoon" period. A few elections subverted this trope, either because of incumbency, intense personal animus towards the victor (1860), legitimacy questions (1824, 1876, 2000), or both of the latter two (2016).
* In the convoluted traditions of combat between Great Houses in the
* In the Cooler movie, Krillin ended up saying "porrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrrpoise" when he realized he was about to tell Oolong (a pig) that there was pork in the stew he was making. Oolong doesn't take it well when he finds out the truth.
* In "The Corbomite Maneuver", Captain Kirk isn't happy with the sluggish response to his orders when they have to fire on a hostile alien spacecraft, and so orders some battle drills before going to his quarters. In a middle of a drill a
* In the Cory Doctorow story "Return to Pleasure Island", golems (although the actual word is never used) are a sentient race of clay giants who reproduce by breaking off parts of themselves, usually the thumb, that then grow. A right thunb child is strong, even for a golem. A left thumb child is smarter. A child of the tongue is... a mistake.
* In the counterpart to canon's Sausuke Retrieval Arc, Orochimaru has the Sound Five kidnap Kaida and Hagane during his invasion to force
* In the County of Longsword a three-way civil war erupts between Count Pallas Dusktalon's Reformisten, Conrad Silvertalon's moderates, and Starry Night's communist partisans.
* In the "Courage Wolf vs Insanity Wolf" Animeme Rap Battle, after being told he gives nothing to society, Insanity Wolf replies "Yeah, that's a real crock of shit! I feed the homeless!
* In the course of Da Vinci's Notebook's Uncle Buford Mega-Mix, "Uncle Buford" asks, "You ever eat worms? They taste like... worms."
* In the course of evolution eyes have apparently evolved multiple times, and sometimes in not-exactly-expected places.
* In the course of the seventh series of the new series, the Doctor encounters Clara Oswald three times in three completely different times and places, and witnesses her death
* in the courtroom and fails, which results in her dismissal and sanctions.
* In the courtroom episode, it's revealed Tommy wet himself when Titus' mother shot her husband. Later, she takes the judge hostage, but he gets free when Ken goes in to talk to her. Upon seeing evidence of how the judge handled the situation, Tommy gloats, "Oh, look! The Judge wet himself!"
* In The Courts Of The Crimson Kings. A Martian biologist examines a captive human, and despite his similar bipedal form is squicked by such things as body hair and sweat.
* In the Courts of the Crimson Kings. A Martian 'grappeling hook' is a genetically-engineered octopoid creature that grabs onto the nearest object once it lands, thus avoiding all these problems.
* In The Courts Of The Crimson Kings. As the biotech weapons of the Martians take a few seconds to reload, swordwork is still important.

* In The Courts of the Crimson Kings buries its head under its wing in fear after noticing the Emperor's displeasure, having retained genetic memories of what can happen to the bearer of bad tidings.
* In the Courts of the Crimson Kings have physical differences that they need to work around, which only tests their inventiveness. The Martian scientist who examines him later seems rather squicked out by these differences though.
* In The Courts of the Crimson Kings stories. The first pictures from Mars show the inhabitants are armed with firearms and swords. Some speculate that it's due to a code of honor, but it's pointed out that it would give the cheaters too much of an advantage. It turns out Martians use biotechnology guns that are slow to reload, so they need to have a backup weapon handy in the interim.
* In The Courts of the Crimson Kings which take a while to reload, so edged weapons are still needed to defend yourself in the interval.
* In the Courts of the Crimson Kings with each on opposing sides (the book is a homage to the John Carter novels).
* In the cover of the Deluxe Edition, a grinning Darkseid is looking down on the team.
* In "The Cow Head", the starving villagers kill and eat the kudan that had done nothing to them. Then youkai all burst out of their stomachs.
* In "The Coyote," Bolt and Mittens engage in a music-based pun war, though Bolt is the more enthusiastic participant. Composer names, music terms, and musical instrument names are all included.
* In "The Crank in the Shaft", the victim, an office manager, is seemingly mourned by everyone, until Booth and Bones find out that the victim who was so hated by everyone that not only was there celebration of her death,
* In "The Creature Whisperer", Owen calls Ocean "Mr. Pond" and states that he's not good at naming bodies of water.
* In the creepypasta, “Your Secret Admirer, the story is told in this format.
* In "The Crepes of Wrath", Principal Seymour Skinner is called 'Spanky' by his mother, prompting laughter from all the school children.
* In the criminal justice community this is actually gaining popularity as a form of what's called "restorative justice" since there have been studies that show that shame is an important part of both preventing crime in the first place and preventing recidivism, and throwing people in prison has become glorified in some subcultures, so expect to see more of this sort of thing. It fell out of favor with the rise of easy mass transportation (who cares if you spent a day in the stocks if you can easily move to a location no one has ever heard of you), and came back with the information-spreading properties of the internet.
* In "The Crimpers," Jason rubs his wrists after the titular kidnappers untie him.
* In the Crimson Flower route, Ashe (if recruited) will cite the death of his adoptive father as one of the reasons why he joins
* In the critically acclaimed episode "Beyond the Sea", the psychic death row inmate (although whether his abilities are real or not is made deliberately ambiguous) freaks out Dana Scully a lot by referring to her by a nickname only her recently-deceased father calls her.
* In the Critic's Top 11 Hottest Animated Women list, his closing line for number 6 is, "If she doesn't make your sword grow, nothing will."
* In "The Crossing", Father Mark Cassidy is haunted by the apparition of a car containing his long deceased girlfriend Kelly crashing over a cliff. The original accident, which happened more than 20 years earlier, was caused by his
* In "The Cross My Heart Job," Eliot sarcastically asks if Sophie has handcuffs in her purse to restrain a
* In the crossover between the Predator and Batman. Bruce has had to make a custom made suit to combat the Predator and with the long drawn out fight leading to the Batcave. As the Predator is about to land a killing blow to Bruce, Alfred gains the Predator's attention and proceeds to
* In the crossover episode that sees DiNozzo visit the Los Angeles team, at the end Hetty Lange gets to "transmit a message" from Gibbs to Tony. Certainly the longest-ranged Gibbs Slap on record...

* In the crossover event "The Great Fables Crossover", many of the characters from the main Fables book guest star in Jack of Fables. Jack, frustrated that his book isn't focusing on
* In the Crossover fic Naruto McDowell, this is Danzo's reaction upon hearing that Evangeline has adopted the titular troublemaker.
* In the crossover sequel with Marvel Apes the zombie Reed Richards gets beheaded and still moves around by using his stretching powers to extend pieces of his neck stump into rudimentary legs.
* In the Crossover story where he fought Superman, after his plan was defeated Doom ran to the Latverian embassy, reaching it seconds before Superman arrived, then simply turned toward Superman and dared him to cross the embassy border to try arresting him on Latverian soil. Superman didn't want to trigger a major diplomatic incident so he turned around and left.
* In the crowd of freed ponies in issue 1, when the Mane 6 leave the caves in issue 2, when Twilight Sparkle and Fluttershy are about to fall in the oubliette in issue 3, and when Celestia and Spike join the Mane 6 after Chrysalis is defeated in issue 4.
* In "The Crucible" Harvey references the trope when Sabrina is accused of being a witch. He says she can't be one because witches are old and ugly -
* In the crude-looking cartoons that are created by The Cheat, the Homestar characters, including Marzipan, are all voiced by a male (in this case, Matt's brother, Mike).
* In "The Cryonic Woman", it's noted that Fry seems to fit in more in the 31st century than in his own time period.
* In "The Cryonic Woman", when Fry and Bender take the Planet Express ship on a joyride, they unknowingly drag the delivery service's building along behind them since the ship was anchored to it. When flying over Pisa, the ship collides with the Leaning Tower, straightening it. Then the building collides with it, which tips the tower the
* In the crypt is the Throne of Faustus Heterodyne, by which the seneschal of Mechanicsburg can communicate directly with Castle Heterodyne (the central brain itself is in the library), that considers Agatha a
* In "The Crypt of Dracula," they go to Transylvania and get assistance from Vulko and Esmeralda, a Gypsy father-and-daughter duo, in stopping Savanti from recruiting
* In "The Crystal Empire", Cadance shields the eponymous city from King Sombra with a similar barrier, which breaks down when she becomes exhausted. This time, Shining Armor can't use his own barrier spell because Sombra nullified his magic with black crystals.
* In "The Crystalling", Twilight gives Starlight a massive lift of instructions for how to reconnect with
* In the Crystal War timeline from "The Cutie Remark, Part 1", Maud and Pinkie Pie are literally Smash Sisters.
* In the "Cry Wilderness" episode, when the title of the movie appears on screen Crow riffs "Well, if you insist." Then he, Tom, and Jonah all shout "WILDERNESS!" together.
* In "The Cuckoo Clock", a cat tries to catch a cuckoo bird. When he finally catches it and eats it, he realizes the sadness of his death and tries to do a
* In the Culling of Stratholme instance, Arthas comments that the fire is just as dangerous to your party as the undead. Except it
* In the "Cupid's Day" episode, when Lelouch looks in horror at the stampede of girls charging towards him, Rolo immobilizes everyone with his Geass and drags Lelouch into the closet right behind him to make it look like he just disappeared into the air.
* In "The Curious Camera", after the titular camera is finally destroyed, the Gremlin possessing it jumps to a video camera. Then after THAT is taken out, it possesses a computer.
* In "The Curious Case Of Dean Winchester", a 900-year-old Irish witch uses an enchanted card game to "win years" from his opponents, and used them to extend his own life

* In "The Curious Case of Edgar Witherspoon", the psychiatrist Jeremy Sinclair is visited by a young woman who asks him to try and help the title character, a kindly but eccentric man who spends all of his time maintaining a massive
* In the current Meta many units are often seen as "uncompetitive". This does not mean they're bad or underpowered, in fact most of them do very well at what they do and are quite appropriate for their cost. However, there are many units that are
* In the current version, blunt weapons in general but war hammer especially are also (as in real life) the best weapons against heavily armored foes, being able to deal nearly as much damaged to
* In "The Curse of Fenric", Jean and Phyllis make comments along the lines of "I love men in uniform" to the soldiers they meet on the path to the beach. In the novelisation, the girls' lines stay the same, but are delivered mockingly because the soldiers are elderly Home Guard members.
* In "The Curse of Savanti Romero," they go back to Ancient Egypt to prevent him from taking control of a
* In the Curse of Strahd adventure, it's stated that only about 1/10 Barovians actually have souls. Subverted, however, in that Barovians are aware of this, and in fact all that soullessness does is make you largely incapable of anything but fleeting joy and self-determination. The adventure itself says that the Mists themselves create said people largely to provide prey for the monsters.
* In "The Curse of the Black Spot", a 17-century pirate crew are flying an alien starship by the end of the episode. Earlier, when the pirate captain first came aboard the TARDIS, he was able to figure out almost instantly what many of the controls were. When the Doctor looked at him in a bit of surprise, he shrugged and said, "A ship's a ship."
* In "The Cushion Saturation", Penny tries to excuse herself saying she needed to wash her hair to save herself from Sheldon's wrath when he was about to discover his self-designated couch cushion had been disturbed.
* In "The Cutie Map – Part 1", the adult ponies of Our Town cover the ears of foals when the Mane Six have a bout of bickering.
* In "The Cutie Pox", Spike eats popcorn as he watches Apple Bloom compulsively perform various talents (thanks to the eponymous "Cutie Pox").
* In "The Cutie Re-Mark, Part 1", Twilight is sent back in time and has to encourage a filly Rainbow Dash to do a Sonic Rainboom. Dash gets scared off by Twilight's overly eager nature and closeness.
* In "The Cutie Re-Mark Part 2", for nearly destroying the world with a time travel revenge plot, Starlight Glimmer's ultimate sentence... is becoming Twilight Sparkle's student and being friends with the Mane Six.
* In "The Cutie Re-Mark", Starlight Glimmer goes back in time to prevent Rainbow Dash from performing a Sonic Rainboom when she was younger, and Twilight
* In "The Cutie Re-Mark" two-parter, the time loops Twilight, Spike and Starlight are stuck in resemble this trope the most rather than other type of temporal travel. They never encounter themselves in the past, despite using the spell several times; instead they
* In the cut scene before Batman becomes playable for the first time in the Game we see a police officer being killed, with a nice lingering shot on his corpse.
* In the cutscene before the final battle, all ten of the heroes line up in front of Chaos to fight him. You then proceed into a three-round, one-on-one battle. Somewhat mitigated in the sequel/prequel, when you enter the battle with four more party members that can take your initial character's place if/when they die, plus one
* In the cutscene just prior to this, he took a Mechon blade to the back, spending the remainder of the scene shaking in obvious pain and limping from various injuries sustained throughout the assault on Galahad Fortress, before diving what appeared to be several kilometers down after a falling Fiora
* In the cutscene leading up to the final battle of the original Trilogy,
* In the cutscene that plays after defeating Bad Girl, she throws a tantrum and has Travis Pinned, bashing him with her bat in the same way she does in her

* In the cutscene where Alex Mercer gains his Armour power, the transformation comes with an effect that throws the Infected piling up on him away. Would it have made the game
* In "The Cyber House Rules," a B-plot about Bender adopting twelve orphans for the government stipends ends with him getting arrested and jailed for child endangerment, along with not only his roommate Fry but all twelve of the kids. A deleted scene explains this last: the police "got a tip they were in on it" (from Bender himself, no less).
* In "The Cyber House Rules", Bender is arrested by Child Services on counts of child cruelty, child endangerment, depriving children of food, selling children
* In "The Cycling Tour". Mr. Pither keeps catching his pump in his trouser leg and crashing. At a small village:
* In the Czech band Lucie's music video for "Panic" features a gigantic woman in a red dress. For most of the video the lead singer is standing in her hand serenading her. At the end of the video the lead singer slips a ring on the giantess' finger. Unfortunately for him the giant woman then
* In the Czech fairy tale "The Princess with a Golden Star on Her Forehead", princess Lada feels she must flee from home when her widowed father forces her to marry him. She's extremely beautiful but covers herself in a coat of mouse fur from head to toe. Nobody thinks her beautiful in that disguise.
* in the Czech Republic. And Czech beer is generally regarded as very decent (as long as it is fresh from the tap).
* In the Czech Republic, in reaction to just about any advertisement for washing powders comparing their product with a "common washing powder", one company actually started making a washing powder of that name.
* In "The Dad Who Knew Too Little", PI Dexter Colt charges Homer $1000 for expenses, including a $40 steak. Homer flees, refusing to pay, and Colt swears revenge.
* In the Daedric quest of the aforementioned Vaermina, Vaermina sends the PC into a nightmarish world of burning corpses, molten lava, zombie-o-rama, only to find that the entire quest is the never-ending nightmare of a wizard who stole an artifact from Vaermina.
* In the "Daemon Rising" arc the brainwashed AndrAIa explains how important love is to the innocent-looking virus Daemon... who
* In the Daffy short "Thumb Fun", a car whizzes by Daffy as he's hitch-hiking, leaving him featherless and in his boxers.
* In the Daffy/Speedy short "Swing Ding Amigo", after being blown up by a grenade, Daffy recites a very odd poem as his feathers flutter to the ground.
* In the Dagger in the Dark scenario it is rather obvious that Rak'gor is going to turn on Vol'jin and the player based on his disrespect and simmering hostility. The hostility between Vol'jin and Garrosh's loyalists had been built up since
* In "The Daleks", closeups of the Thals are shot this way to indicate that they are an
* In "The Daleks", the pacifist Thals are under threat of being wiped out by the Daleks but refuse to compromise their ideals, even in self-defence, until Ian proves that they do have things they're willing to fight for by seizing the Thal leader's fiancée and pretending he's going to trade her to the Daleks for his own safety, which prompts the Thal leader to punch him in the face. The TV version never explains how a man from a society that has been entirely pacifist for generations came by the idea of punching people, apparently assuming it to be something that all men know instinctively; the novelization adds a scene in which one of Ian's earlier attempts to bring the Thals around to the idea of constructive violence involved describing and demonstrating the sport of boxing.
* In the D&D 4th edition core setting, the balance between good and evil is maintained by the primordials, a group of god-like
* In "The Damsel With the Long Nose", in the beginning, the simpleton lad helps a miller's daughter, who gives him three things that turn out to be magic. (The narrator observes at the time that he should have stayed put with her.) A princess tricks him out of them, one by one, but is so beautiful and charming that he keeps trusting her again. Finally, he gives her a long nose, which makes her so ugly he falls out of love, and tricks the things back out of her — and then wishes himself back to the miller's daughter, since she was kind and simple.

* In the "Dancer" commercial for Pop-Tarts, the boy with the oversized head is so eager to get to the toaster pastries when they emerge from the toaster that he
* in the dangerous games of disguise and espionage that he plays with his bloodbrother, David Todros.
* In "The Dangerous Soup", the heroes think they have conquered the demon and their fears once and for all, but then Dr. Vink locks them both in the freezer to face further
* In the Danny Kaye episode, Statler and Waldorf bail quite early on and are replaced by Floyd and Janice from the Electric Mayhem. It's revealed that they were concealing a bag of fruits and vegetables, which are speculated to be part of a plan to throw a party.
* In the Dark confession recorded on her phone, it can't be used because in Illinois recordings required both parties' consent. On top of all that, the police captain agrees to have the evidence destroyed rather than reveal it so he'd at least be fired and publicly excoriated, as he's still useful plus he would make the guy look bad as his superior.
* In the Dark: Darnell is framed for murdering Tyson using planted DNA evidence.
* In the darkest version (but arguably the one that portrays Arachne and Athena most favorably), Arachne hangs herself in Athena's temple as a self-imposed penance for defeating her idol whom she worshiped (she would have thrown the match had she known who her opponent was). Athena is saddened by Arachne's death, and touched by her devotee's piety. To memorialize her skill, she changes the noose into a thread, and Arachne's corpse into the first spider.
* In the Dark Heresy expansion: Ascension an event specifically designed to cause a Heroic BSOD is one of the ways a character can be promoted to the rank of Inquisitor.
* In the Dark: Jess kills drug kingpin Nia to defend her friends from being murdered. However, she Murphy and Felix then have to flee as the Chicago Police don't know it was justifiable (this also couldn't be proven, since it's only their word and they had ample motive for murder to be rid of Nia).
* In the Dark: Jess looks like she could be mixed race and or possibly Latina. However, her ethnicity hasn't been commented on.
* In the Dark: Jess, who's feminine, and her second girlfriend Sterling, who has very butch looks in comparison.
* In the Dark: Murphy, before her relationship with Max, appears to have men over for casual sex with a very high frequency.
* In the Dark: Murphy starts masturbating while Max is in the shower, which he comes out to find her doing. They have sex, and when it's over she claims to have been "masturbating with your body".
* In "The Darkseid Deception", Darkseid captures and shackles Wonder Woman and Steve Trevor. When Darkseid turns Steve into an ape, Wonder Woman gets so angry that she breaks the shackles and lunges at Darkseid.
* In the Dark Signer arc, two of the Duels of Darkness were interrupted at the right moment when Yusei and Aki are about to lose. Later, Rudger and then Demack tell Yusei that Duels of Darkness cannot be cancelled, despite Kiryu and Misty doing exactly that. While in Kiryu's case it makes a bit of sense, since Yusei's D-Wheel broke in the Duel which would automatically end the Duel, but Misty's excuse was not very convincing.
* In the Dark Star Lounge on the Citadel, when Shepard asks for the strongest drink in the bar, the bartender serves up a green liquor and remarks: "[It's] guaranteed to knock you on your ass, unless you're dextro-DNA like me. If you are, it'll kill ya."
* In the Dark Story, when the Biolizard is unleashed, Eggman says "Shadow could have been a true beast, and now you shall die!". His VA is promptly informed that the Biolizard is, in fact, Gerald Robotnik's original prototype for Shadow, and seems genuinely surprised to find this out.

* In the Dark to get the location of the Gem of Amara from Angel. It mostly involved red hot pokers.
* In the Dark Tunnel section of the "All Sneaky Like" path, Mark advocates splitting up at every opportunity.
* In "The Darpoppy", Leah, Shimmer and Shine leap from one spot to another and Kaz is afraid of doing the same until he's reminded that he can float.
* In the database, "[REDACTED]" merely means that the reader of the document doesn't have a sufficient security clearance to read what was blocked out. However, the term "[DATA EXPUNGED]" means that the information
* In the Dawnguard DLC, Serana and her mother are "Daughters of Cold Harbor" and became vampires during a rite to the Daedric prince Molag Bal. Molag Bal, known as the
* In "The Day of Black Sun, Part 1", Sokka's attempt at outlining a specific battle plan goes so poorly that he gets confused, tries to start over "from the beginning" and starts recapping the
* In "The Day of the Doctor," Ten explains that he built the shape-shifter detector he's using himself. It also boils eggs at twenty meters and can download comics from the future.
* In "The Day of the Doctor", the part where the Two Doctors and his other regeneration go into the "Time Lord Art" probably counts. And, after a little thought, the "Time Lord Art" itself as well.
* In the days before committing mass suicide in 1997 several members of the Heaven's Gate cult recorded
* In the days of analog TV, if another appliance in the house was running at the same time as the television (typically something like a vacuum cleaner or a blender), that would cause the TV to get static-y. Nowadays, while vacuuming or making a smoothie while your family member/roommate watches TV might be annoying for
* In the days of black powder and line infantry, drummer boys, many only 11 years old, some younger, stood in the front rank, armed only with their musical instruments as the men around them fought.
* In the days of frontloaders, cannons really did have a harsh recoil
* In the days of sail British sailors who died at sea were sewn up in their hammocks and buried at sea. To prevent them being mistakenly tossed overboard while still alive, a stitch was passed through the victim's nose, with the reaction to the pain supposedly revealing if he was still alive.
* In the days when comic books were lettered by hand, smudgy printing could cause characters to run together. Most problematically, a capital L next to a capital I can end up looking like the single letter U, causing words like CLINT and FLICK to wind up looking like
* In the days when defamation actions in Britain still had juries, there was a slander case (Wraith v. Wraith) in which a man sued his estranged wife for claiming that he had given her a sexually-transmitted disease that he had caught from a sex worker in Amsterdam. The jury grudgingly accepted that the husband had technically proved his case but were unimpressed that the case was worthwhile, and gave the husband damages of £69. They explained this figure to the judge as their understanding of the cost of a glass of sparkling wine in an Amsterdam clip joint.
* In the days when people could only buy whole albums, this was the reason fans of specific acts often bought compilations – because there were one or two songs on it that they actually wanted.
* In the days when the alternative was returning to die an extended slow death in an urban slum of disease or starvation or coal miner's lung or whatever, it probably
* In the days when vinyl records were the predominant format, album sleeves had to be printed far in advance so that they would be ready when the vinyl was being pressed. As a result, there are a few albums which listed tracks that were cut from the album at the last minute:
* In "The Day The Store Stood Still" Grandpa Lemon is recounting a story that involves the beginning of the universe, Orange adds "you were in preschool".

* In "The Day the Violence Died", Bart and Lisa try to solve a problem and are beaten to it by two other kids named Lester and Eliza, who resemble their early incarnations from
* In "The Day They Hanged Bret Maverick", Bret's tombstone shows his birthdate to be April 7th (the same as that of James Garner). The death date on the tombstone is September 21st, which was the airdate of this episode.
* In "The Day You Told Me Your Name", the word "snugglicious" is used as a term of endearment.
* In the DCAU, he hates Batman because he's a "freak", who's hogging all the investigations.
* In the DC comics, when Bolphunga the Unrelenting discovers that Mogo is a living planet, he flees from him fast. In
* In the "Dead-End Kids" arc, Lillie draws power from the ambient noise of New York City (
* In the Dead Gentlemen series Demon Hunters, the aforementioned Hunters of Demons are the Brotherhood of the Celestial Torch - an official branch of Heaven that deals with Hell's agents. "You've heard of Hell's Angels? Well, we're...
* In "The Deadly Pyramid," one of the giant mummies climbs up the side of City Hall and reaches in through the window to try and grab Mayor Manx, who does his best to hold it back with a
* In the Dead Rat Prank video, Bridgette taunts Michael by singing "I got you back!" In a sing song voice.
* In "The Death Camp of Tolerance," the boys are taken to the Museum of Tolerance where they are shown bigotry in its various forms. Cartman finds the various stereotypes on display to be
* In The Death of Kings (second book of Conn Iggulden's Emperor series), two former soldiers of the destroyed Primigenia legion are found working as guards in a (high-class) brothel.
* In the "Death Sentence" arc, Raven casts a disguise spell on Grace so he can pass her off as his niece. The disguise looks just like Susan.
* In "The Debarted", Bart suspects that someone in his group is a rat who has been telling on Skinner to foil his pranks. His new friend Donny gets fearful, but it turned out that Bart suspected Milhouse.
* In "The Debarted", Skinner foils Bart's prank by putting Super Glue on the photocopy machine and having Bart be the unwilling living model for an art class.
* In the debut of the 2021 team, the X-Men use their powers to create a home-made mech the
* In the decades from the late-1930s to 1960, films attempted to draw viewers in with the facsimile of smells ostensibly passing through the silver screen into the real world. It was only tried successfully exactly
* In the December 27th, 1980 strip, Jon screams in shock at his electric bill complaining it's been raised again. Garfield falls asleep on top of the bill.
* in the December 31, 2020 strip. Cue Jon telling Garfield that he just found a great new tofu recipe.
* In "The Decision Reverberation", the question and answer session at the planetarium goes awry when Raj mentions the possibility of aliens.
* In "The Decisions", Darwin recounts the time Gumball convinced him to chew sugar cubes instead of gum. He's shown in class going insane from the sugar and the fire department attempting to crowbar him out of his desk as he yells "I can taste sound!"
* In "The Decisions", he takes in a whole eggplant up there, with another character pointing out he was talking the whole time, not using his mouth to eat.
* In "The Deepening," there's a janitor listening to headphones who is completely unfazed by the fact that a giant mechanical shark just shattered the window he was vacuuming next to.
* In "The Deep South", folk singer Donovan talks about how all the quality people (like
* In "The Deep South", the inhabitants of Atlanta evolved into mermaids due to consuming caffeine. Made even more hilarious by the fact that this is basically what happened in the

* In "The Deep South", the video explaining how Atlanta ended up underwater shows that after it was relocated out in the Atlantic Ocean to draw more attention it was overcrowded with taller buildings, then finally tilted with the weight of a gold statue of Ted Turner.
* In "The Deep South", Zoidberg's undersea conch-shell home somehow burns down...
* In "The Defector", Picard calls Worf to his ready room, but their meeting is not shown. Later, he sends Worf off the bridge to deal with a message from a Klingon ship. These are the only hints shown that Picard has called in the Klingons for backup, since there are no other Federation ships close enough to help.
* In the deleted scenes, Johnny was shown riding the elevators of the Baxter Building and raising the temperature when attractive women would enter, thus forcing them to remove more and more articles of clothing.
* In the deleted scenes shown over the credits for Series 8, we see one of J.D.'s fantasies run away from him, when much to his horror he begins picturing Ted getting freaky with Gooch. Cue the sound of a zipper and Ted's pants landing on him.
* In the demo game Deployment phase had 4 Deployment cards revealed. This was changed to 5 Deployment cards in the final game.
* In "The Demon Behind", Irma briefly uses Uncle's "one more thing", then is comically horrified with herself over it.
* In the "Demon in a Bottle" storyline, Tony Stark's encounter with Justin Hammer has left him shaken to the point where he considers giving up being Tony Stark and just be Iron Man full-time. But when
* In "The Deprogrammers", the Torkor conquered Earth in a little over a week.
* In "The Desperate Kingdom Of Love", Peyton and Brooke go skinny dipping after sunbathing at her father's boat.
* In the Destiny of the Doctor audio drama "Trouble in Paradise", the Sixth Doctor, with considerable and dangerous mental effort, manages to unlock the TARDIS by channeling psychic energy through
* In the Devil Confidant, Ohya claims that the player character is her boyfriend to get her boss(who doesn't want her to investigate her partner's disappearance) off her case. In her penultimate event, you can get into a relationship with her by saying that that you "took it seriously" while pretending to be her boyfriend.
* In "The Devil's Foot," Holmes makes the rather unwise decision to find out whether an unknown substance is poisonous by testing it on himself and Watson. They both nearly die, only escaping thanks to some quick action on Watson's part. Afterward Holmes rather emotionally thanks Watson for saving his life and apologizes for subjecting him to such a stupid experiment. Once again, Watson seems to feel the whole thing was worth it just to see Holmes acting human for once.
* In "The Devil's Hands Are Idle Playthings," after Bender protests to the Robot Devil that he is unwilling to make a deal:
* In "The Devil's Hands Are Idle Playthings," Robot Devil gives Bender an airhorn that he attaches to his face, which Bender plans on using
* In "The Devil's Playground," you have to amass a ton of minerals for the mission, while still using some of your stockpile to produce units to defend against a (relatively weak) Zerg presence and surviving timed magma flows that periodically change the terrain and kill anything on the low ground. Gabriel Tosh explicitly acknowledges this and hands over a crew of Reapers, an extremely mobile, relatively cheap unit that excels versus small enemies and buildings and can jump up and down cliffs without a ramp. You can mass this single unit to destroy the entire map, even killing the optional, not-small-at-all Brutalisks via
* In "The Devil Wears Whalebone", Julia struggles to get out of a suffocating corset, falling and breaking her arm. Dr. Emily Grace later gives Julia a once over, including a stethoscope check and putting Julia's arm in a support and sling.
* In the dialogue "Little Harmonic Labyrinth," Genies are allowed to grant wishes, but not wishes about wishes, which are known as meta-wishes. Meta-Genies (who come from Meta-Lamps) are allowed to grant meta-wishes, but not wishes about meta-wishes, which are within the authority of Meta-Meta-Genies. The word "Djinn" is generically used to designate Genies, Meta-Genies, Meta-Meta-Genies, and all others in

* In the Diamond and Pearl seasons of the same show, Gardenia was strangely fond of taking the brunt of various Grass-type Pokémon's attacks. Much like above, fanon often depicts Gardenia as being really into it.
* In "The Diary of a Loud", Luan wonders if the author even knows what a joke is after Fic!Lynn says, "I don't get the joke" as a response to Fic!Lucy saying something that wasn't a joke, and Fic!Lola laughs at her own nonexistent joke.
* In "The Die Is Cast", it is stated that a fleet of 20 Romulan and Cardassian ships can destroy a planet down to its core within 6 hours (1+5). The opening volley alone destroyed 30% of the surface,
* In "The Die is Cast" Odo does this to Garak when Garak refuses to leave his (evil) old mentor behind on an exploding ship.
* In "The Dilbert Principle", Scott Adams describes the two possible results of a career in engineering:
* In the director's commentary on the DVD, they say that a relatively understated scene early in the movie caused lots of headaches for the animators. Mr. Incredible is examining his old costume and notices a rip from his fight with the robot (which prompts him to get a new costume, and it's that same rip that tips off his wife that he's being a superhero again). Apparently, it is very, very hard to animate someone sticking a hand through a hole in cloth.
* In the director's cut, there is a scene set before the final battle where the heroes know that their odds of surviving aren't good. Conan offers Subotai the chance to leave, and Subotai decides to stand by his friend.
* In "The Dirty Half Dozen", the reunited original team infiltrates HYDRA's Inhuman experimentation facility in order to rescue Mike and Lincoln.
* In the discovery phase of litigation, the person from whom discovery is sought will typically give the absolute minimum amount of information necessary to answer the discovery. More prominent individuals or larger organizations will often take the opposite tact: Throwing the kitchen sink at the other side in order to drown them in irrelevant information.
* In the Disney Cruise Line Cinderella show Twice Charmed, there is Franco
* In the Disney short "The Ballad of Nessie", Nessie has nowhere to live, so she cries for weeks before realising she's cried a whole lake.
* In the Disney version, a new product called "Nic-Nacs" start making their way around the community for a
* In the distant backstory, in accordance with Valyrian tradition, Aegon Targaryen (later known as
* In "The Distant Fire", a contract killer approaches Robert McCall asking him to help avert the assassination of a politician's wife, who's a former
* In the distant history of the Republic, there were periods in which the Jedi Order
* In The Distillers' "The Young Crazed Peeling", one of the lines in the first verse of the song goes like this:
* In "The Divinity Gene", a short story by Matthew J. Trafford, the DNA sequence of Jesus is used to create numerous Jesus clones or "Jesi."
* In the DLC case, Sorin drops one in the second day of the trial. For context, Phoenix suspects that Sorin killed the victim, Dumas Gloomsbury, in
* In the DLC case, the perp says they were always with other people the night of the crime, so they couldn't do it. But turns out there was one time when they weren't watched.
* In the DLC case, there's Sorin Sprocket, the fiancé of the defendant, Ellen Wyatt. He has a plausible motive for wanting to kill the victim, Dumas Gloomsbury, whether to protect Ellen from Gloomsbury's attempt on her life, or to take
* In the DLC "Lair of the Shadow Broker", the eponymous Shadow Broker is
* In the DLC "The Naked City", a high-end therapist loses the woman he loved and his freedom and profession due to his part in a robbery ring. As the main characters are about to put handcuffs on him, he throws himself out of an open window and, wouldn't you know it, lands on the only car in sight. Detective Earle remarks, "Didn't see that coming."

* In "The Doctor Dances", the Ninth Doctor switches Jack's sonic blaster with a banana without Jack catching on. Funny enough on its own, but funnier for those parents that recognize the joke from the
* In "The Doctor's Daughter", the humans and Hath have both convinced themselves that reclaiming "the Source" and denying it to the other race is a holy mission, having long since forgotten it's just
* In "The Doctor, The Widow, And The Wardrobe", Madge, the widow mentioned in the title, also receives such a telegram.
* In "The Doctor, The Widow and the Wardrobe", the Doctor again is exposed to space, and seems to have no issues even with the cold (and he has no air helmet). He is concerned about burning up on reentry ... so he dons a spacesuit as quickly as possible (as if that would help ... and actually, it apparently does).
* In the documentary that shows it, the children were seen drawing disturbing scenes, including one child depicting the compound up in flames three days before the actual event. Chilling.
* In the Doldrums: A featureless location, often an empty plane or void. More than just somewhere boring.
* In the Doldrums: A place that is actively dull, featureless and dead, and takes steps to keep itself that way.
* In the domain of Kartakas, wolves strong enough to break down barred gates roam the streets of the cities at night.
* In "The Dominator War", the Dominators have alll but conquered Earth thanks to a worldwide machine-controlling techno-plague. In retaliation, the Legionnaires attack and conquer the Dominator homeworld.
* In the Donald A. Wollheim juvenile "The Secret of Saturn's Rings" not only does young Bruce Rhodes cross the Cassini Division from his wrecked spacecraft to where his father is stranded with nothing but a tank of helium, he finishes up his journey by JUMPING from ring particle to ring particle.
* In the Donquixote Pirates, Donquixote Doflamingo has Trebol, Diamante, and Pica as the elite officers of the crew.
* In the "Don't Touch" episode, Starchibald tells Sunny Jim to put a quarter in the dirty joke jar... even though he didn't say anything, Starchibald
* In the Doom Saga, the Parasite. Gohan's first outing as a hero has him face a trio of villains that includes Parasite,
* In "The Doomsday Sanction", Doomsday mocks Superman after his heat vision has no effect on him. Superman replies, "Then I guess I'll need a bigger fire!" then beats him up and throws him into a volcano.
* In "The Doomsday Sanction," when Batman questions what's to stop Superman from
* In "The Door", the Children of the Forest attempt to defend their home by conjuring a
* In "The Door", the White Walkers and their wight army storm the Three-Eyed Raven's cave.
* In the double episode where the ship returns to 1990s Earth, Neelix and Kes are seen thoroughly enjoying a
* In the "Double Take: Xavier & Magneto" featurette on the Blu-Ray release,
* In the 'Down Down' series of advertising for Coles Supermarkets in Australia, a recurring theme has been how annoying the advertisements are. In the first one, members of rock group Status Quo conclude that 'Saving money is never annoying', and in the later one featuring Casey Donovan, they quip, "This one's even more annoying."
* In the Doyle family, it seems that Roz was favored by her father, while Roz's mother favored her other daughter, Denise.
* In the Dracula episode, we see a vampire running madly through a graveyard... and then we realize he's running from Buffy.
* In the "Dragon Heart Saga" novels, set in the 1st Ed. of the setting, Alice Haeffner (President Haeffner's late wife) was a technology researcher back when cyberspace was in development. However, she died fighting the virus that caused the old internet to crash, which itself lead to

* In the Dragonlands, from Mayfair Games' vintage 3rd-party D&D supplement
* In the Dragon Magazine strips, the Order run into a goblin group that fall under the category of
* In the drama CD, it's mentioned that Rin has a pretty face and looks very good in a maid dress. His own sister calls him pretty.
* In the dramatic version, the person hiding the body (usually the killer but not always) will suddenly realise that a body part or piece of clothing is protruding from the chest just as someone (detective, loved one of the deceased, etc.) is poking around and have to desperately conceal the fact. Then, there is still the matter of moving the body later.
* In the "Dr. Chicago" episode, George announces to the Commissioner that ants on a railroad "Steal track!" The Commissioner, misunderstanding, answers: "Yes, George — steel track. That's what makes the train run so smoothly." Shortly before the end of the episode, George bursts out laughing, and the Commissioner asks, irritably: "What's so funny?" George answers: "Steal track!
* In "The Dreaded Lurgi", Four and Six, and later Three all get the eponymous disease, with one of the symptoms being sleepiness. At the end of the episode, everyone has recovered, but
* In the Dreaming Stage of Grief: Devastated character copes by convincing themselves it is/was just a bad dream.
* In "The Dreamquest of Unknown Kadath," Randolph Carter discovers that the marvelous sunset city in his dreams is only the sum of his childhood memories in Boston. When Carter awakes in his home, he looks out his window on the beautiful Boston skyline at sunrise.
* In the Dressrosa arc , both Rebecca and the old gladiator Ricky use actual swords, but intentionally left blunt to cause as little damage as possible, with Rebecca in particular preferring to take down opponents via
* In the Dressrosa arc, Don Chinjao arranged a marriage with his grandson Sai and the daughter of the Nipposui Army, thus leading Chinjao to attack Sai when he thinks that his grandson has decided to marry Baby 5. When Sai retaliates, bending his grandfather's Drill Dragon Nail head in the process, Chinjao,
* In the Dressrosa arc, Pica is an already naturally towering man, but thanks to his Devil Fruit that allows him to assimilate and merge with stone, he can become truly
* In the Dressrosa arc, the port town of Acacia appears to be peaceful and pleasant, despite being ruled by Doflamingo; a place where people and toys live together, and gladiators fight in the Colosseum. But the Straw Hats soon find out that the numerous living toys on the island are actually
* In the Dressrossa Arc, in the B Block matches of the tournament, the contestants from Prodence form an alliance with the others, then when their allies grow weak, start picking them off so that their king will be the one who advances onward. Unfortunately, for them, one of them, Blue Gilly, realizes what they're up to, and defeats Dagama when Dagama tries to literally and figuratively stab Blue Gilly in the back, saying "I can't fathom who would be stupid enough to trust a slimy toad like you in the first place!!!"
* "In The Driving Seat" from Season 7 in 2000 has some footage cut out towards the end, although it's shown before the commercial break, yet not aired in re-runs.
* In the Dr. Sam Hawthorne story, "The Problem of the Locked Caboose," the victim leaves the word "Elf" written in blood.
* In the Drum arc, he begs for an ill Nami and injured Sanji to be saved while he himself is freezing to death.
* In the DS9 episode "Duet", a Cardassian who was a file clerk at a "labor camp" during the occupation of Bajor had himself surgically altered to look like the camp's former commander, then allows himself to be arrested by the Bajorans. His intention was to be put on trial for war crimes, even knowing he would certainly be executed, in order to force Cardassia to acknowledge the atrocities it committed during the occupation.
* In the DS remake, due to the graphical limitations, there's a scene early on in the game where Dark Knight Cecil goes to bed. But he keeps his armor on - mask and all! That couldn't be comfortable. Kain does the same when you visit Inns.

* In the DS remake, it also causes damage while using it to hover, which is a surprisingly effective method of disposing of bosses and enemies alike at times.
* In the DS remake, the gas is purple, and it's Metal Wario that can survive in it. If any character gets a hidden Mega Mushroom, they can stand in it since their heads are physically above the gas... until the mushroom wears off. Also, any character in the gas actually
* In the DS remake, you can find or receive items called Augments that permanently grant the user new abilities.
* In the DS version, Hisui will be your only healer for quite a long time, so he gets First Aid, Cure (single-target) and Nurse (multi-target). He needs his sister in combat to access the more powerful area of effect healing in Fairy Circle, but is the only one who can use Resurrection.
* In the DS version, this happens in the battle before him instead, and ends with him charging into battle with a pair of
* In the Dual Pistols set, the Bullet Rain power is a miniature version of the trope, with the character waving their guns around in a cone firing rapidly, after which the bullets
* In the dub of the anime released on video tape, the sex check is back, but the actual moment of contact is clipped. It is made clear that when Yusuke's handsy "upstairs check" on the chest felt odd, he decided to do a downstairs check on his visually female opponent. As he puts it:
* In "The Duchess and the Devil", he has his crew dress in the French coats left behind on a prize vessel to try and slip past some Spanish ships in the fog; unfortunately one of the Spanish officers has personal knowledge of that ship's capture. They change back after they're forced to surrender.
* In "The Duck Knight Returns!", Launchpad befriends an up-and-coming actor who is chosen to play
* In the Dudley Moore episode, a Bug Band singing "She Loves You" performs the opening number. Afterwards backstage, Kermit the Frog recommends that the bug band find a name for their group. One of them mentions "The Grateful Dead" as a possibility. Kermit asks, "The who?" Alexander Beetle says, "It's been done already".
* In the dud on the WrestleMania XX card, a match between Brock Lesnar and
* In the duel between Yugi and Atem, both know the cards of their opponent and much of the match is spent guessing what the other likely played and how to counter it, and even tricking them into countering it for a better return.
* In the duel between Yugi and Marik, the latter uses all his Life Points but one to add to The Winged Dragon of Ra's ATK. Because Marik has made this duel a Shadow Game, this manifests itself as all of Marik's body except one eye becoming part of Ra. Because of this, Marik is able to later use the card De-Fusion to separate himself from Ra and restore his life points. One problem with this: Marik isn't a monster, or even a card. Unless Kaiba's holograms are good enough to hide his entire body and make it appear somewhere else, Marik only appeared to be 'fused' to Ra because of the Shadow Game, so 'de-fusing' shouldn't have been possible within the Duel Monsters game (as they were never actually fused in the first place).
* In the "Dueling" mode featured in the sequels, the second player is assigned a different palette if he chooses the same character as the first player.
* In "The Duelist and the Drifter" there are multiple fights against
* In the Duelist Kingdom arc, Pegasus J. Crawford uses a version of this as a Penalty Game by transferring Sugoroku Mutou's, Mokuba's and Kaiba's souls into inanimate objects. Sugoroku's Soul Jar was a video tape and the Kaiba brothers' Soul Jars were blank playing cards known as 'Soul Prisons' (in the
* In the Duelist Kingdom arc, Player Killer of Darkness/PaniK is The Brute to the rest of Pegasus' eliminators. A gigantic man with a sadistic streak, the Player Killer of Darkness gets a real kick out of tormenting opposing players, but is really a coward at heart. He uses flamethrowers (or, in the manga, a spring-loaded garrote built into the dueling platform) to disorient his opponents, and after losing to Yami Yugi, actually tries to kill him. It's implied rather strongly that he's actually a very bad Duelist, and relies on psyching his opponents into making mistakes to stand a chance against foes above his weight class like Mai Kujaku. When he realizes this

* In the Duelist Kingdom arc, Tristan/Honda gets suspicious of Pegasus and suspects that he doesn't really have the power to read minds. Upon inspecting the arena, he, Tea/Anzu, and Bakura find a hole in the wall, and a tower outside. Tristan theorizes that a mook hides in the tower and uses a telescope to look through the hole and spy on players' cards, then relay the info to Pegasus via a receiver. The hole is just a coincidence, and Pegasus really does read minds.
* In "The Duke", Finn and Jake are attacked by the Marquis of Nuts and an angry squirrel as the episode suddenly ends.
* In the Dungeons Of Daggoroth fantasy game for the Color Computer as your character over-exerted himself (as represented by the increasingly faster beat of the heart reflecting your stress/exhaustion levels) the screen would start to fade out until if you didn't rest it would go blank as you passed out and couldn't do anything until you recovered (if you didn't die outright from a heart attack from overexertion).
* In the Dunk and Egg prequels, we see a very small scale feudal war between two very petty houses, Osgrey and Webber, trying to resolve who owns the fresh water supply during a drought.
* In the Dunphy family, Luke is definitely Phil's favourite, due to him being the only boy and them having very similar senses of humor. Haley is most like Claire, and so while Claire relates to her the most, she's mostly worried about Haley making
* In "The Dunwich Horror" it's heavily implied that when Yog-Sothoth fathered Wilbur and his brother on Lavinia Whateley, he did so while possessing her father Old Wizard Whateley.
* In the Dutch SF story "Pairpuppets" ("Paarpoppen," translated and anthologized in
* In the DVD commentary for one of the episodes, Nathan Fillon and Alan Tyduk reveal that this was a recurring joke on the set: The setting isn't a farm, it's a SPACE farm! Inara isn't a hooker, she's a SPACE hooker! That postal guy from "The Message" is a SPACE Jew! And so on.
* In the DVD commentary, producer David X. Cohen says this was based off a real-life incident that happened to a writer on
* In the DVD commentary, they say that the first edition of the ship was over 5 minutes. That could have
* In the DVD Extras, it's mentioned that they only purchased two Lamborghinis for the scene in which Bruce Wayne blocks the truck driver's attempt at running over Coleman Reese. It wasn't the end of the world if they got it wrong on both takes, but splashing a million dollars on two cars is naturally not exactly the optimal scenario. However, everything went right on the first try.
* In the DVD extras there are segments on the history and legends of Westeros, which serve to flesh out the back story of the series. The one where Stannis Baratheon discusses the failed rebellion of House Greyjoy and the rest of the Ironborn against the kingdom discusses this trope at length, talking about how the warrior lust for glory of the Ironborn was used against them.
* In "The DVD", Gumball and Darwin go out of their way just to get the $25 restocking fee for a DVD they dropped in the garbage disposal. After Nicole pays for it herself, she gets charged $700 for the time Gumball and Darwin had it.
* In "The Dwarf in the Dirt", Dr. Brennan tells Sweets the chunk of brain Booth is missing would in no way mess with his aim because it was taken from his Frontal and Parietal lobes (which according to her only deal with memory). She then states that only the Occipital lobe (sight) and Cerebellum (coordinated movement) have anything to do with aiming a gun. The part of the Frontal lobe closest to the Parietal lobe is called the "Motor Cortex" and, oddly enough, is in charge of motor control. The Parietal lobe (which is a major part of spatial relations) has a part next to the Motor Cortex called the "Sensory Cortex" which, you guessed it, is about feeling ones body. Moving, feeling and spatial relations have nothing to do with aiming a gun... Nothing at all...

* In the Dwarf Noble origin, there appears to be something intimate going on between the female player and Gorim, seeing as the player has several suggestive dialogue options with him. But it is made fairly clear that they cannot marry because he is of a lesser caste. Later in the game the player can find him in Denerim, only to discover that he has already married another woman and is expecting a child with her, and he breaks off the relationship for good. A male player, on the hand, has the option of having a sexual encounter with two "noble hunting" women during the origin story; but it's quite clear that these ladies only want to sleep with him because of his status, for their own personal gain, because they want to have his child so that they can live in the palace. Gets even
* In the Dwarven council chamber in Firmament, past the orange barrier any planar travel coming from the outside is blocked. (Not initiated from the inside, though, which makes
* In the "Dying Detective" Holmes appears to be dying of poison. Of course, it turns out that he's perfectly fine and was only acting so that Watson's reactions to it (and subsequent conversation with the suspect who had tried to poison him) would be genuine enough to convince said suspect.
* In the Dynamite Surfing episode, Kari wonders if anyone else has noticed the disturbing amount of Grant robots that have been built over the course of the series.
* In the earlier Bond films, all the dialogue would be redubbed in post-production. Such as in
* In the earlier books in the series, Patrick's mentor, Lieutenant General Brad Elliott, is no slouch himself, sometimes personally taking his experimental planes into combat. His deputy, Brigadier General John Ormack, is seen in the cockpit even more frequently, and even took part in a commando raid at one point.
* In the earlier editions of the game, this was one of the special purpose powers that could be chosen for an intelligent sword with a special purpose. This effect was delivered on
* In the earlier episode "Lessons", there is a brief mention of Anya interacting with a "Mrs. Csolgosz", which some have suggested is meant to be a reference to Leon Czolgosz, the assassin of President William McKinley.
* In the earlier episode "Xmas Story", Fry comments that mountain snow is beautiful and glad global warming never happened. Leela responded it did, but nuclear winter canceled it out.
* In the earlier film which might have inspired the novel, an Argentinian production called
* In the earlier parts of the Golden Age Arc, we see Guts as a child being taught how to use a sword. He uses a two handed blade which is considerably oversized for a kid. We later see him hugging that sword like a teddy bear while he's going to sleep. Considering that he was raised in a mercenary band, blamed for the death of the only mother figure he ever had, and the abuse he suffered from the guy he considered a father figure, it's not too far fetched to believe that for Guts the sword
* In the earlier parts of the series, Sagat was an enemy of Ryu and hellbent on getting revenge for being scarred by his
* In the earlier seasons, Jenna seems to repeatedly take several episodes off. This largely ends after her character fully
* In the earlier seasons of the anime, whenever a card was played onto one of the many hologram-generator playfields present in the series, Tron Lines would flash briefly around it.
* In the earlier story, "Professor Madblood and the Doppelganger Gambit", Artie, who has been turned into a copy of Dave, shakes Mell. Then he notes how
* In the earliest days of photography, exposure times were so long that taking clear pictures of young children was virtually impossible, as they just couldn't sit still long enough. One morbid sideline for early photographers was taking pictures of

* In the earliest days of the Boy Scouts organization, girls who wanted to participate occasionally dressed in their brothers' clothing and came to meetings under male aliases. This largely ended when the Girl Scouts were founded, although some Sweet Polly Oliver scouts maintained the ruse long enough to finish scoutcraft projects in progress.
* In the earliest editions of D&D, the Githzerai were a highly chaotic race who lived in
* In the earliest episodes, the same clip of Steve grabbing the notebook from Side Table Drawer ("Blue's Clues! I'm so excited!") plays over and over again, leading to some nitpicking when Steve stands up, and in the next shot, his hairstyle is changed.
* In the earliest Hanna Barbera shorts, Tom in fact near perpetually had a big wide cat grin to match his more realistic design and mischievous personality. Later on he would get more defined cheeks which downplayed this aspect of his design.
* In the earliest ROMs, it stacked geometrically with Double or Triple Jackpots in multiball, allowing 10x or 15x jackpots. That was
* In the earliest seasons, the Doctor is stated to be from another planet but repeatedly refers to himself and his granddaughter as human beings. His first regeneration is said to be made possible by the power of the TARDIS; and even though the Second Doctor appears to have some strange attributes like being 450 years old, he still claims to be human — or at most, ambiguously "more than human" because of his extensive time traveling experience. It's only in the Third Doctor era that he's explicitly established as an alien with clearly nonhuman physiology (two hearts, etc).
* In the earliest years (and still is in Canada), the cereal was just called "Sugar Crisp". It got the "Super" added to its name when they added vitamin fortification.
* In the early 1960s, many TV cartoon shows were tied in with a cereal company sponsor (Jay Ward with General Mills,
* In the early 1970s, Michael Morgan of Georgia, under pressure of his wife Hollis Wingo Morgan, who threatened him to no longer let him see his children again, hired his brother and friends to murder his parents
* In the early 1970s, severe flooding in the Chicago area allowed two polar bears to swim out of their exhibit when their enclosure's dry moat filled with floodwater overnight. Luckily no one was harmed, but by the time their keepers arrived in the morning, the bears had eaten their way through every marshmallow, candy bar, and other tidbit at a nearby concession stand.
* In the early 1980s, a high-end and expensive graphics card offered the "feature" of "hardware anti-aliasing", which consisted of pixels wobbling in place. Users of the
* In the early 1980s, KQTV (the ABC affiliate in St. Joseph, Missouri) used the instrumental opening of
* In the early 1980s, Marvel submitted a comicbook that guest-starred
* In the early 1980s, there was a New Wave band in New York called the Breakfast Club. Its drummer, for a while, was a young woman from Michigan named
* In the early 1990s, an American ad for Norinyl birth-control pills combined images of women dancing in tutus and similarly wispy outfits with
* In the early 1990s, Bandai introduced several simple labor-saving ideas for Gunpla (
* In the early 1990s it was not rare for Disney to include rough pencil tests and storyboards in the trailers for their movies, simply because there wasn't enough finished footage to make a complete trailer. This practice seems to have stopped, probably because it looks sloppy. The response has been to make initial teaser trailers merely describing the premise of the film using little to no footage from the actual movie; creating a custom short. Both
* In the early 1990s, the Montreal based International Championship Wrestling promotion had Sexy Team #1 and Sexy Team #2, who teamed up as the
* In the early 1990s there was what was codenamed Omega, Microsoft's first attempt at a desktop database. Developers worked on it for a year and a half during which

* In the early 1990's, WCW twice had the main event of their Halloween Havoc pay-per-view a "Spin The Wheel, Make The Deal" match, in that a wheel was spun to determine what kind of match would be fought.
* In the early 19th century, abolitionists in New England attempted to
* In the early 2000's, after WCW went out of business and Eric Bischoff was hired to the be GM of Raw, he brought in the concept of "Raw Roulette", where a wheel was used to determine what kinds of matches would be fought. Raw Roulette still pops up from time to time.
* In the early 2000s, years of cultural conflict between Belgium's Francophone and Flemish populations lead to a referendum that results in the Walloon region separating from Belgium and instead joining France.
* In the early 2010s, lots of people started writing stories where Daisuke/Davis from
* In the early 2010s, Skrillex became somewhat iconic on the internet, particularly in meme culture, as the face of modern EDM (particularly dubstep). However, his mainstream success has always been very scant, and his only major hits came with the Bieber collab "Where Are U Now" and the Suicide Squad song "Purple Lamborghini" Compare that to DJs like David Guetta, Calvin Harris, Zedd, DJ Snake, and The Chainsmokers, whose songs dominated the charts throughout the 2010s, but never received the same type of attention as Skrillex did for his image and persona.
* In the early 2016 episode "No Cause for Concern", Wooton's fiance Penny sees whom she thinks is
* In the early 20th century, many musical shows from London, Vienna and Berlin were imported to New York with the scores largely or completely replaced. The most successful Americanizations included
* In the early 20th century, the invention of machineguns practically rendered conventional battle tactics moot; the reason why so much of
* In the early 21st century, humanity is in possession of a weapon that can one shot spaceships out of orbit, salvaged from alien technology that has been recovered from Earth. The
* In the early '50s, the Communist Party in Czechoslovakia orchestrated (with the help of supervisors from Russia) several political processes to exterminate people from the opposition and the Party itself. The whole thing was broadcast on radio, people were coerced to sign pleas to have those people executed (although many did so willingly, it was a crazy time) and the trials themselves were scripted (some members of the jury were pretty much clueless when some of the victims decided not to follow the script). The best known victims of the processes are
* In the early 5th millennium, humans' nano takes care of most health problems, even giving them
* In the early '60s, when Sugar Bear became a sweater-wearing hipster, his TV ads showed him barging into sweet old Granny's house and stealing her cereal. A thieving nuisance,
* In the early '80s, BBC Radio One had one: "Call oh-one, five-eight-oh, double-four, double-one!"
* In the early 80s, Crest toothpaste had a series of cartoon ads where a city called Toothopolis (a city surrounded by a wall of giant - but very shiny - teeth) was constantly under attack by ugly "Cavity Creeps" ("We make holes in teeth"), only to be fought off by the city's heroic protectors, armed with tooth-hygiene-themed weaponry. (Crest, naturally.)
* In the early 90s, a bunch of Amiga games were released that advertised certain products (mostly from Germany). Examples are
* In the early 90s, a cooking-ware company very briefly applied this to one of their product lines, resulting in "Kook's Klub".
* In the early '90s, Booster headed up a corporate superhero team called The Conglomerate as competitors for the
* In the early-90's comedy title "WHAT THE..?!", a hero offers "Stinkies" cupcakes to The Blob, whose whole gimmick is that he's fat. The Blob is initially overjoyed, but after reading the full list of ingredients of the wrapper and seeing that the treat is full of saturated fats, he proceeds to beat the stuffing out of the hero. "I'm trying to lose weight, you're not helping!"

* In the early '90s, Russian and Ukrainian programmers translated games to Russian (before you ask, there was no widespread Ukrainian font at the time), some notables are:
* In the early 90's, some PBS stations covered the lower quarter of the screen during pledge drives with a telephone number during kids' programming.
* In the early '90s, the show for a change had multiple black people in the cast. However, when
* In the early Batman comics, the Joker did this at least four times, but always survived.
* In the early books, Argus Filch is constantly petitioning for permission to string troublemakers up with chains and other similarly pleasant things. It's mostly played for laughs.
* In the early books, Ginny was outside the Competence Zone and in general portrayed as a helpless innocent. This is despite the fact that she is only one year younger than the trio and thus
* In the early books this was a universal trait in the Company, since they moved all over the northern continent (Croaker knew a few more as Archivist and the older members knew more because they started further away). When they were traveling south in
* In the early chapters, Jack Kang states that he's the one responsible for messing up Ben's arm. When the actual event is shown, about ninety chapters later, this isn't the case at all — Ben's injury was caused by protecting Alex from collapsing debris as a result of Donald Na. Jack was
* In the early comics, interactions between the comic characters and the "web comic" nature of the comic so much that for comic #100, the author is in the strip, the characters are talking to the audience, and then ...
* In the early dawn before the sun rose, I could hear the Christmas carolers singing "Don we now our
* In the early days, Betty Brant and Gwen Stacy would serve this role. Then it was notoriously subverted in the 1973
* In the early days, Garfield's behavior was much more like a real cat, with the humor being more about giving the audience a look at what a cat could think. Garfield was also more active in his early days as his catlike curiosity led him to explore in and around the house. This is a far cry from the wisecracking sarcastic and lazy character we now see. The modern Garfield also acts more like a human, doing things like walking on his hind legs, reading, writing and even operate modern technology like computers and mobile phones, while the early Garfield walked on four legs and explicitly mentioned how he would like to do some of these things but can't, because he is a cat.
* In the early days of film, high diving horses were common as pre-movie entertainment, or entertainment at carnivals and fairs.
* In the early days of Gemini and Apollo, NASA initially had a specific rule against these sorts of training situations, thinking that it would hurt morale to no avail if there was no actual answer. After Apollo 13, it was realized that the situation faced by the crew would have been rejected as impossible. Since that time, this rule was removed, and several unwinnable scenarios have actually been beaten by creativity and ingenuity.
* In the early days of Hollywood, there were actors/actresses who insisted on this because the car service was one of the perks in their contract, and if they didn't insist on using them, the studio would think they could be pushed around.
* In the early days of ironclad warships, most existing guns were not effective enough to serious enough damage through armor plates, leaving ramming the only practical means of sinking such ships with relative ease. However, gun technology improved quickly enough, though.
* In the early days of motoring, of course there were no drivers' licenses, but if there had been, there would have to have been a different one for each and every model of car: the reason being that there was no standardised set of controls. This was used hilariously in an episode of

* In the early days of organ transplantation, the idea of matching donors wasn't fully understood. This meant that potentially fatal organ rejection was a constant issue for patients. To get around this, they were often given drugs to keep their immune system from attacking the new organ. This often worked, but a weakened immune system left them vulnerable to other diseases, including cardiovascular disease, kidney failure, and even cancer.
* In the early days of photography, when exposures took so long that few
* In the early days of portable tape cassette players after the release of the Sony Walkman, several companies tried cashing in by taking existing models of cassette players/recorders and simply removing features like recorder, speaker, stereo out, etc. in order to enable portable playback. One such model, as discovered by
* In the early days of pre-recorded home video, some companies allegedly re-used old porno tapes for kids' movies, which was fine until the kids' movies finished and the end of the porno movies was revealed...
* In the early days of the comic, Jerry Siegel and Joe Shuster decided to give Superman a nemesis who was his complete opposite, so they created a character called "The Ultra-Humanite"; while Superman was strong, handsome, noble, and solved problems with his immense strength, the Ultra-Humanite was a frail,
* In the early days of the FBI, the most notorious criminals in the country were designated as "public enemies", in that their actions had proven them to be a threat to society as a whole, with the most influential or dangerous of these earning the position of "Public Enemy No. 1", which was held by such figures as Al Capone, John Dillinger and Baby Face Nelson. This eventually morphed into the
* In the early days of the game any high-attack monster that was also sufficiently low in level to summon normally without tribute was given some downside to make up for this, such as Panther Warrior requiring a tribute to declare an attack or Goblin Attack Force turning to defence position where it could be easily destroyed after attacking.
* In the early days of the games industry a lot of them were made by individual programmers (or small teams) who self-published (by distributing cassette tapes or floppy disks with photocopied manuals). As computer hardware became more powerful, games became more complicated to make and larger teams were needed. Then
* In the early days of the official Cirque du Soleil website (1996-97), the Baron from
* In the early days of the series, big stars looking to guest-star would often go under aliases and their appearances weren't broadcasted much. The most famous are probably
* In the early days of the series, Ginny Weasley was very prone to blushing whenever she interacted or was in the same room as Harry. Ron points out that during summer breaks, his sister constantly talks about Harry.
* In the early days of the UNSC, Earth was suffering due to vast overpopulation. However, the burden was significantly eased after the invention of the Shaw-Fujikawa Translight Engine, which allowed humanity to spread its population across multiple star systems; by the 26th century, Earth's become a reasonably verdant planet again... at least until the Covenant invade.
* In the early days of TV in the 50s-70s, a common trope in Third World
* In the early days of wrestling in Japan, during a time where hatred and fear of the US is legendary (mostly due to the use of atomic bombs on Hiroshima and Nagasaki), white wrestlers were brought in to be beat by Japanese wrestlers, the pioneer being
* In the early days, the Blue-Eyes White Dragon (a 3000 ATK Normal Monster) was stated to be so rare and powerful that only four were ever printed, and one of them was destroyed so it couldn't be used against the wielder of the other three. By Duelist Kingdom, we see Chaos Soldier (equal in strength to Blue-Eyes) and Black Daemon's Dragon (slightly stronger), though both had specialized requirements and Blue-Eyes didn't. By Battle City, two
* In the early days, the title characters seemed to be the most popular ship, though that's

* In the early days, when cardlists were not available and the first
* In the early days when Jean was the only female on the team, all of the men were in love with her (yes, including Xavier, but nowadays it never gets mentioned). Warren and Scott were the only serious contenders for her affection. Scott is also well known for attracting telepaths, having serious relationships with Jean, Madelyne Pryor, and Emma Frost most recently. He was also mutually attracted to Psylocke, but nothing serious ever developed.
* In the early days, when the drow were still on the surface, it was playing with most of the half-drow straight. For these were begotten when the soldiers of the drow attacked human or elven settlements and raped the women there.
* In the early design stages, the titular character was also supposed to wear a pair of useless goggles. However, the artist found goggles too hard to draw, and so replaced it with a headband after the first few issues. Attention is called to it, as one of Naruto's mentors notes he's wearing the goggles as a replacement for the
* In the early episode "Emanations" the EMH resurrects an alien brain cancer victim by removing the tumor from her brain stem, replicating replacement tissue, then following the standard post-mortem resuscitation procedure for her class of life-forms.
* In the early episodes Ash gets shocked at least once per week (without any long-term suffering) and some time later he even teaches a girl to respect her own Raichu by developing a tolerance to its shocks. This is to say nothing about how often
* In the early episodes, the role was filled by the Noventa Cannon, which barely had a chance to fire once before it was dismantled piecemeal by no more than two mobile suits manned by secondary character pilots.
* In the early episodes, Victor is set up to look somewhat duplicitous, if not outright suspicious. He's seen with
* In the early game, at least, when you've got barely enough health to trash a few tanks, the military
* In the early games, Desmond Miles' face changes slightly in every game so that he can more resemble whatever ancestor the game was starring.
* In the early hours of Christmas Eve 1910, Hawes Junction station on the Settle to Carlisle line was a hive of activity. Several locomotives that were used to assist trains on the steep climbs were due to head back, two of them northbound. However, the signalman forgot about them, and likely had trouble seeing them with the driving rain. He cleared the line for an overnight express to Glasgow, and the two locomotives, on the same line, set off. The express, with clear signals, passed the station and caught up to them a mile further on. The front two coaches were crushed, and the gas lighting caught fire. Twelve passengers died.
* In the early imperial era, the most famous was the Battle of Teutoburg Forest on September 9, 9 AD. Three Roman legions were returning to camp when they were attacked by Arminius, a Germanic chieftain who had grown up in Rome. All three legions were wiped out, and eventually the Roman Empire withdrew from Germania. Emperor Augustus, when told of the disaster, as per Suetonius, banged his head against the wall, shouting "Varus! Give me back my legions!" went days without shaving in a
* In the early manga, Ranma and Cologne fight at the beach and in the ocean. When Cologne touches down lightly on the surface of the water, everyone is astonished at how an
* In the early morning hours of June 4, 1989, anyone who was up watching a Turner channel — say, TBS or TNT (which was showing
* In the early Mortal Kombat games, this was Shao Kahn's NORMAL punch. He also had an uppercut that knocked you offscreen as well.
* In the early Nineties, GMC released a performance oriented pickup called the Syclone. It's spelled with an "S" because Mercury still held the trademark for "Cyclone". (In fact, they had just made a concept car by that name.)
* In the early Nineties there were talks of a film adaptation of the musical
* In the early parts of the series Goku has been raised in near isolation in the middle of the mountains and knows nothing of the outside world. Him growing up partly revolves around him getting to know the world and all the mishaps that follows because of his ignorance.

* In the early Season 4 episode "Don't Tell Momma", Tim borrows Jill's car – a customized 1955 Chevrolet Nomad – to get some work done on it, and stops by a construction site on the way to tape a segment of
* In the early seasons, Commander Data would often interpret things literally. For instance, if somebody in Engineering spoke of "burning the midnight oil" (meaning they would be working late), he would advise them against the use of open flames near the warp core. Fortunately, Data was good about questioning orders given to him that he didn't fully understand, allowing those in command over him to clarify what they meant before he acted on them.
* In the early seasons, everything except Clark would be in slow motion. Then, as he grew more powerful, people would be frozen while bullets and other fast objects would be in slow motion.
* In the early seasons, Lisa started out as this but as the series progressed, she became a
* In the early seasons of SG-1, Teal'c usually used the Goa'uld staff weapon, as did Bra'tac who's absolutely badass with it. After many seasons of
* In the early seasons, Sam often played straight man to Dean's wise guy. This happened less and less often as the show fleshed out their relationship.
* In the early season, Tucker himself hates being called a "nerd" and "Techno-Geek". In one episode, he has gotten sick of it, but by the end, he started to
* In the early Sherman types' case, it was a combination of being gasoline-powered, and having badly placed ammo storage. A modification to 'wet storage' of rounds (basically that damage to the ammo store would flood it, preventing fire from setting the ammo off) caused a dramatic drop in crew deaths. A previous stopgap measure was to weld additional armor patches over the ammunition bins, but this was abandoned after captured Germans confirmed that the only real effect was making the ammo bins easier to aim at.
* In the early short "A Jumping Jack Contest", The Cheat tricks Homestar into drinking lots of melonade so that he will have to use the bathroom. After drinking all the melonade, he has to pee, but he can't leave the stage (otherwise he'll be disqualified from the contest), so Pom-Pom comes up with a plan. It then cuts to Homestar sighing in relief as The Poopsmith walks away carrying a large jar of urine.
* In the early short "Hold Anything", a goat bites into a radiator, causing the hot air to inflate it and send it flying like a balloon. Bosko then uses it as an improvised set of bagpipes.
* In the early short "The Case of the Stuttering Pig", the bad guy plotting to off Porky and his kin taunts the audience that there's nothing they can do about it, especially not "you in the third row, you big creampuff!" At the end of the cartoon, the pigs are saved by "the guy in the third row" throwing his chair at the bad guy and knocking him into a set of stocks.
* In the early stages of the fight, Father Gascoigne can be temporarily paralysed by a music box, which prompts his human side to struggle against his madness. It only works twice, though; the third time will instantly send him into the final phase, no matter how much health he has.
* In the early stages of the Wars of Liberation, in the spring of 1813, Major von Lützow and some other officers with the Prussian government's permission formed a free corps recruited from non-Prussians. This included e. g. some citizens of Saxony (which at that point was neutral), such as the poet and playwright Theodor Körner who wrote the corps' theme song
* In the early stories the masks would sometime have imperfections, allowing a savvy observer to realize they're facing Diabolik. Diabolik later improved the process, so this method is obsolete;
* In the early story arcs of the series, most of the focus is on Goku fighting humans who had no problem stealing, killing, and terrorizing their fellow man. The best example being the Red Ribbon Army who

* In the early strips, everyone occasionally displayed comedic sociopathy; for example, after Roy was almost killed by poison traps and couldn't move, Elan used the opportunity to scribble obscenities on him. In real life,
* In the early strips, she gets one of the spiciest meals at a Thai restaurant she frequents, and then
* In the early to mid-nineties, a fair number of famous and semi-famous
* In the early years, his impediment was so bad that his stutter even interfered with his
* In the early years, Maggie Sawyer seemed to have a personal vendetta against
* In the early years of his career, Ricky Nelson was almost exclusively considered a pretty boy, white-bread-and-mayonaise fake rockabilly singer who hitchhiked to stardom as the son of Ozzie and Harriet. Then in 1971 he recorded
* In the early years of P2P networks, a lot of novelty songs that are uploaded are for some reason credited to
* In the early years of photography, several infamous hoaxes were carried out using such crude techniques as ink-doctored images, double exposures, forced perspective or two-dimensional props. To modern eyes, most such images look blatantly fake, but the very idea that a photo
* In the early years of talking pictures, a number of movies were filmed simultaneously in different languages, using the same sets but mostly different casts and crews. Perhaps the most famous is the Spanish version of
* In the early years of the 20th century, some "scientists" — or magazine writers willing to attribute their ideas to vague "men of science" — believed that as the Earth cooled it would
* In the early years of video game FAQ-writing, one username stood out above the rest as a good model of how to properly detail gameplay, both in the long form needed for RPGs such as
* In the early years we knew almost nothing about The Doctor's people - it was six years before we learned the name "Time Lords". From the Tom Baker serial
* In the early years, when they did the Saturday Night Report, Chevy Chase would always start by being caught on the telephone when the News started. You heard the end of the phone conversation. "No, it's just CALLED blow, you really suck ..... Oh, gotta go."
* In "The Earth King", a couple of minutes before the end of the episode everything seems to be going well. The Earth King has granted his support for the invasion, the
* In the Earth Kingdom, the local King (or the Earth King, if it's a big enough deal), will declare a truce only as a final ceasefire, when either they or the enemy is thoroughly crushed. Truces aren't temporary... they
* In "The Earth King", rock restraints are put on Aang's wrists after his team surrender themselves to the Earth King. Since Aang has been training as an Earthbender, this is pointless, but Aang lets them stay on so he can make a good impression. He even briefly takes them off to wave, then puts them back on.
* In "The Earth King", Team Avatar get caught by the Dai Li when attempting to reach the Earth King. When Long Feng accidentally reveals that the Avatar is among those caught, Sokka points Aang out. Aang, being the
* In "The Earth King", the group was parting ways for a little time, and Aang wanted to confess his feelings to Katara. Just as he said, "I kinda want to tell you something..." Sokka swings his arm around him and excitedly talks about where they are going.
* In the Earthrager Ptah encounter, players can mount on a camel, enabling them to fight and cast spells while moving, although some of his abilities can dismount the player. There's an achievement for staying mounted for the entire battle against him.
* In the Easter 2009 Special, "Planet of the Dead", Malcolm comes off as one of these — even applying for the job as UNIT's Scientific Adviser because he knew it was the position held by the Doctor
* In the Eastern Roman Empire, the position of Emperor was literally open to everyone, allowing this to happen:

* In "The Eccentric Driver", Odokawa and his doctor end up getting distracted by a tangent about cassette tapes and
* In the Edge of Glory ad, Anthony Sullivan uses the product to sharpen a credit card into a blade, which he then uses to cut up a tomato. Who knows why the company thought anyone would be impressed with their product's ability to cut plastic.
* In the Ed Sheeran music video for "Give Me Love" the girl chosen to be a cupid and therefore forever alone has a
* In the Egghead cartoon "Believe It Or Else", he volunteers to participate in an illusionist's saw-in-half trick (only to attempt to debunk it). His lower half walks off on its own as his top half chases after it.
* In the eighteenth chapter, Mikage raises the term "boring" (as in drilling). Mira immediately pretends to be bowling. Japanese approximates "bowling" in a way that's identical to "boring".
* In the eighteenth chapter, when you're playing as the biker, you get to fight the protagonist of the first fifteen chapters of the game — you're reliving an earlier boss battle, this time from the boss's perspective.
* In the eighteenth season Nicole Franzel and Corey Brooks who are the most disliked houseguests of the season are given a lot of screentime compared to the more liked houseguests such as Natalie Negrotti, Da'Vonne Rogers, Bridgette Dunning, Paul Abrahamian and Victor Arroyo to name a few.
* In the eighth episode, Mai attempts to answer a question on the Earth Science Olympiad that requires choosing two options out of five. Since Japanese mark sheets usually name their options after the vowels, Mai decided to answer A-O after her underclassman Ao. In the next scene, Ao sneezes in her room.
* In the eighth movie, Paragus ends up exposing to the Z-fighters that he lured the heroes onto New Planet Vegeta for an elaborate trap that involved Comet Camorie
* In the Eighties, script editor Eric Saward purposefully tried to avoid political subtext as much as possible for a variety of reasons (lack of desire to offend, lack of desire to make allegorical stories about the real world in favor of interacting with the series' own history as a work of fiction, and several other reasons). This caused some
* In the eighties-to-nineties, David Croft made three-period sitcoms which all starred Paul Shane, Jeffrey Holland and Sue Pollard:
* In the eighties, UK hamburger chain Wimpy's had an advert with "Come On Over to My Place" by
* In the Einstürzende Neubauten song "Seele Brennt", there are various moments when you just hear drums playing, and then the other instruments join in. Around three and a half minutes into the song, the drums start playing on their own, and, after only a couple of seconds of silence, Blixa Bargeld lets in with what could only be called an inhuman screech, which is very loud, and ultimately terrifying.
* In the election live show, Felix appeared as "Admiral Felix Biederman" who claimed to be an Admiral, a US Army Marine, and to have "stolen valor in over seven countries" and that he was also a cancer survivor.
* In the electrical power plant the Power Input and Power Output devices are marked "Power In Put" and "Power Out Put".
* In the Electric Mist and directed by Bertrand Tavernier, had the misfortune of going straight-to-DVD after failing to find a distributor. However, it did manage a brief theatrical run after the film rented well.
* In "The Elevator!", Junior has to go to the bathroom on his way to A
* In the eleventh chapter, the readers are subject to a reveal that does
* In the Eleventh Doctor's stories, we're introduced to the Silurian Madame Vastra, who
* In the Elite 8, they met Goliath #2, Tennessee. The Lady Vols had won 8 national championships in their history, more than any other team of the time. It was an admittedly down year for the program, but they were still a very good team. Louisville built up a lead and managed to hang on in the second half to get another upset, and advanced to the Final Four.
* In the Ellimist's backstory, the last of his race crashes into an aquatic moon with a single organism that calls itself Father. It ensnares other organisms and reanimates their consciousness to grow, including the many alien races that landed on its world, and keeps the Ellimist alive to have someone to play mind games with. The Ellimist eventually turns this on it, and finds out that Father was nothing more than a predatory sponge that could link with the nervous system of its prey.

* In the email "local news", the Cheat is unimpressed by Strong Bad's attempts at newscaster humor.
* In the email "mascot", Strong Bad reveals that Crazy-Go-Nuts University has a "golf club" team, which seems to be an excuse for Strong Bad and his friends to hit stuff with a nine iron. The Cheat is seen taking on "Pile of Electronics State", and Strong Bad announces that next week they're playing "Homestar's Knees Tech".
* In the email "pet show", The Cheat performs in the Cat Mess Inbredtational Pet Show under the name Saberlord's Scritchascratch Cakemonger The Cheat. Homestar, meanwhile, has been entered under the name Fluffle's Buffles Scruffle's Homestar Runner.
* In the email "sbemail206", Strong Bad tricks Homestar into running into a mirror, Marzipan into eating The Cheat, and the King of Town into eating a mirror.
* In the email "the paper", we see a flashback of Strong Bad being saved by The Paper from a sinking version of one.
* In the email "time capsule," Strong Bad explains that time capsules should be capsule-shaped and not made from shoe boxes or tennis ball cans which are "different, and lame, and differently lame"
* In the email "web comics", Strong Bad describes most web comics as being "all about video games, gamernerds, webgeeks, dorknerds, gamewads, nerdgames, webwebs, and elves."
* In the email "what I want", Strong Bad lists such terrible gift ideas as ornaments,
* In the Emergency Quest "Mining Base: Despair", players can operate a
* In "The Emissary", Worf tells Picard that there may be an alternative option in stopping a 23rd century Klingon
* In "The Emperor's New Joe", Rocko goes to a hip new club, but hates the taste of their coffee. The Chameleon Brothers tell Rocko a story about how their coffee became such a hit and hope it will encourage Rocko to change his mind so they can get more customers. It does not work as Rocko gives a speech about how being an individual is better than following the crowd. The episode ends with Rocko getting thrown out of the store and the Chameleons suggesting he try the cheesecake. When another customer hates the cheesecake, the Chameleons tell him a similar story.
* In the Empire, Ostland is a northern province dominated by the Forest of Shadows. Villages are few and far between, and filled with grim, unfriendly people who keep strange local customs and a fondness for double-barrelled firearms and strong alcohol. When they're not bearing the brunt of Chaos incursions, they're dealing with beastmen, forest goblins and ghouls.
* In "The Empty Desk", Jack has been nowhere to be seen in the two weeks since the previous episode, "The Late Mr. Justice". In that episode, Jack rescued Dorothy from an old enemy who had kidnapped her to force Jack to surrender himself to be killed. He's absent for much of "The Empty Desk" itself, appearing only at the end to reveal that, during those two weeks, he and Dorothy married and had been enjoying a honeymoon in the Poconos.
* In "The Empty Hearse", there's a montage of Sherlock solving cases in the initial interview, including the
* In the encounter with the Mad Dummy, after you hit it with its "dummy bot" attacks a certain number of times, it fires them, angrily declares "I DON'T NEED FRIENDS!!! I'VE GOT KNIVES!!!", and pulls out a knife to throw at you.
* In the end, after Luke has stirred the locals out of their greed and fear of ghosts, it revives as a prosperous farming town.
* In the end, after Muzan is dead, the Corps are disbanded, Tanjiro and Nezuko go back home, taking Zentisu and Inosuke with them; Zenitsu carries the ashes of his beloved master Jigoro with him, Tanjiro and Nezuko allow him to bury the ashes in the same place the Kamado family was buried, where they all send their prayers and move on.

