* The Heroic Legend of Arslan, corrupted governor Pelagius provided several excuses why he cannot provide troops and supplies for the war effort against Lusitania, including that he has been dealing with pirate threats. Arslan's group didn't believe him ... until they saw a pirate attack on a merchant ship in broad daylight and right at the harbor.
* The Heroic Legend of Arslan (even the tough ones like Daryun), so it doesn't quite get the point across smoothly.
* The Heroic Legend of Arslan, Farangis was the sole woman travelling in Arslan's group without having any romantic relations with any of them, though she was annoyed with Gieve's one-sided attraction to her.
* The Heroic Legend of Arslan, Gieve will flirt with every pretty girl within the vicinity but when Silvermask kills one of the Queen's handmaidens, Gieve was visibly saddened and angry and respectfully covered the girl's body afterwards.
* The Heroic Legend of Arslan has Alfarid, who declares herself to be in love with Narsus shortly after he rescues her from bandits. He's ten years older than her and not interested in the least, but unfortunately for him, Alfarid doesn't really care, and regularly introduces herself as his wife anyway. His efforts to clear up the misunderstandings that ensue are not always successful.
* The Heroic Legend of Arslan, it happens to Arslan's group on their journey to Peshwar, though not all by choice. Upon being chased, Daryun stays behind to buy the group more time to escape. The remaining group was intending to stay together but were soon separated due to a combination of the forest being set on fire and Lusitanian soldiers. Gieve ran into Arslan and Elam while trying to find Farangis. Farangis managed to find Daryun. Narsus escaped alone but would eventually meet Alfarid.
* The Heroic Legend of Arslan, it's commented that a large part of problems that happened in Badakhshan and Pars occurred because of men falling in love with Tahamine. She was first betrothed to the prime minister of Badakhshan, only for his master the prince to steal her away and the prime minister to kill himself after, leaving the country in chaos. Then, after the war between Badakhshan and Pars, King Osroes and his brother Andragoras had a falling out because they both loved Tahamine and it's suspected Andragoras assassinated his own brother and nephew to take the throne and Tahamine for himself.
* The Heroic Legend of Arslan only joined Arslan's group because he wanted to get close to Farangis.
* The Heroic Legend of Arslan, slavery provides the economic backbone for Pars and honourable characters such as Kishward has slaves. Many traditional nobles despise Narsus for speaking about abolishing slavery and actually freeing his own slaves. When he was younger, Arslan genuinely believed for the Lusitanian prisoners of war, it would be beneficial for them to become slaves so they wouldn't have to worry about meals again.
* The Heroic Legend of Arslan's plan to smoke Prince Arslan out of hiding, then counter that by having the prince lure Lusitanian soldiers to his position, which was on a hilltop...near a massive floodgate, which is promptly thrown open to have the Lusitanians' massive numerical advantage literally washed away.
* The Heroic Legend of Arslan, the Lusitanian military and the clergymen/Temple Knights don't get along since the military does most of the fighting while the clergymen get to take the spoils of war despite not being on the front lines. The rivalry is fueled by the mutual dislike between their leaders, Lord Guiscarl and Archbishop Bodin.
* The Heroic Legend of Arslan was based on the Arakawa manga version of the novel. However, the anime ran out of manga material, so the staff decided to follow the novel story route instead. For now, the anime is ahead of the manga that it was originally based on, but it's fine because they are both based from the novel. It also helps that said novel had been ongoing since 1986 and later finished in 2017.
* The Heroic Legend of Arslan was toying with Arslan the entire time when he could have easily killed the boy.
* The Heroic Legend of Arslan. While Arslan is a decent fighter, there are those in his group that are better fighters, such as Daryun, Gieve and Farangis.

* The Heroic Legend of Arslan works on earth and does nothing to protect them from being stabbed or burnt, especially once they emerge from the ground. Additionally, they can't attack beyond the length of their arm so if someone climbs up a tree, they can avoid their attacks. They also cannot perform unnatural phenomenons at will like summoning fire or lightning, resorting to knives and blades they are in a fight. The sole exception is the mists that obscured the Lustianian traps upon the fields of Atropatene, but even that required lots of preparation, all the warlocks to perform the ritual and the leader being greatly weakened for several months after.
* The heroic nuns who sabotaged the Nazis' vehicles were probably treated to more than a slap on the wrist. Nazis, eh? Bastards.
* The Heroic Ones: This is the horrific, horrific fate of the 13th Prince, via being pulled apart by four horses. The last thing audiences see of him is his upper head and torso, sans limbs, legs and most of his body's lower half.
* The Heroic Ones, who puts up a far more competent fighht than the regular soldiers. They manage to kill many of Li's men until Li takes on the twenty in an extended spear-vs-halberd duel.

* The "heroin chic" style, as its name suggests, was characterized by traits often associated with heroin abuse, including pale skin, stringy hair, and a waifish appearance. Credited to the late supermodel Gia Carangi and sported by Kate Moss and Jaime King, the look was extremely popular in the early '90s thanks to the fading stigma against heroin, the drug's popularity in the

* The Hero is named Squall. His mother is named Raine. His father is called Laguna. The odd one out is his adoptive sister, Ellone.
* The Hero is Overpowered but Overly Cautious, a web novel about a summoned hero who refuses to do anything without considerable preparation.
* The Hero is Overpowered but Overly Cautious is about a goddess who summons a hero with spectacular stats, but is ridiculously over-careful no matter the situation.

* The Hero is Overpowered but Overly Cautious: The gods set up a system where they summon people from Earth, grant them fantasy abilities, and send them off to save worlds in danger of being conquered by demons. This is because they're limited in how much they can interfere in mortal affairs. In a twist on this trope, the story is told from the summoner's POV, not the hero.
* The Hero is Overpowered but Overly Cautious: The unified spirit world, the realm of the gods, is a place where time moves a hundred times slower than in the mortal realms. Seiya takes advantage of this by training in the gods' realm to level up faster than if he trained in a mortal world.
* The Hero is Overpowered but Overly Cautious where characters can use the Scan spell to read each others' statuses. However, there's a Fake Out skill that can cause any Scan attempts to return a false status or an annoying message if the Scan skill isn't at a high enough level.

* The "Hero Killer" Stain also falls into this if you judge purely by Quirk. Stain's Quirk, "
* The Hero Korra nearly gets killed or depowered on several occasions by her aggressive and proud nature. She gets better, at least. Bolin, meanwhile, repeatedly gets himself into trouble through his trusting nature which stemmed from Mako's overprotective nature. Mako's inability to spit anything out or relax for four seconds never gets him into any worse trouble than a difficult breakup. It's really a blessing that Asami doesn't have this trope that it enables her to keep their group together. Lin Beifong has trouble letting go of old resentments that she ends up hurting others who aren't even part of her resentment like her niece Opal, not so dissimilar to Katara as mentioned above. Tenzin can be surprisingly naive for a middle aged man and has to learn not to compare himself to his father.
* The Hero Lightning McQueen has a rather unique design compared to most other stock cars — specifically his hood area is squished in a little and the sides are raised up slightly, his spoiler is bigger with rounded edges and curves in at the center, and his back bumper is completely yellow instead of having a yellow double stripe (a tradition in NASCAR given to racers in their rookie seasons). This sets him apart from the others.

* The hero Nightmist has multiple spells that damage her as well as achieve whatever the intended effect was, and her standard form's power draws two cards but hits her in the face for 2. She mitigates it with some fairly impressive healing options, plus a relic that allows her to deflect one instance of damage per turn, meaning that she can make a fairly impressive tank if she can keep her equipment out.
* The Hero of a chivalric romance, nobly rescuing his lady love Lyanna Stark from the vile kidnapper Rhaegar Targayen. Not only did he fail, as Lyanna died under mysterious circumstances, but he ended up stuck with a kingdom he didn't want and politically married to a woman he hated. To top it off, comments made by Eddard

Stark and others imply Lyanna never loved him back in the first place and that she (possibly) was in love with Rhaegar instead.
* The hero of Oblivion from having completed other questlines; they just aren't mentioned, downplaying the trope. (The branches aren't necessarily "cut off" - they just aren't acknowledged one way or another.)

* The Hero's Birthday: The story begins with the announcement that it's the main character's birthday, and often it's the day they reach adulthood.
* The Hero Scar, though a book reveals he was originally named Taka ("Trash") before he got his name from the scar he gets.
* The Hero's Guide To Saving Your Kingdom by Chris Healy takes this trope and runs all over the map with it. The princes of four different fairy tales (Cinderella, Rapunzel, Sleeping Beauty and Snow White) get the short end of the stick when their stories are popularized because everyone remembers the princesses' names, but their names (Fredrick, Gustav, Liam and Duncan respectively) are lost and are just called "Charming", even though all four are radically different people. They eventually team up and become a league of Princes Charming.

* The Hero's Journey is perhaps the ultimate example: If storytelling has ever caught on in a culture, the people have at least one story that fits The Hero's Journey.

* The hero's Kwamis, Tikki and Plagg, get more focus and some scenes together in "Sandboy" and "Kwamibuster."
* The hero's military background is an essential part of the character. He can't just merely be or have been a soldier. If you could substitute the character's background for, say, law enforcement or being a fireman, it's not this trope.
* , the hero's mother is a "queen o state and wealth" who is so "well skilld in magic spells" that she transformed her son into a dove so that he could fly to distant lands to "charm such maids" as the heroine. In another version, the mighty queen does this to her puny son because he wouldn't obey her.
* The hero's radio DJ friend discourages a young heavy metal fan from trying to hear backmasked lyrics on records. Why? Because he insists that it's nothing more than a scam by record company executives to make kids ruin their albums playing them backwards, so they'll have to buy more. * The Hero. The first time, he pretends to give up fighting, saying that she's too strong for him, and laments about how he should have been loyal to Dakki. He then requests that Oukijn allow him to do a wood fortune reading for Dakki's future, which turns out to be a trick so that he can set fire to her Hagoromo. The second time is when she tries to do the same trick to him, "surrendering" - to which he pretends to "accept", only to once again sucker-punch her.

* The Hero Who Returned Remains The Strongest In The Modern World. It's not until he comes across an earth spider and Kaguya in action does he take their conversation seriously.
* The Hero Who Returned Remains The Strongest In The Modern World several times over, with the side effect of increasing the size of his muscles to the point that his school uniform is forcibly unbuttoned and the sleeves are stretched taut against his biceps and shoulders.
* The Hero Who Returned Remains The Strongest In The Modern World. The Morishitas are genuinely perplexed when Kaguya and Lela fail to eat anything.
* The Hero who will succeed. But he is in fact unskilled to the task given to him. He was sent to Meereen to marry Daenerys, but he is unable to woo her, as he just isn't manly enough. His next plan was to try to tame her dragons thinking it would impress her, but he ends up getting burnt to a crisp for his foolishness.
* The hero will try at least once to get a message to friends and usually succeeds (eventually). The friends in turn usually figure out what is going on — that their friend is in great danger, closely watched and controlled by a villain — and swing into action to help.

* The Hershey company developed a chocolate-based, low-volume, high-calorie ration to include with the survival kit for pilots who eject from their planes. It was intentionally designed to taste bad (the order to the food scientists tasked with designing the chocolate was that it must taste "slightly better than a boiled potato"), so no one would snack on it unless they needed to. Indeed, the food scientists may have done a bit too good of a job on the taste front, as the chocolates turned out to taste so bad that some WWII soldiers would rather risk starvation than eat it— having a texture and firmness somewhere around "brick-like" didn't help, either. A soldier risked breaking his teeth on the stuff unless he shaved off tiny portions with a knife.

* The Hidden, a Hidden Source machinima. You can replicate this in the game by landing on someone, stabbing them in the back, then grabbing their body and launching off onto a railing or ledge above. Bonus points if the body is later found pinned to a light fixture being butchered and eaten.
* The Hidden allows it to extend its rampage even longer, going through a half-dozen hosts throughout the film, all of which are killed in the process as well.
* The Hidden Almanac, a recurring character in the historical segments is the Librarian Prince, who infamously issued a series of decrees banning, on pain of death, such things as wearing the color orange, gathering in groups of two or more people, claiming that goats are real, or having any association with snow.

* The Hidden Almanac, Drom spends most of the Fathers arc as this, having to doublethink her way into helping Mord. Unfortunately, the doublethink doesn't hold out forever.
* The Hidden Almanac ends each episode with sponsor messages, usually one from the show's major sponsor (Red Wombat Tea Co.) and one from a sponsor of the week, such as the Silent Nightclub or Suzy's Seasonal Assassins. A common joke is for a sponsor message to be a response to the previous episode's sponsor message, such as when an episode sponsored by the city library ("Have you gotten lost in a book lately?") was followed by an episode sponsored by a company selling edible bookmarks ("Lost in a book? Already eaten your shoes? Now you can use your bookmark as a handy source of protein"). Some of these, such as the rivalry between Bob's Discount Car Lot and Steve's Used Cars, have turned into long-running story lines.
* The Hidden Almanac ends with a sponsor message from the city library: "Have you gotten lost in a book lately?" Later episodes make it clear that the question is neither rhetorical nor metaphorical, with accounts of people being lost in books and having to eat their shoes to survive until help came.
* The Hidden Almanac, episode 38 records that in 1781, the Librarian Prince forbade the use of numberical placings in contests, leaving people to come up with workarounds such as "color-coded ribbons, Honorablest Mentions, and the 'We're Extremely Glad You Participated Award'". In episode 40, an item about sheep breeding mentions that in 1783 a ram named Sturdy took the "Exceedingly Honorable-We-Really-Mean-It Award" at the city fair.
* The Hidden Almanac for Big Al's Lace Emporium — "You want lace? We got lace. We got more lace than you can possibly handle. We have lace that you can kill bears with. Come get this lace, if you think you're hard enough."
* The Hidden Almanac is for a famous historical figure to turn out to be an example of this.
* The Hidden Almanac, many of the historical events recorded in the Almanac involve eldritch abominations, often in connection with the weirdness-magnet location of Echo Harbor. There have also been a number plot arcs in which the staff of the Almanac encounter them directly, including the time a cult attempted to summon the demon god Corvus-Wrax in the Almanac Test Garden, and the time the interns were kidnapped by a cult that worshiped a horrible many-mouthed plague god.
* The Hidden Almanac, most dates are given in what appears to be the Gregorian calendar, but events in Echo Harbor are described as taking place in years with names like "Year of the Dripping Moon" instead of numbers.
* The Hidden Almanac, mostly with regard to disrespect for his garden, he addresses them with barely a change in tone.
* The Hidden Almanac, no matter how strange things get. However, he's had his moments.
* The Hidden Almanac, one of the recurring advertisers is Suzy's Seasonal Assassins, whose services include discouraging this behavior with extreme prejudice.
* The Hidden Almanac, one opens in the city and sells mysterious items to several people with cryptic instructions. On catching wind of this, the authorities shut the place down and confiscate the items.
* The Hidden Almanac, Pastor Drom is usually the ditzy comic relief. When Mord asks Drom how she would conquer a technologically advanced society, her answer involves two asteroids, nuclear winter, and food laced with highly addictive drugs. She also keeps a shotgun under her bed, a second one under the sink, and a pistol.
* The Hidden Almanac ran a storyline about a local election for District Court Judge, growing more pointed as it goes on.
* The Hidden Almanac, Reverend Mord is usually the stoic to Pastor Drom's ebullient ditz. In one episode, Mord is insistent that he didn't feed the baby chicks Drom kept in his office more than once. Or twice. A day.
* The Hidden Almanac, so that in itself doesn't necessarily prove anything).
* The Hidden Almanac, stoic Mord and ditzy Drom can rarely spend time in the same room without bickering, but Mord is genuinely upset when it seems like Drom is going to die (and Drom, for her part, comments that they must be really good friends because she let Mord live the first time he referred to her as "a woman of a certain age").

* The Hidden Almanac, the dark god beneath the garden most closely resembles a pile of corpses with numerous mouths in random places, which sing and speak in unison (although Mord points out the true appearance is a lot more horrible than that description allows).
* The Hidden Almanac: The episode for October 23rd, 2013, begins with an account of an 18th-century law that banned goats and goat cheese and resulted in the establishment of several "cheese-easies". The episode ends with a fake sponsor message from "Heywood's, the oldest cheese-easy still in existence".
* The Hidden Almanac, the main characters are Mord, a calm, scholarly fellow, and Drom, an ebullient ditz. The only thing they appear to have in common is a fondness for gardening, though her interest seems to be primarily pharmacological.
* The Hidden Almanac, this may have been the case with the pirate Ribbon Jack, who "was never allowed to make a public statement and was hanged while wearing a hood. Autopsies indicated that the notorious pirate may actually have been an eighty-five pound bag of seaweed." On the other hand, it has to be said that an animate bag of seaweed with piratical proclivities would fit right in with some of the other historical figures mentioned in the series.
* The Hidden Almanac to select the member who will be hunted down and sacrificed to the moose gods in the fun run.
* The Hidden Almanac, weird things can happen anywhere, but all the really weird things happen in Echo Harbor, which seems to be a hotbed of cult activity and ritual sacrifice. Many evil things are underground there.
* The Hidden Almanac, when the interns are kidnapped by a cult that wants to sacrifice them to a plague god, Mord throws himself on it so Drom can get them away. After swallowing him, the plague god starts reciting Mord's unfinished host segment, and then he pops up whole and unharmed, apart from being emotionally shaken.
* The Hidden Almanac, which he denies, but when she mentioned something had convinced her the theory was wrong he jokingly pointed out how it could still be true.
* The Hidden Almanac, with an account of a heroic border collie who woke a family in a burning house and herded them directly into the blaze, which later investigation determined the collie had started himself. (But it turned out the family were all members of a forbidden cult, so that was all right.)
* The Hidden, an alien slug takes over the bodies of humans as unsuspecting prey and treats it like a joyride. It just wants to listen to death metal, drive expensive cars, rob banks, and blow things up. For fun.
* the Hidden Arsenal storyline, Cairngorgon, Antiluminescent Knight may be intended to represent the state of Gem-Knight Crystal after the final battle against Gishki Zielgigas and Evilswarm Ouroboros. With Sophia, God of Rebirth defeated, the united Gem-Knights' transformation into Gem-Knight Master Diamond beginning to fall apart. In the midst of this, Crystal appears to have been corrupted by the remnants of the Evilswarm virus and has either taken control of Diamond's crumbling body or reassembled his damaged body using the remains of his fallen comrades.

* The Hidden Cruelty of Cats, Claire makes a long string of chicken sausages for her cats and holds the plate down so they can eat. Cue Lulu and then Dodo both trying to steal the entire string, much to the other cats' disgust.
* The Hidden Dungeon Only I Could Enter. Noir even lost his job as a librarian at the beginning to some unnamed higher-tier noble, who bribed the interviewer just to deny him the position. Later, though, this starts to fade as Noir racks up heroic accomplishments, and the nobles realize it's a good idea to be on good terms with a powerful and promising adventurer, regardless of social status.
* The Hidden Face behind the bathroom mirror but nobody noticed it because the key to open the latch is not easy to find.
* The Hidden Fortress and the plot revolves around the heroes escorting her back to her homeland.

* The Hidden Fortress who bicker and fight constantly (when they're not swearing eternal friendship to each other).
* The Hidden, has the IRIS paramilitary team hunting an invisible, super-strong genetically modified human, Subject 617. 617 has the ability to pounce long distances as well as cling to surfaces, allowing him to easily bypass almost any obstacle and climb surfaces as long as his strength holds out.
* The Hidden History of Oz series by Tarl Telford, Glinda isn't an immortal fairy like in Baum canon. She starts out as a human teenager and the daughter of a sorceress.
* The Hidden Immunity Idol is another element that has had enormous metagame implications, and has been prominently featured in two seasons:
* The Hidden in its own right, but pretty far outside of its normal jurisdiction.
* The Hidden Library of Tzeentch is even larger than the Black Library and contains every single scrap of knowledge, every thought of every creature across space and time, and is where Tzeentch himself concocts his eternal plots.
* The Hidden Mist plays this straight; you graduate the academy by killing your classmates. It seems to be somewhat counterproductive; Mist's population is fairly small compared with the other great villages, and its ninja seem to have a tendency to be disloyal. The Leaf may be (relatively) soft, but it has the largest population, a highly-regarded shinobi corps, and its washouts survive to diversify the city's economic base....
* The hidden "Nudie Mode" allows you to turn clothing invisible when you mouse over it. Obviously, you can see almost any character naked, but this also works on things like background elements and inventory items.
* "The Hidden One" and its sequel comic: She was not her sister Arsinoe IV instead she was a woman named Aya of Alexandria who was married to Bayek of Siwa and they had a son named Khemu, who would be later killed by the proto-Templar Order of the Ancients, not to mention that she gave the queen a vial of poison to kill her. Additionally, Amunet and her husband are never called "Assassins" but instead "Hidden Ones" in-universe.
* The Hidden Ones has Bayek and Aya codify what will become one of the central tenets of the Creed - stay your blade from the flesh of an innocent.
* The Hidden People are this, vicious and cruel and taking pleasure in kidnapping and exploiting human children.
* The Hidden People Hidden that actually looks old became that way because of a curse leveled on her.

* The Hidden: The alien parasite burrows into and out of mouths several times during the movie. One scene used a prosthetic head to show the process in gory detail; upon seeing that scene on film, the actor whose likeness was on the head was physically ill.
* The Hidden, the body possessing space alien villain starts out only possessing the bodies of men. The first time it possesses the body of a female stripper, it spends some time exploring the differences.
* The Hidden: The film opens with the evil parasite robbing a bank, as seen from a black and white security camera. The cops later say that he had robbed another seven banks during his crime spree in that body.
* The Hidden: The good alien has a special type of gun that is required to kill the evil alien, but he needs it to leave its human host first as it incinerates their own kind but is harmless to human tissue.
* The Hidden: The opening scene is a bank robbery as seen from a security camera. The last thing the robber does before leaving the building is shoot his shotgun at the camera, resulting in the Snowy Screen of Death.

* The High Elves, as a graceful, skilled and artistic race, use slender spears, longbows and elegant dueling swords as their primary weapons - all with leaf-shaped blades, intricate artistic flourishes and curved, flowing lines. Most are encrusted with carved gemstones, and many hung with ribbons. For war machines they use similarly elegant bolt throwers, the bow-piece shaped to resemble the outstretched wings of an eagle and with a repeating mechanism to fire a hail of small darts. Their elites fight with larger, two-handed weapons - greatswords for the Swordmasters of Hoeth, halberds for the Phoenix Guard and woodsman's axes for the White Lions - but these are also very slender examples of their kind, relying on perfect balance and swing rather than brute force for their effect (and the elves that use them are trained so superlatively that they can use them as dextrously as a human might use a regular sword). The Sisters of Avelorn use magical bows that fire arrows of searing blue flame, demonstrating that High Elves are the most magical of the races.
* The High Elves (by way of the Well of Eternity) and one of their descendent branches, the Night Elves (by way of the World Tree), were contentedly immortal for well over 10,000 years (not including the whole War of the Ancients thing). Many Night Elves were rather sad to lose their immortality due to the events of Warcraft 3, and though it was a necessary sacrifice World of Warcraft opens with the Night Elves trying to regain their immortality through the creation of a new World Tree (the attempt does not go as planned).

The title is traditionally held by the current ruling Lord of Houses Stark, Tyrell, Arryn, and Lannister respectively, but as the office is functional and not merely ceremonial, exceptions are occasionally made due to circumstance (as when King Robert bestows the title of Warden of the East on Jaime Lannister during the current Lord Arryn's minority).

* The High Ground, and many believe the only way for that to happen would be for the United Kingdom to collapse. Of course, reunification in full has still not happened, but time will tell whether this prediction will come true depending on how Brexit goes. Incidentally, the reference to Ireland being reunited due to terrorism led to this episode being banned on British television for years afterward. It was finally shown on the BBC in 2007. It has never been shown on Irish television. With unionist parties winning fewer Northern Irish seats than pro-reunification parties in the 2019 general election, it’s looking like Star Trek may actually have been slightly late in its prediction. It still wouldn’t be right about the terrorism.
* The High Heavens and Burning Hells wage an eternal battle of good vs evil, and while there are no perfectly symmetrical counterparts to the Prime Evils, the Angiris Council is good enough. The forces of good (very strong ones, at that) are definitely present in the Diablo universe, they're just not shown that much because they prefer not to directly meddle in human affairs,
* The High House of them are Big Bads who want to take over the universe.
* The High House series by James Stoddard uses this, but substitutes good and evil with order and chaos (most likely because the author doesn't seem to have any problem with the presence of good overwhelming the presence of evil). Too much order is portrayed as tyranny and a lack of free will; too much chaos is portrayed as anarchy and a lack of personal safety. Arguably, this makes the books the perfect fantasy series for libertarians.

* The High King: A person who even other rulers swear fealty to, but chooses not to hold the rank of Emperor.
* The High King). Historically, there has been a constant power struggle between the Sword (the Protector) and the Keys (the Steadholders). Additionally, according to the Grayson constitution, each Steadholder is allowed no more than 50 armsmen (personal guards), thus preventing them from building a large military force loyal to them alone.
* The Highland Charge was a practical shock tactic of closing to roughly twenty yards, firing a volley, then dropping one's firearm. The follow-through then followed up with sword/dirk and targe. The attacker would drop to a knee or stoop just outside the range of the bayonet, use the targe to come up and knock the musket off to his left, and with the same motion spring forward and kill his defenseless target with his sword or dirk. The man with the musket had absolutely no time to bring his musket back around to stop his attacker. If he had a hand weapon (which he usually didn't), he had no time to draw it. He could not retreat to make space, since he was part of a battle line and someone was right behind him. The English were fed several devastating defeats in this manner. The English eventually created a defense which shut down the charge for good and was even more badass than the charge itself. First, the above-mentioned socket bayonet meant a unit could always have its bayonets mounted. There was no time to fiddle around with plug bayonets. Each man, finding his bayonet knocked to the right (the charger's left), would forgo his own defense and instead stab the exposed side of the man to his front-right, similar to how pawns in chess attack. He would then be helpless to defend himself and would have to rely on the man to his left to protect him, just as he protected the man to his right. The discipline a formation of soldiers would need to have each man forgo personal defense and put his life in someone else's courage is simply mind-boggling.
* The Highland Charge was developed to give Scottish armies an edge against better equipped and better trained armies in this way. The enemy line could be broken up and their morale shattered while the Scots were just getting started with their new one-handed claymores. Against armies who held ranks they tended to get massacred though. In fact, the dreaded Highland Charge helped lead to the development of the socket bayonet, which unlike the previous plug bayonet, fit over the barrel of the musket and allowed it to shoot and stab all at once. Therefore, the English units were able to enter the battle with already fixed bayonets instead of having to equip them while a horde of screaming Scotsman with BFS bore down on them. The swords of this period were one-handed light swords similar to a later broadsword. It was certainly not the claymore most people envision when they hear the word. By the 17th Century, gunpowder had completely dominated the battlefield and any heavy infantry with armor and a BFS was a relic waiting to be slaughtered. The charge relied on a light targe, a broadsword or dirk, momentum, and a movement which left the English infantry helpless just long enough for them to be cut down.
* The "Highlander" or the "Singleton" requires players to build a deck with no more than one copy of any card that isn't a basic land. The standards were not only those of Nazi Germany but also the historical flags of the old Imperial Germany that fought the Tsarist army in World War I taken from museums and memorials. Germans, anticipating this, removed some old flags (e.g. the regimental standards from the Tannenberg Battle Memorial) to the West where the Allies were not nearly so vengeful.

While they don't have the Dwarves' inherent knowledge of steamcraft, they can build Mechanicians' Guilds that are just as effective as dwarven craftsmen. In short, while a couple of races trump them in their own specialties, no other race has both the breadth and depth of knowledge available to the High Men.
* The High Middle Ages, artillery is (probably) the very first and oldest definition of this trope: deadly when given a chance to attack from a safe distance but easily neutralized by the destruction of its crew and/or the cannon itself.

* The High Middle Ages related to the fact that the entirety of the British nobility and upper-class was ethnically and culturally French. For other reasons (mainly being the most constituted nation of the bunch), same effects were experienced in Northern Spain, Northern Italy and Western Germany (notwithstanding that the whole West of the Holy Roman Empire was made of modern Eastern France at that time).
* The High Middle Ages were also somewhat like this. The French under Duke William of Normandy conquered all of England with only 8,000 men, and the Kingdom of England was estimated to have only been able to field 14,000 well-equipped troops across the entirety of the country,

* The Hindenburg but despite the shocking power of the explosion, amazingly, about two-thirds of the roughly 100 passengers escaped alive. The other one-third died mainly because they panicked and jumped out of the cabin before it hit the ground. Some survived through sheer ridiculous amounts of luck. One elderly woman was standing near the double grand staircase, which had a pair of folding stairs on the lower deck for landing that popped open when the Zeppelin impacted the ground. She simply walked out. One crewman was drenched when a ballast canister burst overhead, protecting him and clearing him a path to safety.
* The Hindenburg conflagration (technically not an explosion) was caused by static discharge igniting the doping (paint) on its outer skin. At least one NASA scientist claimed that the vast majority of the hydrogen contained in its gas bags simply escaped into the upper atmosphere without burning, and claimed the main blame lay with the doping, which contained significant amounts of aluminum powder and iron oxide, which can, in the correct proportions, form
* The Hindenburg ended up as one of these. As a luxury liner and the largest aircraft ever to fly, she had a huge amount of space to begin with- the A deck alone was larger than an entire 747 in floor space, all dedicated to just 100 passengers and crew. She was designed to use non-flammable helium as the lifting gas, but the company had to settle for flammable hydrogen due to an embargo. Coincidentally, this change also meant she had roughly 10% more lift per volume- a sum which, considering the ship's astronomical weight, was nothing to sneeze at. The extra lift was used for the addition of first-class cabins. Its sister the Graf Zeppelin II could carry nearly twice as many passengers.
* The Hindenburg Line was the German army using this tactic en-masse. It involved their army on the Western front retreating to more build up defensive lines behind them. These lines themselves embodied the tactic as the forward positions of the line were only lightly defended, and were to be abandoned in a serious attack, after which the British and/or French would try to "exploit their breakthrough" by advancing into the far more heavily defended lines behind it, now conveniently out of range of the artillery that had been positioned to shell the front of the line. It managed to inflict some heavy losses on Entente offensives, untill they learned to halt the advance after taking the first line.
* The Hindenburg, they actually served the vital purposes of adding structural integrity and distributing the ship's huge tonnage to the delicate airframe.

* The Hindenburg was also an Airborne Aircraft carrier, briefly, and the only civilian airship to be one. The airplane damaged its mooring to the airship by accident, and the system was uninstalled just before the airship's final flight.