* In the end, after the Siege of Canterlot is broken, Steel Striker and his army choose to fight and die at the Maresidian Fields, caught between two royalist armies, knowing that the cause they fought for is already lost and preferring an honorable death to a humiliating peace through surrender. Steel even briefly wonders if there will be any stories about the last stand of the last ponies not to answer to immortal rulers.
* In the end, an estimated 18 German commandos wearing U.S. uniforms were captured behind U.S. lines during the Battle of the Bulge, tried by military commissions, found guilty, and executed as spies.
* In the end, Anne is finally sent back to Earth, just as she had wanted to for the entire series, but at a price. She's forced to leave her human friends to an Uncertain Doom
* In the end, Blanc himself is the ultimate spanner, as he was the one to figure out that being anonymously hired to solve what appeared to be a suicide would be
* In the end, both of them decide to quit the office work and become ghost-hunters. At that time, it's revealed to be a Secret Test
* In the end both the aforementioned ships were refloated despite the immense difficulty for all the characters involved.
* In the end credits. After Undercover Brother takes his car through a car wash and several female attendants are flirting with him, he turns his head and broadly winks at the camera.
* In the end credits of “Sock Opera”, Mabel has a dream where Dipper, Stan, Fiddleford and herself are featured as live-action puppets.
* In the end-credits scene, they're seen having yet another wedding ceremony, so that Alice can be a flower girl.
* in the end, Cross found a way to save her, though she'll no longer be the ship of the Straw-Hats.
* In the end Frank has to become this trope himself since there really are some very bad cops on the force and as the new head of the union he has to root them out to protect the good ones.
* In the end, Friday finds the officers' missing copy of the receipt (it had been misplaced in their car), plus traces of the associate's copy, proving that she, herself, stole the money and tried to frame the officers.
* In the endgame, Megalixers take the stage as the primary source of healing. And since you need Ayla to get an infinite supply....
* In the end he is trapped with a dozen innocents, an impulsive psycho, the
* In the end, however, Real and Smooth were bought out by Heart and Capital's owner, and the Real network was merged into Heart's network.
* In the ending credits, Hotaru and Mikan share an umbrella implying
* In the ending cutscene, depending on what ending you choose, there is an animation of
* In the ending for the co-op DLC, GLaDOS, upon seeing that the invader is in fact the bird, starts panicking and tells her robots to forget their training and flee.
* In the ending of the Tuchanka arc, when Mordin is confronted about trying to cure the
* In the ending of The War of the Gods arc, Apollo takes a blast for Count Iblis meant for Sheba. Of course, he got resurrected by the Beings of Light soon after.
* in the ending when they realize that in the universe where Booker accepted the baptism in the river he was reborn as Father Comstock, and Booker lets Elizabeth drown him during the baptism
* In the ending where Alex Mason survives the events of "Suffer With Me" in
* In "The End Is the Beginning", Hugh is the Executive Director of the Borg Reclamation Project, yet he's not permitted to view Ramdha's Romulan dossier even though she's his patient in the Disordered Ward.
* In "The End Is the Beginning", Narek whispers to Soji, "I think I'm falling in love with you." It's ambiguous whether his feelings are genuine, or if it's part of his plan as a
* In "The End Is the Beginning", the Romulan assassin whom Picard interrogates insults his captor by calling him a "

* "In the End" is this to a lesser extent compared to the other songs in their nu-metal era — it lacks the use of electronica that defined their other songs, instead being replaced by the use of piano. It's also a bit lighter compared to the other songs, hence why it was such a big pop hit.
* In the end, it actually worked out great, as Jericho's partner was
* In the end, it's implied that they did, since Maxwell had previously stated that he always sings 'Georgie Girl' afterwards and Fran had said that her ears always itch. They each realize this at the same moment.
* In the end, it's not Genre Blindness at all. He's smart, but covers it with a lot of
* In the end, it's really only there as the reason that other protagonists don't tag along. Aladdin offers to back Sora up once Jasmine is safe but is denied because "That would be meddling"...only for you to immediately after getting the Genie to summon which promptly spits in the face of that with no comment. And let's be honest, Donald and Goofy are meant to be main characters but some players would swap them out in a heartbeat for real heavy hitters like Tarzan or the Beast. Perhaps the only character who implicitly ends up actually tagging along is Tinkerbell. She is the only summon to stay with the player for the duration of boss battles after summoning her, and endgame battles do rely on Tinkerbell's magic for the protagonist to fly.
* In the end it takes an underground nuclear bomb and is neither mentioned by the games from the main series developers, nor does it fit with the details revealed in later games.
* In the end, it turns out nothing bad happened at all, and she worried herself sick the whole week for nothing. So she goes back in time to tell her past self not to get worried unnecessarily...
* In the end, it turns out that Dr. Hanson had a cure, and it works. If the Terrans were
* In the end, Jamil submits to Khaddam and helps him defeat Bassel, who flees into exile.
* "In The End": Mike rapping while veins grow in the background and the group playing while rain is pouring.
* In the end of season 10 episode 52, Big M. angrily says that his mission failed again and throws the green liquid outside Doctor H.'s house. It drops on Happy S.' Car Knight and its eyes start glowing red.
* In the end of the Arendelle arc, when Anna and Elsa recall how Anna bruised her knuckles punching out Hans after his latest attempt to usurp the throne (a
* in the end of the disastrous tournament. While Shen Qingqiu was absolved of the accusations of being responsible for the disaster, he fell apart emotionally due to believing his apprentice who was his Living Emotional Crutch
* In the end of "The Island fo Dr. Steve", the brainwashed gymnastic assassin Oasis, who's being controlled by
* In the end of the Kamigawa saga, however, the main hero settles nicely in a marsh. So,
* In the end of the Rebellion missions, after the adjutant that has a recording of Mengsk blatantly ordering leaving Tarsonis to its doom is played on air, even the media turns on Mengsk and he is finally unmasked as the demon he is to the public.
* In the end of the second part of "Simpson Safari" where the Simpsons raft goes to a scary path. Everyone screams and Homer eats the camera.
* In the end of two-part episode "Requiem for a Chevyweight," Al tells his Dodge he "never loved that flashy red hussy. Or the new car either."
* In "The End: Part 1", when King Radical is minutes away from accomplishing his goal of
* In "The End, Part II", Robin calls Slade out on helping Trigon destroy the world. Slade responds that while he
* In the end, Phelous reveals he was just acting and Lupa said 'fuck it' and
* In the end, Ryu is eventually forced to push the D-Dive mode way beyond its limits and fatal cut-off point. But he gets better.

* In the end, Shikamaru is paired with the former and the latter is paired with the near-emotionless Sai.
* In the end, some seemingly separate mysteries were answered together, so as to unite every smaller mystery into the overall plot. (Ex, the mystery of why Yusho vanished three years ago also explains
* In the end, the aversion becomes a plot point; the Chinese can't storm the beaches because of their lack of amphibious landing gear, and need Seattle Harbor to land. This makes the race for Seattle all the more vital.
* In the end, the game shows that: (1) both Romanticism and Enlightenment, if taken to extremes, can mean a lot of trouble, and (2) neither of them can survive without the other.
* "In the end, the world didn't really need a Super man... Just a brave one."
* In the end, they BOTH lose and end up taking the walk of shame together, Banner in his Hulk form, no less. Even better, Tony's effort to jam all electronics to prevent anyone taking pictures is defeated when Spiderman shows up to take a picture with an old-fashioned flash camera that ends up on the front page of the Daily Bugle under the headline "Naked Justice."
* In the end, this same situation, only reversed in the outcome, was part of what drove Claremont to finally end his long run on
* In the end though, Parson could only defeat the Ansom's forces completely by
* In the end, though, this is made less ambiguous by his Zero Requiem. Lelouch adopts the role of an evil emperor and arranges his own assassination by Zero, now being played by Suzaku, so that the world can finally be at peace.
* In the end, Walt has barrels full of cash and is unable to spend any of it.
* In the end what the Allies produced was, to paraphrase the words of Ferdinand Foch, "Not a peace treaty, but an armistice for 20 years." When it was all said and done, everyone on both sides had reasons to be resentful of the treaty, either because they were ignored entirely (Russia, China), they gained something from it but not all they wanted (Italy, Japan, France) or they believed they lost everything (Germany, Austria, Hungary, Turkey), and thus, instead of making peace, it only really sowed the seeds for more conflict. Not to mention that the various governments reasons for going to war, stiffling internal dissent, cracked with the rise of
* In the end, when all is said and done... Rob realizes that he left the lens cap on.
* In the end, when the shield is taken down, spaceships launch from Earth to meet you at the Starbase, implying that they've retained a fairly high level of civilization.
* In the End, You Are on Your Own: When a hero's allies can't follow him in the final showdown.
* In "The Enemy" Book series, the children call what's left of the adults: zombies, mothers and fathers, grown ups, sickos, strangers and other names. Nicknames depend on the faction.
* In the english dub during their battle at the Valley of the End Naruto says "You're crazy, Sasuke!"
* In the English dub, Kuririn/Krillin outright called the Saiyans space pirates who go around killing innocents so they can sell their planet to the highest bidder.
* In the English dub of the anime, the narrator begins a discussion of a part of Polish history, stops herself - "Right, anime fans." - and backs up to begin a dumbed-down version of the same information. Then she stops herself
* In the English dub of the series, Seto Kaiba stubbornly refuses to believe in the supernatural abilities of the millennium items and Duel Monsters' and his own mystical ties to ancient Egypt, despite constantly witnessing and occasionally being a victim of them. (By contrast, in the original Japanese series, he had no issue believing in the supernatural, he just thought dealing with it was a pain.)
* In the English dub, this is the nature of Mimi's crest, Sincerity and as such her greatest virtue. Not only does it mean that she's honest, but it also is meant to mean that she always stays true to herself.

* In the English folk ballad "The Tree They Grow So High", the young woman protagonist blames her father for marrying her to a mere boy half her age. She comes to love the boy afterward and bears his child, just before fate snatches her dear young husband from her.
* In the English language version, Penny's father is physically abusive to Penny and her mother. Even though the police and school administrators know about it, nobody does anything.
* In the English-speaking world, it is impossible to find English coverage of
* In the English-speaking world, the show's fandom is no larger than level 2. In 2017, the show became the subject of a number of memes in the United States, giving the show slightly more recognition and a cult following there; its English fanbase is still small, however.
* In the English version of the anime, Van Zant points out what a lousy hero Mr. Satan is, cooking meals
* In the English version of the first film, Frank chases after his girlfriend and manages to catch up to her cab. They hold each other's tearful gaze through the window of the car, and the film ends. We don't find out whether she forgives him and returns the money, and if so whether he survives the meeting with Milo.
* In the Enhanced Edition, the D&D prestige class Blackguard was introduced as a kit (ie modification) of the Paladin class. The new party member Dorn Il-Khan makes use of this class kit.
* In the Enies Lobby arc, it turns out that four of the main antagonists had been undercover as good guys for five years: the ventriloquist shipwright Rob Lucci, the flying shipwright Kaku, the dutiful secretary Kalifa, and the kindly bartender Blueno are all revealed to be government-sanctioned assassins.
* In the Enies Lobby arc, Robin trades her life to let the rest of the crew continue on their adventure, keeping a promise she had made. This strains the crew, but they all pull together and finally call out to her, right to the point of declaring
* In the Enies Lobby arc, Spandam is busy gloating about the power of the World Government, while Luffy starts picking his nose.
* In the Enies Lobby arc, the backstory of the main villain, Rob Lucci, is cut down from a full flashback to a brief summary. The author stated that this was because the arc, combined with the Water 7 arc that proceeded it and led directly into its events, was already running quite long, and a flashback in the middle of the climactic fight would have slowed the pacing down even more. The flashback was shown in full in the anime.
* In "The Ensigns of Command", the Sheliak, a species that finds human language so inferior they insist on insanely long contracts and treaties that they constantly
* In "The Ensigns of Command", when the captain tells Data his violin playing is "quite beautiful," Data responds, "Technically speaking, Sir, it is not
* In "The Enterprise Incident" Kirk dresses as a Romulan (including getting an "ear job") to infiltrate a Romulan ship and steal its cloaking device.
* In the entirety of recorded history, there has been (officially) approximately 250 years of peace. In reality, there would have been unofficial violent conflicts between various groups for most of that time, and smaller-scale conflicts for longer.
* In the Enzyte Commercials, Smilin' Bob has one of the most unnatural smiles ever seen in an advertisement. It's not MEANT to be a Slasher Smile, but still... BRRR!
* In the epilogue, after days of constant fighting and unspeakable mental trauma, Walker greets a rescue team with dead silence, a stony face, and hollow eyes. Even if he gets involved in one last firefight, his demeanor does not change in the slightest, and at most he grunts in pain if he gets hit.
* In the epilogue Astrid rushes past Hiccup on Stormfly and looks back, silently challenging him to a race. It's the same interaction they had at the end of the second film, and Hiccup even gives his son a look as if to say: "some things never change."
* In the epilogue, Draco Malfoy's wife was not Pansy Parkinson (the closest girl he was with during school and had a degree of

* In the epilogue, it is revealed that Harry and Ginny had three children (James, Albus, and Lily), Ron and Hermione had two children (Rose and Hugo), and Draco had a son (Scorpius). It is also offhandedly mentioned that Teddy is sending off his girlfriend, Victoire Weasley (Bill and Fleur's daughter) as she boards for Hogwarts, along with James, Albus, Rose, and Scorpius.
* In the epilogue, it's even stated that humans have begun trading with the Andalites: Cinnamon buns for advanced technology. It's so successful, that Cinnabon has plans to open up a branch on the Andalite homeworld.
* . In the epilogue, it's revealed that Tanya threw things off so much that the Bronze Dragonflight went insane and had to be put down after they started attacking the Alliance in an attempt to set things back on the "correct path".
* : In the epilogue, Mayor Wilkins congratulates the Scoobies for beating him and setting back his plans to ascend by at least three hundred years. He then encourages the group to live their lives and enjoy themselves.
* In the epilogue of Elliot Rodger's "manifesto" which he had written before his massacre and death in 2014, he envisioned a world that he could control where sex would not be allowed, where procreation would only be allowed by what he called "intelligent people" through artificial insemination... and all because he didn't have the fortune to get laid or have a girlfriend during his teenage years and early adult life.
* In the epilogue of Episode 60, a deleted scene shows that scream going external when Bulma gets a little too descriptive about Trunks' conception
* In the epilogue of the eighth movie, Draco Malfoy's future wife Astoria Greengrass is played by Jade Olivia,
* In the epilogue of the expanded edition of that novel, it is noted that
* In the epilogue of the game, Mettaton mentions making buttons, posters and shirts with his face on them. Then he says making Toriel plushes.
* In the epilogue, Sheriff Stone and Mayor Nettles in the new timeline have been
* In the epilogue, the animation of Christopher Robin walking and throwing a stone is recycled from Mowgli in
* In the Episode 13 of the original series, Queen Beryl gives Jadeite one last chance to defeat the guardians. After losing again, he attempts to reveal their identities only for Beryl to freeze him solid in a giant crystal.
* In the episode ‘twas the night before the christening’ Hilary, Vi, and Helen all wear the same outfit by accident. When Helen arrives at the house her and Vi go to greet each other but they stop when they see that they are wearing the exact same clothes. Then Hilary comes down the stairs wearing an identical outfit. She stops and then goes back upstairs to change.
* In the episode, “Cream for a Day,” Kelly develops a small pimple on her nose right before Homecoming queen is going to be crowned.
* In the episode “Little Graduation”, Lars and the Off Colors decide to return to space to explore various planets and meet new people across the galaxy.
* In the episode “The Pageant Pickle", Arthur imagines Mr. Ratburn defeating a giant D.W.
* In the episode “Who Killed Who?”, Grim tells Mandy the story about Old Mrs. Doolin’s place, which is apparently a haunted house, and anything that’s ever gone inside the house’s fence has never returned, including Grim’s dog, Lucky. But upon meeting Mrs. Doolin, Mandy learns that the two actually just have a long-standing rivalry because she’s beaten him in “just about everything”, and that Grim had made the whole story up. How did Lucky really wind up in Mrs. Doolin’s possession? She won him off Grim in a Poker Game.
* In the episode "1600 Candles", Stan and Francine have been altering Steve's age with a serum to avoid dealing with the same puberty-induced violent mood swings they suffered through with Hayley's puberty. After Francine accidentally turns him five in a bid to keep him 14, Stan tries to instead age him to 21, happily musing about his plan to Francine after he gives Steve the serum. When Steve appears, aged all the way to 80 years old, Fran simply groans "Oh my God" in disgusted resignation and downs both shots of whiskey that Stan had poured for him and Steve to share.

* In the episode "1969", Aaron Pearl as the young George Hammond. He looked and sounded so much like him that people were convinced that
* In the Episode "200," every celebrity/famous figure that has been on South Park is back in this episode. Tom Cruise, Barbara/Mecha Streisand, Mel Gibson, Bono, Paris Hilton, R. Kelly, Sally Struthers, you get the point. They're ALL back to sue the town..
* In the episode "200", Martin employs this to get away from Teal'c, lifting an entirely silent cell phone and beginning a conversation.
* In the episode "200", when Martin is giving another one of his derivative movie pitches (this time a thinly-veiled Star Trek parody), his version of Carter delivers the line "the singularity is about to explode". In the following scene when the team is criticizing the scene, the real Carter specifically mocks that line for being ridiculous. However, in real life, singularities gradually lose mass via Hawking radiation, and if the mass of a singularity becomes low enough, it will rapidly evaporate and release a tremendous amount of energy in a short period of time as it dies, much like a nuclear explosion or matter-antimatter annihilation.
* In the episode 3 secret level "Tier Drops", where there are four separate rooms that
* In the episode "7 Games Too Ambitious For Their Own Good", Jane says that she liked all three
* In the episode "A Better World", when Batman is captured and put in a prison, his alternative universe counterpart, Lord-Batman, points out not to bother trying a certain technique since he build to prison specifically to counter anything Batman could think of (since being another version of Batman, he can think of everything Batman would).
* In the episode "A Big Piece of Garbage", the crew watches a documentary about pollution:
* In the episode "A Bird in the Hand", although Columbo suspects the perp of murdering her husband, he never does turn up any evidence of it. He does prove, however, that she committed a second murder to cover up the first, and that's good enough for him. Thus, the title of the episode; as he puts it, "A bird in the hand is better than two in the bush."
* In the episode "Abominations", Nate Heywood introduces himself to Ulysses S. Grant as "Colonel Sanders".
* In the episode about the hash-slinging slasher, the guy who gets off the bus just happens to look and dress like the slasher.
* In the episode "A Boy and His Dog-Boy", Timmy's fairy dog Sparky was not allowed to go to any places owned by Doug Dimmadome, not even to dog park of all places. Ostriches and other two-legged animals, on the other hand, were allowed. When asked about this, Doug Dimmadome responds that he just hates anything quadrupedal and likes to disappoint them, hence the dog park banning dogs.
* In the episode "Act Your Age". After basically spending her whole life wishing for it, Isabella comments that finally being kissed by Phineas was worth the wait.
* In the episode "Adventures in Rufus-Sitting", Kim watches Rufus while Ron and his parents go on vacation. Rufus ends up swallowing a microchip that is wanted by everyone, and three different villains come after him for it. After Rufus is kidnapped, Kim tracks him to France, where, ironically, Ron is vacationing, and has to save him from the hands of Shego, Duff Killigan, and Monkey Fist, without letting Ron know.
* In the episode "A Fish Out of Water", Peter tries to catch Daggermouth and when he shoots the fish the metallic insides are revealed. Peter remarks it's amazing that is how we all look on the inside, before being informed that Daggermouth is a robot.
* In the episode "A Flight to Remember", where the characters travel on a cruise spaceship:
* In the episode "A Friend In Deed", Pinkie Pie blows on a horn which goes right into Cranky Doodle Donkey's ear and out the other side.
* In the episode after Eric and Donna break up, Eric asks Red how he felt after his first break up, Red says that it hurt but he sucked up and moved on right away.

* In the episode "A Job for a Gob", Bluto has to endure a lot of trouser torment! First he gets knocked into a cactus and gets a butt full of needles. Then he is bucked off the bronco out of his pants. Then he accidentally brands his own ass with x's and o's which Popeye turns into tic-tac-toe. Finally Popeye eats his spinach and punches him into a windmill which keeps spanking him. The whole cartoon seems to revolve around Bluto's butt!
* In the episode "A Jones for a Smith", a crack-addicted Stan ends up ruining Steve's family-to-family dinner date with the family of the latter's new girlfriend, and ultimately spoiling the latter's chances with her. After kicking the habit, Stan insists that Steve, who is still without the girl and livid over it, will forgive him for it. Consider that just earlier in the season, Stan said that it would take time to forgive Steve for piloting a drone without his permission. Then again, this isn't too surprising considering that Stan tends to be an arrogant
* In the episode, "All About Odie", a man from the audience asks Garfield what Odie does with with a car he catches, Garfield responds that Odie buries it in the backyard (which turns out to be true as shown at the end), the audience think he's crazy and start to insult him. An irritated Garfield then makes a remark about the audience, which leaves everyone booing at him and throwing produce. It is done very comically though.
* In the episode "Allegiance," Picard sings "Heart of Oak," an old British navy song.
* In the episode "All In The Family", Kerry Weaver arrives at work for what appears to be a typical evening. She's perplexed to see a bloody
* In the episode "A Loss Of Smurf", Vanity as a Wartmonger accidentally wakes up the Creepodile in the Pussywillow Hollow swamp region, and Wartmonger legends say that it won't rest until it eats a king, so King Bullrush upon finding out who woke the creature up made Vanity king so that the beast will go after Vanity instead. The Smurflings help rescue Vanity by making the Creepodile feast on a gourd dressed up in royal clothes instead.
* In the episode "Alpha/Omega", Megatron breaks into the tomb of a dead Prime and chops an arm off the corpse to
* In the episode "Altar Egos", a flashback has young Michael playing the prosecutor in the school play
* In the episode "A Matter of Perspective", Riker is accused of murdering a scientist, and the crew must prove his innocence.
* In the episode "And Now For A Word" a Centauri battlecruiser shows up and positions itself between the station and the jumpgate, threatening to fire on any ships attempting to travel between them, unless Centauri ships that had been impounded by Babylon 5 are released.
* In the episode "And the Winner Is...", the fire-ferret Pabu sits peacefully by the radio while music plays, but hisses at it and jumps away when Amon pulls a
* In the episode "A New Man", it's obvious Spike has trouble with it too.
* In the episode "Angel", Cordelia spots a girl wearing a dress identical to her own, and accuses her of wearing a cheap knockoff of her designer original. "This is exactly what happens when you sign these free trade agreements!"
* In the episode "Angelica for a Day", a bratty little girl is screaming at her father to buy her ice cream, and the father gives in. Drew sees this and laughs while saying,
* In the episode "A Nightmare on Killmotor Hill!", the characters explore a shared dreamscape. While the part composed of Lena's dreams is plot-relevant, the rest is just random dreams about things such as Louie being a cat and Huey having absurdly long legs.
* In the episode "A Night of Neglect", the random substitute teacher trivia and later academic decathlon category is "hermaphrodite Nazi sympathizers".
* In the episode, "Animal House Party", all four of the main pups do this while hanging from a ceiling fan so they can brush Persian Pete.
* In the episode, "Antisocial Climbers", Daria and Jane wage a bet on whether or not Quinn will be kicked out of the Fashion Club. She is, and the scene cuts to Jane handing Daria a bill.

* In the episode "A Party for Tarzan", Rusty "borrows" the Blue Morpho's suit from the tailor shop. He ends up getting chewed out and charged a huge amount for getting grenadine on it
* In the episode "A Portrait for Troian," Sam Beckett leaps into a paranormal investigator. Over the course of the episode, he plays the skeptic regarding the existence of ghosts, and Al plays the believer. By the end of the episode,
* In the episode "Apple Family Reunion", Big Mac steals an apple fritter when thinks no-one is looking. When Applejack finds out, he whistles nonchalantly, though Applejack obviously knows he did it.
* In the episode "Appleloosa's Most Wanted", Sheriff Silver Star announces that some sabotage at the rodeo is the work of "...Troubleshoes" as some ominous harmonica music plays. Then it turns out the harmonica is being played by a nearby rodeo clown, who sheepishly backs away as he realizes the sheriff is staring at him.
* In the episode "App Trap", Timmy's magic smartphone claims it comes with games, a camera, an MP3 player, and
* In the episode "April Fools", this is how each customer, in turn, reacts to SpongeBob's harmless pranks, culminating in one of the show's most memorable scenes:
* In the episode "Archie's Raise" they argue about whether it's okay to put mustard on a pretzel.
* In the episode "Archie's Weighty Problem, they argue over the proper way to eat a meal. Mike believes in eating all of one part then moving on to the next, while Archie insists one should have a little of each so it all gets mixed up in your mouth.
* In the episode, "Arena", powerful aliens place Kirk and the Gorn captain in a rocky area and are told specifically there are the components of weapons they can assemble if they are smart enough. As it is, Kirk is better at this since the best the Gorn could think of is a net and a sharpened piece of rock for a knife, Kirk
* In the episode "Arnold's Hat", our hero is depressed because he lost his hat. To take his mind off it, he turns on the TV and sees that it's Hat Day at the local ballpark, and everyone in the stadium is wearing one. It doesn't help.
* In the episode "Arthur's Substitute Teacher Trouble," when the class finds out that their substitute teacher will be Mr. Ratburn's sister,
* In the episode "Asian Population Studies", such a scene looks like it's addressing unresolved issues with Jeff and Annie, as he runs through a rainstorm and stands streaming wet at a doorway:
* In the episode "As Seen on TV", many sources claim that when SpongeBob sticks his nose out of the ground, Mr. Krabs replies with "
* In the episode "Assie Come Home" when making a delivery Leela has Bender bend the barrels of all the guns leading to all the gang members killing themselves.
* In the episode "A Star is Burns," Barney wins a film contest and swears that he is giving up alcohol. The curtain behind him is then pulled away to reveal is prize: a lifetime supply of Duff beer (in a semi-trailer truck).
* In the episode "A Taste of Armageddon", Kirk is taken hostage by the people of Eminar, and obtains his release by ordering the implementation of General Order 24 in two hours: destruction of any city, military structure, and evidence or hint that something on the target planet may have the ability to tickle the ships' shields, and Eminar's anti-orbit weapons
* In the episode "A Taste of Freedom", one display at the Museum of Ancient Weapons is of a "Sharkapult", which is
* In the episode "At the Zoo", a girl scout wants to sell cookies to Al:
* In the episode "A Tune For Two," Gobo has this trouble while trying to write a song for the Duet-a-thon, a contest to see who can sing the best duet.
* In the episode "Author, Author", the Doctor wrote a holonovel with barely-disguised copies of his fellow crew members as the villains of the story. As a homage to the Mirror Universe, Tuvok's actor Tim Russ grew out a goatee for the occasion. And in contrast, the Doctor has given Tom Paris' counterpart just

* In the episode "Avatar Day", Aang himself was set up to be executed for killing a community's leader in a past life (which turned out to be itself an execution mandated and performed by the Avatar of that time, because the leader was a tyrant trying to expand his territory). Fortunately, the Fire Nation chose this exact moment to attack the village, and his punishment was changed to "community service" in the form of driving them off.
* In the episode "Avatar Day", Aang is arrested by locals while visiting an Earth Nation town. The townspeople charge Aang with murder, since they believe one of his past incarnations, Avatar Kyoshi, killed their town's greatest general. The kicker is that Aang can easily escape, but
* In the episode "Avatar Day", Aang refuses to break out when one of his previous incarnations is accused of murder. He even gets slapped into stocks. The problem is they're designed for adults, so Aang, who is pretty skinny anyway, has no trouble at all taking them off when he wants to.
* In the episode "AWESOM-O", the government scientist sees the "robot" (actually Cartman in a cardboard costume) as a living thing with feelings and a soul, while the military just wants it dissected to gain it's percieved technological marvels (which mostly consist of Cartman managing to conceive thousands of nearly-similar Adam Sandler movie scripts). In the end, the scientist rips out his own organs to bring home the point that it's not our body that makes a human human.
* In the episode "Baby Cakes", Pinkie Pie becomes the victim of a running gag. The only way the foals she's babysitting will quiet down is if flour gets dumped on her (in one case while she was soaking wet). At the episode's end, the foals do the flour gag to themselves to cheer up
* In the episode "Baby, You Knock Me Out", during the fight between Lois and Deirdre Jackson, Peter begins to sing the Survivor song "Eye of the Tiger" untill he is interrupted by Quagmire to focus on the fight.
* In the episode "Back to the Woods", James Woods steals Peter's identity and when he tries to get back with his family, James threatens him with activating a cutaway gag if he doesn't leave. Peter leaves in fear while Brian doesn't understand why he's so scared.
* In the episode "Backyard Hodge-Podge," Linda is able to well and truly see what the boys have made.
* In the episode "Bad Chicken", Chicken plays with the school's photocopier by copying his behind and other body parts. He convinces his sister Cow to do the same.
* In the episode "Bad Hair Day", Doof plays his evil jingle on a pipe organ in a
* In the episode "Bad Heir Day", Crocker cracks his mirror when he's contemplating how to get an heir.
* In the episode "Baelor", the majority of the nobles and counselors attending the
* In the episode "Barely Legal", Meg is confused about romance, as she's developed a creepy crush on Brian
* In the episode "Barely Legal", Meg threatens to kill herself after her date for the dance rejects her and also threatens to kill herself if Brian refuses to go to the dance with her.
* In the episode "Barthood," Milhouse says he'll make up a girlfriend from Alberta named Alberta so that he doesn't have to remember two lies.
* In the episode "Bart on the Road", Bart gets a fake driver's license and goes on a road trip with Milhouse, Nelson, and Martin using Martin's recent stock market earnings to rent a car. At one point, Bart joins them in the backseat. When they ask who is driving, Bart casually answers "cruise control", mistaking cruise control for some form of auto-pilot. The car then plows right into a cornfield.
* In the episode "Bart's Comet", when the eponymous comet burns up in Springfield's polluted atmosphere instead of destroying the town as predicted, Moe shouts "Let's go burn down the observatory so this never happens again!" Cue the angry mob.
* In the episode "Basic Jake", Jake plays a prank on Principal Pixiefrog, who gives both him and Adam Saturday detention, ignoring Adam's protests that he had nothing to do with the prank.

* In the episode "Beddy Buy", after Garfield gets hit on the head with a ham, he stumbles around, says
* In the episode before that, he uses a similar tactic on a meth-head gangster:
* In the episode before they Lal'c earned the nickname "She Who Moves the Stars" by using her powers to throw the core of a (fictional) gas giant at the same Space Monster. The plan using the Earth was actually inspired this stunt, except that time they decided to up the ante by accelerating the Earth up to a significant fraction of the speed of light.
* In the episode "Behind the Laughter" during the period where the family split up to pursue solo careers Homer mentions having a short lived stage career where he literally chewed the scenery (as in he ate part of the set).
* In the episode "Be My Baby Tonight", Ashley asks Will about sex. Will tries not to think about it, but then he suddenly hears double entendres everywhere. When Ashley's boyfriend comes in for their date, he asks if she's ready ("NO MAN SHE'S ONLY 13!"). Then, on the TV, the game announcer asks "Where is the most unusual place you've made whoopee?" Then, when Will turns on the radio, all that comes on is the song "I Wanna Sex You Up" (which is a real song). Carlton comes in and says he's late for his date with his girlfriend who can "tie a knot with her tongue". Then Hilary walks in asking where all the whipped cream went. Will finally yells "What is it with your preoccupation with sex!"
* In the episode "Bend Her," Bender undergoes a sex-change operation to compete as a woman in the Robot Olympics.
* In the episode "Bendless Love", Bender dates fellow bending unit Angline long enough to drive her back into the arms of her ex-husband Flexo. After Flexo gets pinned under an unbendable girder, Bender bends it off of him so they can be happy together.
* In the episode "Best Friends Forever", that changed when they needed more soldiers to join in the battle against Satan's legion of Hell, and Mormons aren't fighters. Considering that it's
* In the episode "Beware My Cheating Bart", when asked what his goal in life was, Homer replied without hesitation that he wanted to grow old with Marge and live long enough to "be one of those couples who just sit in the park holding hands".
* In the episode "Big Daddy" Boom-Boom the baby gorilla does this throughout the episode.
* In the episode "Big Mac", the 4077th is prepared for a visit from Douglas MacArthur, and is told that the General eats the exact same meals as the troops do, to which Hawkeye remarks, "Do he like his ice cream on top of his beef stew like we do?"
* In the episode "Big Man on Hippocampus", when Quagmire is unable to get an erection, he uses a defibrillator on... himself. For whatever reason, it doesn't help.
* In the episode "Billy and Mandy's Jacked-Up Halloween'', the flashback accompanying Grim's story about Jack O'Lantern shows one of the prankster's victims being kicked because Jack put a sign on his back reading "Kick me, I'm stupid".
* In the episode "Birthmark" Slade gives a Big Yes in response to Raven's
* In the episode "Bitter Work," Iroh outlines all the bending philosophies and how they relate to the society they originate from. As part of being a
* In the episode "Black As Cole" (episode 8 season 4), when Paige learns about Cole's past she says:
* In the episode "Blind Ambition," Mort Goldman bowls a perfect game.
* In the episode "Bloodlines, the Flash and Impulse dodge Neutron's attacks by simply moving to the side at super speed.
* In the episode "Blood Moon", Sam leaps into a man who appears to be a vampire. Sam spends the entire episode telling Al this is ridiculous...until he glances into a mirrored surface at the very end of the episode. You can guess what he doesn't see.
* In the episode "Bloom and Gloom," Sweetie Belle has a nightmare where she discovers that she's destined to be a janitor right in the middle of a music recital, resulting in two of the judges give her a zero, while her sister Rarity gives her a one.

* In the episode "Bloo Tube", Bloo spends most of the episode pissing and moaning about not getting to go to a water park because of a rainy day and choosing to sulk instead of joining in the activities Mac, Wilt, Eduardo, and Coco do to pass the time. When Bloo tries to ruin their fun in making viral videos by informing Frankie that they are using her camera without her permission, it looks like Frankie is going to get mad, but she instead gives Mac, Coco, Wilt, and Eduardo her approval and decides that everyone in Foster's should make a game out of who can make the most popular viral video.
* In the episode "Blue Bamboo", detectives find that the killer of a Japanese businessman is a white actress/singer who once worked at one of his Tokyo nightclubs. Her defense is that he was incredibly abusive to her during this time—to the point of practically holding her prisoner—and that she killed him in self-defense. During her psychiatric evaluation, she practically rants about how all Japanese men are obsessed with her and it's implied that Japanese men see white women as a status symbol. It's never clear if she was lying, but when she's acquitted, Jack claims that her story would never have worked had the man been white as well.
* In the episode "Blue Bamboo", detectives find that the killer of a Japanese businessman is a white actress who once worked at one of his Tokyo nightclubs. Her defense is that he was incredibly abusive to her during this time—to the point of practically holding her prisoner—and that she killed him in self-defense. It's never clear if she was lying, but when she's acquitted, Jack claims that her story would never have worked had the man been white as well.
* In the episode 'Blue Ribbon Panel', protagonist Alicia Florrick becomes this when she suspects that police are covering up what really happened in a shooting. She wins over other members of the panel... only for the chain of evidence to lead back to her husband, the State's Attorney, forcing her to recuse herself.
* In the episode "Boating Class", when Spongebob is asked to act natural, he gets on all fours and starts grazing like a cow.
* In the episode "Bodyswap", Rimmer and Lister switch bodies and their voices also switch, which was why it was the first episode
* In the episode "Bodyswap": Rimmer promises to workout Lister's body. After first hearing potentially orgasmic grunting, the camera pans to the door to the Gym. However, we then discover Rimmer was only in the jaccuzi reading a "photography" magazine.
* In the episode "Bonding", Ron gets stuck to Mr. Barkin and is forced to attend Pixie Scouts with him. Ron even has to take part in squirrel calling. Unfortunately, his squirrel call is so awful, it scares the squirrels away. Then when the scouts are up against mutant wiener dogs, Ron's squirrel call is what tames them.
* In the episode "Booby Trap", Geordi creates a simulation of one of the engineering designers, Dr. Leah Brahms. While working with her to solve the problem, he falls in love with the simulation. This produces very awkward moments when, in the later episode "Galaxy's Child", he meets the real woman, and finds she is nothing like her projection.
* In the episode "Born Again Krabs," this trope is spoofed when Mr. Krabs greedily trades SpongeBob for 62 cents, thus sending SpongeBob to Davy Jones' locker (the equivalent of Hell) for eternity with the Flying Dutchman. A few seconds later, the Flying Dutchman returns SpongeBob, stating that SpongeBob talked too much and that it was driving him crazy. This cuts to a scene of SpongeBob babbling about his life rapidly and non-stop while the Flying Dutchman looks exasperated.
* In the episode "Boss for a Day", Fred gets smaller and smaller after the board of directors humiliates him.
* In the episode "Bossy Boots," Pearl goes to work for the Krusty Krab during her summer vacation, and makes multiple changes to the restaurant that effectively ruin her father's business. As it turns out, all the changes she made were because she was deliberately

* In the episode "Bossy Boots", SpongeBob's ideas for the new name go from interesting and possible to disturbing and frightening.
* In the episode "Bottomless Pit", the "Truth Ache" segment involves Mabel afflicting Grunkle Stan with
* In the episode "Bounty", former President Sarkoff is a student of 'natural history', which has come to mean the study of things that no longer exist. Thus he has 20th Century artefacts mounted on his wall like heirlooms, including gasmasks and cutlery. He proudly shows off his 'typical residence' of that era,
* In the episode, "Bowser Junior Gets Potty Trained!", Junior awakens to find his bed wet, and immediately
* In the episode, "Bowser Junior's Punishment!", Charleyyy has one in an episode of
* In the episode "Boyfriend from 27,000 B.C.", Doofenshmirtz's hatred of guys wearing sandwich costumes causes him to build the Sandwich Suit Removeinator. (Though he doesn't mind the taco guy so much.)
* In the episode "Boys Do Cry", Peter says: "You can't ask me to make dinner, Lois. That's like asking me to choose between Sarah Jessica Parker and Kirsten Dunst in a hot body/weird face contest. It can't be done."
* In the episode "Boys Will Be Eds", Rolf's goat, Victor was attacking Jimmy to get his sandwich, with Rolf trying to pull him off Jimmy. When Sarah came onto the scene,
* In the episode "Boyz Crazy," Wendy and Dipper MST3K the (silent) security footage. When a tourist asks to see a shirt in his size, Grunkle Stan bends over and Wendy speaks for him: "I have something better. Behold - my butt!" Both laugh their heads off.
* In the episode "Boyz in the Woods", Will, Carlton, and Uncle Phil are forced to sleep in a cave during a blizzard. When Uncle Phil is shook awake the next morning, he jumps up yelling "
* In the episode "Brawl in the Family," the plot (a social worker being assigned to teach the family how to cooperate) appears to be resolved halfway through the episode, prompting Lisa to almost
* In the episode "Breast Cancer Show Ever," Cartman deliberately gets detention so that he can avoid having to fight Wendy Testaburger after school.
* In the episode "Brian Goes Back to College", a throwaway joke reveals that no one at the New Yorker has an anus after Brian sees inside their bathroom (which has chairs and fireplaces instead of toilets).
* In the episode "Brian the Bachelor" , Chris develops a pimple. The pimple turns out to be sentient, calling himself Doug, and encourages Chris to do bad things. Eventually, Chris goes to a doctor to get a cortisone shot to get rid of Doug. Doug pulls out a gun and tries to shoot the doctor, but Chris manages to inject the pimple with cortisone before anyone gets hurt.
* In the episode "Brian Wallows While Peter Swallows" Brian sings about Neil Armstrong, whereupon Meg confuses him with
* In the episode "Bridle Gossip", Spike seems to be looking at the audience directly when commenting he can't come up with a pun from Twilight Sparkle's name.
* In the episode "Brotherhooves Social", Big Macintosh is in disguise as a mare named Orchard Blossom and most of the time when he's in that disguise, he affects a higher-pitched, feminine voice. Except for at the end of one song he sings with Apple Bloom where his voice drops back to his usual deep pitch at the very end by accident.
* In the episode "Brunch", Ted hasn't told his parents any stories about Barney, to the latter's dismay. Ted says, "Here's a list of all the things I talk with my dad about: Baseball..." and makes a "that's it" gesture.
* In the episode "Bubble Buddy," Mr. Krabs says that everybody's money is good in his restaurant. Cut to a shot of a bank robber in a domino mask and striped clothes eating a Krabby Patty.
* In the episode "Buffalo Shuffle", Murdoch uses graphite shavings from a pencil sharpener to raise some letters from a sheet in a notebook. He only finds some characters, so the meaning of the clue isn't readily apparent.

* In the episode "Business as Usual" Quark joins him in the arms trade until his nightmares are haunted by the images of the people killed by his weapons.
* In the episode "Busted", Bloo breaks a bust of Madame Foster while roughhousing. His attempts to fix it just makes things worse. At one point, he actually has Madame Foster herself pose as the bust after covering her in flour. Mr. Herriman finds out about this, and it looks like Bloo is going to be evicted like Herriman threatened earlier, but then he laughs, saying that the bust gets knocked over and broken so many times that Madame Foster had several dozen copies made, which he keeps in a closet, just in case.
* In the episode "Butt is it Art?", the duo climb on a piece of public art behind Van Driessen's back - destroying it in the process. He then turns around and tells his class that the pile of rubble wouldn't be effective art if it wasn't "just so."
* In the episode "Butt Out", believing Kyle is going to sneak behind his back to steal the commercial position for the Anti-Smoking team, Cartman sneaks into Kyle's house to nail his bedroom door at night. It turns out not only was Kyle just getting back to his room after getting a glass of water, but the door opened the other way. This still didn't stop Cartman from boarding up the door once Kyle went into his room.
* In the episode, "Butt Out", Cartman thinks Kyle is using reverse psychology to trick him into not appearing in an anti-smoking commercial, but Kyle really doesn't want to do it.
* In the episode "Butt Out!", Mr. Garrison deliberately does this to get the kids to shut up and listen.
* In the episode "Bye Bye Nerdie", when Marge drag races with Otto's school bus:
* In the episode, "Bye, Bye, Psyduck", Misty's Psyduck appears to have evolved into Golduck, and she has now fallen in love with it. However, at the end of the episode, when she calls Golduck to return into its Pokeball, Psyduck comes out of Misty's backpack proving that it's still Psyduck, and it turns out the Golduck was just a wild Golduck after all.
* In the episode "Bystand Me," Peggy starts writing a column about household hints. She tells her latest column to Hank, where she told her readers to mix pneumonia and bleach to clean their bathroom fixtures. When Hank tells her that that's the recipe for
* In the episode "Cafeteria Strike", Mr. Conklin hires Mr. Turnbull, his unemployed brother-in-law, as the school chef. His cooking is so bad the students at Madison High School boycott the cafeteria.
* In the episode "Cafeteria Strike", Mr. Conklin hires Mr. Turnbull, his unemployed brother-in-law, as the school chef. His cooking is so bad the students at Madison High School boycott the cafeteria.
* In the episode "Call of the Cutie", Cheerilee shows a picture of herself from around the time she first got her cutie mark, and the kids all laugh at her
* In the episode "Candace Disconnected", Candace appears to be talking to her best friend Stacy on the phone (complete with mentioning her name and having an actual conversation), only for her head to turn and reveal to the audience that... she was talking into her own hand all along.
* In the episode "Canned," Rocko takes on a new job as a plumber's assistant. He is dismayed, however, to find out that his sole responsibility is to pull up the plumber's pants whenever they fall over due to his position.
* In the episode "Cape Feare," Sideshow Bob writes a list of his diabolical plans
* In the episode "Captain Jack Harkness", Jack seems to have ended up being this for the original guy named Captain Jack Harkness in the few hours they met. Maybe the man already knew he was gay, but in either case, Jack's gentle encouragement
* In the episode "Cartman's Incredible Gift" the police believe Cartman is a psychic. Kyle points out at the end that no one is psychic and there is a logical explanation for everything that is supposedly supernatural. However, when Cartman and a group of other psychics engage in a psychic battle, with a lot of wild hand gestures and odd vocalizations, Kyle gets extremely fed up and screams at them to stop. As he yells, the lightbulbs shatter and the shelf above his bed breaks. After a

* In the episode "Cash for Gold", Cartman writes an equation on a whiteboard. It looks roughly like the following (all numbers appear as subscripts; so does the last lowercase p):
* In the episode "Castle Sweet Castle", the girls decide to decorate Twilight's new castle when they find out that she's been doing everything she could to stay out of it, in an attempt to make it comfortable. When the girls work together, they end up with a room that's more suited to
* In the episode "CatDogumentary", Lola is given several thousand dollars by her boss to make a documentary about CatDog, but spends the money on an electric hammock instead. On the final day when she is supposed to present the film, she enlists Cat, Dog and a few others to help her pull together a cheap, shoddy movie which fortunately becomes a hit. The director orders a sequel and gives them more money to make it with. Having learned nothing from the events of the episode, Lola and the twins spend the money on a jetski.
* In the episode "Chain of Screaming", each character is giving Marshall advice on how to deal with his boss, who screams at him when angry. Lilly's advice starts off as a kind, kindergarten teacher approach to things, then ends with
* In the episode "Cheese, Cues and Blood", Al sells all of his blood to 9 blood banks in order to pay a man because Kelly became a pool hustler in order to buy an expensive dress for the "Miss Cheese" pageant. Al spouts much nonsense throughout the rest of the episode, and at one point, Jefferson mentions that the former air-guitared to "It's a Small World".
* In the episode "Chick Cancer" when Stewie decides that women respond when you treat them like crap:
* In the episode "Children of a Lesser Clod", we get a close-up of Homer's knee after he gets ACL surgery.
* In the episode "Chille Tid", Steven notes that the other Crystal Gems look exhausted after spending all night combing the ocean for
* In the episode "Chimera", an incident involving a top-secret naval ship and Russian pirates ends with a missile blowing up the ship and killing the pirates after Team Gibbs has escaped. As the team wonders how the U.S. Navy knew that they'd gotten off the ship, Gibbs says, "I don't think they did."
* In the episode "Chipmunky Business", a dramatic chord sounds whenever Kuzco or Kronk say "Condor Patch". Kuzco, amused by it, says "Condor Patch" several times in order to make the chord play.
* In the episode, "Chow About That", Lucky and Cadpig do this to rescue Rolly from the flowing river, but of course, once Lucky grabbed Rolly, his added weight caused the tree branch to break.
* In the episode "Christmas Scandal", Leslie gets involved in a scandal involving her having sex with a city councilman, she ends it on live TV when he claims he has a mole on her butt cheek, she pulls down her pants mooning the host to prove this is untrue.
* In the episode "Chum Fricassee", Mr. Krabs and SpongeBob disguise themselves to get into the Chum Bucket. When Karen asks for their names, Mr. Krabs is about to say his real name until he sees a wrapper on the floor and introduces himself as "Sir Krumbled O'Wrapper".
* In the episode "Circus of Plunders", after Sonic and company (save for Tails) perform at the circus, Knuckles (who was the human cannonball) has suffered a head injury and asks, "What time does the show start?"
* In the episode "Citizen Khan", Clementine Clevenger attempts to escape a locked room with a
* In the episode "City on the Edge of Forever", where Kirk explains Spock's appearance by saying he's
* In the episode "Civil Wart", Anne introduces the populace of Wartwood to the movie "Love Choice", a post-apocalyptic teen romance movie which ends on a cliffhanger as to which guy the main character Constance chooses. The rugged cyborg in flannel Hunter, or the sensitive hooded deer-man Alastair. The townspeople were so invested into the story and characters that the entire town of Wartwood was split in half in

* In the episode "Clap Your Hands If You Believe...", a red flag went up as soon as Robert Picardo came on screen, acting all lame and insignificant. Obviously, he was the villain.
* In the episode "Class Trip," 38-year old McGuirk states that "it would be wrong" to get involved with a coworker, specifically, his ditzy young supervisor at the coffee shop.
* In the episode "Clean Lovin'", after falling in love with a mop and having a veterinarian take it away from him, Spunky rebounds by falling in love with a fire hydrant.
* In the episode, "Clefairy and the Moon Stone", Pikachu manages to pick up a Clefairy, a Pokémon who is larger and heavier than him.
* In the episode, "Clifford on Parade", Emily and Charley get into a fight over what theme should their parade float should be and decide they'll each work on it alone, which prompts Clifford to whimper and cover his eyes with his paws.
* In the episode "Clubba Hubba", Carlton, Uncle Phil and Geoffrey are all teaching Will how to be a gentleman and everyone except him has fallen asleep
* In the episode "Coach Steven", Pearl tries to cover Steven's eyes when Garnet and Amethyst start to fuse, which involves some mildly suggestive dancing including pelvic thrusting. It's likely at least partially because she was jealous that Garnet chose to fuse with Amethyst instead of her.
* In the episode "Coda", escaped-hostage Bob Lamson gets executed by Rick in this manner. Also, from the same episode,
* In the episode "Coerced", a mentally ill man takes a boy from his home after mistaking him for his own estranged son. He's eventually deemed
* In the episode "Communication Problems" Basil drops an expensive vase when The Major tells Sybill that Basil had been betting on the horses behind her back.
* In the episode "Company Man," the camera pans across broken furnishings strewn around Michael's apartment while the voiceover describes Michael's current situation as particularly vulnerable to attack, and then the camera pans to Fiona pinning Michael against the wall in order to have rough sex with him.
* In the episode "Compulsion", Gideon has a friendly conversation with a student who broke up with his girlfriend for another guy. The student says that his ex told him
* In the episode "Conduct", the spirits are walking to the village of hatfield to check on it after Icky interpreted several random occurences (a sneeze and a cloud, as Calamity put it) as a "bad omen" Huey proceeds to pester Icky about what it could be:
* In the episode "Consequences", Mr. Trick is staked by Faith before he can drain Buffy. His last words?
* In the episode "Conspiracy", the villain tries to charge at Clark Kent and the others with a circular saw, but
* In the episode "Contagion," Data is infected by a computer virus that disables some of his functions. While infected, he reverts to robo-speak.
* In the episode "Convicts From Dimension X" when inter-dimensional criminals trapped the turtles in a force field with a time bomb set up nearby. They freed themselves and Donatello has to decide which wire to pull.
* In the episode "Cool Hand Peter," Peter, Cleveland, Joe, and Quagmire run afoul of the
* In the episode "Cosmo Con", Crocker goes on a short rant about how he can use Timmy's grade as an excuse to invite himself over and search the house for fairy godparents, ending his iconic spazzing out.
* In the episode "Cosmo Rules", Jorgen caught the trick-ups and had to pass on his duties of enforcing the rules to a family member, the only available one being Cosmo. After giving Cosmo his wand, Jorgen said without it he felt like half the man he used to be.
* In the episode "Coupon for Craziness", there's a mix-up at the grocery store and the family brings an entirely different kid home with them, who only kinda looks like Dexter and has a similar name. Dee Dee is the only one who seems to notice the difference between Dexter and "Dextor".

* In the episode "Courage the Fly", Eustace attempts to trap Courage (who is...well...
* In the episode "Court Martial", a computerized encoding device uses handwritten data entry, but it's actually a security precaution. Handwriting samples of personnel authorised to use the device are stored in its memory, and compared against the message written on the input card.
* In the episode "Cowboy" Henry - who is in a really bad mood - enters his office to find Hawkeye waiting for him behind his desk, wanting to discuss giving chopper pilot Cowboy a temporary medical discharge. Henry even
* In the episode "Cricket Match", Samosa's jaw drops in surprise when he first sees that his friend Jalebi is participating in the cricket game, complete with an
* In the episode "Crippled Summer", after repeated failures to sabotage Jimmy's team, Nathan (the leader of the rival team) attempts to rig Jimmy's ukulele to explode, but it ends up used as an
* In the episode "Crippled Summer", the handicapped kids were modeled after
* In the episode "Cripple Fight", when Stan calls Cartman a "Silly goose", Randy uses the trope to express his anger that his son would use such an unmanly term.
* In the episode "Crossing Paths", Jessie meets a boy named Austin who looks exactly like a boy
* In the episode "Crush", Justin Gaines uses telekinesis to turn on a chainsaw and throw it at Chloe. Clark Kent saves her in time.
* In the episode "Culture Shock", the audience boos Squidward during the talent show and throws tomatoes from the free salad bar. Mr. Krabs, spotting a business opportunity, immediately starts charging for the salad bar.
* In the episode "Custody Law and Eastern European Diplomacy" Jeff, ever the pragmatist, dismisses himself with "Oh hey, is that a reason to leave?"
* In the episode "Damien", Jesus and Satan are scheduled to have a boxing match. Everyone in town is sure that Jesus will win and place bets on him, until Satan appears and everyone sees how huge he is, so they all change their bets to Satan. Even Jesus doesn't think he can win and plans on forfeiting, until the boys tell him that there is one person in town who didn't change their bet and still believes in him,
* In the episode "Dance of the Dead", Number 6 encounters a teletype machine that turns back on after he tears out its innards.
* In the Episode "Dan vs. the Wolfman", Dan has a trick-or-treater dressed as a werewolf tied up and hanging from the ceiling whenever the kid says help Dan yells "Quiet!" one other time the kid whines "I wanna go home." Dan and Chris both yell "QUIET!"
* In the episode "Daphne Does Dinner", after Niles unwittingly insults Frasier's Special Sauce recipe, Frasier throws the whole pan in his face, causing him to stumble backwards through the kitchen doors into the living room, where a couple dozen guests are being entertained, looking as though someone took a meat cleaver to his jugular:
* In the episode "Daphne Hates Sherry", there's a brilliant almost have sex scenario with Niles and Daphne, three years before their actual hookup. Filled with Tennessee Williams references in the title cards and elsewhere. The
* In the episode "Dark Awakening", Daniel lists off some of the Autobots that died during the Great War. Prowl, Ironhide and Ratchet were explicitly and violently killed on-screen, but he also mentions Huffer, who only appears for less than a minute in the movie and doesn't die or even appear harmed.
* In the episode "Data's Day" he mentions that he "may be pursuing an untamed ornithoid without cause." It takes Dr. Crusher a few seconds to realize he's talking about a wild goose chase.
* In the episode "Daytrip of Doom!", when Huey is fleeing from Webby in a dart game:
* In the episode "Dead Man's Party", Cordelia asks, "How do we know it's really you and not zombie Giles?", to which Giles responds, "Cordelia, do stop being tiresome," and Cordelia quips, "It's him."
* In the episode dealing with "criticism training" (i.e. Nozomu has a guy show up and insult the students):

* In the episode "Death Camp of Tolerance," Mr. Garrison knows he will win a huge cash settlement if he sues for discrimination, so he begins acting stereotypically gay in class in the most inappropriate ways possible (even bringing in a sex slave and spanking him), hoping that he'll get fired for his behavior and then be able to file a lawsuit for discrimination against homosexuals. Instead, the faculty and the parents of the students praise him for his "courage" in refusing to be closeted. When Mr. Garrison insists to them that his behavior is offensive and should be punished, they finally
* In the episode "Death", Kyle's mom rallies the other parents to protest against
* In the episode "Dee Dee and the Man", Dexter 'fires' Dee Dee and joyously works in his lab without her interference. After a montage of repeatedly doing the same thing, his energetic joy fades until he's depressed and starts looking for a new annoying sister. Eventually, Dee Dee is rehired at the end of the episode.
* In the episode "Deep Throats" Meg is romantically involved with Mayor West, who has no problem waiting for Meg to turn 18, 21, or 25 (the age at which Meg could legally rent a car).
* In the episode "Delinquent", a young sex offender makes up a nonsense accusation against Stabler, and then tries to get his own charges dropped in return for dropping those he made against Stabler.
* In the episode "Democracy", five people who had evidence of a voting fraud conspiracy "accidentally" die before they can reveal the fraud. Unfortunately for the conspiracy, one of them managed to get the list of their names to Charlie shortly before being killed, who determines that the odds of five random people dying in a given two-week period are approximately a bajillion to one. Don orders a second autopsy on the one who gave Charlie the list, which confirms that she
* In the episode "Demons and Angels", Lister says the ship is full of fail-safes; "The actual chances of it exploding are one in—"
* In the episode "Doctor D", Samosa, Jalebi, and Vada show Dhokla that he has not totally ruined their friendship through blocking them on social media by singing him a
* In the episode "Does This Duckbill Make Me Look Fat?" Doofenshmirtz tries to write his own evil jingle to replace a fast food jingle, but can't come up with any good rhymes for evil:
* In the episode "Does This Duckbill Make Me Look Fat?", Dr. Doofenshmirtz is stealing all the clown statues from a burger chain because the song played from the clown is an Ear Worm he can't stop singing. Perry's boss is singing it too. Then in the end credits, he gets the "Perry the Teenage Girl" song stuck in his head.
* In the episode "Dog of Death," Kent Brockman is reporting on the large lottery price money, and mentions that the schools would get a cut of the earnings made from the ticket sales, and Principal Skinner is making grand plans as to how to update the curriculum and remodel the school. Once Brockman wins the lottery and brags about not quitting a good-paying job, he reports on the ceremony where a lottery official gives principal Skinner his school's cut of the lottery ticket earnings: a brand new chalkboard eraser. Before Skinner goes into a rant about how the government screwed him over, the transmission cuts back to Brockman in the studio.
* In the episode "Doing the Honours", while discussing the Order of St Michael and St George. The Order has three grades: Companion (CMG), Knight Commander (KCMG) and Knight Grand Cross (GCMG). Bernard explains what the abbreviations mean in the Civil Service:
* In the episode "Doing Time", Mrs. Puff is seeing SpongeBob and Patrick everywhere in prison, even seeing two guards remove their masks to reveal the twosome! She even accuses the two guards (after they take Sponge and Pat's places) and rips off their faces, to reveal
* In the episode "Don Juan Gets Shelved", Lucy wants to hire an actor to play a producer trying to steal Ricky to convince an MGM producer not to fire him. Unbeknownst to her, the very producer she wants to fool overhears her plight and volunteers himself as an actor. Lucy is reluctant to hire him because he doesn't look the part at all, corrects his wardrobe, and coaches him on how to sound important and act like a producer and never feels she makes any progress.

* In the episode "Don't Even Blink", Doofenshmirtz developed an Invisinator. He explained that he developed it because, whenever the Fireside Girls knock at his door with him at home watching TV and the blinds open, they can see him so he cannot pretend he's not at home. He then told Perry the Platypus he intended to use the invisinator on... the girls so he'd not have to see them.
* In the episode "Doppelganger", as if Kate weren't already weirded out by how similar the civilian police team is to the NCIS team, seeing Not-Gibbs deliver one of these to Not-Tony cinches it.
* In the episode "Doppelgänger", the case hinged in part on two different brands of cigarettes: Triboros, and Llamas (the latter in a package resembling Camel cigarettes).
* In the episode "Double Agent", Maxwell Smart needs to lose a lot of money gambling so that KAOS will think he has gambling debts and is willing to defect. Naturally, he ends up winning. He even discards a poker hand of four kings, only to be dealt four aces.
* In the episode "Double Down", the murderer scrawls a message on his victim's face. Castle's first reaction on seeing this is that the grammar is wrong.
* In the episode "Double Edged Sword", Pete references this by name: "The reason people are unhappy in their careers is that they keep getting promoted until they're in over their heads. The Peter Principle says you rise to the level of your incompetence." He says this to Tracy, who was happy as a fallen immature B-list comedian and is currently miserable as a socially-responsible A-list Oscar winner.
* In the episode "Doubt", the accusation is made by an emotionally disturbed woman who is either traumatized by a real case of abuse or simply an attention-whore who realized just how much attention a false accusation can give her. In either case, she recants her accusation against Stabler
* In the episode "Dragonshy", Fluttershy is so frightened she has to be reminded that she can fly. This then gets
* In the episode "Dream a Little Dream," Chiana and Rygel must defend Zhaan against a murder charge on Litigara, a planet where 90% of the population are lawyers. One of the cornerstones of their legal system is the (generally considered to be metaphorical) "Light of Truth," which blazes brighter in the presence of lies. Chiana
* In the episode "Dreamland", Mulder was dropped into the body of an MIB when he
* In the episode "Dream Mutt", Billy and his dog Wiggy Gee Jed do this after Jed reveals his plot to steal all the beds in the world.
* In the episode "Drop Zone", Kid Flash snatches Bane's detonator so fast, Bane doesn't realize it's gone until he tries to press it. Kid Flash needed a running start to do it, though.
* In the episode "Duck Codgers" Dodgers and the Cadet get exposed to the spores of a plant that causes them to rapidly age by the hour. If they don't reach the cure, which is located under the Martian base, they will age into dust. Near the end, Dodgers becomes separated from the Cadet and he finds a pile of dust with the Cadet's glasses on top. He cries for him, but moments later the Cadet arrives on a walker also crying. He then asks him why he was crying, and he replies that he lost his glasses.
* In the episode "Dueling Eds", Rolf is unsatisfied when Eddy does not even attempt to fight back during their duel, declaring that Eddy should at least be
* In the episode "Dumbbell Indemnity", Moe spends so much money on things for his new girlfriend that he decides to come up with a plan with Homer to steal his car, have it destroyed, and collect the insurance money. Homer steals Moe's car and is supposed to leave it on the train tracks, but he gets sidetracked by a showing at a drive-in theater for a movie about a monkey who is president. Having missed the train, Homer decides to drive the car off a cliff in plain view of everyone, including the police, which gets himself arrested.
* In the episode "Dunces and Dragons", SpongeBob goes to a blacksmith for armor and the blacksmith finishes his knight look with a sword, but it's too heavy for SpongeBob to lift so he ends up tossing it into the blacksmith's chest. He shrugs it off like it's nothing saying that it'll require a few stitches.

* In the episode "Dunces and Dragons", the guard standing by the door of the jousting tournament says, "Right this way". SpongeBob, getting into character, friendlily chides him, "Don't you mean, 'right-eth this way-eth?'", then they go inside. Meanwhile, the guard holds his own spear to his neck and winces, cringing... then sighs, puts his spear down, and says, "SOMEDAY... but not today".
* In the episode "D-Yikes!" Mrs. Garrison thinks this is true of lesbians and tries to hit on one who's clearly spoken for. When the town was hit by the metrosexual trend, the then-male Mr. Garrison was eager to spend some quality time with one of any number of men he mistook for gay. Then again, this is
* In the episode "Earshot," Buffy finds Jonathan in the school bell-tower with a high-powered rifle and immediately assumes he's out to perpetrate a student massacre, and gives him a whole speech condemning it. A confused Jonathan replies that he came up there to kill himself.
* In the episode "Eggscellent", Rigby goes to a restaurant to eat an enormous omelette in order to win a promotional hat. The moment he orders the omelette it cuts to him in an ambulance because apparently he was allergic to eggs.
* In the episode "Eggtown," Jack mentions that the Oceanic Six started out as eight survivors, but some died before they were rescued. The producers
* In the episode "Elaan of Troyius" the women of the planet Elas have tears that make every man the tears touch fall madly in love with them. Kirk is infected, but okay by the end of the episode. Spock explains what happened: "The antidote to a woman of Elas, Doctor, is a starship. The Enterprise infected the captain long before the Dohlman did."
* In the episode "Endgame", General Lefcourt leads the ships loyal to the Clark regime. As he puts it, "I'm from the old school: a soldier doesn't take up arms against his own government, no matter how justified you feel doing it." That said, when
* In the episode "Enemy of My Frenemy", Kevin takes a blow for Gwen; he recovers.
* In the episode "Epic Fail", a videogame programmer, who complains that his hands felt like they were on fire, uses online resources to self-diagnose himself, which alienates the doctors of Princeton-Plainsboro. However, they soon prove his self-diagnosis wrong. Instead of doing the logical thing and letting THEM help, he keeps trying to self-diagnose and, eventually, get help from doctors outside the hospital. Near the end of the episode, he offers a $25k prize for the doctor who solves his case, which he posted online. In an (at first) ironic twist, one of the online doctors DOES solve the case and gets the money. But at the end of the episode, it's revealed that
* In the episode "Epiphanies", the representative of a Cylon sympathizer organization called Demand Peace invokes this after the organization bombs one of the convoy ships.
* In the episode "Eric's Birthday", when Laurie is asking Eric to borrow his car, and Kelso hears it as she was coming onto him. The thing is, Kelso's "interpretation" is practically a
* In the episode "Eric's Depression" Eric and Donna have a shouting match (it was shortly after their breakup) in which Donna calls Eric a dillhole. Eric's response is to call her a "double dillhole". As soon as Donna leaves he berates himself for saying something that stupid.
* In the episode "Eric's Hot Cousin," Eric's cousin is supposed to be so hot that Eric lusts after her, and Donna and Jackie feel upstaged by her.
* In the episode "Escape", there's a scene where Dr Martel walks into the room, silently pours himself a drink, and knocks it back, before announcing that the man whose injuries he was called to tend to has died.
* In the episode "Escape to the House of Mummies, Part II", is partially a send-up of this trope; in it, the family meets a 'good mummy,' but pretty much all of the shambling corpses, and the 'Cult of Osiris' that resurrected them, are profoundly ineffective.
* In the episode "Escape to the House of Mummies, Part II", we get this exchange:

* In the episode "Eternal Moonshine of the Simpsons Mind", Homer, infallibally predicting that once his memory is wiped he will be in a
* In the episode "Everybody Finds Out", Phoebe and Rachel decide to have Phoebe hit on Chandler to prove that he and Monica are seeing each other. This escalates to the point where they're in Chandler's apartment for a date. When Phoebe pours them wine and they toast, both promptly drain their entire glasses.
* In the episode "Every Man's Dream", the song "Big City" by the space rock band
* In the episode "Ex-File", Gibbs has to deal with the combination of his current girlfriend Lt. Col. Hollis Mann, his third ex-wife and his former lover
* In the episode "Explorers", O'Brien claims that Romulans are particularly prone to doing this, though he doesn't give any specific examples. Considering the fact that they call themselves Romulans, and their core planets are called Romulus and Remus, not to mention the whole Romulan Senate being styled after a certain Earth-based senate from
* In the episode "Extra Large Medium", Chris dates Ellen, a girl with Down syndrome. Ellen was voiced by Andrea Fay Friedman, who has Down syndrome in real life.
* In the episode "Extreme Measures", Sloan, an agent of the very secretive Section 31, triggers a "neuro-depolarizing device" when he's captured by Dr. Bashir. This not only kills him but starts destroying his brain and all the secrets within; Bashir has to delay this process long enough to get some crucial information from Sloan's mind.
* In the episode "Eye of the Beholder", Ship detects that his father Baz-El is in trouble and flies away in his Anterian Obliterator form to rescue him.
* In the episode "Fade In to Murder", TV actor Ward Fowler (William Shatner) is revealed to be wearing elevator shoes to increase his height (a technique Shatner himself has used before), which serves as an important clue. It's
* In the episode "Faith Hilling", a teacher forces Butters to put a gun inside his mouth and shows the class a violent PSA on "Long Johnsoning", both intended to scare the children away from using memes. He is later shown dancing with the gun still in his mouth, AND HIS FINGER IS ON THE TRIGGER.
* In the episode "Fall Weather Friends", Applejack, Rainbow Dash, and Twilight Sparkle participate in an annual race called the Running of the Leaves. Rainbow and Applejack are trying to prove who's the more athletic of the two.
* In the episode "False Profits," in order to fool two Ferengi who were exploiting a planet, Neelix (a Talaxian) was disguised as a Ferengi. Upon threat of death, Neelix ultimately confesses he's not a Ferengi. This prompts the two Ferengi to come up to him and tug on his (fake) ears. Neelix says "I don't feel a thing" (Ferengi ears are
* In the episode "Family Appreciation Day", Scootaloo excitedly jumps into the air when she gets an idea of how to get out of Apple Bloom bringing Granny Smith to Family Appreciation Day, and she just happens to jostle a lantern hanging over her and turn it on.
* In the episode "Far From Home," this is used to show how well Brainiac 5 and Supergirl get along. (They're trying to find their teammates by using Supergirl's earpiece.)
* In the episode "Father's Day", Rose meets up with her dead father, whom she knows only from her mother's stories. He proves to be up to his neck in get-rich-quick schemes and he and her mother quarrel almost continuously. However, in the end, her father makes a
* In the episode "Fear of a Bot Planet", Leela objects to being sentenced as a human by the human-hating robots because she is a one-eyed alien. (Although before going,
* In the episode featuring the Lost City of Atlanta, Fry marries a mermaid. Things get very awkward in the honeymoon suite when the bride asks, "What the heck is that?"
* In the episode "Feeling Pinkie Keen," Pinkie Pie's "Pinkie Sense" tells her that Twilight Sparkle's going to need a bath. Twilight laughs at her, then is splattered with mud by Mr. Greenhooves's passing cart.

* In the episode "Femme Fatale", Bubbles says that boys "are worse than their cooties".
* In the episode "Final Appeal", a time traveler uses a similar bomb to threaten the US Government of
* In the episode "Finances With Wolves", after Hayley joins a group of eco-warriors, their leader Arborious, a man who believes he is a tree trapped in a human body, reminds her that she needs to pass an initiation test to join his group. Hayley asks if it involves having sex with a tree or him, but Arborious tells her he's in a relationship with a "redwood in Canada".
* In the episode "Fire From Olympus", a huge snake ambushes Batman by pretending to be one of the heads of a statue of the Lernaean Hydra.
* In the episode "Fishsticks", Kanye West tries to figure out the pun based joke of the title.
* In the episode "Flight 601 Has Vanished" of the animated series based on
* In the episode "Flight", Sucre sings the song quoted above when attempting to hotwire a car. It doesn't work, however: turns out the car is missing its engine.
* In the episode "Flirting With Disaster", Francine gets hit in the face with acid. For the remainder of the episode, until the last few seconds, her face is conveniently obscured. For good reason.
* In the episode "Fools in April", after Squidward has played a prank on SpongeBob, he realizes how much he's humiliated him and goes to his house to apologize... but because of his despise toward him, every time he tries to say "I'm sorry", he just can't pull it off without doing weird cartoon-takes.
* In the episode "Forever," the episode after the death of Buffy's mother, Spike shows up with a bouquet of flowers, only to be stopped by Willow and Xander, who believe that he's trying to take advantage of the situation to score points with Buffy. Spike insists that he wants to
* In the episode "For the Love of Gargamel", Gargamel and Azrael get
* In the episode "Four Weddings and a Funeral(Minus Three Weddings and One Funeral)" of
* In the episode "Fraggle Wars," the Cave Fraggles' idea of fun is dusting.
* In the episode "Fragile Balance", Michael Welch plays a teenaged O'Neill and matches Richard Dean Anderson's speech patterns and mannerisms so well that it's a bit surprising that the other characters don't believe it's him at first.
* In the episode "Francine Goes to War" Francine is trying to prank her new neighbor Mrs. Pariso into moving back out of the apartment building after Mrs. Pariso has annoyed Francine. At one point she writes her a letter claiming to be from the building's landlord and that the building is in danger of collapsing due to termites and has to be evacuated. The only problem is that Muffy writes the letter despite having less-than-optimal writing skills. Mrs. Pariso returns the letter to Francine with all of Muffy's mistakes corrected.
* In the episode "Fred's Second Car", Fred and Barney are trapped in a gangster's hideout and Fred gets the idea for them to tackle a
* In the episode "Freemium isn't Free", Kyle, Cartman and Kenny all confront Stan over playing the Terrence and Phillip mobile game in lieu of coming to school, and when Stan tries to defend himself, Cartman shoots him down.
* In the episode "Friday the 13th, 1901", George is trying to put together a police curling team:
* In the episode "Funny Pants", Patrick slips on the same banana peel several times.
* In the episode "Funny Pants", Squidward gets fed up with SpongeBob's nonstop laughing and tells him that if he doesn't stop, he'll burn out his "laugh box" and never be able to laugh again. Later in the episode, he confesses his lie and cracks up laughing over his own prank. As it turns out, the laugh box is real, and Squidward burns out his and has to get a partial transplant from SpongeBob at the end of the episode.
* In the episode "Fun on a Bun", Fry is helping Bender make sausage from frozen mammoth meat when he gets caught in the grinder. When Leela bites into a link and finds scraps of Fry's hair and clothes, she assumes the worst.

* In the episode "F.U.N.", Plankton disguises himself in front of a magic shop when SpongeBob shows up. He doesn't recognize him at first, but when he sees the magic shop, he starts gushing about a magician he once saw. Plankton finally has enough of his glurge-filled rambling and gives himself up.
* In the episode "F.U.N.", SpongeBob tries to befriend him thinking that if he had at least one friend, Plankton wouldn't be so mean. Plankton goes along to try and get a Krabby Patty, but he appears to turn around and become friendlier. Then SpongeBob finds out about Plankton's plan and confronts him. Plankton tears up and confesses, adding that "then you showed me friendship, and I realized... that's all I ever really wanted."
* In the episode "Furt," Sue Sylvester just happens to be acting principal of McKinley and undergoes
* In the episode "Future Tense," George wins a pile of money at a horse race. At the end, the "
* In the episode "Galaxy's Child", they're under threat by a Space Whale baby who thinks the Enterprise is its mother, and is sucking the energy from the ship.(It looked more like a nudibranch but acted like a whale).
* In the episode "Game of Groans,'' Youngmee reveals that she has a fear of jester hats.
* In the episode "Gem Harvest", Steven uses his powers to turn an ordinary pumpkin into a doglike creature which is loyal to him. Afterwards, he shows off an alternate, more mundane method of giving a pumpkin a face: namely, turning it into a jack-o-lantern. The newly-animate
* In the episode "Get Back Jojo", the scene in the past where the young Professor Utonium crazily drops red dye ("blood") and excessive chemicals into his model volcano ("monster"), which results in explosion, is accompanied by a creepy organ music.
* In the episode "Ghost in the Machines", one of Bender's methods in his attempt to kill Fry involved possessing a vending machine that serves pineapples and has them launch at Fry when he tries to make a purchase.
* In the episode "Ghost Princess", Jake finally recalls how Clarence died. He was so depressed after
* In the episode "Giant Steps" the Black Shark is taken care of when Lancelot accidentally overinflates it with a diving suit pump.
* In the episode "Give and Let Give", the cage Jason and Michelle are in has bars far apart for them to just escape if they tried.
* In the episode "Give and Let Give", Zidgel looks straight at the camera and asks if he mentioned that he was on a peaceful mission.
* In the episode "Gloria Sings the Blues", Archie and Mike argue about whether you should put on your socks on both feet and then your shoes, or your the sock and the shoe on one foot, then the other one. Archie, however, treats it as
* In the episode "Godfellas", Bender ends up drifting in space, where he becomes God to the Shrimpkins, a race of miniature people who end up settling on his body.
* In the episode "Gone", the Trio attempt to make a dramatic escape from Buffy
* In the episode "Goobacks" immigrants from the future come back through a time portal to get jobs in the present. When the townspeople try to improve the future so the immigrants will stay in their time period, the immigrants begin to fade away. A reporter notes that scientists say the time border follows
* In the episode "Goodbye Island", the group accidentally discover a new glue when they attempt to use the sap of a local tree to create pancake syrup. They then try to use it to repair their boat.
* In the episode "Good Clean Fun", Kermit remarks that Piggy weighs more than he thought when she stands on him to reach the sink. When Piggy gets angry, Kermit hastily claims that he said "Those are the nicest shoes you've bought".
* In the episode "Good Times With Weapons" the kids are playing with the weapons and imagine themselves as anime characters, complete with a song in Japanese made by Trey Parker (who speaks fluent Japanese), "Let's Fighting Love". The song also has several odd statements in
* In the episode "Go Viral", Rigby says this to the Warden of the Internet.

Considering she's been capturing anyone who makes a viral video and imprisoning them in a
* In the episode "Grace", a little girl appears to a concussed Carter and helps her find the solution to her problem. The rest of her team and her father also appear to her at various times, representing different aspects of her personality (eg: Teal'c as the seasoned soldier).
* In the episode "Grade School Confidential," Martin's birthday party comes to an end when the oysters his parents served, instead of cake, gave the other kids food poisoning, except for Bart who gave his to Martin's cat, and Lisa who faked getting food poisoning in order to escape the overtly educational theme of the party.
* In the episode, "Grandma's Dead", Duncan Duff, Elmyra's younger brother, is
* In the episode "Grandma's Kisses", SpongeBob doesn't want to be an adult because his peers tell him that certain things he likes getting from his grandma, such as homemade sweaters, cookies and milk, and the eponymous kisses, are for kids only, and he cries so much that he fills up his grandma's house.
* In the episode "Greedy Goes On Strike", Greedy hangs up his apron and decides to go on strike when the other Smurfs take his role as the village chef for granted. Throughout the course of the episode, other Smurfs try their hand at being the village chef, only to realize after several failures that they really need Greedy to do the cooking because he is the only one who is very skilled at cooking.
* In the episode "Grim or Gregory?", when Grim gets mixed up with a kid who happens to have been dressed as him for Halloween:
* In the episode "Growing Dark" it is hinted that something supernatural is causing the lights to stop working in the narrator's girlfriend's flat. They replace the bulbs, check the fittings and call in an electrician but can find nothing apparently wrong. Then
* In the episode "Grow-No-Mo!", Robotboy (desiring to age like a human) flicks a switch and ends up gradually growing as big as the moon.
* In the episode "Guess Who's Coming to Criticize Dinner," Homer becomes a food critic for
* In the episode "Guess Who's Knott Coming to Dinner", Shaggy has left the old mine with the supposed ghost of Captain Moody, whom he mistook for the disguised
* In the episode, "Guys and Dolls", when Gabe and his new friend Logan accuse P.J. of being just like Bob, P.J. tries to prove to them that he can still be fun by having them draw on Bob's face in the middle of the night. They try to do the same with Amy, but she stops them. When Bob awakens the next morning, he thinks Amy drew on his face as retribution for giving Spencer bad advice on pleasing girls by telling him to pretend to like what they like.
* In the episode "Hall Monitor", Patrick is eating ice-cream when SpongeBob calls him. Patrick thinks his ice-cream is the one who spoke and has a freak-out.
* In the episode "Halloween of Horror" (one of the rare "canon" episodes that happen in Halloween), Homer's stupidity exposes the crooked deals of three teenage temps that were working for Apu, who fires them as a result, and the teens end up besieging the Simpson home with Homer and Lisa inside as they attempt to get revenge.
* In the episode "Handemonium", after several failures to stop the now-living Chum Bucket glove, Plankton tells SpongeBob to "keep his pants on", which gives him an idea. SpongeBob then proceeds to remove his pants (to Plankton's chagrin) and sings the first line of the theme song, summoning Hans the live-action hand to give him his pants, as he does when SpongeBob opens his front door during the opening. He then asks Hans to assist them in defeating the glove (because, as Plankton soon realizes, to beat a giant glove, you need an equally huge hand).
* In the episode "Hank's Bully", Hank is continuously harassed and taunted by the son of his new neighbors, but the parents take no disciplinary action and instead write off their son's behavior as creativity and his way of expressing friendship. Then Hank asks Bobby to deliberately cause trouble for them by imitating their son's behavior as
* In the episode "Harbingers in the Fountain", the suspect appears to be getting away with his crime of killing a dozen people and burying them under a fountain. US

Attorney Caroline Julian calls them near the end of the episode to tell them to arrest the man. She has handed the evidence to the DC DA, who is going to prosecute him for fraud. As Caroline notes, "Murder isn't the only crime.
* In the episode "Hard Stop", DI Wes Leyton celebrates his birthday at the police station with the other officers, leaves for a dinner with his wife—and is gunned down in the parking lot.
* In the episode "Harley and Ivy", it's revealed that Poison Ivy has a natural immunity to poisons and toxins, which she brilliantly employs by hiding out in a half-finished neighborhood built atop a toxic waste dump; she gives Harley the same immunity in the episode, as they've teamed up to commit crimes. When Joker shows up to "reclaim" Harley, he uses his signature Joker venom — which can affect even Batman — on Ivy when she gets in the way. She falls to the ground, coughing...and then those coughs turn to
* In the episode "Harvest", Clark and Lois find themselves in a small farming town when their car breaks down. It turns out that the townspeople owe their unnaturally good health to deposits of blue Kryptonite in their ground water, and plan to sacrifice Lois to insure a bountiful harvest.
* In the episode "Hassle in the Castle," Maryann, one of the former godchildren of Cosmo and Wanda wished Archduke Franz Ferdinand to be assassinated, which caused
* In the episode "Hats Off to Smurfs", Vanity's new yellow hat becomes this after his face starts becoming disfigured from soaking it in water. Since the hat was made from magic fabric created by Gargamel, the Smurfs make a similar hat for the evil wizard to wear while soaked in water in order to force him to come up with the antidote.
* In the episode "Haven", Deanna Troi wants to fulfill her arranged marriage promise to Wyatt Miller. He had given her a chameleon rose as a gift. It was blue when Miller held it and turned red, then white when Troi held it. It later turns purple while still in Troi's hands (which becomes
* In the episode "Headhunters", Dipper and Mabel believe that the gossip writer is the killer of wax Stan, when the crime was perpetrated by the vengeful wax statues the real Stan had locked away for years.
* In the episode "Hearts and Hooves Day", Big Mac and Cheerilee fall in love due to a love potion given to them by the Cutie Mark Crusaders. At the end of the episode after the potion has been cured, they're last seen pretending to still be in love before going off to have a picnic. It's left ambiguous whether they're just friends putting on an act to troll the CMC or whether there's actually something going on. Ultimately, Big Mac ends up with somepony else, indicating that if there was really anything there, it didn't last.
* In the episode "Hearts and Hooves Day", when the Cutie Mark Crusaders are looking for a suitable stallion for Cheerilee, as the episode's musical number:
* In the episode "Hello Gutter, Hello Fadder," Homer goes into Lisa's room and offers to help with her homework, when Lisa says he can help her find words where "y is the vowel,"
* In the episode "Hello, Nice Warners", the Warner siblings pull a simultaneous aside glance after a Jerry Lewis caricature says something ridiculous.
* In the episode "Here Comes The Squirtle Squad", Ash is trying to buy some Super Potion for an injured Pikachu, and as he's running into the store, Gary opens the door and squishes Ash against the wall.
* In the episode "Here Thar Be Dwarves!", during his camping trip, Billy comes across a disheveled, mangy-looking, and starving
* In the episode "Here There Be Dwarves", the dwarves shout "Lave sus Manos!" ("Wash your hands") as a battle cry, rather than "Vaya con Dios!" ("Go with God").
* In the episode "Heroes and Monsters", Adam tells Blake "Why must you hurt me, Blake?" mere moments before he attempts to decapitate her. He also
* In the episode "Herpe, the Love Sore", we get disgusting close-ups of herpes sores from Brian and Chris.
* In the episode "He's Dead, She's Dead" a psychic is murdered, and supposedly leaves a letter about her own murder for the police. Beckett is skeptical while Castle believes it wholeheartedly. In the end of the episode, everything is wrapped up, except for one tiny point in the letter that Castle reminds Beckett of that seems to indicate the letter actually was from the psychic, proving her amazing

* In the episode "He's Too Sexy for His Fat", Peter gets Chris to run on a treadmill by sticking a plumber's helper to his forehead with a Twinkie hanging from it. Chris eventually figures out how to get the Twinkie: lay on his back.
* In the episode "High Noon", Earl notes that lawyers are "...lower lifeforms who have only recently arisen from the primordial ooze..." and that he really hates them.
* In the episode "High Voltage", Murdoch asks a hotel desk clerk about the occupant of a hotel room, and the clerk finds the relevant page from the hotel register is missing. Murdoch uses this method and a camera to recover a signature from the register's next page.
* In the episode "Him", Principal Woods is oblivious to Buffy carefully taking aim at him with a missile launcher as Spike interrupts her and then Buffy starts chasing him, cartoony-like back and forth. Finally, Woods looks up and see no one around, and shrugs it off.
* In the episode "Holy Crap," Peter has kidnapped the Pope by posing as his driver and he drives the Pope Mobile past one of these. The Pope doesn't realize anything is wrong and keeps waving at everything, including a chain gang, parodying
* In the episode "Holy Crap", Peter, hoping to reconcile with his father, specifically hired a band to play heartwarming TV-style music if/when it happened. Brian asks if they can do the fluttery music that played every time
* In the episode "Home Insecurity" has Dean peeing himself after an encounter with a security bot with a screen depicting his dad's face.
* In the episode "Home Is Where the Bark Is", Lucky, Cadpig and Rolly make many attempts to escape from their old house (which they are trapped inside). In one of these attempts, they form a
* In the episode "Home Movies", when Angelica sees Tommy as a weird version of Superman in Chuckie's home movie:
* In the episode "Homer at the Bat", Mr Burns calls his remaining players this after all but one of the professionals are made unavailable in ridiculous ways.
* In the episode "Homer at the Bat", Wade Boggs is knocked out cold by Barney after the two argue over who's the best British Prime Minister of all time.
* In the episode "Homer Defined", Homer becomes a hero after accidentally saving the power plant. When he's invited to give a speech about how he did it, he imagines the audience in their underwear, then shrieks and hides behind the podium because he imagined himself in his underwear, too.
* In the episode "Homer Defined," the reactor begins to go critical, and Homer (of course) does
* In the episode "Homer Loves Flanders", Ned's increasing hatred of Homer (thanks to the latter becoming more friendly to him and giving him an unrelenting barrage of his extreme obnoxiousness) manifests in a nightmare in which he goes on a killing spree with a sniper rifle from a clock tower Charles Whitman-style.
* In the episode "Homer Simpson, This Is Your Wife" the intro is redone in live-action. This is actually an advertisement for the show done by British Channel Sky 1.
* In the episode "Homer's Phobia", John has a "creepy-cool robot Santa" (as Bart describes it) from Japan, that he later uses to scare off the reindeer beating up Homer. John says that he figured "reindeer would naturally be afraid of their cruel master, Santa Claus. I mean, wouldn't you be?"
* In the episode "Homer the Vigilante", a cat burglar very easily keeps Santa's Little Helper at bay by offering it a sausage. Amusingly straight afterwards he uses the same trick to distract a sleepwalking Homer.
* In the episode "Homer To The Max": Homer says that networks love animation because they don't have to pay the actors squat. Ned Flanders then comes in with a different voice actor and comments that they could be replaced at any time and no one could tell the difference.
* In the episode "Home, Sweet Pineapple", SpongeBob sleeps at Patrick's house, but the drool coming from Patrick's mouth spills across the house and ends up being absorbed by SpongeBob's body.

* In the episode "Homewreckers" where Ted buys a house that needs a lot of fixing, his contractor mentions the expected: Mold, vermin, and water damage, before mentioning a hobo.
* In the episode 'Homie the Clown', Krusty had an informercial in which late NFL player Johnny Unitas showcased a mustache trimmer for women:
* In the episode, "Hothead", Eustace applies for an experimental hair tonic, with the warning that the recipient not be angry when in use. Little does Eustace know, is that every time he uses the tonic, it amplifies his anger to the point that he can cause explosions (and to add insult to injury, he doesn't grow any hair other than one long strand at the end of the episode, which immediately wilts again, making him so angry he blows up the house with himself inside it, Courage escaping with Muriel at the last moment.)
* In the episode "Hot to the Touch", Finn is stuck between harming his
* In the episode "House Arrest", Hawkeye punches Frank and gives him a black eye, but when Frank tries to get corroboration for a court-martial, Trapper John insists he really "slipped on a bar of soap".
* In the episode "House of Hoarders", the youngest daughter of a hoarder couldn't bear to let go of several male teens (the brother worked with runaways) she had relationships with and after poisoning them, kept their bodies hidden in the yard.
* In the episode "House of Quark", a Klingon named Kozak dies when he gets drunk in a bar, pulls out a knife to try to stab the bartender, trips, and accidentally impales himself with his own blade. His grieving brother actually encourages Quark to lie and say he killed him in personal combat, as the truth about his death would be an embarrassment to the family.
* In the episode, "Hundred Dollar Baby", Dee gets hooked on steroids and threatens her opponent with,
* In the episode "Huntara", Hordak's flashback is done with simplified, stylized art and copious shadowing.
* In the episode "Hunting", Cameron does not forget, per se, but she does regret it.
* In the episode "Hurricane Neddy" Homer is asked by a psychiatrist to attempt to
* In the episode "Hurry Hard", Brent and Wanda and Oscar and Emma each want Lacey to be their fourth for an upcoming curling bonspiel. Oscar and Emma rush to ask Lacey "Lacey, will you join our curling team?" Wanda then tells Brent to up the ante and he says "Lacey, will you be on our team
* In the episode "Hysteria", Elliot tries to give daughter Kathleen The Talk by speaking entirely in soccer metaphors, after which Kathleen reassures her father she's a virgin.
* In the episode "iBelieve in Bigfoot," Sam pulls a bottle of Spencer's root beer out of the fridge and bangs it open on the table, taking a sip and saying it tasted like diet; Sam throws the bottle into the trash and it breaks.
* In the episode "I Believe the Children Are Our Future" Castiel got turned into an action figure.
* In the episode "I Brobot", Perry takes a chimney elevator to get to O.W.C.A. headquarters and shares an
* In the episode "Iceman", the medical examiner Ducky is in autopsy, doing his usual
* In the episode "I Dare You", Norb and Daggett end up having to do two dares dictated toward them by an elderly, turban-wearing beaver called the Risk Keeper. The brothers are told that if either of them ends up chickening out, both of them will be stuck wearing signs on their back reading "Kick Me - I'm a stoopy poopy scaredy beaver". At the end of the episode, the brothers instead put both signs onto the Risk Keeper.
* In the episode "iDo", Sam wears a meatball patch. It works like a nicotine patch, but is supposed to reduce her
* In the episode "I Dream of Genie," a George P. Hanley purchases a lamp with the intent of giving as a gift to a co-worker. Once he brings it home, however, he discovers that it contains a genie. Most of the episode is spent going over what

George imagines would happen if he wished for various things (a beautiful wife, to be president, or to be rich). In the end,
* In the episode "I Had an Accident", SpongeBob shuts himself in his house with his three "new friends" Penny (a copper one-cent piece), Chip (a potato chip), and Used Napkin (take a wild guess). He acts as though they can speak, and carries on one-sided conversations ("I could do without your sarcasm, Used Napkin!"). Patrick at least treats them as being real, tearfully commenting on Penny's beautiful singing voice, as well as thanking Chip when he 'showed them the door', an act apparently done by Spongebob tossing it at the door.
* In the episode "I Hate A Mystery", a crime wave hits the 4077th, with many items getting stolen, leading to Col. Blake and Radar doing a tent-by-tent search. The stolen items were found in Hawkeye's footlocker.
* In the episode "Ike's Wee Wee," Mr. Mackey tries to explain to children
* In the episode "I Love Lisa," Ralph Wiggum has tickets to Krusty's anniversary show, and he invites Lisa. Bart really wants to go, and he suggests disguising himself as Lisa.
* In the episode "I Love You, Tommy Brown", Garcia is desperately trying to get Morgan to pick up the phone and one of the voicemails she leaves is:
* In the episode "Imprisoned," the Gaang is easily able to fit between some of the bars on top of the titled prison's wall and had the ability to fly away. However, said prison is a
* In the episode "In Blackest Night", an errant Green Lantern beam accidentally hits a weak spot in a planet's crust and destroys it.
* In the episode "I Never Met the Dead Man", after Meg runs an Amish man off the road in a race, his carriage explodes, then his horse follows suit. Maybe it was a
* In the episode "Infection", it's mentioned that Dr Franklin aspires to become one of the great names of medicine, alongside Fleming, Salk, Jenner, and Takahashi.
* In the episode "Inheritance", Marcus Chong (best known as Tank in The Matrix) plays a character whose heritage (half African-American, half Chinese-American) matches his own exactly, even to the point of each parent's race (his father is the former, his mother the latter).
* In the episode "In Marge We Trust," Japanese tourists recognize Homer as the uncannily similar detergent mascot Mr. Sparkle and excitedly take pictures.
* In the episode "Innocence", the gang has to defeat an enemy called the Judge who "no weapon forged" could kill. However, that declaration was made before Christ, and humanity has much bigger weapons. Buffy decimates him with an AT-4 rocket launcher.
* In the episode "Inquisitor", a version of Holly in an altered timeline has no inflection to her voice. "Unauthorized entry. Intruder alert, intruder alert..."
* In the episode "Inside Man", Barclay discovers that his girlfriend is a
* In the episode "In the Pale Moonlight", Benjamin Sisko lies, bribes criminals, covers up the crimes of other criminals, and was an accessory to murder in order to bring the Romulans into the Dominion War on the side of the Federation. He says 'I can live with it' because the Federation was losing and their way of life was in danger of being destroyed.
* In the episode "In the Pale Moonlight", Sisko doesn't even bother to say anything before belting Garak across the face.
* In the episode "Into Town", Nikki stops outside a clothing store for women called, "Lil' Country Style", with the sign missing
* In the episode involving the school play, Tucker auditions for it with the spinning plates before somebody realizes he's in elementary school.
* In the episode in which Ice Beam was first used, Ash's Charizard nearly died from it, and it took Ash a long time and a lot of rubbing to get it well again. But this was the only time; after that, being frozen is pretty much instantly cured.
* In the episode in which the Springfield Elementary school bus crashes into the ocean and drifts off to a desert island, Bart has to swim down to the submerged bus to retrieve emergency supplies for himself and the rest of the kids. He sees various huge, scary sea creatures as he swims past, and finally has to confront a gigantic puffer fish...which then exhales, deflating down into a tiny minnow. Bart laughs and turns to leave — and then the little fish

* In the episode in which they test if one can shoot an incoming hand grenade and what the effect of that would be, Jamie and Adam go learn to shoot skeet with a 12-gauge. At then end, Jamie tosses his beret like a frisbee for Adam to try to shoot. He hit it.
* In the episode "Ipswich", Dr. Duncan has Douglas roleplay as a nervous first officer trying to bring up a potential problem with an intimidating captain. As Douglas is a very confident first officer and Martin is not remotely an intimidating captain, snark ensues.
* In the episode "iQ", Carly falls for a boy who is presented as highly intelligent and cultured, enjoys these kinds of movies and takes her to one for their date. Carly is horrified to find out that what she thought was the end of the film after several boring hours was only the intermission.
* In the episode "I Second That Emotion", Prof. Farnsworth installs an empathy chip on Bender in order to teach him about empathy. It forces him to feel whatever emotions Leela is feeling at the moment. The episode ends with Bender not learning a thing and continues to be a
* In the episode "iStart a Fan War," Sam takes a sip of diet root beer then spits it out, complaining about the taste; Carly tells Sam that it was diet and told her to go get a sponge afterwards.
* In the episode "It Came From Outer Ed," Ed gets an idea for a scam and holds up some turf over his head while saying, "Boing! It's a lightbulb!"
* In the episode "Itchy & Scratchy: The Movie," Milhouse brags about seeing the
* In the episode "It's About Time", Cerberus looks fierce, being a three-headed
* In the episode "It's About Time", Spike tries to tickle Twilight Sparkle while she's trying not to move; she resists for a while, then sends him flying.
* In the episode "It Wasn't Me, It Was the One-Armed Hedgehog", when Knuckles is blasted by Metal Sonic, he blurts out, "My cupcakes are missing, Grandma!"
* In the episode "Jack and the Baby", while looking for the baby's parents, Jack arrives in the city with the blue creatures wearing fezzes from the intro.
* In the episode "Jackie Bags Hyde", when Jackie wants a date with Hyde:
* In the episode "Jalebi's Birthday", Jalebi uses a Google Maps parody called "Gargle Maps" to locate Vada when he asks her for help getting off of a non-working escalator in a mall.
* In the episode "Jaws Wired Shut", Bart tells Homer that he realized he had become a Class Clown when he was pressured to make a joke about the fact that their substitute teacher that day was named Mrs. Doody, and he has gone on since then, ruing that fact.
* In the episode "Jeffy’s Web", Jeff lays eggs, and as a result has only 36 hours to live.
* In the episode, "Jeffy Gets Potty Trained!", Mario is peed on when he has to change Jeffy's pants.
* In the episode "Jerome Is the New Black", Peter finds out that Lois used to date his new friend, Jerome and gets jealous. Lois says: "You're being silly! I mean, Jerome and I dated over 12 inches ago!"
* In the episode "Jetrel", Neelix sees in a dream the various people who have been killed on his home planet of Talax as various members of the
* In the episode "John Doe", John Doggett finds himself in Mexico with no memory of who he is or how he got there; while chasing a potential lead on his own identity, he makes a call on a public phone in which he identifies himself as "Detective Ladatel" after seeing a sign on the wall
* In the episode "Joker's Millions", Joker inherits a fortune and uses it to buy his freedom, then spends a montage living it up as a rich man. When asked by Penguin what his scheme is, Joker remarks that he has none; The knowledge that the Bat-family can't touch him and that it's upsetting Batman is good enough.
* In the episode "Joking Victim", Sadie tells Steven that they don't make their own donuts at Big Donut ever since
* In the episode "Journey to Babel": Ambassador Sarek was suspected of murdering the Tellarite ambassador.

* In the episode "Journey to Babel", Vulcans and Tellarites have a classic elf-dwarf relationship, with Sarek of Vulcan a rather witty Legolas and Gav the Tellarite a doomed variant of Gimli.
* In the episode "Kid-Kart Derby", Jet races against Mitchell in the annual Boxwood Terrace Kids' Soapbox Derby.
* In the episode "Kids Stuff", Wonder Girl does this to Superboy when he gets distracted by how cool GL's glasses look.
* In the episode "Kid Stuff" the kidified Justice Leaguers face off against a baby version of the demon
* In the episode "King for a Night", seven characters collide simultaneously during a
* In the episode "King of the Hill", Grandpa tries to talk Homer out of climbing the Murderhorn, telling him how, in 1928, he was nearly killed when he and his partner C.W. McAllister tried to climb it, only for McAllister to betray him, steal all the supplies, and shove him off the mountain, then continue on his own. Later, when Homer is making his own attempt and is too tired to go further, he finds McAllister's frozen body and Apocalyptic Log, detailing a very different story: Abe had been the betrayer, and had even tried to eat McAllister's arm after stealing the supplies. Presumably, McAllister shoving Abe off the mountain had been self-defense, but he could only crawl into a nearby cave where he likely died of altitude sickness after writing the last entry of the log. The last sentence was, "Tell my beloved wife that my last thoughts were of her... blinding and torturing Abe Simpson. Cheerio."
* In the episode "King Smurf", Papa Smurf, leader of the Smurfs, has to go out of town to gather spell components. He leaves Brainy in charge and, long story short, the Smurf Civil War is the end result. Papa Smurf returns to a village that's been converted into a fortified walled city complete with armed guards, a palace and Smurfs battling in the streets. "You've been behaving like human beings!" So much for any thoughts he may have had of retiring anytime soon...
* In the episode "Know it all Ed", after the Eds spent their Canadian Squirt Gun ammo, the Kankers retaliated by squirting a sticky concoction version of Crankshaft #5 at the Eds' feet, getting them stuck fast for
* In the episode Krabby Land, Mr. Krabs being forcefully fed lima beans as a result of the trouble he gave to the children, letting out a
* In the episode "Krazy Kripples," the reporter tries to liven up his story with creative metaphors ("If irony were strawberries, we'd all be drinking smoothies now, Tom.") Possibly a reference to Dan Rather.
* In the episode "Lady Bouvier's Lover", Homer is worried that Abe marrying Marge's mother would make him and Marge brother and sister, and as a result turn the kids into "...horrible freaks with pink skin, no overbites, and five fingers on each hand!" Right after Homer says this, the camera points at the kids, who instead of being drawn in the Simpsons style, are drawn "horrifically" normal.
* In the episode "Large Marge", Marge gets breast implants by mistake and discovers that every man in Springfield thinks so.
* In the episode "Last Exit to Springfield", Homer Simpson is elected Union leader and calls a strike when Burns tries to cut the Dental Plan. Homer disagrees with the cut because Lisa needs
* In the episode "Last Laugh", the main villain, Zombozo, has one of the most ironic examples of this trope: after tormenting Ben the entire episode through
* In the episode "Last Laugh", when MP's come to arrest BJ (it doesn't work):
* In the episode "Last Resort", when his hostage-taking "patient" insists his medication gets tested on one of the hostages first, House chooses the fat one in the hope his higher body mass will keep him conscious long enough for him to inject the gunman. Unfortunately, the gunman suspects a trap and doesn't let House inject him right away, which leaves enough time for the hostage to keel over.
* In the episode "Last Stand", Mac is holding some piece of equipment that he's supposedly going to use to fix up a plane so the bad guys can escape. When asked by his guard what the item is, he replies "Lateral... cranial... impact... enhancer", and smacks the guard across the head with it.

* In the episode "Laundry Day", Raven snatches the other Titans clothes to wash them; leaving them in the buff. Robin gets
* In the episode "Learning Curve" a rebellious crewman named Kenneth Dalby tells Tuvok that he joined the Maquis after his girlfriend was gang-raped and murdered by Cardassians. The Maguis were a staunch anti-Cardassian guerilla fighting force with no problem taking Cardassian lives.
* In the episode "Learning Curve", Turhan Bey played a Minbari Ranger instructor named Turval, alongside another named Durhan played by Brian McDermott, both of whose names sound like variations on "Turhan".
* In the episode "Let He who is without Sin...", in which it's casually dropped that Worf's and Jadzia's happy, consensual sexplay has been known to lead to broken ribs. Some way past
* In the episode "Let's Go To The Hop," about a drug craze running through the kids' school, in what is also a parody of
* In the episode "Let's Play Ecologists", Mr. Cat almost calls Kaeloo a "mad old cow" in anger, but switches to
* In the episode "Let's Play Tennis", Stumpy is sitting in a tennis umpire chair. It takes him several minutes until he realizes that he's very high up... and a few more seconds to remember that he has acrophobia.
* In the episode "Let's Play Treasure Hunt", Kaeloo sets up a fun game of treasure hunt for Stumpy and Quack Quack with the promise of a "surprise" at the end. Mr. Cat changes the clues to make the game so they get injured. In the end, Kaeloo gives them the "surprise" she had promised, and it turns out to be
* In the episode "License to Kill," the detectives try to get a description of a vehicle that was involved in a serious accident and most of the descriptions contradict each other. The only thing all the witnesses agree on is that the vehicle had a yellow ribbon bumper sticker, which is not useful at all because these bumper stickers are very common (and, usually being magnetic, very easily removed). In a subversion, there turns out to be a good reason for the differing descriptions:
* In the episode "Life in the Faust Lane", when Earl is about to sell his soul:
* In the episode "Life Support", Vedek Bareil is seriously wounded in an assassination attempt while concluding negotiations for a permanent peace treaty with Cardassia. Dr. Bashir keeps him alive using increasingly extreme measures while he talks
* In the episode "Like A Rock!," Master Fong sets up a circular obstacle course for the monks, tasking them to retrieve a stuffed dog at the end. Omi (and, by implication, Raimundo and Kimiko) goes through the paces of the test, dodging and weaving through all of the traps. When it's
* In the episode "Li'l Crimestoppers", when the boys play at being detectives, they are recruited by the South Park police force and tasked with taking down a meth lab by using their hands as guns and making pew-pew noises.
* In the episode "Lisa's First Word", it is revealed that Grandpa won his house in a rigged 60's game show, and he proudly says, "I ratted on everyone and got away scot-free!"
* In the episode "Lisa's Wedding", Lisa sees into the distant future her first love in the far-off year of... 2010, 15 years from the episode's 1995 airdate.
* In the episode "Lisa's Wedding", Lisa's fiancée tells Homer that they have the "pull my finger" joke in Britain.
* In the episode "Lisa's Wedding", Lisa's fiancé tries to put his proposal on a big electrical letterboard saying "Lisa, will you do me the honor of giving me your hand in the holy tradition of matrimo—", before it shorts out. He falls to "Plan B": sending out a cow wearing a sign that says just: "Marry Me."
* In the episode "Lisa's Wedding", which takes place fifteen years into the future, this quote from Marge shows what type of content will be acceptable to show on broadcast TV, and doubles as
* In the episode "Lisa the Vegetarian", after an actual roast pig is already flying through the air

* In the episode "Little Bear's Sweet Tooth" the second game of the Harvest Day picnic is Musical Chairs. Little Bear is the first one out and goes to the dessert table to have another cookie while having a brief conversation with Emily's Granny before she is called to resume the music. Later, Tutu, Emily's dog, is announced as the winner.
* In the episode 'Log Date 7 15 2' Peridot repeatedly rewinds to the section of her log where she
* In the episode "Los Dos Mojos", when Bubbles (who, thanks to amnesia, thinks she's Mojo Jojo) rants that she is the real Mojo Jojo, the
* In the episode "Love at First Height", Timmy, after wishing himself for a 16 year old body to go to all of the rides at Adrenaland, and for Vicky to have a crush for him, settles for a ride at the Tunnel of Love to unwish the wish.
* In the episode "Love Spanked," Rocko goes on dates with a rabbit that has an
* In the episode "Luck of the Fryish", Fry falls headfirst into a garbage can after electrocuting himself on some power lines. A fast-food clerk then comments "That is one unlucky guy!" as he dumps his bucketful of waste into the same can.
* In the episode "Lullaby of the Lost", there's a character named Okuru. To Western viewers, he seems to embody a lot of tropes that apply to American Indians. This is because he's supposed to be one of the Ainu, the native peoples of Japan. However, Japanese broadcast code is
* In the episode "Mac Bangs Dennis' Mom" Danny DeVito's daughter Lucy plays the waitress Frank lusts after in the restaurant (as his date talks about how wonderful it is to have children), as well as the young woman who compliments "DB" in "The Gang Finds a Dumpster Baby".
* In the episode "Machines Désirantes", this trope comes up as a subject of conversation among the Tachikomas themselves. One of them theorizes that, as advances in cybernetics technology blur the lines between humans and machines, humans are becoming nervous about any robots that seem too human. Thus, any robots which require a human-like appearance (in order to interact with human environments) are given less advanced AIs so they're not perceived a threat, while more advanced AIs are confined to obviously non-human bodies.
* In the episode "Macrocosm" we have viruses(!) which can grow in size — up to a meter, fly, and hover in the air. It turns out that they somehow could do it by taking an alien growth
* In the episode "Magic Bus", to Hyde's horror, the gang learns that Jackie (his girlfriend) calls him "Puddin' Pop".
* In the episode "Making the Girl", Castle runs into a model who knows him from somewhere, but who he doesn't remember. She gives him her phone number anyways, much to Beckett's chagrin.
* In the episode "Malice in Wonderland", Ash and his party get trapped in a dream-world, where Ash is able to defeat the champion Cynthia and owns every single badge in the world, Dawn is a undefeatable Coordinator, who has no problems taking on her own Mom and owns more Ribbons than one can count, and finally, Brock is surrounded by an army of Joys and Jennys, who all want to marry him. The cause is a Ghost-type Pokemon, Mismagius, who wants them to play with it...
* In the episode "Malice in Wonderland" Mismagius shows off Master of Illusion powers by hypnotizing all the main characters (except, inexplicably, Brock's Croagunk).
* In the episode "Malleus Mallificarum," Ruby saves Dean from coughing up a lung (it's a long story) with a disgusting cure. While it's witchcraft, he seems to think "it tastes like ass".
* In the episode "Mama's Girl", TJ and the others attempt to do this to Principal Prickly with a sign that read "Call Me Daddy", as one of their attempts to help Spinelli get over her embarrassment of accidentally calling Ms. Grotke 'mama'.
* In the episode "Man Of The People", Deanna Troi starts to age rapidly, and grow violently paranoid, when she's unknowingly used by a villain as a psychic receptacle of negative emotion. When the effect is
* In the episode "Marabounta", Jeremie tried to create a virus that would destroy XANA's monsters, using

* In the episode "Margaritaville", Kyle uses a credit card with no spending limit to pay off the town's debts. This task turned out to be so exhausting that when he collapsed, everyone begins to fear that he had died.
* In the episode "Marge Simpson in: "Screaming Yellow Honkers"", Chief Wiggum orders policeman Eddie to dress as a bear to be hit with clubs by Marge Simpson and other people who suffer of road rage, in order to get all of the rage out of their system.
* In the episode, "Mario the Babysitter!", Mario babysits a kid named Jeffy who continuously frustrates him to the point of being
* In the episode "Mars University" the super intelligent monkey Guenter is hanging from a fraying rope and about to fall to his doom, but is considering letting himself fall because he has no place in either monkey or human society. He appears to change his mind, cheerfully saying "On the other hand-"
* In the episode "Mart of Darkness", where several characters find themselves in a Sam's Club-style superstore one weekend afternoon, Daria and Jane find the uber-
* In the episode "Maud Pie", Pinkie's eponymous sister spends most of the episode as a drab, monotone
* In the episode "Maud Pie", the titular character is pretty much this in stark contrast to her sister,
* In the episode "Maurice Was Caught", little orphan Annie is given Mars for her sweet sixteen party, and upon visiting it, trips and loses her spacesuit helmet. Cue
* In the episode "Maximum Hugh", during a parent/child competition, Jimmy uses technology to augment
* In the episode "Mayhem on a Cross", members of various metal groups refuse to give either their birth name or another members birth name.
* In the episode "May I Come In?", the gang deals with a vampire called Hierophant, who is beholden to the old ways, which includes needing an invitation. Peppermint Butler knows this and taunts him from the door. Later, Jake turns into a house for the others to hide in, and again Hierophant can't go in.
* In the episode "May the Best Pet Win!", Rainbow Dash holds a race through Ghastly Gorge because she wants a fast pet that can keep up with her, and she claims that the pet that crosses the finish line with her wins.
* In the episode "Med School", JD gets a negative review from a student after spending an entire class period explaining why he is the best teacher around. JD then spends the episode trying to figure out who that was, only to find out that it was Dr. Cox himself. Also happens when he checks his ratings on the RateMyDoc website, after being rated #1.
* In the episode "Menage a Troi", Lwaxana Troi wants to spend time with Picard. Picard, preferring to be light years away, explains that he needs to show the VIP with him the door mechanism on the aft turbolift.
* In the episode mentioned above, Marge's necklace is stolen. She is later shown to have a huge ball of identical necklaces from which she pulls another one.
* In the episode "Mermaid Man and Barnacle Boy IV", SpongeBob accidentally puts
* In the episode "Mermaid Man and Barnacle Boy", Patrick laments the seniority of the former heroes and SpongeBob replies that senior citizens are full of wisdom and experience, cut to a live-action old man smiling to the camera shouting: "Yes, experience!", while giving a thumbs up.
* In the episode "Message Received", Peridot gets into a heated argument with
* In the episode "Message Received", Steven compliments Peridot by saying his initial assessment was right.
* In the episode "Message Received", Yellow Diamond does this as Peridot continues to disobey and interrupt her.
* In the episode "Messages from Earth", Marcus Cole is beginning a fairly standard status report but when he notices that Ivanova is
* In the episode "Midnight Towboy", when Homer is imprisoned in a basement of a tow truck driver, Maggie saves him by riding on Santa's Little Helper to the place, and attaching the guy's towhook to the cellar window bars.
* In the episode "Mike and Gloria Split", they argue in one episode whether it's a better idea to tuck both sides of a sheet into the bed and slide in through the top, or fold over a corner and lay down through the untucked side.

* In the episode "Minefield" in which a Romulan mine attaches itself (and Reed) to the Enterprise, Reed becomes convinced that the bomb can't be disarmed in time so he detaches his air supply hose. However, Archer simply shares his air supply, tells him to knock off his attitude and keep walking him through disarming the bomb.
* In the episode "Mirror, Mirror, On the Ed" where they pretend to be each other, Eddy attempts to mimic Edd in this manner,
* In the episode "Missing Identity", SpongeBob tells some fish in a diner the story of how he lost his identity (to be exact, his name tag,
* In the episode "Miss Mystic Falls", 150+-year-old vampire Damon Salvatore steps in to dance with his brother's human girlfriend, Elena Gilbert when Stefan fails to show up. You can see in his eyes that this is the moment he realizes he loves her, and she appears somewhat affected as well.
* In the episode "Misty Mountain Hop", Donna eats Eric's last Twinkie during the ride up to Jackie's cabin, igniting a fight.
* In the episode "Mom and Pop Art", Homer attempts to start assembling a barbecue pit in his backyard but accidentally drops all the pieces into the cement.
* In the episode, "Momma Robotnik's Birthday" from the same series, Robotnik orders Scratch and Grounder to stop whoever's invading his fortress. Just as they run up to the front door, Momma Robotnik kicks it open, and crushes them with it.
* In the episode "Mommies Dearest", Alex pops a small piece of WOOHP brand bubble gum into her mouth as the spies are trapped inside a sauna and blows a monstrous-sized bubble. The bubble explodes, freeing the girls from the sauna but leaving them stuck for a bit in strands of popped gum.
* In the episode "Mommy Beerest", Homer and Marge go to the movies and see an advert for the movie
* In the episode "Monday Misery" this happens to Garfield, just when he was convinced that he was wrong and Monday wasn't out to get him. In "Curse of Klopman" a man who buys the cursed Klopman Diamond from Garfield has this happen to him.
* In the episode "Monster", Daria and her friend, Jane, make a documentary for class about Daria's sister Quinn. Daria dreams that she has become her fashion-obsessed sister. In the nightmare, Daria has the body and voice of Quinn and her own head, while Jane has the bodies and voices of Quinn's equally vacuous friends and her own head.
* In the episode "Moonshine River", cuckold horns are handed out at a performance of Shakespeare in the Park. When a man puts them on and his date starts kissing the man next to her, he says "It works!"
* In the episode "Mortynight Run", Rick opens a dimensional rift in the place that an alien is standing, which consequentially splits the alien in half.
* In the episode "Morty's Mind Blowers", an alien comes to Rick asking to be killed- according to his people, if he is killed by a great warrior (Rick counts) he goes to Paradise, but if he dies by accident he goes to Hell. At the last minute, he changes his mind, unsure if his religion is right-
* In the episode "Mother's Little Helper", Eric and Hyde say that girls can't play fight, because it always turns into a real one. Jackie and Donna try to prove them wrong, and end up proving them right. Hyde separates them and Eric calls him a spoilsport.
* In the episode "Motu Ke Sawaal", Motu watches a TV show where the host mentions that one's knowledge will increase if they ask questions... which is the
* In the episode "Möbius Dick," Leela forces a monument to be recarved when she notices its engraving spells "and
* In the episode 'Mouse And His Motorcycle', we actually do see Limburger with his gloves off, indicating that Plutarkians actually do have fingers - albeit webbed, clawed ones at that.
* In the episode "Mr. Dingle the Strong", comical Martians give the milquetoast title character
* In the episode "Mr. Monk Gets Fired", Stottlemeyer admits to his wife that he realizes that having her do the documentary on him and the rest of the police force was a very big mistake, as the current case he's investigating, Monk getting fired, and the Commissioner hounding him is getting on his nerves... and then he realizes the camera's still on.

* In the episode "Mrs. Slocombe Expects", Mr. Rumbold says three terrible puns about cats when Mrs. Slocombe tells him about the possibility of her kittens being born - he says puns like a 'cat-tastrophe' and a 'pussy-bility'.
* In the episode "My Best Laid Plans", J.D.'s penis (informally known as "Mr. Peeps", and speaking in a British accent) tries to get him to sleep with Molly when his girlfriend, Kylie, won't sleep with him. Later, when Kylie is finally ready to sleep with J.D., he admits that he was hanging out with Molly instead of Kylie, which gets him dumped and incurs death threats from Mr. Peeps.
* In the episode "My Buddy's Booty", the Janitor reveals to Dr Cox that he stole the keys to J.D.'s apartment, so he can go in, switch off his alarm and move stuff around. He then pushes it beyond deniability by taking J.D.'s bed to the hospital while he's asleep, and leaving it in front of an ambulance.
* In the episode "My Cabbage", when Turk and Elliot have lost a patient's dying note to his sons, and are trying to fake it:
* In the episode "My Fair Mandy", Mandy enters a child beauty pageant in order to show up her arch-rival Mindy, and is coached that she would win if she would simply smile. With great effort, Mandy begins to smile, and
* In the episode "My Girl", one of Lex Luthor's lackeys is selling a bunch of futuristic guns that can make anything explode to a couple of crooks when Superman suddenly shows up. The crooks shoot Superman...and nothing happens. After Supes incapacitates the crooks, the lackey points the gun at him only for the latter to say "
* In the episode "My Own Private Rodeo", Hank tries to help Dale mend fences with his estranged father
* In the episode "My Peeps", while Grim is zapping Billy's eyes to try and fix them, Billy briefly sees Grim and Mandy in an
* In the episode "My Pretty Seahorse", when SpongeBob tries to get Mystery to eat his flower bookmark it cuts between the two of them repeatedly. The third time it cuts to SpongeBob, he now has a mustache.
* In the episode "My Sister, My Sitter," Lisa starts a successful babysitting business, and when Marge and Homer decide to go out one night, they leave her in charge of Bart and Maggie. Feeling humiliated at the fact that his younger sister is in charge of him, Bart decides to put Lisa through the same hell the other babysitters went through.
* In the episode "Myth or Pho", Figaro, dressed up as a monster, has been captured by a nature photographer who puts Figaro on display, like a circus attraction, while creepy circus music plays in the background.
* In the episode "Navy Blues", the audience is reminded ad nauseam of the suspects' good looks during the detectives' investigation. They deduce that she's lying about her whereabouts the day of the murder when no one can remember seeing her at any of the places she claimed to be — "and this is a woman you'd remember" — and her alibi is further sunk when various men remember seeing her with the victim at places she denied being, all because she was apparently so gorgeous that within minutes of meeting her they were fantasizing about her.
* In the episode "Nebraska", Rick, Glenn, and Hershel meet two guys in a bar. Rick kills them both in about five seconds flat when they imply they want to take the farm by force.
* In the episode "Neutopia", everyone gets their gender-defining characteristics removed and as a result, everyone starts to get along better. This includes a rather adorable scene of Leela and Amy cuddling up with Fry in a hammock.
* In the episode "Neutopia", the guys eagerly act girly and giggly when their genders get flipped by a
* In the episode "Nevermore", Cyborg and Beast Boy are sucked into Raven's magic mirror, which transports them into her mind. The weird part of this is, Raven herself is somehow able to go there. Meaning she's

* In the episode "New Kid On the Block", shortly after meeting Sam, the kids realize he can fill the empty spot on their street hockey team.
* In the episode "Nightmares", Buffy is temporarily turned into a vampire... which gives her the strength she needs to defeat the
* In the episode 'Night of the Living Homeless', the evening news is presented "...with Chris Swollenballs."
* In the episode, "No Chris Left Behind," Lois reads a heading from a very outdated school textbook (
* In the episode "No More Bunnies", Perry and Dennis the evil bunny fight with barbeque equipment.
* In the episode "No One Can Hear You", Finn gets his legs snapped backwards by a rampaging deer. His reaction before passing out?
* In the episode "No Quarter Given", a character is seen using a bottle of whisky as accelerant to set fire to his house, which has just been confiscated by the German occupiers; in the midst of splashing it around, he pauses to take a swig out of the bottle.
* In the episode "No Reason", House is shot and is placed into a drug-induced coma. When he wakes up, his debilitating limp is cured, but he soon starts experiencing short-term memory loss and hallucinations while working on a particularly bizarre and seemingly unsolvable case. The other doctors suspect he's suffering side-effects from the drug they put him on, but he becomes convinced that he's actually still comatose. He resolves to break out of his coma by killing his own patient.
* In the episode "No Show with the Casagrandes" the protagonist in the family’s "Adios, Ana, Adios" looks just like Ronnie Anne.
* In the episode "No Weenies Allowed", SpongeBob tries to prove he's tough enough to enter the Salty Spittoon by trying to open a bottle of ketchup. After a brief struggle, he gives up.
* In the episode "Now Who's The Dummy?", Bobby starts naming off rules and facts for golf during a game, and Hank asks how he knows so much about it. Bobby explains, "I've seen
* In the episode "Now You See Him", the Great Santini shoots Jesse Jerome immediately after Jerome types a letter exposing Santini as a wanted war criminal named Sgt. Stefan Mueller. Columbo catches Santini by examining the typewriter ribbon, which contained an impression of all the keys the victim had pressed.
* In the episode "Objects in Space", while (almost) everyone's asleep,
* In the episode, "O-Ed-Eleven," Eddy finds what he believes to be the map to his brother's, "Secret stash," though he, Ed and Double D can't decode the map, which is just a curved, dotted line, leading to an X (and three small circles above it. At one point, while Double D displays the map on a projector, Ed actually has a moment of clarity, and places Eddy in front of the screen, where the dotted line leads from the tip of his nose to his X-shaped ear hole, and the three circles match the three freckles on his head. Double D then places a transparent map of the cul-de-sac over Eddy's brother's map to determine the location of his treasure is at the Kanker's trailer; after unearthing a suitcase full of wishbones, Double D comes to the conclusion that the map was a gag all along.
* In the episode "Oedipal Panties", Roger has been trying to keep himself off of alcohol, only to go back to drinking when he sees
* In the episode of "Prankless", Gene, the manager of East Pines park, is a walking, talking snack vending machine.
* In the episode "Oh, Baby", Wanda asks Brent if he wants to babysit her son. Brent ducks the question by saying, "Ding ding! Oh, someone's at the pumps!" and walking out of the gas station.
* In the episode "Oh, Brother", Dexter creates an alternate universe where he has an older brother instead of an older sister. Unfortunately, "Dudey" turns out to be a bullying
* In the episode "Oil on Candace," the boys help a friend paint a giant painting on a sand dune while an instrumental version of the theme song plays. One of the tools they use are the giant helicopter-mounted paint rollers used during the "painting a continent" part of the title sequence.

* In the episode "OK at the Gunfight Corral", Hoggish Greedly hired a bunch of racist white men to attack the local "Injuns" so he could claim their land as his and sell it to Sly Sludge, but otherwise he never even commented on anybody's race or did anything remotely discriminatory.
* In the episode "Old Friends," correctly reading Lion-O as a headstrong leader,
* In the episode "Old Series, New Developer", Scott explains that he never got into the original
* In the episode "On A Clear Day I Can't See My Sister", Lisa mentions that Bart once comforted her when her pet hamster died.
* In the episode "Once More Unto the Breach", when Worf prepares a suicide mission to protect the crew of a Klingon ship from the Dominion, Kor knocks him out and does the
* In the episode "Once Upon a Time in Springfield", the actress who plays Princess Penelope is shown to have been a lifelong fan of Krusty and the two then have a romantic relationship.
* In the episode "Once Upon A Time Warp", Roy is convinced that he should pay Wade the $5 owed him by a rocket that homes in on the pilot's debtors. When the rocket disappears, Roy takes the money back, but then Orson finds his book of prehistoric monsters:
* In the episode "One Giant Leap", Eden and Mohinder find Sylar's apartment, which has the message, "Forgive me. I have sinned" written in blood. When they return with the police, everything in the room has gone.
* In the episode "One Krab's Trash", Mr. Krabs has sold a certain #1 hat to Spongebob. Then some random rich fish comes to him and explains that that hat is actually rare and famous, and he'll pay a lot for it. Mr. Krabs starts gagging and drooling. Then another fish comes and offers him more money for that hat, and Krabs then drools so much he creates a mini river out of it. To top it all off, another fish offering an even higher price rows his boat over the drool river.
* In the episode "One of a Kind", Jazz invites a representative from
* In the episode "One of the Boys", Lincoln goes to an alternate universe where he has 10 brothers instead of sisters. At first, Lincoln has a heck of a time with his brothers, but they soon fall into this trope (
* In the episode "Only A Dream", John Dee torments the heroes by trapping them in nightmares. Batman, being one of those who's managed to not fall asleep, attempts to block Dee's influence out of his brain by constantly humming "Frere Jacques". What makes it creepy is the end of the episode, when a wide-eyed Dee is humming the same song, having been trapped in a catatonic state by a power backfire.
* In the episode, "Operation: C.A.K.E.D.-T.H.R.E.E.", an army of chicks form a giant suit of knight's armor to help Numbuh One defeat the Delightful Children from Down the Lane's Giant Birthday Present Robot.
* In the episode "Operation: O.U.T.B.R.E.A.K.", Sector V is sent on a mission to decontaminate the organization's underwater research center from the much-feared
* In the episode "Oral Report", Sandy gives SpongeBob special goggles that let him see people in their underwear so he can get over his fear of speaking in public. Unfortunately, Patrick breaks them, which makes it seem as if the underwear comes to life and heckles SpongeBob.
* In the episode "Order of the Black Cats", Felix accidentally get involved with a secret cult of people wearing black cat costumes. After attempting to run away from them, Felix ends up crowned their king when it's discovered that he looks just like their giant cat statue. On his way home, Felix's crown is noticed by a king who tries to recruit Felix into a secret club of kings.
* In the episode "Out of the Past", two mooks try to throw Terry into an alligator pool, but he breaks free and throws one of them in instead. To his credit, the mook fights off the alligators with his machete and escapes.
* In the episode "Outta My Pit!", Lars orders the gang to leave their new hangout so he and his friends can takeover it. As he's challenging them, Otto tells Lars, "First, I suggest you brush your teeth". This is followed by Lars checking his breath and his friends recoling from the smell.

* In the episode "Out to Launch", it happens first to Phineas as he's training on a makeshift centrifuge (actually a merry-go-round), and later to Candace once she finds herself on board of a starting rocket (she complains that she can't hear anything because the flopping cheeks are covering her ears.)
* In the episode, "Over The Edge", Barbara Gordon decides to tell her dad that she's Batgirl. He only shushes her before she can say anything, but not so subtly hinting that he already knows,
* In the episode "Paired With a Monster: Mako, the Ice Skating Queen". A recurring gag is that Sailor Jupiter is always lovesick and always falling for guys who remind her of "the guy who broke [her] heart." At the end of the episode, it's been about five minutes since the end of her most recent relationship. Then she turns red ogling a guy who's "nose is just like the guy who broke [her] heart". All four of the others hit the dirt.
* In the episode paired with it, "The Curse of Candace", Doof's invention hits a group of marathoners, turning them into an angry mob that ends up chasing Candace (who has become convinced she's now a vampire).
* In the episode "Paladin of the Lost Hour", an old man carried a watch that was stopped at 11 o'clock with him at all times. He needed to find someone who would accept the watch before he died; otherwise the watch would start working again and
* In the episode "Pancake Madness", Sabrina becomes extremely fat from eating a ton of pancakes and gets wedged in her front door trying to get inside.
* In the episode "Papa's Wedding Day", older Papa Smurf has a romance with the young and beautiful Flowerbell the woodnymph... who turns out to be an infiltrator sent by Balthazar to capture the wisest Smurf of all.
* In the episode "Paradise," Sisko and O'Brien run across a settlement of the survivors of a damaged ship on a planet where a dampening field makes technology useless. The leader of village is a fanatic Luddite who is convinced that they can create paradise on this world, and she enforces it by giving out torturous punishments for everything from stealing a candle to trying to figure out how to thwart the dampening field (which "wastes time" that could have been used for serving the community).
* In the episode "Parasites Lost" Fry gets impaled through the midsection by a pipe after the furnace exploded. After it's removed, we get a view of the hole as the damage is repaired
* In the episode "Parasites Lost", Fry himself kills the moment. First, he runs away to get rid of the parasites, hoping to prove that Leela loves him and not just what the parasites did for him. When he came back, and Leela was rather miraculously still in the mood, he managed to tick her off by bringing an old girlfriend into the conversation. Fry would rather win her over while remaining who he is instead of letting the miracle worms keep turning him into Batman.
* In the episode "Parental Bonding", Sam (after she transformed into the Ghost Dragon) breaths her fiery breath at Danny. Although he dodges the attack, he still catches wind of her breath.
* In the episode "Parental Glideance", we find out that Rainbow Dash's favourite meal is a pasta and potato sandwich on sourdough bread. Her mother explains it as "She just loved to carbo-load."
* In the episode "Passion Patties", both Clover and Jerry and a large number of other people got hooked on a mad scientist's super-addictive, super-fattening cookies, and wound up pretty big before getting turned back to normal.
* In the episode "Pasture Bedtime", Liam goes rolling down the hill and lands in manure. He doesn't seem to mind, though.
* In the episode "Peak Performance", a Ferengi attack vessel happens upon a Federation wargames exercise. Ferengi DaiMon Bractor misinterprets the situation, believing that the
* In the episode "Peak Performance", the Enterprise was engaged in war games with the far inferior Starfleet ship USS
* In the episode "Pebbles's Birthday Party", the local caterer accidentally sends a clown to the Water Buffalo lodge party, and a troupe of chorus girls to Pebbles' 1st b-day party (who jump out of the birthday cake just before it's cut). The caterer couldn't care less about his faux pas as he was "the only caterer in town".

* In the episode "Pee Pee G's" had the girls freaked at the possibility that one of them is wetting the bed. This is subverted somewhat in that the answer is none of them: it was Mojo Jojo sneaking in during the night and pouring a bottle of water on the bed to screw with the girls' heads. However, when confronted, Mojo finds it so hilarious that he laughs until he "breaks his water bottle."
* In the episode "Perfect Girlfriend", Ship barks and growls at "Julie"
* In the episode "Permanent Retirement", Ben's grandaunt Vera's retirement community is attacked by a race of
* In the episode "Persistence of Vision" an alien tries to capture Voyager by drawing illusions from their subconscious fantasies (a
* In the episode "Petarded", Peter accidentally hits Tom Tucker and a prostitute with his car:
* In the episode "Peter's Got Woods", James Woods and Peter become good friends after Brian gets a girlfriend and they start spending a lot of time together. However, this causes James to become very obsessed with Peter to the point of acting jealous of Brian.
* In the episode "Peter's Progress", during the wedding ceremony scene, there was a running gag where Stewie would repeatedly break the fourth wall to complain about and kibitz the pop-ups. Plus, most of the promos were for fake shows
* In the episode, "Peter's Sister", it is revealed that Peter's bullying antics toward his daughter, Meg, is due to the humiliating abuse he got from his older sister.
* In the episode "Phases", you can see the stage hands pushing Giles' Citroen when he and Buffy arrive at the Bronze, because the actor, Anthony Stewart Head, couldn't master the unusual gear-changing system fitted to that kind of classic Citroen.
* In the episode "Phineas and Ferb Get Busted", Candace and Jeremy build Trojan statues of themselves in an attempt to get the boys out of the military school they're being held prisoner in. When the sergeant running the place doesn't buy it, they instead make a statue of the sergeant, The sergeant didn't bring it inside since he already had a ton of wooden statues of himself in his yard.
* In the episode "Phineas and Ferb Get Busted", the song "Little Brothers" refrain:
* In the episode "Phineas and Ferb Interrupted", Dr. Doofenschmirtz builds a Dull-and-Boring-inator. The boys are actually hit by it offscreen, before the show begins, and its effect is to make them dull and boring, and completely sap them of their usually fertile imagination.
* In the episode "Phineas and Ferb's Quantum Boogaloo", a version of Doofenshmirtz in a future
* In the episode "Pick Me Up", the serial killer Walker ties one of his victims up in a motel room and cuts off large parts of her skin until she dies.
* In the episode "Pierced", the duo destroy each other's ears with a drill in an attempt to get them pierced.
* In the episode "Pig Amock", the normally staid Cornfed, suffering from a familial genetic disease, suddenly becomes outrageously horny while giving a eulogy. This culminates in an attempt to
* In the episode "Pikachu's Goodbye", Ash is swinging on a vine, and Misty says, "Ash, look out for that tree!" Then, Ash slams into said tree.
* In the episode "Pinciotti vs. Forman" has Eric set Bob on Donna so everyone will want to stay with him. When he catches up to everyone at the end, Hyde (a guy who hates the government) says he has to register for the draft, Jackie says "Me too!", Eric says he has to count his G.I. Joes, and Donna will be in the oven.
* In the episode "Planes, Trains, and Hot Air Mobiles", after Cody stole first place in the race, the scene cuts to Alejandro cursing in the confessional.
* In the episode "Pledging Mr. Johnson," a pledge is murdered under the cover of a fraternity hazing gone wrong.
* In the episode "Pokemon Paparazzi", Team Rocket meets their defeat this time by going over a waterfall... but

* In the episode "Political Power" (season 1 episode 47), after the Gems accidentally caused a city-wide power outage, and the mayor says he needs them to fix it:
* In the episode "Pool Hopping", Garnet adopts a stray kitten that she names Cat Steven.
* In the episode "Popcorn Panic," Rico does this with popcorn kernels to (literally) shoot out the lights.
* In the episode "Pop Goes The Diesel", Duck has a rather unsettling harlequin-like grin which fans have dubbed as his "rape face". Even so, one of the pictures of the episode shows him with this same expression, but only looking directly at the viewer.
* In the episode "Powehiwehi" of Hawaii Five-0, Kono uses a fake blood trail to lure in an armed suspect
* In the episode "Powerless", Charlie Crews attends Dani Reese's AA meeting to help her catch a suspected rapist. Charlie spoke at the meeting, describing his own feelings of powerlessness as if being in a prison. Dani was the only one at the meeting who knew Charlie
* In the episode "Powerless", Niki saves Monica from a typical Hollywood Fire, but stays behind till the explosion.
* In the episode "Pranks a Lot," Patrick and SpongeBob strip naked after getting some invisible paint due to being warned that it stains clothes. They end up spraying their clothes by mistake and are seen by a tour bus. After that, they spray themselves to become invisible and scare everyone in Bikini Bottom until Mr. Krabs puts an end to their prank by washing the paint off. The episode ends with a bunch of people at the Krusty Krab laughing and pointing at SpongeBob and Patrick in their birthday suits.
* In the episode "Pranks a Lot" SpongeBob and Patrick argue over who should use the invisible spray paint for their next prank; in a fit of rage, they take turns spraying each other turning their body parts invisible. SpongeBob's first spray on Patrick leaves him with a big hole where his stomach is.
* In the episode "Pranksta Rap", Homer has trouble fitting through the cat flap.
* In the episode "Pressure", all the characters become live-action puppets when they come out of the water and step onto land.
* in the episode "Preteen Scream", Phoebe has a crush on a singer named Ronnie Matthews, falling in love with his beautiful singing voice and heartful lyrics, until she wins a contest to meet him in person and finds out he's actually a shallow jerk who didn't even write
* In the episode "Pretend Friends", Ansabone retorts "And I'm the King of Transylvania" in response to receiving a call from the President of the United States.
* In the episode "Princess Spike", a sleep-deprived Twilight Sparkle has this to say before passing out on a heap of books.
* In the episode "Princess Twilight Sparkle Part 2" Discord pops out of Twilight Sparkle's left ear, mocks her then slides back into her ear canal only to emerge from her right ear. She's not pleased.
* In the episode "Procrastination", SpongeBob writes his homework very dramatically and enthusiastically... only to be revealed that all he did was just writing a very stylized "THE".
* In the episode "Prom-ise Her Anything", Elmyra's stalking of Montana Max in an effort to get him to go to the prom with her is portrayed as sympathetic, and Max is portrayed as being in the wrong for rejecting her. Part if this may be that Max is the
* In the episode "Proper Condom Use", the parents in town vote to include Sex Ed in the school curriculum because they are too uncomfortable giving The Talk to their kids. It turned into a disaster because Mr. Mackey knew next to nothing about sex, having forgotten most of his single sexual experience in college and never having learned anything else about it, Mrs. Choksondik opted for
* In the episode "Prophecy", Neelix and a female Klingon wreck Tuvok's quarters when they were having sex together.

* In the episode "Prototype," background information tells us about two races used their robots to wage a proxy war against each other. When the two sides wanted to make peace and disable the robots, (which were programmed to fight until total destruction of the enemy) reclassified them as an enemy, wiped out their creators and continued fighting each other. Fortunately, these machines are so utterly single minded in their goals that they don't really pose a threat to anyone who doesn't get involved or provide a potential advantage... such as an engineer who could
* In the episode "Pulling Double Booty", Hayley dates her father's identical body double. Her mother Francine is understandably uncomfortable with it, making her feel sick
* In the episode "Pure Evil", Dave has been demoted to being Bill's producer while Lisa has taken his job as news director. In an attempt to be fired from his job and hopefully restored to his previous one, he lets Bill do a fake interview with President
* In the episode "Purple Party Pooper," Rarity declares, "What I do would be completely legal if no one knew about it."
* In the episode "Pusher", Mulder and Scully try numerous times to trace Modell's call, but cannot. The "countdown" aspect is even more sinister in this case, because in one instance, Modell induces a heart attack in the lead agent and hangs up seconds before the call is traced.
* In the episode "Pusher", the supernaturally persuasive Robert Patrick Modell is looking for this. He finds it in Mulder, whom he then tries to destroy (it fails). In the sequel episode, Modell's sister tries to pick up where he left off.
* In the episode "Put Your Head on My Shoulder", Amy takes Fry for a ride in her new car on Mercury. They proceed to run the fuel down by turning on all the appliances (including turning on the heater to counteract the air conditioning). The final straw is
* In the episode "Quagmire and Meg", Meg did turn eighteen, and Quagmire was trying to seduce her from the get-go. Peter and Lois' enraged reactions at finding their daughter in a love shack with Quagmire border on the out-of-character.
* In the episode, Quark falls victim to a con game and ends up owning a large amount of valueless, hollowed-out bars of 24k gold. Of course, being the
* In the episode "Queen of Hearts", Guinevere (who is only a servant girl in this version) promises to wait for Arthur to become king so that he can change the customs that keep them apart and finally let them be together.
* In the episode "Radar's Report," Father Mulcahy is attempting to calm a wounded North Korean. Radar's voiceover tells us he meant to say "peace and happiness" but was really saying "Your daughter's pregnancy brings much joy to our village."
* In the episode "Radio Daze", Donna has just said over the radio that she doesn't have a boyfriend:
* In the episode "Rape," Chief Gillespie gets a hunch that Steven Ainslee, who raped Virgil's wife Althea as the Crime of the Week, has done it before—the particulars of the crime strike him as having experience behind them. He's right: he finds circumstantial evidence that Ainslee raped at least two other women in the last two towns he worked in and uses it to convince Ainslee's wife to break the alibi she gave him.
* In the episode "Realty Bites", Marge becomes a real estate broker in an attempt to deal with yet another bout of boredom and is hired by Read Blazer Estates, with Lionel Hutz as a boss. She doesn't even make it to the end of the day before Hutz warns her that he has a policy of firing any agents that don't sell any houses within a week of being hired, leading to her deciding to not tell Ned Flanders that the dream house he rushed to purchase from her was the site of a notorious multiple murder.
* In the episode "Realty Bites", one item at a police auction is a pair of wrought-iron security gates confiscated from a drug kingpin named Johnny D. The gates are bulletproof, bombproof, and battering ram-resistant. How did Johnny D. get caught? He forgot to lock them.
* In the episode "Reckoner", the killer is a hitman hired by a judge who went nuts

* In the episode "Red Hot Catholic Love" after Father Maxi suggests that the laws be changed to allow priests to have sex with women, the Gelgameck cardinal protests, "
* In the episode "Reflections of Desire", the serial killer is abducting beautiful blondes with the apparent approval of his mother, who was a faded film noir actress obsessed with her single starring role. When the killer and his mother are finally cornered, they prepare to stride out into the arms of the waiting police like movie stars on the red carpet, under the delusion that the cops and their flashing lights are paparazzi with cameras.
* In the episode "Regeneration", the Borg obviously can't be called the Borg, since it's 200 years before the official first contact in
* In the episode "Reincarnation", during the 8-bit segment, a sadness meter appears on the top left of the screen keeping track of the Professor's deteriorating esteem.
* In the episode, "Remember Me", members of the crew keep disappearing from existence until there is only Beverly Crusher left. However, it turns out they were only disappearing from a sort of extra dimensional space where Crusher was trapped; outside of that pocket, they were never in any danger.
* In the episode "Remember Me", this happened to the entire crew of the Enterprise; only Dr. Crusher remembered the missing people. This leads to a rather odd scene in which only Picard and Crusher were left on the ship, and he insisted that it made sense that
* In the episode "Repo Man". Back when they were hunting Lilith, Sam and Dean exorcised a demon out of a man named Jeffrey. Now in season seven, women were dying in the same way the demon killed them back then, so the brothers return to town. It turns out Jeffrey and the demon were working together and had a relationship.
* In the episode "Requiem for a Slut", Fiona spitefully declares that she's
* In the episode "Responsible," a female teenage suspect tells Munch to "Shut up, you
* In the episode "Return of the Fellowship of the Ring to the Two Towers", the kids are playing like they are characters in
* In the episode "Return to the Nightosphere", Finn and Jake wake up in a cage in a pile of bananas, and this is pretty much Finn's reaction.
* In the episode right before the series finale, titled "The Big Mac Question", Big Mac and Sugar Belle proposing to each other is the focus of the episode. But one moment in the background has two fan-favorite characters doing the same thing:
* In the episode "Rightful Heir", 5'6" Kevin Conway was cast as the clone of legendary Klingon warrior Kahless. Given that Klingons are usually portrayed as big tall people, and to avoid being dwarfed by 6'2" Michael Dorn, Conway wore (very noticeable) platform boots, boosting his height to 5'11".
* In the episode, "Right Next Door", Stella's neighbor is a boy called Austin Tanner who is played by a young actor named Austin Whitlock.
* In the episode "Right to Die", a man peels ALL of his lover's skin off to provide grafts for his horrifically-burned wife.
* In the episode "Riley Wuz Here", Riley starts taking art lessons from an unnamed painter who is (allegedly) a
* In the episode "Ripped Pants", a whale claims to be "the biggest loser on the beach" because his friends buried him in the sand and forgot about him.
* In the episode "Road to the North Pole", there are two. A mall Santa who gives Stewie the brush-off when he finally gets to the front of the line because his shift is over, and the real Santa (who he goes to kill), who is worn out by the overload of Christmas commercialization and wants to be put out of his misery.
* In the episode "Road Worrier", on the way back from Alternapalooza, Jane and Jesse fall asleep in this pose. Subverted a little in that Jane is not actually asleep.
* In the episode "Robodie II", Dr. Garbanzo Bean not only invoked the trope about himself but mentioned other people who used to be called 'nutty'. First were the Wright Brothers and then Thomas Edison. The last one of them was his uncle, whom Garbanzo admits to be really mad. Dr. Garbanzo Bean then said he wasn't crazy and that he invented the telephone. Sure, he only invented it in 1987 but, how was he supposed to know someone had already invented it before?

* In the episode "Robots of Death", the eponymous robots speak with no inflection. More often than not, all the robots and computers tend to do this.
* In the episode, "Rock and a Hard Place", The Brothers Winchester become born again virgins as part of an investigation. When asked why he wanted to be a virgin again, Sam replied:
* In the episode "Rock Bottom", a fish blows into SpongeBob's Glove World balloon with his breath causing it to float up with SpongBob tied to the other end causing him to float up and allowing him to escape Rock Bottom.
* In the episode "Rollerghoster", after Ray's efforts to negotiate with ghosts holding people hostage on a haunted rollercoaster lead to him becoming a hostage himself:
* In the episode "Romeo And Smurfette", elderly Papa Smurf (along with the other Smurfs) starts having thoughts about marrying Smurfette, but she even turns her peers down by stating that she's still too young and that she loves all her fellow Smurfs equally.
* In the episode "Romeo and Smurfette," Papa Smurf has Brainy divide the village like this when Gargamel starts a dangerous Smurfette/Handy vs. Smurfette/Hefty
* In the episode "Rosemary's Baby", Jack fired Liz when she refused to fire a guest writer with edgy ideas. Also, Jack fired Pete for no apparent reason in the pilot, rehiring him at the end of the episode at Liz's insistence. Liz feared being fired when she confronted Jack about how he was taking over the writers' room in "Jack the Writer". In "The Fighting Irish", Liz fired her romantic rival and, when Pete and the accounting department objected, she responded by firing them all. Pete was obviously rehired again as was Liz's rival, who was then promoted to a branch office.
* In the episode "Rose's Room", Steven ends up trapped in his mother's room in the Gem Temple and appears to escape, but the Beach City he finds himself in is nearly deserted and increasingly odd.
* In the episode "'Round Springfield", Homer has hot dogs while watching a surgery, and later a funeral. The hot dog man admits that he's following Homer around.
* In the episode "Rule of Dumb", when Squidward makes all of Bikini Bottom realize that
* In the episode "Run Away Runway", Phineas and Ferb set up a fashion line based on their
* In the episode "Run Candace, Run", Doof's building is being foreclosed on since he spent his mortgage money on some gargoyles. Despite Charlene being able to lend him the money to cover the cost, he refuses to call and ask her, since she told him gargoyles were a stupid idea. In the end, he does ask her, and she does lend him the money after the obligatory "I told you so."
* In the episode "Running To Stand Still" Earth-2 Harrison Wells sends hundreds of bombs through a wormhole to an alternate dimension. No one seems to consider the bombs might be raining down on a bunch of their alternate selves.
* In the episode "Safe", River shows her gratitude by gathering some berries for Simon.
* In the episodes after Max is elected president, a suspiciously out of place ice cream truck becomes parked opposite Lefty's. It reads "Secret Serv Ice Cream". Max doesn't catch on to the double meaning, but Sam does.
* In the episode "Saftey Freak" (AKA "I Had an Accident"), Spongebob breaks his butt in a sand-boarding accident. The doctor tells him he's lucky and warns him that if he's not careful, he could end up "like that poor creature there, in the iron butt.". Aforementioned iron butt takes up half of the screen while shown,
* In the episode "Sailor Mouth", when everyone seems to have learnt not to swear, it seems as though Mrs. Krabs has sworn. In reality, though, it's just a car horn (since in Bikini Bottom, people swear with sound effects).
* In the episode "Sanctuary" the Mandalorian throws a thermal detonator through the viewport of a former Imperial AT-ST. However given that these are nine meters off the ground, the problem lies in knocking the bipedal walker off its feet first—their plan to do so takes up a major part of the plot.

* In the episode "Savages", Cap challenges Tony to go a day without technology, which Tony interpets as dragging the Avengers to the Savage Land. The definition of technology doesn't seem to include fire, building a shelter (which Tony even calls "engineering"), Hawkeye using a sling, or even Tony forging new armor using local materials and methods.
* In the episode "SB-129", Squidward gets trapped in the Krusty Krab freezer for a few thousand years. After he unfreezes and sees the shiny new future, he has to take a time machine to try and return to his own time.
* In the episode "Scammed Yankees", Brian accidentally sees Patty, one of Meg's lame friends (frizzy red hair, glasses and braces) undress, and finds out that she has a beautiful body.
* In the episode "Scared to Death", there was a killer who, under guise of "getting you over your phobia," trapped you in your worst fear and then waited until you scared yourself to death. The final victim was a bit more direct cause of near-death — and this was the trope to do it, too. Instead of the usual way of doing it (in a grave), he drops the victim down a shaft and then pours bags of potting soil down it. The soil eventually went over her head, leading to this.
* In the episode "Scary Godparents", Timmy's parents go out as each other for Halloween.
* In the episode "Scenes from the Class Struggle in Springfield", several TV brands are shown: Panaphonic (Panasonic), Magnetbox (Magnavox), and Sorny (Sony). It's implied they were knockoffs, however.
* In the episode "Scooby-Doo and a Mummy, Too", Shaggy did this over a stone statue of Scooby: "He was like a brother to me! (
* In the episode "Screams of Silence: The Story of Brenda Q", Quagmire kills Jeffrey Fecalman by ramming him into a tree in his car, a fate Jeff could have avoided by
* In the episode "Screwed The Pooch", Peter manages to have a friendly night out with his father-in-law Carter,
* In the episode "Secret Ceramics Room of Secrets", Louise tries to find and break into the long lost ceramics room to find a gift for her grandparents instead of making one from scratch. When they find it, the find Mr. Frond hid his darkest secret in the room. He reveals that he cheated in the election for student president when he went to Wagstaff by hiding the votes for his opponent and the room was closed in a fire before he could confess. He agrees not to punish the Belcher kids if they agree to tell no one his secret. Tina tells Mr. Frond he shouldn't hide his secret, and that if kids knew about what he did then they'd respect him more and look up to him. He immediately tells Tina it's a terrible idea because kids don't want a relatable guidance counselor and that kids listen to him because he's perfect, even after Louise doesn't ignore her epiphany. Mr. Frond's ego and inability/refusal to understand children destroyed a chance to actually improve at being a guidance counselor.
* In the episode "Secret of my Excess", the Wonderbolts do this to an out-of-control Spike.
* In the episode "Secret Safe" Cat uses a bucket in the secret room as a makeshift toilet.
* In the episode "Secret Weapons", Jazz hacks into Vlad's laptop to discover what his evil plan is, only for images of her mother, who Vlad still lusts for, to show up.
* In the episode "Seek", Dex the military dog starts growling the moment he realizes he's in the presence of the man who murdered his handler in the opening sequence.
* In the episode "Self-Discipline," Annie and Zach were walking on mud while they enter Plato's Peak.
* In the episode "Sense and Insensibility", Eda and her sister Lilith are competing to retrieve the
* In the episodes explaining how so many Klingons in Kirk's time had no cranial ridges and looked like humans with slightly more facial hair, the doctor whose experiments

* In the episode "Shadow", Glory comments on the writing of a magic spell she's performing: "Dark incantations. Always overwritten."
* In the episode "Shalom", the female assassin gets her male partner (whom she is about to double-cross) to help her put on her necklace. Little does he know that while her back is turned, she is readying her gun. "Careful... it's delicate..." are the last words he ever hears.
* In the episode, "Sheen's Brain", gives Sheen a brain gain helmet in order to boost his IQ. It backfires when it not only causes his brain to keep growing until it would eventually explode, he also develops psychic powers and a god complex.
* In the episode, she fully admits it's why she and her husband moved to South Park, not wanting Kyle to grow up there.
* In the episode "Shelf Life" Mr. Crocker makes the class do a 500 page book report over the summer. Elmer says it sounds like fun which nobody takes kindly to, not even Sanjay!
* In the episode "Shuttlepod One", Trip Tucker and Malcolm Reed find debris of what they wrongly assume to be the crashed starship
* In the episode "Sideshow Bob's Last Gleaming", two fighter jets are scrambled to intercept Sideshow Bob's escape in the Wright brothers' plane. It does not go well, as the pilot comments Yeagerly: "Bogey's airspeed not sufficient for intercept. Suggest we get out and walk."
* In the episode "Sitting Pretty Awful", Timon and Pumbaa babysit a set of human triplets. It starts out with the usual hijinks, such as Timon getting hit on the head by a bowling ball and throwing a lit match into a pile of dynamite while trying to keep the triplets safe, but towards the end of the episode, Timon injures himself in various ways on purpose to get them to laugh.
* In the episode "Skin Deep," the team treats a 15-year-old model. The repeatedly stated assumption is that she's so beautiful that no man could
* In the episode "Sleeping Giant", after Tails is swatted out of the sky by the rock giant, Knuckles
* In the episode "Slightly Dinghy", Waffles the cat accidentally inflates himself with a spray can of cheez whiz, and later Max inflates a small fish (which will grow sick of the constant mistreatments and seek revenge on the protagonists) with an air hose to trick Pete into thinking that he may catch a large fish, in order to have him not move his boat because it's right above a sunken treasure Max wants to retrieve.
* In the episode, "Slimy Dancing", Squidward fails the audition for the Bikini Bottom dance contest, and thus goes in disguise by going inside SpongeBob and having his arms and legs stick out of him. Squidward has a cramp during his dance, but actually does manage to win, until SpongeBob blows his cover and it is revealed that the contest states that all dancers are not allowed to be assisted by a partner. It is also revealed that every other dancer in the contest is assisted by a partner, except for Patrick, who also has a cramp during his dance, thus Patrick wins the contest by default.
* In the episode "Slow Pitch", Hank is worried that Lacey won't make it to the baseball game on time. After consoling him, Brent adds, "I'm not worried. Now if you'll excuse me, I have to make an unrelated phone call."
* In the episode "Slumber Party Panic", Finn is trying to help keep the horde of zombies approaching the party at the Candy Kingdom a secret. When Jake gets suspicious, Finn distracts him by getting Jake and Lady Rainicorn to play "seven minutes in heaven".
* In the episode "Snooze You Lose," after SpongeBob and Patrick (inside of the currently deep-sleeping Squidward's body.) accidentally bump into a random fish lady, she hits the ground and explodes.
* In the episodes of the show prior to "Bowser Junior's House Fire!", Junior slept in a pink bedroom with a
* In the episode, "Some Assembly Required", the Read Family orders a new playground for D.W. to play in. While David and Jane assemble the playground, D.W.

goes on an imaginary adventure with Emily and Bud, pretending the box it was shipped in is a rocket ship.
* In the episode "Someone to Watch Over Lily", Claire worries that her son Luke (who is worryingly like Phil) is incapable of functioning on his own. Phil tells her not to worry because Luke will find a girl like Claire to balance him out, basically invoking this trope.
* In the episode "Something Blue", Xander and Anya are attacked by a demon that can only be killed by drowning. They force his head into an inexplicably filled sink, creating smoke and killing it.
* In the episode "Something to Sneeze At," King Dedede attempts to get himself sick by getting cold. One of these attempts is having the Waddle Dees open some doors to reveal Dedede frozen in a block of ice that falls over. However, this fails to get him sick, and by the time the ice breaks:
* In the episode "Something Zombozo Comes That Way", Zombozo creates a special virus called the Airborn Clown Virus and injects into pairs of fake clown teeth. Using
* In the episode "Soos and the Real Girl", Soos buys a dating game where the love interest, Giffany, is an adorable Japanese school-girl... who becomes
* In the episode "Soul Mates", Minbari Ambassador Delenn reacts with some confusion at the concept of human bathing
* In the episode "Sozin's Comet, Part 1", when Team Avatar learns about
* In the episode "Space Rockers", Buck and the musical group Andromeda are locked in a room containing a musical device that with some minor modification is capable of sonically breaking a door lock.
* In the episode "Special Delivery" the pit full of dead letters that Tommy almost falls in has the skeleton of a postal worker in it.
* In the episode "Spectre of the Gun", aliens put Kirk and company into a simulation of the gunfight at the O.K. Corral. They, and the audience, still see each other normally in their Starfleet uniforms, but the other people in the simulated town react to them as though they were Ike Clanton and company.
* In the episode "Spellbound", she acted very sweet and girlish towards Malchior; however, by the end
* In the episode "Spice Up Your Life", Rarity and Pinkie Pie try to help a failing ethnic restaurant, the Tasty Treat, impress Zesty Gourmand, a super-snooty food critic with very particular tastes in food (in short, she thinks that if it has
* In the episode "Spider's Little Daddy" at the beginning when Jeff the spider greets Billy whom he thinks is his dad, we then see from Billy's point of view, it shows
* In the episode, "Splishing and Splashing", Lucky, Rolly and Cadpig do this as a
* In the episode "Split Personality", Doofenshmirtz tries to get over his childhood fear of the high dive:
* In the episode "Sploosh", Brittany's character at one point asks Jeanette (as the mermaid), "Are mermen sexier than human men?"
* In the episode "Spot Returns", this trope is demonstrated by Karen, of all people. She's so happy to see Spot's new puppies that she experiences an overload and spends most of the episode undergoing a system reboot. Once she's back online, she's quite pleased to see even more amoeba puppies.
* In the episode "Squilliam Returns". Squidward gives SpongeBob a book about
* In the episode "Squilliam Returns", while Squidward tries to stand up to
* In the episode "Squirrel Jokes", SpongeBob does this when his jokes are falling flat in front of the audience.
* In the episodes "Sue Ellen Gets Her Goose Cooked" and "Best of the Nest", Jane and David Read do not appear.
* In the episode "Stall Monitor", Lincoln is stalling so his parents will be late for the parent-teacher conference. First he comes out of his room with no pants, then with no shirt, then he puts his pants on his head.
* In the episode "Stan-Dan Deliver" after Steve gets Roger fired from his teaching job by setting him up to look like an alcoholic, one of the students, Ricky, decides to run away. In the two seconds he was gone he somehow managed to join a gang and was killed in a gang fight.