Their civilisation was eventually destroyed by firstly the war against the C'tan and Necrons, and secondly the rise of Chaos due to the Old One's creation of psychically powered younger races (including the Eldar, Orks, and possibly humans). The Necrons rebelled against the C'tan then went into hibernation to wait until any threat to them was gone, while having wiped out much of the sentient life in the galaxy Chaos lost much of its influence in the physical world leaving the Eldar to form the second galactic superpower, which lasted until the 30th millenium, shortly before humanity rose to power.

* The history of international politics is, in some ways, one example of this trope after another. After almost any major war in which the winning side consisted of an alliance of at least roughly equally powerful states, the alliance breaks up, with the erstwhile allies turning on one another. This happens for two primary reasons: the common enemy that had driven them together in the first place is now gone, and there are now spoils of victory to divide. In short, for each member of the victorious alliance, at least one former ally has outlived its usefulness; of course, since states are often highly resilient, these cases are not necessarily fatal for the states involved (although they can certainly be fatal for many individuals).

While showmanship and flashiness were common elements in the 1940s-70s era of the sport, the historical record seems to indicate that in fact, games were for real with no predetermined outcome, and this continued with the rival Rollergames promotion in the late 1970s to 80s.

* The History of the Fairchild Family, a popular Victorian Sunday school prize, had lots of these, including a child nearly dying of a fever for eating stolen plums, a father taking his quarreling daughters on a walk in the woods to see a dead man hanging on a gibbet, and another girl burning to death while playing with a candle. Later editions either toned down or completely removed the latter two incidents.
* The History of the Galaxy). All ships (including fighters) are ridiculously oversized, with 500-meter corvettes and 7-kilometer flagship cruisers. Crew requirements are listed as much smaller than one would expect. Standard flagship cruiser crew complement is 150, although it can be crewed by up to 2000. This is due to the ubiquitous use of AI modules to run most systems.

* The History of the Galaxy creatures. In the end, all humans have been consumed, but the shapeshifters also absorb their memories along with their DNA and begin to think of themselves as human, not understanding why they are suddenly amorphous blobs able to form into anything they wish. Another novel has a scout ship re-discovering the planet only to realize the shapeshifters are intelligent. The captain of the scout ship doesn't care and wants to exterminate them in order to claim the planet and retire on the fortune (habitable worlds are extremely valuable). The protagonist manages to get rid of the captain and leave, wiping the location of the world from the navigation computer, so the creatures can live in peace.
* The History of the Galaxy disagree, as their first act upon encountering humanity is to destroy the central node and, basically, end Interstar. Only after defeating them, humans use the ancient computer Logris as a new central node to restore the connection.
* The History of the Galaxy discovering that his uncle died while studying something on Earth and goes there to check it out. While this would seem to indicate a new period of unrestricted galactic exploration, the government quickly puts a lid on the knowledge and prevents travel into unexplored systems, fearing an advanced enemy that, with the knowledge of the "hub", could strike anywhere without warning.
* The History of the Galaxy downloads the memories of one of the dead Delphons and puts them into the brain of a human soldier. At the same time, he experiments with the Forerunners, not realizing the danger they represent. In the end, it's the memories of the dead Delphon that allow the soldier to figure out a way to stop the Forerunners (a handful of them rip apart a human fleet just before).
* The History of the Galaxy. Earth is left alone but under watch, populated by only a few million people (most having escaped the horrors of war).
* The History of the Galaxy fleets. Realizing they have to act before Alliance higher-ups find out that colonies are virtually defenseless (the Alliance can quickly put together another fleet), the colonial admiral hatches a daring plan to steal two Alliance flagship cruisers along with their space docks. The crazy plan succeeds, and the Free Colonies get a reprieve until more ships can be built.
* The History of the Galaxy habitable planet and had to implant colonists with metabolism adjusters that drastically reduced their lifespans, just so they could survive on the surface. One planet is known for being entirely covered in ice. The colonists there had to build marvelous subglacial cities that are now largely empty once contact with other, nicer colonies was reestablished. One novel mentions that anyone, who finds an unsettled habitable world, can expect to retire incredibly wealthy on the finder's fee alone. In recent years, corporations are starting to settle new worlds with machines in order to build up colonies and prepare planets for settlers (i.e. terraform them).
* The History of the Galaxy have considerable influence. After the Great Exodus, with thousands of FTL-capable colony ships have left the Solar System never to returns, the various mining colonies across the system lord over the overpopulated and resource-starved Earth. Eventually, John Winston Hammer is elected President of Earth, and he proceeds to conquer the entire Solar System, establishing the Terran Alliance. Most colonies are also run by a single government.

* The History of the Galaxy humanoids, whose homeworld is rendered near-uninhabitable by a supernova. Unfortunately, their new home is about to suffer the same fate (apparently, even with FTL outrunning a supernova is difficult). Fortunately, the humans find out about this just in time and manage to shield the new planet from the destructive wave using powerful gravity generators.
* The History of the Galaxy implies that it is limited to our own galaxy. No one ever brings up the idea of going to another galaxy.
* The History of the Galaxy. In fact, even then the fighter is detectable as an object with mass. The goal is to make it look like an ordinary piece of debris or an asteroid. The technology isn't used much due to these limitations.

* The History of the Galaxy. Most books deal with fights between human governments, factions, corporations as well as against aliens. Most protagonists tend to be members of the military (usually the Confederate fleet).
* The History of the Galaxy network. Certain genetically-engineered people are able to do the same by using a special IR-emitting and sensing organ (apparently, most computers in the 'verse have an IR port).
* The History of the Galaxy of Ganio. Oh yeah, and they're all Arabs In Space.
* The History of the Galaxy. One novel has the protagonist find an abandoned human military base, whose machinery is being studied by the Insects in an effort to learn how to make their own, but they simply don't have the centuries of scientific and technological basis for all that equipment in order to do it quickly.
* The History of the Galaxy, or rather their upper class, the so-called Immortal Quota. They record their memories on crystals that then get downloaded into new cloned bodies. As a society, they have done absolutely nothing for 3 million years, after conquering two other races and forcing them into servitude, along with the majority of their own race. When they discover humans rapidly expanding close to their hidden territory, and worse, that these young upstarts have weapons the Harammins can only dream of, they stage a surprise attack on human worlds, hoping to eliminate the threat in one fell swoop. The attack is repelled, revealing the Harammin hideout and resulting in the destruction of the Immortal Quota. Subverted with many humans who start using the mind-recording crystals to live on in virtual space after their deaths. Other examples exist, including cyborgs, virtualized minds, AIs, and mutants.
* The History of the Galaxy races as an exploration and terraforming craft. Due to most of the galaxy being unknown to the race, they equipped the ship with powerful weapons and defenses, as well as the capability to manufacture and launch fighter drones. When the ship returned centuries later, it discovered many other ships in the systems occupied by the race. These were later models that were not designed for combat. Treating them as hostile, the ship started a war and eventually wiped them out by using its built-in ability to replicate itself given enough resources. When first encountered, the humans have trouble defeating the ship. Understandably, they're horrified to learn that there are hundreds more just like that.
* The History of the Galaxy race, they are cautious about allowing this.
* The History of the Galaxy ranks are still Russian, though, with the addition of the "Galact" prefix.
* The History of the Galaxy results in the Intellect assuming all humans to be hostile and ruthlessly trying to perform its mission. Eventually, the damage is repaired, and the Intellect is installed as the Sphere's main computer, helping the humans and Insects living there to repair the damage to the megastructure. Note: "benevolent" here doesn't mean "pacifist", as most AIs depicted here have killed.

However, it was either in self-defense, in defense of their friends/allies, or prior to becoming "benevolent" (possibly, as part of their initial programming).
* The History of the Galaxy series deal with an incursion of the Mechanoids into human systems. The Mechanoids are exploration and terraforming machines designed by a long-dead race to prepare the galaxy for their expansion. Unfortunately, they made the machine adaptable and gave it weapons, as they didn't know what sort of galaxy was out there. A long time passed. The machines explored, terraformed planets, and built more of themselves to speed up the process. They returned home to find other machines that didn't fit into their recognition of "friend" and proceeded to wage war on their own creators whom they didn't recognize as such.
* The History of the Galaxy series generally tends to describe explosions in space correctly. Usually, the danger is not the explosion itself, but the debris flying from the exploding ship or station in every direction at high speeds.
* The History of the Galaxy series, most large human ships are Battlestars, able to launch at least some number of fighters. Smaller ships, including dedicated missile frigates are unable to do that, fulfilling more specialized roles. While there are no dedicated carrier ships (probably because the writer is Russian and is, therefore, influenced by Russian naval mentality). The largest (and most powerful) human ships are the flagship cruisers, able to launch dozens of fighters, as well as being armed to the teeth (missiles, plasma throwers, lasers, mass drivers). The defenses include point-defense systems, EM shielding against energy weapons, thick armor, and anti-boarding shield generators.
* The History of the Galaxy (supposedly, the first being to ever gain sentience in the universe) to serve as seeds for its copies. The Precursors contained within themselves the first ever DNA molecule. The unintended side effect of this was the creation of all known organic life in the galaxy.
* The History of the Galaxy surrenders. Subverted in that the assault would have been a resounding failure that would have left the colonies defenseless, had the admiral in charge of the defense not disabled 90% of the automated defenses just before the battle. His reasoning was that there was less than a billion people left on Earth after the 30-year conflict. Had the colonists lost the battle, the AI-controlled fleets of the Alliance would've swept through the Free Colonies unopposed, laying waste to what now constituted the majority of humanity.
* The History of the Galaxy system. A girl accidentally enters VR with this organ by looking at a screen and enjoying the view of the landscape.
* The History of the Galaxy that don't need a computer. They can even access a person's neural implant and fry his or her brain. Want to use a gun on them? Better use an ancient one that shoot bullets and has no electronics. Regular EM guns with computer chips inexplicably stop working when faced with a "cybreaker". Also used to enter virtual reality.
* The History of the Galaxy that have since become fairly advanced and industrialized. The other reason was to offload excess population. The result? The war turns the colonies into industrial and scientific powerhouses and firmly establishes them as centers of human-occupied space, while Earth becomes a backwater planet that only a historian would bother visiting.
* The History of the Galaxy? The only thing that saved the colonists was that the enemy had no idea they were defenseless. The device is later mounted on flagship cruisers but almost never used.
* The History of the Galaxy, these were networked to create the Interstar, the future version of the Internet. As communication is vital between worlds, no one in their right mind would dare destroy an HF (Hyper Frequency) station, so they aren't even armed. A major plot-point of one novel involves a previously-unknown alien race launching a sneak attack on humanity by taking out the Interstar hub, isolating the human colonies. Ships also have their own HF generators, but those are usually not very powerful.
* The History of the Galaxy: The tactic of "combat terraforming" involves bombarding an entire planet with thermonuclear bombs to wipe out all indigenous lifeforms. The planet is then decontaminated and reseeded with terrestrial life. This is why Terran Alliance isn't concerned with keeping cities on the colony world of Dabog intact. They plan to combat terraform the planet anyway in order to resettle billions of people from the overpopulated Earth. This is also their plan for Cassia, although one of the planet's three continents has already been terraformed to Earth norm by the colonists. The other two were left untouched, but Earth is having none of that.

* The History of the Galaxy. They nearly wipe out two battle fleets before being destroyed for good.
* The History of the Galaxy, this is eventually a solution to using logrs, small alien crystal computers to store the consciousness of a deceased person in a simulated world. While it's possible to copy the consciousness back into a cloned body, this presents a lot of legal and ethical problems. Concepts like inheritance and life insurance, just to name a few. Thus, the resurrection practice is forbidden. Then someone had the idea of exploring distant systems using logrs (which turn out to double as micro-spaceships) and settling habitable worlds there using the "dead", on the condition that they refuse all claims to their former lives and live in isolation from civilized galaxy.
* The History of the Galaxy. This is mostly because the aliens haven't been doing much the last several million years, following a devastating galactic cataclysm. Meanwhile, humanity has been steadily expanding and advancing for the last thousand or so years, with wars and labour shortages necessitating great strides in cybernetics and FTL technology.
* The History of the Galaxy three million years ago, into the category of "just happened."
* The History of the Galaxy universe: the most explored setting due to being the author's longest-running series with over 60 novels, novellas, and short stories, spanning a millennium of humanity's exploration of the galaxy and various conflicts between human powers, corporations, and aliens.
* The History of the Galaxy, where people from Earth are looked at in disdain.
* The History of the Galaxy, which re-formed into the Confederacy. Subverted in one novel where an alien supercomputer asks how long it has been off-line, and a human replies that it has been over 3 million years, causing the computer to prompt for the definition of a "year". The human defines it as one full orbit around a star, prompting the computer to ask for further clarification as to the parameters of such an orbit. This stumps the human, as she has never thought of this. The computer then simply searches her mind and finds enough information about Earth to scan its own database for it. Of course, this fails to take into account that the database is 3 million years old, and Earth's orbit has changed since then.
* The History of the Galaxy, which was a colony ship computer that was forced to maintain a ship for hundreds of years without human aid, coming up with ever more creative solutions until it crossed the sentience threshold. Despite these examples, a scientist muses in one novel that there have yet to be a true AI that evolved on its own. They are all either created by humans (or aliens) or gain sentience as part of its core programming (e.g. learning algorithms). Then again, if it naturally evolves then it can't be "artificial," can it?
* The History of the Galaxy, whose Immortal Quota has ruled a stagnant empire for 3 million years by using this tech.
* The History of the Galaxy with not enough fuel for a second "submergence" into hypersphere. A surprisingly decent number of them actually do end up finding habitable (or semi-habitable) worlds to settle, although many more are never heard from again. These ships are designed to land on planets and initiate the wake-up of the crew, as well as the activation of the ship's supply of Hugo BD-12 androids. If the androids do not receive any commands for a standard month, they switch to autonomous mode and attempt to awaken the crew manually. The ship itself is expected to become the lower level (or socle) of the new planet's first city. The ship's computer is perfectly capable of running and maintaining the ship's systems on its own for a few centuries.
* The History of the Galaxy with several parallel realities with completely different histories and races intersecting.
* The History of the Galaxy, World War IV is briefly mentioned to have been brewing around the time the first extrasolar colony ships began to set off for other stars. On the other hand, the name is an artifact, as the war would involve all the Solar System.

* The history of the modern version of the mohawk haircut is also military. Paratroopers; having their hair grown a bit since joining the force, would cut the sides, leaving the mohawk before going to battle. The tradition was copied from the Native Americans.
* The History of the Runestaff, and defects to help Hawkmoon and Count Brass.
* The History of the Runestaff. From the outside, it looks like a glass sphere full of translucent fluid in which Huon floats. He can talk to people in the room, but he can't leave the sphere or move it. If it were to be destroyed, which would not be terribly hard considering it's made of glass, he would die.
* The History of the Runestaff has the Sword of the Dawn and the legion it summons on command and seemingly at will, as long as the rightful wielder's own strength holds out.

* the Hitchcock film, ends abruptly with no suggestion as to how the plot might proceed from there, as the protagonist throws the pack of cigarettes he's just finished into the fireplace and watches it burn.
* The Hitcher (1986). The protagonist (who's delivering a car across the United States) is arrested on suspicion of the murders actually committed by the serial killer (the eponymous hitchhiker). He asks the police to call the car dealership to verify his story. The police do so, but hang up when no-one answers, despite protests that they should have let it ring longer.
* The Hitcher disowned it (because he thought its few changes were for the worse).
* The Hitcher features a severed finger in a man's fries. He doesn't notice until he directly looks at it.
* The Hitcher II: I've Been Waiting has a shoutout to that scene with Jack cutting off his own finger and casually tossing it into a deep fryer.
* The Hitcher. Oh, and he's a psychopathic killer that beats down anybody he pleases.