* In the episode "Stan Knows Best", the family is playing Scrabble. Roger the alien tries to play "quivecs".
* In the episode "Stannie Get Your Gun", Stan (paralyzed by a gun accident) took the bullet for Hayley when a fired gun mascot aimed a sniper at her upon singing an anti-gun song. The bullet helped cured his paralysis when it dislodged first bullet that hit him before.
* In the episode "Stark Raving Dad", Lisa also mentions having a pet hamster named Snuffy who died, though no other reference has been made to him since.
* In the episode "Stealing From the Elderly," Adam demands to know why she came into his life and ruined everything. Blake points out that he
* In the episode "Stewie Loves Lois", Peter feels sexually violated after his prostate exam and Brian tries to console him by turning on the TV, but every channel is about fingers and fingering.
* In the episode "Still", a crazy guy sets a booby-trap for someone in his apartment, which Beckett accidentally steps on, and then proceeds to commit suicide in his cell. The bomb defusal team discovers the trap is basically immune to being defused, and also has a timer that will trigger about half an hour from then - the only way to stop the explosion is to guess the 5-digit number to the guy's detonation switch. Which of course they do, with like
* In the episode "Sting Operation," the penguins use one of Kowalski's inventions to make themselves stupid so that they can't feel the hornets' stings.
* In the episode "Stormy Weather 2", Hawk Moth briefly considers that he's taking too many risks with his actions, such as
* In the episode "Strike Out", after Doug and Deacon find out that their union met their demands and the strike is ending, they tell Arthur, who then accuses their union of selling them out. Deacon tells Arthur that they got an 8% pay increase. Arthur then replies with this:
* In the episode "Stuck In the Wringer", upon getting trapped in his wringer, SpongeBob feels he'll never be able to do anything anymore. Patrick (whose stupidity is the reason he's stuck in it) gives a speech saying he can go on despite the adversity. Subverted in the fact that SpongBob's life really
* In the episode "Stuck On Smurfs", Gargamel casts a spell that causes the Smurfs to get stuck to each other, which Papa Smurf uses to his advantage by having the stuck Smurfs stick on Gargamel, forcing him to come up with a counter-spell that frees him and all the other Smurfs. They then trap Gargamel in an actual glue trap.
* In the episode "Stuff", Lily takes part in a long, dull play and everyone tells her it was wonderful while Barney is the only one to be completely honest and tell her it sucked. Because he believes friends should be honest with each other.
* In the episode "Suds", SpongeBob dreams of eating Krabby Patties and wakes up chewing on his pillow. This encourages him to make himself a seanut butter and jellyfish jelly sandwich.
* In the episode "Sun Scream", two criminals are disgusted by the girls' sunburnt skin peeling and beg to be taken to jail. However, the girls decide to leave them stranded on an island with only a tube of sunscreen instead. The criminals get sunburned as a result of not using the sunscreen, claiming it's only for nerds.
* In the episode "Suspended" Harold tries to spend part of his first day at home by watching cartoons, scary movies, and "those dumb talk shows", but as soon as he turns on the TV a cartoon is interrupted by news coverage of the World Economic Conference from Kyoto Japan. Much to his horror, he finds it playing on every channel.
* In the episode "Swap Meat", the main plotline is that Sam is forced via magic to switch bodies with a seventeen-year-old boy.
* In the episode "Sweet Seymour Skinner's Baadasssss Song", Bart is watching a video of embarrassing things that have happened to the family in years gone past. Bart says that he wants to take it to school but Marge tells him that he wouldn't find it funny if people laughed at him. Bart says that would never happen... until he sees his younger self on the toilet.
* In the episodes where Belinda and the Doctor visit the planet Devlin fifty years in the relative future, the

* In the episode "Swine Song", Kermit remarks that he's got butterflies in his stomach... because
* In the episode "S'Winter", Candace ends up falling in ice cold water and is fished out encased in a block of ice. When she overhears Jeremy complimenting Dee Dee's skiing skills, she gets so angry that she heats up and melts the ice block she's trapped in.
* In the episode "Tacking into the Wind", Worf quotes, "Great men do not seek power; they have power thrust upon them." - which sounds like a reference to
* In the episode "Take Me out of the Ball Game," Hank coaches the company softball team and has problems dealing with putting his wife in the team who is an ace pitcher.
* In the episode "Taking Charge", Anne introduces the Plantars to the show "Suspicion Island", a soap opera cross between
* In the episode "Tall Tales", after Sam, Dean, and Bobby leave, the body of the Trickster they'd just staked through the stomach disappears. Turns out it was only an illusion the real Trickster created. He comes back in "Mystery Spot".
* In the episode "Tall Tales" in which the Trickster forges LOTS of strange happenings in a college town, one of them involves a guy who's been abducted by "aliens." The victim's experience involved
* In the episode "Tangent", Jack O'Neill and Teal'c have to do this to themselves (ie. leave their ship without suits) in order to be evacuated to another ship with a Ring Transporter. They
* In the episode "Tangent" Teal'c and Jack are trapped in a modified death glider on a ballistic course out of the solar system. After Sam, Daniel, and Jacob Carter get there and beam them off, the SGC control room erupts in cheers upon receiving their radio message.
* In the episode "Tapestry", Captain Picard expresses regret for his hot-headed ways which led to him getting stabbed in a bar fight. Of course, he learns that if not for that bar fight, he wouldn't have become
* In the episode "Tapestry", Picard dies and to his horror is greeted by Q in the afterlife. After admitting that he regrets a lot of his brash actions as a young man, Q sends him back to the incident that gave Picard his artificial heart so he can change things.
* In the episode "Tapestry", Picard is in a coma and sees Q, who claims to be God and takes him back in time to see what life would be like if he'd never gotten into a fight with a Nausicaan as a twentysomething and gotten his heart replaced with an artificial one. When Picard dislikes this new life, Q claims to have undone it, and that's when Picard wakes up. While the part about Q being God is unlikely, since he's been reprimanded by other members of the Q continuum and his antics suggest that the world would be more unpredictable if Q was God, what's ambiguous is whether
* In the episode "Teenage Mutant Leela's Hurdles", Prof. Farnsworth has
* In the episode "Telethon", to prevent Mark from proposing to Ann knowing she would say no, Leslie pulls down her pants mooning the camera on live television.
* In the episode "Texas City Twister", when a tornado strikes the trailer park the Hills are at and Hank fails to make it to the shelter, he grabs onto a nearby pole the force of the tornado shreds Hank's clothes bit by bit until he's left in his underwear which eventually blows off too, he covers himself with a cactus so Luanne won't have to see his private parts.
* In the episode "That Darn Kid", Klinger bought a goat, with the intention of making money by selling the goat's milk. During an OR session, the goat chewed through the rope it was tied to and ate the payroll money, for which Hawkeye (as that month's paymaster) was responsible. An investigator comes to look into the problem and refuses to believe their story - until he goes back to his tent to find the goat eating a report he was working on.
* In the episode that focused on ants, one character settles down to watch TV with his pet ant Marcus.
* In the episode that introduced Cheese, Frankie tells Mac that she found him eating soap;

* In the episode that introduces Lizzie, Numbuhs 2 and 4 chant "Nigie and Lizzie sitting in a tree" in full, with Numbuh 1 trying to deny this, much to the anger of Lizzie.
* In the episode "That Text Was Not Meant for Josh!", when Paula starts telling her husband about Rebecca, they quote the
* In the episode "The 37s", Captain Janeway attempts to prove that they're from the future by showing off Kes's strange ears. This is slightly subverted when one of the "37s" says "I've seen people do all kinds of things to their bodies", but that doesn't alter the fact that Janeway somehow expected it to work.
* In the episode, "The Acme Bowl", the show did do a football game which does come down to the final play. Again, Acme Looniversity faced off against Perfecto Prep.
* In the episode "The Adhesive Duck Deficiency", it's revealed that Penny has a Chinese character tattooed on her butt. It's supposed to mean "courage", but according to Sheldon, it actually means "soup". It should be noted that Sheldon's track record with Chinese is
* In the episode 'The Alien Invasion of Griffon Rock', the bots mention their favorite film genres: Heatwave likes war movies, Blades likes comedies, Boulder likes Romance, and Chase likes action flicks with chase scenes. Averted with the historical film they see.
* In the episode "The Apple," there are highly-unstable rocks. Spock threw one to the ground, it blew up. A
* In the episode "The Apprenticeship" they mention that prison is called "Crime U," because it gives criminals connections to make them better criminals. In this particular case, one man taught another his MO and presumably how he got away with his crimes or what he learned about hiding them by getting caught.
* In the episode "The Bands Break Up", Kimber and Stormer both quit their bands to become a music duo together. They have a
* In the episode "The Beast Below" the Doctor is holding Amy out of the TARDIS by her ankle, looks up her nightdress and laughs. Cue Amy giving him a look.
* In the episode "The Best Christmas Story Ever", Stan buys Roger a "Best of Disco" cassette. Stan has it on him when he goes back in time to 1970, but unknowingly drops it. However, Roger (who was on Earth in 1970, working at a restaurant) winds up finding it, opens a music studio, and uses the cassette
* In the episode "The Best Night Ever," Fluttershy tries to get the woodland creatures around the gala to come to her in a
* In the episode, "The Big Bash", Cupid gives us this little gem just before being attacked by the episode's cast because the wild goose chase they just sent them on was merely a quest to serve him breakfast:
* In the episode, "The Big Problem", Timmy says that one advantage of being an adult is not needing a babysitter. In his
* In the episode "The Blame," Gumball impersonates his mother by wearing her outfits and drawing eyelashes on his face. He doesn't account for when he closes his eyes and the lashes don't match, though.
* In the Episode "The Book of Dougs", Tahani struggles to mend Jason and Janet's relationship while Michael tries to figure out why
* In the episode "The Boy Who Knew Too Much", Bart crosses then tears down a rope bridge while playing hookie, in a futile attempt to evade Principal Skinner.
* In the episode "The Broca Divide", Daniel is trying to argue to General Hammond that they should spend more time on their latest contacted planet, even though there's nothing to be gained militarily. Having clearly lost several rounds of this argument already, he's so determined to make his case that it takes him a minute to realize that this time the General is saying yes.
* In the episode "The Burden Hardest to Bear" Rodimus Prime (after being turned back into Hot Rod) having felt overwhelmed by the burdens of leadership for some time. Hot Rod at first doesn't try to get the stolen Matrix of Leadership back from the Decepticons, until he has a change of heart when he sees people in need of help.
* In the episode "The Burns and the Bees", Mr. Burns and some other billionaires were reunited for a card game and Burns added Smithers into the pot. Rich Texan said that, since they were betting people, he'd add his basketball team. Despite thinking they're

* In the episode "The Butter Shave", the same NBC executives who had previously offered Jerry a pilot now offered bad comedian Kenny Banya a chance at his own pilot since he does jokes the viewers don't have to think about too much.
* In the episode "The Butts Family", all the females of the buffalo tribe were kidnapped, leaving the males of the tribe to bear the children. The results aren't pretty.
* In the episode The Changeling, a mind meld with the titular probe goes wrong, sending Spock into this mode (fortunately, only temporary).
* In the episode "The Changeling", the intelligent space probe Nomad has green flashing lights all the time, as well as yellow and red lights when it speaks.
* In the episode "The Cloud Minders", the world of Ardana seems to be headed this way. The Troglodites are still recognizably the same species as the inhabitants of Stratos, but constant exposure to Zenite gas is gradually destroying their higher mental functions.
* In the episode "The Conscience of the King," Kirk is revealed to have survived a massacre as a teenager. This element isn't especially prominent in the episode itself, but several lines ultimately cut from the final script would have made it very clear that Kirk suffered from this (as does the
* In the episode "The Coronation", after Prince Wu's meltdown, Mako tells him that while Kuvira may be a tyrant, Wu might not be that good of a ruler either. The prince actually agrees, saying that no one had ever talked to him like that before.
* In the episode "The Cutie Mark Chronicles", Twilight Sparkle does this during her flashback when Princess Celestia offers to personally tutor her in magic, excitedly shouting "Yesyesyesyes!" over and over again as she jumps for joy. After the cut back to present day, we see Twilight has apparently gotten a little too caught up in her story and is doing this in front of the Cutie Mark Crusaders.
* In the episode "the Cutie Mark Chronicles", Twilight Sparkle was shown to be one, after
* In the episode "The Day of the Doctor", a sentient weapon called The Moment has an interface that manifests as someone from the user's life. But due to this being Time Lord technology, the person can be from the user's past, present or future. In the case of the War Doctor, it chooses to look like his future companion Rose Tyler.
* In the episode "The Day the Violence Died", when the original creator of Itchy successfully sues the animation company for copyright infringement, the studio gets its money back when they sue the post office for using the character of Mr. Zip, which they claim is a rip-off of one of their founder's stick-figure mailman character.
* In the episode "The Deadly Maze", there is a brief instance of a dancing CGI...
* In the episode "The Dealership", Elaine criticizes Puddy (her boyfriend) for constantly giving the high-five to people:
* In the episode "The Death Camp of Tolerance", Mr. Garrison attempts to get fired by acting in a grotesquely
* In the episode "The Debarted" Bart turns on the light in a photo developing dark room ruining pictures of things like a
* In the episode "The Deepening", Teddy has an unhealthy amount of hate towards a shark prop from a movie he worked on because the shark operator made it bump into him as he was trying to hit on an extra, getting her messy and rejecting him, causing a lifetime of eating. It's only after all these years does someone, in this case Bob, ask
* In the episode "The Deep South", there's a gag where Bender casts a fishing line and Fry cries "Ow, my
* In the episode "The Devil's Platform", a police officer fires 6 shots at Robert Palmer while he's in dog form. The bullets have no effect at all.
* In the episode "The Documentary", a mortuary worker 'borrows' corpses, dresses them up and has dinner parties with them because he's so lonely. It's not made clear whether he has sex with them, however.

* In the episode "The Doll", he hugs a little girl, forgetting that he tucked his water bottle in his pants.
* In the episode "The Duh Vinci Code", it turns out Leonard Da Vinci is an alien from a planet on which, by their hyper-intelligent standards, he's considered an idiot.
* In the episode "The End", a guard in the prison where the Conspiracy's failed hired assassin is held (pending questioning) hands the prisoner a threatening note ("You're a dead man") written on the cut-out side of a Morley cigarette carton—indicating that it was a message from the Cigarette-Smoking Man. A second time, the prisoner receives another cut-out carton side, which has nothing written on it, right before the guard shoots him.
* In the episode "The End of the World", the Mox of Balhoon greets the Doctor and Rose by spitting in their faces.
* In the episode "The Entertainer", Manny turns out to be a excellent pianist. Bernard and Fran convince him to crawl inside the piano and operate the hammers so that they can pretend to be able to play in order to impress different people. He's even able to convincingly simulate a duet between the two. That last task takes too much out of him and he crawls out of the piano to lie down. The lie falls apart when Bernard and Fran decide to ramp it up a notch, thinking Manny is still there.
* In the episode "The Entity", Kyle's cousin Kyle Schwartz — who is a walking touchstone of virtually every Jewish stereotype — comes for a visit. Towards the end of the episode, Kyle catches himself criticizing his cousin's personality and exclaims "Oh my god! I'm a self-hating Jew!"
* In the episode "The Family Cruise", the perky cruise attendant is shocked when she sees Elise and her mother have destroyed the captain's deck and Dan has ripped out the helm, then loses it when he tells her it will be fine. She proceeds to threaten Dan, Chris, and Elise and her parents with the nose of a swordfish decoration, then lock them in the brig to leave them to die as the ship sails into a wormhole.
* In the episode "The Family That Slays Together, Stays Together (Part 1)", the maritime-themed villain Go-Fish tries to kill Brock Samson by chumming the water to attract sharks.
* In the episode "The Farnsworth Parabox", Fry and Bender need to move through the Planet Express office undetected. Bender rips the hatch off a superheated steam pipe, above which is a sign that reads, "No Crawling Around". They climb in and, well...
* In the episode "The Farnsworth Parabox," there was also Leela and her alternate self failing to solve a problem with "perfectly symmetrical violence"—simultaneous flying kicks to each other's faces.
* In the episode "The Focus Group", Niles actually intentionally attempts to instigate one of these between him and Daphne after they got into their first argument and he...enjoyed it so much. This, mind you, is before they got together, so it fails pretty miserably. Daphne's just too polite to take the bait and only argued with him in the first place because
* In the episode "The Former Life of Brian," Dylan, Brian's human son
* In the episode "The Front", Bart and Lisa co-write a fan script for an
* In the episode "The Gamesters of Triskelion", Kirk's assigned gladiatorial trainer has lived her whole life as a slave and is ignorant of normal culture. She asks him, "What is love?" Kirk proceeds to
* In the episode "The Greater Good", Xena is incapacitated and Gabrielle has to take her place. She pulls on Xena's armour in the same way Xena does in the opening titles, complete with title music.
* In the episode "The Great Snail Race", as Spongebob is training Gary to participate in the race, at one point (after Spongebob lampshades
* In the episode "The Great Snail Race", SpongeBob puts Gary through
* In the episode "The Green-Eyed Monster", Zidgel laughs at his "Nice to meet ewe" pun and explains it.
* In the episode "The Hard Part", Hiro describes his future self in terms of this trope:

* In the episode "The Harum Scarum Sanitarium", the music accompanies the ghost of a mad doctor.
* In the episode "The Heiress in the Hill," one kidnapper chops off his hostage's toe with pet-grade nail clippers, and the resulting wound gets infected. The other kidnapper genuinely wanted to save the hostage's life, and gave her penicillin to fight the infection. Unfortunately, she was highly allergic and died.
* In the episode "The Hero," this is the entire conversation in the canteen as the staff discuss Captain Peacock's
* In the episode "The Honking", Bender is run over by a "were-car" while staying at a mansion he inherited from his uncle. When people back in New New York are getting run over, Bender believes the were-car followed him, until it turns out Bender became a were-car himself.
* In the episode "The Honking", Leela plans to kill the were-car by shoving a silver potato in its tailpipe. Unfortunately, it doesn't have one, "thanks to Ed Begley Jr.'s electric motor, the most evil propulsion system ever conceived!"
* In the episode "The Hotel Inspectors", Basil finds himself having to contend with a guest whose use of flowery, overcomplicated language renders him nearly incomprehensible. Representative quote:
* In the episode "The Inner Light", an alien probe connects to the mind of Capt. Picard, who seems to find himself living on a pre-space-flight planet; he spends years there, trying to figure out where he is by studying the stars and the movement of the sun. Eventually, he builds a life for himself, starts a family, and learns to play the flute. Unfortunately, he uncovers from his study of the sun that
* In the episode "The Innocents", the Seven are shown making a video titled "Super in America" in order to humanize their images, though it's suggested this is the wrong PR approach for Vought's mission of getting their supes into the military. It doesn't help that Starlight has just publicly revealed that she was sexually assaulted by The Deep, one of her teammates within the Seven — and that Vought proceeded to spin this into an attempt to market Starlight as a feminist superhero. A particularly brutal note is that The Deep is shown supporting a movement to clean up beaches of trash — and it becomes clear that, in fact, all the trash on the beach is planted, and whenever he does another take, they put the trash back before the camera starts rolling again.
* In the episode "The Inside Man", it was Strangers on a Commuter Train... although the crime was insider trading rather than murder, at least to start with.
* In the episode "The Internet Is Forever" (5x22), in order to get accepted to the UnSub's online club, which provides access to live footage of him killing people, prospective members have to download child porn onto their computers. There's a subtle difference in this example in that the child porn is not specifically a morality test. The new members are not required to like or to watch child porn. The reasoning is that the mere presence of child porn saved on your computer is a serious felony, so the leaders will have a threat to hold over everyone's head.
* In the episode "The Itis," Ed Wuncler enjoys Robert Freeman's delicious soul food cooking and finances a restaurant for him. It turns out to be a
* In the episode "The Jacket", Jerry and George meet Elaine's father, Alton, and they're very intimidated by him. Lawrence Tierney, the actor who played Alton, scared the
* In the episode "The Last Man", Michael's Hive attacks two warring Wraith ships from above, which were already damaged.
* In the episode "The Last Roundup", Applejack, who prides herself on her commitment to honesty, is faced with an insoluble dilemma when she's forced to promise to tell her friends why she refused to come back home but finds the reason so shameful she doesn't want to tell anyone.
* In the episode "The Last Temptation of Homer", Homer is attracted to his co-worker, Mindy, and tries to watch television to take his mind off her:
* In the episode, "The Last Temptation of Krust", Krusty performs at a comedy festival, but not really having created any new material in years, his old bits are incredibly outdated, especially an extremely cringeworthy Asian stereotype. He almost retires after the negative responses.

* In the episode "The Late Dr. Crane", Niles is talked into getting a botox injection. Due to the paralyzing nature of the treatment, a revelation causes him to exclaim "Oh my God!" without moving a single muscle above his mouth.
* In the episode "The Late Philip J. Fry," everything in the year 3010 remains the same as before, despite various screwing with the timelines as the universe cycled.
* In the episode "The Laughing Fish", The Joker stages an advert for his brand of "Joker fish", ending with him threatening the life of the patent clerk who informed him that his plan of taking out a patent didn't work like Joker thought. It also included a failed channel hop scene. Given the evidence, we can only conclude that The Joker has some sort of arrangement with the media producers to let this sort of thing happen in order to boost their ratings.
* In the episode "The Legend of the Gobblewonker", when the twins and Soos investigate the sea monster, they come across a sign that says "Scuttlebutt Island". Soos covers the "Scuttle" part and says that they're on "Butt Island", to which Mabel calls him a 'rapscallion'.
* In the episode "The Limit", Finn and Jake escort some Hot Dog Knights through a dangerous maze, with Jake over-extending his stretching powers along the way. When they get to the wish-granting entity who lives at the middle of the maze, the two knights who managed to make it to the center wish for a cardboard box and to "
* In the episode "The Lion and the Rose", there is a brief scene where Olenna Tyrell speaks with Sansa Stark during the wedding between Joffrey Baratheon and Margaery Tyrell.
* In the episode "The Local Option", George has just met Dr Ogden's new assistant, Rebecca James, after policing
* In the episode "The Lonely Hearts Job", Nate calls his strategy a "Meet Cute", as he and Sophie have to pretend to bump into each other and become interested in each other in less than 24 hours.
* In the episode "The Longest Distance Relationship" when Jeff and Sinbad travel through the wormhole they morph into several different animation styles including
* In the episode "The Losing Edge", the boys deliberately try to lose all their baseball games because they find the sport extremely boring and don't want to go regional. Turns out every other team feels the same way, and they're all "better at sucking". The teams' losing strategies even developed over time,
* In the episode "The Magnificent Ferengi", we meet a Ferengi who finds more pleasure in fighting and hunting than in latinum. Quark and the others find him very strange for this, but they do acknowledge that he's a great warrior.
* In the episode "The Making of Arthur", an animalized version of Matt Damon comes to Elwood City after a video contest, which Arthur loses. Interested in Arthur's life, he has an idea for a new show. Cue the theme song.
* In the episode "The Man Behind The Shield", when SHIELD is attacking an enemy base, Simmons wants to chase after a lead on
* In the episode "The Mane Attraction", Applejack's fillyhood friend Rara has grown up to become a pony pop star, similar to
* In the episode "The Mansion Family", Homer takes Mr. Burns' yacht into international waters to avoid state blue laws prohibiting the sale of alcohol on Sunday. After mocking the Coast Guard's inability to do anything to stop them the yacht is seized by pirates. When appealing to the Coast Guard for help the crew replies, sarcastically, that "Navy SEALs are on the way". In 2009, when the Maersk Alabama
* In the episode "The Mansion Family", it was revealed that Mr. Burns suffers from every disease known to man, some of them discovered in him. However, "Three Stooges Syndrome" basically causes the diseases to cancel each other out. Mr. Burns thinks he's indestructible because of this despite the doctor warning him that even a slight breeze can kill him. This later came back to bite him in the boney butt later on in the series when a new disease managed to "shove them through the door" and he suddenly found out how mortal he really was.
* In the episode "The Man Who Knew Too Little," Ian (who is a compulsive liar) says, "Are you aware that the gas tank in this particular make of car explodes on impact?" Later, Fraser, Vecchio and Ian have two bad guys shooting at them and have only

* In the episode "The Millennium", George is approached by headhunters from the Mets who want to hire him for a more lucrative position than he currently has with the Yankees. However, due to his contract, he cannot quit his job to take the new one, he must be fired. No matter what he does, he, of course, cannot get fired. Some of his attempts include: dressing in Babe Ruth's uniform and spilling food all over it, and "streaking" on the field during a game wearing a flesh-coloured nylon bodysuit (he was too embarrassed to actually go naked). All of these end up getting him
* In the episode, "The Miserable Caballeros", Mexican boy Ricky Velasco proceeds to put an extraordinary amount of pepper and spices on his lunch. He tells Miss Brooks that he finds American food too bland.
* In the episode "The Nerve" where Billy persuades Grim to help him get Mandy's nerve. Grim laughs and the camera zooms into his mouth.
* In the episode "The Night", Hector's dream reveals he hates being a giant, and he's so happy to be normal-sized, enabling him to roam freely without destroying the neighborhood, to hug people without hospitalizing them, to take the bus, to sit in the classroom like everyone else, to buy clothes, to use a toilet instead of a volcano and to have a girlfriend. It's so good a dream that he doesn't want to wake up. Unfortunately, he's a
* In the episode "The Once And Future Queen", Gwen (Guinevere, for those who haven't seen the programme), gives Prince Arthur a handkerchief before he goes off to fight in a jousting tournament.
* In the episode "The Once and Future Thing", it's revealed that Warhawk, assumed to be the
* In the episode "The One After Vegas", Monica and Chandler have decided they aren't ready to get married, but keep seeing "signs" that they should. At one point, Monica's hurt her leg, so Chandler gathers her up and carries her into her apartment before they realize what they're doing.
* In the episode "The One Where Nana Dies Twice", Monica and Ross's mother reflects on how critical Nana was of everything she did, unaware that this is exactly how she treats Monica. Also, a photo at the end reveals that when Nana was in her twenties she looked exactly like Monica, and hung out with her friends at a coffee house.
* In the episode "The One with All the Resolutions", when Monica and Chandler have a secret relationship:
* In the episode "The One with the Apothecary Table", a scene starts with Chandler finishing a joke: "And then the farmer says, 'That's not a cow, and you're not milking!'"
* In the episode "The One with the Birthing Video", Joey is depressed because of his one-way crush on Rachel, so Phoebe loans him her friend Wendy's dog to cheer him up. Joey doesn't know the dog's gender...
* In the episode "The One With The Prom Video", Chandler appears to be seeing Fat Monica and college age Ross's perm for the first time, just like Joey, and mocks College!Ross's music. Later flashbacks would establish that Chandler was Ross's roommate at the time, spent Thanksgiving with the Gellers, was in Ross's band and after some hairy incidents also became friends with Monica. He only lives across the hall because Monica tipped him off that the apartment was free.
* In the episode "The One with the Rumor", Monica asks Phoebe and Chandler who won the football game neither one of them was really watching. At the same time, Phoebe says "Green Bay" while Chandler says "Detroit". Phoebe then explains that "Detroit technically won, but it was a moral victory for the Green Bay...Mermen."
* In the episode "The Other Guys", after having his cover blown and being brought before the leader of a large group of Jaffa, O'Neill is zapped with a torture stick and has the following exchange:
* In the episode "The Paradise Syndrome", an amnesiac Kirk is mistaken for a deity by transplanted American Indians on a distant planet.
* In the episode "The Parasite", Gumball and Darwin write a list of pros and cons to them snooping through Anais' diary. The pro side is only two items ("There might be something [they] need to know" and "[They] could eventually learn things about life") while the cons

* In the episode "The Parking", Anais pulls another one, this time more detective-y and with descriptive hi-tech graphics and all.
* In the episode "The Plasma Monster", Booster ends up nude after lending his space suit to Plasma Boy in order to stabilize him.
* In the episode "The Prisoner" the Mandalorian takes a job with his old criminal crew freeing a member who has been arrested. After reaching the prisoner, the Mandalorian is sealed in their cell by the rest of the team. He manages to escape and take out his teammates but the prisoner, caring only about his own escape, convinces the Mandalorian to take him to safety. Immediately after doing so the fixer who set the job up tries to kill the Mandalorian and fails.
* In the episode "The PTA Disbands", Homer gets upset at Lisa for making a working perpetual motion machine because it violates the laws of physics. ("In this house, we obey the laws of thermodynamics!")
* In the episode "The Punchy Pokémon", Jessie and James did this after stealing Giant's Coat (and his Hitmonlee) in order to enter a Fighting Pokémon Tournament. Eventually, James complains that Jessie is too heavy and collapses from exhaustion.
* In the episode "The Puppy Tooth Fairy", Martha and Skits the dogs try to be "puppy tooth fairies" (giving rewards to puppies who lost teeth) but they give it up when it starts to interfere with their sleep schedules. Martha falls asleep and wakes up with a dog treat next to her and thinks this means that a real puppy tooth fairy has shown up. However, Martha hasn't lost any teeth and we never see a fairy or other evidence of a fairy, so maybe it's just that one of Martha and Skits's owners gave the treat to Martha.
* In the episode "The Quality of Mercy" a serial killer is sentenced to Death of Personality because he's considered too dangerous to ship back to Earth and military law only allows
* In the episode "The Quest", the first of three animal spirits that Robin has to fight his way past on his way up the mountain is a bear. The guy is polite about it, but the fight is anything but easy for Robin.
* In the episode "There all the honor lies," a gift shop opens in the space station that sells
* In the episode "There All the Honor Lies" Ambassador Mollari objects to the figures of him sold in the station gift shop because they do not include "attributes" (the tentacle-like sex organs attached to the back of Centauri men):
* In the episode "The Return of Tambelon", Grogar captures all the unicorns in Dream Valley by somehow affecting Ponyland's magic to change all their teleport destinations to the dungeons of Tambelon, wherein the unicorns can no longer teleport.
* In the episode "The Romance Resonance" Sheldon uses square meters instead of square centimeters, meaning his solution is off by 10,000. He asks Amy if she realizes what this means; she replies "Americans still can't handle the metric system?"
* In the episode "The Savage Curtain", the surface of the planet Excalbia is completely covered with molten lava, making it a Volcano Planet.
* In the episode "The Scented Room", a theatre critic who gave his act a bad review and his violent wife have a priceless painting of theirs
* In the episode "The Schizoid Man", Dr. Ira Graves uploads his brain into Data,
* In the episode "The Secret Origins of Denzel Crocker", townspeople out to celebrate young Crocker's birthday
* In the episode "The Secret Recipe," Zoe is eating a bag of popcorn while listing to Blythe's song. She then offers some to Penny Ling, who grabs every single piece from the bag in just one handful.
* In the episode "The Secret", the ending reveals that Darwin uploaded a video of Gumball falling all over himself trying to dance.
* In the episode "The Secret Underground", the Resistance Duo Mike and Juliet board the main mother ship, undercover as Visitor scientists disguised as humans (while wearing the Visitors' distinctive orange jumpsuits), and at one point, Diana nearly catches Mike and Julie, until our heroes peel off their latex masks to reveal Reptilian heads underneath, thus letting them pass without any trouble. But in the next scene, it's revealed that the Resistance Duo "impersonators" are indeed the real Resistance Duo, wearing latex Reptilian masks and having pulled masks resembling their human selves over their scaly disguises (we don't see them peel off their Visitor heads, although we do clearly see them peeling off the human masks to reveal their alien masks). Then when Mike and Juliet make their getaway, they knock out two unmasked Visitors and slide their human masks from their earlier charade onto their Reptilian heads to fool Diana.

* In the episode "The Shore Thing", Arthur is talking about not knowing what you may really discover in life during the episode's intro, which is set in the Yukon gold rush where Binky is sifting in the river for treasure. Binky finds a rock of gold which amazes Arthur, but Binky is more interested in a quarter he also managed to sift into his pan.
* In the episode "The Shower Head", Jerry's Uncle Leo calls the cook at Monk's an anti-Semite when his hamburger comes out slightly more well-done than he ordered. Later, when Jerry goes on
* In the episode "The Sinner and the Sandman", Jonathan has sprained his wrist trying to get tomato sauce on his breakfast, and explains to the vicar's wife that he was injured "whacking the ketchup bottle". Later, he refers to it as "banging the sauce out". She naturally assumes that this is an
* In the episode "The Smoking Peanut", Patrick is accused of throwing a peanut at a trained clam. He's tied up and pelted with peanuts as retribution.
* In the episode "The Song Remains the Same" (S05, E13), Anna and Uriel
* In the episode "The Splendid Source", Peter and his friends are going around the country questioning people about where they heard a particular joke. At one point we see them asking Bender from
* In the episode "The Sponge Who Could Fly," SpongeBob accidentally tucks a hairdryer in his pants, which causes them to inflate and thus allows him to float.
* In the episode "The Squire of Gothos", it is clear that Trelane regards Kirk in this manner. Indeed, Trelane treats the entire encounter with Kirk and the Enterprise crew as an elaborate game.
* In the episode "The Stare Master", Sweetie Belle manages to take Rarity's golden fabric and sew it into the lining of three separate capes in the five seconds between the time she sees it and the time the camera cuts back to her.
* In the episode "The Storm Before the Calm", Dave is giving himself reminders on a tape recorder.
* In the episode "The Story on Page One", Peter sneaks into the classroom in the middle of the night to replace the news article
* In the episode "The Sweetest Apu", Manjula Nahasapeemapetilon considers divorcing her adulterous husband and goes to see a very bizarre lawyer with bug eyes and elf-like facial features. Sure, he looks perfectly human if you're far away or looking at him from the back. But he acts so crazy and evil that he makes Manjula ill at ease, and she remarks that he reminds her of legends of demented monkey-men from her native India. As she is leaving his office, the lawyer bellows in a booming voice: "WHEN WILL YOU HUMANS LEARN?!" — but it's a pretty easy voice to fake, so it could be the lawyer is just a very ugly, very psychopathic human.
* In the episode, "The Tale of the Closet Keepers", the resident tomboy, Kiki gets one of these. When she is revealed to the Midnight society by Betty Ann, she even gets a whistle from Gary and Tucker incredulously says, "I don't believe it! You look like... Like a girl!"
* In the episode "The Tale Of The Many Faces" a struggling model named Emma visits a strange woman named Madame Visage who gives her some powder that apparently helps her get a modeling job. The powder didn't really do anything, considering that Emma was pretty to begin with. (It does seem to almost hypnotize those around her, who will drop everything to mention how pretty she is.) However, it's revealed that

Madame Visage is
* In the episode "The Tale of the Renegade Virus", a VR game goes awry and if the main character doesn't beat it, the virus will literally invade his brain and take him over.
* In the episode "The Taming of the Screwy" Yakko is desperate to attend the big Hollywood party so he can hit on Michelle Pfeiffer.
* In the episode, "The Teachings of Don Jake", the Morgendorffers go on a camping trip and try telling ghost stories the first night. Jake's is just a retelling of his traumatic childhood where his dad took him camping and subsequently got drunk. Helen tries telling an erotic vampire story and quickly censors herself when it gets too racy. Quinn simply does a version of
* In the episode "The Terrible Trio" the titular trio are robbing a house, and one of them accidentally break one of these vases. He quips "Oh well, Ming was a boring dynasty anyway."
* In the episode "The Thief of Baghead", Calculon kills himself after ingesting food coloring (which is toxic to robots). He was reenacting the climax of
* In the episode "The Thin White Line" mega-pervert Quagmire asks Meg if she's 18 yet. When she says no, he quickly moves on to talk to someone else (an example of
* In the episode "The Thin White Line", the audience sees through the eyes of a young
* In the episode "The Ticket Master", Rarity is certain that going to the
* In the episode "The Time Monster," he built a "time flow analogue" out of cups, spoons, a pie pan, and other objects found in a small house.
* In the episode "The Tower is Tall But the Fall is Short", Bonnie Morgan, an actress who is also a contortionist, plays the Terminator "Rosie" and gets bent every which way in a fight with Cameron—and yes, her body can and does really bend like that.
* In the episode "The Trade-Ins", an aging man decides to get a nice young body, but can't afford it for his wife, too (and the company isn't allowed to offer financing), then decides to give back the body and die a natural death with his aging wife. It isn't mentioned how the company that was selling him the brand new body or where they got it from.
* In the episode "The Trouble With Tribbles", Dr. McCoy states that tribbles are "born pregnant", which implies an adult reproductive system.
* In the episode "The Two Jakes", Jake clones himself and Adam (without consulting the latter) and brings the clones to school, even though clones are against the rules. When he and Adam are forced to hide so Pixiefrog doesn't learn the truth, we get this exchange:
* In the episode "The Two Mrs. Nahasapeemapetilons" Apu is dreading his
* In the episode "The Ugly Mermaid", Mario, in his Frog Suit, flees from a (very ugly) mermaid princess who instantly falls in love with him and wants to marry him.
* In the episode "The Ultimate Computer", Dr. Richard Daystrom turned the M-5 computer into an AI by impressing his own engrams (mental patterns) on its circuits.
* In the episode "The Ultimate Computer," Kirk says, "All I ... ask is a tall ship and a star ... to steer her by." You ... you could feel the wind at your back in those days. The sounds of the sea ... beneath you, and even if you take away the wind and the water ... it's still the same. The ship is yours. You can feel her. And the stars are still there, Bones."
* In the episode "The Unbrave One", Francine takes several online pregnancy tests from a shady gynecologist named Dr. Vadgers, most of which involve naked close-ups. The end of the episode shows Dr. Vadgers's computer screen, then reveal him to be
* In the episode "The Vengeance Formulation", when Sheldon appears on the National Public Radio talk show Science Friday, his enemy, Barry Kripke, fills his office with helium.
* In the episode "The Warrior", a lot of the males wore similarly skimpy outfits when not in the uniforms they were made to wear by their former masters.
* In the episode "The Waters of Mars," Ten meets a woman who is fated to die and is heartbroken that he can't save her. Without a

* In the episode "The Way of the Prawn", Po fights a samurai prawn named Yijiro. Yijiro swings his sword at Po several times and appears to miss, but then Po's pants fall down. Po then covers up his privates and backs out of the room in embarrassment.
* In the episode "The Way to Eden", a hippy-like cult uses "reach" as a synonym to "understand in a age-of-aquarius way."
* In the episode "The Way We Was", McBain is being chewed out by his superior, who finally says "You're outta here McBain!" McBain then shoves him out the window.
* In the episode "The Wench Is Dead, Part 2", Morse is forced to go on sick leave and busies himself by reinvestigating a murder case from Oxford during the 1860s, which he suspects resulted in three wrongful convictions. The men were sentenced to hang, but one found religion in prison and became a model inmate. For this his sentence was commuted at the last minute to transportation (presumably to Australia given the time period).
* In the episode "The Whole Tooth And...", Smart has planted a tooth containing secret plans on microfilm in the mouth of someone who turns out to be a criminal. He needs to get arrested and jailed to retrieve it. Attempting to get arrested by not paying his restaurant bill results in the waiter and manager making excuses, expressing sympathy, offering to let him pay later, and finally they and a half dozen other customers all pay out of their own pockets.
* In the episode "The Why of Fry", Chaz (the Mayor's Aide) reserves the entire rocketskating rink for private use by him and Leela... by using his connections to get everyone else kicked out. When this ruins the night for the kids from the Cookieville Orphanarium (who had made a legitimate reservation, at great expense), Leela asks him to let the kids use the rink, but he chases them off just to prove how important and connected he is, thinking it'll impress Leela. It doesn't.
* In the episode "The Winchester Tapes", BJ switches Charles' uniforms with those of heavier/thinner men to make him think he's losing/gaining weight. Hawkeye asks BJ what's next. The answer: "He gets taller."
* In the episode "The Worry Men", Batman is investigating an abandoned warehouse that once supplied costumes and props for theatrical productions, believing it (correctly) to be the Mad Hatter's latest hideout. He sees what appears to be the Hatter seated in a throne-like chair and runs up to grab him - only to find himself holding a mannequin that doesn't look anything like the Hatter except for wearing
* In the episode "The Zombie", Kolchak twice gets information about the local underworld from a tipster named "The Monk".
* In the episode "Thine Own Self", Data is amnesiac because of (nonvisible) damage, and has gone native. An injury shows the circuitry under his skin, much to the shock of all (Data himself included).
* In the episode "...Thirteen Years Later", the story is framed with Frank Black relating to a roomful of FBI agents about a strange series of murders he once investigated on the set of a horror movie. Then comes the
* In the episode "This Is Your Backstory", Phineas and Ferb are briefly shown playing table tennis. Believing there's more to this, Candace watches them and waits for something extraordinary to happen. During
* In the episode "This Year's Girl", Faith taunts Joyce while holding her prisoner in Buffy's room, saying "do you think Buffy's going to just leap through that window?". She continues to monologue, with Buffy a no-show, until Buffy eventually does leap through the window later than expected.
* In the episode "Three Men and a Bastard", Dale discovers that Bill's girlfriend's daughter has the same paternal DNA as his son Joseph, meaning they were both fathered by
* In the episode "Three Men and a Comic Book", Bart sees an old Radioactive Man cartoon wherein the eponymous superhero is smoking.
* In the episode "Tickled Pinky", after Heffer gets an emergency liposuction, he shrinks down to wire-thin size, but is back to normal next episode.
* In the episode "Tikka To Ride", they find themselves in Dallas in 1963. Lister asks if this is the place where "that American king was assassinated — what was his name?" Rimmer: "JFK." Lister: "No, it was John something — not Jeff Kay!"

* In the episode "Time and Punishment", after Darkwarrior refuses to let Gosalyn
* In the episode "Timebreaker", Chat is surprisingly cavalier about his death in a previous timeline, much to Ladybug's annoyance. On a broader level, he immediately
* In the episode "Time Keeps on Slippin'", Fry and Leela get married after Fry does something incredibly romantic for her. The problem: Because of the random time slips plaguing the episode, neither of them remember what it is he did for her, and she demands a divorce. In the end, he rediscovers what he did:
* In the episode "Timeslides" the crew goes back in time and steals Hilter's Diary. It read: "Things to do: Stop milk, pay papers, invade Czechoslovakia!"
* In the episode "Time Slime", the team is trying to help a space station where time is overlapping on itself, meaning that there are actually three versions of the team performing different stages of the mission. BW #2 find the source of the problem, as well as the corpses of BW #1. They try to keep the same events from playing out again—and fail, winding on the ground right next to their "past" selves. Then BW #3 show up, see a pair of each of their bodies on the ground, and realize that it's probably better to let the people on the station figure this out for themselves.
* In the episode "Time's Orphan", it's done a bit heavy handed when Keiko gives little Molly a shiny silver bracelet and the music swells for a moment before going back to normal. Guess what feral Molly is wearing when they pull her back from the past?
* In the episode "Timing is Everything", the Shredder gets a big shock when he sees for himself how much more skilled the Turtles have gotten since their first battle with him, as well as how powerful Sh'Okanabo is in overwhelming and sending his Foot Soldiers back to the Shredder's original time period.
* In the episode "Timmy TV", after his own show, "Leave It to Binky", is cancelled, Binky ends up on the streets holding a sign that reads "Will act for food".
* In the episode "Tinfins", Dr. Quinn placed a shark's brain into a robot shark's body.
* In the episode "Tipping Point", we see Qrow running in rising panic and desperation to reach Ruby who was being attacked and could have been seriously injured. He barely made it in time and he audibly sighed in relief.
* In the episode "Titanium Vs. Iron", Pepper is forced to blow off her date with Happy to help IM.
* In the episode titled "Ugh," prehistoric relatives of SpongeBob, Patrick, and Squidward see a log that is set on fire by lightning. All three of them stick their hands in the fire to see what happens.
* In the episode "To Change a Changeling", Trixie keeps yelling "teleportation spell, go!"
* In the episode "Tom's Rhinoplasty" Mr. Garrison mentions that he didn't want the school to know he was getting a nose job so he told them he has herpes.
* In the episode "Tongue Twister Trouble", Sniffles the anteater gets his tongue frozen to a lake after trying to eat an ant.
* In the episode "To SquarePants or Not to SquarePants", SpongeBob leaves his pairs of pants in the dryer and gets distracted by a phone conversation with Patrick. When he takes them out, they're all miniaturized, forcing him to buy a new pair.
* In the episode "Total Recall," part of the B-Plot is Lois taking Peter's place on his bowling team after Peter gets badly sick.
* In the episode "Toy Store of Doom", Spongebob and Patrick act scared of a shadow. It turns out to be of a little toy robot, but they still act scared of the robot. The episode never makes it clear whether they are playing pretend or
* In the episode "Tradeshow Showdown", Jenny is forced to do a Dish Dash when a robotic teapot struggles to get away from her. She releases the teapot, and it crashes into the wall, knocking over the dishes. Nora Wakeman shouts, "XJ-9!" startling Jenny so she drops all the dishes to the ground.
* In the episode "Trade Ya", one of the items offered for Twilight's books is a Daruma Doll, a Japanese good-luck charm.

* In the episode "Trade Ya", Rainbow Dash and Fluttershy comes across a rather vicious Orthros that they need to trade for a limited edition Daring Do book. Once Fluttershy pacifies it, it acts like a playful puppy for the rest of the episode.
* In the episode "Trading Places", Chris and Meg switch places with Peter and Lois. While the latter two struggle with the pains of high school life, Chris excels at the job, being better than Peter ever was. However, after downsizing, Chris ends up having to pick up the work and it begins crushing him, making him more aggressive, taking up drinking and even getting a stress-induced heart attack.
* In the episode "Travelers", Larrin threatens to drop Sheppard out of Hangar Bay, going as far as opening the doors, leaving him standing on a force shield. Though she doesn't actually voice the threat beyond saying "Don't worry. You're safe as long as the force shield doesn't malfunction, and that almost never happens." Her crew previously state they assume she blew the last man who disappointed her out into space, though this could simply be posturing.
* In the episode "Triangle," Anya becomes convinced Willow will try to steal Xander away from her. Despite Willow being in a lesbian relationship by this time, she isn't entirely unjustified in her concerns; Willow had already broken up Xander's previous relationship (which is what brought Anya to Sunnydale in the first place),
* In the episode "Tucked, Taped and Gorgeous", Charlie and Alan both (separately) deal with insecurity about their sexuality after Alan befriends a gambling, cigar smoking, single gay dad.
* In the episode "Typhoid Sam", Ray does this after finding out from the doctor that Otto and Reggie have the Fiji Flu.
* In the episode "Unleashed" a group of depraved culinarists catch a werewolf for her meat. Since a werewolf returns to human form when it dies,
* In the episode "Unmasked", a member of Kobra who let the plan slip is tossed into a pit of snakes. He doesn't get a last-second reprieve, either.
* In the episode, "Unreal Estate", Squidward tricks SpongeBob into thinking he is allergic to his pineapple house, and tries to help SpongeBob move into a new house. When Squidward shows SpongeBob a banana house, what follows is a cutaway that parodies the show's theme song, wherein SpongeBob slips on a banana peel.
* In the episode "Unreal Estate" the intro repeats thrice as SpongeBob briefly imagines himself living in a few different houses. The first is a banana, followed by a hot pepper, followed by a chicken parmesan hero. In each situation he finds something wrong. He slips on a banana peel in the banana, comes out of the hot pepper on fire, and becomes fat and out of shape within the chicken sandwich. He rejects all three houses.
* In the episode "Unusual Suspects", Suzanne Modeski, being on the run and desperate for information regarding the frame-job her former bosses put on her, spun a
* In the episode "Users," Huang treats a druggie with an illegal drug to make him lucid enough to testify against his dealer. When the dealer threatens to report Huang, he said he already reported himself, got a one-month suspension, and that it was worth it.
* In the episode "Van Hickey", Earl ended up marrying his friend's older mom
* In the episode "Vector Detector", Vector the Crocodile is brought in to try to figure out who could have stolen Amy's hammer. When they find the culprit, comedian Wolf Sidekick, Amy is overly thrilled and mentions that her hammer is a one-of-a-kind weapon. This makes Vector realize that a comedian wouldn't want to take a mallet like hers when any old one would do.
* In the episode "Vendetta", Detectives Briscoe and Green investigate the murder of the
* In the episode "Vestigial Peter", Peter is outraged when his vestigial twin brother Chip joins the family in singing the theme song.
* In the episode "Visitors From Down The Street", the Excalibur discovers a world of English-speaking aliens with a UFO/conspiracy culture/mythology similar to that of late 20th-century Earth — only humans are cast in the role of the saucerfolk! But it's the appearance of alien versions of Mulder and Scully (and Cancer Man) — and the conspiracies around them — that turns the episode into a clever homage to and satire of

* In the episode "Wand to Wand", Ludo picks a brawl fight with all the large rats in the bar. Eventually he gets overpowered by all the rats piling up on him, bashing him continuously until Ludo breaks free with his rage-powered wand.
* In the episode "Warriors", Kirkman has to undergo emergency surgery after
* In the episode "War World", Mongul orders that Draaga's homeworld be destroyed with a death ray. Hawkgirl destroys the gun before it could fire.
* In the episode "War World", there are a million types of aliens, all speaking English with no difficulty understanding anyone else. Given the spacefaring cultures in the DCU are heavily influenced by races like the
* In the episode "Wasted Talent," Stewie tries to watch television, but is distracted by the poor piano playing of one of Lois's students. When Lois leaves the room briefly, Stewie sweeps in and
* In the episode "Web", a teenager is making child pornography starring himself and putting it up on the internet, and making huge quantities of money from it. The teenager was a victim of sexual abuse as a child, but several lines in the episode imply that this kind of thing happens all the time and your children may start doing it at any moment (Stabler: "Used to be kids were safe when they were at home.") You got to admit that they do think that teenagers are intelligent people.
* In the episode 'Welcome to the World Festival', Elizabeth visits the Russia table at her school culture event. She's excited to try the vodka and takes a huge drink, despite the table owners' pleads to stop. She finds it too strong for her and promptly spits it out.
* In the episode "We're So Screwed", they end up going with "plan E... for elevator".
* In the episode "Westie Side Story", Hank and Kahn are discussing ways to punish their children for misbehaving, they both disapprove of spanking, but they both use the "bed without dessert" trick, which according to Kahn, never fails.
* In the episode "Wet Painters", this happens to Patrick when he was trying to put a dollar in a vending machine, which is what SpongeBob is telling him
* In the episode "Whack-a-Mole", after a bombing in Milwaukee an Internet witch-hunt starts up on a website that is
* In the episode "What Is and What Should Never Be", Dean wants so badly to stay in his Wish!Verse, even after he realises that Alt!Sam can't stand him. But the call knows where he lives and after a
* In the episode "When Aliens Attack", Fry objects to the plot twist about Single-Female Lawyer (Leela) getting married with this line: "But that's not why people watch TV! Clever things make them feel stupid and unexpected things make them feel scared."
* In the episode when Dr. Draken becomes good, and Ron becomes evil. The goofy sidekick is actually quite intimidating as an evil villain, while the
* In the episode when they go to Brazil, Bart is watching a kid's TV show hosted by a woman in a very
* In the episode where Androids 17 and 18 were released, it opens up with Bulma remarking with relief that she didn't have to be revived, BEFORE realizing Baby Trunks was with her on the plane she was flying before it was blown up by Dr. Gero.
* In the episode where Angelica thinks she's going to get a baby brother, she calls in to a psychology-type show that gives out the number 555-5555 (again). Interestingly, her finger bounces all around the keypad when punching it in.
* In the episode where Apu was living with the Simpsons, he advised Marge against using the Monstromart express lane ("1000 Items or less") because, while the person in front of her only had one item, it was a lonely elderly person (Grandpa Abe, no less) who would milk the checkout process for as much time as possible just to have
* In the episode where Bart and Lisa compete in hockey, her talent as goalkeeper is discovered when Apu sees her block all the paper balls that Bart throws at her while taunting her.
* In the episode where Bart goes to a gifted school, the kids con him out of his lunch by using units like picolitres to make it sound like they were offering more than they were.

* In the episode where Bender sells his body, he has a nightmare where he sees a two in the middle of some binary.
* In the episode where Bizarro first appears, he asks Lois out before his body starts to suffer from clone degeneration (and thus still resembles Superman). When his body and mental capacities start badly degenerating, he remembers asking her out, so he decides to simply grab her, then break into a restaurant to keep the date. This technically makes it the type 1 example, as he honestly believes he's holding up a promise, even though Lois likely objects.
* In the episode where Blackfire visits, there is a scene where Starfire sees Robin and Blackfire's shadows and Blackfire is saying "There. Hold me just like that." After which, she throws Robin across the room in demonstrating some martial arts move.
* In the episode where Brad Pitt plays Will, an old friend of Ross's, when Ross sees him and notices he's now fit he blurts out "Will! Hot stuff!" He then immediately questions himself for saying that first before anything else.
* In the episode where Chris becomes an artist in New York, his manager decides that his family is an embarrassment and decides to get rid of them for the afternoon so they don't cause trouble at a party. When Chris asks where they are, he tells him that they decided they would rather wander around Soho for hours looking for an address that doesn't exist. Chris chuckles and fondly replies "That's my dad!"
* In the episode where Eddy encourages all the kids in the culdesac to break and disregard the rules, there's a scene when Ed tickles Kevin.
* In the episode where Frank lay preaches in Geraldine's stead for two Sundays in a row, Jim comments on how the length and sheer dullness of Frank's preaching drove at least one parishioner to commit suicide right there in their pew.
* In the episode where Fry, Leela and Bender form the crime-fighting trio of Captain Yesterday, Clobberella and Superking. A snippet of their theme tune:
* In the episode where gay marriage is legalized in California, Jay and Manny head to the courthouse because Manny's planning on taking a trip to Colombia and needs some travel documents. They get in at the end of a long line of same-sex couples. Manny expresses his nervous about "doing this" (going to Colombia) and Jay responds in a manner that makes the other people in line think that he's trying to pressure the preteen boy to get married.
* In the episode where gay marriage is legalized in Springfield, Homer imagines what it would be like to marry someone of the same sex,
* In the episode where George Sands teaches English as a Foreign Language, George finds that one of his students has vandalized the WC, writing "Mr. Sands Suck Cocks". George takes out a marker pen and
* In the episode where Greg fell in love with one of his teachers, Mom and Alice were trying to figure out who the "Linda" was in a letter Greg wrote to her. When Alice asked Jan what she thought of the name, Jan immediately assumed Mom was having a baby. They then cut to the next scene, where Mom talks about how long it took to convince Jan she wasn't.
* In the episode where Hank is trying to get an x-ray image taken down from an art museum because it was used without his permission (the "artist" was trying to make a statement showing Hank's constipated colon next to a picture of a starving child), he's drinking with the guys in the Alley, and Khan shows a poster of the images he bought at the museum's gift shop just rub it in Hank's face, but when Dale cracks a joke about Hank's colon, it's Khan who literally kicks Dale's ass.
* In the episode "Where Have All The Sonics Gone?", after Eggman and Morpho send Sonic to an alternate dimension, Morpho disguises himself as Sonic to keep up the charade for a little while and attempts to charm and invite Amy to a trip to the canyon. It only takes her a split second to realize what's going on (after giggling like a schoolgirl at the idea of going out with Sonic).
* In the episode where Hawkeye and BJ get named morale officers, Klinger shakes them down for a 3-day pass to go on an errand for them.

* In the episode where Homer becomes a food critic, some chefs plan to assassinate him with a lethal eclair. After other attempts to stop Homer from eating it fail, Lisa tells him that it's low-fat, causing him to throw it away in disgust.
* In the episode where Homer joins the Navy, his superior officer gives the following keynote speech: "I'm a man of few words. Any questions?"
* In the episode where Homer was teaching showboating to sports celebrities, he used this to inspire one of his clients. The kid himself appeared to
* In the episode where Jordan orders J.D. to drop his pants, we see a shot of her from between his legs as she tilts her head slightly.
* In the episode where Kim coaches the soccer team, she acts like this as her perfectionism gets the better of her.
* In the episode where Libby, Sheen, and Jimmy run for class president: Sheen blackmails Carl with an embarrassing photograph of him at a party.
* In the episode where Lisa has a crush on Nelson, Bart has this reaction.
* In the episode where Lisa has to contend with being the authority figure of the house when Marge ended up injured from a clock falling on her, Lisa is calling Marge. It's revealed after she briefly talks to Marge that Lisa is currently on a stool in a flooded house, with Homer and Bart playing Marco Polo. It's strongly implied that Bart and Homer caused the flood.
* In the episode where Maggie goes missing, Homer's on hold with the police department waiting for word on Maggie, and the song he hears on hold is "Baby Come Back", causing him to start sobbing.
* In the episode where Magica and the Beagle Boys infiltrate Scrooge's mansion, a tied up Burger Beagle (shape-shifted as Huey) gets his glamour spell undone. Scrooge demands where Huey is, and Burger refuses to talk, so Scrooge threatens him with no supper, making him crack.
* In the episode where Marge gets issues with road rage, part of her community service is watching a film documenting the dangers of angry drivers, wth such gems as a judge, wearing robes and all, sentencing passing cars to "kiss his ass", and an astronaut going berserk in the middle of the road with a golf club.
* In the episode where Meg turns to a life of crime and robs the pharmacy Mort tells her she can take the donation money for children with cancer since he never gives it to them anyway.
* In the episode where Peter attends Meg's high school while pretending to be a student, he leaves a taped message to fool his wife, and though it works with the first two recorded lines, the third one is inappropriate and tips Lois off that it is a recording. The recording eventually straight up asks her, "If you haven't figured out this is a recording yet,
* In the episode where Peter becomes a cigarette company executive, he has the kitchen coated in Teflon for easy cleaning. Everyone falls over, as Peter remarks that he didn't think they'd do the floor too. Then Stewie slides by on his butt, bare naked, and happily announces "I'm
* In the episode where Peter discovers he had a black ancestor, his father in law, Carter Pewterschmitt, shows his grand kinds how noble his side of the family (i.e.: their white ancestors) were, we see a picture of of one of them holding a knife to a Native American baby, while the horrified parents hand over a basket full of corn.
* In the episode where Peter gets outsize influence on television programming though the use of
* In the episode where Peter helps Joe train for the Special Olympics, after Joe becomes a champion and celebrity he starts acting like it was all him. At an awards ceremony he says he wants to thank Peter...Peter Yarrow of
* In the episode where Peter takes over the local production of "The King and I", he initially dismisses Cleveland's wife Loretta from the role of Anna to hand it to local news anchor Diane Simmons. When Diane storms off, Peter says that the role is going to the person who really deserves it, someone tempered by generations of oppression of African-Americans. Loretta starts to thank Peter, only for him to interrupt "Don't be so full of yourself, I'm talking about me".
* In the episode where Peter tells Death how he is devoted to Lois, Quagmire mentions how he hopes Peter will find her again. Peter responds that he hopes Quagmire lives next door to him someday.

* In the episode where Principal Prickly is accidentally hypnotised to act like a six-year old, when TJ and his friends decide to keep it under wraps, Randall overhears them. Unlike most other times where he usually takes joy in snitching, his snitching about what happened to Prickly falls more under the Concerned Claire subtype, as he expresses genuine shock and horror and rushes to Finster to tell her of what happened.
* In the episode where Robin uses a modified version of his costume with a cape that he can use as wings is an obvious shout out to
* In the episode where Ross and Rachel discuss having a 'bonus night', they talk about how good their sex used to be, and Rachel tells Ross he was especially good with his hands. When she finally tells him it's not going to happen (in front of everybody), he angrily says "From now on the only person who’s going to enjoy these bad boys (holds up his hands) is me." It takes him a second to realize what he just said.
* In the episode where Sheldon decides to work at the Cheesecake Factory in order to let his mind work on a physics problem, Leonard gives him an extra-complicated order in revenge for all the times Sheldon did it to him. Sheldon understands and doesn't hold it against him.
* In the episode "Where Silence Has Lease", an Away Team beams to a replica of the USS
* In the episode where Slimey lands on the moon, a farmer constantly tells the others that his chicken is on the space ship heading to the moon with the worms, but everyone insists that there is no chicken there. At one point, when everybody else is talking and turning their heads away from the screen, the chicken appears on-camera. The farmer is the only one watching and tells everyone that his chicken is there, but when everybody looks, the chicken is again off-camera.
* In the episode where the brothers are sent back in time to the Wild West, Dean and the innkeeper find the sheriff's smoldering corpse in one of the rooms. Dean asks who the new sheriff is, and the innkeeper pulls the badge off the corpse and pins it to Dean.
* In the episode where the Eds are pretending to be one another, Ed (pretending to be Eddy) makes Eddy (pretending to be Edd) drink enough juice to fill a swimming pool causing him to become massively bloated.
* In the episode where the family became farmers, Homer irradiates the crops with plutonium borrowed from the nuclear plant in the hope that they grow bigger, like in the movies. Instead, he ends up with normal-sized tomatoes, only they have combined with tobacco to form "tomacco".
* In the episode where the family moves so Homer can work for Hank Scorpio, Bart is transferred to the special-ed class in his new school, where he's surrounded by a bunch of Ralphie
* In the episode "Where there's Smoke", one of the corrupt government agents seems to have the right idea at first, arming himself with a weapon that
* In the episode "Where There's Smoke", Volcana was spared a regular prison and instead isolated on an island, where Superman brought her supplies (this was both for extenuating circumstances
* In the episode where they both forget Kitty's birthday, Red suddenly remembers by blaming Eric for forgetting, and at the end where they are marking the important days on a calendar, they both forget to mark Kitty's birthday, but Red chastises Eric for not paying attention.
* In the episode where they form a band, Sheen proposes the name "Sheen and the Sheenettes".
* In the episode where they go on a cruise ship to the Bermuda Triangle, Rocko gets run over and
* In the episode where they have to go through books to stop Tom Sawyer from changing them all, they didn't want him to get into the book of physics to change the law of physics. Wanda told them to stop him before he changes Uranus.
* In the episode where Tweek fights Craig, the shop teacher's late girlfriend is seen in flashbacks as a live-action actress.

* In the episode where Vampire Willow first appears, there was also Vampire Xander, with his leather pants.
* In the episode where Winchester is the only person in camp with access to newspapers and won't share them, someone stole his clothes but left one of his newspapers.
* In the episode where Winchester's snoring is keeping the gang awake. The episode ends with Winchester's snoring cured, but now BJ is talking in his sleep.
* In the episode which spoofs college movies, the robots of Robot House peek in the window of a sorority house, and look past the scantily clad women to the desktop computer, which gets "spanked" and has its case taken off.
* In the episode "Whisky Business", Moe gets a new suit, which causes others to treat him better and directly leads to his whiskey going public. When he loses the suit, Marge tells him the magic was inside him all along, even referencing
* In the episode "Whispers", Chief O'Brien is captured and replaced by a clone. The replacement is
* In the episode "White Christmas Blues," Lisa decides that she's going to get people cheap but meaningful gifts. She gets Homer some seeds, which he just eats, and Bart a book, which he burns. She yells at him for this, but Bart calls her out for getting things that make
* In the episode "Who Gives a Buck?", Rocko is talked into buying his dog Spunky a hi-tech fire hydrant-shaped dog bowl.
* In the episode "Who Shot Sherlock", it's set up to make it look like the victim did this by attaching a gun to a piece of surgical tubing.
* In the episode "Wieners Out", Kyle and Ike walk in on their parents engaging in golden showers. Poor kids are going to need a lot of therapy after that...
* In the episode "Wild Cards," the Joker sings his variation of "London Bridge is Falling Down" while kicking the crap out of Batman:
* In the episode "Will the Real Oak Please Stand Up", Team Rocket decides to try and get food with James disguising himself as Professor Oak and Jessie disguised as Mary, the radio DJ. Meowth decides to come along with them by standing on top of Jessie's Wobbuffet wearing a trench coat posing as their loud-mouthed producer. Surprisingly, Wobbuffet didn't do very much to ruin the act (which you'd think he would) until the very end when he goes to the extreme to blow Meowth's cover and expose all of Team Rocket for the phonies they are.
* In the episode "Winter Wrap-Up", there's Twilight Sparkle's checklist for preparing for Winter-Wrap Up:
* In the episode "Witches before Wizards", a wizard gives Luz a quest to retreive a magical whatsit. Along the way, she encounters hillariously generic companions and solves comically easy challenges, only to discover that the entire thing was a ruse by a shapeshifter to lure in Luz' mentor, Eda. The show isn't cynical about this trope, however, as the core message of the episode is that no one ever became great by waiting around for someone else to declare them the
* In the episode with Homer buying a handgun, he is dismayed when he learns that the registration process will take a few days. He spends those days moping on his lawn. A montage of tempting targets pass by during those days: a line of ducks, a Target truck, Patty and Selma (his hated sisters-in-law) on a bike...
* In the episode with Nancy Walker, Kermit got sick and put Fozzie in charge. After all that happened in the episode, as it was about to end Fozzie figured Kermit would fire him. Kermit then shows up and tells Fozzie that he's fired. However, Fozzie seems to be more happy to see Kermit back than concerned about his firing, and Kermit quickly tells him that he's hired again.
* In the episode with Po the Conqueror, it's stated that they can build another Big Guy, or at least scrounge one up from spare parts, but the lieutenant was the only person who had any idea how to pilot it. It's later shown that most people know how to get the thing moving (as when he gets dropped back in time and a British soldier managed to pilot it as "Iron Jack") but have no idea about how to regulate the power core from exploding.
* In the episode with the Philosopher's stone, the bad guy is attacked by a magical hawk (really) and is trapped inside the building with his two henchmen as his equipment is destroyed and the building explodes. Jonny, Jessie, and Hadji, meanwhile, escape just in time.

* In the episode "Wolf in the Fold": Jack the Ripper in energy-being form.
* In the episode "World's Fair", one of the suspects (the boyfriend of the victim) goes to her family with the intention of assuring them he didn't do it. The victim's brother gets confrontational and the boyfriend ends up being shot by the victim's father (who believed he did it). It turns out that
* In the episode "World War III" it's a plot point that Nine's memory is so crowded and cluttered he needs help to remember the species the Slitheen come from and their
* In the episode "Wormy", every time a character looks at Wormy the butterfly from up close, a film clip of a real horsefly is used
* In the episode "Wormy", the titular caterpillar turns into a butterfly, and upon
* In the episode "You Are Cordially Invited", we learn that an occurrence of this in the Klingon creation myth is the traditional source of their concept of
* In the episode "You Don't Want to Know": House drugs Thirteen making her think that she's displaying symptoms of a degenerative and fatal disease. She gets her chance for revenge when she does a biopsy on him.
* In the episode "You Only Move Twice", Bart attends the school in the planned community the family has moved to. Since he comes from a decidedly
* In the episode, "You Only Move Twice," much of Hank Scorpio's dialogue was improvised by Albert Brooks. This is particularly clear in the "hammock district" conversation, where Dan Castellaneta (Homer) is obviously just trying to keep up with Brooks.
* In the episode "You're Not Yelping", the local restaurant owners become sick of the Yelp reviewers in the town abusing them under threat of leaving bad reviews of their restaurants and get back at them by leaving little bits of their bodily fluids in the Yelpers' food.
* In the episode "Your Time is Gonna Come", shortly after Jackie starts dating Hyde, she sees her previous boyfriend Kelso kissing with his new girlfriend, and - in the presence of Hyde - screams: "GET OFF MY BOYFRIEND!" In the next episode, she tells Hyde that she may have "leftover feelings" for Kelso "but what am I supposed to do? He was my first boyfriend!"
* In the episode "Zatanna", it's clear, even to the point of being outright stated, that
* In the episode "Zim Eats Waffles", Zim is shown experimenting on a boy named
* In the eponymous song written by Diane Warren and recorded by Taylor Dayne, the speaker sings about how her ex-lover will eventually come back to her, because they're soulmates. It's left ambiguous whether this is actually true, or the delusion of a crazed stalker.
* In the era before CGI and color film, special effects were done using scale-models often used sand as an alternative to water due to the absurdly large relative size of water droplets to the models of ships, planes, etc.
* In the era of social media, certain celebrities get hit hard with this trope if they don't speak up about whatever hot button sociopolitical issue that exist at the time. (
* In "The Erlenmeyer Flask", a doctor who was involved in the experiment is thrown out of the window of his lab. It's supposed to look like a suicide.
* In "The Escape", mac infiltrates a prison in French North Africa in order to break out an unjustly imprisoned missionary.
* In the "Et in Arcadia Ego" two-parter, Codex and Rune are the male androids who drag Narek to his cell and who guard the entrance to Coppelius Station.
* In the EU, lightsabers come in a whole rainbow of colors, owing to the crystals that are used to focus the beam. You really don't know what color a lightsaber you made will turn out to be until you first switch it on. (At the time, only the original trilogy of films existed, and there was no reason to assume that just because the
* In the European French dub, Paolo Domingo was the voice of Aladdin himself in both the original movie,

* In the European Spanish translation they used English instead of Spanish (not too fitting since the migrant worker seemed Latino or so,
* In the European Theater, during particular battles, both Allied and German troops were sometimes ordered or "encouraged" not to take any prisoners. However, often times these orders had practical motivations. During Operation Neptune, Allied paratroopers obviously had no rear echelon or base of operations to send prisoners of war to since they were operating behind enemy lines. During the Battle of the Bulge, taking prisoners would slow down the German advance, which was on a time critical mission. Naturally, since the Allies won the war, (only) the Germans that were caught doing this were tried for war crimes.
* In the European Theater, the Germans attempted the same thing with
* In the EU, the spice mines of Kessel were a penal colony worked by prison labor as punishment (especially of spice smugglers); when Luke puts an end to this, the Republic, at his suggestion, keeps the mines in operation, still worked by living beings. This time, however, the miners will be paid, and hired from species who have evolved in the same sort of environment. The dark and cold and tight confines of the tunnels make droid mining impractical.
* In the even more ancient days of Gensokyo, there was no regulation for Spellcard Duels. It's highly implied that the regulation is enforced to prevent the (relatively) already cramped sealed-world from collapsing entirely.
* In the event of a War In Heaven, in which two Fallen Empires awaken and go to war and not caring in the slightest for collateral damage, one event features the
* In the events surrounding the conquest of Sweden by the Danish king Christian II in 1520, a number of Swedish notables were "asked" to sign and seal a document supporting Christian's claim to the throne. According to legend, bishop Wender Brask placed a note reading "Härtill är jag nödd och tvungen" ("Unto this I am forced and compelled") under the wax when putting on his
* In the event that a goalie gets injured, each team keeps a backup goalie dressed so that they can swap in. But what happens if that goalie
* In the event that you haven't saved in a while and you fall in battle,
* In The Evil Gods Part I, Jerry somehow realizes in the middle of his first fight with
* in the exact same situation, with the exact same mark and use the exact same plan with great success.
* In "The Excelsior Acquisition," Sheldon finds a traffic summons concerning an traffic incident that occurred on 11/16, the airdate of "The Adhesive Duck Deficiency," in which the violation happened.
* In "The Excelsior Acquisition", the gang (minus Sheldon) go to a comics book signing by Stan Lee. He appears at the very end with a different attitude than normal.
* In "The Exile From Psychelia", Empath learns that the Psyche Master has been grooming him to be his successor and is hoping that he would someday forsake the Smurf way of living and embrace becoming the next Psyche Master. Empath refuses the Psyche Master's offer. However, in the alternate timeline story "Hefty, The Luckiest Smurf", Empath is forcibly taken back to Psychelia and is eventually made the next Psyche Master.
* In the Expanded Universe, it's absolutely positive that there are beings from before our universe. The Guardians are among them (possibly the last surviving Time Lords from the previous universe), and even they have higher powers they defer to. If an Abrahamic creator God of this universe exists, he's less ultimate than the Guardians, and not that much more powerful than mortals like Rassilon or the Council of Eight or the Doctor (who were all able to rewrite the fundamental rules of this universe's reality, which ought to be no easier than writing the original rules).
* In the Expanded Universe, Predators without honor are hunted, their bodies dismembered and desecrated, and their heads disposed of, as opposed to being kept as a trophy. It seems that the Predators see keeping a skull as an honor not just for prey but for themselves as well.

* In the Expanded Universe, the Doctor discovers beyond a shadow of a doubt, multiple times, that the universe is only scientific in the first place because, in effect, his ancestors (
* In the expanded universe, the full name of Wicket the Ewok (played by
* In the expanded universe, the Zabrak (Darth Maul's race) are shown to be this. The Zabrak have some of the best hand-to-hand fighters in the galaxy, with Zabrak children learning martial arts at a young age. They are also seen by other citizens of the Galaxy as being proud, fierce, and independent.
* In the Expanded Universe, this is more thoroughly averted: while the upper levels are rather uniform
* In the expansion Mists of Pandaria, the starting zone is a giant sea-circling turtle, the Wandering Isle.
* In the expansion pack, a mission has you escorting a leader unit to a beacon in the middle of the enemy base. If you take along an escort unit or two to clear the anti-air turrets on the way, you can use a Shuttle to fly her to the beacon, bypassing the enemy base entirely.
* In the expansion pack called Enemy Within, you have the option to upgrade your troops with gene mods to increase their combat potential. The modifications include, among others, increased muscle density, which allows them to jump to rooftops, a secondary heart, which
* In the expansion, Planet ups the ante with artillery (spore launchers), submarines (sealurks), and entire organic factory/fortress deals known as fungal towers. This is on top of the battleship/transport isles of the deep, mind worm standard combat troops, and airborne locusts. Did we mention they completely ignore your technology?
* In the expansion, the Atlantean civilization can permanently turn any human unit into a hero for a cost, including their worker unit, the Citizen. Hero Citizens aren't that great at fighting anything but myth units, so they are mostly helpful as a defense in case a large army of myth units attacks your town, but they do have the benefit of being more efficient workers.
* In the expansion, the Night Elves end up fighting the now part-demonic Illidan when he casts a spell meant to destroy part of the world and the Lich King, taking out the undead once and for all. It fails, so Illidan tries to kill the Lich King personally.
* In the expansion, they get a new purpose: stopping tomb robbers from stealing grave goods interred in a monument.
* In the Extended Cut of the Control Ending, after uploading her/himself, Shepard was recreated as an AI entity to replace the old Catalyst as the controller of the Reapers.
* In the Extended Cut, one of the options at the end is Refusal — revolted by
* In the Extended Edition, Alfrid suffers it as well. During the battle, he escapes in a dress stuffed with gold coins, one of which later falls out and activates the catapult he was hiding in, and right into the mouth of a troll.
* In the Extended Edition opening, one of the colony higher-ups on LV-426 says that "[i]t takes two weeks to get an answer out here", implying that the speed of messages is no more than one week either way (as the delay may be partially due to
* In the extended edition, the nasty-looking orc general who survived everything the Battle of the Pelennor Fields had to offer and was chasing Éowyn around gets his other arm sliced off, two axes in his chest, and his head chopped off by Gimli and Aragorn. Just to make sure he's
* In the Extended Universe, the Twi'lek, along with the ability to learn any language that humans can, also have a completely separate gestural language expressed by use of their
* In the extended version of the podrace, there's the moment when Anakin finds himself caught between a racer and a cliffside, so he repulsor-climbs sideways up the cliff, rolls right over the other racer, and zooms off once he's in the clear.
* In "The Ex", Tobias lets one out when he triggers a bomb that Gumball mistakenly planted in his house and gets sent flying.

* In the Eye of Terror campaign, three Disorder players advised other players where best to attack. They called themselves the Triad. The next campaign newsletter detailed the lore of what happened, especially the
* In the Eye of the Beholder and Lynne have what amounts to a rudimentary friendship, the latter even being Lydia's Hunger Social Link.
* In the Eye of the Beholder appears to be alive, and actively malevolent as it seems to side with Sycophanta, though the Shadows still attack them all the same.
* In the Eye of the Beholder is almost always perpetually sunny no matter the time of day outside.
* In the eyes of Flourish & Botts, this is worse than when they ordered 200 copies of
* In the eyes of Grand Maester Pycelle, Egg was another madman who got himself killed while trying to hatch dragon eggs, ignorant or indifferent to any deeper intentions he might have had.
* in the face. He doesn't become mentally disabled or dysfunctional from it either.
* In the face of a Marine victory which could have snuffed out the Golden Age of Piracy,
* In "The Face of Evil", a giant face of the Doctor has been carved into the cliff by the mad computer. The Doctor indignantly rejects the idea that they enter the cave by climbing up "his" nostrils. "It's up over the tongue and down the throat."
* In the face of serious setbacks in rural South American insurgencies, Carlos Marighela wrote the
* In the face of the World Government's undeniable corruption, over the course of the story, Cross convinces
* In the "Face the Devil" bonus round, a "natural triple" here (three of the same dollar amount) instantly awarded the player a prize package, plus either $1,000 or the amount in the pot plus the value of the triple, whichever was higher.
* In the Fade: After the opening where Nuri is released from prison and married Katja, there is a break of around seven years, as they now have a six year old son.
* In the Fade: In the finale, Katja kills herself and the murderers of her family using a homemade bomb.
* In the Fade: Katja sets out to get this after her family's murderers are acquitted.
* In the Fade: Much of the film involves André and Edda Möller's trial for murdering Katja's family.
* In the Fade: Not entirely fake, but Numan Acar plays an ethnic Kurd while he is a Turk by ethnicity, though both come from Turkey.
* In "The Fair-Haired Hare", Yosemite Sam builds a cabin on top of Bugs's property, which leads Bugs to take his case to the highest court in the country
* In "The Fairy Flu", Cosmo and Wanda contract the titular disease, which causes things to randomly transform when they sneeze. Long story short, they get cured just as Vicky (who has been turned into a fire-breathing dragon) is about to blow fire in Timmy's face, and they transform her back just in time, so all that Vicky does once she's human again is roar in Timmy's face. Timmy has an opinion about that:
* In "The Fairy God Parents", Hardison and Parker pose as newly-weds when looking at an apartment.
* In "The Faith", the audience is depicted as bluish rectangles from distant shots, but when they are focused on, it's revealed they are actually all recurring and characters who appeared previously in the show.
* In the Falklands War, the British took a WWII field kitchen truck from the Imperial War Museum and sent it along with the Task Force sent to fight off the Argentines, since there was no modern equivalent that could prepare hot meals in the field.
* In the Falklands War, this was the job of a number of RN pilots in Sea King helicopters- including Prince Andrew.
* In the Fall Classic tournament, Subaru Mimasaka defeats Takumi Aldini by doing the
* In the "Fall Weather Friends", Applejack and Rainbow Dash get so competitive with each other, they attempt to cheat one another during a race. In the end, they both come in last. However, in this case, it's justified as they were cheating

* In "The Family That Slays Together - Part II", henchmen #21 and #24 find a secluded spot to sit out the climactic battle, but they still listen to it over the radio.
* in the family too much, and there do seem to be female line descendants, such as the Martells, Plumms, and Penroses, and apparently the Longwaters are illegitimate descendants.
* In the famous "Goodbye, Mr. Hooper" episode, Big Bird gives drawings he made of his friends to them. All of them, including the one of Mr. Hooper that is on display at Big Bird's nest to this very day, were drawn by Caroll Spinney, a cartoonist and painter who also wrote an illustrated the official Sesame Street book "How to Be a Grouch" with his wife, Debra.
* In the famous "Joker's Millions" story (Which was adapted into an episode of the animated series), Joker, after finding out that most of his "inheritance" is fraudulent, needs to drum up some cash NOW. Of course, he's supposed to have gone straight at this point, so he's forced to perform a mundane burglary, without one of his trademarks. Coincidentally, there's a theater across the street that was playing
* In the famous Michael Jackson episode, Marge is also driven to tears by the Patsy Cline song "Crazy" while being placed on hold with the Springfield Mental Hospital.
* In the fanclub newsletter, it was revealed that (in story) they were developing watermelons which could be airdropped without parachutes into dangerous famine stricken areas. It was also hinted that the scene was filmed as a
* In the fandom, Avatar Roku is often quoted as saying, "The Avatar always gets the girl" when Aang observes that he married the "girl who didn't even know [he was] alive." What Roku
* In the fanmade parody campaign "Deus Ex Machina", a plot hole is a physical entity that causes random impossible things to happen. The player gets caught in one early on, and the story just plain stops trying to make even a semblance of sense from there (not that it made a great deal of sense beforehand...)
* In the fan-made remake, if you have the unstable ordinance in your pocket when the root monster eats you, it explodes immediately afterwards in a much more dramatic illustration of this trope.
* In the fan made short story "Secret Santa Lynn," the main antagonist Lynn Loud from the TV show
* In the Farmers' Insurance "University Of Farmers" campaign, one class takes place on a collection of roofs. One agent finds a fiddler on the roof.
* In "The Farnsworth Parabox", Farnsworth calls the exchange of the box containing Universe-1 with the box containing Universe-A a "spacetime eversion". Leela prompts the layman's version with "So, what you
* In "The Farnsworth Parabox", Farnsworth creates a box leading to an alternate universe where every coin toss has the opposite outcome. There are also lots of other boxes, leading to other alternate universes, each linking to each other.
* In "The Farnsworth Parabox", Farnsworth ends up creating a box containing a portal to an alternate universe, the other end of which is a box the alternate Farnsworth created. At the end of the episode, the two Farnsworths somehow manage to trade boxes through the portal, meaning the box "our" Planet Express crew currently have contains their own universe.
* In "The Farnsworth Parabox", Leela crosses into a parallel universe where the main cast are robots. Robo-Fry asks her for a date; she responds "Access denied" in a monotone, which makes Robo-Fry's
* In the Farscape-verse, pulse rifles are actually projectile weapons that fire highly energized pulses of a refined explosive oil (oh, you know what I mean). Guns have been shown to malfunction, sending the pulse a few inches before it nose-dives and makes a hole in the floor.
* In "The Fascinating Problem of Uncle Meleager's Will," Meleager Finch hides his will and leaves his niece a set of clues to its location in the form of a crossword puzzle.

* In the Fashion Fairies series, he tries to take over the fashion world with his Ice Blue clothing line.
* In "The Fast and the Phineas" when the boys trick out the family car, Ferb presses a red button which causes the car to blast out of the picture right before Linda comes out for Candace to show her. When Linda goes back inside, the car thuds back onto the road.
* In "The Fat and the Furriest", Homer prepares to face off against a grizzly bear by constructing a makeshift suit of armor...without a seat. He explains that this is in case he gets extremely frightened, because he doesn't want to ruin the suit.
* In the Fate route, Saber gives up her quest for the Grail and returns to the moment in time when she made a pact with the World at the moment of death. No longer removed from the course of history, her original body is allowed to die for real. (Granted, that doesn't stop her from being summonable. The Grail system is like that.) The
* In "The Father, the Son, and the Holy Fonz", Peter, Brian, and Francis have a rather long discussion about their hatred of
* In "The Father, the Son and the Holy Guest Star", Marge has a brief
* In the Fats Waller song "Your Feet's Too Big", Waller liberally uses long, erudite words during the song, such as "Your pedal extremities really are obnoxious."
* In "The Fault In Our Cutie Marks", the CMC are discussing their cutie-mark consultation business.
* In the "Fear of Being Ugly" episode, Figaro plays scary music on a pipe organ in a
* In the featurette "Janie Get Your Gun", towards the end of it, when Woody is holding up Ms. Meany's (a.k.a. Calamity Jane's) train attached to her hat at the wedding reception, he falls into a hole and her wedding dress falls (or gets ripped) off, leaving her in her pink bloomers or pantalets, and mortified.
* In the February 2, 1999 strip, somebody threw away all of Jon's shirts except one that reads "I (heart) cats". Believing Garfield is responsible, Jon throws him outside; Odie then appears in the doorway wearing one of Jon's shirts and a malicious smile.
* In the "Fellas at the Frickin' FCC" musical number, Stewie responds to the mention of the FCC sending a warning to your mailbox by remarking that he can think of quite another place they should've stuck it first. While he's saying this, he is shown to have made a sculpture around the mailbox the warning letter has been inserted, which makes it all the more obvious that Stewie meant they can shove it up their asses.
* In "The Female Rambling Sailor", a woman goes to sea after her lover is pressed into naval service and drowns. She proves an exemplary sailor, and none of her crewmates suspect her identity until she dies in a fall from the rigging and they discover her 'female form'.
* In "The Festival", a masquerade festival is being held in a park near Madison High School.
* In the Festivus episode, Kramer brings home some leftover stock from the bagel shop. It's only after Jerry and George have tied in that he mentions that the homeless got first pick and these were the ones they wouldn't take,
* In the feudal era, this trope had an actual basis in policy. The busiest times for farmers (i.e. most people in that era) were spring and autumn (planting and harvest time, respectively); nobles were often forbidden (explicitly or implicitly) from
* In the fictionalized version in Martin Gross' "The Red President", the White House allows the Angleton figure ("John 'the Baptist' Davidson") to be framed and disgraced so the Soviets won't know that THEY know who the real mole is.
* In the field of electronic measurement instruments and experimental automation, OTOH, the virtual monopoly is held by National Instruments and Keithley Instruments, both American companies. Knockoffs of their products are widely made worldwide, particularly in Russia and China, but they still set the standards.

* In the field of mascots, we have the Leland Stanford Junior University's football team's. You would think, with the team name being the "Stanford Cardinal" (singular, in the sense of the color—as part of Stanford's conscious attempt to be the Harvard of the West, it's a straight rip-off of the Harvard Crimson) that you'd get something of that color, maybe a cardinal (as in a bird) or a cardinal (as in the Catholic kind) or maybe even just Leland Stanford, Jr. dressed up
* In the field of mental health, this is known as schizophasia, sometimes called "word salad". It is usually symptomatic of other serious mental conditions, including schizophrenia. Schizophasia also falls within the broader term of formal thought disorder, or FTD.
* In the field of poker, many of the top players can often tell what kind of hand an opponent has by analyzing their betting patterns. Thus, some can tell you what your hand is to the rank (sometimes even to the suit!) without you even giving them a classic tell.
* In the field, Softboiled and Milk Drink can be used to restore someone else's HP, at the cost of that same amount of HP from the user.
* In "The Field Trip", that once innocent of any wrongdoing Nazi scientist Professor Friedrich von Schlitz has become a proper member of the Red Panda's
* In the field, while the overall uniform may be standard-issue, things like boots, gloves and base layers will probably be personal to the individual. In Special Forces, where being able to do one's job effectively takes precedence over uniformity, even more autonomy may be granted to the point where, depending on the operation, the only similarity between soldiers will be that they're all probably wearing one colour in common.
* In the fifteenth episode of the second series anime, Yugi uses a monster called Catapult Turtle to launch a Fusion Monster, Gaia the Dragon Champion, at another monster, the Player Killer's Castle of Dark Illusions. This destroys the Dragon Champion on impact, causing Yugi to lose most of his Life Points (going from 1606 to 300 due to stats being changed between the manga) and the castle's flotation-ring to fall off, but it seemingly doesn't destroy the castle...until Yugi mentions that the Castle is now being held up by Yugi's Swords of Revealing Light (which were keeping all of the Player Killer's monsters paralyzed). Yugi ends his turn, ending the effect of SoRL, thus causing the destruction of the Castle...and all of the Player Killer's monsters, which were underneath and, due to the Player Killer's Chaos Shield, couldn't get out of the way in time. If these had been real, physical creatures engaged in a battle, this would be reasonably creative and entirely valid. But they're just cards in a card game, * in the fifth (and last) book of the series, the narrator's father is killed, and
* In the fifth arc, Natsuhi receives calls from 'the man from nineteen years ago', who blackmails her into incriminating behaviors. He continues to call even after the mainland lines are down. There are no other clues regarding him in any other arc, so it can't be certain that he is who he claims, or that he wasn't just Natsuhi's lie or delusion.
* In the Fifth Astral Era, three magocratic societies arose: Nym, Mhach and Amdapor, who used White Magic, Black Magic and Arcane (Scholar) magic respectively. These societies went to war with one another, leading into a conflict known as the War of the Magi that inevitably caused a great flood and destroyed civilization in the Sixth Umbral Era. Centuries later, most of the secrets and capabilities of the White, Black and Scholar mages have been lost, with most people eager to keep it that way. Red Mages, in fact, were created based on the idea of keeping Black and White magic balanced.
* In the fifth book, Lady Dustin reveals to Theon that if she gets her hands on
* In the fifth book, Skulduggery gets an artificial, magic face to cover his skull. Unfortunately, it starts malfunctioning, and at one point his face starts drifting across the skin on his head, leading to Valkyrie saying "You've got eyes on the back of your head, and I don't mean that as a compliment."
* In the fifth century BC, Carthaginian explorer Hanno the Navigator found “hairy and savage people” on an island off the western coast of Africa, whom his interpreters called “gorillai”. It’s possible they were not really gorillas, but they’re their namesake.