* The Hitcher remarks, "I've figured out that rape is always funnier if there's a crow involved!"
* The Hitcher: Screenwriter Eric Red can be seen in a cameo role toward the end of the film as a sheriff's deputy escorting the prisoner to the transfer bus.
* The Hitcher, the protagonist stops at a roadside diner to call the cops on the serial killer who's been pursuing him. The killer slips a human finger into a plate of fries the waitress brings him.
* The Hitcher, who never loses his calm as he continues killing people in gruesome ways.
* The Hitcher with him, he also wants to make sure that Halsey doesn't have a girl by his side.
* "The Hitch-Hiker" ends with Inger Stevens finding the title character in the back of her car this way. It's not really that much of a scare, though, since by that point she's already figured out (and accepted) his
* The Hitch-Hiker. Furthermore, in the radio version, Ronald picks up a woman and briefly gives her a lift but she leaves after he tries to run over the hitch-hiker. In the television version, Nan gives a lift to a male sailor, who leaves for the same reason.
* The Hitch-Hiker, gets picked up by two vacationing Americans. He forces them to transport him south through Baja California, intending to kill them when he reaches his planned destination.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy (1978) before hitting the big time with this show- had this sort of location in mind. And apart from Arthur, for whom the novelty of walking on an alien world has not yet worn off, none of them are terribly impressed.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy (1978) producer, Geoffrey Perkins.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy (1978) who appears as the current page image. This character also appeared in the novelizations and the TV series.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy (1981) a collection of artificial biomes housed in the world's largest sealed greenhouse. Rather apt, since Magrathea was home to a species of world-builders.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy (1981): An ordinary British fellow is rescued from the destruction of Earth, and travels the cosmos with his long-time friend who turns out to be an alien.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy (1984), and a packet of "no tea." Also no small towel; Infocom did its audience the honor of assuming they already knew where their towel was.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy (1984), at which point you can simply type "get no tea" and the puzzle is solved.
* The Hitch Hikers Guide To The Galaxy 1984 being reborn "on a higher and better plane of existence". Shame you're dead, really.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy (1984) computer game, you have to set up a completely absurd series of events that will ultimately cause the fish to land right in your ear.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy (1984) (hero vs. natural disaster).
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy (2005). In addition, a box of Starbix breakfast cereal (seen only in the animated Guide entries in the television version) appears as a physical prop in the movie (albeit with an updated design).
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy. (According to Oolon Colluphid, anyway. Some people think it's all a load of dingo's kidneys.)
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, adding that someone on board the Heart of Gold bruises their arm. The identity of the person who is bruised, however, is withheld at this point, since it was not particularly plot-relevant, and considered a safe level of suspense. As a result, the reveal is tacked on, seemingly as an afterthought.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy admitted that he didn't write her as a well-rounded character because he never really understood women.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, all forms of currency are ultimately proven to be either pointless or useless.

* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy allow them to communicate with all the rest of the known universe, including the interplanetary immigrants they are marooned with.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, along with almost every other computer, robot or happy vertical people transporter.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy also drops a lead lampshade on the in-setting zeerust of the 'ultra-modern' courtroom where the Warmasters of Krikket were tried for attempting to destroy the rest of the universe, mentioning that this was 2 million years ago, "when ultra-modern meant lots of stainless steel and brushed concrete".
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy (although technically not the future, the technologically-advanced galactic civilization seems equivalent to us) where all medical problems (except mental ones, meaning psychiatrists get very rich indeed) and so people resort to faking injuries and disabilities in order to keep the medical profession in business, and create something of a challenge, or similar.

* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, an Italian restaurant. Specifically, the strange and improbable mathematics that go into divvying up the check are extrapolated to allow the ship to move in strange and improbable ways.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, an organ piece which amounts to a lengthy discordant scare chord.
* The Hitch Hikers Guide To The Galaxy", a parody of the National Dairy Council's contemporary cream cake adverts, which had the slogan "Naughty. But nice".
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy Apparently the sound of a thousand people say "wop" simultaneously is the registered trademark of the Krikket-Kola Corporation, and is used with their permission.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy are named Shooty and Bang Bang in the radio script. They are unnamed in the book.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy are the only two humans left - for a while at least.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy are the true rulers of the Earth.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy: A robot, according to the Sirius Cybernetics Corporation, is "your plastic pal who's fun to be with."
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy around England and assuming the name was a common one, like John Smith.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy Arthur and Ford are tossed off the Vogon ship. They float free for a few seconds before the Infinite Improbability Drive brings the ship to save them.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, Arthur and Ford haven't seen the last of the bloody Vogons after getting thrown out of an airlock by them. Vogons don't like leaving jobs unfinished.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, Arthur Dent and Ford Prefect are sent several million years into the past and end up aboard a spaceship. To Arthur the control room looks like a spaceship control room should look, to Ford it looks thoroughly antiquated.

* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy Arthur Dent, Ford Prefect, and Zaphod Beeblebrox all land on giant sentient birds when they fall out of an enormous marble teacup. The birds lampshade this when landed upon, saying, "This is utterly ludicrous!"
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, Arthur Dent is forced to deal with the reality of the Earth having been destroyed by the Vogon Constructor Fleet.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, Arthur Dent is given the choice to make changes to the rebuilt Earth. The only change he makes is to remove himself and Trillian by leaving to explore the galaxy.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy: Arthur Dent is impressed by watching a twin sunset from Magrathea. Marvin is a little more jaded.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, Arthur Dent mentions that he used to have a recurring nightmare where he died and there was a bureaucratic error: all his friends went to heaven or hell, but Arthur got sent to Southend.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, Arthur Dent saves the ship from being destroyed. Zaphod tells him good work. Arthur says "It was nothing." Zaphod says, "Oh, forget it, then."
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, Arthur Dent, sick of getting something vaguely resembling bad tea from the Nutri-Matic machine, gives it a lengthy lecture on the nature and history of proper tea. The machine, being unable to fathom why the heck anyone wants mere dried leaves in boiling water, hijacks the starship's entire computing power to work on the problem, leaving the ship defenceless against a missile attack. Arthur gets his tea in the end, though.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, Arthur is afraid to go into the portal at Magrathea after the others. By the time he gets up the nerve and runs at it full speed, the portal is inactive and he ends up sliding through it.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy: Arthur is offered the opportunity to return to a recreation of his home on Earth, exactly (well, without the imminent demolition by Prosser) like he left it. He chooses to stay with Ford, Zaphod, and Trillian and continue exploring the galaxy.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, Arthur is sometimes like this about noticing that there are bulldozers ready to knock down the house he lives in.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy as being "akin to having one's brain smashed out by a slice of lemon wrapped around a large gold brick." Although this one may or may not be metaphorical.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, as long as you don't think about the fact that you're flying. It's not terribly hard — all you have to do is throw yourself at the ground and miss. (The only way to miss is to distract yourself, somehow, right in the instant before you hit the ground.) Once flying, though, it becomes vitally important not to let yourself become aware of the impossibility of the act, e.g. through a passer-by helpfully pointing this out, because they will be proved suddenly and painfully correct.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy as Perkins had to Douglas himself.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy as Trillian and Zaphod respectively, and American rapper Mos Def as Ford Prefect.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, a stylised cartoon accompanies each of the Guide's definitions. As well, at one point the characters briefly turn into stop-motion-animated yarn puppets after the Infinite Improbability Drive has been used.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy. As well as being ridiculously fast, it has the enormous benefit of not randomly turning planets into banana fruitcake as it passes.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy at least for the Tertiary Phase.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy. At the end of it, it's all but stated outright that the Dolphins were responsible for restoring Earth.
* The Hitch Hikers Guide To The Galaxy: A whale is briefly called into existence around planetary orbit, although its spaceborne existence ends shortly afterwards following a swift introduction to gravity and the ground.
* The Hitch Hikers Guide To The Galaxy because of how he played Zaphod in the stage show, you want him to actually play the character that way.

* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy before you hit the ground. Then, of course, you can only keep flying as long as you keep forgetting that you should be falling. The books note how difficult this is to pull off in practice. The first time Arthur Dent flies, he's only airborne for less than a minute.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy being used by Prostetnic Vogon Jeltz to torture Arthur Dent and Ford Prefect after he caught them hitchhiking. For the audience's sake only short bits of it are heard between the screaming and the Guide's explanation.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy books has Arthur Dent and Ford Prefect bump into each other unexpectedly after a long separation. Arthur says "You!" Ford just sighs and prepares to assume his usual role. "What do you need to have explained this time?"
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy books has a shield at least one inch thick. A Vogon attack with a dozen 30-megahurt cannon just pounds away at it, presumably trying to get through via brute force.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy briefly discuss the temporal/literary theories of one Dr. Dan Streetmentioner.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy but did not reach the Restaurant until the middle. It's been claimed that the last chapter was added on by the editors to wrap up the completed pages after Adams missed his deadline.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, but since Arthur Dent comes from the same place that produced said poetry, his perception is skewed, so he doesn't react nearly as badly.)
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy by accident, and to make it look intentional.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy by activating the Improbability Drive without specifying any desired result at all, on the theory that since Our Heroes are about to be killed by oncoming missiles, any outcome at all is preferable. It works, as the missiles are transformed into a bowl of petunias and a very confused whale, which is very bad for the petunias and whale, but very good for Our Heroes.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy by mentioning that in Galacticspeke, "easter" means flat, small, and light-brown, which Easter Island is; the name France, whose meaning is not explained, is also an entirely meaningless coincidence. This is because one of the side effects of working on the Improbability-powered starship Heart Of Gold, which was built on France-the-island, is a whole string of entirely meaningless coincidences.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy by the name of Now What, with identical continents and extremely violent wildlife.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, called the "Somebody Else's Problem Field", which relies on "people's natural predisposition not to see anything they don't want to, weren't expecting, or can't explain". This renders Slartibartfast's spaceship, which is described as resembling an Italian bistro with fins and engines, invisible to bystanders.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy can't bring himself to give a damn. Then it turns out to have been the galaxy's most powerful super-computer. The trope gets played more or less straight from there on.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy carried the scene where one cast member, whose identity shall not be disclosed because revealing it here would only hold up the story, bruises their upper arm in a tense stand-off with guided nuclear missiles. The run-out groove at the end of the side tells you the bruised crewmember was Arthur Dent.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy come from the planet Vogsphere.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy considers them to be a mistake.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy contains a lampshade on this when discussing a real-life Rain God — "We can't call him supernatural, because people think they know what that means, and we can't really call him paranormal either for the same reason. So let's call him 'paranatural' or 'supernormal'..."
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy depicts the Vogon constructor fleet as a net of identical, featureless black cubes encircling the Earth, hovering in the way bricks don't.

* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy describes an alien race that travels across the galaxy to declare war on our planet. Due to an unfortunate size miscalculation, the alien fleet is eaten by a small dog.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy didn't tip them off to the fact that they had an advantage in the form of the Infinite Improbability Drive.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy did store them in a slightly out-of-the-way location without telling anyone that there were plans that someone needed to look at and file an objection to ("What do you mean, you've never been to Alpha Centauri?") "I could never get the hang of Thursdays." Arthur remarks as all this happens.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy died from a sudden heart attack. Adams said of his experience trying to get the film made, "Getting a movie made in Hollywood is like trying to grill a steak by having a succession of people coming into the room and breathing on it." For several years, the About the Author blurb in Adams' books included the line (in the context of discussing the Hitchhiker's series) "A major motion picture is currently in development hell and should be coming out any decade now." This no doubt helped popularize the term.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy does state that becoming one's own grandparent through time travel is nothing that a significantly well-adjusted family can't deal with.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy does this for the titular Guide. However, the editors trim down the comprehensive article he wrote about Earth to "Mostly Harmless" (it previously read "Harmless.")
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, dolphins' warnings of the earth's impending destruction were mistaken for their trying to perform tricks.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy: Doors manufactured by the Sirius Cybernetics Corporation are programmed to love their simple lives; they love nothing more than to open and close for passing users, and thank them profusely for so emphatically validating their existence.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy. Douglas Adams admitted that he wrote the situation with absolutely no idea how to get them out of it, and came up with an improbability-based solution as a result of watching a TV show about judo.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy (due to its similarly casual tone) itself.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy DVD has a rather odd Easter Egg when you use the Infinite Improbability Drive. It shows a rather… strange cartoon.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy: Eddie, the shipboard computer on the stolen Heart of Gold spaceship, is annoyingly cheerful. He can even work out your personality problems to ten decimal places if you like.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy effects and detune it by a tritone.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy effects that happen with the Infinite Improbability Drive.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy element of the humour is absent.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy enters the ear (but just stays in the ear canal), although it's more helpful than other creatures of this trope.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide To The Galaxy (episodes 7-12) was written off as a psychotic episode suffered by Zaphod Beeblebrox.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy eponymous reference updates itself over the "sub-ether," implied to be a galactic Internet-like communications medium.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy falls under a subset: Brain the Size of a Planet But Sooooo Depressed.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy featured a whale that was created randomly in the upper atmosphere of a planet, where it proceeded to fall to the ground. Questions of how it survived lack of oxygen and possibility of it burning up in the atmosphere are waived in favor of a bit of hilarious internal monologue.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy features a particularly hammy performance from their Zaphod Beeblebrox. This can also apply to the TV version, it used the same actors, but the low-budget second head tends to reduce the ham. Also the corporate executive Hig Hurtenflirst, who only appeared in the radio version of the franchise.

* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy features several passages which are narrated or read from the guide to preserve jokes that are funnier for how they're described than for what actually happens and to capture memorable passages that can't really be filmed as scenes.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy film, Arthur detaches Marvin's right arm for use as an improvised weapon, despite having no tools handy (unless Ford's towel is that cleverly made).
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, Fit the Eleventh, the Dolmansaxlil Galactic Shoe Corporation takes over planet after planet by forcing them to build more and more shoe shops. This process is confirmed to be already taking place on Earth on Oxford Street, and its ultimate outcome is the Shoe Event Horizon, when the world economy overbalances and collapses and the survivors evolve into birds so they never have to put feet on the ground again.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy flying is the art of deliberately abusing this trope. Specifically, throwing yourself at the ground and missing, and then making sure not to think about the fact that flying is impossible, or else gravity will glance in your direction and demand to know exactly what the hell you think you're doing.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, Ford enters a virtual world in which some inhabitants carry laser guns. If they shoot you, you're dead, as you're "as dead as you think you are."
* The Hitch Hikers Guide To The Galaxy Ford notes that it could even be the chair with two headrests that Zaphod and Trillian sat in earlier, which leads to this exchange:
* The Hitch Hikers Guide To The Galaxy, Ford Prefect and Arthur Dent find themselves two million years in the past of Planet Earth — which is a massive supercomputer devised, at mind-boggling-cost, to figure out the Question to the Answer of the existence of lifekind. Arthur realises they are at that point on the program where discovering The Answer is imminent. The Answer is of course Forty-Two. By a feat of lateral thinking, they discover the Question.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, Ford Prefect describes going into hyperspace as "unpleasantly like being drunk." He and Arthur Dent are aboard a Vogon ship, and as it goes into hyperspace:
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, Ford Prefect explains why aliens always seem to land in the middle of nowhere.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, Ford Prefect tells the Golgafrinchams (with whom he and Arthur Dent have landed in prehistoric days) that their days as the human race will be numbered in 2 million years when the Vogons destroy Earth.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, Ford Prefect uses this as a method of coercion: "In moments of great stress, every life form that exists gives out a tiny subliminal signal. This signal simply communicates an exact and almost pathetic sense of how far that being is from the place of his birth." Ford hits the barman with an "incomprehensible sense of distance" and very much gets his point across.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, Ford turns into a penguin as a result of the Infinite Improbability Drive. He is told to stop it.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy for laughs but mostly glosses over it.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy found himself faced with a writer's dilemma: His characters had just gotten thrown out an airlock, and would pass out and die from lack of oxygen in 30 seconds, and it was so utterly improbable that another spaceship would come around within those 30 seconds to rescue them that to have had that happen would've been nothing short of this trope. This gave him the idea for the Infinite Improbability Drive.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, from places like New York and Rio De Janiero, then a flock of sheep merely bleating in their pasture as Vogon construction ships come into the atmosphere. This lies somewhere between hilarious and utterly terrifying.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy generation's iPod to the Heart of Gold's current gen model.

* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy gets called Earthman, although he is one of only two remaining humans. (Trillian is only ever "Trillian".)
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy go both ways, since aliens sometimes remark on Ford and Zaphod having a pet monkey with them instead of assuming Arthur is a member of their race.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy. Golgafrinchans are so close to humans that their colony displacing the cavemen in 2 million BC went unnoticed, even by the higher-dimension beings running the planet.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy" grew in volume under him, until Zaphod tells Marvin to cut it out, whereupon the final two notes barely make it out.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy had Marvin connect himself to a police ship AI so they could have a chat. The AI, upon learning Marvin's view of life, the universe, and everything, terminated itself and took the policemen shooting at the others with it.
* The Hitch Hikers Guide To The Galaxy, had Simon Jones, Geoffrey McGivern, Susan Sheridan and Stephen Moore reprise Arthur, Ford, Trillian and Marvin, with Mark Wing-Davey returning as Zaphod on some dates. In addition, Samantha Bèart reprises the role of Random Dent from the Quintessential Phase and Toby Longworth and Andy Secombe reprise — among other characters — Prosthetic Vogon Jeltz and Colin the Robot.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy has a different short, humorous quip stuck onto the end of the credits, occasionally tangentially related to the episode that had just played.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy has a galactic empire that Zaphod Beeblebrox used to be president of. And which seems to have nothing better to do than demolish planets to build hyperspace express lanes or chase after the ex-president. There was also a hugely prosperous empire that collapsed five million years ago, due in large part to everyone's money going to Magrathea's luxury planet industry.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy has all kinds of asides and Guide entries that are only marginally, if at all, connected to the thread of the story.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy has a reference to a gigantic sign reading "SHARE AND ENJOY" (the advertising slogan of the ever-profitable Sirius Cybernetics Corporation Complaints Department). Being too heavy, the sign falls into the underground office block underneath, which is a little unfortunate for the occupants. In the local language the exposed top halves of the letters now appear to read "GO STICK YOUR HEAD IN A PIG" and is only lit up for special occasions.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy has a theory on God's non-existence as a guide entry. Shortly, it goes like this: Since nothing as useful as the Babelfish can be born through coincidence, this proves God's existence, but with knowledge, there isn't faith, and without faith, God is nothing. This seems to follow the same logic. It's also noted that most theologians consider the whole thing "a load of Dingo's kidneys".
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy has a total of 29 races spanning throughout the entire six-book series.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy has at the heart of the plot a bomb that would cause every sun in the universe to go supernova at once, resulting in complete annihilation.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy has a variation. After Arthur Dent and Ford Prefect time travel on a sofa Arthur starts describing everything by color only.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy has caused a serious disruption in the successful use of Plot Armor.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy has Eccentrica Gallumbits, the triple-breasted whore of Eroticon VI. Some people say her erogenous zones start some four miles from her actual body. Ford Prefect disagrees, saying five.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy has hyperspace routes as analogous to British motorways; the Vogon Constructor Fleet demolishes Earth to make way for a new hyperspace express route.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy has several examples, most notably Ford and Zaphod's unnamed species from the Betelgeuse system (the latter's extra head and arm are due to surgery). The only known differences are biological incompatibility with humans and multi-centennial lifespans. This resemblance is explicitly only through human eyes; when the two are with Arthur (a human) other aliens can tell right away that he's a different race and usually assume that he's their pet monkey.

* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy has the people in the Golgafrincham B-Ark — the joke being that all the jobs they do are useless, 'pointless' jobs — which have at least partially dated. While middle-management types and meddling marketers remain problems, people don't really look down on hairdressers as being 'pointless' any more (in the 1970s it was just beginning to become socially acceptable for a man to go to a hairdresser's instead of a barber's, but it was still seen as very weird — nowadays men go to a hairdresser's as default, and viewing a service mostly of interest to women as pointless is seen as a bit misogynistic). Then there's the 'telephone sanitisers', who have ceased to exist along with the public telephones they service.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy has the rise and fall of the Galactic Empire as part of the back-story of the planet Magrathea.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy has this to say on how time travel changes how one refers to things:
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy has to be among the silliest works in print.
* The Hitch Hikers Guide To The Galaxy has two examples. There is Marvin, the robot who is programmed to constantly sound sad (voiced by Alan Rickman, RIP) and the ship's navigation bot which is constantly cheerful. The funny part comes in because the robots keep their characteristic sound even when the words they are saying make no sense that way. This isn't just about intonation either, the ship's navigator constantly says things like "good news everyone, the missile is headed for us in 10, 9, 8.." Marvin meanwhile says things like "oh no, look at this beautiful sunset". The interactions between the two robots are even more silly for this reason.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy has Zaphod building up a speech after landing on the planet Margrathea with Marvin cueing up "Thus Spracht Zarathrustra" until Zaphod tells him to "can it."
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy have a definitive ending, and left all sorts of dangling loose ends for when the third radio drama got written. Further sequels were created posthumously.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, have scenes on or in reference to Earth that make more modern cultural references, or include as common technology things that would not yet have been common or even have existed. Of course, when dealing with possibilities such as different versions of Earth existing across multiple planes of reality, one supposes that such things may be relative. The most noticeable example is that "novelty ringtones" have replaced digital watches as the thing that primitive ape-descendants still think are a pretty neat idea.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, having originated on radio, doesn't bother with the giant head and just has the alien menace speak through the hidden powerful sound system with no visuals. Still notable because the novel actually spares a paragraph to explain how the hidden powerful sound system was achieved.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy heads as collateral before their trip to Magrathea.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy. He captured the robot and disabled the chip that controls access to its "happy module", so the robot was happy doing anything at all. Including intervening between Ford and a missile.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy He is taken for granted so often with little or no gratitude it's a wonder he doesn't violate the prime directive.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy. He orders a salad, which causes the talking soon-to-be-entree to roll its eyes and remark that the vegetables wanting to be eaten are unable to express their feelings, and that's why "it was eventually decided to cut through the whole tangled problem and breed an animal that actually wanted to be eaten and was capable of saying so clearly and distinctly." Then,

Arthur decides to order a glass of water. Which in turn can be read as ironic considering the joke from the first book: "It's unpleasantly like being drunk." "What's so unpleasant about being drunk?" "You ask a glass of water." And this is a universe where a bowl of petunias has sentience, so you never know.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy Hexagonal Phase is dedicated to Susan Sheridan, the original Trillian.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, Hotblack Desiato is supposed to sound like a character from a dystopian science-fiction story, and so on.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, however, many critics may play the humourist/satire card as a way of claiming that the fact that it's funny means it's somehow not science fiction.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy. Humanity comes from a ship whose inhabitants thought they were to be a colony...their people were just annoyed with them and sent them off to an unknown fate. Things happened.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, Humma Kavula takes one of Zaphod Beeblebrox's heads as collateral while they retrieved the POV gun. He mounted it on a hula girl bobblehead and put a sign that read "Idiot". (No, he's not bitter about losing the election to Zaphod. Why'd you ask?)
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy: Infinidum Enterprise's Computer Terminals in the Hitchhiker's Guide buildings. There is a quote explaining how they're not a 'clunky typewriter in front of a television set', but in fact a brain-computer interface thing.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy in gigantic neon letters atop the top of their corporate home office. When the roof collapsed under the weight of the letters, only the top half remained legible reading in the local language as "Go stick your head in a pig."
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy in its entirety was split up into phases (Primary, Secondary, Tertiary, Quandary, Quintessential and Hexagonal) and each phase was split into six "fits" (reference to Lewis Carroll).
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy in order to make hyperspatial express routes.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy in response to fans attempts to find significance and hidden meaning in the work. It went completely ignored until he finally revealed that the number 42 was the answer to 6 different questions about the grid.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy. In the earlier radio series they were rescued when Arthur's towel become fossilized and picked up by the Infinite Improbability drive in the future. In the third book of the "trilogy", they are instead "rescued" by a sofa that was supposedly displaced in time. It brought them back to modern day Earth, a few days before its destruction.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy. In the liner notes for the Tertiary-Quintessential scriptbook, Simon Jones (the voice of Arthur Dent) notes that everybody sounded the same, even if they looked a bit different. However, he adds, "Dirk [the producer] says he applied some arcane electronic test that proves my voice has dropped a semitone in the intervening twenty-five years; funny, I always thought men's voices became higher as they grew older."
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy: In the radio series and book adaptation, Arthur tries to tell Marvin about a glorious sunset he's just watched, to which Marvin replies "I've seen it. It's rubbish." In the movie, Marvin says this about a video recording.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy: In the Tertiary Phase, the Guide decides the sound effect of the Wicket Key opening the Slo-Time Gate doesn't work, and redoes the scene with a different one.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy: Inverted. Marvin the Paranoid Android was a "Genuine People Personality" prototype for the Sirius Cybernetics Corporation ("A bunch of mindless jerks who were the first against the wall when the revolution came"), and his dour demeanor obviously made him a discard only to wind up in the servitude of Zaphod Beeblebrox. He does what he's told, but with the gusto of a cubicle office worker.

* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy involves our hero, Arthur Dent, being whisked away from his cozy existence and forced to deal with an insane and slightly larger galaxy than he'd previously known with the help of Ford Prefect.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, in which 578,000 million clones of a girl Lintilla were produced due to a malfunctioning cloning machine.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy is a fuzzy, white monochrome image.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy is constructed almost entirely out of lampshades (held together with British snark, postmodernism, and cynicism).
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy is "darkish", with brown eyes and black hair. On-screen, she's always been played by white actresses.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy is from an era of videophones, rather than one where people "still think digital watches are a pretty neat idea".
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy is not very specific about its size, but the Kill-O-Zap gun is definitely not a gun to be trifled with.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy is only clean because it's so new that it still has the protective film on.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy is said to smile in this way, "a little too broadly, giving people the unnerving impression he was about to go for their neck."
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy is the son of the only survivor of the Collapsing Hrung Disaster on Betelgeuse VII. His father was never able to satisfactorily explain what a "hrung" is, why it had collapsed (or why it chose that planet to do it on), or how he's survived it himself.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy is this, given that each of his incarnations is killed by the same man, unknowingly.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, it says that the history of warfare is divided into three phases: retribution, anticipation, and diplomacy.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy. It's been noted that rules disagreements end up at times starting wars. Which, all things considered, are considered more healthy.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy itself has the "Sub-Etha" (occasionally written as "Sub-Ether"). In later books, it's even implied that a sort of Internet has been built upon the technology (it's used to automatically update the Guide to the latest edition).
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, it's Humans Are White and British.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, it's mentioned that Zaphod Beeblebrox became president only after surviving his opponent Humma Kavula's vicious "Don't Vote for Stupid" campaign. Kavula would later claim Beeblebrox only won because people thought they were voting for the "Universe's Worst-Dressed Sentient Being."
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy. It's supposed to make him sound like a bit of a dick, though.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy; just to start, the Babel Fish being made unnaturally doesn't mean God had to have made it. Of course, that doesn't stop in-universe writers such as Oolon Coluphid from cashing in on the argument.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy: Life, The Universe And Everything.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy: Lintilla has a pseudofracture (all the pain, discomfort, and swelling of a broken arm without the trouble of it actually being broken) and a 'crisis inducer' which place her under extreme pressure and thus push her to work harder/faster.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy. Luckily, the only thing that happens this time is a redecorating of the ship's bridge, and the two nuclear missiles being replaced by a live sperm whale and a bowl of petunias. (Also occurs in the book, TV series and movie adaptations.)
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy manages to hit every point in the spectrum. Arthur even points it out. "Well, it's a whole lot better than that dingy Vogon crate! This is my idea of a spaceship, all gleaming metal, flashing lights, everything."
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy Marvin manages to kill off the trigger-happy cops who are shooting at the heroes. He does it by explaining his philosophy of life to their life-support computer, as a result of which it commits suicide.

* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, may be taken as a parody or a deconstruction of this trope, with the over-bureaucratization standing in for over-mechanization.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy — 42 is the Answer to The Ultimate Question of Life, the Universe, and Everything.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy — in the radio play, they are fairly amiable, and upon discovering that Arthur is in the ideal position to find the ultimate question, offer to make him "a reasonably rich man" if he does. In the book and subsequent adaptations, however, they are much more sinister, plotting to steal his brain in order to read the question from it.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy mentions that every intelligent species independently came up with a drink whose name sounds like "Gin and Tonic". Of course the drinks themselves vary widely, from water served slightly above room temperature to being able to kill a cow at two hundred paces.
* The Hitch Hikers Guide To The Galaxy mentions the Hagunennons, a "super-evolutionary" species that constantly evolves into different shapes. Hagunennons look down on other species, calling them "Filthy rotten stinking samelings".
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy mentions three cases of funny money:
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy. Movie!Arthur notices and does a clearly visible double-take.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy movie features the original Marvin robot (from an earlier adaptation of the same series) as an extra. Another scene features Simon Jones, the actor who played Arthur Dent in the original radio drama and TV versions of the series, as a prerecorded Magrathean hologram. And the last image of the entire movie is Douglas Adams.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy movie itself. Those who knew about this trailer might have been confused as to why they were seeing an ad for the movie they were about to watch.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy movie, the vogons attempt to execute Trillian by feeding her to the Ravenous Bugblatter Beast of Traal.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy movie, this happens during the Improbability Drive shift, ending in Stopmotion.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy notation (it's 54 in Base 10, the numbering system we use every day). Douglas Adams responded to the suggestion that this was deliberate with, "I may be a sorry case, but I don't write jokes in base 13."
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy Note that it actually does equal 42 in base 13 math. People asked the author if this was intentional:
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy novel, cricket suddenly becomes pivotal to the plot, and the story begins with a cricket game. Of course, it turns out that cricket is actually linked to an alien plot to kill everything everywhere.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy offer to replace Arthur's brain with a computer, and Zaphod jokingly suggests that it would only need to be able to say "What?", "I don't understand" and "Where's the tea?" and no one would notice any difference.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxyofficial motto of the corporation's complaints department.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy of it: "[Arthur] reached out and pressed an invitingly large button on a nearby panel. The panel lit up with the words 'Please do not press this button again.'" At no point is this button ever mentioned again.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy ominously replaces these reassuring words with small, alarming letters just saying "Panic." It turns out to be a very apt warning.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy: One book explains how to fly by throwing yourself on the ground and missing. One rule is never to listen to what people on the ground are saying, because they will invariably tell you this is impossible, which will cause you to fall. Arthur Dent finds out this is true, since he starts to fall out of the sky when he thinks about how impossible it is for him to fly.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy: One of the many things the captain of the Golgafrinchan B-Ark looks forward to is a hot spring to warm his bath with, preferably one in a nice leafy glade with a nearby soap mine. His response to anyone who doesn't think that soap can be mined is that perhaps no-one has looked hard enough, a possibility that is "reluctantly acknowledged".

* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, on one of its narrative asides, mentions that back when their home planet was still inhabitable, the Vogons would sit on a sort of gazelle-like creatures for entertainment. The Vogons are huge, monstrous things and the gazelles were small and sleek, meaning that sitting on one would break its back and kill it... but the Vogons sat on them anyway (not surprisingly, since they're supposed to represent everything daft and stubborn about humankind).
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy opens with a word-for-word repeat of that exact same monologue, but instead ends with the line "This is her story."
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy (original radio show version), the ship's Improbability Drive causes it to rematerialise in what seems to be a strange cylindrical cave on the planet of Brontitall. The cave is a mile deep, ice-cold and apparently carved out of marble. It's also hovering thirteen miles above the planet surface, and eventually revealed to be part of a massive statue of "Arthur Dent Throwing The Nutrimatic Cup" and held up by artistic imperative. Oh, and a society of birds now live in Arthur's right ear.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy Parodied. After an explanation on the nature of Magratheea, and how its inhabitants routinely made planets, the Guide finishes this explanation with: "Of course, in these enlightened days, no-one believes a word of it."
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy: Parodied by The Sirius Cybernetics Corporation and its robots with "Genuine People Personalities." The result is the sullen, sarcastic Marvin.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, particularly since he was in space for the first time owing to Earth's destruction.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy. Particularly the little ball hitting the wicket, that's very nasty.)
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy pint of beer and a packet of peanuts nowadays.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy planet of the Vogons can detect when someone has an idea and... whacks them in the face with a spade. Originality is frowned upon.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy primary phase ends with Arthur Dent trying to teach Scrabble to the caveman in order to help them evolve. "The only word they know is 'grunt' and they can't spell it right." Arthur and Ford Prefect use the letters from the Scrabble bag as a random element in coaxing the Ultimate Question of Life, The Universe, and Everything (the answer being 42, which the caveman has pointed out on the board).
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, put in a jar and connected to the ship.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, queuing to petition for Trillian's release from their jail.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy Radio Serial —> Books —> TV Series —> Adventure Game —> Movie
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy radio series, Arthur is asked this, to which he sensibly replies, "Do I know you?... Well, without knowing you it's hard to tell. I mean I quite like some people, others, not so much." He later goes on to explain that very few of his friends "have piercing red eyes, black armour, and laser rifles."
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy radio series, during the description of the Guide's advice when falling from a great height, the narrator points out that the Guide does not mention the possibility that someone might survive by falling onto a large bird in flight because "the very idea is utterly ludicrous". Arthur, and later Ford and Zaphod then fall onto large passing birds who both remark:
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy radio series that was never adapted in other versions has a fifteen mile high statue of Arthur Dent Throwing the Nutrimatic Cup. The mile-long marble cup floats in mid-air "because it's artistically right."
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, radios have gone from buttons and dials to touch-sensitive panels to a system where you wave a hand in its general direction and hope. It's not the most user-friendly interface out there.

* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy reference when he learns Fenchurch's name: was she found at Fenchurch Street Station?
* The Hitch Hikers Guide To The Galaxy said that there's a rumour Marvin the Paranoid Android was based on comedy writer Andrew Marshall, but it was only a rumour, and he should know because he started it. He also said that later Ford Prefect became increasingly based on "Geoffrey McGivern's [the actor who played him on radio] more extreme behaviour in pubs". He denied that Arthur Dent was based either on Simon Jones or himself, although Arthur was close enough to himself that he could put his own experiences into Arthur's life without too much difficulty.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy scene in the final episode establishing that Marvin's still around.)
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy) seen in the series. They have a very poor reputation and at one point it's mentioned that their complaints division is the only part of the company that turns a profit (and that seems to be true because of the SCC's motto "Share and Enjoy").
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy sense of suspense, though, he does not say whose forearm — until the closing credits of the episode. It was Arthur.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy sequel, Arthur Dent eats the least hairy things in his fridge after returning to Earth after a long expedition in space, unknowingly curing himself of a disease which would have otherwise wiped out half a hemisphere.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy series concerns the unfortunate fate of the combined battlefleets of the Vl'hurgs and G'Gugvunts, sent out to annihilate humanity after it is discovered exactly who it was who started the terrible war between them. Unfortunately, due to a terrible miscalculation of scale, the thousands of horribly beweaponed warships were swallowed by a small dog.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy series, some words and phrases have almost universal phonetic equivalents in every other language, even though the meanings often vary considerably. Examples include:
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, she was brought back for the three much-belated series made after Douglas Adams' death.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, Slartibartfast complains that the cleaning staff didn't freeze so well... leaving nobody to clean up the bodies.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy so much that he became disillusioned and refused to do it anymore.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy". So the medical profession is resurrected to provide artificial injuries, diseases, and disabilities to boost people's performance — "you always overcompensate for your disabilities."
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy so they could "meet at the pass and team up", then a fifth to explain the plan more fully and a sixth for moral support.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy stopped evolving shortly after they stopped being an aquatic species. The planet Vogsphere has created many other life forms far more appealing than the Vogons, which they inevitably destroy for their own amusement.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy tells of a terminally ill fan who, inspired by the books' running joke about one being secure in the knowledge that he's prepared for anything so long as he "knows where his towel is," made sure to keep his own towel with him in his final days.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy tells the cautionary tale of what happened on the planet Brontitall, where the human(oid) inhabitants realised they'd devolved too much power to robot servants, were almost nothing without them, and rebelled against the machines, rounding up all their servant robots so as to exile them to a penal planet where they would be kept gainfully employed knitting "continent toupees" for planets that had denuded all their rainforest. The sound-picture is painted of bewildered robots asking if they have failed in some way and not pleased their human masters, have they not Shared and Enjoyed, what can they do to put it right, as their captors whip them into line for exile.

* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy territory, as the rules we are given include helpful bits like "The winning team shall be the first team that wins". Only one complete list of the rules has ever been compiled, and it immediately collapsed into a black hole.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy that he could render the planet's largest mountain invisible, but lost when people noticed that (a) the "invisible" mountain was also quite intangible and (b) the planet appeared to have acquired an extra moon.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy that he's supposed to be falling. Once achieved, he simply hovers there and can move around at will... but he has to be careful not to think too hard about what's going on.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy that humans are so primitive "they still think digital watches are a pretty neat idea." Funny in the late '70s, a bit baffling by the early '90s (they had marched on from being impractical high-tech gadgets to a commonplace item nobody would call "neat"), rather on-the-nose now.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy". That is—until the missiles actually come at them.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy that the other side of the toasted slice will still be cold.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy that undid the ending of the fifth. Many hardcore Adams fans simply chose not to read this book.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, the 15-mile-high statue of Arthur Dent on the planet Brontitall. (He didn't found the society there, but he inadvertently inspired them to alter their entire way of life.)
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy. The Arthur Dent part of the statue stands on the ground; the Cup part of the statue hovers in midair. How? Because it's artistically right.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, the automatic doors on the Heart of Gold are characters in their own right. It is their pleasure to open for you and their satisfaction to close again with the knowledge of a job well done.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, the book begins with the main character waking up to see that his house is being demolished without proper notice. The demolisher then states that he did have proper notice, but it is revealed that there was no way he could have actually known about, or seen the notice. Then, spaceships appear all over the earth and it is revealed that the earth is scheduled for demolition and that they were given "proper notice..." Luckily, the main character survives.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy. The central revelation in the story is that Earth's purpose is an experiment/computer program from extraterrestrials in order to determine the meaning of life.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy; the creature is so mind-bogglingly stupid that if you block your line of sight by wrapping a towel around your head, you are safe because the beast thinks that since you can't see it, it can't see you either.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy. The earlier ethereal bit was a Pink Floyd instrumental — which caused copyright issues, and the joke was cut from the home audio release and most of the later versions of the series.)
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, the Earth gets destroyed by the Vogons to make way for a hyperspace bypass.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, the eponymous guide mentions that the best way to annoy a Vogon is to feed their grandmother to the Ravenous Bugblatter Beast of Traal. It also mentions that a Vogon won't save their grandmother unless they received an order signed in triplicate, sent in, sent back, queried, lost, found, subjected to public inquiry, lost again, and finally buried in soft peat for three months and recycled as firelighters.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy: The film adaptation has Ford and Zaphod sharing three of their mothers.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy. The four subsequent novels were later adapted for radio.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy), the Golgafrinchans managed to out-compete and replace Earth's native hominids and survived long enough to start some form of civilization.

* The Hitch Hikers Guide To The Galaxy, the humans currently on earth were descended from telephone sanitary workers and hairdressers, set to crash into the Earth by the other people on their planet, who were later wiped out by a disease that occured due to contaminated telephones.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, the Infinite Improbability drive changes a missile into a sperm whale two miles above the surface of a planet. It has about half a page of monologue to come to terms with its own existence, comprehend its situation, and come up with a name for the big round thing rushing up at it really fast before it learns, rather abruptly, that the ground does not wish to be friends with it, whereupon it becomes a rather messy crater at ground zero.
* The Hitch Hikers Guide To The Galaxy, the Infinite Improbability Drive throws Arthur Dent and Ford Prefect into a highly improbable but not impossible situation:
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy. Their planet is inside a dust cloud which prevents any stars from being seen in the night sky. When they build their first spacecraft and see a universe full of stars, they are absolutely horrified by the sight and promptly begin making plans to destroy it all.
* The Hitchhikers Guidetothe Galaxy. The Magratheans seem worthy of a mention, taking this idea to its logical extreme by creating a custom planet-building business.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy (The old kind, with red LEDs which only light up when you press a button.)
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy the others. Invariably, of course, people start to complain about the things that were added and the things that were left out, with nobody being able to say which is the definitive version or which version is pandering to whom.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, the planet Vogsphere is infested with shovel-like parasites that prey on free thought by smacking anyone who has it in the face. Arthur gets bludgeoned twice and dismissed... right up until Ford gets hit right afterwards. Despite their best efforts, the characters all have to go running through the desert under constant attacks.
* The Hitch Hikers Guide To The Galaxy, the real travel book that inspired it.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, there is a galaxy-wide system of government, and the only reason we don't know about it is that we aren't as advanced as everyone else yet. In fact, there are a few aliens living on Earth, and a handful of humans know about them, but they have no connection to any Earth government. And the Earth has been blown up on one occasion, but it (and everyone on it) has been replaced with the same memories up until shortly before the world ends, so nobody remembers it.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy they moan that now they'll have to walk all the way around to the other side of the garden to get in.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy. They name leaves as legal tender and immediately start setting fire to trees to fight inflation.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, they're called "Brian" and "Peter", presumably Brian "Jonners" Johnston and Peter Baxter.)
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy they've come to knock his house down.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy. This does not appear to have been done to simplify the story (it doesn't); they simply liked Jonathan Pryce's portrayal of Zarniwoop and wanted him back.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, this extended to planets in such shapes as octohedral.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, this is actually true: being in orbit is literally a case of moving so quickly horizontally that you keep missing the ground while falling.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy. This is apparently a hazard of being from a Plural sector, the parts of the universe which have a multiverse. Hyperspace jumps interact with that in weird ways.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, thus removing any guilt one might feel while eating meat. Arthur Dent is horrified, of course, and opts to have a salad instead. The creature in question is extremely offended by this rejection.

* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy: Time travel, acknowledged but never needed for a while in the stories, is used to escape from mice who want to dissect Arthur's brain. As a subversion, the mice then have the option to create another biological super computer to find out what they wanted to know, but which would take 10 million years to process it — instead of making it and then travelling in time for the answer, they decide that it's too long to wait and falsify data.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy today already, why not round it off with breakfast at Milliways, the Restaurant at the End of the Universe?"
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy to that storyline in his dialogue.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, Trillian explains that she decided to go into space with Zaphod because, with her degrees in Mathematics and Astrophysics, it was either that or back to the dole line (these may have been hard sciences, but highly specialised and, at the time the series was written, would not have given entry in to the general jobs market — the time when a Mathematics degree could get you a highly paid banking job was yet to come).
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy Trillian more diplomatically says it "resembles tea".
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy". Turns out the answer isn't very useful if you don't know the question...
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy underwent heavy cuts to get five seasons into a two hour show. Near the end, Slartibartfast brings up a number of the missing scenes and mentions that the eddies in the space-time continuum have lead to Arthur missing whole chapters of his life.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy unhinged, so that when Arthur insists that he's not doing it on purpose and the universe is just "playing silly buggers" with them, Agrajag point-blank refuses to believe it.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy universe we are merely unknowing experimental test subjects being monitored and controlled by otherdimensional beings who assume the forms of white mice. A more profound question is how the dolphins got here and left, since they are also superior to us.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy uses the infinite improbability drive, everything and everyone in the ship briefly turns into yarn. The actors are all replaced by stop-motion yarn figures for this gag.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy was a BBC Radio series before it was a book. (Though the radio series is itself an example: the well-known parts of the story are all from the "primary phase".)
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy was an original story. When it was adapted for radio, it started where season 1 ended with Arthur and Ford stranded on a prehistoric Earth. The second season was explained as having taken place entirely in an artificial universe (which was mentioned in that season, but only in two episodes).
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy was not a particularly dire threat.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy was published eight years after his death, it counts).
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, was sufficiently late that the publisher just told him "look, finish up the page you're on and we'll send someone to get it in an hour."
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy watches a cartoon on a television at one point instead of watching or knowing it internally.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, we are introduced to Mr Prosser, the man trying to demolish Arthur's house to build a motorway bypass. When Vogon Jeltz, the alien trying to demolish Arthur's planet to build a hyperspace bypass, shows up, he's played by the same actor.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, when Arthur takes the precaution of asking Ford, "if I were to ask you where the hell we were, would I regret it?" Ford cuts to the chase and tells him where they are. Arthur was probably happier when he didn't know.

* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy. When Ford and Arthur are saved by the Heart of Gold Ford is taken aback when Arthur (a dour Englishman who has obviously never left Earth before) knows both Trillian and Zaphod. They'd met at a party some months before, where Zaphod had only one head and called himself Phil. (When asked about it, Zaphod doesn't recall ever being in the Sol System, much less on Earth, but remembers everything when Arthur specifies it down to which district of London it was in.)
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, when it's established that (due to the effects of the Infinite Improbability Drive) Ford and Trillian are the only two members of the core cast who haven't coincidentally met before:
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy When you have folks like Ford Prefect as your roving researchers, it's to be expected.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, when Zaphod's about to plummet to his death, Ford tries to engage him in a conversation about the etymology of one of Zaphod's exclamations.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy when Zaphod, Trillian and Marvin are being eaten by the Ravenous Bug Blatter Beast Of Traal:
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, where a character has rain always follow him, but in this case, it's explained that it's because he's a rain god and doesn't know it, so the rain wants to follow him.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, where a Frogstar fleet shows up and flies off with the Guide's headquarters building to get their hands on Zaphod, who was inside at the time.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, where it's changed to hyperventilating and emptying your lungs.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, where the entire planet gets blown up in the first part of the book... because it was in the way of an intergalactic freeway. Subverted when they replaced Earth. Then subverted once more when it was blown up again.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, where Trillion reveals she's worked out who's really behind the Kriket Overloads' attempt to destroy the universe.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy which butchered Douglas Adams' vision... apparently unaware that most of the more contentious material (such as the increased focus on the romance between Arthur and Trillian and the Humma Kavula subplot) were actually put in there by Adams himself.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, which doesn't even seem to occur to Adams until two books later, when he has to construct a kind of Shaggy Dog Story (and an incredibly lame pun) to wrap up a loose end he hadn't even acknowledged previously.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, which succeeded in anticipating both Wikipedia and eBook readers several decades before their invention.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy while Zaphod Beeblebrox gives his spiel before his assault on Magrathea:
* The Hitch Hikers Guide To The Galaxy, who are in pursuit of Zaphod for stealing the Heart of Gold. They're not the sort of cops who enjoy gratutiously shooting people, although they do so anyway.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, who hates his owners, his creators, himself, and the whole of existence, and never stops telling this to anyone who will listen. (Presumably the marketing division of the Sirius Cybernetics Corporation was referring to a different sort of robot when it advertised "Your Plastic Pal Who's Fun To Be With!") On at least two occasions Marvin was able to stop the opposing forces by linking into their computer system, making it depressed or even suicidal. Eddie would be a better fit for this trope except for the fact that he's an immobile computer.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, who is not disposed to assist on the grounds that there's no point.
* The Hitch Hikers Guide To The Galaxy, who played Zaphod Beeblebrox on some dates of the 2012 stage play, takes the role of Left Brain, Zaphod's former second head.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy whose jobs naturally include this.