* In the fifth Disgaea game an elite necromancer zombifies entire worlds and her
* In the Fifth Doctor's first season, the boys are in yellow and the girls are in purple.
* In the fifth episode of season 1, Locke does this to Jack when he wanders off of a cliff looking for his dead father.
* In the fifth film, one of Umbridge's decrees imposes that "proper dress and decorum is to be maintained at all times." The students don't care to follow this rule since everyone hates Umbridge; one scene has Umbridge causally walking down a hallway and using her magic to tighten a student's loose necktie
* In the fifth game, barbarians' unique skill is severely weakening enemy's magic. They themselves also cannot learn it and get war cries instead.
* In the fifth game, the priestesses of Mount Hikami are sealed in boxes to hold back the Black Water of the other world, with a special few given arranged 'ghost marriages' so that they'd draw power from the thought of being
* In the fifth generation, Pawniard and Bisharp have them. (being basically
* In the fifth movie, the God figure doesn't use identifiable technology, but is planet-bound, leading to Kirk's line "What would God do with a starship?"
* In the fifth movie, when Umbridge is at the height of her power, one of the many draconian rules she passes orders students of the opposite sex to stay a set distance from one another at all times. Another scene also shows her casually using magic to force apart two students making out on a bench.
* In the fifth Scream Fortress event, the Mann brothers have died and the mercs job is to push the other brother's corpse into a portal to Hell. Said portal was discovered by a mining operation taking place in an Indian Burial Ground, which the Mann brothers
* In the fifth season a game of The Floor is Lava takes a few hours to create a punk-themed post-apocalyptic setting, with culturally distinct factions and legends.
* In the fifth season episode "A Tragedy of Telepaths", this trope is first used, then stretched WAY out by Garibaldi when he points out we divide up our history by the wars — the Hundred Years War, the War of 1812, the first three World Wars... the Dilgar War, the War of the Shining Star, the Minbari War, the Shadow War. Of these "future" wars, only the third World War and the War of the Shining Star were not previously described in-series — the Dilgar War was mentioned first in "Deathwalker", and the last two were actually
* In the fifth season episode "My Missed Perception," The Janitor gives The Todd a "four-story atomic wedgie" off the side of the hospital using The Todd's banana-hammock underwear.
* In the fifth season finale, Aria, Emily, Hanna, and Spencer are captured and held in a large underground structure, where they find Mona, who had been missing and presumed dead since midseason. At first they're forced to play along in a mock high school prom, but when they use that to try to escape, they're separated and subjected to mind games/mental torture for weeks before they escape/are rescued. During the rescue, it turns out there was yet another girl in the bunker, who had been missing for two and a half years.
* In the fifth season premiere "The Crimson Ticket," the F.B.I. and C.B.I. agents have a throwdown regarding the events of the previous season's finale.
* In the fifth season, the Others use fire arrows to attack the mass of redshirt survivors
* In the fifth series of the revived show, the date in which the universe was
* In the fifties through seventies, politicians loved brutalist architecture because they wanted to be associated with an idealized vision of the future. It became dated quickly, and many people found it to be, well, brutal.
* In the fight against the Screaming Author, Akira and his companion end up wrapped in its wires and are dangled from the ceiling. They have to find a way to fight against the spirit despite being upside-down and only with a limb or two available.
* In "The Fight", beacons are being released to help Voyager navigate its way out of

* In "The Fighter," black boxer Joe Kegan goes up against local white men in almost every fight. The only time race is mentioned is when he explains to Charles that the reason he got into boxing is so he could punch white men without getting "hung." No one ever mentions his race, not even when he and his manager are renting a room.
* In "The Fight", Gumball is escaping Tina and builds an enormous barricade behind a wall that she instantly knocks down.
* In the fight with Beth'tilac, a few members must fight her on top of her web while the rest fight down below. However, it is possible to only send a tank and a healer up, and it is possible (albeit difficult) to send no one up at all.
* In the Filipino dub, James and Alex's voice actors are married in real life.
* In the filksong "Compound Interest" by Duane Elms and Bill Roper, the singer and his fellow astronauts not only put money away for the future like the Manticoran colonists above, but arranged for the interest after 500 years to be applied to developing FTL —
* In the filler of the first anime series, during the flashback when the Japanese team played in a European tournament, Japan played against England, whose team used the Union Jack flag, rather than the St George's Cross, the flag used in sporting events, due to the fact all the countries of the United Kingdom normally participate with their own flags, rather than using the Union Jack flag, who is normally used in political events outside sports.
* In the filler Zanpakutou arc, the shinigami and Ichigo have to come up with a plan to locate and save Captain-Commander Yamamoto who has been captured by the
* In the film adaptation, Red Grant's real first name is Donald. In the original novel, it's Donovan.
* In the film adaptation, Sauron was given a full costume for the prologue, and was even intended to appear in the climax and duel Aragorn, before filmmakers realized how goofy that would be and digitally replaced him with a big troll. Still follows the trope though, in that we never see what he looks like underneath his armor.
* In the film, although not the book, Ingram spots a large group of escaped slaves in a field. They go down a road and a few seconds later there's shooting and screaming and Ingram has to run himself to avoid some Home Guard men riding that way. It's unclear all of the escaped slaves were killed, some were shot and others just recaptured, or some of them might have managed to escape while the others were being shot and/or recaptured.
* In the film (and the novel), wounded Robert Jordan stays behind with a machine gun to hold off the advancing troops so the others (and the woman he loves) can escape.
* In the film, an SS officer tortures an injured Major Franklin to try to make the others talk.
* In the Film Club round (titles of film suitable for an audience of [profession/interest]), Graeme Garden always finds some variation on the title
* In the film "Countdown to Heaven", the Twin Tower building is set to explode with Conan and the Detective Boys trapped in the room with the bomb.
* In the film "Crossed Swords", a version of "The Prince and the Pauper", the Prince insists to the man who came to his defense that he was the Prince and he receives the reply "yes, and I'm Ivan the Terrible".
* In "The Filmed Adventures of Detective Murdoch", Murdoch is baffled by the idea of a moving picture based on his cases.
* In "The Filmed Adventures of Detective William Murdoch", the right-handed version of this gag appears at a movie theatre as Murdoch has Crabtree sit in the seat of the murder victim and turn his head as if reacting to the film. Crabtree even speaks abashedly of confusing his right and the detective's.
* In the film, Georg von Trapp is a strict disciplinarian who drills his children like Navy sailors with his whistle. In real life, the Captain was a highly permissive free-range parent, and Maria was the disciplinarian. The whistle did exist in real life, but was used to communicate over the large distances of the estate, since the captain has a very weak voice.

* In the film he was never seen during the Third Age, although the giant fiery eyeball was mistakenly identified as his physical form by some viewers, including the 'Sauron blogger' who stated "I am not an evil lighthouse."
* In the film itself, Olaf actually pretty decent on the ice; it's Anna who proves to be the klutz, slipping constantly and having to hold on to
* In the film Jacob responds: "This isn't a lifestyle choice, I was born like this." Through a bit of conversation, it becomes clear that she has no problems with
* In the film, King Baldwin IV, though disfigured by leprosy, is pretty much functional until after the incident at Kerak, at which point he falls into a rapid decline and dies shortly thereafter. In reality, the progression of his condition was much more drawn out, leaving him an invalid long before his death; he would not have been able to lead an army into battle for the last several
* In the film, Leonidas claims the only reason the Athenians want their help is that they can't fight the Persians alone. In real life, Athens had not only fought and won against the Persians before but left the Persians they killed for the late arriving Spartan army-which Leonidas happened to be leading-to bury.
* in the films, anyway to comply with Order 66. The Expanded Universe did include the examples of Jedi surviving Order 66 because their clones refused to obey the order, but Aayla wasn't one of them.
* In the films beginning Plunketts young partner refuses to give him up, despite being tortured by Chance.
* In the films, Blade became a half-vampire because his pregnant mother was bitten by a vampire. In the first film, he later also meets her as a vampire. However, it may be that this variant was too savage for the creators of a children's series, so that they would leave open the possibility of being born in the natural way.
* In the film's climactic final game, Vernon is going up against legendary underground player The Dean, who he discovers is using a marked deck. In the final hand he deals the Dean Kings and Queens with one Queen in the hole and himself two Jacks with a seven in the hole. With $2,000,000 in the pot at showdown Vernon switches his hole seven for a Jack for three-of-a-kind. However, the Dean has switched out his hole King for a Queen make a higher three-of-a-kind.
* In the film, Sharpe pins the French colonel and calls for him to surrender, but the Frenchman refuses to surrender to a "deserter".
* In the film, Sonic mockingly calls Robotnik "Eggman", as a reference to his moniker in the videogames. In the novelization, this is absent; instead Sonic calls Robotnik "Robuttnik", the same derogatory nickname used in
* In the film's opening sequence, Ralph and Marian Wyman are sitting next to Stuart and Claire Kane at a concert. When Marian and Claire's amazement at seeing
* In the film's original draft, Officer Ward was going to be separated from his wife. In Jakoby and Ward's first ride together, Jakoby says that Ward doesn't know anything about love and that he hasn't had sex in a long time. However, that whole subplot is dropped from the final film, where Ward is still
* In the films, the conjoined Voldemort/Quirrell was portrayed using CGI. In this show, it's portrayed by... the two actors standing back-to-back beneath a gigantic robe.
* In the films themselves, the original plan to deal with the Rebels in
* In the film, the dwarves are imprisoned by the elves for only one night before Bilbo frees them. The novel had them there for three weeks.
* In the film, the family escapes Austria by climbing over a mountain range to get into Switzerland. This is highly implausible; you'd have to traverse all of Tirol to get from Salzburg to Switzerland, which means a
* In the film, the immigration officer's sycophantic assistant ends up stranded on their homeworld as a slave. He seems to be very comfortable in his new role as sycophantic assistant to the alien overlord.
* In the film, Von Trapp angsts a litle bit over whether to accept a German commission but quickly decides against it because the Nazis are evil. The real Captain Von Trapp agonised a

* In the film, Von Trapp married Maria in 1938, right before having to escape Austria. In real life, they married in 1926 and had two children of their own before leaving.
* In the film, when Pain and Panic are pretending to be children needing Hercules to rescue them, one uses roman numerals by pleading "somebody call IX-I-I" (saying each letter).
* In the final act, it turns out anyone becoming the club president gains Medium Awareness, and Sayori also approaches this, but Monika steps in before she does any harm. If you delete "monika.chr" early from the game files, Sayori will take her place and instantly suffer the same fate, which results in a Non Standard Game Over
* In the final act of the Punk Hazard arc, the Straw Hats (and Law) have to team up with
* In the final act, there's a disagreement between Gerard and the Chicago Police Department. First, he questions their conclusion that "Kimble killed his wife for the money", and soon starts finding evidence proving Kimble's innocence. Later, after Dr. Kimble is believed to have shot a police officer on the 'L' (which was actually Sykes, who Kimble was able to disarm): the CPD wants to kill him, and Gerard and his team want to take him alive. The blood is so bad that Gerard actually gets pinned down by sniper fire from a police chopper while chasing Kimble on the roof of the hotel.
* In the final against Yugi, Marik is fused to the Winged Dragon of Ra due to his creation of a Shadow Game, so is able to use a De-Fusion card to separate himself. But Marik was only fused to Ra
* In the final arc, Asahi Saiba, Joichiro's disciple and surrogate son of sorts, decided to take Joichiro's advice "the secret to becoming a great chef is meeting a woman that makes you want to give all the food you make to her." as meaning
* In the final arc of the Manga, all the girls receive a final power up giving them uniforms that are completely identical apart from color and hairstyle (even the unique earrings and shoes that the second set of uniforms let them keep are now consistent, though Jupiter, Venus and Chibi-Moon do get to keep the items worn in their hair)—except Eternal Sailor Moon, whose uniform now has massive bow-shaped angel wings in place of the old back bow, an extra layer to her skirt (all the other senshi have two; Moon has three), a front bow stylized as another set of four wings, a total lack of a tiara that reveals the crescent moon on her head, little wing-like accessories on her gloves, and several heart- and crescent-moon-shaped decorations while all the other girls have stars. Even Chibi-Moon, who in her Super form wore a pink version of Super Sailor Moon's outfit, gets the same uniform as everyone else, right down to her brooch being a star.
* In the final arc of the manga, over forty thousand members of the Shinobi Alliance died, which is half their total forces. Only a handful of them
* In the final battle against Killian and his goons, Tony summons the Mark 42 again and dramatic music swells as it flies in, only for it to hit a railing and fall to pieces.
* In the final battle for the silo, the car lights up as Striders attack from every point.
* In the final battle, he boasts that Chell isn't the first test subject he broke out of Cryo-Sleep and sent off to get a portal gun. Just the first to survive. There's a chance he's lying given the circumstances, though.
* In the final battle of Act 4, Rudolf mentions that if he should fall, the others should lay down their arms and surrender. Sure enough, the defeat of Rudolf concludes the map. Additionally,
* In the final battle of Volume 8, Fria manages to repel Cinder, herself a Maiden, with a blizzard so cold nobody could reach her without freezing, but dies shortly afterward of old age, managing to be the first Maiden of the series to go out on her own terms and pick her successor.
* In "The Final Battle: Part 2", Albedo as Negative Ultimate Humungousaur gets mobbed by Vilgax's army of Bioids as Humungousaurs. He did a fight them off once, but then got overpowered.
* In the final battles, main characters are armed with photon pistol and photon gun and use both — in Violet's case, at once.

* In the final battle, they fall victim to this again: when they enter a city, they spy a lone enemy tank. They chase it to gun it down before the rest of the enemy team gets there...
* In the final book, Tavi struggles to tear down the gates of one of the great cities of Alera, which are centuries old and have been continuously fortified and strengthened since their construction. He does manage to bring them down—as well as everything in a hundred foot radius. He doesn't say anything, but does play it off like part of the plan, to look more impressive.
* In the final boss fight against Riku. In this case it can happen any time, at random, and the only warning you get is a slightly different sound effect and a flash, before any further hit trips the counter. God help you if you habitually mash the buttons from trying to pull off long combos...
* In the final boss with Lord Brevon, if you die after a phase of the three-phase boss, the game puts you back at the beginning of the current phase, recognizing
* In the final case on the Patrol desk, Captain Donnelly asks Cole to interrogate the suspect in hopes of obtaining a confession...even though Cole has had zero training in doing so.
* In the final chapter, as Hummin and Seldon discuss how to go about using psychohistory, Hummin recommends that he uses two foundations to his psychohistory, so that if one fails, the other can be used to carry on. Seldon would be inspired by this to create the First and Second Foundations.
* In the final chapter, Eren reveals that his true plan was to wipe out 80% of Humanity and be killed by the Alliance in order to set them up as heroes and establish peace between Paradis and the surviving 20%. This revelation creates several massive
* In the final chapter, Hummin admits to having another plan, on another planet, that would provide a hope for humanity in case psychohistory fails. He is referring to Gaia.
* In the final chapter Scott asks Jean how she feels about hot, steamy showers. Jean is open to the idea.
* In the final confrontation between Thrall and Garrosh, Thrall states that Garrosh failed the Horde as its Warchief, leading them down a dishonorable path. Garrosh tosses away his weapon and begins laying into Thrall with his fists as he bears his soul to him.
* In the final cutscene of the "Giant Tale" questline, Andre the Giant thinks that everything the hero did up to the point of claiming the key from his Giant Necklace is insane (he even thinks the hero poisoned his giant son Andre Jr.), but the hero and Crychek tell him not to worry as his son is fine and just taking a nap in his soup.
* In the final days of their known existence, it's said that many Dwemer didn't agree with the general idea to
* In the final dream sequence, your skills throw everything they have into winning back Dora/Dolores' heart. They're beaten and humiliated, one after another.
* In the final dungeon of Chapter 7, the party splits into two groups of four, with Kou and
* In the finale, Amanda falls to the ground a moment after a snapping sound is heard in the background, but it isn't clear whether that sound is her neck snapping or if she's only been momentarily knocked out (some blood on her face could indicate the latter).
* In the Finale Arc, Rainbow Dash notices there's something wrong with the world and tries to figure out what is going on and how to fix it. It turns out she is not the Rainbow Dash the main story has been following, but Nightmare Manacle, Rainbow's
* In the Finale Arc, the Cutie Mark Crusaders call out Phobia for constantly showing up just to give them cryptic advice and then ditching them. He lectures them on how while they have their own adventure to save the world, he's working behind the scenes to save individual lives and set up ways for them to win. He even mentions the trope Hero of Another Story by name and points out even if they don't know what the other heroes are doing, they are equally important. Later, the CMC just barely miss running into the Doctor, who cured Lickety Split of being a werewolf. Daring Do, Flash Sentry, and others also have individual adventures saving people.

* In the Finale Arc, Venus learns that Tootsie is wielding her murdered son Cupid's Bow. Venus attacks the child and tries to kill her, accusing her of robbing and defiling her son's grave. Tootsie had no idea who Cupid was and had been given the bow as a gift by the villains. She eventually realizes she was overreacting and sends Tootsie an apology gift.
* In the finale, Beast uses a handful of hypodermic needles of his serum to suppress his mutant genes, in order to hide from a Sentinel's sensors. In the finale of
* In the finale, BJ and Hawkeye give Col. Potter formal full salute with full attention as their final gesture to him before they depart their separate ways.
* In the finale, Carlton does this to Will in an effort to make him smile.
* In the finale, Colleen Wing, Misty Knight, and Claire Temple take on Bakuto, and unlike their duel in
* In the finale every major villain up to that point had been fighting with the girls and amongst each other to get their hands on a key which would grant them legal dominion over the world. When the girls finally manage to get it back to the Mayor, he goes off on a speech about how they learned a valuable lesson about responsibility. Mojo Jojo takes this time to walk up behind him and ask to see it. Mayor casually hands it over.
* In the finale, Lt. Hoshi is later promoted to Admiral in the wake of a mutiny led by the man who otherwise would have got the job had he not snapped, and everyone else that would have stood between him and the position had also been killed off by that point. Not a bad finish for the guy who entered the series as the
* in the finale movie, and Kevin will give them jawbreakers, which is lampshaded.
* In the finale of Arc 4, Blues reveals to Robert that they are brothers.
* In the finale of season 1, Reinhard Heydrich attempts to assassinate Adolf Hitler by forcing the remorseful Rudolf Wegener, one of the few men whom Hitler still trusts, to kill him with one of the many weapons stashed around Hitler's castle.
* In the finale of Season 2 Luther has to get rid of a psychotic gangster killed in self-defense by the woman he's hiding in his flat. At the same time, an ex-cop working as an enforcer is trying to find out what happened to his boss. At first, Luther hides the body on the roof of his apartment complex but has to get rid of it when the enforcer comes around, dragging it into the lift in a huge sports bag. The enforcer catches Luther locking the trunk of his car and forces him to open it at gunpoint, revealing the bag...is full of sports equipment. Later the police answer an anonymous tip-off and find the body hidden in the enforcer's car. When he realises he's been set up the enforcer flees, expressing admiration for Luther's cunning.
* In the finale of Season 5, Dawn realizes that she is going to be sacrificed in a ritual to open up a portal and bring about an apocalypse; she responds by calmly folding her clothing and placing it on a chair, in case that is the only thing left of her after the ritual is done.
* In the finale of season eight, it turns out that the angel Metatron, who advised the brothers on the last trial to seal Hell and was guiding Castiel in another set of trials to seal off the now corrupt Heaven, was not as harmless as he appeared — he didn't warn the Winchesters that completing their trials would kill Sam, and the trials he was helping Castiel with were actually components of a spell to banish
* In the finale of the first film, the reason for it is that they both
* In the finale, one of the two contestants is "hired". Both possible versions of the outcome are filmed. In addition, a "walk of victory" is filmed in which the contestant walks out from the headquarters to Lord Sugar's Rolls Royce, as opposed to the cab, followed by an interview inside the car. During the six-month wait before the episode is aired, the two contestants then take up temporary jobs at Lord Sugar's businesses, to help him make his decision. In the final week before the episode is aired, Lord Sugar informs the candidates of his final decision in private and the appropriate footage is added to the final episode.

* In the final episode, Beecher unknowingly kills Vern Schillinger, in a
* In the final episode, "Chosen", before a final attack on the evil lair, several of the gang are shown looking at a map, discussing where they're standing, and what they're planning to do. It turns out that they're not planning the final battle which may well decide the fate of the world; they're playing
* In the final episode "Not Fade Away", Team Angel (who are running Wolfram & Hart at the time) do their own purge of the Circle of the Black Thorn, the
* In the final episode of Life is Strange 2, Sean can find a photograph of
* In the final episode of Mahou Sentai Magiranger, Magi Red has crossed the Despair Event Horizon, with his older siblings and fellow teammates trying to reawaken his confidence by pointing out a single flower that had grown despite the main villain, N. Ma, having devoured all life in existence.
* In the final episode of Season 10, the context of the last forty episodes is turned on its head when the Director finally removes his
* In the final episode of Season 1, Jack kills Andre and Victor Drazen before the episode is half over, leading people to think that he's solved the main plotline. He gets to talk to his daughter, and promises that everything's alright...then, when he's driving back to his office, he gets the surveillance footage for Jamey Farrell's holding cell when she died earlier in the day, and realizes that Nina is the mole.
* In the final episode of season 2, Karen Page becomes one, and the first person to whom Matt openly admitted the secret of his own volition.
* In the final episode of Season 7, on the night before the big showdown with the First Evil, Buffy and Spike spend the night together in Spike's corner of the basement, and they are seen cuddling in bed. However, the scene echoes an episode not long before in which they were cuddling in bed and it was explicitly stated that nothing else happened, so it's never clear whether they had sex or not. When asked, Joss Whedon
* In the final episode of season three, he tries again and tells Guinevere: "I just want you to know... if I never see you again..." but she cuts him off with her assurances that they
* In the final episode of series 4, Murdoch himself suggests he needs one and that the Inspector could use one as well. Brackenreid knows it's a big deal because Murdoch drinks only very, very rarely.
* In the final episode of series two, John, Mrs. Hudson, and Lestrade are all threatened, but
* In the final episode of TDA, Chris shows the audience that Duncan would wake up in the middle of the night to tuck his teammates in while they were sleeping. All together now: awwww.
* In the final episode of the first season, Ryoko tries to become this with Tenchi via kidnapping him in an effort to get him to be a bank robber with her(and thus not face Kagato in battle). Tenchi, however, manages to talk her out of it.
* In the final episode of the revival season, for the Invention Exchange Max presents the Rip Taylor Urn Cannon, which fires ashes like confetti, designed to make funerals more interesting.
* In the final episode of the Season the Legion of Doom when trying to destroy the Superfriends with a solar flare accidentally destroy the world, including themselves. However
* In the final episode of the series, Steven talks about visiting all
* In the final episode of the show, Buffy comes down to the basement where Spike is staying, noting that Faith is using her bed and that she has nowhere else to sleep. Given that he's still annoyed that she'd kissed Angel recently, he initially refutes her but caves as soon as she turns away to sadly go back upstairs, offering to share his cot with her. Cue the
* In the final episode, Riddhe has a rather traumatic Newtype awakening during battle, so Mineva and Marida try this to calm him down.

* In the final episodes of the series, Dorothy finds a second love with Blanche's widowed uncle, Lucas Hollingsworth.
* In the final episode, "Star Warners", the title characters are re-imagined as robots in a parody of
* In the final episodes, they abandon the casita partly because they'd looted all of the stores in the area. (The live explosives and dead people in the walls were the other reasons). They plan to move to the resort city of Cancun, but ultimately change their mind when they find a sustainable farm with an orchard and a herd of goats.
* In the final episode the giant robot Dib pilots has 2 cannons one in its chest the other in its hair.
* In the final episode, the townspeople confront Wanda after Agatha "wakes them up," forcing Wanda to see just how much mental pain she was inflicting on them by making them act out roles in her sitcom fantasies. Originally, they were going to swarm her like zombies and attack her, but this was dropped due to COVID-19 filming delays. Jac Schaeffer found this change to be more psychologically compelling as it gave the residents more of a voice.
* In the final episode, Willow has to do some powerful magic, and tells her lesbian lover Kennedy
* In the finale, Shawn moves away from Santa Barbara and leaves a DVD for Lassiter where he confesses the truth. By this point, however, the two have grown to consider each other friends; Lassiter doesn't allow the recording to progress past "I am not" before he stops it and destroys the disc.
* In the finale song, "Us Against The Universe", Isabella takes a verse to thank all the folks who worked on all the animation.
* In the finale, Steven himself decides the best thing for himself would be to move out of Beach City and start exploring the country.
* In the finale, the Builders are pushed to desperation by the Resistance.
* In the finale, there is a standoff at the checkpoint into the enclave for the elites between a police detachment that has been ordered to shoot anyone trying to go through the checkpoint and a crowd mostly made of non-elite inhabitants of Madrid whose main revendication is to have the children detained for scientific research taking place in the enclave given back to their families. Meanwhile, it just so happens that another set of characters has freed the children. The leader of the checkpoint's police detachment gives the crowd a few seconds to disperse before shooting starts and starts a countdown, which he almost finishes before getting interrupted by a greeting from the fastest runner among the children. Whose parents happen to be close enough to the front of the crowd for them to see each other, to boot.
* In "The Finale", the Wattersons are charged $800,000 in damages done to Elmore.
* In the finale, Tony reveals that he's been building a counter: the Prometheus suit which, even incomplete, is powerful enough that its conventional weaponry is described as merely 'punctuation'. The completed version was designed to handle 'planetary-scale emergencies'.
* In the finale: "When it goes off, I'll be fine. It only affects computers, remember? And I, am a motherfucking ghost" for Church, and for Washington: "Emp? You have got to be fucking j-"
* In the Final Four, they faced Cal. Not as much of a Goliath as the other two, but still a good team and favored to beat the Cardinals. After falling behind by 10 points at the half, Louisville made a
* In "The Final Judgment Of Beavis'' Saint Peter is this when Beavis dreams he has died and is having everything he's ever done in life, most of it negative, judged:
* In the final loop, characters who spend more time with King Joffrey, like his Silver Knights, become capable of sensing what he calls 'the Song of Existence', a sort of metaphysical manifestation of the will of the living world battling against the opposing, dark force he calls 'the Silence', represented by the Red Comet.
* In the final match of the final event in the WEC promotion, Anthony Pettis and Benson Henderson had split the first four rounds going into the fifth. With time running down, Pettis unleashed one of the craziest moves in MMA history, jumping off the fence and nailing Henderson in the face with the same foot. It somehow didn't knock Henderson out (though it did send him to the canvas), but did seal a decision win for Pettis and won him the promotion's lightweight championship.

* In the final mecha battle, Hiromu grants this power to OWN Mecha by diverting all energy to the legs as a desperate and successful gambit.
* In the final mission before the Epilogue of both games, Edgar Ross leads an army of government men to kill members of the Van der Linde gang at their respective home/hideout. In the first game, it's the U.S. Army attacking Beecher's Hope to kill John with Uncle being an added collateral casualty. In the second game, it's the Pinkerton Detective Agency attacking Beaver Hollow to kill any gang members that haven't already fled or haven't been executed already.
* In the final mission of the Katie Hannon task force, players are expected to beat their way through hordes of
* In the final mission of the Protoss mini-campaign, we discover, to the horror of the last remaining Protoss (and by extension, life in the universe not.
* In the Final Mix version for the same game, Sora wears a black Santa Claus hat in Christmas Town that also covers his eye, though the right camera angle still makes the eye (but not the mask) visible. The magic from the mask is now transferred to the hat.
* In the final moments of Game 2 of the 2018 NHL Stanley Cup Finals, with his Washington Capitals leading 3-2, defender Brooks Orpik took a nasty slash from the Vegas Golden Knights' Erik Haula that severed half of his left pinky. Fortunately, his finger was reattached without much issue.
* In the final months of WWII the German army was withdrawing across the Rhine. The
* In the final part of the Cyan Desert, Chloe gets blessed by a rabbit priest with a silver unicorn horn who calls himself
* In the final Rising Sun mission, the Soviets use increasingly improbable uses of this trope, spamming first
* In the final round, there would be audience members supporting the gumshoes. This trend continued in the first few tapings of the actual series.
* In the finals against the Wolfbats, the Wolfbats cheat all over the place with illegal head shots, ice, and mixing rocks with water. Since they bought off the ref, the Fire Ferrets can't retaliate because he'd surely call them out in a heartbeat.
* In the final scene, Dr. Strangelove suddenly stands up and screams "I can walk!" delightedly. Supposedly, Sellers forgot that Strangelove was supposed to be a cripple, and shouted out the line to cover his mistake.
* In the final scene of "A Day in Beaumont", a young couple approach the local sheriff and tell him that they witnessed the crash of a
* In the final scene of "Cold Reading", Nelson Westbrook and the cast of
* In the final scene of "Double Helix", Dr. Martin Nodel, his son Paul, Hope and six students board the alien ship which will take them to the homeworld of the race that seeded Earth with their DNA 60 million years ago. It also serves as a
* In the final scene of "Now and Then, Part Four", Captain Pike sees a
* In the final scene of the entire series, after an entire season's worth of
* In the final scene of "The Gun", the alien calling himself Donald Finley is at another gun show trying to recruit mercenaries to fight for his people in their ongoing war.
* In the final scene of "The Hellgramite Method", Miley Judson, who is finally sober, offers a light to
* In the final scene of "The New Breed", the cut on Judy Ledbetter's finger is healed within seconds, indicating that her fiancée Dr. Andy Groenig passed the nanobots onto her while they were having sex and that she will experience the same transformation that he went through.
* In the final scene of "The Surrogate", Dr. Deanston introduces a young surrogate mother named Debbie, who has recently been implanted with an alien parasite, to the surrogacy support group in his clinic.

* In the final scene of "Under the Bed", one of the child snatching creatures is hiding under the bed of a little girl in
* In the final season, Arya and the Hound depart from Winterfell together (on horses) toward King's Landing, with the armies of Daenerys' and Jon's alliance leaving after them toward the same destination (most of them on foot), along the same road. The two of them end up arriving at the capital to find it already besieged by the army which marched out behind them, meaning a thousands-strong force overtook and passed them with enough time to set up a siege (and for Dany and her court to travel to Dragonstone and back twice on boats). Neither group ran into any complications or delays shown on screen along the way. Further complicating the situation is that Jaime, who left Winterfell a significant amount of time after Dany and Jon's armies, ends up arriving and being captured after the siege is set up but before Arya and the Hound show up.
* In the final season, Barney has gotten so drunk that the alcohol acts as a
* In the final season, B'Elanna Torres, a human/Klingon hybrid, gets pregnant by her human husband Tom Paris. Their daughter Miral is born in the series finale. This becomes a problem for a Klingon cult that encounters the
* In the final season, Chandler accidentally reveals to a step-kid that he's adopted. Then he traumatizes the kid even worse by revealing Santa Claus isn't real. And this was already after he attempted to make a joke to the kid's foster parents about them being infertile. In all seriousness, he and Ross were made for this trope.
* In the final season, Dr. Mike herself is shot by a man who hates doctors. She too becomes agoraphobic for the remainder of the episode before finally snapping out of it.
* In the final season he starts a contracting business and excels at his management role there. This appears to be a mix of actually caring about his job and staffing the company with employees who appreciate his no-nonsense style (many of which are from his own family).
* In the final season, Jin is about to be attacked by some guys when
* In the final season, Locke/the Smoke monster tries to manipulate Kate and Claire into killing each other over Aaron.
* In the final season of the original run Will hits it off with a Canadian guy whose visa is about to run out. Grace agrees to marry him so he and Will can have more time together. After the ceremony they discover the guy is a complete
* In the final season of the US version, the characters attend Roy's wedding to a woman we've never seen before. He seems to have changed into a boring nice guy, but a bit of the
* In the final season opener "The Beginning of the End", King Sombra does this in part 1 when he takes over the Crystal Empire. Done again by Grogar at the very end of part 2 when he uses Sombra's defeat as an example of failure to unite the Mane Six's past foes against them.
* In the final seasons, Samuel buries Claire and Noah together in an RV underground, so that Claire can watch Noah suffocate and die.
* In the final season, Vala gives birth to Adria, who is introduced as a plot point. Adria is an engineered leader of the bad guys who grows to adulthood in just a handful of episodes.
* In the final seconds of the championship game, never mind that Russ switched places with Goldberg to get the shot off at the end of the game, which involved him wearing goalie equipment (non-goalie players cannot wear goalie equipment) — under
* In the final sequence, you can attempt to go up to the attic and close the door, but Bernard will say that Purple Tentacle might lock it and trap them up there. There is no reason to go up there in the first place, so it's surprising that there's a specific line to deal with such a situation.
* In the final shootout to decide the tournament winner of D2, neither Fulton's nor Gunnar Stahl's penalty shots should have counted as they both clearly come to a complete stop and then shoot. During a shootout or penalty shot, the puck must always move forward.

* In the final space battle, one of the Star Destroyers in the background is hit by a laser bolt from a rebel Calamari Cruiser. The laser bolt doesn't look particularly strong, and the Star Destroyer doesn't appear to be suffering from any visible damage, but regardless the whole ship gets consumed by an explosion like it's
* In the final spoof trailer for the film, Pepe says "It's Twilight. Almost time for Breaking Prawn." Not only does he address the audience "Get it?" but then a narrator explains that Pepe is a shrimp, also called a prawn.
* In the final walk up to the final boss, the monsters of the Underground will tell you the greatest tragedy of the underground, the death of the first human to fall and the monster prince's death at the hands of humans when he left to fulfill his sibling's last wish. On the No Mercy run, this is replaced with Flowey giving a chilling account of how his lack of empathy and compassion turned him into the sociopathic monster he currently is.
* In "The Finger," a man murders his mistress, then sets up a fake kidnapping to make it look like someone else did it.
* In the Finnish Army, almost all conscripts who are selected to become engineers do have some extent of engineering or mechanic background already in the civilian life. Almost all of those who are trained to become reserve officers, are engineering university or college students.
* In the Finnish version, the judges decided to let one contestant go, because there was absolutely nothing they could do to help him.
* In the "fire alarm" scene, a Minion tears through the wall with a pair of axes, right next to the door. Another follows through the hole with a hose, and then a third (carrying a megaphone and
* In the "Fire and Freezing" episode, one of the facts is that fire stations are now often built one story high to avoid spending time getting downstairs, even by way of the pole. In "Inland Revenue," when fireman's poles are mentioned again, Al Murray asks why they don't just build them one story high if speed is such a concern. Stephen and the other panellists come up with reasons like needing room for the fire engines, and nobody seems to remember learning otherwise.
* In "The Fire Bending Masters," Aang tells Zuko that "I don't care what the others say, you're pretty smart." Zuko looks happy about the praise for a moment... then realizes what it implies.
* In the Firefox browser, Ctrl-N starts a new window. However, if you happen to be using Hotmail, Ctrl-N starts a new email message.
* In the Firelands, Ragnaros gains a fourth phase on Heroic, healing to half health and using entirely new mechanics.
* In the Fire Nation, the ranking officer can call for a truce at any time, but they will
* In "The Fires of Pharos", Starbase 13 is a frequent target of space pirates, including Orions, Arcturans, Khodini and renegade humans. After Kaaj discovers that the Pharos siteworld is rich in dilithium so pure that it does not need to be refined after being mined, he convinces these disparate groups to band together under his leadership so that they can breach Starbase 13's defenses and gain access to the dilithium.
* In The Fires of Pompei, it's revealed that the reason the eruption of Vesuvius was a fixed point was that
* In the Fire Temple, you can actually leave the boss room, provided you have not jumped out onto the battle platform yet.
* In the first act, Donna Donna and Blondie have a duet, "Sadness, Woe" that even the
* In the first act, Sheriff Rollins, while investigating the crash of the prison bus and the train derailment that resulted, is
* In the first ad of a T*Mobile ad campaign, their mascot-spokeswoman trades in her girl-next-door pink dress for a pink-and-black motorcycle jumpsuit. Justified in that she's going motorcycle riding (as a metaphor for the company's high-speed wireless network).
* In the first Africa special, the presenters (having bought used cars and successfully crossed Botswana) sit down to decide whose car was ultimately the best. Richard Hammond clearly expects his 1963 Opel Kadett ("Oliver") to win, since "he" made the journey unmodified, though the car did develop some problems after an unsuccessful attempt to ford a river. The other two presenters give the award to a Volkswagen Beetle instead, as it followed them as the backup vehicle and had

* In the First Age there was the Forest Elf realm of Doriath. Technically, it was one of the safest places at the time in Middle-Earth due to a magical barrier created by its Queen Melian, meaning evil creatures couldn't enter. However, the barrier meant people who weren't invited would often get lost in the woods and die. Similar to Babes in the Wood, the twin princes Eluréd and Elurín are abandoned in the woods by the servants of Celegorm when the sons of Fëanor sacked Doriath and their father King Dior was killed. Fëanor's eldest son Maedhros repented and tried to find them but was unable to. It is left unclear what happened to them, though there is a story that says the birds and beasts led them to safety.
* In the first All-Stars season, Eric & Danielle were forced together by
* In the first American Civil War video, George Washington shows up in a meeting held by Abraham Lincoln to discuss his strategy and claim he’s the best president of the US. In the second American Civil War video, the Confedarates are seen with a
* In the first (and only canon) episode of the third season, John Castaway was voiced by Alan Cumming. In subsequent appearances, he was voiced by Scott Cleverdon. This didn't seem particularly significant, until the comic book series (canon unlike the rest of the season) revealed that Castaway is actually Jon Canmore, who was voiced by Cleverdon.
* In the first and second seasons, Benny owns a 1969 Dodge Coronet R/T (fitted with a hood from a 1969 Plymouth Roadrunner). Another very valuable and sought-after piece of muscle-car history that is destroyed by Lagoon Company.
* In the first anime Rei tries to invoke this trope when she develops a crush on Mamoru, by attempting to run into his arms and blush accordingly. It totally doesn't work — he steps on her when she falls. Rei, ever the trooper, goes with it anyway.
* In the first anime, the villain Nephrite does this with Naru after he rescues her from Zoisite, which is what starts his
* In the first anime, Zoisite is always surrounded by swirling cherry blossom petals when
* In the first appearance of Judge Death, Dredd and a squad of Judges encounter Death committing a massacre. They open fire with standard ammunition to take him down, but the Dark Judge barely reacts to being hit multiple times while gloating "You cannot kill what does not live." However, the trope is then subverted by Dredd ordering him shot with incendiary ammunition which does bring down Death's body, even if the spirit escapes for the moment.
* In the first arc, Goku — being raised in the mountains until he met Bulma — doesn't know how to confirm gender by look, so he innocently pats the girls' privates for any... well, balls. This resulted from an interesting situation in episode 2 when he took off Bulma's undies while she's sleeping...
* In the first arc, one of Keiichi's friends gives him riceballs. They have an ominously threatening conversation, and after she leaves his house, Keiichi tries one. There's a piercing sensation on his tongue, so when he looks to see what he's bitten into... There's a
* In the first arc, the agent Winter gets in an ally's X-Wing, and it takes off because its owner told its R2 unit to be somewhere to cause a distraction. She then takes control and shoots down the squadron of TIE fighters, including the one with the owner in it, and yet at the end of the arc she's told that she's not flight-qualified on an X-Wing and will have to ride in a shuttle. Stackpole was reportedly quite unhappy with this arc. Winter did have
* In the first arc, when the title ship is cornered by an attack chopper, the two badasses and the tech nerd onboard were getting ready to kiss their asses goodbye when the timid loser businessman they had taken hostage comes up with a plan to charge the copter head-on and use a shipwreck as a ramp to launch them high enough that they can hit it with a torpedo. Not only does it work, but it works with flying colors, and the businessman soon joins the crew afterward.

* In the first Batman, here the vampiric Kirk Langstrom, is tracking the serial killer Harley Quinn. He finds Harley at her hideout where she has stuffed the bodies of her victims and set them up as a grim mockery of a loving family, including a boy that can be no older than 10 laying on the ground in front of the TV with a stitched up smile on his face.
* In the first battle, Alicia orders her men to bury the bodies of the Imperial soldiers they killed in the skirmish.
* In the first book, Artemis tells Root, "None of your race have permission to enter here while I am alive." The fairies take this to mean they can enter when he's dead.
* In the first book Bright de-magnetizes himself only to discover he's become electrically charged.
* In the first book, Eugene, Roy's selfish father, berates Roy for thinking he can beat Xykon, an undead sorcerer, with a normal sword. Roy takes this criticism seriously enough to have Durkon enchant his sword with disruption spell to affect Xykon's skeletal body. In the following arcs, Roy has his sword upgraded so that it can harm undead creatures on its own.
* In the first book, Hagrid describes the deaths of Lily and James as if they hadn't been actively against Voldemort already, and it was a mystery why he would even be bothered to kill them if the opportunity came up. In the third book, Fudge, telling the story of how Voldemort found them, mentions that it was "well-known" Voldemort had been seeking the Potters at the time, with Hagrid right there, and by the fifth, we learn that they served alongside Hagrid in the eponymous Order of the Phoenix the first time around. The effect is that in that first scene with Harry, Hagrid lied... a lot. The movie corrected this also, taking out the questioning of why Voldemort went after Harry's parents and having Hagrid simply say "your parents fought against him, but nobody lived once he decided to kill 'em."
* In the first book, Han Solo's accounts are flagged by Corellian Security Force officer Inspector Hal Horn, the father of Corran Horn from the
* In the first book, Haruhi says that while she is a "healthy young woman, after all," she doesn't have time for sex, what with trying to find
* In the first book, he discovers the traps on Nomansan Island thanks to them being hidden by drapeweed, a rare shade-loving type of ivy. Later, it's Sticky's having spotted a patch of "wild chuck-root" (
* In the first book, he plays the trope Straight, with his largely idealistic nature,
* In the first book, it eventually turns out that Hydra's main fortress exists in a
* In the first book, it is all but stated that the Abhorsens have the colour drained out of them by walking in Death, with the changes noted in Sabriel by the midwife. Of course, that doesn't explain
* In the first book, it's mentioned that a blind man canvassing for charity donations who was slated to be the next victim of
* In the first book, King Robert Baratheon orders Eddard Stark to enjoy a cup of wine: "Drink. Your king commands it."
* In the first book, Lucius Malfoy is courteous, urbanely charming, a
* In the first book, Lucky tries to distract the Fierce Dogs from his friends by insulting them. His two attempts are "Hey, stupid!" and "Mad dogs, sad dogs, stupid crazy bad dogs!" This doesn't work, and they only go after him after
* In the first book, Lune and Deven fall in love while Lune is posing as a mortal to uncover secrets in Queen Elizabeth's court. Lune spends much time angsting about how he can never know what she truly is. Initially ends in a type 1B, but becomes a type 2B once Deven gets into terrible trouble trying to find her again.
* In the first book, Marian Alston marries Swindapa so that Swindapa can legally participate in Nantucket's civic life. This turns out to have benefits, as it also gives Alston citizenship among the Fiernan.

* In the first book of the Fire Thief trilogy this is done unintentionally when
* In the first book, Rincewind is described as looking like an "apprentice enchanter who had run away from his master out of defiance, boredom, fear and a lingering taste for heterosexuality." Make of that what you will. In
* In the first book Sansa's best friend Jeyne Poole is "taken care of" by Petyr Baelish. You assume the poor girl is going to end up a reluctant whore in some brothel, never to be heard from again.
* In the first book, ShadowClan fights back against and deposes their tyrant leader Brokenstar, with the help of ThunderClan.
* In the first book, Tepes’ grand plans to restore House Dracul completely crash and burn, leading to
* In the first book, the Augur Kol has a vision that he will be killed by Scyner. Upon meeting Scyner, he promptly attacks and Scyner kills him in self-defense.
* In the first book, the killing/drinking the blood of a unicorn is considered to be this by centaurs.
* In the first book, the main characters deliberately use their advanced technology to make the primitive inhabitants think they're deities — a technique they call "the God Gambit". Unfortunately it backfires
* In the first book (the second chronologically in-universe), the Pevensie children age from young children to full adults (kings and queens, in fact) in Narnia and then are returned to Earth where they have been gone for no time at all and are still children.
* In the first book, the villain makes so few appearances that it's difficult to remember he even exists. There's nothing at all to indicate that
* In the first book Tyrion Lannister is captured by the Mountain Clans whom he quickly subverts to his side, using them as his own private army. He becomes quite fond of clan chief Shagga, on several occasions using his oft-mentioned threat to "Cut off your manhood and feed it to the goats".
* In the first book, when a golden bear breaks out of captivity with her young, she slaughters an entire village that trapped her and proceeds to utterly destroy everyone chasing after her until she dies of the
* In the first boss fight with Vergil, it is abundantly clear that the AI is holding back. No long combos, no summon swords, no Devil Trigger and only one Judgement Cut at a time. All of which Vergil makes
* In the first broadcast episode, Kermit the Frog (a puppet) is shown sipping milk from a glass with a straw; he takes a moment to say to the audience, "Think about this, friends."
* In the first campaign, Vox Machina has Trinket the bear, who is Vex'ahlia's Animal Companion as per the class feature for the Beast Master Ranger. Early on, Tiberius also adopts a sickly pseudodragon in Vasselheim, which he names Lockheed, but Lockheed leaves the group and returns to Draconia with his owner in Episode 29.
* In the first case, Arturo gets involved in politics by running for mayor. Wade is against this, as she believes his "equal rights" campaign will ultimately lead to a patriarchy. Interestingly, Arturo actually wins the election, although a miscount results in him leaving before the official results are announced.
* In the first case, Encyclopedia Brown deduces that the blind witness is lying because he has a newspaper in his room. Ignoring all the reasons one might have a newspaper one can't read in one's room
* In the first case (in chapter 70 of the first book), Daken provokes him into forgetting that he's a
* In the first case, it's suggested that the victim could be killed with a shot put ball thrown from a room directly opposite, and Gonta (who was in that room at that time) is implied as a possible culprit since he had the strength to kill with a thrown ball. In the end, this turns out to be irrelevant.
* In the first case of every game (which serves as a tutorial), the culprit is inevitably the witness brought in, since the first case takes place in one day and there's no investigation period to establish multiple suspects. Thus, in the first case of
* In the first case, the goal is to "upgrade" one's body; an ailing character

(dying, elderly or disabled) possesses or swaps bodies with someone who is young and healthy, or a
* In the first case, the killer claimed to have lost his keys and asked a security guard to open the door to "his" office for him. The absence of the security guard's prints on his door suggests that
* In the first chapter, after retrieving the game’s second Black Key, a spiked ceiling will slowly descend. Failing to leave in 50 seconds will result in a Game Over
* In the first chapter, Asuka goes into Shinji's hospital room after the battle against Leliel. She slaps him for worrying her and then gives him a “welcome back” kiss.
* In the first chapter, if you shoot and kill Sonatti's right-hand man just before you get close enough to initiate the end-level cutscene, you will get
* In the first chapter, Mizuki tells Naruto that the secret everyone has been keeping from him is that he
* In the first chapter of Ayla 8, side team The Vindicators invade an evil lair in a holographic simulation for training, and get their asses kicked. The person playing supervillain turns out to be
* In the first chapter of the manga, he becomes depressed after striking out with a local girl, only to find himself surrounded by lovey-dovey couples on his way to school ...
* In the first chapter, Shiara calls out to someone named Eron, thinking that he's followed her. He appears in Volume 4, revealed as Kayn'dar's brother
* In the first chapter Shinji and Asuka are visited by their future selves.
* In the first chapters' omakes the author, assisted by Asuka, tells their alternate ideas to turn her into a super-heroine (before settling on
* In the first chapter, Tebow pauses to sign an autograph for a young fan in Toronto. Chapters later, that same kid (now a young teen) shows up again, this time as a player for the Atlantic Schooners.
* In the first chapter, the Slayer ends up slaughtering members of the White Fang while naked since he was deprived of his armor and weapons at the time.
* In the first chapter Wednesday informs Harry he shouldn't jump off the cliff they're on because it's only tall enough to horribly maim him. She does offer to go down to the water with him and drown him though if he's determined to kill himself.
* In the first chapter you encounter blood and guts decorating a wall and the floor in the hallway. You find out in a later chapter that Mayu was killed there when she was thrown into the wall by ghosts so fast that it killed her.
* In the first Christmas episode, "Santa Claus Conquers the Martians", the Mads invent "The Wish Squisher," a machine designed to turn cool gifts into this trope. A box of NES games becomes a pair of Underoos, money becomes your sister's raisin collection, and slot cars become an ugly pair of socks. The socks are run through the machine a second time and become a gift certificate for a stationery store.
* In the first church level, the passage to the catacombs is behind a bookcase. In later visits to the level, that's moved and gets hidden behind wine barrels.
* In the First Contact War, the turians were pretty bastardly too. First they attack a human science expedition who were activating a mass relay, which is illegal by Citadel law. Humanity is a species who they knew they never met before and could have no knowledge of Citadel law, and even then aren't part of the Citadel, so they wouldn't be subject to it anyways. Then they proceed to attack and invade the nearest colonized planet for no sane reason as the humans shot them back in self defense, engaging in a short skirmish war. Due to cultural dissonance, they assumed that, like them, every human was military trained and simply in reserve,
* In the first couple episodes, the human guest stars were presented with Muppet version of themselves for the closing good-bye. This practice was quickly dropped, possibly due to expense, possibly due to it being slightly creepy. However, a few more people got Muppet lookalikes, both on the Muppet Show and afterwards, most notably
* In the first Covenant campaign video, it is revealed that the monk lost the Mournblade because he thought that a sandbox in a public park was a good place to hide it.

* In the first crossover of the two, Harley Quinn and Mercy Graves, Lex Luthor's bodyguard, have a
* In the first cutscene, Spartans are shown fighting in Chief's upgraded armor, not the weaker variants they wore in that time. It's implied that Halsey is imagining that scene, but she's never even seen Master Chief's new armor
* In the first Danish film, Frank's spurned girlfriend steals the money that he needs to make a token payment to the druglord Milo, who is actually planning to kill him when Frank arrives to make the payment. Frank is left alone to face the many enemies he's made in the past week. The film ends with Frank catching his breath and grimly considering his options.
* In "The First David Job", Hardison covers up Parker lifting the statue from a vibration sensor by triggering every car alarm in the parking lot. The guards see the sensor has been triggered, but hearing every alarm in the parking lot go off, they assume that it was an earth tremor and reset the sensor.
* In "The First David Job," when a pilot questions his (nonsensical) directions, he begins writing in his report that "Employee is uncomfortable with black authority figures."
* In the first DC Comics speical, Superman, Batman, and Green Lantern attend the funeral of Captain Carrot of the Zoo Crew, and Green Lantern is trying his best not to laugh when he sees that the memebers of the Zoo Crew are all cartoon animals. Batman also lets out a snicker when he finds out that one member is a mouse named Little Cheese.
* In the first decade of the twentieth century, stage adaptations of
* In the first decades of the 16th century, the Spanish conquistadors had overwhelming military advantages over the native American peoples. The Europeans belonged to a more militarily advanced civilization with better techniques, tools, firearms, artillery, steel, and domesticated animals. Horses and mules carried them, pigs fed them, and dogs fought for them. However, there weren't terribly many of them. The indigenous peoples had the advantage of established settlements, determination to remain independent, and large numerical superiority. European diseases, divide and conquer tactics, and the fact that most of the natives had never been allied in the first place contributed to the defeat of the native populations. Another factor was that the peoples of Mesoamerica did not fight total wars. They mostly limited themselves to so-called "flower wars", whose purpose was to collect prisoners to sacrifice to the gods.
* In the First Doctor serial "The Web Planet", the Zarbi are almost always shown through a greased lens as an attempt to
* In the First Doctor short story "The Book of Shadows" by Jim Mortimore, the Doctor finds out that part of the reason there's a terrible knot of paradoxes in 2nd century Alexandria is because of a book from his homeworld that is actually a powerful time travel artifact. The book was taken back in time from the 20th century to Alexandria, but what he doesn't understand is
* In the first draft Misato uttered one when she saw Asuka had been reading "The Ethical Slut":
* In the first Droopy cartoon, he walks behind a hydrant and, after a brief pause, walks out with a look of embarrassment on his face.
* In the first dungeon, you have to look up and find the boss on the ceiling.
* In "The First Duty", Picard tasks LaForge and Data to go over the flight data recorder from Wesley Crusher's shuttle to figure out what caused an devastating crash that took the life of a squadmate. LaForge is skeptical, but does it anyway. After awhile, Picard approaches them and it seems that they're coming up with the same conclusion Starfleet Academy was - no idea what was going to happen and things seem sketchy, but no concrete proof. LaForge
* In the first edition of Exalted, there is also a Solar circle spell which uses a complicated ritual to allow a powerful Exalted sorcerer to store his soul in an artifact.
* In the first edition, there were some English words on computer screens. Replaced by the fictional alphabet Aurebesh in DVD edition (it's still English, it just uses different symbols for the letters).

* In the first English dub, 15-year-old Dilandau Albatou was voiced by 13/14-year-old
* In the first English version of "Jalebi's Birthday", before Jalebi helps Vada up a non-functioning escalator, Jalebi assures him that she's got the experience to do so and mentions "I even saved the life of that fly" as an example. This is referring to the events of the earlier episode "Makkhi Makkhi!", where a fly gets stuck on Jalebi's sticky head. The second English dub replaces this reference, instead having her mention she once saved a lifeguard.
* In the first episode, a candidate for the Strike Team makes a pointed comment about Vic's boat and states that he wants to be "all the way in," implying that he knows about their illegal activities and wants a piece. However, he's actually a mole working for IA and Vic kills him, then stages it to look like he was killed in the line of duty.
* In the first episode, after meeting a hallucination of his dead wife in the Orb of the Prophets, Commander Sisko returns to his quarters to find his son Jake sleeping on the floor (everything in the space station has been stripped or destroyed by the departing Cardassian forces — even furniture) and pulls a blanket over his shoulders.
* In the first episode, Aimee complains that her then-boyfriend Adam is unable to come no matter how they have sex. After a spontaneous bout of sex therapy with Otis, it is revealed that he can't get there because of his
* In the first episode, Ao laments her "lack of words", which is more a fear of speaking. Moe says whatever verbal capabilities Ao has must be better than
* In the first episode, Ash's Pokedex seems to have some AI, making fun of him when a Rattata steals some of his stuff, but this has since completely disappeared.
* In the first episode, Benson interviews a suspect. She later relates that the woman's alibi is that she was working in her office alone. Stabler dismisses that as an "anti-alibi". Later, we see the detectives leave a different suspect's home and he comments "See being in Europe,
* In the first episode Bert mentions that there's a few people Martin needs to see, and then proceeds to list practically everyone in the village.
* In the first episode, Bob and Phong play a tennis-esque game using a floating disc and energy-paddles on their hands and feet. Then the camera angle becomes a view from above, and it's instantly obvious that the game is
* In the first episode, Bob Odenkirk tries, and fails pathetically, in an attempt to name all the US states in 15 seconds. Thereafter, David Cross explains that Bob missed the first day of school, believes there are only five states, and thinks one of them is called "Chim-Cham".
* In the first episode, Bushmaster kills Nigel Garrison, leader of the Brooklyn Yardies, then decapitates him posthumously and presents the head in a briefcase full of cash that he gives to Shades.
* In the first episode CIA agent Bentley is being held at gunpoint by KGB agent Petra in a mortuary. His hands are near a shelf holding camera equipment, so he fires off a flashbulb in her face and does a
* In the first episode, Claire accidentally has her fingers transformed into a bloody mess after sticking her hand into a garbage disposal unit trying to retrieve a ring. This is just one of many really
* In the first episode, Cutter comes across a human skeleton. He is initially worried that it may be
* In the first episode ("Demolition") he also played Baz, the presenter of "Nozin' Aroun'", a program for young adults, by young adults, focusing on issues that affect young adults, that Rik was interested in watching.
* In the first episode, Dennis gets blackout drunk and wakes up in bed with a guy. Then another guy comes out of the bathroom and asks him if his ass hurts. We don't
* In the first episode, Fry actually lampshades this trope when Farnsworth offers him a job aboard his ship, and Fry asks if they're going to "teach alien babes how to love".
* In the first episode, Hank complains about a terrible cup of coffee, to which Brent says, "Oh, well, let me refund your money. What'd you pay for it,

* In the first episode he appeared in, Col. Flagg revealed to Col. Blake that he doesn't know the phone number of his headquarters. The phone number is in a capsule he swallowed and he must regurgitate it in order to make the call.
* In the first episode, his voice was digitally lowered, but in the rest of the series, the voice actor simply lowered his voice to match.
* In the first episode, HOMRA's introduction is punctuated by Misaki's
* In the first episode it's quite obviously a blue-screened tarantula crawling over Mildred's hands. Presumably to spare thirteen-year-old Georgina Sherrington having to hold a live spider - as Mildred is meant to love them.
* In the first episode, Kenshin saves Kaoru from a fake Battosai, and ends up sweeping her off her feet in this manner.
* In the first episode Krel is marked as the king-in-waiting by his father in a public ceremony that was used by his ancestors for centuries, with his father telling him that he did this with
* In the first episode, Lois claims that all of the world's problems are caused by poor self image. We immediately cut to a scrawny Hitler trying to work out in a gym and getting jealous of a muscle-packed rabbi with female admirers on his arms.
* In the first episode, main character Twilight Sparkle pours herself a glass of what looks like booze while
* In the first episode mentioned, a bizarre example happens earlier where the camera goes inside Susie's mouth and swerves past her uvula turning the shot into a
* In the first episode, Merlin can use his magic to slow down time fairly easily. Since then, however, he's only been shown to do it once. This is presumably because it is hard to film. (It's also illegal in-universe, so it's not going to happen a whole lot anyway.)
* In the first episode, Mugen offers, unprompted, to help Fuu with her teahouse's thug problem...
* In the first episode, Naru somehow manages to deliver the Megaton Punch...
* In the first episode, Naruto goofs up buying a Kuraa-ma toy Himawari wanted and ended up buying a Shukaa-ku toy instead, which initially disappoints her until she changes her mind by the end.
* In the first episode of season 1, Matt gets the hot-looking realtor to lead him around the office space they're planning to rent for Nelson & Murdock, and from the way Foggy immediately starts rolling his eyes it's clearly a trick he's pulled before.
* In the first episode of Season 2, after Ruby expresses a desire to "Start the semester off with a BANG!", Yang replies "I always start
* In the first episode of season 2, Arturo Rey lures Luke into one of his semi trucks, which he then blows up from a distance. Luke walks out of the flaming wreckage, his clothes still visibly burning as he walks up to Arturo, who attempts to shoot him with a Judas shotgun to no effect before Luke just knocks him out. The whole thing is filmed by D.W. Griffifth, who gets Luke to make a
* In the first episode of Season 2, Edo Phoenix purposely loses to Judai after being told to by
* In the first episode of season 2, Ruby addresses the other members of her team and JNPR.
* In the first episode of Season 2, Sheridan's debut, he doesn't bother to explain his order to hold fire until afterwards, starting with a "Just as I suspected ..." At least a pilot is later seen complaining about this.
* In the first episode of Season 2, the CEO of Vought Industries is hammering out an agreement for the deployment of military superheroes. He presents a standard clause where the superheroes are required to make their "best effort" to avoid collateral damage. When the Secretary of Defense demands to know what the acceptable level of collateral damage is, he's told that officially it's zero, but secretly it's 34%.
* In the first episode of Season 4, Beckett tells Castle that she can't remember the shooting. However,
* In the first episode of season 7, Castiel and Death get into a very heated argument, in which Castiel outright threatens to kill Death. Death isn't impressed by the "mutated angel".

* In the first episode of season 7, Mike Anderson, introduced in season 6, is shot and killed. He must not have been too popular.
* In the first episode of Season 9, South is infiltrating a base when an enemy grunt hits the alarm (or rather, the instant he makes a move for the alarm button she shoots him... but because he'd already started moving, the momentum carries his body right into the button).
* In the first episode of Season Five, it emerges that Malcolm didn't tell Hal and Lois about an awards ceremony (and a ceremony that was apparently a big enough deal for the mayor, news crews, and every single person at his school to attend, at that) because he was afraid Lois would embarrass him as he received his prize. Instead of being played for laughs, the episode treats the matter seriously. Lois is emotionally devastated by this, and Malcolm spends the rest of the episode trying to make it up to her.
* In the first episode of that season, the Scoobies are preparing the Buffybot for its most dangerous trial yet. Parent-Teacher Day at school.
* In the first episode of the anime. When the three punks who try to blackmail Onizuka are gloating about how much money they're about to get, they accidentally anger a large group of
* In the first episode of the fifth season, Sheridan is threatened by someone who lists past Presidents — Lincoln, Roosevelt, and Kyoshi, of the Eastern Bloc.
* In the first episode of the first season, there is a scene where a young, damaged woman is actually biting her own nails to the point of actually doing harm.
* In the first episode of the fourth season, Professor Dementor drops his list at one location, making it easier for Kim and Ron to find him in the next.
* In the first episode of the second season, Nyarko brings up the fact that
* In the first episode of the series, a hectic encounter with hostile aliens forces
* In the first episode of volume 4, Hiro implants Ando with a GPS tracker.
* In the first episode of ZTV News, the update series for adult website ZONE ARCHIVE, mascot ZONE-Tan insists her name is pronounced "ZONE-Tonne", much to the narrator's annoyance.
* In the first episode, Peggy gets hired as Don's new secretary and tries to impress him and sleep with him, but he has none of it. (He is married and sleeps around the town, but not with office ladies.)
* In the first episode, policewoman Noa commandeers a motorcycle from a confused civilian. When it gets wrecked, she then 'borrows' a patrol car from a pair of traffic cops. The car is soon crushed by a huge truck, but Noa's out of it by then.
* In the first episode, Prince Clovis orders the Shinjuku Ghetto purged of all "Elevens" when hunting for terrorists. The Brittanian military proceeded to murder every Japanese in the ghetto they found, including the elderly and
* In the first episode, Princess Tutu saves Mytho after he jumps out a window to save a baby bird from a raven attack. She then starts to save him about
* In the first episode, Professor Oak and Ash both get shocked at the same time when Pikachu goes in for a second electric shock.
* In the first episode, Ryoma Echizen asked Sakuno Ryuzaki for directions... and she gave him the wrong ones. In a later episode, she arrives to their meeting several minutes late because she got lost too.
* In the first episode Sailor Moon's hairclip things (on her odango/buns) can magically allow her to hear people in distress. This comes in handy, as she hears her best friend
* In the first episode, Sam is given a demonic dirt devil vacuum in order to recapture a soul that escaped Hell.
* In the first episode, Sector V hijacks a ice cream truck to grill info on the driver (ice cream men are
* In the first episode, Seiya actually does this to Cassios, cutting off his left ear during their first fight.
* In the first episode, Shaggy turns to his friends for help after his bicycle gets stolen. Freddie comments that he's proud to see Shaggy handling the situation like a man. It then reveals that Shaggy is on the ground throwing a temper tantrum.

* In the first episode, Shego had convinced Drakken not to gloat while carrying out the mission. Good girl.
* In the first episode, she invokes this in an attempt to get a Spirit Key for a reduced rate from a magic item store. It
* In the first episode, Skye is caught hacking into SHIELD's computer network. Coulson decides to recruit her for his team.
* In the first episodes of both the first and second season, Lelouch is about to be shot for having seen C.C., although
* In the first episode, Spike is wearing a lampshade when he comes to invite Twilight back to a party she ran out of. He's a child, though, so no alcohol was implied.
* In the first episode, Stu shouts "My favorite shirt!". A bit later, he gets a new one and it gets ruined again, this time saying "My
* In the first episode that he appears in, Spike explains his lack of perimeter guards to Angel this way.
* In the first episode, the hotness of Sarah is startling enough to Chuck that he drops the phone he's using.
* In the first episode, the Lannister brothers are coping with having to drink with the Starks by downing a few beforehand.
* In the first episode, there's a throwaway line that Bojack let Todd stay at his mansion because he thought he was a troubled gay teen. When
* In the first episode, they bury the bodies of Gary and Tony under a flyover. A few episodes later, it turns out that an environmental monitoring station is due to be built there, so they have to hide the bodies in their local community centre; eventually, the corpses are returned to the flyover and dumped in the wet concrete foundations of the building site.
* In the first episode, Tomokane and Nodamiki paint the inside of their tracksuits in outrageous colors and wear them inside out. They later find out that the color is water-soluble...
* In the first episode Tsukimi allows a woman who helped her to sleep in her all-female dorm. The next morning Kuranosuke is revealed to be male when he wakes up with disheveled clothes.
* In the first episode, when we see Dexter Douglas transform for the first time, Freakazoid promptly jumps at the camera and declares, "HELLO! I'M HERE IN THE SHOW!"
* In the first ever episode of the original series "What a Night For a Knight" the gang think the knight murdered the scientist because they see what appears to be blood on the carpet. It turns out to be red paint.
* In the first example, Kanade and Kureha are kidnapped at an indoor pool during episode 3. However, though Subaru is afraid of the knife the kidnapper brandishes, it turns out to be a ploy by Kanade and Subaru's father (playing the kidnapper) to help her overcome her fear of knives.
* In the first expansion, the Drengin undergo cultural split when their largest and most powerful clan, the
* In the first few episodes, Helmeppo can do whatever he likes because his father, Axe-Hand Morgan, runs the town. Morgan actually hates his son but lets him use his name and authority as long as it doesn't put a dent in his ego.
* In the first few episodes, this actually seemed to be Sokka's defining trait, though it was later * in the first few hours after regenerating and dies like anyone else.
* In the first few novels, Harrington is described as winning in hand-to-hand combat due to her practice in martial arts and coming from a heavy-gravity world, while her deadly accuracy in a duel is due to single-minded relentless practice at a range. Later books and short stories in the series reveal that she's come from a family that's had some pretty extensive genetic engineering, giving her enhanced physical abilities that would have played a role.
* In the first few seasons, Joel rewarded the boys with RAM chips as a snack.

This, however,
* In the first few years of the franchise, each time a new threat appeared, the Turaga elders had a legend ready to explain their presence. Eventually, the Toa got
* In the first fight with Steiner below deck on the Theatre Ship — he'll use Armour Break on Blank. He won't be able to learn this skill until the third disk.
* In the first fight with the Linear Guild, the guild disables the cleric and moments later loses their own. Roy even says, "I think karma just evened that score."
* in the first film adaptation's standards (notably in the book, Carrie just telekinetically stopped her heart).
* In the first film, after the Bug kills the Arquilian prince and steals the Galaxy, an Arquillian battle cruiser enters orbit around the Earth. It sends an ultimatum: deliver the Galaxy or it will destroy the Earth. It then fires a warning shot at the North Pole to make it clear that it means it.
* In the first film, a reporter asks if it's true that Mr. Fantastic "can expand
* In the first film, both Ironhide and Megatron tell Optimus that humans are primitive brutes who are better off dead as while Optimus asserts that they're just young, underdeveloped and overall naive.
* In the first film, Charlie crashes right into the Pearly Gates after dying, where a whippet angel named Annabelle looks up his good deeds; despite not finding any, she lets him inside anyway because "unlike humans, all dogs are kind and good inside."
* In the first film, Doc's plan to use the clock tower's lightning bolt is almost undone when the cable is broken apart by a tree branch falling on it, as well as the engine to the time machine dying. Marty manages to get the car restarted, and 1955 Doc just barely gets the cables reconnected just as the lightning bolt strikes. Turns out 1955 Doc's timing was off, anyways.
* In the first film during the Solar Sailer/Recognizer encounter, Yuri claims the next beam is a few nanoseconds away; in context, this is understood as meaning minutes (not a long amount of time but too long to wait in an emergency), thus leading to Flynn's
* In the first film, Iosef Tarasov gets as far as "It was just a fucking-!" before
* In the first film, it's Old Man Marley, who shovels salt onto the sidewalks. Kevin gets sucked into a rumor by his older brother Buzz that Old Man Marley killed his family, which turns out to be untrue. In fact, when Kevin talks to Marley in a church on Christmas Eve, Marley reveals that he's estranged from his son, and Kevin encourages him to give his son a call. In the movie's climax, when the Wet Bandits have Kevin cornered, Marley
* In the first film, it's practically impossible to see Effie's skin under all the makeup she wears. By the second film, although Effie's clothes are still outlandish, she's wearing considerably less makeup, showing that she's begun to identify less with the citizens in the Capitol and more with Katniss and Peeta.
* In the first film, Kowloon Dingsau, upon learning that Junjo and Nachi are siblings, notes, "Coincidence, as Confucius say."
* In the first film, Lok and Big D fight and joust each other to be elected leaders of the Triad election, before teaming up against a third group that attracts heat. Eventually Lok gets rid of Big D and his wife, and moves the triad to a cleaner line of organized crime.
* In the first film, Marty tries to warn 1955 Doc with a note that in 1985, terrorists are going to kill him during the DeLorean experiment at the Twin Pines Mall (referring to a scene earlier in the film). Doc seems to disregard the note and shreds it up, saying it's dangerous to try to change the timeline like that. When Marty returns to what is now
* In the first film, McClane builds a homemade bomb and tosses it down an elevator shaft. When it goes off, a blast of fire shoots upward toward him. He survives by stepping to the side of the door.
* In the first film, Micheal manages to kill Yorga. But by then Paul and Michael are dead, Erica was fully drained and turned and lives on as a vampire
* In the first film, Naruto is in a railway tunnel (well, cave) when

* In the first film, Peter "Star-Lord" Quill's 70s & 80s music is surprisingly popular; Gamora admits to appreciating it when he shares one song with her, a guard at the Kyln steals Peter's Walkman to enjoy the music himself, and Groot is shown dancing to it in the credits. Come
* In the first film, Tarkin refers to the "regional governors" governing directly in the absence of the Senate. The German translation of "regional governor" is
* In the first film, the band are booked at a western bar. They order some drinks in between performances, but come time to pay, find out it's more than they can afford. With this plus the arrival of the real country band whose place they took, Elwood and Jake end up fleeing, with said band and the bar owner now added to their list of pursuers.
* In the first film, the mark wishes the accident that freed the djinn had never happened. She also wished for him to blow his brains out; he immediately complies, and she discovers he is in fact
* In the first film, the mobster Antoine Rotelli gets incinerated into a charred black skeleton by the Joker's buzzer, and in the second film, Max Shreck's skeleton still has
* In the first film, there's an outline in the water where a man drowned. Made even funnier when you realize that the tape outline is for a character who isn't actually dead, and who doesn't die at any point.
* In the first film, there's Nikki. She's utterly callous toward Sam throughout the film.
* In the first film, they do the race in an ambulance and try to convince a pair of New Jersey state troopers that Pamela is a patient they have to transport to California. However, they failed to anticipate one of the troopers' questions. Good thing they brought a doctor.
* In the first film, Tony trips a trap with a stick to get the cheese.
* In the first five seasons, Kenny dies in nearly every episode and appears again in the next as if nothing had ever happened. Kenny was
* In the first five seasons, winning a challenge in an early round earned a contestant immunity from elimination in the next round. This ended as of season six.
* In the first flashback arc, David Cain. Formerly a master assassin,
* In the first four generations the individual versions of the games is never referenced. The Wi-Fi features of Gen V implied the two versions on
* In the first game, Alastor and Ifrit also speak to Dante (via text, no words are heard on the player's end)... before respectively
* In the first game, any town or camp occupied by friendly Stalkers could become a ghost town, as they would slowly be picked off by mutants, the military, bandits, and their own
* In the first game, Arle ruins Satan's epic entrance by calling him "Santa."
* In the first game, a scientist is working on scanning the Citadel's keepers to learn more about them. By the second game, he's discovered the basic truths about them and their connection to the Reapers, but no one will listen to him.
* In the first game, at NORAD VI, you are required to disarm 10 different worldwide missile silos, using nothing but a trackball and a button.
* In the first game, characters kicked from the party would simply stay in place, even in the middle of nothingness, and there was no way to track them. In the sequel, you're given a dialogue where you can choose to let them stay in the party, let them wait in place, or rendezvous at a known location (like an important inn).
* In the first game, collecting one hundred bananas gets you an extra life. For some reason, the banana counter actually has
* In the first game, Covenant plasma weapons didn't use traditional ammo systems and instead had more of a battery with a
* In the first game Elaine is brought back to life as a monster, and is the final boss.
* In the first game, for example, you're locked up in a jail cell with nothing but the clothes on your back and a useless bottle of ketchup. Naturally, you lie down on the floor and pour the ketchup all over yourself. When the guard comes in to check on the suddenly bloodied prisoner, you snap his neck and haul tail out of there. Alternatively, you can hide yourself in a location in the room where he can't see you when he's busy wrestling with his diarrhea and when he can't suddenly find you when he returns, he opens the cell door to check. If both of the above methods fail, your mysterious benefactor will get tired of waiting for you to figure it out, knock out the guard and open the door for you.

* In the first game, Gala uses axes as one of his primary weapon types, along with clubs and maces.
* In the first game, Gridlock was pretty much the only map ever played, likely because it was the very first map in the default quickplay rotation and therefore the first one most people would memorize the layout of. Sometimes matches on War Machine or Raven Down would be among the pile of Gridlock matches.
* In the first game, Hakuowlo completely loses himself whenever he activates his divine powers, transforming into a deific beast of immense power, but in that form, he cannot control himself.
* In the first game, if the Tiger's Claw is destroyed, you get a message saying "With your carrier destroyed, you drift endlessly through the void..."
* In the first game, if you decide to kill the Rachni with Garrus and Wrex in your squad. Garrus protests, saying that genocide is unacceptable, and mentions the krogan committing genocide before remembering that Wrex, a krogan, is there, prompting Wrex to make his own remarks about the genophage.
* In the first game, if you have Garrus and Wrex in the party when meeting the Rachni Queen, Garrus will tell you not to kill the last queen and doom the species without consulting the Council, saying that genocide was the reason why they fought the Krogan. Garrus then remembers who he's with and trails off, before Wrex reminds him that the genophage amounts to genocide against the krogan.
* In the first game, if you let Guybrush be recaptured by the cannibals, they'll progressively beef up the security of their prison hut, eventually installing
* In the first game, if you win all your battles by Time Over, you'll get a Warning message and then enter a special battle with Jaguarandi, a mutated version of Raiden that varies each time you fight it. When you first fight it, it's about the size of a Raiden or a Belgdor, and its color is the opposite color of your mech. If you continue against it,
* In the first game is a Vasudan group calling themselves "The Hammer of Light" who refuse to accept their government's cease-fire with the Galactic Terran Alliance, and believe that the genocidal Shivans are a prophesized god-race. The Vasudan Empire declares them a terrorist group and they are believed to have been wiped out some time after the formation of the Galactic Terran-Vasudan Alliance.
* In the first game, Jill and Rebecca melodically play "Moonlight Sonata" on a piano in the Spencer Mansion.
* In the first game, Kairi gives Sora her "lucky charm" before he goes off to fight Ansem, with the promise that he'll bring it back one day. Implying, of course, a promise to live through the final battle. Thanks to the way Keyblades work, it also gives him a
* In the first game, Legendary Lords had quests to unlock their equipment that were presented as them accomplishing a task to get them... when their models were very obviously brandishing those weapons and armour pieces already. This was changed in the second game, so that most of these quests are instead about empowering these weapons, renewing blessings/enchantments on them or somesuch. And it ran into that problem once more, because while some of the quest
* In the first game, losing a Ranked Battle will cause your ranking to drop, even if one of your teammates got disconnected early on (which is a big disadvantage as you're now outnumbered). This no longer happens in
* In the first game, Mia was murdered because she had pieced together Redd White's blackmailing schemes.
* In the first game nearly every enemy bio points out that the demons are used to fighting knights or other demons with swords and bows, thus Dante's guns give him a massive edge because they have
* In the first game, Nugget writes a love poem for Lily. Unfortunately, being a kindergartener, Lily can't read, so she asks Ms. Applegate for help. The teacher obliges... by reading the letter out loud to the entire class.

* In the first game of the series, fighter missiles are armed with an explosive mineral referred to in the (necessary for the copy protect scheme) manual as Illudium Q36. Missile explosive power was measured by their "ESK" rating. Three guesses what "ESK" stood for.
* In the first game of the series, there's the GTF Apollo, a space superiority fighter that combines good missile bank capacity and durability with a high level of agility. It's not hard to see why it happens to be the very first fighter you start off in, since its combination of characteristics make it quite easy and forgiving to play with. Its main shortcoming is its slow default speed, although this can be partially overcome by increasing engine power output at the expense of guns and shielding.
* In the first game, Onihime and Yasha (aka Mona and Lisa), the twin bosses in Round 5, were both palette swaps of Blaze but with a green outfit instead of red. In Round 8, they appear one more time with a dark purple outfit. When the twins returned in
* In the first game, only the Azracs could build war elephants,which replaced siege rams for that race.
* In the first game, on the other hand, the only real example of this trope is Jolee's claim that "the Jedi left me" (and he doesn't consider himself a Jedi any more at this point). The other Jedi certainly do tell some outright lies, but don't continue to defend them as 'true' once they're exposed as lies.
* In the first game probably plays this trope straight to the greatest extent. Not too far into the game (round about Chapter 2-3) you can pick up Ether Staffs, which allow for Great Magic, but also boost magical power well into the quadruple digits, so without using Great Magic, you'll be out-doing the whole rest of the party for damage by a ludicrous factor; the lion's share of standard encounters will go down with one round of Lightning Bolt to the whole enemy group. With Great Magic, well, even bosses are going to go down in a hurry.
* In the first game, question 69 asks "Are you enjoying the quiz?" The correct answer is "LOL, 69".
* In the first game, Saren claims that organic beings are weak because
* In the first game, scoring is greatly increased during a single section of each song called Chance time. A single perfect hit normally awards 500 points, with up to 250 points of combo bonus. In Chance Time, the combo bonus raises 20 times faster and caps 5000 points higher, meaning a single Chance Time commonly awards more points than the entire rest of the song, despite being less than twenty seconds long. This meant that unless you are gunning for a perfect score, 90% of the game is almost completely irrelevant. Perhaps the sheer weight of Chance Time sections are why they're absent from the
* In the first game's expansion, a Radio Man can summon 8 marines up to three times this way but has no way to regenerate energy. A campaign mission also allows you to use paratrooper drops.
* In the first game's fourth case, Phoenix was unable to prove that Manfred von Karma was the mastermind of a plot to murder Robert Hammond and frame Edgeworth for it. However, everything turns out to be connected to the
* In the first game, Shepard is mostly a diplomatic investment for the Alliance and a tool for incarcerating a rogue Spectre for the Council. S/He's in a position where it's impossible to please both and for them Shepard turns out to be something of a liability until right at the end of the game.
* In the first game's Mage Origin there is a Giant Spider jumpscare in the underground tunnels. When going down one of the tunnels a spider will drop down from the ceiling behind the player. That is,
* In the first game's "Night of the Hunter", Woody can swap Rottweiler's tobacco with an explosive so that when Rottweiler tries to smoke it, it blows up literally in his face.
* In the first game, soccer player Mitsuhiro is chained to a giant flaming soccer ball and burned to death as he's kicked around by giant Monokumas, runner Ayame is sliced to pieces and then ground up by a buzzsaw machine, priest Kinji is nailed to a cross and then launched into space before crashing back down and being crushed with a tombstone, and clown Satsuki is shoved in a barrel and stabbed with multiple daggers.

* In the first game, Squad 7 has a trio of medics who can recover any downed unit and heal them so quickly that they can be back out in the field at least 2 turns later. It doesn't matter how far behind enemy lines they fell, either; As long as another allied unit can reach them, one of the medics can swoop and retrieve them instantly.
* In the first game's "The Secret Armory of General Knoxx" DLC, the Crimson Lance drone enemies will occasionally quip that their contents can poison small pets, livestock, and people named Jason.
* In the first game, Suul'ka was assumed to merely be the name the Liir gave them,
* In the first game, the American armed forces are obliterated by a stand-still nuclear warhead as they storm al-Asad's capital city. But given Modern Warfare's propensity for
* In the first game, the Aperture Science High-Energy Pellet looks and functions the same way as the Combine energy core, and will disintegrate you and the Portal Gun if you're hit.
* In the first game the Bentusi Tradeships show powerful and fast-firing ion cannons that easily outclass
* In the first game, the crush glitch was this: whenever an enemy of considerable bulk was defeated, it could sometimes kill Pikmin by falling on top of them.
* In the first game, the driver of Roadkill wishes to go back in time to undo the deaths of his platoon in the jungles of South America. Calypso tries to warn him of
* In the first game, the driver of Yellow Jacket, Charlie Kane, entered the Twisted Metal contest in the hopes of finding his long-lost son. Upon winning the contest, Calypso simply informs him that his son, Needles Kane, was the driver of Sweet Tooth in the contest — meaning that he had already run across the person he was looking for, and
* In the first game, the enemies all had names that were designed to make it easy to tell what their role was. Grunts were
* In the first game, the final boss just stands there occasionally sending demons or firing fireballs at you. Its human bodyguards present a much greater threat.
* In the first game, the final step of the final level requires you to snipe the
* In the first game, the 'first aid' and 'medicine' skills were on you or your party members, who all actively fight. The medicine skill in particular you a Neural Shock to deal with organic enemies. It went even farther by allowing an Engineer or Sentinel class Shepard to get the Medic Specialization. Among Shepard's comrades, the only party member with access to the Medicine talent was Kaidan Alenko, otherwise the resident
* In the first game, the geth are uniformly your enemies, even though you can argue about the initial rebellion with Tali. In the sequels, you get a "true geth" teammate, Legion, who explains that the geth working for the
* In the first game, the Junkyard disintegrates into green data, starting from the edges. Before it reaches them, the gates to Nirvana at the top of the
* In the first game, the letters move so fast they are hard to get, they require multiple clicks before being registered (and you can accidentally click the wrong letter if you click too fast), and if you don't already know the answer, you are not given time to think about it and have to just click random letters in hope for a tip.
* In the first game, the mighty Taiidan Empire is defeated, and you can claim your ancestral homeworld of Hiigara, the moment you take down the Imperial flagship and the empire on it.
* In the first game, the player is a member of the PMC Executive Operations (ExOps, see Real Life Examples for why this name was chosen). In the sequel, the player presumably still works for ExOps, though after the tutorial level and the
* In the first game, there are mushroom enemies that can take control of your Pikmin by turning them into purple, mushroom-like versions of themselves with blank white eyes, which will attack you and your swarm.

* In the first game, there are several "ledges of instant death", where it looks like you can jump to them, but the landing kills you.
* In the first game, there are those terrifying metal creatures in High Caves. While they're not spiders in the truest sense of the word (more like beetles) they still have gigantic nightmare pincers and are invulnerable to normal attacks.
* In the first game there's a guy occupying a room with a chest in it that, according to him, just might happen to contain some entertaining stories about certain people who annoy other people so much that they'd be ecstatic if those annoying people just... went away somehow, and other-times the chest might happen to contain some goodies you're free to help yourself to. For the lulz, you can pester the guy until he drops the act and admits in exasperation that
* In the first game, there's one final temptation for a heroic Cole to cross the
* In the first game, there's whole thing with Ishimura, where one of the biggest mining spaceships ever built is heavily damaged (and it causes several subsequent Necromorph outbreaks). That's not so bad, if mankind wasn't relying on
* In the first game, the Rope Shrine Maiden was a girl/woman who had to be violently ripped apart by ropes in the Strangling Ritual in order to maintain the seal on the Hell Gate beneath the mansion.
* In the first game, the three main factions of Serviles are the ones that want to take their freedom through revolution (and you don't really blame them). The sect that wants to be free but more or less 'earn' it. The last sect worships your people as gods and in bad endings end up as cannon fodder willingly for their worship.
* In the first game, the tool with the highest attack points is your watering can.
* In the first game, the top-tier targets are the Warchiefs, who surround themselves with bodyguards. Brainwashing existing ones or adding a bunch of sleeper agents is a very practical way to make the fight easier. It also allows the player to skip a "lure the warchief out" mission and have the mole do it. Furthermore, after such a betrayal, the mole will take the warchief's spot, with rest of the orcs being none the wiser as
* In the first game, the town of Tristram is delimited on all sides by these. A waist-high stone wall to the northeast, a river to the southeast that's maybe a metre wide and 30 cm deep. The western border is blocked by moderately large rocks (150 tall at most). At least in this case, your character has no particular reason to
* In the first game the various characters you play are in the 101st Airborne, 6th Airborne and SAS, and the 13th Guards Rifle Division.
* In the first game, the world is entirely made up of the bodies of two
* In the first game, the your character and his/her team were attacked by mutated dogs and chased into the mansion. If you attempt to open the front door, one will jump in to attack you.
* In the first game, this happens when you get a Ztar in Mario's Rainbow Castle.
* In the first game, usually when geth are attacking, the minimap in the corner of the screen becomes 'jammed'. This signals the presence of geth Stalkers who have the ability to jam your radar.
* In the first game we learn before and after he became a Sith, the Jedi Revan would often lead from the front in the Mandalorian Wars, personally defeating Mandalore himself in battle (although he was not averse to sitting back and leading from the safety of the war room). This eventually caught up with him when a Jedi strike team managed to board his flagship during a battle and distract him from his apprentice Malak's treachery, who blasted the flagship's bridge to smithereens and took over as the Dark Lord of the Sith.
* In the first game, when Phoenix and Grossberg first meet, it's implied they never met, even though he appears in the first case of the third game, which is a flashback. Though it could be argued Grossberg never got a good look at Phoenix (who was wearing a surgical mask due to a cold), and Phoenix could have been hopped up on cold medicine and forgot the less-important parts of the trial. They also didn't interact meaningfully in that flashback case.

* In the first game, while energy-based weapons don't have particular weaknesses, in their tech class, particle/ammo-based weapons halve the effectiveness of shields. A side effect of this is that projectile weapons take longer to become ineffective due to the onward march of technology.
* In the first game, you can find two of these rooms in each of the four Ages, belonging to Atrus' sons. It's easy to tell who's is whose: Sirrus' rooms have a look of sophistication while betraying a mind touched by madness, and feature things like a hologram projector that morphs a rose into a human skull, or hidden bottles of poison. Achenar's rooms practically
* In the first game, you can only earn up to 7999999 points if you use equipment and abilities; to earn the other 2 million, you need a "Stoic" bonus obtained by not using equipment or abilities at all, defeating half the point of the
* In the first game, you meet an admiral who is rather cynical about the
* In the first generation, Ditto was considered literally useless, as it took a full turn to use Transform (its only move). As
* In the first generation games, winning a large sum of coins at the casino was the only way to get
* In the first graphic novel, Cutter tries to save Rayek this way. Rayek climbs to safety, then, panic receding, falls back on pure hatred for losing face that way.
* In the first half, Claude's most popular pairing is with Sylvia, who is hinted to be his long-lost sister, but said by
* In the first half-hour episode where the family gets Santa's Little Helper, Marge writes in a letter to her family that Maggie had taken her first steps, though she still fell down every so often. Maggie's been learning how to walk for more than
* In the first half, King Chagall of Augustria and Duke Andrey of Jungby kill their fathers to ascend to their respective thrones. (The second earns the scorn of
* In the first half of the 1980s, many people across the world felt frightened because President Reagan ordered more nuclear missiles to be placed in Europe to
* In the first half of the 19th century, the only legitimate daughter of
* In the first half of the 20th century, quite a few U.S. doctors considered it
* In the first half of the 20th century, theatre critics tended to regard Broadway musical comedies, whatever their merits, as not really suitable for sober dramatic criticism, a few stiff drinks being needed for their proper appreciation. The musical comedy ghetto started to break down with the critical acclaim for
* In the first half of the series, this is the general reaction when Luffy reveals his
* In the first half of the "Sludge King" two-parter, Felix does this when he sees Candy Kitty for the first time.
* In the first, Hayes is caught by Yorga's vampire brides, who proceed to knock him to the ground and feed on him as he's still screaming.
* In the first, Icarus Two has decoupled from Icarus One, wrenching the airlock open. There's only one spacesuit, and with no means of repressurizing the damaged airlock, they can't just send over more suits.
* In the first installment, it is the final battle against Gwyn, who has lost his mind after burning for thousands of years to prolong the Age of Fire.
* In the first instance, a security guard hears a strange noise down a hallway. He investigates and finds a janitor cleaning the floor with an electric polisher. The guard and the janitor greet each other and after the guard leaves, the janitor is yanked off-screen whereupon a crash is heard.
* In the first instance, the wife claims spousal privilege so she can't be forced to testify against her husband, which Brenda tells her doesn't apply in this case, though in the end, she testifies of her own will
* In the first interpretation, Andy (and later Bonnie) is like a parent to the toys. The tension about "Who is the favorite?" that dominates the first film parallels
* In the "first in the phone book" category (see Real Life examples), in the
* In the first invasion of the Fire Nation, Aang lets Sokka and Toph hang onto his glider in order to cross a river of lava, resulting in flapping cheeks.

* In the first issue, a man who knows that Rowan possesses true magical power attempts to kill her by setting fire to her, because that is the traditional method used to kill witches.
* In the first issue, Grant impulsively rescues a slave during his smash-and-grab. They immediately run into her husband when they reach the surface. Overjoyed to be reunited, the husband leads his warriors against the slavers pursuing Grant so the latter can escape.
* In the first issue of 'Loki; Agent Of Asgard' Hawkeye chose to play a fishing video game. Somehow he ended up in a malfunctioning helicopter, pursued by the American army. What's worse is that this kind of nonsense is common when he plays video games. Hawkeye is just that terrible.
* In the first issue of the All-New Ultimates, Lana deliberately sets up time with her Poey and she comes back from a hot date rather disappointed and let down. And then her boyfriend Poey is offed by Diamondback and her gang as revenge for screwing up a drug operation.
* In the first issue of Vol 2, Sarah Rainmaker makes her entrance by going for a swim in the pool in La Jolla... while
* In the first Italian dub of the 1983 series, which covered the Ruby Spears episodes, Vittorio Stagni (Dave Seville) is the real-life father of Ilaria Stagni (Alvin Seville since season 2). Likewise, Barbara de Bortoli (Brittany Miller since season 2) is the real-life sister of Federica de Bortoli (Eleanor Miller).
* In the first Kingdom Hearts, Sora fits this trope. He journeys not to save the Universe (which he ends up doing), but to find his friends. Once he has done that, he still needs to restore his homeworld.
* In the first leg of the 2012 Copa del Rey Quarterfinal, 3rd Division Mirandés were leading 1st Division Espanyol 2-0 in the 85th minute, but Espanyol came back to win 3-2. Then, in the second leg, the score was 1-1 in injury time before a last-minute free kick saw Mirandés win 2-1 and reach the semi-finals on away goals.
* In the first level of the second game (based on the last episode of
* In the first Madagascar movie, Skipper asks Kowalski what's written in the box they're in and he says he doesn't understand because he can't read. In this film, during the scene where Kowalski is checking the manual of the North Wind's jet, he says "No, still can't read".
* In the first major aversion, Veronica's horse Cobalt sustains a broken leg (a very serious injury in horses due to the way their bodies are built) because Veronica jumps him recklessly and ends up having to be put down.
* In the first manga, Tsukiyama is obsessed with and wants to eat Kaneki so he goes into a rage when he sees Touka take a bite out of Kaneki's shoulder and tries to kill her. He even tries to kill Kaneki himself when the latter tries to go off on a dangerous rescue mission and tells him he won't allow anyone, not even Kaneki himself, to get in the way of his eating Kaneki.
* In the first manga, Tsukiyama is portrayed as a very attractive man who mutilates and eats humans and ghouls alike, and manipulates Kaneki so he can gain his trust and eat him.
* In the first match against Nekoma, Inukai is introduced as the one character who can keep up with Hinata's fast movements, which is a problem for Karasuno as their strategy revolved around it. Yet, when Lev is introduced, Inukai gets demoted to benchwarmer and rarely plays in the matches anymore.
* In the first mini-arc "Buggy's Crew: After the Battle", this happened to the remaining members of Buggy's Pirates after they were
* In the first mission of the campaign, the NTF Belisarius, severely damaged and outgunned, attempts to ram the GVD Psamtik... and is torn to shreds by the Psamtik's main guns before they get anywhere near.
* In the first mission you find the person your supposed to be rescuing being tortured.
* In the first movie, after wrecking their lip-synced concert on purpose, Alvin then jumps to the camera knowing "Uncle Ian" is watching and mocks him.
* In the first movie, Ash Ketchum throws himself directly into an attack by Mew and Mewtwo, and gets

* In the first movie by Sam Raimi, several actors from the TV series he's produced get bit parts, including
* In the first movie, Carter spends his first few scenes with Lee believing he can't speak English. Lee lets him believe this until it's convenient for him to reveal he's fluent.
* In the first movie, D manages to bring Doris home after rescuing her. She had been either unconscious or in a trance the entire time, but her first question is if D is okay.
* In the first movie, Dr. Evil has Austin and Vanessa Kensington on an "unnecessarily slow-moving dipping mechanism" over a pit of mutant seabass. (He wanted sharks with
* In the first movie, Harry wets himself while he and Lloyd are riding their Moped to the ski resort. Lloyd seems to appreciate this, since it was cold.
* In the first movie has something called the Kido Cannon, which destroyed an entire pocket dimension.
* In the first movie, Holloway and Quentin both commit this during their discussion of each other's pet theories on the origins of the Cube. She believes that the military-industrial complex created the place, which he dismisses because he believes government organizations are just composed of people like him, whose goals in life are to "buy big boats", not conspire. Quentin believes that the structure is a rich psychopath's entertainment, comparing it to
* In the first movie, Mad Dog and Batman end up parking their truck in the hotel lobby, in the first instance of their "no brakes"
* In the first movie, Major Lennox and the U.S. Air Force successfully take down Blackout and badly injure Megatron (without being able to kill him, only paralyzing Megatron and rendering him nearly immobile) but were no match for Starscream and Brawl. Starscream attempted but failed to stop a squadron of F-22 jets from firing on Megatron. Bumblebee had to take out Brawl, Optimus and Sam together eventually vanquish Megatron and Starscream simply retreated back to space when he realized all his teammates were defeated.
* In the first movie of the series, some road sign spoofing sends all the following racers into a mine.
* In the first movie, one of the evil spies is a superstitious Irishman with a charm bracelet that has a unique trinket on it for every man he kills. The bracelet is of vital interest to international law enforcement, and he proclaims "they're always after me lucky charms!" which causes the audience and everyone sitting at the table with him to snicker. He asks why everyone always laughs when he says that, and Frau Farbissina tries to tell him about the commercials. Her ridiculous description of the commercials (in reality an ad-lib that was
* In the first movie, one of the minor characters gets part of his hand (including fingers) sliced off by a deadly laser trap.
* In the first movie, Optimus Prime is by far the largest Autobot (at 28 feet tall), however Megatron (at 33 feet tall) is according to
* In the first movie, Sid gets his tongue stuck on the floor of an ice cave.
* In the first movie, the black female rookie park ranger is much more competent than the experienced white male park ranger.
* In the first movie, the couple have a cutesy scene where they're falling in love. They display their affections by blowing up a toad and a snake into balloons. It's
* In the first movie, the first plan is played straight (detailed/fails), the second is averted (detailed/succeeds).
* In the first movie, the good guys are blue and the bad guys are red.
* In the first movie, there are some incredibly obvious hints that Hahli and Jaller like each other, though this was back before the hugging/kissing rule was really brought in.
* In the first movie, the veterinarian's goons' bumbling and cowardice were
* In the first movie, three white cops beat a black activist to death and frame him up as a heroine addict, while a black officer watches. 1 year later, the activist comes back as a zombie, and after killing the white cops, does the same to the black cop for doing nothing.

* In the first movie, Trinity and his brother Bambino (both are criminals themselves) assist some Amish settlers in fighting off Mexican marauders who take advantage of their vow of peace. By the end of the movie, Bambino and Trinity have taught the religious people how to defend themselves. The movie ends with the Amish people making a stand for themselves and defeating the Mexicans.
* In the first movie Two of the male protagonists are dead and the last one finds the damsel with Yorga. He manages to stake Yorga (albeit accidentally) and saves the girl. However even with Yorga dead, his victims don't
* In the first movie, when Hans Gruber compliments Takagi's choice of suit whilst they are riding up in an elevator together.
* In the first movie, when Luke's commander is killed in the assault on the Death Star, this huge, meaningful music cue plays to signify that Luke is now in command of the mission. (What's left of it; just him and his wingmen.)
* In the first movie, Zazu gets trampled by a herd of animals twice and shoved into a volcanic vent by hyenas while babysitting Simba and Nala.
* in the first My Little Pony special. She caused a lot of speculation and discussion but is generally considered to be a figurine-only pony named "Firstborn".
* In the first non-canon movie, Yamcha (again) accidentally grabs Pasta's breast in a fight.
* In the first novel, Harrington herself is a competent but not necessarily noteworthy officer who superiors higher up the chain of command don't really know, and in subsequent novels gains a number of people trying to destroy her reputation and career. In the short story "Let's Dance", written many real-life years later but taking place chronologically about a year or so before
* In the first novel, Honor's ship was stuck with a weapons mix that didn't work because the First Lord didn't understand Admiral Hemphill when she tried to tell him that
* In the first novel, Paul Atreides uses one against the Shield Wall, a terrain feature, that just happens to have humans present. He argues that since he's not targeting humans specifically, the Guild ships watching the battle will take any excuse they can get to not destroy the valuable planet of Arrakis.
* In the first novel, Percy and his friends encounter a masked lady who has a garden full of stone animals, stone people, stone satyrs... It's the real Medusa. And since Percy is the son of Poseidon and his friend Annabeth is the daughter of Athena, Medusa wants a lot of payback.
* In the first novel, the car bomb is placed in the suspension, rigged to go off when it falls and hits the ground as the car starts moving. As Quiller needs to fake his death to escape surveillance, he starts the car's engine and leaves the bomb on the hood, hoping the vibrations will cause it to slide down the hood, fall off and detonate. After a while nothing happens, and Quiller thinks the bomb has got stuck and he'd better go back and dislodge it, when the garage blows up in his face.
* In the first novel, the dragons' numbers have dwindled during the Long Interval to the point that the last operating Weyr has only ever had
* In the first novel, the "Sun Stealer" has been around for at least 900,000 years,
* In the first novel, the Uncle Ira group give McCarthy (who's been stirring up trouble thus drawing attention to their top secret organisation) a routine assignment to guard a Chtorran worm being displayed for a conference. Unknown to him, the case holding the worm has been deliberately weakened. Unknown to the Uncle Ira group, McCarthy has gone out to the firing range and trained himself to use the flechette rifle he's been issued with. McCarthy stops the worm's rampage becoming a hero in the process, so Uncle Ira decides to make the best of a bad situation and let him join for real.
* In the first of many horrific injuries she suffers over the series,
* In the first of the "in the ring" wrestling matches in the lucha film

* In the first of the novelizations by Michael Ely (one of the writers for the game), Santiago personally leads an elite unit of her Myrmidons to storm the UN Headquarters (the Peacekeepers' home base), which has been under Spartan siege for days. Not only does this seal the base's fate, but she also ends up personally
* In the first of three missions on Kaldir, Kerrigan tries to collect her brood, only to find Protoss covering the planet. The Protoss quickly begin trying to kill the Zerg, so Kerrigan fights back. Eventually, Kerrigan is forced to destroy a series of escape ships to avoid the Nerazim from Shakuras arriving with an attack force which, at this point, would be way more than Kerrigan could safely handle.
* In the first of Troy Polamalu's Head and Shoulders commercials, one of his teammates asks if he's been using his shampoo, because it's for guys who want "thicker and fuller hair"; Troy's already impressive mane gets thicker and fuller each time the camera cuts to him when he denies it, until he sheepishly admits the obvious.
* In the first one, Bloo tells the story of the Superdude to Mac and he interprets his friends at Foster's as characters in his story, while in reality, the story is just an exaggeration of the events that happened prior to the episode.
* In the first one, the little girl is completely unaware of her sister's condition, and unwillingly tempts her by being physically close to her.
* In the first one, the victim is investigating a noise in a closed garage and finds a cat. Then a dog. Then a horse.
* In the first part, genies are required to tell new masters that they can only have 3 wishes. Guess what happens when an inexperienced genie forgets this?
* In the first part of "Last Whiff of Summer", the two-part fourth-season premiere of
* In the first part of Season 2, most of the villains seek the same object, the Obelisk: HYDRA leader Daniel Whitehall wants to turn it into a weapon; Cal, Skye's father, wants to use it to awake his daughter's powers (as well as killing Whitehall for
* In the first part of the season, Shades tries to get Cottonmouth to stop extorting Harlem businesses as retaliation against Luke, since such an act makes Cottonmouth look weak. The move in fact backfires by making Luke's name ring out even more.
* In the first part of "Who Shot Mr. Burns?", the family receives a thank you letter from Burns for the assorted chocolates... except for Homer, who had sent the candies in the hopes that Mr. Burns would at least remember his name. When Homer reads the letter, he orders the kids to step out of the room before unleashing a major F-Bomb.
* In the first phase, Solaris has 6 claws, 6 horns on its head, and 6 stones across its back, a reference to the number of the Beast which is 666.
* In the first pilot, "The Cage", short females were deliberately cast as the Talosians, to make 6'0" Jeffrey Hunter (Captain Pike) appear towering height next to them. While Pike physically towers over the aliens, they dwarf him with their intellect and telepathic capabilities.
* In the first Richard Bolitho novel, Captain Bolitho relies on the fear of the press gang to crew his ship, by sending it above a port town to lie in wait for the civilians who run to hide from the press gang when they hear it's coming.
* In the first scene of the anime, Guts smacks around some guys in a bar for no apparent reason. In the manga, he was doing it to send a message to their boss, who was an Apostle he'd been hunting, but the anime cuts out that entire plotline completely, making it look like he's either being an asshole for no reason or is doing it to save Puck (which is rather uncharacteristic for him at that point).
* In the first season, Admiral Lindy, wishing to make Nanoha more comfortable and show her appreciation for Nanoha's culture, invites the title character to a
* In the first season, Agent Booth asks Dr. Goodman, an anthropologist, to look over a series of crime scene photographs and photos of their suspect's home to help the FBI figure out where to focus their search for evidence on a short timeline. Goodman is notably hesitant to do this, since his speciality is studying the
* In the first season alone, there are three separate attacks on vampire nests by the heroes — in an opium den in the pilot, on board a plague ship in "What Death Can Join Together", and in the Grand Guignol theater in the season finale.

* In the first season, and on occasion afterwards, the show would use live-action photography in place of backgrounds, most notably in "Candace Loses Her Head", when they go to Mt. Rushmore, actual photographs of the monument are used.
* In the first season, an escape car utilized by Teri and Kim to get away from a compromised safe house explodes after a fairly short drop off a steep slope.
* In the first season, a news reporter almost always assured us that amazingly, no one was seriously hurt in the day's monster rampage.
* In the first season, a relatively small Viking raiding party is attacked by numerically superior Saxon force. The Vikings draw up into a shield wall while the Saxons charge en masse and get slaughtered. The Saxon commanders' comments imply they've never encountered a shield wall before.
* In the first season, Arzt tells the rest of the Losties that the centuries-old dynamite they've found is very fragile when holding a stick... which then explodes in his hand. But then rest of the Losties (Jack, Kate, Hurley) carry the dynamite without ever exploding, even though they do, in fact, run with it.
* In the first season, Ash Ketchum dressed up as 'Ashley', a little blonde girl in an orange dress.
* In the first season, Captain Rip Hunter is the leader of the Legends (Headstrong with a dash of Mastermind), as he is the one who recruited them all for the mission of stopping Vandal Savage. Subverted in that he's actually a pretty terrible leader; he's an excellent adventurer, but he's too aloof and impatient to properly channel the difficult personalities on the ship.
* In the first season, Carly's friend Sam was cast as a dumb blonde, like when, in "
* In the first season, Chandler one says to Monica that if they turn 40 and neither of them are married then they should marry each other. When Monica asks why she wouldn't be married by then, everything he then says just makes her angrier.
* In the first season, Clay Puppington's alcoholism is less pronounced and played for laughs. But in the later parts of the second season and the entire third season, things take a darker turn.
* In the first season cliffhanger episode, McKay and two technicians draw straws (actually, broken pieces of a pencil) to see who would have to go outside an Ancient defense satellite and repair a damaged power coupling.
* In the first season, despite having a flashback of all their good times as childhood friends, Catra still turns her back on Adora, leaving her to die. Catra does this because if Adora is gone, it will mean Shadow Weaver will have to favor Catra instead.
* In the first season, Don and Terry, who dated each other in their academy days, worked together before she left to give her marriage another shot.
* In the first season, Duel Monsters was played on a large field with multiple areas of attack. Different monsters had different field advantages depending on where they were played and it was never possible to keep track of with the limited information given. The bonus was usually 30%, though.
* In the first season, each of the teen contestants were exaggerated teenage stereotypes, but otherwise mostly realistic and very easily recognizable as people you'd have probably known from school or seen in a down-to-earth teen drama or high school movie. Later seasons mostly moved away from this, with such weirdo characters as a
* In the first season episode "Forgiveness and Stuff", Lorelai cries
* In the first season episode "Hard Bargain", Michael takes advantage of the fact that a meeting is in his loft, and so when it goes bad, is able to get his hands on a weapon.
* In the first season episode "Raised By Another," a flashback shows Claire fretting that her mother will disown her if she tells her she's pregnant. The third season episode "Par Avion" reveals that Claire's mother was in a coma at the time.
* In the first season episode "The Blue Spirit", the atmospheric background music as Zuko returns to his ship turns out to be Uncle Iroh playing the tsungi horn

* In the first season episode "The Pointy End" when Barristan Selmy, known colloquially as "Ser Barristan the Bold" is forcibly retired from the Kingsguard by Cersei despite them holding their position for life, he strips off his armor and declares he will "die a knight" to which Littlefinger jokes, "A naked knight" eliciting a laugh from the assembled court. Barristan then draws his sword in anger and everyone stops laughing at once. More to the point, they stop laughing and all look positively terrified. It's only when Barristan throws his sword at Joffrey's feet and storms out that everyone finally starts breathing again.
* In the first season episode "The State Dinner" a carrier battle group is stuck in the path of a hurricane. The naval officer who briefs the president on it tells him that it consists of "the USS
* In the first season episode "The Torment of Tantalus", Daniel Jackson wants to attempt to rescue a man who went through the Stargate in 1945 and was lost when the Stargate shut down. He comes up with multiple reasons for why such a dangerous mission should be attempted, but General Hammond shuts him down very quickly, pointing out that the man was put in danger by the US Air Force, and he should be rescued as a matter of honor (which was Jackson's original argument, he just over-prepared).
* In the first-season episode "Wanted Man", Michael takes advantage of knowing Fiona's home better than an intruder, and waits for him to trip over something Michael tripped over
* In the first season episode where Homer buys Marge a bowling ball after
* In the first season finale, "Blue Angels", all three angels and Bosley go undercover in different places, and two of the assignments qualify as this trope: Jill impersonates a masseuese in a massage parlor (with Bosley as the manager). Sabrina goes undercover in the LAPD as a Phoenix vice detective, and is immediately ordered to impersonate a prostitute in order to infiltrate a different massage parlor.
* In the first season finale, GOB has a scene with Kitty in which he does this; she's trying to convince him to join her to take over the Bluth company, but he's trying to figure out what he can order that's OK for the Atkins Diet. In the commentary, the entire cast was silent for this entire exchange (if you can call it that) and spent a couple of minutes singing the praises of Will Arnett for his performance in the scene, and it was impressive; not a single one of his lines worked off of anything she was saying. "What about macaroni — let me finish —
* In the first-season finale "Loose Ends", a drug dealer that Michael is threatening wants to know who he is; Michael, in no mood for a cover ID, simply quotes his opening narration: "I'm Michael Westen. I used to be a spy." It gets a
* In the first season finale, Mr. Nancy tells Shadow and Mr. Wednesday the story of the fall of Bilquis, from Queen of Sheba and goddess of love to a broken bag lady living on the streets. Shadow thinks the aesop is "never compromise". Both Nancy and Wednesday find that a ridiculous interpretation. No one would get anywhere in the world without compromise. The intended aesop is "you need a queen". This foreshadows Wednesday recruiting Easter, the oldest goddess still alive, for his cause.
* In the first season finale, the Camarilla burn several captured witches at the stake.
* In the first season finale we learn that Cara Dune's homeworld was Alderaan, which was
* In the first season, Gregor has only said two things, "Sword!" and screaming. As of "Garden of Bones", he's had a few more lines, but is hardly what one would call verbose. In Season 4, he's had a grand total of three lines of dialogue, but all memorable. In Season 5, he is mentioned to have taken a vow of silence by Qyburn — perhaps it just means that he can't speak.
* In the first season, Heather does pulls this trope on Lindsay when the latter is eliminated after being the last contestant to get to the finish line in the bike race. Heather was the only one that could save her supposed friend from elimination and she chose to not do it.

* In the first season, Hera keeps the rest of the crew in the dark about the existence of other rebel cells and the wider Rebellion as a security precaution in case any of them get captured. As the
* In the first season, Howard Wolowitz tries to bribe a hospital emergency room receptionist to pretend to treat him for an allergic reaction (to stall for time to set up a surprise party for his friend Leonard). He offers to introduce her to "the man who freed your people" (Abraham Lincoln on a five-dollar bill).
* In the first season, it was explained that Roscoe lost his pension in the county bond election and does Boss Hogg's bidding because he needs the extra money. That plot point was dropped later on.
* In the first season Jeff takes a one-hour nap in his car and finds a game of paintball has thrown the school into chaos, with themed groups appearing.
* In the first season, John Stewart was framed for accidentally destroying an entire planet, and even
* In the first season Kim Bauer sneaks out with her friend Janet York to meet up with a couple of college guys. Janet has sex with one of the guys while Kim just makes out with the other one. When it turns out the college guys are set to kidnap the girls, it's the start of a pretty bad day for Kim, but Janet? She gets her arm broken, doped up on heroin, run over by a car, and is finally suffocated to death.
* In the first season, local bully Larry is practicing self-defense exercises with Buffy and she has to fake that he's stronger. He grabs her butt, prompting her to react with her super-strength.
* In the first season movie "The Maze of the Minotaur", Hercules and two companions drag a spear in the ground to mark their trail. When one of the companions loses his nerve and tries to flee, he discovers to his horror that the Minotaur has already messed up the trail, with lines in the dirt going out in all of the Maze's branches.
* In the first season, Nimueh puts a creature into the water supply that sickens everyone in Camelot.
* In the first season, Numerius seems like a nice enough kid who worships Spartacus the way one would a famous athlete.
* In the first season of the new show, Mickey Smith is explicitly set up as The Guy Who Doesn't Have What It Takes, in contrast to
* In the first season of the show, before Arthur got roped into a for-life
* In the first season, Oliver was unaware Malcom Merlyn was behind many of the actions of the year and was also the murderous Dark Archer. Even when Ollie suspected Malcom, he thought the Archer was just Malcom's enforcer, which nearly got him killed when he confronted Merlyn on his own.
* In the first season, only three players can participate in a match, but all of the important teams have four members. They usually tend to be All-Star reserve players and they are pretty much interchangeable. However, in White Tigers' case, they have the overshadowed one.
* In the first season premiere, Maddie is shown with pigtails at first, in order to make her seem older after the 2 year
* In the first season, Public Security Section 9 takes on the New World Brigade as a minor antagonist, which is a Japanese leftist terrorist group that adhere to anti-cyberization stances taken from the Human Liberation Front. One of their most notorious terror attacks was the kidnapping of the daughter of a known businessman responsible for creating cyberbrains. The unit eventually rescue her
* In the first season, Raynard Waits wounds Crate and kills Deputy District Attorney Lou Escobar during his escape from custody.
* In the first season, Rumplestiltskin is the beast, and while he softens a bit, love does
* In the first season, Sean Kelvin attacks his ex-girlfriend in the shower, under the guise of a
* In the first season, set in 1920, a businessman tells Nucky that there is an Italian man in Boston working with mail coupons that can return investments in a couple of weeks with a 45% increase. Nucky says that those numbers are absurd and that there must be something very wrong with that guy, but the other man replies that he has had successful returns a couple of times already and has invested now his whole fortune. A couple of episodes later, we learn that the businessman has lost all his money and that this Italian's name is

* In the first season, SG-1 found a literal version of this, which would blow up the second she was returned to her home planet. Keywords
* In the first season, Skyler confronts Walt about his odd behavior and why he is consorting with a drug dealer. Walt "confesses" that he's been buying marijuana from Jesse.
* In the first season, Sousuke goes AWOL and abandons his post under a hostage situation to recover Kaname from the villains. Granted, she
* In the first season, Talia comments to Sinclair that she thinks Garibaldi is following her, as every time she gets on an elevator, he's in it. Astute viewers could confirm this, as in a couple previous episodes, when she got on an elevator, he was indeed in there already.
* In the first season, Tenzin mentions that his ex-girlfriend Police Chief Lin Bei Fong "got along famously" with his father, Avatar Aang. After what we learn about Lin's past in seasons three and four and how Lin never knew her real father, it becomes rather obvious that Aang must have been a
* In the first season, the Assault Containers are actually equipped with two Gatling Guns...
* In the first season, the Barksdale empire frequently and violently expands by either driving off other dealers by force or killing them outright. This is possible due to them having a number of talented and ruthless hitmen working for them. The most noteworthy by far is Wee-bey Brice, a
* In the first season, The Flash was held back a lot by being tripped or clotheslined by objects that he had no excuse for not seeing coming or reacting to.
* In the first season, the Miami PD finds a woman's corpse and Debra (believing it the work of a serial killer) attempts to write up a profile of the killer. When she shows it to Dexter, he says it seems rather basic and uninformative
* In the first season, the new Team Avatar patrols republic city in Asami Sato's car, a kickass black roadster that fans have dubbed "The Korramobile".
* In the first season, there are many filler episodes in between getting the last badge and actually entering the competition because Ash has two months to spare (plus the time it takes for him to travel back to Pallet Town to find out where it's on).
* In the first season, the zombies arrive at the rooftop where Merle Dixon has been handcuffed and abandoned by the rest of the group, and he escapes by amputating his hand with a hacksaw from the bag of tools that was conveniently dropped next to him.
* In the first season we also get the fact that their spines glow when "getting intimate". This was dropped in later seasons (probably because it's pretty stupid and provides a simple "Cylon detector" for humanity).
* In the first season, when Cragen is suspected of being associated with a dirty cop, it's noticed he's getting a new swimming pool. Cragen later reveals that his wife (a flight attendant) is the one paying for it.
* In the first season, Zack and Cody are presumably the same age as their actors: 12 or 13, while Maddie and London are in their late teens. However, in later seasons (and in the spinoff), they are clearly older teens, while Maddie and London are the same age: In the spinoff the twins and London go to school together.
* In the first season, Zoisite was so threatened by the idea of Nephrite's potential success that he sent a trio of monsters after him to
* In the first season, Zuko hires a female bounty hunter named June to track down the heroes. She proved to be
* In the first serial "An Unearthly Child", Susan Foreman is demonstrated to be unearthly by...
* In the first series episode "Excalibur", one of the knights, Owain, is about to face the Black Knight in a fight to the death. Morgana gives him a token for luck.
* In the first series they covered "silver", giving chilver, a ewe lamb.
* in the first series, Yuuno shocks Nanoha by revealing that he was actually a Human boy. He thought that he told her already.

* In the first show, the Phantom fell in love with Christine when he heard her sing, made her the star of an existing opera, then wrote an opera for her to star in. But as Christine realizes he's a
* In the first Sin City tale, Marv subverted this by actually hurling himself through the windshield of a cop car as opposed to just hanging on.
* In the first skit, Noah's initial reply to most of what God tells him is a sarcastic, "
* In the first Slayers anime season, a Mazoku named "Tiiba" looks like a cute humanoid rooster in a waistcoat at first. Then he manages to slip away and find a mask into which most of his power was sealed, transforming him into a giant humanoid hawk-thing when he melds it into his face.
* In the first Soviet mission, your superiors order you to annihilate a rebel village. The battle itself is a total
* In the first "Spaced Out" episode, the King and the Queen of Yugopotamia were going to Earth to rescue their son. She said they'd not have to blow up so many planets if he asked for directions. He replied he was still the King around there and she said he was King of getting lost.
* In the first Star Wars EU Boba Fett novel, both Boba and Jango pull a
* In the first story-arc, when she's wearing a classy opera dress, even Daisy gets cleavage. However this is more a case of
* In the First Succession war, the new Coordinator ordered the execution of 90% of the civilians of Kentares, as revenge for the "assassination" of his father the previous Coordinator...who had been visiting the world while
* In the first "summer break" episode, where Osaka randomly imagined
* In the first Survival Escape, Akira and Ami try to run away from a car that's barreling down a narrow alleyway towards them. However, no matter how much they run, they remain in the alleyway, and realize that some other solution is required to stay alive.
* In the first Thanksgiving episode the gang accidentally lock themselves out of Monica's apartment while their dinner is still in the oven. Joey and Chandler have a spare key but it's in a drawer
* In the first timeline, Alastor Moody turned the siege of Azkaban into this. Voldemort eventually broke through and killed the defenders, but by the time he did, all the prisoners whom he hoped to rescue were dead, all the structures were levelled, and the casualties among his own forces were so bad that Moody's
* In the first timeline this happened to both Chara and Gaster, the former by the blade of a
* In the first Tobey Maguire film, they pelt Green Goblin with bricks and stuff after Spidey
* In the first transformation he turns into a bureaucrat that goes to the McKenzie's farm and inform Moses, the
* In the first "Treehouse of Horror" special, Kang and Kodos show the Simpsons their "state of the art" entertainment facility. It's just
* In the first two games, they essentially make for an early game nuisance/slight challenge. In the third game as well as
* In the first two novellas, it's the bumbling police detectives who serve as
* In the first two seasons, Blake is pursued by Space Commander Travis, who has a
* In the first two seasons, multiple characters from the Wild West and other continuities discover that they are robotic hosts in an Amusement Park, their memories and lives are not their own, and they are repeatedly killed and resurrected to cater to the interests of the cruel guests who visit the park. One of the most chilling sequences is when a host, Maev accidentally wakes up in the real world and
* In the first verse, a slip-up in an actor's facelift leads to the failure of the show that would have saved a TV network.
* In the first version of the Jubilee Line Extension plan, the line ran from Charing Cross via Aldwych and Ludgate Circus to Fenchurch Street station, then via tunnel under the River Thames to connect to the East London line north of Surrey Docks (now Surrey Quays) from where it would take over East London Line services to New Cross Gate and New Cross with tunnels continuing from the latter to Lewisham. In anticipation of this, the tunnels of the first phase of the line continued eastward from Charing Cross under Strand almost as far as Aldwych.

* In the first video (and most popular) of the Unforgivable series, this trope is averted really, really hard. The narrator essentially meets a woman while he is plotting to buy pants with stolen money, gets her number, and takes her out on a date. This date consists of her buying him food, him treating her rudely, and eventually
* In the first video game, you had to press a button twice to dash; the first press would get you in this position.
* In the first video, he made a bowl of Minecraft Creeper Crunch cereal, to which he added
* In the first volume of the manga, Kamiyama attempts to teach some of his classmates how to have a 'normal' (i.e., 'pointless') conversation. The topics range from how to eat fish to Kamiyama's meeting with an
* In the first volume Qwenthur and Havia are awarded with everything they need to achieve their dreams after defeating Water Strider. However their actions after that point end up getting their awards stripped, leaving them right where they started.
* In the first volume, there's Malcolm Little (Malcolm X) as VP of the rest-US in a world where the CSA successfully seceded. David Duke as POTUS in a world where
* In the First World Championship, one of the American entrants, Mauler, was disqualified before it even got into the arena, because the producers realised too late that the British arena was not built for its flailing weapon and there was no way to contain it safely. There was no substitute available, so the other robot (Cerberus, representing Cyprus) went through automatically.
* In the first world, "Clowny Island," there's a mini-game that lets you build custom roller coasters for the titular robot to ride in. While there is a goal to it (the coaster's path must hit certain targets), more than one reviewer has noted its extreme distraction potential. "Just one more coaster, I swear!"
* In the First World War, German soldiers making night raids across the trench lines wore their gas masks, sometimes because they were needed but usually as a deliberate psychological thing, to make themselves impersonal or un-human to the people they were attacking.
* In the first World War it was simply "Shell-Shock", simple and direct. "
* In the First World War, the sheer ferocity of the artillery barrages was sufficient to dislodge large enough volumes of earth to cover over some of those it did not blow apart. Fortunately for quite a few soldiers thus buried, trench warfare being what it was meant that there was always an immediate and plentiful supply of willing hands to dig you out and shovels with which they could do so. Some people survived this treatment more than once.
* In the first year or two after a new species or strain of livestock comes into demand, they can be temporarily hard to come by, as their owners prefer breeding their stock for future profits over selling them now. For example, when llamas first began to see use as sheep-guards and environmentally-friendly pack animals in the United States, only gelded males were available for these purposes: breeding animals cost far too much. Ditto for exotic pets.
* In the first years, Snoopy actually acted like a normal dog and had no thought bubbles. He also appeared to be more of a neighborhood dog as opposed to being Charlie Brown's pet. He consistently called Charlie Brown by his name in early comics, but suddenly forgot and started calling him "the round-headed kid".
* In "The Fisher King", an unsub mostly just wanted to send them on a quest. Some of the team worked on it like a normal case, some of the team followed the breadcrumbs. The trail of breadcrumbs solved the case, and not following the rules nearly got one of the BAU killed.
* In the Fishman Island arc, after finishing the 8-sword-wielding octopus merman Hyouzou (who Zoro had been mocking as a frog, much to Hyouzou's fury):
* In the Fish-Man Island arc, King Neptune has Hody Jones and his subordinates thrown into the palace prison.

* In "The Fishy Doubloon Caper", Player calls in Ivy and Zack that Carmen needed them, unfortunately notifying her previous classmate, La Chevre. As he walks towards them with a giant fish hook asking if this Carmen was Carmen Sandiego, Ivy and Zack switch between saying San Francisco and San Jose.
* In "The Five Doctors," the Fifth Doctor reveals himself to be a skilled harpist.
* In "The Five Doctors", the Time Lords recruit the Master to save the Doctor, who is trapped in the Death Zone on Gallifrey.
* In "The Five Wise Words of the Guru", the protagonist encounters a giant who asks him what he thinks of his beautiful wife. The protagonist's life is spared, and he wins a favor from the giant because he is the first hapless traveler not to try to point out that the wife is a skeleton.
* In the flashback arc of "The Valley of Fear", Pinkerton Detective Birdy Edwards infiltrated the Scowrers by claiming to be a counterfeiter. In truth, the money he was "forging" for the gang while gathering evidence against them was real.
* In the flashback arc showing Kozuki Oden's past, Kurozumi Higurashi impersonates Oden's son Momonosuke during Oden's fight with Kaido, causing Oden to be distracted long enough for Kaido to defeat him. During Oden's execution, Kaido reveals that he killed Higurashi for interfering with his fight with Oden.
* in the flashback arc, when he realizes just how badly Aizen screwed him over. Made even more horrifying by the fact that he was being hollowfied at the time.
* In the flashback at the start Rachel's narration says there was nothing connecting her to the murder scene, even though a cleaning lady witnessed her leaving the room. Or that the victim was her babysitter and babysitting her at the time.
* In the flashback episode "I Married Marge", after Homer is first hired by Mr. Burns to work at the power plant, Burns comments to Smithers: "Simpson, eh? I'll remember that name."
* In the flashbacks describing the Birth of Nerv, Gendo was introduced as a
* In the flashback sequence in "To Save Us All From Satan's Power", a young Jackie Aprile, Jr. is played by Matt Cerbone, the younger brother of Jackie's regular actor Jason Cerbone.
* In the flashbacks leading up to the Uchiha massacre, some members of the clan confront Itachi, demanding to know why he wasn't at the meeting and informing him of the apparent suicide of Shisui Uchiha, Itachi's best friend and the only other absentee, while making it clear they suspect him.
* In the flashbacks to the Ishval campaign, Brigadier General Basque Gran uses a Philosopher's Stone and suddenly has cannons sticking out of his everywhere.
* In the flashback to their childhood, Ace has begun caring for Luffy after the later got mauled almost to death by a bear.
* In the flashback trial, Klavier says that, because there weren't any fingerprints found on the gun, the defendant had to be the killer, because he's known for wearing gloves. Anyone with common sense, however, would know that this is faulty logic, because it could be anyone with gloves (and, in fact, Valant also wore them in the night of the crime), not to mention the fact that the crime took place
* In the flashback, we see Morgan defending Chuck, so Chuck considers him to be his Cool Big Bro, and Awesome's pretty cool too.
* In the flash-forward "Lisa's Wedding" episode, life-like androids on several occasions short themselves out with their own tears whenever they cry.
* In the flash-forwards, the older generation of heroes decide to take the blame for the damage done in the course of saving the city, meaning they have to go on the run. But they know the younger generation will keep the city safe without them.
* in the flash of 1s and 0s of his dream; it's visible just at the bottom as it ends). Fry comforts him: "There's no such thing as 2."
* In the Flashpoint timeline, Kid Flash got his speed while drag racing. His car, filled with an experimental fuel mix, was struck by lightning. After the explosion, he spent 9 months in a coma, after which he woke up and found he could move really fast.

* In the flash-sideways universe, she works with Jack and was previously married to him.
* In "The Flat, Gold Forever", the Federation colony Prairie is an agrarian planet.
* In the Flesh behave as normal humans when medicated. They sleep, but do not eat, drink, or age.
* In the Flesh Freddie is caught replaying his wedding video over and over again, focusing on his (now) ex-wife says she loves him. Kicks off major problems between the couple and her present husband.
* In the Flesh has a new drug just for zombies (or act and behave like people but without the need to drink or eat) and seems rather popular seeing as no other vices are available to them. The only person we see use one however ends up dead... well, more dead at any rate.
* In the Flesh have one in a cave that acted as a den for them. It reads "Kieren + Rick 4ever", yup no way that'll cause any pathos in the future.
* In the Flesh who's trying to re-integrate into a society which now hates him and come to terms with the guilt of the people he killed when rabid.
* In "The Flood", Helga is attempting to sneak out of the school and runs into Principal Wartz dancing in a sombrero shaking maracas...for some reason.
* In "The Flower", Gumball gets possessed by a physical manifestation of his own jealousy of seeing
* In "The Flower", this is Leslie's (the titular flower) reaction to Gumball's
* In "The Flushinator", Zack, Deuce and Elanor are fleeing from the Flushinator, who is pursuing Deuce. Zack says they have to hurry as their decoy won't fool the Flushinator for long. Cut to the Flushinator looking at the decoy—a drawing of Deuce stuck to a mailbox—and asking "Have you done something with your hair?".
* In the "Flying Lessons" sketch, Mr. Chigger and Mr. Anemone get into an argument over whether the latter is on a wire, which degenerates into shouting "Is!" and "Isn't!" back and forth until the narrator decides to cut away from this "pointless bickering."
* In the FMV where Seymour summons Anima, Anima is able to rapid-fire its special move "
* In the Foggy Swamp, Aang has a vision, although he's awake, of a young girl in a fancy dress with a flying boar.
* in the fog), one of the zombies pounds on the front door for admittance. Mrs. Kobritz foolishly opens the front door to see who's there and is killed by the zombie.
* In the folk ballad, "Thomas the Rhymer" the Queen of Elfland notes the road to Heaven is overgrown with briers and the road to Hell is broad and even. On the other hand there is the narrow, winding, and/or hidden (depending on the version of the ballad) that goes to fair Elfland .... which is where the Queen of Elfland takes Thomas.
* In the folk song "I'm My Own Grandpa," the narrator marries an older woman with an adult daughter. The narrator's father then marries the daughter, making the son's stepdaughter his stepmother. Because the narrator is married to his stepmother's mother, he has become his own step-grandfather. Not actually incest, either.
* In the folk song "Johnny Verbeck/Trebek/Quebec", the eponymous character, a butcher, makes a sausage machine and feeds the neighborhood animals into it until it breaks, and he climbs inside for repairs. His sleepwalking wife pulls the crank and "Johnny Trebek was meat".
* In the folk song "The Frozen Logger", the title character freezes to death when the temperature reaches "a thousand degrees below zero"; though no units of temperature are specified, there are no commonly used units that go that low. As the song is a
* In the folk song "William and Davy", twins William and Davy fight bitterly over the woman they're both in love with... who, as it turns out, isn't interested in either of them.

* In the folk song "Willie O'Winsbury," also known as "John Barbour" (and covered by East Coast Canadian band
* In the following book, and in many others beyond, they learn of more and more moons in the line, though past Fractal (#16) the sequence gets murky. In Air Apparent, it turns out there is in fact a finite number of moons, and it is possible to cycle through them all the way to Earth, and now it is possible to go back to Xanth in the same fashion.
* In the following chapter, he learns this applies to craftsmen too. A novice alchemist can toss common weeds into a pot of boiling water and create a potion that will regenerate limbs within an hour, but none of them acknowledge that there's anything magical happening.
* In the following chapter, Naruto visits the Hyuga estate and watches a sparring match between Hinata and Neji. Given his previous experience later, he feels the urge to ask Hikari Hyuga (Hinata's mother) if Neji is a guy, while mentioning that he saw many Hyugas who looked like women. Hikari amusingly replies that not many Hyugas were lucky enough to inherit her husband's manly features.
* In the following chapter Remus forbids Sirius from ever giving The Talk to Harry because when he tried it with Neville's father, he decided that bananas and a blow-up doll were needed as visual aids.
* In the following episode, "Justice Is Blind", adult Michael actually does throw a book at
* In the following episode, once they reach the school, Shiho questions Yuuichi about their meeting while the Funbag Airbag scene replays
* In the following episode, one of the astronauts and his wingman buzzes his own house on flying back from Florida.
* In the following game, General Levail of Begnion can be seen in a similar situation as Bryce: he knows of how corrupt the Begnion Senate is (he was the commander of Vice-Minister Lekain's personal army) and wishes that it isn't so, but he still fights you out of loyalty to Zelgius,
* In the following season, in the alternate universe where Donna didn't
* In the followup comic, the company makes Swivel Chair Safety Training mandatory. At the training, the demonstrator spins wildly
* In the follow-up episode "Doppelgangland", the heroes have no problem with returning Vampire Willow to her own universe rather than staking her, even though she's killed people there in the past and fully intends to continue killing people once she gets back, apparently it's okay because she's not hurting anyone from our Buffyverse and Willow thinks she's kind of cool. She ended up being staked by Wishverse Oz almost immediately after returning to her universe, but the heroes had no way of knowing that would happen.
* in the forest, and in the second game the female protagonist Soffie has a chance of finding a talking mushroom while gathering mushrooms in the same forest...
* In the forested frontier of Big Valley, you can find evidence of a grotesque
* In "The Forest of Darkness," Ord, scared of the dark, asks the question as the group searches the Forest of Darkness for Half-Moon Rock. Zak asks him if he sees it yet and he admits that he doesn't, so Zak replies that they aren't there yet.
* In the Forest of the Night. Apparently this has happened before, as anomalous tree rings reveal.
* "In The Forest of the Night"? Everybody on the space station probably got fried, unless it happened to be behind the earth at the time. (Is this why humans gave up on space travel by 2049?)
* "In the Forest of the Night" factor of the forest. Not that extraneous given that Gallifrey was said to have forests as well, whatever fancy colours they might come in.
* "In the Forest of the Night" has to real antagonists are non-sapient animals and a solar flare.
* "In the Forest of the Night": Maebh's exercise book full of drawings predicting the events.
* "In the Forest of the Night": The sudden worldwide forest causes Nelson's Column to fall, nearly hitting the Doctor and Clara.

* In the Forest of the Night": When Clara and Danny's students wind up on the TARDIS, as might be expected from a group of children, there are lots of fun buttons they feel compelled to play with. Fortunately, doing so does nothing other than annoy the Doctor.
* In the Forest Temple, the boss room is empty. Realizing this, you leave. This triggers the boss battle.
* In "The Forgotten", Alfred gets after a rough landing in the Bat-plane; he mutters "I claim this land for
* In the former case, he repeats the EXACT SAME PARAGRAPH in different words for
* In the former Czechoslovakia Tomáš Baťa's shoe company has become so famous for this that "Baťa's prices" has become a synonym for this kind of pricing.
* In the former Eastern bloc, the 7.62x25mm Tokarev round, and its post-
* In the former, she gives up a pair of designer snow boots she wanted just to give Arnold a Christmas miracle without ever telling him she helped him out.
* In the former, the embodiment of all evil, He-Who-Dares, is in the ruins of a castle on an asteroid in orbit of the last star in the entire universe. As Evil prevailed over Good, the universe is undergoing heat death, which will be followed by oblivion. Had Good won, the universe would have "evolved into a living, self-conscious being, capable of bootstrapping itself to a new, undreamed-of state of existence."
* In the former title, a story told by a snooty rich man described one of the young women in his acquaintance as "studying abroad" (including the quotes) until they determined that it was a false alarm.
* in the form of simple riddles, never try the same thing twice, never change their stated plans, it's clear they're treating the war as a game. The interesting thing about the series is, despite the limitations they impose on themselves, the Mysterons sometimes manage to win.
* In "The Fortune Teller", Madame Gisella, the eponymous character reads the fortune of a land owner whose allowed them to pass through his property) and tells him that his life will be in danger because of his gun. While Gisella is merely trying to trick the man into giving her his (valuable looking) gun, that gun is the eponymous Dead Man's Gun and he really was in danger by having it. Part of the reason the man is so quick to hand it over is because he has indeed been having bad luck since he got the gun, which makes her claims sound true to him.
* In "The Fountain of Youth", the characters want to cross a bridge. Chief Brave Heart wants to proceed with caution, but Champ Bear rushes forward and falls through a loose plank. Brave Heart rescues Champ. Also, Beastly and Shreeky want to cut the rope but don't do so in time.
* In the Four Hills area, Cronley's Gang have set up a pit arena where the gang's champions fight captives for their amusement. The pit usually has one or more
* In the Four Preps' "The Girl Without a Top" a naval captain runs his submarine into a pier when he spots her through his periscope.
* In "The Four Seasons of Death" episode of season four, the winter segment focuses on a group of mountain ogres (or something) who expend massive amounts of time and effort to forge a magic sword that can defeat Jack. Then, their chosen champion meets Jack with the sword... and it shatters against Jack's in the first blow.
* In the fourth and fifth seasons, blood can be used to construct a sigil that will temporarily dispel an angel from the area.
* In the fourth book, it helps the protagonist to cut a few years off the age difference between him and his love.
* In the fourth book, Sid is disturbed beyond reason while investigating the files of a snotty art student in connection to the art thefts, and discovers her only crime
* . In the fourth (?) challenge, Tarzan and the villain face each other armed with sabers on a net suspended above vats of boiling oil.
* In the fourth Disgaea game there is a DLC necromancer class who instantly revives any enemy she kills as a zombie.

* In the fourth "Disney Descendants" novel, Celia Facilier discovers that she has one, much like her father, Dr. Facilier. Strangely, hers can speak.
* In the Fourth Doctor story "The Ribos Operation", the scripted backstory for the conman Garron was that he had fled Earth after successfully selling an alien warlord the Sydney Opera House. The accent that the Doctor remarks on—changed to Somerset in the filmed version—was originally supposed to be Australian. When Iain Cuthbertson was cast the Australian backstory went, but the titular operation still involves selling not just a landmark but an entire planet to an ambitious but obtuse noble.
* In the fourth edition, the Wizard class also has a spellbook, but anyone can learn to use rituals that are long enough to require being put in a book. Also, the Cleric gets a spellbook automatically for rituals and the Swordsage can get a spellbook for spells like the Wizard with a feat.
* In the fourth episode Kuwabara and his gang are pressured to pass their next test and if they don't they will all get kicked out of school. The group talks and explains they need to study to get their grades up. When they ask Kuwabara what he got on his last test he sheepishly responds a Seven. Cue Face Fault.
* In the fourth episode, Mitchell is mistaken for a pedophile, which makes the whole neighborhood turn against the trio (well, mainly him and George). Some enthusiastic hater spray paints the word "Peedos" on their front door, much to highly intellectual and anal George's chagrin.
* In the fourth episode of Season 1, the Ranskahovs kidnap Claire Temple and start beating her to get information on the "Masked Man" who's been troubling their business interests. Suddenly the lights all go out, and then, one by one, Matt picks them off one at a time, with them unable to see him.
* In the fourth episode, Tao Len mutters such a phrase after being bested by Yoh.
* In the fourth film, the only way to kill Taikon and Gunjo is to submerge them in a pool of lava.
* In the fourth game, a new war with Calvard is announced, and the Erebonian government declares that they will have victory within three months. The war ultimately lasts
* In the fourth game, Charizard sustains 5% damage to itself when using Flare Blitz. Charizard sustains an additional 5% if the move actually connects with an opponent.
* In the fourth game Grace is revived through the Emigre Manuscript and given the power of Will, so that she actually does return as she should, but when she notices her brother Johnny isn't returning, she gives up her Will so that he can, turning her into the monstrous Lady.
* In the fourth game hiding in the box increases the rate at which Snake's psyche meter refills, implying that he finds it comforting to be in there. The trophy for it in
* In the fourth game, minor character Bluesy St. John's cabaret performances end up like this sooner or later. Usually sooner.
* In the fourth installment, combining Macross Missile Massacres with hit-and-run tactics is arguably the safest, and
* In the fourth novel, another global conflict happens when the (European-controlled) Confederation attempts to force the
* In the fourth OAV, a middle school girl was found almost dead under her school's cherry trees.
* In the fourth one, there's an arc centered on a colonial-era prison only referred to as "the Gaol" (an alternate spelling for jail), and another involving several villains coming together to destroy the heroes.
* In the fourth scene, Maria's mother smiles and tells Maria she can buy a dress with stripes for her Confirmation as if that's somehow scandalous and cool for a mother to allow. She acknowledges that her standards are a little peculiar, but only in the context of decrying the fashion of the modern day.
* In the fourth season, Bubbles accidentally poisons Sherrod, the young boy who was
* In the fourth season, Edith spends one night with the man she's planning on marrying before he goes off to Germany to divorce his first wife and

* In the fourth season, episode "11:00 P.M. - 12:00 A.M.". The Vice-President continued as acting President for the remainder of the season and then became President in his own right for the fifth season. Initially, he proved to be highly ineffectual.
* In the fourth-season episode "Mr. Plow", Brockman makes out far better, but woe is Arnie Pie, Channel 5's "Eye in the Sky" traffic reporter. Pie has been assigned to do a report on skiing conditions from the news helicopter
* In the fourth season episode "On the Head of a Pin", Dean is told he is completely to blame for the upcoming apocalypse because he was
* In the fourth season episode, "Something Wicked", a flashback shows Duncan challenging another Immortal, but when he arrives to face him, he finds yet another Immortal, Jim Coltec (a friend a Duncan's), has already dispatched the guy Duncan had challenged.
* In the fourth season episode "Spin the Bottle", Wesley blurts out "Let's not give up probe", after Fred rambles about how aliens must have probed her helpless, naked body.
* In the fourth season episode "The Exercise of Vital Powers", William Edgars asks Mr. Garibaldi how many people actually
* In the fourth season episode "The Richest Woman", the eponymous character thinks Jed Clampett is merely a worker.
* In the fourth season episode "The Two Mrs. Cranes", Daphne lies to an old boyfriend who wants to get back with her by pretending to be married to Niles. Things spiral from there, so Frasier ends up being divorced from 'Maris', whom Roz takes the role of when she happens to stop by the apartment. And then Daphne decides that the old boyfriend isn't so bad after all, but Niles isn't keen to give up playing the doting husband, and Roz has also taken a shine to him, which means that the two women spend most of the evening making up ever more ludicrously horrible stories about each other to put the boyfriend off, until Roz ends up being an alcoholic anorexic and Daphne is pregnant. And then to really complicate things, Martin gets involved and to really piss everyone off starts spinning yarns about how he used to be an astronaut. And the boyfriend
* In the fourth season, Faith attacks Buffy in her home and activates a magical device during the ensuing fight. Afterwards Joyce asks her daughter if she's all right, and "Buffy" answers with Faith's
* In the fourth season finale, Brock does a variation on this trope. He used a grappling gun to get into the ceiling of a building, despite there being a ladder five feet away from him.
* In the fourth season finale dealing with a modern witch hunter, the witch he targets is to be burned at the stake. Of course in this case, she doesn't know about her powers and therefore can't fight back. The Charmed Ones - who can - are tricked into thinking
* In the fourth-season finale, "Goodnight Gracie", the cast goes to Florida when Phil's mother dies. While there, Gloria has to answer for an old arrest warrant. Mitchell accompanies her to court and winds up representing not only her but various other defendants there. Yes, somehow a lawyer from California who's been shown doing primarily civil and corporate work there will just find it a breeze to represent clients in Florida charged with petty crimes and traffic violations.
* In the fourth season finale, nearly every character has an idea for what exactly a "Rusty Venture" is, offering a variety of conflicting descriptions, each longer and more detailed than the last, but no consensus is reached as to what it really is.
* In the fourth season finale, though, the rationalization is revenge for
* In the fourth season, her expy, the NYADA dance instructor Cassandra July. "Welcome to Dance 101, freshmen. Maybe two people in this class have what it takes to make it on Broadway. To the rest of you, thank you for paying for my loft in Soho. And if you don't have body dysmorphic disorder in a month, you're not trying hard enough."
* In the fourth season, in an ironic twist, Penguin is forced to eat pies made from homeless people by Professor Pyg.

* In the fourth season, Los Angeles is struck by a phenomenon that darkens the sun. This leads to the fact that vampires multiply massively. Angel meets a vampire who as a human was a girl no more than ten years old.
* In the fourth season, Nolan marries Louise to free her from her mother's control.
* In the fourth season ofthere's the shapeshifter Duman, one of the Wizards of the Black circle, who can turn into creatures, other people, and even water.
* In the fourth season of the show, Captain Sheridan has Babylon 5's emblem painted on the hull of his flagship when he personally leads
* In the fourth season premiere, Dexter does several of the same actions from the opening, but after losing much sleep from raising his son, his usual routine is "off".
* In the fourth season premiere, PJ and Emmett want to move into a bigger apartment. However, since their apartment lease limits them to staying for at least five years, they aren't allowed to move out and instead try to get the landlord to kick them out by doing illegal acts in the building. Unfortunately, the landlord actually loves their antics and joins them. So the two eventually give up and choose to stay.
* In the fourth season, Randy's story is used to show the darker side of this trope and illustrate how becoming a police informant can completely ruin your life, even if you're in middle school.
* In the fourth season, recurring character Don Geiss is killed off after
* In the fourth season, the character whose escape from prison had been what the entire previous season's plot centered around was quickly
* In the fourth season, the crew is joined by Sikozu, an expert in Leviathans who quickly gets shunted into the role of
* In the fourth (SuperS) season the Amazon Trio eventually discover that they're merely the animals of their namesakes given human form, and have one last chance to make it permanent or else they'll revert to their original forms for good. Fish's Eye suffers a
* In the fourth video, Colin shows the time as 19:06, and the newspaper's date is also 19/06.
* In the fourth volume Yun reveals she was pretty dorky when she was in school, complete with
* In the Fourth War, Tohsaka managed to summon Gilgamesh, the King of Heroes, who (
* In the fourty-first chapter, the cast have a brief discussion on Dobsonian telescopes. Chikage mentions they look like human cannons in circuses. Mira promptly imagines launching herself into the space a la
* In the Foxy Pirates, Foxy has Porche and Hamburg as his first-mates.
* In the franchise as a whole, a certain mon will be introduced as having developed under special circumstances. They'll be a regular part of the universe in other, unrelated series, though. For example, Armor Digivolving in
* In the franchise background, King Maric of Ferelden had at least three serious loves. The first was his elven lover Katriel, as seen in
* In the Franco-Austrian war of 1809 (aka the War of the Fifth Coalition) the exiled Duke of Brunswick, who lived in neutral Prussia, formed a volunteer corps from all comers to fight against Napoleon. The "Black Brunswickers" fought their way through several states allied to France to the North Sea and then participated in the Peninsular War on the Allied side. Those who wanted to continue to serve were eventually absorbed into the army of the restored duchy of Brunswick in time to fight at Quatre Bras (where the Duke was mortally wounded) and Waterloo.
* In "The Frankenstein Experiment," Donnie decides to help Dr. Frankenstein complete
* In "The Freakazoid", Joe became an actual character, and was sent to acting school as a B-plot.
* In the "Freak Fortress 2" mod (a variant of VS Saxton Hale where players team up to fight a

* in the Freak Show level. While trying to squash and mangle you, a music box version of Pop Goes the Weasel is visibly heard with the baby occasionally humming along with it, making the whole thing pure scariness.
* In the Freeza Saga, when Vegeta figured out that Gohan and Krillin had stolen his Dragon Balls, he entered
* In the French Canadian dub, Don (who is named Joel in said dub) is voiced by Joel Legendre.
* In the French-Canadian Folktale of the Duck-Dog, little John, the main character, was given this power at birth by a fairy godmother. The scene is absolutely hilarious as in most well-known versions the godmother is apologetic about giving him this power as she couldn't think of another one. It went something like this: "I can't think of anything specific right now... Here, just take the ability to have anything and everything you want just by saying it. Sorry for the lame blessing."
* In the French-Canadian television science-fiction/mystery/drama/suspense/horror (!) series
* In the French dub, Olaf the penguin always yells something which translates to "Bow down before your emperor!" whenever he enters the scene. Nobody ever obeys this, and in some cases Mr. Cat even goes as far as beating him up.
* In the French educational series French in Action Mirelle an older daughter of the Belau family is tickled with a feather on her bare feet by her sister Marie Lou while reading. While not laughing during tickling Mirelle is quite irritated by tickling and tells Marie Lou to stop. The entire sketch is repeated in various episodes as a means to teach people French words thru action.
* In the French fairy tale "Donkeyskin", the king's late wife asks that he only remarry to someone who's beauty equaled her own, who turns out to be his own daughter. The princess flees from this fate, using an enchanted donkey skin cloak to appear dirty and ugly.
* In the French fairy tale "The Gold Dragoon", the hero must save his beloved from the Master of Night, and take her to safety without looking back at her or saying a word. Two attempts fail. The third time, the girl uses the trope (along with plugging his ears).
* In the French version, Patrick Couton translated the pun in Breton: Imp y Celyn became Kreskenn Kelen and his song was called Yannick Bez Mad.
* In "The Frensky Family Fiasco", Francine appears in the intro instead of Arthur. Arthur stops her, and Francine argues that she should be able to open the show since Arthur always does. Buster and D.W. want to host the opening, too.
* In "The Freshman", when Sunday is staked, she looks at the stake sticking out of her chest, rolls her eyes, and puts her hands on her hips in annoyance as she turns to dust.
* In "The Friar's Club", Jerry briefly ends up losing a New York Friars' Club jacket when one of the members of a magic show he was watching throws it into the audience. He tries to get a replacement, but it would cost $800 to do so.
* In "The Friend", Gumball and Darwin demand the Chimera to explain why he's on the run from the police with a stern look on their faces. He later explains that he's been wandering around since his creator died and everyone is afraid of him. After that, Gumball and Darwin sadly cry streams of tears while their faces remain stern.
* In the "Frinkenstein" part of "Treehouse of Horror XIV", Professor Frink wins a Nobel Prize for his hammer with a screwdriver on the other end. ("It was a slow year.") With this invention decreasing the amount of time wasted switching tools, he reanimated his shark-bitten father's corpse, who shows up to the ceremony. Frink Sr. then went "smorgasbord on these poindexters", popping open the skulls of the other scientists there and lumping their brains on top of his own.
* In "The Frond Files", Mr. Frond complains to Bob and Linda about a set of unflattering stories Tina, Gene, and Louise wrote about him for a school essay contest.
* In "The Front", Bart and Lisa ask Grandpa what his first name is; he can't remember, but he knows he has it written on his underwear, so he takes them off...

* In the front game, after the first four categories are played, the fifth category is selected by the team that is trailing. If, after that fifth category, the team's score is still behind that of their opponents, the game is automatically ended (unless the remaining box is the
* In "The Front", Homer and Marge go back to their old high school reunion. The former class clown was the one handing out awards.
* In the Frontlines series by Marko Kloos, the two main earth factions have space marines for ship security on their naval ships, garrisoning their colonies, and taking colonies away from the other faction. The United North American Commonwealth marines trace their lineage back to the United States Marines of the modern day. The Sino-Russian Alliance marines appear to be descendants of current Russian Airborne Troops and Russian Marines as they are mentioned as wearing blue striped telnyashkas.
* In "The Frozen Heart", Kisa growls at LJ's girlfriend, Kate, who has been turned into one of Ming's Frost People.
* In the "Frozen Wilds" DLC, we are introduced to the Banuk method of exile. Criminals are banished to the ice, naked. If they survive, they are considered absolved of their crime and welcomed back into the tribe. This is more in line with several historical types of exile.
* In "The Fry Cook Games", after SpongeBob and Patrick attempt to look like desserts, photographs of the desserts are shown.
* In "The Fry Cook Games", Patrick botches an attempt to pole vault over a giant deep-fryer and accidentally throws the oil onto a portion of the audience, turning them into fish sticks. A vendor then begins selling them for a dollar each.
* In The Fry Cook Games, there are alternating shots of Plankton and Mr. Krabs running towards each other, with a cartoony "running sound" of two alternating high notes. Then they inexplicably start acting like performers with top hats and canes, and then Mr. Krabs is shown playing the two high notes on
* In "The Frycook What Came From All That Space", he is kidnapped and sent to the dreaded Foodcourtia, a
* In "The Frying Game", Chief Wiggum tries to get Homer and Marge to confess to murder by repeatedly shouting "Did you do it?" at random points in his questioning. After the interrogation, he admits it never works...after Homer uses the same method on him to get him to admit thus.
* In "The Fugitives", he and Sylvia are wanted fugitives on a planet; she wants to escape, but her plans keep getting botched when he
* In the full-length version of Tom Lewis's "Buntz!", the accompanying dialogue relates how Buntz the dachshund was ceremonially stripped of his naval half-pip in front of the whole crew. Harsh punishment for falling in love with a French Afghan hound, but he
* In the full story "Wedding Bells For Bigmouth", Bigmouth and Bignose's (implied) sex causes the ground near their house to shake so hard that Greedy's wedding cake ends up flattening itself.
* In "The Funniest Joke in the World," the Nazi interrogator, upon hearing the joke says "That's not funny" before cracking up and dying.
* In the funny moment of the otherwise traumatically horrifying film
* In the Furtopia RP, Zachary's team leaves one terrorist alive after a shootout so they can interrogate him.
* In "The Fury", the flashback to Nicole and Yuki's childhood is done as a series of manga panels in the style of
* In the future as depicted in "No Weddings and a Funeral", Stan is divorced from Francine and has only a cat for company. The cat attempts to shoot itself in the head, but Stan tells him to wait until he can afford a second bullet so they can both go out.
* In the future, flamethrowers are considered power tools. Possibly because, as weapons,
* In the Future, Humans Will Be One Race: Everyone in the future has the same ethnicity.
* In the Future, Humans Will Be One Race: In the distant future, all ethnic groups will eventually mix together until everyone looks racially homogeneous.

* In the Future, Humans Will Be One Race: In the far future, all human ethnic groups will eventually mix together to become one racially homogeneous people.
* In the future seen in the Next Generation Episode "All Good Things..." shows that the Enterprise with a cloaking device, indicating that the treaty was either amended or abandoned by the Federation.
* In the future, the engineers are more badass than an entire warship full of armed soldiers.
* In the future, they reinvent a bunch of current words more or less by accident, like "automocar" and "cellphone telephone".
* In the Gaiden sidestory starring Iris, she and her Axew convince their big brother Dragonite to train them, by promising not to tell their mother that he's been picking fights all over.
* In "The Galactic Enforcers", it turns out that the leader of the Galactic Enforcers (an alien superhero team, said leader an obvious parody of Superman) has a devastating weakness to chocolate, which
* In "The Galileo Seven", we're shown Spock's first command, as the shuttle he is in charge of crashes on a desolate planet filled with savage aliens. Spock determines that a display of superior force will logically frighten away these aliens while the crew make repairs to the shuttle. Instead, as
* In the Gallipoli campaign of WWI there was a half-Chinese Australian sniper by the name of
* In the game based on the manga of the same name, the Anubis Stand from
* In the game, Donkey Kong's eyes pop out when struck with a KO delivering blow. This is more noticeable with the final KO of the match.
* In the game, four playable classes can remove curses and/or cure poisons and cast resurrection spells that will restore to life any player character they are cast on. But in the storyline of both tie-ins in other media and in the stories of the game's own quests, curing each type of disease or poison requires multiple unique components, death is feared like in
* In the Game Gear version of the first game, while Shang Tsung is still very hard, it falls onto Goro to be the letdown boss. Considering he is considered so iconic to the series, it's odd that Raiden is much harder to take down in the game, since Goro will only block when attacked, not retaliating unless you pause to rest your thumb (he can be beaten by continually hitting the "kick" button). It makes him feel like a chance to rest after those brutal endurance matches.
* In "The Game", Gumball, Nicole, and Darwin clean under Gumball's bed, where they find a glass of fossilized milk and a pizza which grows six legs and crawls away.
* In the game, he merely mourns his utopia with his dying words, but in the anime, he dies with tears in his eyes, lamenting that he'll never get to rekindle his relationship with Haru. Additionally, in flashbacks, Kunikazu was shown to be at least happy during his father's time as a kind cafe owner, and when the happy customers came to offer flowers for the shop's closing, he was crying Tears of Joy It also helps that the game omits most of the scenes with the Phantom Thieves observing the cognitive versions of Okumura's workers as robots, along with Haru confirming that she knows about the abuses of the workers happening in real life.
* In the game, if you choose to sacrifice Zoey, most of her lines are something like this, "I got this, guys! No big deal! ... Shit, shit!"
* In "The Game Is A Foot" when Bugs tries to convince the leprechaun as to why he can't have his foot, he tells him he has athlete's foot, ingrown toenails, fallen arches, and gout, which is then followed by a closeup of his disgusting looking foot.
* In the game is a mission where most of the foes are the normal faceless adults you've been used to fighting throughout the game, except for a small squad of child conscripts. You can ignore them easily enough, but if you want one of the unlockable weapons during this mission, you have to hunt them down. And since getting all the endings in Drakengard requires every single weapon, you're forced to do this.
* In the game it most prominently appears in one of the later levels in the waiting room of a train station that has been converted into a chapel, filled with lit candles and the corpses of a mass suicide of Unitologists awaiting their

* In the game itself, Barok Van Zieks refers to Ryunosuke as a clown, and that he's putting on a circus act. Likely referencing the popular image of Miles Edgeworth saying "
* In the game itself, Cassandra and Leliana are respectively known as the Right Hand of the Divine and the Left Hand of the Divine. Cassandra implies in one party banter that she frequently hears jokes about the right hand not knowing what the left is doing, and preemptively threatens to punch Blackwall when he looks like he's about to say it.
* In the game itself, in the hands of a competent player they're easily able to hold their own against "superior" alien vehicles while their shells' large knockback lets them play Ping-Pong with enemy infantry, making them one of the most versatile and arguably most powerful units for their cost. If used en masse, they can even chew through the enemy's Habitat Walkers fairly quickly, provided their firepower is concentrated on a single hardpoint.
* In the game itself, Laharl has a bad habit of not realizing certain words can be misconstrued, most commonly his claims about doing things to his enemies' bodies. Etna constantly reminds him just how wrong it can sound.
* In the game itself, the Space Wolves have a unit called the "Lone Wolf", a cheap but powerful character who will give the opponent a victory point if he
* In the game itself, the visual is used to illustrate about how many times, and in how many ways, Sora's visited Traverse Town.
* In the game itself, when you visit him Calendar Man can be heard reciting the pneumonic device "Thirty Days Hath September" in his
* In the game itself you can build colony pods mounted onto a ship chassis, these are used to start new bases
* In the gamemaster's guide, a section on determining the game's tone suggests taking care with potentially sensitive topics like sexual slavery, drug pushing, or violence against children and animals - some players might find their inclusion in a game to be tasteless, but they can be used to make a villain truly worthy of a righteous beatdown. The illustration on the page is a goblin standing triumphantly over the bloody body of a small dog.
* In the game of Monster World, Bakura (a white magician) converted his hit points to magic points to keep up a magic barrier when Zorc was blasting them. This is also the main rule in the Ancient Egyptian precursor to the Magic & Wizards/Duel Monsters game; Monster Spirits are summoned by sacrificing Ba (life force) instead of the modern life points system. Damage is also taken by decreasing the life force of the duelist, implying that a defeated duelist dies.
* In the game proper, the Bombinomicon will occasionally give players bombs for heads and tell them to blow up its owner.
* In the game's actual canon, things are a bit better, as dwarves may not particularly like spellcasters but they do like magic items and they also like someone who can use magic to protect their warriors, provide early warning from attack, quickly move earth and stone to set up bulwarks, or conjure up powerful elementals to smash their enemies into bits.
* In the games, Ayane and Hayate are half-siblings (and cousins, it's complicated). The movie removes their blood relation and turns them into a couple.
* In the games, being near Alma will have this effect, causing static to sound in your radio earpiece and hallucinations to appear. It gets worse in
* In the game's climax, Kia attempts to destroy the Magarac Island statue in an attempt to frame the Saints as terrorists. It backfires, causing STAG to be evicted from Steelport for trying to destroy a national landmark.
* In the game's current setting, humanity (and the rest of the universe) engage in a war with the newly awakened
* In the game's cutscenes, the Bay Area's Ded Sec is consistently portrayed as ethical hackers, primarily concerned with taking on government overreach, pushing back on corporations that invade privacy, etc. In gameplay, however, Marcus is perfectly capable of stealing money from innocents, causing violent mayhem,

"Swatting" people, and generally being the exact kind of black hat monster that invited the crackdown in the first place.
* In the games, each region has eight Gym Leaders and they're amongst the best of the best. The anime waters this down a bit by showing that more Leaders exist beyond these eight. The position of "Gym Leader" is not quite as rare and exclusive as it is in the games.
* In the game's expanded universe, necromancy is usually portrayed as a naturally evil, corrupt, and tainted form of magic that withers the user and the land itself. The Lich King and the undead scourge practice a form of necromancy that is akin to
* In the game's final level, in Tahu Nuva's racing/rail-shooter level against the Rahkshi,
* In the game, Shadow Kaneshiro's final warning about Black Mask sounds like he's taunting the Phantom Thieves; in the anime, it sounds more like a
* In the games, it's stated that Mewtwo was subjected to various experiments that turned it vicious and mutated him into what he looks like now. No mention of why he looks different from Mew despite being its clone (at least in the anime continuity) is made in the anime.
* In the game's lore. It's stated that the humans of the Alliance are the only thing keeping the races within it together.
* In the game's manual, it's mentioned that the Anima device is actually controlled by a game controller appropriate to whatever platform you're playing on, as the familiar interface makes the adjustment easier for subjects. Although ultimately just a device to help make a
* In the game's mythology, the major source of conflict both in the game and throughout all of reality was the corruption of the force of balance known as the Wyrm. The Wyld (chaos) and the Weaver (order) would simultaneously work to conceive new things and give them form, respectively, and the Wyrm (entropy) would destroy those things whose time had passed in order to provide raw materials (and space) for new things to be created. Eventually, sick of having everything it made torn apart and destroyed, the Weaver entangled the Wyrm in its web, driving the Wyrm insane and turning it into the force of evil and corruption instead of balance and natural decay.
* In the game's previous incarnation, Troubles of Middle Earth, the Unbeliever class (and users of the Antimagic skill) can't use magic, even wands and rods (which even Warriors can use). In exchange for this, they get a large bonus to their saving throws, and can stop magic from being cast around them.
* In the games set in America, the army should technically not be allowed to go after the player character - The Posse Comitatus Act of 1878 forbids the use of the US Military as a law enforcement agency.
* In "The Gamesters of Triskelion" Kirk and co. are captured by the titular
* In the games that allow for the garrisoning of buildings, dislodging an enemy unit from the building can extremely hard and even elite units will suffer loses when assaulting the building. It is usually preferable to bring in canons and bombard the building till the defenders have to abandon it.
* In the games, the Materials were artificial constructs designed to guard Yuri, similar to the Wolkenritter's role for Hayate. In
* In the games, there are actually two attacks (Selfdestruct and Explosion) and an ability (Aftermath), which cause Pokémon to
* In the games trainers receive money for winning battles and give up money when they lose battles. Due to this being close to gambling, it isn't in the anime. As a result, Ash and his friends have money with no explanation on where they're getting money from. They don't have jobs and they don't get money from battles.
* In the game's very earliest planning stages, there was only one type of Exalted, the Dragon-Blooded, with powers based on the kinds of magic they used. Said magic
* In the games where he is playable, Proto Man is an example of this.
* In the game, the army most relying on this is the Imperial Guard. They are
* In the game, the party had to defeat Jin and Takaya before proceeding on to Nyx. In the manga, some members stay behind to fight the Strega members in order to allow the others to advance, resulting in Akihiko, Ken and Koromaru fighting Jin, Mitsuru and Junpei fighting Takaya, and Minato, Yukari, Aigis and Fuuka fighting the Nyx Avatar.