Slartibartfast, for instance, once won an award for his work on the fjords in Norway.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, who was complicit in the memory wipe but left a message by burning his initials into his own brains.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy (who was the primary or sole writer of the radio, TV and novel versions).
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy who were written off as "useless" by their home planet and tricked into leaving.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, who wrote deliberately terrible poetry and who respectfully asked that his name and location be removed from the book adaptations. Thus people now ask why the name changed from Paul to a 'Paula Nancy Millstone Jennings' in Sussex in subsequent versions and discover the story of where Adams got the idea from.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, with an extra emphasis on the insufferable part.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy without so much as batting an eye, and as far as they're concerned it's your own fault for not looking into these affairs.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy with telepathy. Everyone on their entire planet could hear every thought in every other mind on the planet, whether they wanted to or not — which quickly threatened to drive them bonkers from information overload and/or sheer boredom. They solved this by adopting the habit of constantly talking loud enough to drown out the constant, unwanted incoming mental transmissions.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy with the Vogons, who love writing poetry. And then reading it to their captives as a form of excruciating torture.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy work, and the production team lost patience after a few days of filming and downgraded its role to a mostly inanimate prop, with a line where Zaphod tells it to "go back to sleep" added to cover it.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy would laconically inquire about the characters' predicaments at the end of a "fit" then entreat listeners to tune in to the next exciting installment a week later.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy, writing in an introduction to a complete edition, relates "This was a joke that missed American audiences entirely of course, since they had never heard of the rather oddly-named car, and many thought it was a typing error for Perfect."
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy wrote a scene for the TV series in which he gets a new outfit, and the producer rejected it because it was funnier if he was still wearing a dressing gown. So from then on, he was retroactively always wearing the dressing gown.)
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy wrote the character with Jones in mind.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy," Zaphod Beeblebrox advises "Never ever drink more than two Pan Galactic Gargle Blasters unless you are a two-ton wooly mammoth with bronchial pneumonia."
* The Hitch Hikers Guide To The Galaxy. Zaphod Beeblebrox shares three mothers with Ford Prefect (with the implication that there are also mothers they don't share), making them semi-half-cousins.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy). Zaphod's first words in the episode were "I've recovered." Marvin had lost an arm shortly before getting eaten; as this was never referenced again, it presumably got better too.
* The Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy "zark off" is derived from his name as well.

* The Hitman. He has a fling with a mob lawyer who happens to be the boss's squeeze. When the boss finds out, he has Garret sold out to his rivals and the girl killed.
* The Hitman: Ron Delany (Michael Parks), the main character's old partner, is revealed to have actually been working with gangs in the area to supervise illegal shipments when he shoots his partner for interfering. He later joins up with an Iranian gang to wipe out all the opposition.
* The Hitman's Bodyguard. Bryce uses a mook to shield himself when another unloads his pistol into him. The bullets actually end up going straight through the mook, but Bryce ends up unharmed because he was also using a steel lunch-tray as a second layer of protection.
* The Hitman's Bodyguard during the climax, kicking him off the roof where he'd just tried to escape by helicopter and sending him falling to crash into a parked car on the street below.
* The Hitman's Bodyguard paying a visit to a professor who's been saying things critical of his government. He decides that having the professor executed for treason will simply inspire other dissidents to step up and take his place, so he instead personally kills the professor's wife and son, then throws the professor in an internment camp.
* The Hitman's Wife's Bodyguard, his head of security. The two are also confronted at the same time in the climax: Aristotle by Kincaid and Sonia and Senior by Bryce.

* The Hivans apparently worship the seven Demons that once ruled the world, and believe that one of them, The Dreamer, slumbers beneath their capital of Metnal. Ritual human sacrifices meant to awaken him/her/it are carried out by the royal family, who function as the high priests of the religion. Weirdly, the country is actually a fairly progressive place for the setting.

* The Hive Lord in one of the sequel's expansions is a monstrous creature, meaning it's flagged as a vehicle for the purposes of barging through things. Some of the missions were designed without taking this into account, meaning that the Hive Lord can counter-flank ambushes or take massive shortcuts just by smashing through a vehicle-breakable wall.

* The Hiver Federation is known for manipulating low-tech species to accelerate their development and form cultures friendly to them. * The Hivers are quite firmly enlightenment, having a society that can be best described as "anarchic socialism" and being not only highly technologically advanced but also quite willing to share it with less fortunate races.
* The Hivers are semi-feudal, divided into clans founded by "Princesses" spawned by the Queen.
* The Hivers, which is a name used by humans and not by the species itself (their name, translated to English, means "The Children"). Also the Zuul, who are a descriptively named species in Liir speech: The word is a root of the Liir term for "abominable". The Zuul have no name for themselves, their telepathy doing odd things to their sense of personal identity, and probably don't care what others call them.
* The Hiver system also has a weird form of social mobility: Hiver brains can survive for a few days after the body dies, and princesses can swallow the disembodied brains and recycle them into new bodies. If a worker or soldier impresses the princess enough she might decide they're leadership material and rebirth them as a prince. Do something

* The Hobbit (1977), the dragon Smaug's Achilles Heel is adapted from the book version to a small burrow where a single scale is missing.
* The Hobbit actually had a somewhat plausible plan: Steal back the crown jewels, use them to crown Thorin as King, and then have him call in alliances from the other dwarf nations to help deal with the dragon.
* The Hobbit, a flashback depicts a dwarven army barricading themselves against the attack of Smaug. When the dragon bursts through the gate and walks right over the defenders, dwarves go flying without Smaug even seeming to notice.
* The Hobbit. After Bilbo steals the Arkenstone and takes it to the Elvenking and Bard to negotiate a deal with the dwarves, Bilbo treats the entire thing like he is negotiating for a business transaction and makes the whole affair sound like a mess of legal matters rather than a brewing war between the dwarves, men and elves.
* The Hobbit, after the defeat of Smaug, the people of Laketown come to Thorin seeking compensation for their lost town, which Thorin refuses. After some hours, messengers return reasonable demands. Guess how Thorin responds.
* The Hobbit a lot of the time, and Gandalf is a trickster who cannot be relied on for at least half of the journey as he comes and goes apparently capriciously, having greater issues to tackle that are only later revealed.
* The Hobbit also features the underground-dwelling Wood Elves of Mirkwood, who probably got the idea from Menegroth.
* The Hobbit and ends the endless battle between good and evil, but when he returns to the Shire, his cousins Merry and Pippin are the ones who get the respect, due to becoming warriors and leading battles against the brigands who had taken over the Shire. Though in Frodo's case, he wasn't really bothered, being too busy dealing with his trauma from carrying the Ring.

* The Hobbit: An Unexpected Journey, Gandalf describes Radagast the Brown as a great wizard, the watcher and protector of the forest. Slam cut to Radagast, a doddering old man covered in bird poop and dirt.
* The Hobbit: An Unexpected Journey, Gandalf explains his reasons for choosing Bilbo for the quest:
* The Hobbit: An Unexpected Journey has an example where it's one character talking to himself that leads him to a conclusion.
* The Hobbit: An Unexpected Journey is sitting on a bench that's audibly creaking under his weight. So one of the other dwarves decides to toss him a sausage, and the bench promptly collapses.
* The Hobbit: An Unexpected Journey is twice the size of his brethren - both vertically and horzontally - and he has a beard made out of fat hanging from his jaw.
* The Hobbit: An Unexpected Journey, Kíli joked about orcs to a nervous Bilbo. Thorin immediately sternly lectures him on taking the matter so lightly. It's understandable why Thorin doesn't think it's something to be joked about, because orcs had overrun the dwarf kingdom Moria and killed many dwarves (including Thorin's grandfather) which Thorin had witnessed firsthand.
* The Hobbit: An Unexpected Journey moment as the other dwarves laugh at him.
* The Hobbit: An Unexpected Journey, Radagast is shown to have bird poop in his hair. This is to be expected, as he keeps a birds in a nest under his wizard hat.
* The Hobbit: An Unexpected Journey's historical sack of Erebor in the novel (see below) is used in the first movie to portray a cinematic fire-and-destruction sequence.
* The Hobbit: An Unexpected Journey: Stephen Hunter (Bombur) caught the egg thrown into his mouth on the first take, but was unable to catch it on subsequent takes. Therefore the take used was the first one.
* The Hobbit: An Unexpected Journey takes his death at the hands of Gandalf remarkably well.
* The Hobbit: An Unexpected Journey, this was how Dwalin and Balin greet each other, although with dwarves, it's more of a full contact headbutting. A weary version occurs between them in Balin's flashback when they both discovered they survived the Battle of Azanulbizar, surrounded by a field of dead dwarves.
* The Hobbit: An Unexpected Journey). Thorin holds a lifetime grudge against Thranduil for refusing to help at that crucial moment.
* The Hobbit: An Unexpected Journey Thranduil's army marching up a hill overlooking Erebor is shown in a flashback.
* The Hobbit: An Unexpected Journey when the dwarves arrive at Bilbo's house: Dwalin is seen with his hand in the cookies jar, and he has a hard time pulling said hand out, mostly because his fingers are far too big to fit in a jar made for Hobbits.
* The Hobbit: An Unexpected Journey, when the party is captured by trolls, Bilbo tries to stall and avoid them being eaten by claiming the dwarves have parasites.

To which Kíli dumbly protests, until Thorin (despite being tied up in a bag) kicks him so that he changes his tune.
* The Hobbit: A rather unbalanced version of this occurs when Thorin and his band are holed up inside the Lonely Mountain as the armies of Laketown and the Wood Elves try to get in to claim the treasure.
* The Hobbit are able to escape. In contrast, the Noldor of Rivendell are portrayed as wise and noble, but they also avert the trope by being friendly and gracious hosts.
* The Hobbit are on a quest to reclaim their ancestral kigndom, taken centuries ago, from the dragon Smaug.
* The Hobbit, as all the other characters chant war slogans while marching into battle, Bilbo comments "Personally, I'd rather be back in Hobbiton."
* The Hobbit, a species of 3-foot tall hominins that lived on the Flores island roughly a thousand years ago.
* The Hobbit attacked and conquered the Lonely Mountain from the dwarves, driving an entire kingdom's survivors into poverty and exile in the wilds for years while he held the mountain and its treasure as the de facto king. Taking the Lonely Mountain (and the goodies inside) back from him is the dwarves' motivations in their quest.
* The Hobbit, because it's insufficiently Invested With Significance...
* The Hobbit: Before it was conquered by Smaug and turned into his personal treasure horde, Erebor was a dwarven city ruled by the King Under the Mountain.
* The Hobbit, Bilbo Baggins introduces himself to the trolls as "a bur- a hobbit." ("Bur" = "burglar", the profession designated to him by Gandalf.) To them, he's a "burrahobbit."
* The Hobbit: Bilbo Baggins is hired to be one of these, and manages to become one after obtaining the ring.
* The Hobbit: Bilbo Baggins, the title protagonist is pushed out of his front door on an adventure he doesn't want to go on, playing a role he has no idea how to play (he's recruited as a "burglar"). He is rather inept at first, but finding The One Ring helps him a great deal and in Mirkwood especially he comes up with some clever rescues for the Dwarves. He also notably spends the entire climactic battle unconscious, invisible because of the Ring, and hit in the head by a stray rock. Other hobbits in related works have similar roles.
* The Hobbit, Bilbo gets separated from the Dwarves when one of the Dwarves (who's carrying him) ducks his head to enter a low passage and Bilbo gets knocked off his back.
* The Hobbit, Bilbo gives out a warning cry "which is surprisingly loud for a creature of their size."
* The Hobbit, Bilbo is employed as a thief to help return the gold to the dwarves after it was taken by the dragon Smaug.
* The Hobbit, Bilbo is sent to scout for danger, and told to hoot like a particular type of owl if he finds any. He's not given a chance to explain that he doesn't know how to, which becomes a problem when he does discover something.
* The Hobbit, Bilbo tricks Gollum into thinking that he's escaped the dark underground tunnels. Gollum goes to "chase" Bilbo, and Bilbo simply follows Gollum out of the caves.
* The Hobbit, Bombur, the last of Thorin's dwarves, is an overweight, incompetent comic relief character who appears whenever someone has to trip and blunder. And then it happens in a cursed river that makes him fall in a slumber and the rest have to actually carry the quite girthy, all things considered, runt for hours.
* The Hobbit brought the "silver-tongued dragon" archetype to Western audiences.
* The Hobbit but actually spends the entire climactic final battle unconscious, having been accidentally hit in the head with a rock. On a larger scope, while it looks like the most important thing to come out of the war is the reestablishment of Erebor and Dale, the really important thing is eliminating Smaug as a potential ally to Sauron. And of course, Bilbo's discovery of the One Ring and pity on Gollum are both more important than even that.
* The Hobbit), but because he's only doing it to break the curse, and not because he genuinely wants to, it obviously doesn't count as an unselfish act. It's only when he chooses to try and defend Bilbo from Azog - despite being badly injured - instead of fleeing that he returns to his normal size.

* The Hobbit by contrast, some of the citizens of Laketown are non-white.
* The Hobbit by dwarf standards. They also have accents that range throughout Britain, from Scotland to Ireland and Wales. Glóin, the most stereotypical of the dwarves, is the father of Gimli, who is arguably the modern day codifier of the trope.
* The Hobbit Card Game features this as an unfortunate side effect of some characters' card-dealing abilities. With particularly bad tricks, they may not even get a choice in the matter.
* The Hobbit, Dís subtly sets up her son Fíli with a woman from Laketown, whom she likes, by telling him to go and buy something for her which this woman sells on the market. After that plan works flawlessly and the two want to meet again, she provides an opportunity for a second meeting.
* The Hobbit dislike of spiders; he said he began to put spiders as bad guys in his stories because one of his sons was an arachnophobe.
* The Hobbit do not like elves. And as several flashbacks make clear, this resentment is not without reason. Thorin is so disdainful of them that he very nearly refuses to wield one of the finest and mightiest blades ever forged in Middle-Earth, purely because it is of elvish make.
* The Hobbit, Dwalin threatens to rip a child's arms off if he ever tells anyone how they snuck into Bard's house via the chamber pot.
* The Hobbit, dwarves are portrayed as having different beauty standards from men and other races which results in Thorin and Kili, the two most human-looking dwarves in the cast, being considered unattractive by their kin due to their too-small noses, too-short beards, and too-slender builds, much to the hobbit Bilbo and the elf Tauriel's shared bemusement.
* The Hobbit, dwarves preferring the east as the chief direction as mentioned above.
* The Hobbit enjoys puffing on his pipe filled with mushrooms (type unstated).
* The Hobbit, Esgaroth, or Lake-Town, is built on a series of wooden platforms in the middle of the Long Lake, ostensibly as protection from the local fire-breathing dragon.
* The Hobbit even more so. His experiences with the Dwarves and Smaug ensured he never quite fit in with the hobbits again, and when he abandoned the Ring, he left the Shire for good, living the rest of his life with the Elves. First in Rivendell, later in the Undying Lands. Although the effects of the aforementioned Ring certainly didn't help.
* The Hobbit evidently use his children, his son Christopher in particular, as a sounding board for the chapters (and it was Christopher whose imagination was especially captivated by it all) in order to get a feel for what worked and what didn't, even though he hadn't written it "for" them.
* The Hobbit, explaining the reasoning behind many of the changes made while adapting the book.
* The Hobbit fanfics about this that it may well be considered its own genre. Fanon has it that dwarves have complicated courting customs and of course it almost never occurs to them that Bilbo might not be familiar with those.
* The Hobbit fanfiction that often occur because Bilbo and the dwarves come from different cultures.
* The Hobbit films carry over the likenesses of the characters established in the films, continuing to run with the additional details not found in the books.
* The Hobbit. First when Thorin and company (of 12) fight their way as far as Bolg's bodyguard. Second (and more effective) is when Beorn fights his way to Bolg himself — in bear form.
* The Hobbit, Frodo, Bilbo's cousin and adopted son, is seen as odd (even before he starts idolizing Bilbo) and very much wants to go on an adventure like his cousin; when he does, it takes a heavy physical and emotional toll on him and leaves him unable to live in peace in Middle-earth.