* In the game, the Phantom Thieves make at least five trips into Kamoshida's Palace
* in the game they debuted in as a fighter even after he had already received a bundled costume for Fighters Pass 1. He only ditched the idea when the three fighters concept he wanted to use proved too hard to implement, settling on Pyra and Mythra by themselves.
* In the game, though, anytime she's mad (which is quite often), Kyou will pull this off.
* in the game, which consists of his letters to and from Bethany Hawke. She's not in Kirkwall either, and they're able to commiserate about their homesickness.
* In "The Gang Exploits the Mortgage Crisis", Frank forces the kids of the family resident in the house he just bought to do work in the basement when their parents are at work.
* In "The Gang Gets Extreme: Home Makeover Edition", the gang kidnaps a family in a misguided attempt to remodel their house. After
* In "The Gang Gets Gun Fever", Mac waves the gang's loaded pistol around while walking down their apartment complex hallway, points the gun at Dennis while saying "Powpowpow", and accidentally drops it on the floor. After Mac picks it up and fumbles with it, Dennis rips it out of his hand.
* In the Gang Of Five RP, the first shootout at the AWTR explicitly states that only one
* In "The Gang Reignites the Rivalry," the gang are eager to reignite their "heated feud" with a rival bar that ended after a ten-year ban from flipping cups. They march over to mock the owner, Art Sloan, who got them banned a decade ago. Sloan is now a successful restaurant owner, barely even remembers them and has far more important things to do than waste time on some stupid contest.
* In the Gardenia Interlude, the title character gives Cheryl a piece of her mind for going into the
* In "The Garden of Delights", Mumm-Ra assumes the form of a faerie queen to lure Tygra into a trap.
* In the Garfunkel and Oates song "Me, You and Steve", the protagonist has several...dates?...interrupted by Steve, her boyfriend's friend. Among these dates is a candlelit dinner.
* In the Generation 1 episode "Sea Change", Perceptor mentions a "Third Cybertron War". Apparently separate from the Third Cybertron
* In "The Genesis Tub" from "Treehouse of Horror VII", the residents of Lisa's microcosm universe speak English, they claim, because they've learned to
* In the German Club Nintendo comic, one storyline has an apparently older Wendy O. Koopa drawn with hair
* In the German-dubbed version, this became: "I took the brain of a cleric, an abbot (
* In the German dub, it has been changed to "yippee-ya-yay, Schweinebacke", which translates to "pig cheek".
* In the German dub, the actors are apparently voiced by (probably) native speakers and the sailor answers the question on what in the torpedo tube with "probably the body of our sacked captain".
* In the German Empire, the ruling House of Hohenzollern had a rivalry with the House of Hannover ever since Prussia annexed Hannover in 1866. The engagement of
* In the German "Stimmungslied" (read: song that is usually only sufferable with alcohol levels of at least 2 promille) "Sauerkraut und Bier" the caper ends as epic fail since the loot consists of, well,
* In the German version, children are supposed to be invincible. This can be annoying if they turned hostile to the players for whatever reason. However, if you polymorph them into squirrels by magical spell or wand, you can kill the squirrels - and watch them polymorph back into dead children.
* In "The Getaway", a recently-escaped prisoner named Sticky Fins Whiting tricks SpongeBob into being his getaway driver. Anyone who is aware of what SpongeBob's driving skills are like will realize just how horribly that must've went. Indeed, by the end of the episode, Sticky Fins begs the police to put himself in

* In "The Getaway", SpongeBob crashes his boat into the Bikini Bottom Jail after yet another failed driving test. There, he mistakes an escaped convict for his new driving instructor. SpongeBob's crazy driving results in the convict
* In the Ghatti's Tale series, most ghatten seeking to Bond will bite a hand or maybe an ankle. Pw'eek, however, took this route. That's what you get for leaving the washroom door unlocked.
* In "The Ghost in the Machines", Bender is dead for most of the episode and manages to come back by getting sent to heaven and then
* In "The Ghost in the Machines", Bender's software ghost is perplexed and frustrated when his coworkers appear to be ignoring him, but stunned when the Robot Devil explains to him that he's dead: "I thought I just had laryngitis and antigravity."
* In the "Ghostly Rendezvous" chapter, Suzuha informs Itaru/Daru of the identity of her dad, a major
* In "The Ghost of Maiden's Peak", according to lore, a woman waited on a cliff for her beloved to come home from war. He never returned, and she eventually turned into a statue.
* In "The Ghost of Maiden's Peak", this happens when Ash sees Misty in a
* In "The Ghouls", Carrie shows Gumball and Darwin how people aren't afraid of ghouls anymore, leading a wide variety of horror villain parodies either failing to be scary or trying to make a living elsewhere.
* In "The Ghouls," Hank the Construction Man is subjected to this dream by the Fingernail Ghoul; showing up to work at the construction site in his underwear.
* In "The Giant Bacteria," Dr. Zyme boasts that the huge windows in Megakat Biochemical Labs are "
* In "The Giant Bacteria", the titular monster actually eats the subway car full of passengers.
* In "The Gift", Buffy heads to where Dawn is; the guy who was bleeding Dawn steps forward and says, "Ah, the Slayer. This should be interest-" He is then flung off the ledge and plummets several stories.
* In "The Gift", Buster helps Jetfire to appreciate his Earth heritage as a Christmas gift.
* In "The Gift", he misconstrues Mittens's question "How about sex?" as a come-on rather than an inquiry about whether beings in Nirvana have sex or not.
* In "The Gift," it's implied that there's some kind of nebulous all-encompassing repository of art, culture, and knowledge in Nirvana, its contents readily available for the imagining.
* In "The Gift", Mittens has the song "Pay You Back with Interest" by
* In ''The Gift of the Maud Pie", a mare calls the police when Pinkie Pie, known for her
* In "The Gi", Gumball and Darwin wear their karate uniforms to school and get soundly mocked by their peers (the duo's nickname is the "Karate Weiners") when they start doing low-grade karate in front of everyone, much to their obliviousness. Nicole is the "cringe-ee" here, as she keeps trying to discourage them without outright saying they're making fools of themselves, just like what happened to Richard when he went to school wearing a superhero cape. At the end Gumball gets a hard dose of reality when he realizes what's really going on, which is a little sad (although the episode ends on a heartwarming moment right afterwards).
* In the G.I.Joe one-shot "Special Missions; the Enemy", a squad of Cobra goons kill every living person in a hospital while looking for
* In "The Girl Group Problem", Aki says, "Really big problem" instead of Peg, then all the girls say, "totally freaking out".
* In "The Girl I Married", Ira and Valerie Richman are both concerned that they have sold out and abandoned all of the dreams and the ideals that they had as hippies in
* In "The Girl In the Painting", we follow a girl named Becky, who dreams of living a better life than the one she lives now. Becky finds a mysterious painting with real characters living inside of it who want her to come to their world so she would live a better life like she dreamed of. Becky gets swept up in her dreams and enters the beautiful painted world. Then it turns out that the people inside of it wanted to use her to feed a monster inhabiting their world so they wouldn't get eaten themselves. The episode ends with Becky getting

* In "The Girl Who Slept Too Little", Marge uses the "I Spy" phrase to scold Lisa, but Homer believes it's an actual game.
* In "The Girl Who Waited", Amy, who has been alone for 36 years, disarms (literally) one of the hand robots, painting a smiley face on it and calling it
* In "The Girl Who Waited", the Handbots faces are completely blank. They see through sensors in their organic hands. The Doctor comments on this, wondering why the builders didn't just include eyes.
* In "The Glass Ceiling", Inspector Brackenreid gets desperate to find a killer who's threatening him and orders the constables to strong-arm every known criminal they can find to get information on the man. Detective Murdoch uses the phrase "with all due respect" to point out that such heavy-handed tactics are unlikely to work and urges they follow the evidence instead of going after every criminal in the city.
* In the Gligarman Interlude, one of the members of the Night Watchers is a Flash
* In the Goblin Valley, Ringo has to pretend to be a human slave being led by George, who's become a goblin.
* In the Golden Age, Adon Coborlwitz is supposed to be this for the Tudor army but his brother Samson fills the role better as a mindless brute.
* In the Golden Age Arc, he got in a fight with Griffith and received a wound that almost killed him, but he had impressed Griffith so much that he ordered Guts to be nursed back to health, and offered him a job when he woke up. He had the rotten luck of encountering Zodd the Immortal, and later Wyald, but the former he survived because his destiny was entwined with Griffith's, and the latter because by that point he was pretty much the ultimate fighter. The Eclipse—in which he was betrayed by his best friend, got branded as a demon sacrifice, had all his companions devoured by monsters, and lost his left hand and right eye while being
* In the Golden Age Di had to protect Gerta von Gunther from a group of winged shark mermaids she'd created and then kept in tanks like pets which infuriated them.
* In the Golden Age, Paradise Island has this feel, with everyone running about in togas and practicing archery while also developing invisible planes, casual time travel, and healing purple rays. In truth their society does not reflect ancient Greek culture in the same way their aesthetic does even though most of the Amazons were born in ancient Greece. What makes Paradise Island a paradise and part of the deal that makes the Amazons immortal while on the island is that their society is a peaceful monarch ruled commune.
* In the Golden Age the Heyday gals were triplets and their names were spelt Tillie, Millie and Lillie.
* In "The Gold Job" Nate reveals that when he plans out a con, he starts with Plan G as the worst case scenario plan where they still succeed in their mission. He then works his way to Plan A as the most elegant way to beat the mark. It is implied that plans after G are desperation plans where they are pretty much just trying to get away with their lives. Since Hardison was in charge of Plan A in that episode, Nate was implementing Plan G behind his back just in case Plan A backfired (which it did).
* In "The Golf War", Mabel imagines finally being able to have something to brag about over her rival
* In the Goodfeathers segment "The Boids" after being crushed by a prop chimney Bobby says before passing out, "I don't mind the pain, I like it, look at me I'm somebody, am I talking to me, am I talking to me?"
* In the "Good Ol' Boys" arc, Jodie is tricked into pit-fighting a gorilla and is given a baseball bat as his only weapon. After winning, he asks the promoter if he needs the bat back.

* In "The Good Ol' Days", Mr. Turner gets his dad to babysit Timmy. Within the episode, Timmy's Grandpappy complains that things in the present aren't as good as things he grew up with. Among his complaints is how much more expensive candy is, Chip Skylark III being inferior to the original, and modern cartoons being more lame than ones from the 1930's. After watching a
* In "The Good Ol' Days", Timmy and his Grandpappy are transported into the world of
* In "The Good Old Days!" Timmy wishes himself, his grandfather, Cosmo and Wanda into a 1930s style cartoon where
* In The Good Old Summertime. The little one was played by Garland's daughter Liza Minelli, then two-and-a-half, in her movie debut.
* In "The Good, the Bad, and the Baby," Castle and Beckett use a prison tattoo database.
* In "The Good, The Bad, and the Badass," Ralph Macchio's son Daniel (who is named after Daniel LaRusso) can be seen in the town-hall meeting. He's the spectacled man sitting behind Johnny Lawrence while Miguel and Samantha are giving their speech to save the All Valley Tournament.
* In "The Good, the Bad, and the Smurfy", a king and his court are turned into frogs by a treacherous sorcerer, whom himself is turned into a frog by Papa Smurf.
* In "The Goofy Gargoyle Goof-Up", Fangface (a werewolf) is flirting with film star Raquel Taylor (who
* In the Google Halloween Doodle "Global Candy Cup 2015", the over-confident red witch is shown to be in a tantrum since the cat-loving yellow witch ends up winning.
* In "The Gorilla Mystery," Beppo the Gorilla is often seen only in shadow, though here the effect makes him
* In the Goron city, if you are not wearing any fire protection suit, the shop keeper will freak out and tell you to put on a suit. Of course, in this instance it is not out of modesty but because Link is literally
* In "The Gospel According to Collier", Diana's sister April returns to
* In "The Gospel According to Jimmy", by French writer Didier van Cauwelaert, a 32-year old pool cleaner in L.A. finds out he's a clone of Jesus.
* In the Gospel according to Luke, 12-year old Jesus gets lost when the family is returning from Passover in Jerusalem. Mary and Joseph are frantic (this is GOD'S SON they were supposed to keep an eye on!), and they return to Jerusalem to search for Him. When they find Jesus safe in the temple, Mary's worry (like any mother's) turns to anger: "Son, why have You treated us this way? Behold, Your father and I have been anxiously looking for You."
* In the gospel of Matthew, in the Parable of the Talents, when two of the three servants who were given talents by their master came back and reported that they made double of what they were given, their master said, "Well done, good and faithful servant; you have been faithful in a few things, you shall be ruler over many things. Enter into the joy of your lord." This is contrasted with the third servant who was given only one talent, but didn't do anything with it except bury it and then return it to his master, to whom his master says, "You wicked and slothful servant, why didn't you leave it with the bankers so that I could have received back my own with interest?"
* In the gospel of Matthew itself, a quote from the prophet Zechariah (11:12-13) was attributed by the author to Jeremiah.
* In "The Gost of Paradise Estate", Pluma's grandpa Ruff, while a hero in his youth, has been trapped in a cage in Squirk's lair and held hostage to force his granddaughter to serve the villain, and needs to be rescued by her and the heroes.
* In the grand finale, Aang's use of Energybending borders on a peculiar sort of Have-a-Heart instant neutralization.
* In the grand finale, she goes back to Lyrane and turns things up several notches. And then several more. By the time it's all over, there's a trail of wreckage and enemy corpses behind her; and it's quite clear that while the other Second-Stage Lensmen all have specialist skills she lacks,
* In the Grand Magic Games arc, during the attack of the seven dragons from the past one of them

* In the Grand Magic Games arc, the Rune Knights take Raven Tail into custody after Laxus Dreyar exposes their cheating.
* In the Grand Magic Games, the free-for-all event on the start of the second day has the participants race across a series of carts, an event that Dragon Slayers,
* In "The Grand Mama-Pest Hotel", Linda has a nightmare about growing apart from Tina that ends with Tina running away and Linda getting trapped in a giant scrapbook.
* In the Grand Master books, Lone Wolf can learn Old Kingdom Magic and Left-Handed Magic (called Kai-Alchemy in the books) making him a true Magic Knight. At higher skill levels these two disciplines even provide spells that can actually be used in combat.
* In the graphic novel "Isaac's First Time", Isaac tells Eden about when he first discovered his power: a woman at a gallery showing confronted him about a painting of her being hit by a bus, and then still upset, she ran outside and was hit by a bus.
* In the graphic novels, one character, Linda, has a power that allows her to see the auras of people around her, and seemingly absorb them. Not only does it happen to absorb superhuman powers, but it allows her to kill them as well. Nifty. Unfortunately, she
* In "The Grass is Always Greener Over the Septic Tank", Erma Bombeck writes about how she went to the ladies' room during a Girl Scout leaders meeting. When she got back, she found she'd been volunteered to be in charge of the cookie sale. It didn't turn out well...
* In "The Great Adventure: A World War I Soldier's Diary", the MP narrator describes an incident when he was standing a post in a town. Vehicles were moving down the road through the town towards the front lines, until late that evening they began backing up. He waited ten minutes, but nobody was going anywhere, so he walked half a mile up the road (that is, past half a mile's worth of stopped vehicles) to see what the problem was. He found a truck sitting there blocking the road, without any damage and with the engine running. He told the driver to move; the driver responded that an officer had to return before he could, and pointed to a house a short distance away. The narrator went over to the house and found four French officers drinking wine and making jokes. He explained the situation as best he could, and the officer got up and leisurely strolled over to the truck, getting everything moving again after a delay of more than half an hour. The narrator's comment on the whole matter was "Sometimes one stops wondering why the war has lasted this long".
* In "The Great Bank of England Robbery", Eccles gets in an argument with his echo, thinking it's a real person mocking him — "Who's that?" "Who's that?" "I'm Eccles." "I'm Eccles." "You can't be, I'm Eccles." and so on — even though it's just repeating what he says... until the end of the bit, when this happens:
* In "The Great BMX Race", the Mario Brothers are cornered, and they happened to be close to a vegetable patch. And when they found out that it was a trap by King Koopa, the Brothers went after him with everything they got!
* In the Great Britain and North America, "Landseer" is just another name for the Newfoundland. In other countries, they're two separate breeds. The main difference is that Landseers are more sporty and long-legged than the bulkier Newfoundland.
* In "The Great Cloud Flush", Pound says that Tank "scared the pee-pee out of him". It's just an expression, but he does coincidentally need to pee soon after.
* In the great days of the French court at Versailles, society ladies and courtiers favoured
* In the great DirecTV vs Viacom dispute of Summer 2012, several different channels that were dropped temporarily on DirecTV (all 26 were run by Viacom) took to air waves and internet space to warn the viewers on other broadcasters that DirecTV was taking their channels away. When the block did go into effect, several advised switching at the end of these advertisements. All of these commercials were made by Viacom and pinned the blame for the drop directly on DirecTV.

* In "The Great Divide", the Zhang leader's story is expressed in an animation style strikingly similar to
* In "The Great Egg Heist", Goddard accidentally shows a projection of Jimmy's crush.
* In "The Greater Hater", Sylvia utters three of them when she first sees Dominator.
* In "The Greatest Gift of All", Optimus uses the last shard of the Creation Matrix to restore the environment of an area damaged by a battle, as a gift to Earth.
* In "The Greatest Story Ever D'ohed", when an outraged Ned catches Homer sleeping on Jesus' tomb in the Church of the Holy Sepulchre.
* In "The Great Insurance Fraud", a pair of con artists out to take advantage of Boss Hogg's insurance scam stage an accident by having one of the accomplices drive his car over a cliff, after getting "fake Duke" Coy to engage him in a chase. Coy is led to believe that the other driver failed to escape his car before falling over the cliff, leading to his crushing (and fiery) death.
* In "The Great Money Caper" Marge gets drunk on a Long Island Ice Tea and remarks:
* In "The Great Money Caper" the entire town sets up a hoax on Homer and Bart to teach them not to con people, by creating a trick where Groundskeeper Willie is apprehended and found guilty for stealing Homer's car. The only person not in on the hoax? Willie himself, presumably to make his behavior more realistic.
* In "The Great Moshi Beanstalk", CLONC (especially Strangeglove) wanted to turn all the Moshlings at the top of the Beanstalk into Glumps.
* In "The Great Sock Mystery", Pal and Kate are trying to trade back D.W.'s sock, which has been acquired by a frog named Mr. Toad in the animal "sock market". Kate offers a five-dollar bill but Mr. Toad brushes it off; he already found a ton of that stuff behind the Crosswire's house and used it to wallpaper his home.
* In "The Great Train Robbery," you have to destroy fast, armored trains and steal their contents. Raynor's Raiders find some abandoned Diamondbacks — Confederate vehicles that are fairly fast, can fire on the move and deal double damage to armored units, like the trains you have to destroy, as well as the bunkers and escorts the Dominion eventually uses to protect the trains. It's entirely possible to beat the mission massing this single unit. Also doubles as
* In the Greek dub, someone replaced the "λ" with a "τ" in a sign for the ladder ("σκάλα"), leading to
* In the Greek dub, Vegeta got a voice filter that many people say made him sound demonic or robotic.
* In the Greek myth of Atalanta, Atalanta and Hippomenes are turned into lions for making love in a temple of Zeus or Demeter. This may not sound like much of a punishment, but the ancient Greeks believed lions couldn't mate with each other (thinking they mated with leopards instead).
* In "The Green House", Lincoln makes his sisters do more environmentally-friendly things, which starts out well but then escalates into making them wear potato sacks and not use electricity. Then, when Lincoln is powering the house by riding an exercise bike, the sisters go back to their usual habits. Are they spiting Lincoln, or is it just force of habit?
* In the Greg Mandel trilogy, Philip Evans, the aging CEO of Event Horizon, has grand visions for the future but is dying with only his teenage granddaughter to carry on the torch. So he uploads his brain into a neural network bioware core. It also works as an
* In "The Grell", after Jesha tells him of his grandfather being enslaved as a boy, Kenny Kohler asks his mother Olivia why they don't just free all of the Grell. She doesn't answer his question, simply telling him to go to sleep. His father Paul later frees Jesha just before he dies. They also encounter a number of Grell who have escaped and revolted against the humans.
* In "The Grell", an alien race stranded on Earth are treated as slaves, with plenty of
* In "The Grell", the titular race have a biological process known as Grell alchemy which is capable of altering the DNA of other organisms. Jesha uses his saliva to neutralize the radiation found in fruits which grow in the vicinity of

* In "The Grell", the titular race were peaceful and primitive, which it made easy for humanity to enslave them when it was discovered that their sun was slowly going nova.
* In the Grendel Tales: Devil' Choices, main bad guy, captured and facing firing squad
* In "The Grey-Hounded Hare", Bugs falls in love with the mechanical rabbit in a dog racing track, and tries to save her from the dogs. He gets shocked whenever he tries to kiss her, but he just thinks she's a really good kisser.
* In "The Grid", the computer tells Scott Bowman that it intends to take over the world in order to bring order to chaos and eliminate the problems in human society.
* In the grim dark future of the 41st millennium, the people with the loudest voices hold the highest ranks. How else are the soldiers going to hear your orders across a noisy battlefield?
* In the grim darkness of the far future, the ancient conspiracies are riddled with ancient conspiracies.
* "In the grim darkness of the far future, there is only war!" —
* "In the grim darkness of the far future, there is only war." —
* In "The Grim Joker", the murderous Goodchild brothers masquerade as a pair of vicars.
* In the Grimm folktale "Spindle, Shuttle and Needle," a poor orphan girl who was using the titular items while the king's son was out looking for a girl who was "at once the poorest and the richest" started singing a little rhyme her godmother had taught her: "Spindle, spindle, one two three, Bring my suitor home to me." At which point the spindle jumped out of the window and chased off after the prince, leaving a golden thread for him to follow back to her.
* In the Groove, for example. The r23 update instead cuts off songs at 2 minutes and 15 seconds regardless of metadata.
* In the Groove scene, get used to some players declaring that any chart below double-digit difficulty sucks, and most other players declaring that any chart under 9 sucks.
* In "The Grown-Ups", Harry and Ken are chatting about work, and Ken asks Harry to turn the sound down on the TV. Then the CBS News bulletins about the Kennedy assassination start popping up on the screen, but Harry and Ken don't notice until other Sterling Cooper employees barge into their office to watch the TV.
* In "The Grudge Match", Miss Brooks confuses the baseball term "bullpen" with "pigpen". She also mistakenly calls pitchers "chuckers". She later redeems herself, by serving as the announcer for the titular boxing match.
* In "The Guests", an idealistic young drifter becomes trapped in a mansion which has been taken over by an alien brain who is studying humanity. Time doesn't pass inside the house, and * in the guise of the current king. Therefore such queens thought they were having sex with their husbands when really it was some god. It was, in fact, quite possible that any woman married to a Pharaoh hoped for this to happen: this, and not birth order, supposedly determined who was the heir. This seems to be the "benevolent" variation of the trope.
* In "The Gun", Matthew Logan murders his wife Sandra within hours of being released from prison.
* In "The Gun", the alien calling himself Donald Finley came to Earth in order to recruit mercenaries to fight in the war which his people are fighting.
* In "The Gun", the alien calling himself Donald Finley seemingly belongs to a race of shapeshifters.
* In the Hades chapter, the specter Minos Gryphon can turn his enemies into
* In the Hall of the Mountain King would not know that it wasn't originally:
* In the Halloween cartoon "Jibblies 2", the Horrible Painting escapes from Strong Mad's closet and runs around giving everyone "the jibblies" (except
* In the Halloween episode "Best Little Horror House in Langley Falls", Francine pees herself while visiting Buckle the Mountain Man's haunted house. In the same episode it's revealed that this happens every single Halloween...

* In the Halloween episode, Doug and Skeeter are helped by a mysterious cloaked figure who seems to just be a costumed amusement park employee. However, at the end of the episode he claims to be "Baron Von Hecklehonker", a character in the framing story about Bloodstone Manor, right before disappearing into thin air.
* In the Halloween episode, Tom Servo put a small milk carton with a side cut out on his head, claiming he was "that kid on the milk carton." Joel also did this to him as an invention exchange in
* In "The Halloween Problem", Richard instead of Peg says that he's got a big problem and then later, he's the one who brings up counting backwards instead of Peg.
* In the "Halloween Special," Ace does this with Spike and scares a high school principal.
* In the Halloween special "Underfist", after recovering from a beating, Hoss Delgado threatens a monster while shaking his finger at it, only for his finger to snap and break off.
* In the Halloween stories, Phase (Ayla Goodkind, who is male but looks like a female supermodel) knows his team is doing a
* In the Halloween toon "Mr. Poofers Must Die!", Coach Z and Pom Pom collaborate on a costume of Missy Elliot's baggy black jumpsuit from the music video for "The Rain (Supa Dupa Fly)"... which involves Coach Z's head sticking out of Pom Pom's spherical body.
* In "The Hallows", the titular Hallows are twisted, eyeless, hideous monstrosities that more often than not have blood on their constantly changing hands and spend much of their time stalking an unfortunate child...until the end, when they swoop in to save him from a child rapist, and it's strongly implied that their purpose over all is to protect people from harm. This is even used to deliver
* In "The Hamptons", Jerry's girlfriend catches George not only with his pants down, but having come straight from the pool and thus a victim of 'shrinkage'. He screams 'I WAS IN THE POOL!' as she closes the door, laughing.
* In the hands of orthopedic surgeon Angus Wallace, a coathanger, knife and fork became surgical tools and
* In the hands of skilled drivers, Tigers did actually have good mobility on rough terrain on par with the Panzer IV, contrary to popular belief.
* In the Hands of the Prophets. The attempt is foiled, but Winn isn't implicated, and the religious/political conflict continues for some time (including the opening three-parter of the next season where Winn secretly backs a coup attempt against the Bajoran provisional government).
* In "The Hand That Rocks the Mabel", Gideon arrives at the Mabel Shack's doorstep and Mabel quotes one of his song lyrics in surprise.
* In "The Hand That Rocks the Mabel", Li'l Gideon tries to use his telekinetic powers to cut out Dipper's tongue.
* In "The Handyman Can", the Belcher kids try to build up Teddy's confidence with a series of stories where his handyman skills save the day.
* In the Han dynasty, a brief war erupted in 154 BCE between the nobles of the royal family due to a game of
* In "The Hard Cell", Vegeta goes on a tangent when Trunks wonders why they aren't giving Goku a Senzu Bean to keep him fighting Cell, ranting how his Saiyan Pride would keep him from getting help and fighting until one of them fell, until...
* In "The Hard Easy", Jake leaves a trail of lollipops to help him and Finn navigate through a swamp while tracking down a monster. Unfortunately, Jake eventually runs out of lollipops, and the Mega-Frog's trail is so winding that they end up getting lost anyway.
* In "The Hardship of Miles Standish", after hearing the radio adaptation, Grandpa angrily turns off the radio and retells the story to his grandson. At the end he exclaimed if it ain't the truth, then let lightning strike him. Lightning does strike him. Hanging from the rafters, he looks at the audience and says "Well anyhoo, that how I heard it!".
* In the haunted house level, the role of the cat is played by a lone rollerskate.

Alternatively,
* In the haunting episode "Heal Thyself," the camp's talented and charismatic new surgeon, a veteran of a front line aid station, has a complete mental breakdown during a particularly long and gruesome O.R. session that stretches across a couple of days. They find him crouched down in the Col. Potter's tent, doing the
* In "The Haven", each of the 65 or more floors of the titular apartment building have the same holographic concierge George. This is seemingly true of every other building in the city equipped with the artificial intelligence Argus.
* In the HD version, during the ending, when the character(s) are flung out of the volcano, they would normally faceplant into the sand; if any of/the player(s) have a parachute, it will deploy and they float gently down.
* "In The Head Of Nicky Jr." has a subplot about Nicky Jr. hearing voices in his head, which serves only to justify John Cusack and John Malkovich having a match inside a human brain.
* In "The Heartbreak of Brock," he meets a girl who's like this, and it completely throws him off his game. By the time he recovers, she's moved on to someone else.
* In "The Heartbroke Kid", Bart's school gets a soda/candy machine. Bart eats and drinks from it every single day until he gains a lot of weight. The episode parodies this by actually redoing the whole opening scene with Bart's bigger bulk, which ends with him suffering a heart attack as he gets to the Simpson family couch.
* In "The Heartbroke Kid", Rainer goes to a fat camp, and one exercise is throwing ice cream into a garbage can.
* In "The Heartbroke Kid", Springfield Elementary School puts in "edgy" vending machines—Ralph Wiggum says, "It's fun to obey the machine." The corporate mascots Scammer and Z-Dog are described by their creators as "spokesrebels".
* In the Heart of the Sea: George Pollard, Jr. is chosen over Owen Chase as Captain of the Essex because Pollard is coming from a well-established family and his father is one of the investors.
* In the Heart of the Sea. The film also invents a drama between Captain George Pollard and First Mate Owen Chase where none existed before. Furthermore, the premise is shown to be based around Herman Melville interviewing the elderly Thomas Nickerson, but the two never met in real life; Melville's primary source was Chase's own book about the incident.
* In "The Heart" there's Mr. Robinson's old toys, which include among other things a "space gun" with actual gunpowder and a fully functional atomic energy kit that blows up his house upon being dropped. The resulting explosion got him arrested for violating 14 international peace agreements.
* In the heated German censorship debate about blocking sites allegedly containing child pornography, an organization in favor of this censorship law ordered a survey at a market research institute with questions asking if the person taking the survey is against child pornography and in favor of blocking the websites containing it. Over 90% answered 'Yes'. Another survey ordered by an opposing NGO — at the same institute no less — used a slightly different phrasing: Do you agree with blocking the content despite the fact that this content still exists and is easily accessible after the censorship? Over 90% answered with 'No'.
* In the Heat of the Night and the officers investigating a series of race-related murders near Sparta. In the final scene, Dugan, working undercover for the FBI to solve the murders, is lured to a secluded forest area on a false tip and is ambushed and killed (shot repeatedly) by two men wearing pig masks.
* In the Heat of the Night. A young man goes to his teacher's house for tutoring, only to find her being raped. The cops eventually catch the guy, but they wonder why the kid was so reluctant to admit that he was being tutored in the first place. They discover that the teacher was not only being paid to tutor the boy, but to tamper with his grades (he was a high schooler who could barely read at a third grade level) so that he could be accepted into the seminary.
* In the Heat of the Night episode "A Loss Of Innocence" as the officers search a house:
* In the Heat of the Night episode, in which the Sparta DA's daughter is kidnapped and Gillespie's force—using their small-town savvy—competes (almost literally) with by-the-book FBI agents to locate her.

* In the Heat of the Night had nothing to do with the murder. It was just a mugging gone wrong.
* In the Heat of the Night has an alibi dependent on whether he's a Peeping Tom or not.
* In the Heat of the Night has an infamous episode, "Perversions of Justice," in which a young teacher is accused (falsely) of inappropriately touching a student's private parts. As a witch hunt ensues, the officers do a background check, and all they find is an indecent exposure charge... back when he was in college, said incident having been part of a drunken late-night romp. (Gillespie and his officers let it slide, as they recall their own drunken, dumb-and-stupid antics as young college-aged adults.) One other incident that comes up, however — a heretofore unexplained resignation from a previous job — wasn't even for criminal reasons: The teacher was grieving the deaths of his parents in a car accident and had a nervous breakdown in the classroom; the teacher’s former boss reveals this to an officer, Capt. Bubba Skinner. Unfortunately, neither the revelation of these facts nor the accuser later admitting the accusation was false will do anything to restore the teacher's reputation.
* In the Heat of the Night has "The Last Round", in which a boxer who manages a gym for at-risk youths is expected to testify against a criminal he used to work with, but is tempted to resume his life of crime instead.
* In the Heat of the Night. Having just realized that his visiting friend is responsible for the slew of murders that have recently taken place, Virgil calls his wife Althea and warns her to talk with him normally so as to find a way to get her out of the house safely. Unfortunately, the guy realizes that Virgil knows anyway.
* In the Heat of the Night inherent in translating racial politics from film to TV, it was kept interesting by brilliant casting choices Carroll O'Connor and Howard Rollins.
* In the Heat of the Night, "King's Ransom". Ex-boxer Conrad "King" Baylor told some friends a story: Mobsters approached him the night of a fight, and gave him $2,000 to throw his match. He took the money, then bet it on himself, intending to go out there and screw over the mobsters. Unfortunately, his opposition was a little better than he thought, and he wound up losing. The mobsters met him post-fight, and gave him another $3,000 "for making the knockout so real".
* In the Heat of the Night lead Carroll O'Conner also served as one of the series' executive producers.
* In the Heat of the Night - not a sitcom, but played for warm fuzzy laughs anyway. Officer Bubba Skinner must fill in as Althea Tibbs' coach as her husband Detective Virgil Tibbs is away on assignment.
* In the Heat of the Night's character Virgil Tibbs is questioned as to where he resides:
* In the Heat of the Night, then, is that anyone making an accusation this serious better have their facts straight and it better be true, because police will take these accusations seriously. And if an accusation is proven false or otherwise never proven, there can be negative consequences that could destroy beyond repair a man's reputation, his career and his personal life.
* In the Heat of the Night: The plot of the 1990 episode "Triangle" is set up by one of these: An outwardly mild-mannered man, who is a community and church leader and presents himself and his family as the ideal all-American family ... kills his wife and her lover when he catches them in bed and in the act of hot, lustful sex. (FWIW, it's only afterward that his son reveals that their home life was not as his father made it out to be. And yes, the man is later caught, but only after the police track him and his daughter to their lakeside cabin, where he plans to rationalize his act to his daughter and hold her hostage to ensure his freedom.)
* In the Heat of the Night TV series, set in the fictional Mississippi town of Sparta. "I should join the Marines...I'd see less dead bodies."
* In the Heat of the Night used a brilliant pastiche of a 1960s title sequence.

* In the Heat of the Night want to be a model and was genuinely passionate about it, and the daughter really wanted the victim to win. The daughter is so disgusted by what happened that she dedicates her victory to her friend, whom she calls the "real winner", flings her sash and crown at her mother ("you wanted it so badly, here it is!"), and storms out of the auditorium and presumably out of her mother's life.
* In the Heat of the Night was set in Sparta, Mississippi, but was filmed in Louisiana for the first season, and then in Covington, Georgia for seasons 2-6.
* In the Heaven's Feel route, things take a different turn than normal as
* In the Hebrew dub, Ash was voiced by Yonatan Magon in Seasons 1-3, and by his younger brother Daniel since Season 4.
* In the Heights, after Nina returns from Stanford University for the summer, she tells Benny in "When You're Home" that home is where he happens to be and asks "can you remind me of what it was like, at the top of the world?"
* In the Heights and A on Cinemascore). However, despite being set up for a $20m+ domestic opening, it only made $10 million on its opening weekend and its second weekend was a 63% drop. It ultimately failed to make back its $50m budget.
* In the Heights carried this change over to the 2021 film adaptation.
* In the Heights, Daniela asks Benny if he's "seen any horses, today", having heard that he and Nina "went for a roll in the hay". The whole cast then proceeds to sing said song. With harmonies. In a conga line.
* In the Heights has a little bit of this during "96,000", which in the film is set at the community pool.
* In the Heights has two couples but both are given equal prominence. If one had to be picked it would be Nina and Benny behind Usnavi and Vanessa since Usnavi is clearly the main character.
* In the Heights, is called Usnavi (US Navy), named after a ship his parents saw upon arrival from the Dominican Republic. He's not too fond of it.
* In the Heights, most notably in the "one dollar, two dollar" sequence in "In The Heights", and when he hits on Yolanda in "The Club". Lampshaded in the latter, when Usnavi assumes she's "the strong and silent type" as opposed to his "Caribbean island type" when it's more likely that she can't get in a word edgewise (and doesn't speak English). It's implied that Usnavi talks fast when he's nervous - almost all of his dialogue in "the Club" is rapid-fire, presumably because he's on a date with his long-time crush Vanessa, and the only time it's not is when he's talking to his best friend Benny.
* In the Heights takes place over the span of three days, centered around the 4th of July.
* In the Heights tendencies, and both are concerned with legacy and who will tell their story (which naturally are important themes in both shows).
* In the Heights, the main character Nina is supposed to be the smartest, brightest, and overall "best" in her community. As far as the audience can tell, the only thing she ever accomplished was getting into Stanford, where she lost her scholarship due to poor academic performance.
* In the Heights, was similar: he both wrote the music/lyrics and played the lead role of Usnavi during the original Broadway run.
* In the Heights winning the rights in a bidding war. Filming started in April 2019, and it arrived in June 2021.
* In "The Heiress", several Mandalorians are doing a mid-air seizure of an Imperial transport, only to be sealed behind blast doors in the cargo hold.
* In "The Heist", all the shading is done with old-timey screentone dots.
* In "The Heist", an old-timer cop assists the protagonist on a visit to the 70s to catch a criminal before he can steal several precious diamonds. The thing is he likes his old time better than the present, so he ends up stealing the stones himself.
* In the Hell’s Library series by AJ Hackwith, there is a library in hell which houses unwritten books. The
* In the Hellenistic period, it was commonly said that Achilles had ordered his ashes put into the same jar as Patroclus' so that they would be together forever

(obviously, this went along with the idea-commonly held at that time-that they were lovers). The cult of
* In "The Hellgramite Method", Miley and Frannie Judson call their son Chad "Chadder."
* In the He-Man skit "Eternia Fitplex", Triclops serves as Skeletor's spotter while he's lifting weights, but then he spies the Sorceress exercising and gets a boner, disgusting Skeletor and causing him to drop the weight on himself.
* In the Heretic and Hexen series, the Serpent Riders are fond of forming cults dedicated to their own worship, and among the enemies you face, there are 'dark bishops' and 'heresiarchs'.
* In the Heroes vs. Villains season, villain Sandra tried to do this to hero Sugar by pulling her top off during a challenge. Sugar, not the least fazed, won the round and flipped Sandra off with both hands, causing a rare triple-blur of both her breasts and fingers.
* In "The Hero of Parnast: Part 2", the group wanted Wallace out of the group as swiftly as possible, so at the end of the adventure,
* In the Hetalia Bloodbath 2010, Sealand, who isn't even a real country, beats a mysterious enemy who was trying to kidnap him, showing he is literally
* In the heyday of Disney's Renaissance of the late '80s/early '90s, many many low-budget animation houses lived off this trope like kings. They made (or more likely scrounged up) the most
* In the heyday of the Star League, the Star League Defense Force (SLDF) and their intel apparatus had the R&D and tech on hand to create the Nighthawk Stealth Powered Armor, which is designed for their black ops units and focuses more on low visibility and sensor obfuscation than armor plating.
* In "The Hidden Enemy", one of the clones is revealed to be a traitor spying for the Separatists. After being caught and asked how he could do this, he retorts that the Republic and the Jedi are enslaving him and his brothers and forcing them to fight and die in a war they have no stake in without anything in return, that the other clones are too indoctrinated to realize how badly they're being treated, and that he only started working for the Separatists because they promised him freedom. And the thing is, everything he says is absolutely true. While his actions solved nothing and ultimately only resulted in the deaths of more clones, his motives are hard to find any fault in.
* In the Hidden Star Village filler arc, Tenten and Lee hide under a barrel while following two of Akahoshi's henchmen. They get discovered quite easily.
* In the highly acclaimed "Dreamcatcher" custom module for the original
* In the Highmountain storyline, the player is tasked with helping Mayla Highmountain, chief of the Highmountain tauren, gain the assistance of three fellow tauren tribes. One of them, the Bloodtotem tribe, not only has the most imposing name, but is also the most xenophobic and hostile. Eventually, the player realizes that the Bloodtotem are in league with the Burning Legion.
* In the highway fight, Deadpool's only reaction to having a bullet-hole straight through his arm is to wiggle his finger through the bullet hole and curse at the guy who just put it there (to be fair, Deadpool was
* In "The Hijackers", Lew's uncle Walter makes a comment about how everything became worse once he retired and had nothing to fill his time. This causes Lew to rethink the case and realize that the hijack was never about the loot; it was about the company.
* In the Hiker Interlude, the titular Hiker meets a young girl named Mizu, no older than nine years old.
* "In The Hills of Shiloh" is a haunting ballad of a woman waiting in her bridal gown for her beloved to return to her, running up and down the hills, written by
* In "The Himalayan Rescue Caper", Ivy and Zack pose as exterminators in order to delay Player's history exam. When they are asked what the school's infestation consists of, Ivy and Zack switch between saying bees and termites.
* In the History and Lore videos, on King's Landing, he is positively proud of his cold and brutal betrayal of Aerys Targaryen, noting how the King "thought he was being clever" by keeping Jaime as a hostage against him. He also considers "The Rains of Castamere" as a quaint song and sends it as his go-to death threat to anyone who so much as thinks of resisting the Lannisters.

* In the history of the Hanna-Barbera stable, Blast-Off Buzzard was the only entry to fit this trope (though Daws Butler did do the vocal effects for him and Crazylegs the snake). Then again, the segment
* In the Hitchhiker's Guide and Starship Titanic universe, the designers give robots and other mechanical things that speak "Genuine People Personalities" which are copies of people's personalities.
* In the Hitchhiker's guide universe, most probabilities are distinct (ie rarely do two highly improbable events have the same probability) which is why it's possible to specify the event you want to occur using a finite/infinite improbability drive. You induce all events with that probability, but usually there's only one or the side-effects of the others are trivial or at least benign. What's even more mindboggling is that the probability that a particularly notable improbable event will have a probability whose digits are particularly notable
* In "The Hobby Show" he helps fix broken toys to give to needy children.
* In "The Hoboken Surprise", all the animals are replaced with robots with red eyes.
* In the hockey RPF fandom there's the concept of 'goalie nesting', in which a goaltender can suddenly go feral, hoard hockey equipment, and become either more aggressive or more affectionate toward his teammates (or rather a specific teammate, in the latter case).
* In "The Hole...Lotta Nuthin'" while Wander is being humiliated by Hater, the baddie accidentally cheers Wander up by uttering out loud his famous motto, "It never hurts to help."
* In the holiday movie “Elf,” Buddy lets fly with a corker of a belch after slamming down a whole 2 liter bottle of cola at once.
* In the holiday special "The Best Gift Ever", Twilight's list of things to do before the holidays is long enough to entangle several ponies into a Gordian knot of paper.
* In the Hollow World, the Spell of Preservation tends to maintain populations' distinct physical traits across the generations. Even though intermarriage goes on, it's implied that descendents of such mixed pairings eventually breed their way back into one or the other parent ethnicity, eventually causing all "foreign" traits to vanish over time.
* In "The Homecoming", Major Kira infiltrates a Cardassian work camp by pretending to be a Bajoran prostitute being brought to the camp commander. The guard too has a
* In the Homer Price stories Grandpa Hercules trained to make a big leap while wearing additional weights on his clothes. If the muscles are used to moving with the added weight, they'll let him jump large distances once the weight is gone. This works.
* In "The Homer they fall", Dr. Hibbert diagnoses Homer with "an absolutely unique genetic condition known as Homer Simpson Syndrome", which shields him from feeling most hits to his head.
* In "The Homer They Fall" Homer fights Drederic Tatum and once they leave he can't remember where he parked the car (likely due to so much head trauma), so Marge says they'll just wait until everyone else leaves.
* In "The Homestar Runner Enters the Spooky Woods", The Homestar Runner's three biggest fears are apparently an illustration of the Golgi apparatus from his school life science textbook, "frilly toothpicks", and... a flock of "wet pigeons" entangled in a dead raccoon's rotting carcass.
* In the Hood: Big, face-concealing hoods for that extra identity concealment.
* In the Hood genre, though you may well see at least one hoodie there).
* In the Ho-Oh arc, a Ho-Oh (which is just Ezekiel when he performed a
* In the "Hooky" episode, SpongeBob is finally convinced to not play with hooks anymore after he gets one stuck in his pants, at which time he has to take them off. Then he has to take his
* In "The Hork-Bajir Chronicles", we discover that the (up until now apparently innocent) Andalite host of the leader of the Earth invasion killed thousands, if not millions, of Hork-Bajir in an effort to keep that planet from falling into enemy hands. By creating and releasing a virus that will break down the DNA proteins unique to the Hork-Bajir, meaning a peaceful race whose resistance movement has been of tremendous help has over half their population die by having their bodies disintegrate slowly and painfully.

* In "The Hormone-iums", Linda tries to market wine holders made from old women's footwear. Not only does she fail to convince the Fischoeder brothers to invest in her "Wine Shoes", she discovers that a company that makes novelty wine holders beat her to the punch with their "Booze Shoes".
* In the horribly anti-Semitic #55 "Little Sir Hugh", the protagonist is killed by a "Jew's daughter" and thrown into a well — this was a fairly recurrent medieval legend (it also appears in
* In the Horus Hersey, the Chaos Space Marines laid siege to Terra, and the Emperor and his remaining forces were forced to drive them off with all they had. The Imperial forces drove the Chaos forces off and killed Horus, but at the price of Sanguinius being slain and the Emperor nearly being killed as well.
* , in the hospital by repeatedly powerbombing her on the exposed arena floor. Kelly further says that anyone else in the Diva Army eliminates Victoria, she will eliminate them.
* In the hospital where Semmelweis developed his theory, the medical students examined women in childbed after
* In the host segments of a few episodes, Tory is visibly wearing a shirt that has been turned inside-out.
* in the hot springs. Curiously there was not slapping or reproaching. After the initials screams they calmed down and apologized at each other. It was even cute.
* In "The Hound of Ulster", Bronx takes a liking to an Irish teenage boy, but growls and barks at his female friend. Turns out that
* In the House exaggerates this trope twice with regards to pompous doctor Maxwell.
* In "The House of Monkeys", a scientist is found stabbed by a suit of samurai armor in his locked office. The solution:
* In the House of Secret Enemies, Detective/Criminologist Dr. Robert Frederickson (Mongo to people who knew him from the circus) has a big brother, Garth, on the New York City Police Force. A much bigger brother.
* "In the House of the Worm" is another story in the same vein, in which a race of humans lives in underground dwellings carved by enormous worms, on a planet orbiting a dying sun. At some point, the protagonist comes across some high-tech gadgets left behind by a faction of ancient biological engineers.
* In "The House That Gave Sucky Treats", Strong Bad gives this insult if you give him an apple while trick-or-treating: "What are you, a dentist? Or a hippie? Or some kind of hippie dentist?"
* In The House; when inexperienced player Tonia joins Marion's game and promptly squeals "lookie here; a whole family"! The other players fold, only to learn that she's bluffing.
* In the Howling Fjord, the Northsea Freebooter pirates set up a blockade around the Alliance settlement of Westguard Keep. A daily quest involves breaking it by dropping bombs from a zeppelin.
* In "The Howling Man", a man must decide whether to release the title character. Once he does, he finds out who the captive really is...
* In the Hulk's very first appearance, he was captured by Yuri Topolov, the Gargoyle, a
* In the Human ending to the "Tides of Darkness" campaign: No matter how you destroy the Dark Portal to end the war against the Orcs, the cutscene will always show the Arch Mage Khadgar using his magic ritual to destroy the portal. This can be quite noticeable, if you decided to use a force of
* In "The Human Factor", everyone on Earth, with the exception of several high profile political figures and their families, is killed in the war between the Free Alliance and the Coalition of Middle Eastern and Pacific States on April 23, 2084.
* In "The Human Factor", humanity is almost completely wiped out in the final phase of the war between the Free Alliance and the Coalition of Middle Eastern and Pacific States. On April 23, 2084, the Free Alliance launched an all-out attack on the Eastern Coalition in the hope of finally bringing the long war to an end. However, they underestimated the Coalition's firepower, which was equal to their own, and Earth is rendered uninhabitable.

* In "The Human Factor", the Free Alliance and the Coalition of Middle Eastern and Pacific States have been at war for years and large parts of Earth are irradiated as a result.
* In the Human Noble origin (the only one where you have Dog from the very beginning), Dog is introduced as having figured out that there are large and rather dangerous rats in the castle larder. Later,
* In the Human Noble Origin, the Warden's father calls him/her "Pup," which is a common nickname for Fereldan nobility to use with their children (owing to the country's love of their dogs).
* In the Human Noble origin, you can choose to have a sexual encounter with one of two certain characters. Regardless of which one of them you choose, they will be brutally slaughtered when the castle is ambushed that same night.
* : In "The Human Pet of Gorilla Land", intelligent gorilla-like alien put human beings on display in a pet store.
* In the Hungarian dub, Carrie and Devin are voiced by Zsanett Czeto and her older brother Roland. They started a romantic relationship near the end of the season and kissed in their elimination episode ("Last Tango in Buenos Aires").
* In the Hungarian Phrasebook sketch, the tobacconist (Terry Jones) rolls his eyes after a fireman (Michael Palin) breaks character.
* In "The Hunters", the ghosts of prehistoric hunters inhabit the paintings found on the walls of a 12,000-year-old cave. Every night, they leave the walls and enter the real world to kill animals belonging to the local farmers such as sheep, cattle and a brood mare. The hunters then go back onto the walls before morning,
* In "The Hunt", the androids who are being hunted by the Nichols family have endoskeletons that are covered with artificial flesh.
* In "The Hunt", the Nichols family refer to androids as "andies" while the android Tara refers to humans as "fleshers".
* In the hurricane episode where the family has to stay inside, Peter makes lots of annoying sounds that greatly bother Meg, but she says nothing about it. However, the minute she makes a sound, Peter scolds her for it, causing her to snap and spill out all the pent up anger she held back from her family for years by giving them the biggest
* In "The Husbands of River Song", River tries to take off in the TARDIS, having just stolen a tyrant's
* In the "I Believe (A Soulful Re-Recording)" music video, there's a brief shot where Curt Smith is at a fancy dinner party, and he looks extremely handsome and elegant in a tuxedo with a white bowtie. He must also share this opinion because he would later wear the same outfit at
* In the ice age five million years in the future, the proximity of surviving animals to their modern relatives means that many strongly resemble real-life creatures. Shagrats are the rodent equivalents of musk ox, the snowstalker is a mustelid resembling both a polar bear and a saber-toothed cat, and the gannetwhales (despite their name) are seal- or walrus-like birds. The deathgleaner is a giant day-flying bat filling the role of a desert vulture.
* In the Ice Age Tier List, chalicotheres are said to be a D-tier mimic of the giant ground sloths despite predating them — the chalicotheres first appeared in the Oligocene and the sloths in the Pleistocene.
* In The IDIC Epidemic, a Klingon engineer is in a weird mix of “working for the Empire” and “exiled for being a mere nerd.” He is naturally part of the cure for said epidemic.
* In "The Idiot Box", SpongeBob and Patrick buy a large TV so they can
* In "The Idol House of Astarte," a costume party turns deadly after the host is stabbed in a grove of trees by apparently supernatural means—there's no weapon in the wound
* In "The Idol House of Astarte", the killing was not premeditated and was almost immediately regretted; the killer became a

* In the "i Dream of Dance" episode, Freddy, Sam and Carly fall asleep on the couch together. Interestingly it's Sam and Carly who lean against each other. You may draw your own conclusions.
* In the IDW G1 continuity, believers in this theory are called Evolutionary Engineerists.
* In the IDW verson it's the Decepticons, a group of hard-luck blue collar workers, led by a miner (guess who) to overthrow the corrupted Autobot senate. But by the time they arrive on Earth, they spend most of their time killing humans within blasting range.
* In "The Illusion of Truth", an ISN news crew visits the station and through
* In "The Illusion", where Tobias is captured and tortured by the Yeerks, the author is kind enough to draw the reader's attention to the exact point in time where the pain becomes intense enough to invoke this trope (though he is a bird at this point).
* In "The Imaginary Letters," a fellow bleacher-seat fan at a Cubs baseball game keeps trying to get Bolt to drink some of his beer from a cup. The fumes make the dog sneeze explosively into the glass, calling a halt to the man's attempts to interest the pooch in his beer.
* In "The Imaginary Letters", Bolt mentions having the song "Cinnamon Girl" by
* In the Imaginationland three-parter, a subplot explaining how the terrorists gained access to the gateway to Imaginationland (they stole it from the Russians, who planned an attack in our imagination back during the Cold War) was cut because it raised more questions than it answered.
* In the immortal words of the Danish Prime minister Lars Løkke "Those who earn more, and pay a lot, and now pay a little less. Well they pay more-less, than those who earn a little less, and pay less, thus paying less-less"
* In the Impel Down arc, Luffy finds out that Ace has been captured by the Marines,
* In the Imperial Agent plotline, any romance with Watcher Two gets cut off (by her) when
* In the Imperial Legion questline, your superiors will refuse to give or accept quests unless you are in uniform — i.e. wearing body armor of a specific type that Legionnaires must wear while on duty.
* In the Imperium of Man, a common way to salute is to form the "aquila" symbol, by crossing your hands over your chest, fingers outstretched, so that your hands form the symbolic wings and the thumbs intertwined to form the double head of the eagle. It's also an expression of piety roughly equivalent to crossing yourself.
* In the Imperium of Man, individual planets are normally self-governing, with taxes and men for Imperial regiments being gathered by an administration stiff and bureaucratic, operating on its own and not controlled from the top. Whether your planet is a democracy or a neo-feudal dictatorship, the Imperium doesn't really give a toss as to how you run your planet as long as you pay the tithes the bureaucracy sets, hand over the pyskers when the Black Ships come by every few decades, and ensure the Imperial Cult is followed (and even the smarter Ecclesiarchs realize the Creed is going to be slightly different from one planet to another and tolerate this, the more common ones declare everyone else heretics).
* In "The Impolite Corpse" (from the third radio series), it takes place at the murder scene because his client told him over the phone that Archie was in danger. Wolfe suspects (correctly) that this was a lie intended to get him over there, but had found the case so annoying that he was willing to just solve it right there and be done with it.
* In "The Impossible Planet" / "The Satan Pit", this has already happened by the time the Doctor and Rose show up. The rocket's original captain died en route, leaving Zachary in charge.
* In "The Impossible Summit of Mt. Neverrest!", Louie isn't happy to hear that a
* In "The Imp Prince", the protagonist Léandre saves a girl from being sacrificed in a temple.
* In the "I'm With Cupid" episode there's a Valentine tradition of girls giving carnations to the boys they like. Bobby gets two, so he lends them to his best friend Joseph, since it'll make the latter seem more desirable to a crush he has. Course, when Joseph moves to return them, one of their classmates sees the act and assumes Joseph is confessing his attraction to Bobby. On the plus side, said classmate simply says the act took courage.

* In "The Inator Method," the boys decide to race planets on a giant orrery. Isabella is thrilled at the fact Phineas saved Venus for her, but it doesn't last:
* In "The Inconveniencing", after Lee is trapped on the cover of a cereal box by the ghosts at the Dusk 2 Dawn, the mascot threatens him with a cereal spoon and quips "I'm bonkers for eating you alive!" We then
* In "The Inconveniencing" Dipper has to wear a cute little fluffy lamb suit and do the Lamby Dance to pacify a pair of elderly ghosts.
* In the India Special episode, the trio's attempt to promote "BRITISH I.T. FOR YOUR COMPANY" to Indian companies went pear-shaped when the sign ripped in two between the second 'I' and the 'S' in "BRITISH". On the opposite site, "EAT ENGLISH MUFFINS" also had the "INS" at the end torn off.
* In the indies, it isn't uncommon for wrestlers to literally yell out the name of the move they're about to hit before executing it. (Or attempting to, as the case may be.)
* In the infamous episode "Your Ed Here," Kevin blackmails Eddy into making Eddy kiss Edd
* In the infamous filler episodes, Tsunade almost constantly threatens to send
* In the infamous hospital scene in End of Evangelion, Shinji shakes Asuka, pleading her to wake up, and then he accidentally unbuttoned her gown, baring her breasts. He then becomes an actual pervert
* In the infamous "Jake From State Farm" advertisement, a wife doesn't believe that her husband is talking to a real estate agent,
* In the infamous "Sandbox Sequence" from the complementary conclusion to
* In "The Infinite Quest" the Doctor when he arrives on the planet Volag-Noc is sentenced to two billion years, which, considering the Doctor's rate of aging, not even a Time Lord could live through.
* In "The Inheritors", Daria Michaels has been in a coma since she was knocked down by a hit-and-run driver. Her husband Ian sits at her hospital bed and talks to her on a daily basis.
* In "The Inheritors", Jacob Hardy is struck in the head by an apparent meteor fragment and dies instantly as the fragment became embedded in his brain. When his body is brought to the morgue, the pathologist Dr. Ian Michaels and his assistant Ollie Gibb begin to perform an autopsy. Ian's first step is to remove the fragment, which turns out to a metal projectile. A tentacle then emerges from the hole in Jacob's head, much to the horror of Ian and Ollie. Before they can react, Jacob opens his eyes, takes a deep breath and sits upright, having been resurrected by the alien technology.
* In "The Inhuman Torch," Leela, Fry and Bender have to rescue several miners who are trapped in a helium mine. Bender takes advantage of their
* In the initial five books, there's no indication that he's an Incarnation; he (and God) are treated as being eternal constants, and while he generally presents himself as
* In the initial Two River production in 2015, Michael's sexuality is left ambiguous. Because of that as well as the lack of a Two River bootleg allowing for more room for interpretation, many fans at the time headcanoned Michael as being gay, and often portrayed him as wearing an LGBT flag patch on his jacket. The LGBT flag patch was made official in the 2018 Off-Broadway run and the story hints more at him being gay now. Official productions from here on keep this, making it canon.
* In "The Initiative," when Spike finds himself unable to bite or hurt Willow due to
* In "The Inmates of Summer", SpongeBob and Patrick accidentally board a prison ship instead of the summer camp boat they meant to get on.
* In the "Inner Peace Through Superior Firepower" prequel series, we see that Wanda started out with this attitude, only to discover painfully that

* In the Inner Sphere, at least, there's a whole class of 'Mechs, such as the
* In the inn scene for the third part of the "Dragon Freak" sidequest, Karol wakes up with the rest of the party, save Estelle, who is out cold and mutters "...Mrngh mrngh... No, no more tapioca..."
* In "The Inquisitor", after Lister and Kryten are erased from the timeline to make way his "sperm-brother" and another mechanoid, Lister convinces their counterparts of their identities by listing several embarrassing personal details about Rimmer, that only Lister could possibly know.
* In the inspirational story, Othello's counterpart "the Moor" actually has "the Ensign" (Iago) bludgeon Desdemona to death with him and then the two of them
* In the instance of reanimated corpses, you have either the Geth-transformed Husks or the plant spore mind-controlled Thorian Creepers, both of which shamble around fairly similarly to other undead specimens.
* In the Institute for Mercenary Profiling quiz for creating a character in
* In the interim between seasons two and three, when asked if Kendra's death would cause a new Slayer to be called, Joss said, "We're going to let it lie. We like the one...in the end, there should be only one." This was after he had already cast
* In the interlude Mourning Frost, Lord Frostmourne panics when he notices that his children snuck out to help Kytheus fight the Tyrant.
* In the interminable wars between the Byzantine and Sassanid Persian Empires in the 6th and 7th centuries,
* In the Internship arc, Midoriya and Mirio, while out on patrol, happen upon Eri, a young girl in bandages, at which point
* In the Intersteller Wars the Terrans are mostly Enlightenment being
* In the interviews before and during season 1, Martin was saying of
* In the interview segments of the 1995 IWA King of The Death Match tournament, Terry Gordy's response to being beaten by
* In the introduction to "Ripples," the nameless Vampire Hunter points a crossbow in your direction. Given that he's clearly resentful of you for being a powerful representative of the Big Three among unaffiliated underdogs, it actually seems as though he might hate you enough to shoot you... only for him to reveal that he was aiming at the vampire creeping up behind you.
* In the introductory episode of the Secret Society, Clayface attempts to lure Batman into a trap by impersonating
* In the intro level, Samus needs to escape a space station, while avoiding gushes of steam coming out from practically everywhere. If you get hit by the steam, you lose precious time to escape.
* In the intro of “D.W.’s Very Bad Mood”, she is seen a giant who rampages though Elwood City.
* In the intro of “How The Cookie Crumbles”, Arthur, Brain, Binky and Francine are turned into cookies, and to make matters worse, a giant Muffy attempts to eat them.
* In the intro, Sonny pretty much states that he intends to come in and take over after Tommy has managed to establish himself in Vice City.
* . In the intro, the titular character Lee-Lee, a blue blob, assumes that Lulu, the pink blob standing next to him, is his girlfriend. Lulu is OF COURSE just another guy who happens to like pink and have long eyelashes. Though, the sequel opens by revealing that Lulu is pregnant and heavily suggests that she was just saying anything she could think of to get Lee-Lee to leave her be.
* In the intro to the punishment, Sal even invokes the trope name: "Joe, you usually put the C in 'cool', but today, you're gonna be putting the P in 'pool!'"
* In the intro to "Treehouse of Horror VIII", the Fox Censor is seen hard at work on a script for
* In the "Invasion!" Arrowverse crossover, Supergirl meets the Flash / Arrow / Legends teams. When Mick finds out she has
* In the Invention Exchange for the "Wizards of the Lost Kingdom" episode, Jonah invents "Verbal Smoke Bombs", a list of bizarre excuses guaranteed to end any awkward conversation, including "Gotta go, I can't feel my arms!"
* In "The Invention of Hugo Cabret" Hugo isn't content to just write his story.

* In the inverse, Hornblower's rival in the first episode is a midshipman named Jack Simpson, a cruel, violent and petty tyrant who treats his men like servants rather than shipmates; he is the oldest midshipman on the ship because he consistently fails his examination for lieutenant (his best hope of advancement is an automatic promotion to lieutenant at the age of 50) and recacts by bullying the men under his command.
* In the inverse of the trope, he drew backlash for actually defending Chance the Rapper's critically panned debut album, The Big Day, even giving it a 7/10.
* In "The Invincible Sword", Jacqueline tells Louis that she will "sleep across [his]… doorway every night," although this is probably an unintentional case.
* In 'The Invisible Man', a man who lives alone is killed, while the police are blocking off every possible entrance to his house. Father Brown figures out that the killer walked straight through a police blockade because he was a 'mentally invisible man'.
* In "The Invisible Monster" the Quests find Isaiah Norman's notebook, which tells Doctor Quest how Norman accidentally created the title monster.
* In "The Invisibles", protagonist Luis Spain is a spy who works for the
* In "The Invitation" Daria mentions having a picture of Quinn in her "chubby stage." A tie-in book also shows an unflattering picture of her in her "awkward stage," which apparently only lasted about a week.
* In "The Invitations", Jerry gets engaged to a woman played by Janeane Garofalo, who behaves almost identically to Jerry himself. Jerry comes to hate her, realizing that he "hates himself". Of course, she reaches the exact same conclusion, at the exact same time, leading to the only recorded instance of a genuinely
* In their 2018 season, their ace Chris Sale served as their first starter that year. Come the World Series that October, Sale was called upon to serve as the closer in the final inning of Game 5. Sale started the Sox's season, and he ended it.
* In their 3rd edition backstory, this was the response of the Necrontyr, a sickly and short-lived race, to the nigh-immortal
* In their commentaries on the television news media, they'll often show the news media's hive-mind collective latches onto a particular key-word or -phrase and repeats it incessantly by means of a montage. They'll show sometimes upward of a dozen clips of different news anchors, reporters, and pundits repeating the same catch-phrase about an item, then end it with one of the talking heads saying something ... really bizarre, though still on-topic.
* In their country, you elect a president by holding a party and the last person to show up is elected.
* In their cover identities, the shifters are normal human soldiers fighting against the Titans. At home, they're members of the 'Warrior Program', which is where Marley gets its Titan Shifters. Those who have recieved a Titan Power are Warriors, the rest are Warrior Candidates.
* In their default classes, Squire-class Venus Adepts, Jenna, Piers, and more than half the playables in
* In their defense in regards to season two, they had planned a long, elaborate 2-volume (i.e. season-long) arc in which all the seemingly-loose plot threads would have come together. In the original ending of volume two,
* In their defense, it doesn't hurt that the Junkions thought repairing and resurrecting Ultra Magnus (complete with a new coat of polish) was a grand idea for a party game.
* In their duel, Oberyn demands that the Mountain makes a confession for his crimes against the Martells. When the Mountain is accused with, "You raped her! You murdered her! You killed her children!", although less clearly shown than in the books, the Mountain's problem is not the accusation itself, but that Oberyn got the events in the wrong order. His response is, "I killed her children.
* In their early appearances, a plasma pistol was a standard additional sidearm (they also carried a .45 as well) for agents of S.H.I.E.L.D of
* in their empty common room, Jamie and Ron forget to take into account two things: 1) Not everyone has classes at the same time (when the duo arrive at the common room, they find three Slytherin students spending their free period there) and 2) the stink bomb Jamie and Ron were carrying was shrunk down, compressing the many ingredients it contained, turning them lethal. As soon as the stink bomb went off, the three Slytherins die instantaneously (and according to their corpse's reactions, painfully) while Jamie accidentally kills himself trying to make a getaway on his broom.

* In their exodus from this area of the galaxy, the Precursors of the
* In their fight in Stuttgart, Captain America's best blows barely faze Loki.
* In their first appearance near the end of season 1 - one of the first episodes where the show really
* In their first appearance, Tweedledee and Tweedledum trap Batman and Robin in wolf traps while they are robbing a furriers. Batman comments that if they had been using bear traps instead, he and Robin probably would have been crippled.
* In their first duel, Dark Glass intentionally protects his monster by allowing Yusei to attack him directly instead, losing as a result. He likely did it because he knew the villains were watching and did not want them to see all his cards and strategies.
* In their first duel, Jamira swaps his shuffled deck with a pre-arranged deck that he knows the order of so he'll always get good draws. In their second duel, he tries to hypnotize Shobu so he'll fall asleep and lose by default. Shobu beats him both times.
* In their first episode, "Q who", Q talks about how relentless the Borg are in adding to their collective.
* In their first fight, she beats up Supergirl so badly she is broken and bleeding and needs to be hospitalized, while Reign doesn't have a scratch on her despite taking several hits. Eventually, Samantha manages to destroy her Reign personality, but this causes her to lose her powers, basically leaving her an ordinary human.
* In their first live battle, Wraiths Five and Six, plus two A-Wings, manage to trick an Imp Star Deuce into following them, by pretending to be the
* In their first run-in with Brother Blood, the villain manipulated the
* In their first WWC match as opponents, La Tigresa raked the ass of a returning
* In their first year at the Assassins' Guild School, the would-be School Bully goes to her two older brothers to complain about the girl in her dorm who not only refuses to be bullied, she expresses pretty firm views on that sort of thing. The older brothers are chastened, humilated and damaged somewhat in their encounter with
* In their "Go Supersonic" music video, three guys drink "Supersonic"-sized "Hot Sauce" coffees. The remainder of the video is the three of them, under the influence of the coffee,
* In their initial appearance, Borg drones use their alcoves to plug themselves into the Borg collective consciousness—to the extent that when using them, drones don't register as individual life forms to sensors.
* In their initial invasion, the Yuuzhan Vong vanguard quickly learned that the Jedi were (for various reasons) the only force that was both willing and able to oppose them. So their agents set about slandering the Jedi name, implying that the entire invasion was due to some (wholly invented) insult the Jedi had offered the Vong, offering planets amnesty if they took Jedi prisoners and turned them over, etc. Some of it stuck; at the height of their unpopularity, a third of the Senate was willing to vote to basically hand the Jedi over to the Vong, their paramilitary activities were curtailed, and
* In their late 2007 election campaign, Australians were subjected to both Labor ads about Howard and Costello wanting to take away even more workers' rights, and Coalition ads about "anti-business" unions running the country if Labor got in. Labor won, and analysts commented that Australians still seem to have respect for the union movement despite the Howard government's attempts to demonize them.
* In their native range of Argentina, they don't merge colonies since each one is genetically distinct. The reason the invasive ones in North America and Europe form supercolonies is that they're all descended from one ancestral colony, and are much more genetically similar.

* In their October mailings, the Disney Movie Club advertises their movies by the villain. This can spoil movies where who the villain is is a big twist, including
* In the Iron Kingdom Kampan passes through a gap in a wall off camera. Ajna immediately vaults into said hole using a spear before Dhar can theorizing how she did it, unlocking the Kampan corkscrew which can be used to access similar roadblocks.
* In The Iron Teeth web serial the goblin protagonist loves loves stabbing people in the back, probably because he's fast, sneaky, and almost completely without morals.
* In the Iron Temple, you can attempt to climb Felwinter Peak by jumping up cliffs in order to find a hidden SIVA cluster. There’s no incentive to do so, but you can climb all the way up to the summit of the mountain, well past the cluster; this area serves no real gameplay purpose, but it’s all rendered anyways.
* In their origins, the original Cybermen are a powerful aversion to this: Humans on a doomed planet that started out as a twin of Earth go inside the planet as the entire surface becomes uninhabitable. They create suits of armor to survive the inhospitable environment on the surface to create a world propulsion system and move the entire planet into a better location and save what's left of them. The process takes so long that due to a lack of nutrition humanity is too weak and continuously swapping out their human bits for stronger robotic ones, and their leaders have preserved themselves as
* In their origin stories, depending on player choices, both the Human Noble Warden and the Dwarf Noble Warden of
* In their origin story, it was revealed that the Professor's house did not originally have the three large circular windows on the top floor. The Powerpuff Girls cut them out with their laser vision so they could leave easily and quickly without (relatively) damaging the house.
* In Their Own Image: A character tries to destroy the world and remake it on very self-serving terms.
* In Their Own Image: Going back to the beginning of time to rewrite the world.
* In "Their Relationship is Complicated", a jock gleefully gives Goth Jared an atomic wedgie.
* In their rematch in the prefectural tournament, however, she made the game-tying shot to send it to overtime. Tomoka almost won it for Keishin this time, but only if she made the game-winning shot in time.
* In their second "Embarrassing Parents" video, they reenact a story in which a guy's step-mom gives him a major wedgie while they're out underwear shopping in order find a tag with his underwear size. The victim this time is portrayed by Hellbent.
* In their third "Worst Thing Bullies Did To Us" video, the crew reenact a story about a girl who given a hanging wedgie by a group of bullies in school, with Spincess playing the role of the victim.
* In their war with Sparta, the Thebans showed a mastery of both strategy and tactics. At the Battle of Leuctra, they overweighted one side of their phalanx to collapse the Spartan host. Their strategy however was to remain in Spartan territory long enough for the Helots to run away. With most city-states, the agricultural economy couldn't be destroyed by raiding simply because destroying crops is even harder than farming them. But the Spartans' agriculture, based on slave Helots kept in line by the other citizens, could be ruined simply by taking the workers away.
* In their "Worst Babysitters" video, the crew are given a (likely fake) story about a girl who was given a hanging wedgie by her mean babysitter and was left there for several hours until her parents came back. The victim is again played by Spincess.
* In "The Island", CatDog go on vacation but end up stranded on an island in the middle of cartoonishly heavy traffic. They eventually escape, only to go down a
* In "The Isle of the Ployees", which is a kind of absurd satire of corporate jobs, Riff is expected to tame a huge monster by whacking it on the head with a small stick.

* In the Israeli song למה את לא עונה לי (Why Won't You Answer Me?) Yoni Bloh does a very long "WHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHHY?!''
* In the Italian-American mafia, the heads of crime families stay in power until they either retire or die. As such, mob bosses who are sent to prison often set up acting bosses to whom they relay orders and who run the family on their behalf while they serve their sentences. Possibly the crowning example of this is Carmine "the Snake" Persico, who was boss of the Colombo family for nearly 50 years, most of which was spent behind bars. When first sent to prison, his initial choice of replacement was his son Alphonse (aka "Little Allie Boy"), but as he was also serving a prison sentence of his own, Persico put his underboss Vic Orena in charge as acting boss until Alphonse got out; this led to a
* In the Italian dub, almost everyone has a different voice actor for singing.
* In the Italian dub Misty was originally voiced by Alessandra Karpoff, who was replaced by Benedetta Ponticelli in a redub of Seasons 1-3 and a pair of flashbacks in late
* In the Italian dub of the original trilogy Luke Skywalker is given a deep, basso profundo voice,
* In the Italian dub Paolo Marchese originally voiced Reinhardt until April 2017, when he was replaced by Pietro Ubaldi who redid all his lines.
* In the Italian dub, Rarity was voiced by Camila Gallo from seasons 1-6, and Chiara Francese in Season 7. Gallo returned for
* In the Italian dub Stantz doesn't call Peck 'dickless' so Venkman's following remark ("this man has no balls") comes off as another instance of his offbeat humour.
* In the Italian dub, the kid who rips away the rollercoster poster in the first episode and thanks Phineas for the ride at the end was voiced by a contest winner.
* In "The Itchy & Scratchy & Poochie Show", Homer's friends watch the first episode of
* In "The Itchy & Scratchy & Poochie Show", Ralph starts crying for for his mom when the Itchy and Scratchy executive yells at the kids.
* In "The Itchy and Scratchy and Poochie Show", when Homer asks his family what they thought of his debut show:
* In the ITV Border TV region, which covers both sides of the England-Scotland border, "Only available in Carlisle" appears on commercials with perplexing frequency (Carlisle being a city on the English side). It's not particularly clear why Carlisle is such a hub for novel products like Pop Tarts.
* In the "I Would Do Anything For Love (But I Won't Do That)" video by
* In the Jan Brett version, the animals start with rabbit, and the mitten doesn't explode until a mouse snuggles herself on the bear's nose.
* In the January 24, 1982 strip, he dreams of being in the land of giant breakfasts, eats a pancake, and wakes up wondering where his blanket went.
* In the Japanese dub, this is subverted with Fievel by having him voiced by a male child actor for the first two films (including
* In the Japanese fairy tale "My Lord Bag of Rice", the hero slays a giant centipede to help a dragon princess. She rewards him with several magical items, including the eponymous bag of rice. Said bag of rice would never be empty no matter how much rice was taken from it.
* In the Japanese film "Time of the Apes" a young human is caught in a trap set my another human while running from Apes. As Mystery Science Theater 3000 put it "I bet Johnny cares now!"
* In the Japanese G1 continuity, the Quintessons created the Autobots and Decepticons, while the Oracle/Primus/Vector Sigma/Primacron's Assistant gave them sentience.
* In the Japanese game of Hanetsuki (similar to old-style badminton, often played by girls at New Year's), missing a shot traditionally meant paying a penalty of letting the winner put a mark on the loser's face with ink. Extended matches might end with both players sporting (painted on) black eyes, scars, moles and kanji characters.

* In the Japanese horror anthology film School Ghost Stories 3 in the segment "Shokki", a young boy named Shoda has a terrible ravenous appetite. He at first eats an unending supply of food in the school's cafeteria, and during math class, it is shown he has delusional pica. He chews on a pencil, and then a girl takes advantage of Shoda's psychological troubles for fun by showing him a picture of a watermelon slice, making Shoda hallucinate it is an actual watermelon slice. The teacher kicks him out of class and spotting a picture of a steak dinner from a wall display of the student's art drawings, Shoda rips it off to eat it but the picture's artist, Ayumi (played by Aki Maeda), the girl who has a crush on him, defends the drawing and sweetly pleads him to spare it but Shoda out of hunger tries to bite her arm, causing her to run away and get lost in frightening, confusing illusions. Ayumi then sees Shoda going through the garbage to look for food. At the end of the segment, Ayumi hands over a heart-shaped box filled with fresh cookies she baked at home and she dies by fading away. Shoda doesn't lament her death and only proceeds to dig into the cookies.
* In the Japanese original, Keroro has a high pitched sqeaky and cute voice courtesy of his actress
* In the Japanese side of the fandom, Mell and Maimai from the "Wish Me Mell" series has gained popularity due to their close friendship.
* In the Japanese text, Piccolo humored twisting Gohan into his image and turning him against his father.
* In the Japanese version and most other dubs, Doraemon has a slightly raspy but high-pitched voice, and is voiced by a woman. In the most famous Italian dub he's voiced by Pietro Ubaldi, a man that makes him sound like a cuddly grandfather.
* In the Japanese version and the NES version's English localization, it applied to Ragnar, but no longer does in the DS remake's English localization, where he was given a last name (McRyan).
* In the Japanese version Brock said this towards Casey, the baseball-obsessed girl from Johto. Brock said she'd be 'fun' in eight years.
* In the Japanese version, Fujin talked in only one kanji at a time. It's not a bad English equivalent.
* In the Japanese version of the show, Armadillomon has a somewhat higher, raspier voice than the southern drawl given him by
* In the Japanese version, Sonic says this after defeating Shadow for the first time:
* In the Japanese version the word used refers to a practice where boys are whipped in the junk with wet towels. It's apparently a relatively commonplace highschool prank.
* In the Jaya arc, Blackbeard encourages Luffy to continue to pursue his dreams after he is mocked by another pirate crew. This guy would go on to defeat Luffy's elder brother Ace and hand him over to the World Government. When his and Luffy's goals cross over in Impel Down, he gloats about this in his face, provoking a small fight.
* In the Jeffrey Ford story "The Empire of Ice Cream", a synesthetic composer sees and falls in love with a synesthetic artist whom he can only see when he drinks coffee, or at least eats something with a coffee taste. She sees him under much the same condition, but she believes him to be a hallucination.
* In the Jerry Nelson tribute episode, the Count's dialogue at the end is cobbled together from Nelson's outtakes.
* In "The Jersey Devil", the famous creature is neither a devil nor a
* In the Jetstream DLC, it's revealed that the bike actually belonged to
* In "The Jigsaw Turk", Iznogoud buys a 10,000 piece jigsaw from joke shop merchant Dokodah Bey; when the last piece is put in, the person of whom the puzzler is thinking will disintegrate into 10,000 pieces. There's one problem: there's a piece missing, which Iznogoud and Wa'at Alahf have to retrieve from the factory, several days' journey away. After several further failed attempts to finish the puzzle, Iznogoud is forced to retrieve the missing piece from the palace bins; meanwhile, Dokodah Bey has found the missing piece in his shop, but the Caliph is the one who takes delivery of it, and Iznogoud returns with his own copy of the missing piece... just in time to see the Caliph put the last piece in, beaming that he's always thinking of Iznogoud. The luckless vizier disintegrates immediately.

* In the JLA Watchtower universe, this was a common trick for the senior Titan boys to play on one another. It was used on-panel when Roy Harper passed out exhausted on the ride back from the Olympics. Dick found the peanut butter and jelly sandwich MRE and started doodling.
* In "The Joining", the United States has established the research facility Aphrodite on
* In the Joint Resolution admitting Texas to the Union, Congress did allow a provision for the state to divide itself. During the Republican era of Texas and early in its statehood there was a significant political faction known as the 'divisionists' who argued that the former republic was too large to be governed effectively by a single body. The point was rendered moot with the emergence of a Texan national culture.
* In the joke book, one of the jokes is "What did Bertie get when he walked under a cow? A pat on the head."
* In ''The Journey of The Catechist" Etjole Ehomba can talk to animals, and a snake puts a very slight poison into his waterskin due to his politeness. He then shrugs off a poisoned dart after having built up an immunity. At which point the dart shooter decides to switch to much more effective magic, and kills Etjole outright.
* In "The Joy of Sect", Jimbo, Dolph, and Kearney steal other peoples' luggage at the airport. Kearney's bag turns out to contain a set of rare
* In the "Judge Child" arc, Murd the Oppressor is an alien tyrant-sorcerer who rules over the planet Necros. She regularly has enemies fed to her giant toad Sagbelly.
* In the July 10, 1999 strip, Jon describes Garfield as "a fat worthless cat". Garfield says "that fat part was uncalled for".
* In "The Junction", the married couple Chris Mulkey and Karen Landry played Ray and Sarah Dobson.
* In the June 19, 2002 strip, a female mouse jumps out of a cupcake, as a present for Garfield's 24th birthday.
* In the June 24, 1987 strip, Booker decides to do a cannon ball dive with a jump onto the springboard. It bounces him off in the direction from whence he came.
* In the Jungle level, a local militia would make an attempt to gun you down at a waterfall. What they don't know is the zombies will ambush them. You can let them fight each other and then finish off the remaining foes.
* In "The Junior Mint", Jerry gets bored with Elaine catching up with Roy the artist in the hospital and breaks out a yo-yo to pass the time, showing real Jerry's prowess with one.
* In "The Junk Mail," Elaine meets a guy at the coffee shop, and although he appears to be just your average joe, from her perspective, his eyes appear piercing (usually with special lighting brightening them), a handsome smile, all accompanied by a harp stringer.
* In The Just Assassins, Camus recounts a legend of Saint George, who on his way to meet God, sees a peasant with a broken cart in a ditch. Ultimately Saint George decides to help the humble peasant and in doing so misses his appointment with God.
* In the Justice/Atonement arcs, a man is out to avenge his parents... who died due to winter. So he decides to kill the
* in the Justice League by the time he meets them along with the rough location of the batcave. Batman suspects the boy's probably calculated the locations of Themyscira and the Fortress of Solitude.
* In the Justice League headquarters the door to the Justice League laboratory has a "Justice League Laboratory" sign.
* In the "Justice" two-parter, a cop killer is acquitted in court and murdered shortly thereafter. The dead cop's son (played by
* In the Karda Nui arc, the light-energy emanating from the area boosted Takanuva's natural light-powers, causing him to grow considerably larger than his fellow heroes (to a $30 price-point titan-sized set, as opposed to the regular $13 canister sets). When he left Karda Nui, he shrunk back to his original size.

* In the Kay Scarpetta series of novels by Patricia Cornwell Scarpetta's niece Lucy is a lesbian who has several different relationships with women while working with the FBI. The
* In the Keep of Time a very precocious reader for her age; after her jaunt into the past, this has to be re-taught to her.
* In the Keep of Time, in the mentality of Mae, who is instead completely out of her depth and has to be instructed and helped to become part of that world. Interestingly, she isn't able to fully accept who she is and where she belongs until after another trip where they're all in the wrong time, in the future.
* In the Keep of Time moment, although subverting reader expectations here was also clever.
* In the Keep of Time of this, since it remains even centuries in the future and, in the belief of the author, will "still stand when our knowledge and skills are but a chapter in the course of the history of man"—i.e., a sign of the wonders and glory of man, rather than of pride and hubris.
* In the Keep of Time return from traveling through time, they find themselves outside the tower door at the exact time they left.
* In the Kelly Clarkson song "Heartbeat" one of the actresses cuts her hair in the bathroom after going through a bad breakup.
* In the Kesandru storyline, where the house is choked with an unusual number of ghosts, cryptic ghostly graffiti on the wall says "NOTHING DEAD HERE", and it isn't until a character moves the furniture next to it that they realize it was in fact the partially obscured "NOTHING DEAD HERE
* In the Key of the Starry Skies Arc, Michelle Lobster refers to Lucy as her "big sister", stating that they would always play together when they were just kids. Lucy however has trouble recalling any of this,
* In the "Key to the Starry Skies" filler arc, Natsu demands to know if everything Imitatia said about her being Michelle, a relative of Lucy, and everything she shared about her past was a lie after she reveals she's the Oracion Seis' sixth member. As a matter of fact,
* In "The Key", Will's plan to clear Vathek of helping Caleb escape boils down to framing a highly respected guard by slipping the key into his armor and having Vathek fake being attacked... it works.
* In the Kia Optima ads featuring NBA player Blake Griffin, he time travels to his past selves (in 1995, 1997, 1999, 2002 and 2006) to brag about his new Kia, and also to hint that he will play basketball in the future. Whenever he time travels, the car radio plays a big hit from the year he travels to. For example, the 1995 one plays "This Is How We Do It" by Montell Jordan and the 1999 one plays "Blue (Da Ba Dee)" by Eiffel 65.
* In the Kiawe Interlude, Lana is shown to enjoy seeing shirtless boys, and once tricked her classmate
* In "The Kids Rob a Train" Tina, Gene, and Regular-Sized Rudy do this to help Louise back into the Juice Caboose before they get caught.
* In "The Kids Run the Restaurant", the Belcher kids' botched attempt to sell a lady sailor a burger leads to her getting weirded out and excusing herself with "I...think I left the meter running."
* In the kids' session, he has taken on the title of "Sovereign Slayer". He's earned it.
* In "The Killing Fields", a song that takes place in Hell and describes the environment in great detail, it is mentioned that "heavy red and black clouds" occasionally gather to rain blood and internal organs on the damned.
* In "The Killing Game", the crew have been brainwashed to believe they are characters in a holodeck program set in World War 2. We see the flowing blonde hair of
* In "The Killing Game", the crew think they're characters in a holodeck simulation of World War 2. Captain Janeway (who's aware of the real situation) is amused when Captain Miller (actually her
* In "The Killings of Copenhagen", the murderer trusses up one of the victims and places them on a conveyor belt leading into an industrial bakers oven.

* In "The Kindly Ones" arc, the second Corinthian is able to witness the memories of those whose eyes he eats.
* In the kingdom of Rommel, there was a phenomenon where it seemed as if the wind itself was cutting people. Eventually, a Marine warship was sent out to investigate, and the culprit was found to be a man by the name of Hakuba. Even to this day, he still hasn't been caught, but he still appears in towns where a certain pirate resides. The pirate in question?
* In the "King Homer" segment of the "Treehouse of Horror III" episode of
* in "The King is Dead", Lois is outraged that the people of Quahog liked Peter's rewriting of
* In the "King Midas" segment of "Muppet Classic Theater" Kermit frustrated with his power to turn everything he touches to gold grabs his face in anger and turns himself to gold.
* In 'The King of Fighters Maximum Impact'', Alba's defeat quote is translated in the dub as "How can this be?!?" Duke, on the other hand, gets a shout of "How can I...!".
* In "The King of Omashu," Aang has to fight a formidable foe. He gets to choose between
* In the King's Service, Marie de Corwyn is decked out as if for her wedding (including a floral wreath) because she died a virgin. Her brother Ahern's funeral reflects his status as heir to Corwyn (not its Duke) because the anti-Deryni laws prohibit Deryni from succeeding to their titles until they're twenty-five (a full eleven years later than ordinary humans).
* In The King's Service, we learn that Jessamy MacAthan was made to marry her husband at age 11. Sief MacAthan thought waiting to consummate the marriage until Jessamy turned 12 was generous, but Queen Dulchesse pulled rank and made him wait till Jessamy turned 14.
* In the Kingston Trio's "M.T.A." addressing transit fare increases, Charlie heads for the subway with 10 cents in his pocket for the fare, unaware that the fare has increased to 15 cents, with the conductor asking him for one more nickel, and poor Charlie is fated to ride the Boston subways forever.
* In the Kinsey Sicks song "Don't Rein in My Buffet" Rachel almost leaves the show she's performing to go chow down at the buffet in the casino next door.
* In "The Kipper and the Corpse", Manuel happens to be salting a plate of sausages. On hearing the news that a guest has died, he stands still, holding the salt jug, which empties its entire contents over the sausages.
* In "The Kippies", Mittens offers several increasingly eccentric euphemisms to point out that Bolt cannot get her pregnant.
* In "The Kissing Bandit", Julia Ogden's sister is trying to explain to Murdoch that, even though Julia has settled for marrying someone else, that doesn't mean she doesn't love Murdoch, if he would only act on his own feelings, rather than resign himself to the situation. She then uses the reaction of a woman kissed by the Bandit as an example of being swept away by one's feelings.
* In the Kitchen with Miss Piggy), a collection of recipes from celebrities with commentary by Piggy.
* In the Klingon Empire, the Klingon Defense Force and Imperial Intelligence hold each other in considerable distaste. In particular, there's a subplot in
* In "The Knight Shift," Marco opens up a portal to the Neverzone so that the other new knights can go there to train. One comes back a few seconds later, disappointed that her muscles are gone. It's not made clear exactly how long it was from her perspective.
* In the Knight's Tale, the eponymous pair of knights are imprisoned in a tower overlooking the palace garden, where they first spot Princess Emelye (Emily) picking flowers. They both fall for her instantly, and the
* In the Knight-verse, Decepticons Shatter and Dropkick deceive the humans into believing that their target Bumblebee is a dangerous fugitive on the lam who must be brought to justice.
* In the Known World, one of the sub-kingdoms of the magical Alphatian Empire consists entirely of floating islands. Amusingly enough, during the

* In the Koban series by Stephen W. Bennett, the nature of the FTL drives used makes this possible. This weaponized in the Nova bombs, slabs of dense metal equiped with FTL drives and set to target the densest point of the ship.
* In the "Koby and Helmeppo's Chronicles of Toil" mini-series, Vice-Admiral Garp gets this reaction from his sailors when he admits that the reason "Axe-hand" Morgan was able to slash him and escape was because he
* In the Korean dub of the same series, Hayato Kazami was renamed as
* In the Korean versions, Mitsurugi (a samurai) is replaced by a blonde English man with an eyepatch called Arthur. This allowed the makers to keep Mitsurugi's moveset in the game without offending the Korean players.
* In the Krieg Pirates, Don Krieg has Gin and Pearl as his combat commander and commander of the crew's second unit respectively.
* In "The Krusty Plate" Spongebob is instructed to wash a plate and the following scene ensues.
* In "The Krusty Sponge" when SpongeBob gets tired of giving train rides and collapses asleep on the train.
* In the Kyoto arc, Negi finds himself alone with Setsuna at the hot springs. Setsuna senses his presence and thinking he's an enemy, proceeds to attack him with her sword and
* In "The Lab Four", when Bingo and Rolly accidentally wake Hissy up with their noisy one band instruments.
* In the lake territory, there is a small cave system beneath ThunderClan and WindClan's territories. It was previously used in a coming-of-age initiation by an ancient community of cats who lived in the area, but not every cat made it out, since the tunnels would flood when it rained. In modern times it's haunted by the ghost of a young cat who died there, as well as a creepy all-seeing spirit-cat who has been around since the dawn of time.
* In "The Land Before Swine", Grunkle Stan gives one to Mabel's pet pig Waddles after the latter eats the former's corn-cob sculpture of a unicorn, driving away Stan's customers.
* In "The Land Before Swine", Old Man McGucket gets swallowed whole by a baby pterodactyl. He's seen trying to crawl out of its mouth later, and at the end
* In the Land of Birds arc the daimyo Sagi is revealed to have died some time prior. His twin sister Toki faked her own death and assumed Sagi's identity in an attempt to hunt down his killers.
* In the Land of Birds filler arc, Naruto, Tenten and Neji seemingly prove that the Strategist impersonated the Cursed Warrior in order to plan a coup at the end of the second episode in the arc. The arc gets more complex from there.
* In the Land of Women about his former girlfriend that he runs into a tree.
* In the Lands of the Dawn, most people ride six-legged, red-scaled, white-furred reptiles called hirroc.
* In the Laramie Gaiden, both the Ranger and Trainer battleships realize their battle injured a school of Gyarados, who are
* In the Larklight Series by Phillip Reeve, steam punk asteroid miners are hard at work among the asteroids of various planets in our solar systems, complete with minecart tracks tying the asteroids together.
* In the LARP "The Realms", Silver is a weapon enhancement which is noted in the rulebook to have enhanced effects against certain types of beings.
* In the last battle of "el Cid Campeador" / "el mio Cid" this was the fear of his wife as she prepped the corpse so the soldiers wouldn't lose morale by learning that their commander was down. This made him
* In the last book, he sees more of Snape's memories and discovers the necessary but rather startling information that
* In the last case of the third game, the murder of a children's book author is ultimately tied into a gigantic revenge scheme.
* In The Last Chancers last novel, Kage, possessed by a Slaaneshi daemon, decides to commit his first ever act of altruism and jumps off a cliff to his death, taking the corrupt governor with him.

* In the last chapter, Emi Nakasuga is introduced. For context, Emi and Miho had parted ways at the end of the prequel manga, Little Army, promising to see each other again once Miho found her own way of tankery. Unfortunately, Emi doesn't serve any role other than as Miho's final opponent in this fic.
* In "The Last Defender of Camelot", Lancelot is the last surviving Knight of the Round Table 1,000 years after the fall of Camelot. He was kept alive for all that time by a spell cast by
* In "The Last Defender of Camelot", Lancelot was a mercenery-for-hire who traveled the world fighting for
* In the last episode, Angel asks Harmony if she remembers what it was like being human because he no longer remembers himself.
* In the last episode, Chandler and Monica make their way back home to their old, soon-to-be-vacated apartment, where the rest of the gang is waiting to see their kid. Monica shows up with one of the babies, then Chandler enters the scene with the other. Cue massive Double Take from everyone; especially egregious with
* In the last episode, Emma is forced to play the cello. It even shows blood drops flowing down the strings.
* In the last episode, it's revealed that George is the last of the "Trinity Tiddlers", a group of college friends who all joined up when the war began.
* In the last episode, Mai and Yuuichi are about to kiss when Mai stops, having noticed that
* In the last episode of Season 3, Ghazan chooses this over going back to prison — and collapses a cave on himself, Bolin and Mako. They make it out, he doesn't.
* In the last episode of Series 2, Prince Charles ends up looking faceless after Leonard Hatred sprays him with his "Psilence" liquid skin. (It's not explained how His Royal Highness is able to breathe after this happens, but he seems to manage.)
* In the last episode of SG-1, "Unending", Teal'c travels back in time after spending 50 years or so on the Daedalus. In the subsequent movies and on Stargate Atlantis, all he has to show for it is a goatee. This is despite the fact that he should be older than Bra'tac was at the start of the series (he was 101 years old in season 4, while Bra'tac was 134).
* In the last episode of the fifth season, Vir mentioned that he and Londo heard some Pak'ma'ra singing. And that it was beautiful. As an example,
* In the last episode of the second season, Maria does similar to the above, with significantly better results. This one is only in the anime though.
* In the last episode of the second season, Vita tells an unconscious Hayate that as her happiness is the Wolkenritter's happiness,
* In the last episode of the series, Donna's mother Dee Dee hooks Robert, Donna's ex-husband and the father of Rallo and Roberta. Most of the family is understandably unhappy about this.
* In the last episode, Saejima says Matsuoka is pretty cool for a cop, and announces his intention to become one. Guess what Saejima does for a living in GTO?
* In the last episodes of Season 1, we learn that M'gann is secretly a monstrous-looking White Martian (she can shapeshift into any form she wants). When Psimon makes her envision her worst fears coming true in her head, one of them is being rejected by Conner, who says, "Love you? I can't even look at you!" A few episodes later, M'gann gets the guts to tell her friends the truth, though still terrified of rejection. But then it turns out that Conner had found out about her true form before they had started dating, and had been waiting patiently for her to feel ready to confess to him.
* In the last episode, used on Patty and Penny, because both actresses were about 25 years older than the age they were playing. Most of the time, this made sense, since the actresses playing Patty and Penny were supposed to be ghosts, so being a little fuzzy would made sense, but in the occasional scene they were made solid again, it was still there.
* In "The Lastest Gun In The West", When retired cowboy actor Buck McCoy, upon being wheedled to reprise his role, tells Bart and Lisa, "The last city-slickers to use reverse psychology on me are pushing up daisies!" ("They're dead?" "No, they just got really lousy jobs...")

* In the last few decades, LEGO has become a very popular target for bootleggers, with brands like "LELE", "LEPIN", or "LEBQ". In flea markets, it's common to find entire LEGO sets duplicated brick-for-brick (with matching copied box art) with varying degrees of plastic quality, but sometimes bootleggers get more creative and put out knockoff minifigures of Marvel, DC, video game or Star Wars characters that do not have official minifigure representations. Then, bootleggers have actually gone a step further and are producing knock-off kits based on fan creations posted online.
* In the last few episodes of Season 1, Kanan is captured by the Empire. Hera is urged by
* In the last few episodes, Zuko becomes more and more hostile in trying to get Aang to train. Aang, not understanding, asks what his problem is, then Zuko tells him about Ozai's plan
* In the last fight of the series, Keri Russell is inflated until she explodes destroying the stadium. It was
* In the last filler arc of Part 1, Matsuri has difficulty with weapons until Gaara helps her select one that she wouldn't injure herself with. Even then, it takes a few tries before she can get the hang of it, although she manages to save Gaara's life with it in the final battle of the arc.
* In "The Last Gunfighter: Ambush Valley" a gang of seven bounty hunters led by Abner Hoyt are
* In the last Hawaii episode, Professor Whitehead's tiki statue, Oliver.
* In The Last Hero it's implied that swamp dragons are descended from moon dragons, which are basically perfect for their habitat as they have natural rocket propulsion. Pratchett isn't an evil man, the dragons just work better in space.
* In the last issue of his miniseries, Baron Zemo talks his would-be murderer into attempting suicide, then stops him and convinces him to join Zemo instead.
* In the last leg of Therion's fight against Darius, Therion suspects the reason Darius refuses to trust people is Darius himself is afraid people will betray him. Judging by how Darius reacts, Therion might be right on the money.
* In "The Last Man" (Weird Science #12, 1952), a man returns to Earth after a long space journey only to find it removed of any humans. After a long search, he finally finds a woman but before they can make plans to repopulate humanity they shockingly realize to be
* In "The Last of the Meheecans", Stan gave us: "... so then the Pope says, maybe you should go check the toilet!" Later on, Butters follows this up with: "...and then the fireman says, that won't even fit in my scrotum!"
* In "The Last of the Red Hat Mamas", Homer gets in trouble at an Easter egg hunt when he tries to steal eggs from kids' baskets to please Maggie. In 2016, a PEZ-sponsored egg hunt descended into chaos with reports of parents stealing eggs from other children.
* In the last one, someone tries to kill their friend, but doesn't manage to do it before the Purge ends. The two have then an awkward confrontation,
* In the last one, the little girl willingly gives up her body to her completely gone sister, in a sad case of a (
* In "The Last Page" by Anthony Huso, we have a solvitriol bomb. Its heart contains a soul split in half, with each piece kept in a separate bottle. The bomb's mechanism keeps them at distance because if they get closer to each other than a sixteenth of an inch, the attracting force grows so big that it literally rips the souls out of people in range.
* In the last page of the entire series, a small picture is shown on the side of the page that depicts a small girl is shown between two unknown figures, implying that not only Miu and Kenichi started dating, but eventually married.
* In the last panel of page, Elon grabs and pulls Myari's ear quite hard because he's angry at her/worried about her, and has finally found where she was hiding.
* In "The Last Problem", Twilight sings that she "used to wonder what friendship could be" during the final song of the series, "The Magic of Friendship Grows". The accompanying sequence also counts in a roundabout way: it begins with Twilight meeting up with her friends, shows what all of Equestria's residents do throughout the day, gives the Mane Six time to show off their interests, and ends on a picture of all of them together.

* In "The Last Ride of Bonnie and Clyde", Lucy and Wyatt go undercover as a fellow bank-robbing couple, and even kiss to make it believable.
* in the last room where someone has a flashlight taped to a shotgun - which overloads the goggles.
* In the last round of group matches during the 2002-03 Champions League first group stage, Newcastle United, having led Feyenoord 2-0 at one point, had been pegged back to 2-2. With Dynamo Kyiv trailing 1-2 to Juventus in the other match, the winner between Newcastle and Feyenoord would progress to the second group stage; if it was a draw Dynamo would progress instead. In the first minute of injury time, Craig Bellamy scored the winner to send Newcastle through to the next round. To date, Newcastle United are alongside Atalanta BC the only team in Champions League/European Cup history to lose their first three matches in a group stage and still progress to the next round.
* In "The Last Round-up", Applejack's inability to win a single blue ribbon or earn any prize money for Ponyville breaks her so hard that she can't face returning to Ponyville since she feels she has let everyone down. Her friends reassure her that they care for her no matter what.
* In "The Last Roundup", one of the pictures the other characters use while trying to find Applejack is based off a different concept sketch of her.
* In "The Last Roundup", she causes unintentional damage to the town hall, which sets the whole plot in motion.
* In "The Last Roundup," there's a largely filler scene in which a perennial
* In the last scene, her retort to Raven reveals that she's lost control of the battle and is about to be defeated as a result of not paying attention to an enemy whose presence she should not have forgotten.
* In the last scene of "Cat Fight" Meg moves away to Japan to live with a Japanese family. The entire scene is rendered with an anime look.
* In the last scene of episode 3, we're introduced to swordfighting instructor Syrio Forel, who's essentially played as a Spanish fop (albeit one who's also a
* In the last scene, Otto the Autopilot turns his head to face the audience and salutes. A short time later, after gets an inflatable female companion he turns his head to the audience again and winks.
* In the last scene, the hero realizes he's still a virgin because he always panicked and subconsciously caused girls to overlook him. He realizes he can use the powers in ... other ways now.
* In the last season, after Lorelai has "serenaded" Luke with the Karaoke song "I Will Always Love You", the whole town is talking about it. Luke's dippy sister Liz urges him to respond to Lorelai, saying: "It's a classic love song! It's classic Cindy Lauper!" Luke replies: "Whitney Houston!" Liz: "Whatever!" when the song is actually by Dolly Parton. (However, being super-music-geeks, the writers make sure to name-check Dolly Parton when Lorelai goes on stage to sing the song: Lane says to Rory: "I didn't know your mother was a Whitney Houston fan", and Rory replies, "I think it's Dolly-inspired, actually". And Lorelai does sing the song more in Dolly Parton's rhythm and emphasis.)
* In the last season, it's revealed that Rossi and Strauss were having an office romance.
* In the last season, series villain Gul Dukat assumes the identity of the dead Bajoran Anjohl Tennan in order to exploit a past connection with Kai Winn.
* In the last seasons, the sisters increasingly check out the library of the magic school instead, which seems to be much more comprehensive.
* in the last seconds of the final match. For people who don't understand football, he was basically playing in one of the lowest professional divisions in England, had an otherwise unremarkable career as a player, and after having his contract expire, retired to become an office worker.
* In the last series, a very drawn-out version of their typical "vox pops" scenes had a woman played by Laurie threatening to write "a very stiff letter... on cardboard."

* In the last several years, there's been a campaign where a character is about to leave the house and starts having a hallucination giving the message "You are way too high to drive." Notable in that the message is
* In the last several years, up to 47 percent of injuries reported by astronauts have been hand injuries, specifically, their fingernails fall off. This is because of the way the glove is designed.
* In "The Last Supper," Abbi carries Ilana out of the restaurant where they've been eating after a
* In "The Last Temptation of Homer", an attractive redhead named Mindy begins working at the nuclear power plant alongside Homer. Sexual tension ensues, especially during one scene where they share an elevator:
* In "The Last Temptation of Homer": Homer is attracted to a sexy female co-worker; back at home he tries his best to not think about cheating on his wife. When he tries to distract himself with watching TV, he cycles though several channels about sex and cheating—first a news special about the affairs of various notable Presidents, then a nature documentary about a fly which has thousands of sex partners and suffers no guilt, and then a program where the only words Homer hears upon changing the channel are "Just do it!" (It's a ringworm PSA.)
* In "The Last Temptation Of Homer", Homer is trapped in an elevator with his co-worker Mindy: "Looks like we'll be going down together—oop—I mean... getting off togethe—I mean... I'll just push the button for the stimulator—I mean elevator!"
* In "The Last Temptation of Homer", this is also done, this time with
* In "The Last Traction Hero", Homer sees an advertisement for an attorney named Maxwell Flich, whose phone number is "
* In the last true battle of the war, the remnants of the rebels engage the loyalist army in a last huge, hopeless charge once the latter reaches Cloudsdale, rather than face the humiliation of defeat. The last surviving rebel leader,
* In the last two cases, a more innocuous reason for the colors is because they are the Sarghress clan colors, along with this trope.
* In the last verse of the same song, the narrator insisted that killing his three children doesn't really bother him at all.
* In the last year of WCW, they were fond of having heels throw funerals for faces who lost retirement/get fired matches, complete with coffin and backhanded eulogies.
* In the late 1880's the Louisville Colonels became the doormats they would be throughout the 1890's (which contributed to the team being contracted away after the 1899 season). However there was a bright spot in 1890, when they won the American Association pennant (with 88 wins and 44 losses, and the second-place Columbus Solons were ten games behind at 79-55) and tied the World Series with the Brooklyn Bridegrooms
* In the late 18th century, Italian scientist Luigi Galvani used electricity to make a dead frog twitch. We now know that he had accidentally invented the battery, but some scientists of the time (including Galvani himself, by the way) thought that he had unlocked some sort of mysterious life force. In the following years, the "galvanists" used electricity to perform various macabre experiments on dead animals and even human corpses. It should come as no surprise that it was around this time that
* In the late 1930s, a trend created by Italian surrealist couturier
* In the late 1930s up to the onset of war, inspired by the 1936 Berlin Olympics, Alpine-themed stuff like alphorns, lederhosen, full-skirted dirndls, yodeling, and skiing came into fashion.
* In the late 1940s Harry Corbett used to play the piano in a band. Then he started going deaf (he was eventually cured by an operation). He took up conjuring instead, and before long he started using a teddy bear
* In the late 1950s and early 1960s, the previously secretive world of advertising agencies suddenly became the focus of immense cultural interest. The inner workings of Madison Avenue became the fodder for books, plays, TV shows, and movies (

* In the late 1960s, the "Lenticular Reentry Vehicle" was a proposed manned version. It was essentially a large nuclear-powered
* In the late 1960s, there was a brief wave of Japanophilia in the United States, owing to the popularity of
* In the late 1960s through the 1970s there were "The Clones" Mike Kelly and Pat Kelly. The two men
* In the late 1970s and early 1980s, American and Italian authorities were investigating the business failures of prominent banker
* In the late 1970s and early 1980s, at the height of a rise in the popularity of horror fiction in Britain, Richard Lewis wrote a two-book series of novels. In
* In the late 1970s and early 1980s, mathematician Douglas Lenat created the artificial intelligence software "
* In the late-1970s, Westinghouse created the Home Theater Network (HTN), which was intended to be a family-friendly alternative to all other pay networks. The channel bought the rights to current movies that didn't carry an R or X rating. The service never truly took off and was discontinued in 1987. It ultimately became a footnote in American television history because it carried travelogue interstitials branded as "The Travel Channel"; said brand was purchased by the
* In the late 1980s and early 1990s, Nick Busick (a state law enforcement officer from Georgia) used a "bully"
* In the late 1980's and early 90's there was a humorous poster in many offices. It showed a man in his office with computers and the caption was "The future will never be entirely paperless." If you look past the man you can see the bathroom with the toilet paper clearly visible.
* In the late 1980s, BMW was working on the idea of a V16-powered car. There even were a few prototypes of a 6.6 V16 7-Series built, based on the 750i and nicknamed "766i" or "Goldfish", but such an engine ended up being too complicated for a production car.
* In the late 1980s, Bob Probert and Joey Kocur of the Red Wings were sometimes referred to as "the Bruise Brothers".
* In the late 1980s, in the largest organized crime trial in U.S. history, low-level mobster Jackie DiNorscio decided to stand trial rather than rat out other members of the
* In the late-1980s, Steve Engelhart tried to spruce things up with the 'NEW' Fantastic Four, with Reed and Sue
* In the late 1980s, there was an adventure series called "Steele", whose lead, SWAT cop Donovan Steele, was rebuilt into a cyborg with a bit of a twist on the concept: he looked normal, but his damaged brain had been replaced with an
* In the late 1980s, there were a couple of TV commercials for Australian-made Violet Crumble chocolate honeycomb bars, with the tagline, "Nothing else matters". One featured a 20-something son berating his father who ignores him by biting into a Violet Crumble bar, the other with the roles reversed.
* In the late 1980s up to about 2000, many of the top women wrestlers from the continental United States Of America, such as Reggie Bennett, Bionic J, and Debbie Malenko were not known to fans in the continental USA because so many wrestled almost exclusively outside of it, often in Japan, Mexico or a territory such as Puerto Rico. It didn't help that the
* In the late 1990s and early 2000s, the minimum amount of episodes a children's TV show could have was now 40 (or in some cases, 39). Usually after those 39-40 episodes, the show would be cancelled. Examples of this include
* In the late 1990s, Philippine government officials declared actress
* In the late 1990s, the Russian government proposed a sort of "peaceful" Kill Sat — a network of mirror satellites that would redirect sunlight onto subpolar regions (
* In the late 19th and early 20th centuries, before modern theories of plate tectonics ironed out their shortcomings, syncline theory looked more viable. It postulates large chunks of land randomly going up or down, thus any dry land may sink and become a sea bottom, and sea floor may rise. "Lost continents" featured prominently in scientific speculation to explain, for example, the presence of similar species and fossils in places separated by thousands miles of ocean or desert, like lemurs in both Madagascar and India. Naturally, anthropologists and linguists also jumped on board, using "land bridges" to explain human migration and so forth. Eventually people started to take the idea to its "logical" conclusion and suggested that whole, and potentially advanced civilizations might have once existed on these sunken lands, and so, like other myths, the legend of Atlantis maybe contained a kernel of truth to it. This idea was hugely popular in the early part of the 20th century, not just with crackpot mystics but with the population at large.

* In the late 19th century, a sculptor named Benjamin Waterhouse Hawkins built massive statues of what the current science thought dinosaurs looked like, as they had only been recently discovered and rarely in complete skeletons, most of which run contrary to modern science's view. His most famous mistake was the
* In the late 19th century the Netherlands faced a big problem with butter. A lot of manufacturers were selling products of very low quality which couldn't pass for butter if you tried, therefore the Dutch government enacted the "butter law" specifying what exactly goes into butter. Skipping ahead to 1948 when Calvé tries to put peanut butter on the market, they're forced to rename the spread to peanut
* In the late 19th century, the thought of annexation by the US was a huge issue to Canadians.
* In the late 2000s, Disney decided to revamp Epcot's World Showcase pavilion and bring more Disney characters to what was primarily a permanent world's fair. The first addition of
* In the late 2000s, there was a country group called KingBilly, which got some exposure on
* In the late 2010s, Apple also started doing this, promoting their hardware and software as a more privacy-focused alternative to similar offerings from
* In the late 2010s, former CN president Christina Miller was frequently accused by fans of enforcing this trope. Cartoon Network's programming had come to strictly emphasize comedies aimed towards younger children and heavily downplayed any content for teens and young adults. Many of these accusations, however, are exaggerated at best or outright unfounded at worst, and are simply the result of Miller being
* In the late 2010s, voice actor Sidney Lilla sued almost every distributor, dubbing studio and TV channel he could find. His lawsuits forced the distributors to use a pre-existing dub, or make a new redub.
* In the late 50s and early 60s, there was a belief among certain scientists that the sudden appearance of a number of children of high intelligence was caused by the recent appearance of Strontium-90 from nuclear testing, which led to a fringe belief that humanity was undergoing an evolutionary leap. This may well have been the inspiration for the
* In the late 60s/early 70s, a recording outfit put out compilations of covers from an ensemble calling themselves the Sound Effects. Each cut was performed to sound like its original artist without actually doing so. The more discriminating buying public weren't fooled and this enterprise folded quickly.
* In the late 70's and early 80's, Knoxville, TN television was graced by commercials for "Mad" Jack Fielden's Furniture Warehouse Outlet. His first commercial was relatively straightforward, just stating they have low prices, and then Mad Jack added, "sometimes we have damaged furniture." His sidekick replied "but Mad Jack we don't have any damaged furniture." He then pulled out a baseball bat, smashed a mirror, and said "we do now!" He also got in legal hot water for hiring a "human fly" to climb the tallest building it town as a publicity stunt.
* In the late '80s, a certain priest in Louisiana named Gilbert Gauthe was busted for molesting dozens upon dozens of children. Over the next few decades, it became increasingly clear that he was only the first case of a real-life
* In the late 80s and early 90s Cliff Robertson did a series of ads for AT&T. One featured frustrated former Ma Bell customers dealing with one of the competition's Operators, whose snide "Well, you're not dealing with AT&T anymore!" became something of a meme/

* In the late '80s, Duracell ran a commercial showing their battery outlasting several competitors at powering a toy. Competitor-brand Energizer realized that their battery wasn't included in the competition, and launched a
* In the late '90s, an attempt was made to develop a TV series for the Fox network based on
* In the late 90s/early millennium, John Biles would be running about a dozen stories at once. Most of them crossovers within
* In the late 90s there was a big EarthLink ad campaign aimed at luring AOL users to their service. One radio commercial had a disgruntled AOL user desperately calling EarthLink to switch. When the EarthLink rep told her that they would automatically notify everyone on her Buddy List of her new email address once she switched, the lady shrieked "They're not my buddies! They're just a bunch of freaks who instant-messaged their way into my life!" Even in the attitude-filled 90s, insulting your would-be customers then asking them to switch to your product was an odd marketing strategy.
* In the late 90s there were three supernatural-themed television shows that were reluctantly greenlit by producers who didn't think the sci-fi and fantasy elements were a good sell. The shows?
* In the late 90s, this seemed to be the reverse case for Blizzard, with all their efforts directed towards Starcraft + Expansions, and Diablo 2 + Expansions. Other than an upgraded re-release of
* In the late 90s WCW went through the motions of starting a woman's division, and they hired a female wrestler named Dee Dee Venturi
* In the late '90s when females weren't in WWE that much, those who were usually came in because they were dating an existing male star -
* In "The Late Captain Pierce", Hawkeye gets an opportunity to leave when the Army declares him officially dead. He nearly does so, but at the last minute changes his mind. (Although, to be fair, this is depicted as owing to Hawkeye's sense of duty as a physician rather than any newly-discovered affection for his surroundings.) And the fact that the army would have charged him with desertion, once they got their paperwork straightened out, had nothing to do with it.
* In the late fifties through the sixties there was a professional wrestler known as Sweet Georgia Brown, a name which would be taken up by another woman after she died in 1989 then another USWA wrestler in the nineties after
* In the late Irish comedian Dave Allen's sketch/stand-up show, he had a recurring sketch with apparently solemn funerals descending into farce, mostly ending in a race to the graveyard.
* In the late issues, a number of characters that Penders created have been removed or gone missing while Archie and Penders work out some legal issues over the rights to said characters, causing numerous edits in varying degrees of severity. For all the flak Penders has gotten, Archie's legal team was behind their removal. Technically there wasn't anything wrong in using them, but said legal team didn't want to risk fanning the flames.
* In "The Late Philip J. Fry," after Fry disappears in time and is thought to be dead along with Bender and Farnsworth, a much older Leela eventually marries
* In "The Late Philip J. Fry", Bender squashing the first fish to crawl out of the ocean and the Professor shooting Hitler (and in the second go around, Eleanor Roosevelt), seem to have no effect on the timeline.
* In "The Late Phillip J. Fry", after Farnsworth, Bender, and Fry have reached the end of the universe, a second Big Bang creates a universe identical to the last, giving the trio a chance to go home. And giving Farnsworth a chance to shoot Hitler. And once they reach their time, Farnsworth accidentally slips on the controls, forcing them to go all the way back around again. This time around, Farnsworth misses Hitler and hits Eleanor Roosevelt instead.
* In "The Late Phillip J. Fry", another future version of Fry is crushed to death by a time machine.
* In "The Late Phillip J. Fry" a time machine that can only go forward in time takes Fry, Bender, and the Professor further and further into the future, until the universe they knew dies out and a new universe, completely identical to the old one, comes into being. They consider this a completely acceptable substitute for the real thing. This is actually an inversion, since it portrays the original universe as expendable and the original Leela was shown missing Fry and being miserable for the rest of her life, but Fry isn't particularly concerned because he just continues off with the new identical Leela in the new universe. It's also partially played straight in the Fry, Bender, and the Professor kill their counterparts upon arriving in the new universe and aren't particularly concerned (though given the previously established paradox rule that duplicates cannot co-exist, this may have been inevitable).

* In "The Late Phillip J. Fry" , Professor Farnsworth creates a time machine that can only go forward in time. The Professor, Bender, and Fry go forward in time through several different periods. Eventually they reach one where the Earth is populated by gorgeous young women. They offer to fix the boys' time machine so they can get back to the right time period...AFTER they have a fertility banquet to honor their visitors since men are very rare in their society, so "even very old and stupid males are prized". Bender, being the odd one out and angry that the other two didn't want to stay in a previous time period full of killer robots,
* In the later bits of the series, the Persian emperor cheerfully allows troublesome and arrogant members of the Persian nobility to partake in cavalry charges against dug-in enemy troops armed with rifles.
* In the later books, a few other Death Eaters accomplish this. However, they basically cheated since the Dementors switched sides and thus
* In the later books in the series, there's a massive sense of this between Cathy's three children, as she sometimes appears much fonder of eldest child Jory and adopted daughter Cindy than of her troubled middle child Bart. She does love Bart, however, and the sense of favoritism has a lot to do with his view of things, not necessarily how they actually are.
* In the later books, it is revealed Voldemort acquired Giants for his army. In this universe, Giants are a sentient species slightly less intelligent compared to humans, but have the power to make up for it.
* In the later days of Middle-Earth, Aragorn, especially while wielding Anduril, is recognised as an example.
* In the later episode "Frightningale", Marinette and Adrien end up playing their superhero selves in a music video. While everyone else praises the costumes (which actually were not their real magic suits, but were so similar that both removed their masks) and some acknowledge a resemblance, they decide that the pair's awkward mannerisms make them nothing like Ladybug and Cat Noir. In this case, it was self-invoked so as to protect their secret identities.
* In the later episode "Law & Disorder" (aired a season later), Bobby can be seen dumping a whole box of Safe into the washing machine. (He was trying to wash his good suit after dirtying it while trespassing in an abandoned house to rescue a classmate's kitten.)
* In the later episode "Rock the Cradle", Mac has to unjam the landing gear on a plane as Jack Dalton is bringing it in for a landing. He succeeds, but falls out the plane (he is wearing a parachute).
* In the later episode "The Fairy Godparents Job", Parker talks Hardison through deactivating a security system through her earpiece while talking to the FBI agent that is infatuated with her at the same time. This was also while Hardison and Parker were playing the role of undercover FBI agents.
* In the later Golden Age comics the Amazons of Paradise Island had a small space worthy fleet which took off like airplanes and looked like airplanes which somewhat resembled swans.
* In the later half of the series, he's appointed Lord of Harrenhal and Lord Paramount of the Riverlands and leaves King's Landing. His immediate successors range from middling to downright incompetent, leading Hands and regents alike to think, "Gods, I wish Baelish were back here; he would know what to do." Little do they know that Littlefinger

* In the later novels, Detritus the troll becomes the drill sergeant in charge of training new troops, also notable because Detritus is
* In the later novels, the terrorist actions of the fundamentalist "deep dwarfs" (who
* In the later Oz sequels, this goes from being specifically the Wicked Witch of the West's weakness to a weakness that ALL witches have in that universe. The witch Mombi is eventually executed via this method in
* In the later part of season 5, Dean hunts down Death so he can kill him and take his ring. When he finally meets the Grim Reaper, it turns out that
* In the later part of the Eubanks era if both contestants won one game each, the "tiebreaker round" went from 3 questions to just 1 Sudden Death one; both contestants then got to see their base card but only the one who won the question got to determine who would play. The same above rules applied.
* In the later parts of the UC timeline, mobile suit technology is refined to the point where the suits can be built 20-30% smaller and lighter without sacrificing power or armor. And so Bandai gets to market smaller and cheaper models in the same scales, grades, and price points as before.
* In the later periods of WWII, it finally reached a point where German POWs sent to America experienced a better standard of living than their free comrades back on the front (and in the rest of Germany).
* In the later seasons, many of the smaller themes have actually been achieved in some way - albeit happening in sometimes almost literal
* In the later seasons, people are using tranq darts all the time and they often knock the victim out in less then a second, and occasionally cause the victim to throw themselves away from the dart.
* In the later seasons Tyr switches sides and is replaced on the crew by Telemachus Rhade, another Nietzschean who is somewhat ashamed of his species.
* In the later seasons we also meet Sid and Nancy, a pair of mischievous Diictodon (think reptilian gopher with beak and tusks) who were kept by Connor after their home anomaly closed. Despite being less important as characters, they seem to serve more purpose, as in one episode Sid escapes into the ARC and becomes trapped in a lab containing the
* In the later seasons we're introduced to Kelly's three closest friends that rival her in promiscuity,
* In the later series, humanity itself has assumed the trope. The alien antagonists don't challenge the entire UN Spacey: just isolated migrant fleets or individual clusters of star systems at most:
* In the later three-annual-crossover "Assault on Armor City", it is revealed (in retcon, natch) that DeWitt is the son of an unrecognized engineering genius, whose designs — DeWitt believes — were stolen by Stark and formed the basis for Iron Man, while the true inventor died 'a broken and penniless man'. It's kind of a bum move which pulls the sting out of the original story.
* In "The Late Shaft", actress Ellie Monroe calls Rick up after Bobby Mann is murdered. Rick tells Beckett that she thought he might like to get together for some "comforting". Beckett responds:
* In the late spring of 2019, a viral Facebook event titled "Storm Area 51, They Can't Stop All of Us" was created, garnering the attention of hundreds of thousands of people, and even being reported by the mainstream media. It end up being a night gathering party overseen by the National Guard itself, while there are also reports that a few people were actually sneaking into Area 51 and arrested for their troubles.
* In the latest film we meet the "Togabito" (defilers), who are the humanoid denizens of Hell.
* In the latest phase, the clip for "Stylo" is almost entirely live-action with just three of the Gorillaz in quasi-realistic 3D
* In the Latin American dub, Alicia Velez, who plays Lena, is the daughter of Cony Madera, who plays Mrs. Beakley.
* In the Latin-American Spanish dub, Carla Castañeda voices Twilight Sparkle while her real-life parents,

* In the Latin Spanish dub, Kyle and Cartman were originally voiced by Vivian Ruiz for seasons 1 and 2. Ruiz quit the series after season 2 because Cartman's voice was exceedingly difficult on her. She was replaced by Patricia Azan in season 3 and beyond, as well as the redubs of seasons 1-2.
* In the latter, a woman had been sent away "to study" due to an unmarried pregnancy.
* In the latter, children born of normal Homo-sapien parents turn out to have mutated into Homo-Diclonii and are immediately recognizable by their horn-like appendages on their head. The super-powers are inherent and awaken
* In the latter part of her career she starred in a string of B-horror movies because she needed the money, lamenting that they were a far cry from the days when she made thousands a week as an in-demand actress. As Neil Deagle of
* In the latter part of season one and early season two, the cuts were to
* In the latter, she gives up the chance to become rich in order to help Arnold save their neighborhood.
* In the latter, the coffee house Crossroads is located on the last planet orbiting the last star, which goes out.
* In the "Laurens Interlude" number, Lafayette and Mulligan react mutely to the news of Laurens' death. Lafayette falls to his knees and weeps. Mulligan takes a pull from a hip flask.
* In "The Laws of Gods and Men", he completely snaps after Shae's betrayal, where the abuse and humiliation he's been through his whole life reaches its tipping point and in a rage calls out the entire court for being ungrateful for all he did for them as acting Hand of the King, wishing that he had just let Stannis kill all of them.
* In "The Lay of Leithian" Thingol comes off quite like this trope, as he tries
* In "The Lazarus Experiment", the Doctor argues against the life-extension researcher who gets turned into the
* In the Lazy Game Review's review of bad PC box art, the camera zooms into the mouth of the face on the cover of
* In the leadup to a 2020 playoff game between the Pittsburgh Steelers and the Cleveland Browns, Steelers receiver JuJu Smith-Schuster shrugged off the idea that the Browns team he was facing (the most successful Browns team in decades) was different or something to be concerned about, saying, "They're still the same Browns teams I play every year...at the end of the day, I don't know, the Browns is the Browns." After the Browns
* In the lead up to Shine's second Nova Tournament Notorious Nadi said she was a fan of
* In the lead up to Super Bowl XXVIII, the Buffalo Bills had planned on surprising the Dallas Cowboys by implementing the shuffle pass to their offense to catch Dallas off guard. However, quarterback Jim Kelly happened to be practicing the pass at the same time a local news broadcast was filming footage to use for their evening news report. Cowboys head coach Jimmy Johnson watch the report on TV and saw the tape of Kelly practicing, alerting him to the plan. The Cowboys proceeded to practice defending the play and managed to completely stop it every time Buffalo tried it en route to a 30-13 victory.
* In the league of animals, Boxer dogs, English bulldogs, and other large jowled dog breeds look like frowning is their basic look.
* In the LegendaryFrog Flash video "All Your Pie", while the video's protagonist tries not to think about the pie sitting next to him, a radio news report goes on about an explosion at "the local pie factory downtown" and adds that according to "studies", eating a pie a day will give you a 10% increase... of YUMMY.
* In the legendary "Hell and High Water" episode, as Doug and Mark try to revive the nearly-drowned, hypothermic boy whom Doug rescued from a storm drain, desk clerk Jerry decides this is the perfect time to barge into the trauma room and tell them that the press is demanding answers regarding the boy's condition. Mark basically name-drops this trope by snapping, "Yeah, well, we're a little busy in here!"
* In the legend of Damon and Pythias, Pythias returns for his own execution just in time to save Damon, who had volunteered to act as a hostage for him.

* In the legend of True Thomas, also known as Thomas the Rhymer, the hero must serve in the Fairy Queen's realm for seven years. When he comes back out to his side of the veil, everyone he ever knew is long dead.
* In "The Legend", season 1, the team is set to assassinate Martin Bohrmann, who's been living in South America. Briggs infiltrates Bohrmann's bedroom -and discovers it isn't that simple. They have to change the plan on a dime.
* In the legends of Alexander the Great, it's often said that the Amazon Queen Thalestris invited him on a 'state visit' solely to get it on with him. It doesn't mention exactly who or where the Amazons are, unfortunately...
* In the Legion's "threeboot" continuity, Star Boy is a black Human Alien from the planet Xanthu who's just one of the gang, though his previous incarnations in the older continuities were white. Atom Girl/Shrinking Violet, another human-looking alien from the planet Imsk, also has vaguely Asian features.
* In the Lego DC Super Hero Girls film "Brain Drain", at one point, Supergirl has to inhale a room full of smoke-bomb vapors so the team can pursue Bumblebee. She then makes the mistake of swallowing it. Initially, she seems fine, weakly noting that it wasn't so bad when the others check on her... then she cuts off Batgirl's attempt to lead the girls after Bumblebee with an
* In "The Lemonade Stand", Doofenshmirtz's latest get rich quick scheme is to use paper airplanes to give people paper cuts so he can sell them bandages. The paper is somehow strong enough to cut the thumb on Phineas and Ferb's lemonade-making robot, which shuts down when it gets lemon juice in the wound.
* In the Leo Sayer episode, Kermit comments that they don't often get good rock (music) on the show, only to have an actual rock turn up to complain. When Kermit says they've been taking them for
* In "The Leprechaun-Artist", three teenage boys named Buddy, Richie and J.P. discover that
* In "The Lesser of Two Evils", the sign which says "Tonight: MISS UNIVERSE PAGEANT" a moment later turns into "Tomorrow: MISS PARALLEL UNIVERSE PAGEANT".
* In the level "Assault on the Control Room", in the last quarter of the level, you encounter a group of Covenant Grunts, Jackals, and Elites. One of the Elites is piloting a Banshee, a flying vehicle. However, until they see you, they aren't doing anything in particular. One well-aimed shot with a plasma pistol, and you can take out the pilot of the Banshee, and wreck havoc on all Covenant forces between you and the final room. Other methods include either hanging on to your sniper rifle so you can kill the pilot before he hops in (you can even kill the pilot of the second Banshee further down the bridge), or using a rocket launcher to flip the Banshee over so he can't get in it.
* In the Leverly arc Sabo (a Revoutionary) also diguises himself as an Noble's amoured guard, ironically acting as bodyguard to his own despicbale brother Stelly.
* In the Leviathan DLC, after you get back from the diving expedition, whoever your love interest is (if they're on the ship) will tell you how worried they were about you, and it's all very fuzzy. And then there's
* In the Lian Yu flashbacks, Oliver Queen is captured only to find Sara Lance, whom he assumed drowned during the sinking of the Queen's Gambit the year before, is still alive and working for his captors. She invokes this trope, telling Oliver to not reveal his real name because they'll be killed if anyone realises they know each other. Subverted when it turns out Sara has already told them who he is and she's just playing along to get Oliver to reveal further information.
* In "The Library", after Ellie Pendleton admits that she has been altering reality by changing the contents of the books in the library, Gloria returns everything to normal.
* In the licensed Elite Dangerous Roleplaying Game, there's a man-portable Plasma Accelerator. They're designed to kill tanks (being the setting equivalent of anti-tank rocket launchers), take two actions to set up (because they're tripod mounted), and the fluff suggests a minimum safe firing distance of
* In the licensed games based on the films, Bruce also serves as the
* In "The Lie of the Land", it's used to signify the mind-control the Monks use to keep the population under wraps.

* In the Life arc, Diamond and Il the Imp have been turned into cats. This time, the smell of Fishface the
* In the Life (June 1992 - December 2012); the longest-running LGBT newsmagazine
* In the Life of Chris Gaines' "Hard Luck Woman", but this was quickly forgotten due to it being a one-off from a now obscure covers album.
* In the Life of Chris Gaines under the fictional identity of Chris Gaines, an Australian rocker. Brooks originally planned to play Gaines in a film, which never materialized, so fans simply thought he'd lost his mind.
* In the Life of Chris Gaines, which Garth produced (Ty was formerly a guitarist in Garth's road band).
* In the Light arc, the first victim of that murderer doesn't match the profile of the subsequent victims. After some investigation, the Shadow concludes that he must have known something about the Light that she didn't want to get out.
* In "The Light Brigade", the Chief Weapons Officer was the only survivor of the
* In "The Light Brigade" the titular human warship is hit by two nukes.
* In the "Lighter Side Of" feature of Mad Magazine, a teenage girl is jumping around franically, cradling an arm and crying, "It's broken! It's broken!" Her mother is concerned. "What's broken? Her arm? Her wrist? Her finger?" "Keep going," sighs the father. Yes, she
* in the lightning flash that followed during the course of a thunderstorm.
* In the light novel and the anime adaptation, Yurishia acts the part of a
* In the light novels, he gets his own series as it is confirmed that he survived, though not unscathed. In
* In the light novel version of the Angel Fall arc, Kaori Kanzaki forces Touma Kamijou to strip and then starts poking and prodding him to check for injuries. Naturally, he gets an erection.
* In the light novel version of the Angel Fall arc, Kaori Kanzaki orders Touma Kamijou to undress to prove that he doesn't have any injuries and thus is telling the truth that he has not performed any magic (if an esper performs magic, they will start bleeding, bruising, etc). When he protests, she gets angry and takes it as a sign that he's trying to hide his injuries, so he reluctantly undresses.
* in the likeness of alien skeletons, the common "Roger-Roger" battle droids are, in fact, comic relief.
* In "The Limey", Beckett and Castle storm a suspect's hotel room and find him just stepping out of the shower in a
* In "The Limit", Jake uses his elastic powers to serve as a guide through a huge, winding maze for Finn and Hot Dog Princesses' knights. But between various traps and the Hot Dog Knights egging him on, Jake wears himself out and is stretched to his absolute limit by the time they reach the center of the maze.
* In the Linear Guild, Thog the half-orc. Because he's a funny, ditzy, childlike blithe spirit, people (
* In the Line of Duty 4: Witness, gets kicked by Rachel and Luk, one at a time, until he ends up falling through a glass barrier to his death.
* In the Line of Duty 4: Witness, when Donnie, Rachel and Luk have to rescue Luk's mother, who was captured alive and suspended from a tall balcony.
* In the Line of Duty III: Force of the Dragon and murderers who takes pleasure in shooting at everything they see, with several drawn-out rampage scenes where they killed more than 50 Hong Kong policemen throughout the film.
* In the Line of Duty with the Tollan diplomat Narim, with Sam telling him she's holding off on dating until she's more sure whether she's feeling things herself or because of Jolinar.
* In the Line of Fire, as a part of the Treasury Department the Secret Service also handles financial fraud issues, as well as the protection service that's the focus of most of the film.
* In the Line of Fire: Clint Eastwood is 24 years Renee Russo's senior. Their characters get involved.
* In the Line of Fire: Clint Eastwood's character figures out the meaning of a word with seven letters after a chance remark by a character played by Joshua Malina.

* In the Line of Fire, in that the bad guy stays on the line for quite a long time. The trace goes through, but to the wrong location, which was all planned by said bad guy.
* In the Line of Fire: Leary becomes obsessed with Horrigan on account of his history as one of President Kennedy's bodyguards, regularly calling him to talk about his personal philosophies and motives, and leaving him clues so he can figure out when and how Leary plans to kill the new President.
* In the Line of Fire, Leary has Frank at gunpoint in a glass elevator. Frank keeps telling him to go ahead and shoot — but he's really speaking into a communicator concealed in his hand, to the secret service snipers, which Leary doesn't realize until Frank tells the snipers to "Aim high" (he's kneeling while Leary's standing).
* In the Line of Fire's character is ordered by a gang of counterfeiters to kill his young partner. Naturally, the gun is unloaded. Later his partner nervously says, "You knew the gun was unloaded, right? You could tell from the weight of the gun?" Eastwood responds, "Well, there may have been one bullet (in the chamber)."
* In the Line of Fire, though they're actually not chasing anyone, just rapidly evacuating the President after an assassination attempt.
* In the Line of Fire United States. Only in America can you get to go to President's house. So when I see this, these killing things (the numerous paraphernalia indicating the man's dastardly plan) I get scared. I call police." It's not clear where she's from originally, but her accent is vaguely Eastern European, and her age would indicate that she grew up during a severely repressive communist regime.
* In the linked stories "Hideaway," "Minla's Flowers" and "Merlin's Gun" by
* In "The Lion has Phones", a montage shows the Home Guard platoon disguising themselves as haystacks, garbage cans, and gravestones for their camouflage training. Then when we see a row of milk churns lined up like the platoon, who actually turn out to be hiding behind a fake wall attached to a nearby barn.
* In "The Listening Walk," Miss Spider tells Wiggle, Squirt, Dragon and Bounce that the Firefly Ballet is about to start. Bounce shouts "Ballet! Ballet! Ballet!", then asks what a ballet is.
* In the literal video version of Bonnie Tyler's "Total Eclipse of the Heart", the "Bonnie Tyler" character has to go to the bathroom during the bridge, and one of the gymnasts kicks the door open for her. Only it's not the bathroom; she ends up in a room with a bunch of "blind possessed choir boys".
* In the "Little Army" prequel manga, Miho, accompanied by her friends, asks her mother Shiho whether her sister Maho needed to
* In the "Little Brothers" sketch, Eli Manning gives a kid a wedgie for bullying his younger brother.
* In "The Little Kicks," Jerry has never broken it to Elaine that she
* In "The Little Runaway", a baby seal escapes from the circus and hides with Jerry, while Tom tries to catch him for the reward.
* In the Little Sister book "Karen's Twin", Terri and Tammy, the twins in Karen's class, start doing this. Unlike the Arnold twins, who are implied to do this on a fairly regular basis, Karen mentions that they don't normally even dress alike, though they start doing so in order to pull this off.
* In "The Little Witch," none of the regulars except for the titular character appear; Minimus is the other regular to appear in "The Secret Library: Olaf And The Tale Of Miss Nettle," which outside the first scene, doesn't take place in Enchancia at all.
* In The Little Wood (A member of the Yogscast) are called "Saplings".
* In The Little Wood breastfeeding a baby, although this was more about the game moving from the source material's more PG content.
* In The Little Wood is known by his fans for generally being upbeat and a good sport but suffered from a breakdown in late 2014 which required him to take time out and drop out of a livestream he was meant to be hosting. He claimed that he had been depressed for some time and in denial about it.
* In The Little Wood, Sparkles* storms out for a few minutes. He came back, granted.

* In the live action adaptation, The Tick converses and attempts to reason with a clogged toilet.
* In the live-action movie adaptation, Saya is a dhampyr born of the ancient (and apparently East Asian) vampire queen and a Japanese warlord/vampire-hunter, who the queen tricked into marriage and later murdered.
* In the live-action movie, in truck mode, Optimus became a conventional tractor (one with a hood) instead of his original cab-over design, to give him enough extra mass to get to 30 feet tall when in robot mode, rather than 25 feet like the other Autobots.
* In the live-action movies he tends to take his jacket off pretty frequently to enhance the effect.
* In the live American version of Monty Python's World Forum sketch, the question about the Eurovision Song Contest is changed to "Jerry Lee Lewis has had over 25 solid gold hits in the U.S. of A. What's the name of the biggest?" Lenin doesn't answer, and so Eric throws the question open. Mao Zedong hits his buzzer and responds "Gleat Barrs of File?", which is the correct answer.
* In the Live Boston Stunt Spectacular show, they prevent Garagos, the forgotten god of war, from
* In "The Lizard Slavers", while Jace is telling Jan about the title creatures one of them turns its head and smiles at the camera as if it were pleased that Jan was talking about it.
* In "The Lizard-Spock Expansion", the guys play Rock-Paper-Scissors-Lizard-Spock to see who gets the last dumpling. They all draw Spock.
* In "The Lizard Whisperer", Ferb gives one to Danville, when his pet chameleon, Steve, goes missing.
* In the localization, several of Soleil's supports with guys became non-romantic. So, if she reaches S-level with guys who aren't the Male Avatar
* In the localization, things are... a bit complicated in regards to Silas - he once had a crush on her and she almost
* In the Local Tongue: Something that sounds cool or mystical, but it just means something boring or negative.
* In the lolcat universe, Ceiling Cat fills the role. He battles to save souls against Basement Cat.
* In the London Dungeon museum, the employees wearing heavy make-up often stand still among the various wax figures, to scare the unsuspecting visitors. All part of the historical experience, of course.
* In the London Singularity, Goetia shows up and effortlessly beats up the heroes, then says that they are so weak that he won't bother to kill them before leaving.
* In the Lonesome Road DLC, ED-E becomes much more emotive, revealing a deeper personality and backstory. He was the prized creation of Dr. Whitley, who fawned over ED-E, but was unfortunate enough to have been created him in the Enclave. ED-E was forcibly upgraded by another Enclave researcher, a process as painful to ED-E as anesthetic-free vivisection to a human. The last straw was when Colonel Autumn, commander of the Enclave, ordered Whitley to destroy the Duraframe Eyebots for use in the Hellfire Armor project. ED-E was forced to flee from the one man he loved to escape death, who was likely killed in the Enclave-Brotherhood of Steel war. Essentially, ED-E's story is both remarkable and tragic.
* In "The Long Bomb", Stan kills a terrorist by melting his face with superheated steam.
* In "The Long Con", Sun hears rustling noises in the grass around her and is relieved when she sees the dog run out of the brush...until someone puts a bag over her head and drags her away.
* In the longer term, the Six-Day War has had a major repercussion on the Arab world's position regarding Palestine. Before the war, the Arab world was relatively united in its support of Palestine, thanks mainly to the efforts of
* In the long-forgotten 1970s live-action Saturday morning comedy series
* In the long form, "what is this i dont even" (sic), additionally, "i'm 12 and what is this" is used in similar fashion.

* In "The Long Haul", Greg remembers being a little kid and not wanting to wear a certain bathing suit, so running off naked.
* In the long-lost cartoon "Jumping Jack Contest" (which can be viewed
* In "The Long Night," almost all of the named characters survive seemingly impossible odds, each fighting off scores of wights and suffering only superficial scrapes and scratches. Given that the episode was one of the last of the series, viewers expecting a character bloodbath were very surprised by how many survived. Carried on to the end of the series, the only characters that died who were related to the Long Night were... The Hound, Jaime and Daenerys.
* In "The Long Rain" (published in 1950), a rocket crashes on Venus, where it rains constantly. The crew must locate a Sun Dome in which they can find shelter, or die.
* In "The Long Road Home", Charles and Mr. Edwards get a job hauling explosives with Henry (played by Lou Gossett, Jr.). In the episode, only one person shows any form of racism against Henry, although later in the episode, Henry is told he can't ride in a passenger car with the other passengers because of his color. It's not clear whether the porter is racist or is just enforcing the rules. The same porter was just as mean to Charles and Mr. Edwards in the beginning of the episode when they tried to ride in the same passenger car, but were railroad employees, not paying customers. In the end of the episode, the one racist has a change of heart and jokingly claims he was kicked out of the passenger car because he was Irish.
* In the long run, averted: Christianity eventually became the dominant religion in Nazareth—and all of the Middle East, for that matter—for a period at least about 300 years (exact dates are hard to come by, but Christianization had largely happened in the region by the end of the 5th century), at which point Islam swept in. Even then, it took at least a century and a half for the Christian lands under Muslim rule to convert (Christians were allowed to live as they pleased as long as they paid a higher tax rate; eventually taxes got too high, and people started converting, mostly to get the lower rate Muslims paid, although some did it for various other economic reasons like the opportunity for advancement through the Muslim-only military and bureaucracy
* In the long run, the show, one of the first to be rated TV-MA, helped break new ground for the kinds of content television in general could show, and was one of the first shows on cable TV with uncensored swearing.
* In the long term, even before the tactics themselves were obsolete, the system was hurting them badly. The regimented lifestyle and men not marrying until relatively late in life meant that they were permanently in a state of population decline; by the time they were conquered they didn't have the men to field a real army. It also hurt that because of the rigid social rules they had, no-one could join the "Spartians", but you
* In the Loop a dubious war. His hawk opponents, on the other hand, have no military experience and are trying to start a war for political reasons.
* In the Loop: All of the British characters in the US, but especially the hapless Simon Foster.
* In the Loop, Armando Ianucci convinced the State Department that his BBC pass was "access all areas". He spent the next three hours taking photographs of the US State Department.
* In the Loop discovers that Toby (Simon Foster's assistant) was the one leaking information to the press, and confronts him; Toby makes a rather half-hearted attempt at denying it...
* In the Loop if he'd killed anyone. The writers turned it into a comedic moment between Gandolfini's character and Malcolm Tucker.
* In the Loop this: Malcolm remembers that the person he's talking to hates hearing swear words:
* In the loosely-based film adaption of the book with the same name,
* In "The Lords of Luck", the first story arc in the revived version of
* In the lore, there are several 'tiers' of Custodian Guards, the most important and reverential of which is to stand on guard beside the Emperor's Throne. Some of these Custodians stand at their post, motionless yet alert, for decades before they are relieved.

* In the lore, the Reunification War is generally seen as this, pitting the 1000+ world-sized Star League, backed with the latest technology from the Terran Hegemony and no Ares Accords holding them back, against the Periphery realms of the Magistracy of Canopus, the Outworlds Alliance and the Taurian Concordat (combined having around 130 worlds, and stuck on opposite sides of the Star League with no ability to form a united front). The war took the Star League 20 years, mostly from having to fight the Taurians inch by inch. The Rim Worlds Republic, also a hypothetical target, averted the trope by
* In the lore, Wager Master is vulnerable to this. The Scholar once got shot of him by offering a deal of "take my Philosopher's Stone and go away". WM stuck with this deal even though the Scholar summoned the Stone back two minutes later.
* In "The Loser from the Earth's Core", a visiting Nergal tosses away a push mower and it lands on Billy's face, shredding it clean off.
* In "The Loser From the Earth's Core", Billy shows Grim and Mandy his frostbitten hands from being out in the cold without mittens because he gave them to Nergal (who didn't wear them, he used them as kindling for a fire made from Billy's game console). One of his fingers then falls off.
* In "The Losing Edge", the entire South Park Little League baseball team
* In "The Lost Fable", Salem and her husband end up fighting to the death when the husband tried to abandon her to continue his
* In "The Lost Heir Job", Parker and Eliot are rushing to the courtroom, pursued by cops, Nate (pretending to be a lawyer) is running out of time and the opposite side's lawyer just showed up.
* In "The Lost Hour", Janet Donner tells Marshall that there was a nice man named Mr. Hoffa in the parallel dimension for a while but that he eventually left.
* In "The Lost Mattress", when Mr. Krabs throws his back out opening the front door to the Krusty Krab and SpongeBob asks if he's okay, he sarcastically retorts "I'm just doubled over in pain, fightin' back tears in me eyes
* In "The Lost Tales", Galen shows Sheridan a vision of a possible future, in which the restored Centauri Republic performs a sneak attack on Earth and lays waste to its surface from orbit. The plot of the episode is an attempt to keep that future from happening.
* In "The Lost Treasure of Griffinstone" we see that Gilda originated from Griffinstone, a Griffin kingdom that has fallen on hard times. The loss of a national treasure caused the griffins to lose their national pride, and their society has crumbled as a result. The griffins have reverted to the greedy and selfish jerks they were before the idol's discovery united them. They won't do
* In "The Lost Treasure of Griffonstone", Pinkie manages to convince a grudging Gilda to go help Rainbow Dash who's stuck down a deep canyon — Gilda claims this doesn't make them friends again. Pinkie duly notes it to Gilda, then waits for her to walk by before turning to the audience and gleefully saying, "Except it doooooes!"
* In "The Lost Treasure of Griffonstone", Rainbow Dash does an imitation of Twilight and her hairstyle briefly straightens up to match her's.
* In "The Lost Treasure of Griffonstone", Rainbow Dash is trapped in an abyss with an injured hoof. She tells Pinkie Pie to toss her a rope, but she throws the entire coil of rope at her without tying the end to anything, making it pointless.
* In "The Lotus-Engine" (1940) space explorers fall into the inadvertent trap of an alien machine which offers them an illusion of paradise. Since they receive neither food nor water while victims of the illusion, they must break its spell quickly if they hope to survive.
* In the "loud consecutive grunts" department, many tennis players are known for this. Especially the female ones.
* In "The Love God", Stan's crappy homemade hot air balloon starts falling apart near the end of the episode, and the sign reading "I HEART KIDS" ends up reading "I _EA_T KIDS".
* In the Lower Yangzi Campaign of August-December 1937 the Imperial Japanese Army aimed not only to win the battle at Shanghai (Aug-Nov) but to secure the economic hub and national capital of Nanjing. The IJA believed that if this could be accomplished, the government of the Republic of China (under the Generalissimo

* In "The Lurking Fear" the monsters terrorizing a small town turn out to be the inbred descendants of a once-prominent family, who retreated underground and began marrying their own once their reputation got too ugly.
* In "The Machine Stops", humans live their entire adult lives in one-person underground cells in which all their needs are met. The global Machine that provides for them keeps the birth and death rates balanced by mandating encounters for procreative sex - the only time humans actually interact in the flesh - and by approving requests for euthanasia from the elderly, sick, or unhappy.
* In the Mack Maloney series Wingman, the main character retrofits his plane, the world's last F-16, to carry 6
* In the made-for-TV cartoon "Bugs Bunny in King Arthur's Court", Bugs is en route to the Georgia Peanut Festival, only to find himself in Camelot (which he initially thinks is Pittsburgh). Following the obligatory left-turn-at-Albuquerque line, and a brief encounter with a dragon, Bugs declares, "Never again, never never again do I take travel hints from
* In the "Madmen & Lovers" arc in one Batman series, this is part of the Joker's origin story. He was a brilliant, psychopathic, criminal. But he was so good it was
* In "The Mad Scientist", Lisa is impressed that the bathroom at the science institute has no lines.
* In the Mage origin, it is quite obvious that the templar Cullen is infatuated with the female player, although if the player tries to proposition him for sex he'll get incredibly nervous and run away. Later in the game, when the templars are overthrown and the tower is taken over by rebellious blood mages, the player will find that Cullen is the
* In "The Mage Towers", each of the four elemental towers has a ballroom-size or better area on the first floor above ground level. This is particularly noticeable in the Water Tower (in which the space is largely flooded and almost empty) and the Air Tower (which has gigantic air shafts that act as elevators, in addition to the oversized area previously mentioned).
* In the Maggody mystery novels, Ruby Bee absolutely refuses to acknowledge that this trope applies to the motel she owns, even though it's an open secret that's what all the passing truckers rent rooms for. The only one who
* In "The Magical Place", the team attacks the Centipede facility where
* In "The Magical Singing Cheeses", Stimpy rips his tongue off a frozen flagpole during a showdown of stupidity with the Village Idiot.
* In "The Magical Turnabout", the culprit was miles away from the crime scene at the time of murder, but you must prove that this alibi is useless since they didn't need to be there for the killing to be done.
* In "The Magic Egg", Papa Smurf sees the three Smurfs who have turned themselves in Papa Smurf and says, "If you're me, then I'm a monkey's uncle", while inadvertently hitting the magic egg — and becomes a monkey!
* In the Magic tournament storyline, Tedd assumes his opponent Larry is gay, based on the reasonable grounds that Larry is blatantly hitting on him. Nope, Tedd's
* In "The Magic Xylophone", Bandit says he's going to have Bingo be the "bum bongos", and he taps her rear like bongos, making her giggle.
* In "The Magnificent Eight", the team travels to an American town in 1871. There, Stein finds out that the young son of a local British barmaid has consumption. Unwilling to stand by and let him die, he has Gideon synthesize a cure for tuberculosis and gives it to the boy, imploring the mother to destroy what's left after he recovers. The boy gets better and tells Stein his name -
* In "The Maias", by Eça de Queiroz, Pedro goes a long way until finding out Maria, the married woman he's been obsessing over, is his long-lost sister (not even half-sister or anything). Not that it matters to him.
* In the main 40K game, you can buy Ork Dakkajet planes an ace pilot, known as a "Flyboss", who has survived more dogfights than he can count (i.e. six or more). This increases his Ballistic Skill rating when shooting at aircraft and skimmers to a princely 3, the same as the average human infantryman.

* In the main campaign, much of the plot is driven by Black Garius of the Arcane Brotherhood in Luskan, Neverwinter's historical rival.
* In the main canon, we have Nanoha herself, sneaking into St. Hilde's to take pictures of Vivio while she's in class during the
* In, the main cast's ACTUAL NAMES are Fighter, Thief, Red Mage, Black Mage, White Mage and Black Belt.
* In the main cast, there's Usopp, who also has creamy brown skin, kinky black hair and drawn lips (which most characters lack), and
* In the main DCU, Jason Blood is portrayed as a former knight bonded to the demon Etrigan, a ruthless beast that would (depending on the iteration) would speak in verse. In
* In "The Main Drain", SpongeBob and Patrick lifted Patrick's rock with balloons to find a legendary drain plug.
* In the main game, either contestant could immediately win the game by spinning three Jokers and correctly answering a question in the category of their choice. This was even worse during the first week or so of the CBS run— spinning three Jokers would just win you the game, no question needed.
* In the main game, Franklin has to steal a prop car from the set of a spy movie. It turns out the onboard weapons are completely functional when he has to defend the truck transporting it and a few other stolen cars.
* In the main game itself, at one point Garrus takes you to a normally prohibited location above the Presidium for no reason other than to have a bottle-shooting contest to finally determine who is the better sniper. At several other points in the game you encounter people just trying to relax and forget for the moment the terror of the war they've found themselves in.
* In the main games, for the most part your opponents will be flying ships entirely different from your own side's, so it's easier to tell who's who. This doesn't, however, help too much if your
* In the main game, Six finds a dumbwaiter in the kitchen and rides in it up to the meat freezer.
* In the main game, some BTL chips can have this effect, as using one floods the chip-addict's brain with a specific emotion at a far higher intensity than real life could ever afford.
* In the main game, the first named Brotherhood of Steel soldier to die during gameplay is appropriately named Reddin.
* In "The Main Ingredient," Mariah Dillard and Shades Alvarez kidnap Bushmaster's uncle Paul "Anansi" Mackintosh, take him to his restaurant Gwen's, and after Mariah's men guns down the patrons present at the restaurant, she douses Anansi in Bushmaster rum and sets him on fire. He defiantly shouts at Mariah that she'll burn in hell as he's being barbecued, and then Mariah shoots him in the head out of annoyance at him taking too long to die. The act is disturbing enough that Shades becomes disillusioned with her and they have a falling out in the next episode.
* In "The Main Man", Professor Hamilton muses about the "great achievements" and "brilliant minds" to be found in civilizations on other worlds. Cut to Lobo in a seedy alien bar letting loose
* In the main plot, Bassanio's friendship with Antonio versus his romantic relationship with Portia. This is an extremely mild case but is often played up for the sake of drama in performance.
* In the main route, Asterion will become close friends with you for this very reason, as you're the first master to ever treat him like a friend.
* In the main route, it's in the best interest for the protagonist to figure out enough loopholes in the system to get Asterion out of the cycle.
* In the main series, as an android Dr. Gero's brain is stored in a glass dome on his head. It's usually covered by his
* In the main series, being able to beat up God, Lucifer, or in some games, both. This is the basic premise known by most outsiders, though it's generally more complicated than that. Atlus, picking up on this, marketed
* In the main series, Doofenshmirtz hates his younger brother Roger for being the favorite of their mother while Doof was subjected to one of the most absurd

* In the main series, during Shido and Tohka's first date, they win a ticket for a free night at a love hotel called the Dream Park. Tohka, who is vastly ignorant of human society, innocently tries to enter, but Shido gets really embarrassed, points out they are too young to go to such a place, and drags her away.
* In the main series, Hiashi Hyuga's twin brother Hizashi knocks him out with a punch to the solar plexus in order to take his place as a human sacrifice.
* In the main series Wesker is responsible for deaths of all S.T.A.R.S members with the five exceptions of Chris, Jill, Barry, Rebecca and Brad... the last of whom is killed by aforementioned Nemesis. In
* In the main series, YHVH and Lucifer respectively embody the concepts of Law and Chaos.
* In the main show, Ozpin is a calm, empathetic, and enigmatic headmaster who commands respect. His chibi form is a laid-back analog of a school director who is cheerfully oblivious to genuine danger and happily self-absorbed about sending the kids on 'training quests' that are nothing more than personal errands, such as retrieving his missing possessions after some kind of embarrassing work party.
* In the main story, Ken's mother is the driving force behind Ken's motivations to join S.E.E.S.
* In the main story, Lady Ilene mentions to Ash and Misty that a Pidgeot Species Bloodliner would be able to run as fast as an actual Pidgeot can fly (established in canon as Mach 2). This is later showcased in a sidestory by Jane Jackrum, a female Pokémon Ranger who is a Pidgeot Bloodliner.
* In the main story, "Land of Twilight" starts out as Hyrulean Forces vs. Cia's Dark Forces, but partway through the stage,
* In the main storyline, Trafalgar Law was once a member of the Don Quixote Pirates, even being prepared to become Doflamingo's right-hand man on the Heart seat. (Dolfamingo's top Co-Dragons have a
* In the mainstream continuity, radiation-based origins have been explained as
* In the main title, the Legionnaires had always had individual costumes. However, the early 90s younger versions of the team redesigned those costumes to have unifying elements: a three-part division with a center band of contrast running down the middle, from neck to bootline, and a thick black belt with Gadget Pouches and a very prominent Legion emblem on the buckle. All of these held on through the 1994
* In the main universe, the masquerade seems to have been implausibly durable, since by the beginning of
* In the Maji Maji rebellion in German East Africa during the colonial days, tribes thought something similar. Through training and washing in magical water blessed by local shamans, they thought they would become immune to machine gun fire.
* In the majority of the games, the dungeons are usually infested with foul monsters and other creatures due to the boss inhabiting the dungeon. It's implied that beating the boss of the dungeon frees the area of its influence, but you can go back in those dungeons and still see the same monsters and creatures you fought before as if you didn't actually accomplish anything. This is especially notable with the
* In "The Makeover", he misunderstands what Mittens means when she refers to "
* In ''The Making of the Atomic Bomb'ned counts', Richard Rhodes mentions a (real life) scientist working on the Manhattan Project who was unable to get cleared for access to more sensitive levels of the project because the scientist (who was married) talked in his sleep.
* In the male-dominated world of politics, it comes as little surprise that the reasonably attractive
* In "The Male in the Mail", when Hodgins is unable to identify a body's bone striations by comparing them to conventional blades, he announces, "It's time to get medieval." He runs comparisons on antique weapons, finding a close match to a guillotine, which leads Booth and Bones to identify an industrial paper-cutter used at a shipping depot as the murder weapon.

* In "The Mall," the dog has a bad cold and frequently sprays his friends as a result.
* In the "mandingo" fight (fight to the death that two slaves are forced into for gambling purposes) shown earlier, when the victor completely subdues his opponent by
* In "The Mane Event," Blossom goes into seclusion after Buttercup and Bubbles butcher her hair just as a multi-eyed monster is rampaging Townsville. The Professor convinces Blossom to laugh along with everyone, and it works for her, as the Monster is laughing so hard that its eyes are all shut, giving the girls the chance to knock it into space. And Blossom gets the last laugh on her sisters at the end.
* In the manga adaptation, the Riku Replica survives to go on a journey of his own to find his purpose in life.
* In the manga, after the Tendōs come home and Nabiki tricks Ranma into
* In the manga, Agni is shown to have white eyes matching his white hair.
* In the manga, Akane says this when Ranma's mirror clone tells Akane that Ranma likes her.
* In the manga, all the major beatdowns end with at least one or both of the girls having wet herself/themselves,
* In the manga, Amestris' entire philosophy during the Ishval Civil War was this. Naturally, the soldiers like Maes Hughes did not take kindly to this, and Amestris officers were frequently shot by their own men.
* In the manga and 2019, Tohru offers her umbrella to Kyo, since (as the Cat) he's utterly miserable in the rain. He gets flustered and angry,
* In the manga and anime, BDN's shoulderpads contain large-bore machine guns for a suprise edge in fights.
* In the manga and Brotherhood, May's standard greeting toward Alphonse seems to be glomping him.
* In the manga and OVA, Nguyen kills an enemy pilot who has ejected from his jet.
* In the manga and OVA, Ryoko has very idealistic ideas about love, and seems to think that she is in a
* In the manga and second anime, Pride can project razor-sharp tentacle-like
* In the manga, Annie became Eren's mentor, to which the two grew a mutual respect and admiration for each other. This is removed from the anime and causes Eren's hesitation to
* In the manga a page is also devoted to explaining the fact that most people have their entire bodies replaced, due to the exact problem of the arm falling off the body if too much pressure is exerted. Most people in their line of work prefer to have the added insurance. The whole conversation is in reference to a rogue army leader who only had his arm and his leg replaced.
* In the manga, apparently that is not the case. According to Piccolo, he tells Vegeta when he dies, he will go to Hell where he will remain until he is reborn as a new lifeform. In Kid Buu's case, he definitely reincarnated.
* In the manga arc of Kasumi being possessed by a demon, the meanest thing she does is put mild paralysis powder in the dinner she cooks. It doesn't even last ten minutes; Ranma's experienced far worse from what his foes and harem accidentally have done.
* In the manga, Armstrong is introduced during the battle with Scar. Scar has just said he will kill everyone there; this is followed by "I'd like to see you TRY!" and Armstrong's fist smashing the ground millimeters from him. Literally
* In the manga, a side story reveals that this existed between the Elric brothers themselves when they were quite small, as Edward was very jealous of his mother Trisha's love for the baby Alphonse. A neatly-delivered lesson from father Hohenheim changed his mind, however, and by the time of the main story they are absolutely devoted to one another.
* In the manga, Bakura is seen writing a letter to his sister asking how she and their parents are doing, implying, naturally, that he doesn't live with them. Sure, his father
* In the manga, Bartholomew Kuma scatters the startled Straw Hats without them knowing they'll be sent to where they can train, with Luffy breaking down in despair at the seeming loss of his crew. In

* In the Manga,, because they're more commonly depicted with pointed chins.
* In the manga, Boogey-kun is explicitly revealed to be the ghost of a dead serial killer trapped in the doll.
* In the manga, book 30, "Angry Hair Heaven" chapter, female Ranma gets pursued in the streets of Nerima by a giant black-and-white spiky ball... which is in fact her father turned into a panda and affected by a magic hair growth lotion.
* In the manga, both Nephrite and Sailor Moon did this—Nephrite as a ghostly bride, and Sailor Moon as the ghostly bride's groom.
* In the manga, Ciel will occasionally experience events that cause vivid flashbacks to the time he spent
* In the manga, Earth is referred to as "Pokopen", whereas in the anime, it is "Pekopon". "Pokopen" is a derogatory word Japanese used to describe
* In the manga, for some time the scar was still visible a bit under her new tattoo the times she wore sleeveless shirts, but by the Whisky Peak arc it completely disappeared. Maybe
* In the manga, Fuyuki has an occult club in grade school and has a lot of members. When he enters middle school, he joins a manga club to follow his mom, Aki's steps. Eventually, however, Fuyuki leaves the manga club and creates a new Occult Club alongside Momoka. However in the anime, Fuyuki already starts with an occult club, initially by himself before being quickly joined by Momoka.