* The Hobbit. From Chapter 8 "Flies and Spiders." At this point, Bilbo was in his 50s and little has been said of his hobbies or activities before being recruited by Gandalf.
* The Hobbit, Gandalf achieves a variant of this by keeping the trolls who had taken Thorin and his companions prisoner talking until the sun came up (turning the trolls to stone). Bilbo attempts this to defuse the tension between the elves and men and the dwarves. It doesn't turn out so well. Also, in a milder example, Bilbo learns Smaug's weakness and avoids being caught and eaten by flattering and speaking cleverly with the dragon.
* The Hobbit, Gandalf notices that trolls have caught Bilbo and the dwarves, so from his hiding place Gandalf disguises his voice to keep reigniting the trolls' argument over how to prepare the dwarves and hobbit for eating, stalling for time until the sunrise turns the trolls to stone.
* The Hobbit, Gandalf's Glamdring beheads a goblin so cleanly that the head doesn't budge from the now stalled goblin — complete with eyes still moving — until Gandalf nudges it, causing it to fall. Since Thorin's Orcrist and Bilbo's small Sting come from the same elven source in Gondolin, they can be assumed to share the same quality. This is true in the book as well; Bilbo demonstrates Sting to Frodo by thrusting it deep into a wooden beam with little effort.
* The Hobbit getting greenlit at all. One has to wonder what Tolkien would make of the six PJ-helmed adaptations of his works, given his life-long skepticism...
* The Hobbit gives a short and simple backstory for the conflict, likely because Tolkien hadn't established that part of the setting properly yet, so he just needed something easy and simple. The reason is actually remarkably petty; The elves claim that the dwarves refused to part with some jewelry even after the elves had paid them to work the raw jewels. The dwarves claim that they were never paid, and kept the jewelry as compensation. The whole thing seems to be intentionally as petty as possible.
* The Hobbit, Glóin tells Bilbo, "You can say 'Expert Treasure-hunter' instead of 'Burglar' if you like. Some do."
* The Hobbit going to war with the Elves of Mirkwood and the Men of Esgaroth over Smaug's treasure.
* The Hobbit had orcs named Ugslap and Krugbit, in typical Middle-earth fashion.
* The Hobbit has 7 gods plus 7 goddesses, and 3 Silmarilli. Tolkien sure liked prime numbers. Also, 9.
* The Hobbit has a Dwarven door in the Lonely Mountain that foreshadows the later book's Moria gate — a secret passage into the very heart of the Lonely Mountain whose keyhole only appears on the rarely-occurring Durin's Day and whose key was lost for years.
* The Hobbit has a secret underground passage into Smaug's lair; Bilbo uses it to steal a goblet from Smaug's hoard while Smaug is sleeping, causing Smaug to go on a rampage when he figures out that it's missing.
* The Hobbit has Bombur, the practically circular dwarf. He is the subject of much fun-poking, particularly when he falls into an enchanted sleep and the company has to carry his enormous girth for an extended period. But though Tolkien made Bombur's rotundity the subject of fun, he didn't make Bombur stupid or inept. He is as bold and skilled a warrior as his fellow dwarves.
* The Hobbit has Gandalf asking Bilbo to "bring out the cold chicken and tomatoes"; this particular reference bothered Tolkien enough in retrospect that when he revised the book, he changed it to "cold chicken and pickles".
* The Hobbit has no problem having one of his underlings collect his head. Presumably, either the beatdown was good enough or he thought Thorin was already dead.
* The Hobbit has the Battle of Five Armies: Elves and Lakemen vs. Dwarves vs. More Dwarves vs. Orcs and Wargs. Gandalf intervenes to get the dwarves to ally with the elves and men right at the outset, however. Other semi-independent factions that join the goodies later on include the Eagles and Beorn.
* The Hobbit have a fair amount of fanfiction, videos and art dedicated to them.
* The Hobbit have confirmed that theatrical cut for the third film isn't what Jackson intended and that the extended cuts of all three films are closer to his original intention.

* The Hobbit, he follows the classic journey of self-discovery that is associated with the trope.
* The Hobbit he orders his people not to leave the keep once the forest gets dangerous. In the book he is reluctant to fight the dwarves ("Long may I tarry, ere I begin a war for gold,"), while in the movie, he is eager to fight.
* The Hobbit. He's one of the few married dwarves and carries a miniature of his wife with him at all times.
* The Hobbit hints that the woodland elves are somewhat dangerous but they are mostly whimsical and unreliable.
* The Hobbit) interact with taller characters like Gandalf and Thranduil.
* The Hobbit in the process. Then he stays alive long enough to give one final speech and goodbye to Bilbo that's really quite sad and dramatic.
* The Hobbit is a children's story with Bilbo Baggins as an older protagonist. He's short (child-height), has no facial hair, and goes barefoot, but he also smokes a pipe, lives by himself as an adult bachelor, and is 50 years old.
* The Hobbit, it's a subtle running joke that the dwarves in the Company are so interchangeable that even Bilbo rarely bothers to differentiate them beyond Thorin and Bombur.
* The Hobbit. Just before he dies, Thorin forgives Bilbo for stealing the Arkenstone of Thráin.
* The Hobbit, leading to a visual gag where he takes time out from Elven music by stuffing a handkerchief in it.
* The Hobbit looked the same except for their hoods. The book didn't give them any more traits than that either.
* The Hobbit may also qualify, at least to the younger dwarves. None of them are his children, but half of them are fairly closely related to him: four of them are his third cousins (and brothers or first cousins to each other), and Fíli and Kíli are his nephews.
* The Hobbit might not really be pals with Sauron, but is presumably a close associate.
* The Hobbit. Moreover, New Zealand even changed its labor laws to favor Warner Bros after it was feared they might film in Eastern Europe instead.
* The Hobbit movie came out, there was an explosion of Fíli/Kíli slashfic. Many (but not all) of them operate from the canonical statement that dwarves love only once, and assume that the brothers have bonded to each other. Reactions of those around them vary from complete acceptance to revulsion.
* The Hobbit not just the protagonists or the most powerful beings, can have a major influence on the world.
* The Hobbit nowadays, Tolkien wrote it after scoring a hit with the former.
* The Hobbit offers us Messrs Grubb, Grubb and Burrowes, a notary firm that grubbed Bilbo's burrow and was selling it.
* The Hobbit originally featured a boss fight with a cave troll near the end of "Over Hill and Under Hill", which was scrapped, although references to it are found throughout the level.
* The Hobbit or that dwarves can carve their children out of stone like their creator Aule allegedly did with the first dwarves.
* The Hobbit plays up the animosity between elves and dwarves. Thorin hates elves because they wouldn't help fight off Smaug when he came to the Lonely Mountain.
* The Hobbit prefers to use his brain to get him and the others out of tight situations rather than with force or violence. Most of the film shows him using his skills with words from distracting the trolls long enough for Gandalf to get into position to his "game of riddles" with Gollum.
* The Hobbit Sauron, with the first generation recovering the lost One Ring and the second generation proving instrumental in its destruction.
* The Hobbit series, in expanding a slim book across three movies, adds a lot more action scenes, including:
* The Hobbit shown to get drunk on really large mugs of very strong wine (the exact amount needed is not specified), but then, Legolas is of somewhat higher blood than a mere warden. In fact it's difficult to get Legolas legless!

* The Hobbit shows Thorin Oakenshield, Durin's heir, working as a blacksmith in the time between the razing of the kingdom and his quest to restore it.
* The Hobbit, since his kingdom is under the control of an occupying power. He's only "King Under the Mountain" in the same way that, say, Charles de Gaulle was President of France in 1943.
* The Hobbit Smaug blows a jet of fire after Bilbo after their banter. Once outside, he asks if someone could "EXTINGUISH MEEEEEE!" while running around with the seat of his pants on fire until Thorin smothers it with a cloak.
* The Hobbit: Smaug. Given that he is an ego run amok, he clearly enjoys Bilbo's feigned flattery, despite being well-aware of who sent him and why. He doesn't think for a second it's true, but gives Bilbo an indefinite stay of incineration as long as he keeps it up.
* The Hobbit, Smaug the dragon's eyes actually shine like headlights, and illuminate what he is looking at.
* The Hobbit. So does Dori, but usually when it concerns his youngest brother Ori.
* The Hobbit some of the details of Bilbo finding the ring, with the Watsonian explanation that the original version was a lie that Bilbo told to Gandalf and the dwarves.
* The Hobbit's party and are arguing about how to cook them, this is one option they consider.
* The Hobbit starts, Smaug is the last of the true, great dragons left.
* The Hobbit starts with the protagonist calling some elves out on their nasty habit of mocking mortals. She is an elderly lady, and, as she points out, being mortal isn't exactly fun to her.
* The Hobbit that sucks all the sound out of the room and sends Goblins flying.
* The Hobbit that they recover enough to finally resettle Khazad-dûm.
* The Hobbit. The adventure starts out in Hobbiton and proceeds through hobbit lands, then into the semi-wilderness Lone-lands where they meet the trolls. The party enters the Misty Mountains, passes through the darkness of Mirkwood and eventually reaches the Desolation of the Dragon - the "bleak and barren" land around the Lonely Mountain.
* The Hobbit: The Arkenstone, the chiefest item amongst the regalia of the Kings Under the Mountain, and the recovery of which is one of the Company's main goals. It's clearly more than just a precious stone, but it's not clear whether it's actually magical, magic being exceptionally rare in Middle-Earth. Also, in the books, the Arkenstone was cut and shaped by the Dwarves to enhance its own "inner light," but the stone in the movie is clearly uncut, only polished, meaning that whatever illuminates from within is probably stronger in the movies than in the books.
* The Hobbit; the Battle of Five Armies swings back and forth, back and forth, from extreme to extreme. However, the latter example is also a subversion, in that Bilbo, the viewpoint character of the book, is knocked out early in the battle and only comes to once it's all over.
* The Hobbit: The Battle of the Five Armies: After Thorin holes up in the mountain and refuses to listen to reason, Gandalf and Bilbo go outside to speak with Dáin Ironfoot, his cousin, who has arrived with an army to help.
* The Hobbit: The Battle of the Five Armies, Azog's army uses chain-steered trolls as shock troops. Bofur kills the rider of one of them and takes the reins, wreaking havoc across the enemy lines like he captured an enemy tank.
* The Hobbit: The Battle of the Five Armies being in full force in this series. In the extended edition, a brief scene where battle is joined between the Elves and Dwarves prior to Azog showing up is depicted. In that fight, the Elves use a shieldwall as a sort of ramp that the Dwarves ride over, disguising their second rank which is set up specifically to allow cavalry through and surround them.
* The Hobbit: The Battle of the Five Armies, Bilbo is the one who comes closest to breaking Thorin out of his gold sickness and without any threat of violence or war. When Bilbo shows Thorin the acorn he got from Beorn's home, he says he intends to plant it once he returns home to the Shire and watch it grow and remember his amazing journey every time he looks at it. There is a brief moment when Thorin returns to his old self. And later on, Bilbo's voice and words are the last hallucinations Thorin sees and hears before he finally shakes off the gold sickness.

* The Hobbit: The Battle of the Five Armies culminates in a battle between a well-coordinated army on one side and several bands of improvising, numerically inferior fighters whose strategy is essentially either "hold your ground" or "blindly charge the leader". Needless to say, the protagonists are part of the second group.
* The Hobbit: The Battle of the Five Armies escapes from Smaug's wrath on a boat full of treasure and a handful of servants. When they want to go faster, Alfrid suggests that they should throw out something or someone. The Master agrees and throws out Alfrid.
* The Hobbit: The Battle of the Five Armies Extended edition has Galadriel turn an orc that was messing with Gandalf into meaty bits.
* The Hobbit: The Battle of the Five Armies has throughout the first two films possessed a mace stuck gruesomely in his left arm stump to make up for the arm he lost long ago, but in the final film, he trades the mace for a klingon-like blade when riding out to war.
* The Hobbit: The Battle of the Five Armies, his answer boils down to, "And?"
* The Hobbit: The Battle of the Five Armies planned for September 12, 2015, was set to be dedicated to him.
* The Hobbit: The Battle of the Five Armies, shares a loving headbutt with Kili before going to battle. He also shares one with Dáin when they meet on the battlefield.
* The Hobbit: The Battle of the Five Armies shows the armies of Azog, Bolg, Thranduil, Dain and Bard marching in formations.
* The Hobbit: The Battle of the Five Armies the toady of the Master, grabs a child to try to invoke this, after the town is destroyed by Smaug. Instead, the crowd wants to lynch him.
* The Hobbit: The Battle of the Five Armies this happens on multiple occasions. First when the Wood-Elves are besieging Erebor Thorin's cousin Dáin Ironfoot arrives with an army of Dwarves, though it turns out the Elves, men and Dwarves have to fight together to defeat the Orcs. Slightly subverted as it is used by the villains, Azog has his son Bolg bring another Orc army from Gundabad. Then played straight. As these Orcs enter the battle, an army of eagles arrive, along with the Wizard Radagast and the skin-changer Beorn, who turns into a bear and rampages through the Orc army.
* The Hobbit: The Battle of the Five Armies, Thorin and Azog are battling on a frozen river when they get stuck on a circular piece that tips with their weight. Thorin cleverly tosses Azog the giant rock he uses for his mace and then casually steps off the platform, causing Azog to be pulled into the water.
* The Hobbit: The Battle of the Five Armies. When the orc forces begin their attack on Dale, a troll with huge chunk of stones tied to his head rams the wall as a living battering ram and then... promptly flops back after knocking himself out.
* The Hobbit: The Battle of the Five Armies, which took up only a small portion of the novel (owing largely to Bilbo, whose eyes the battle was seen through, being knocked unconscious early on), stretched out for over an hour in the film.
* The Hobbit: The Desolation of Smaug and one of his eyes turns milky white as if it has been blinded. This lasts for several seconds until he regains control of himself and the illusion snaps back into place.
* The Hobbit: The Desolation of Smaug, Bilbo nearly kicks the key to Erebor off the cliffside in his haste to find it before the keyhole can vanish from sight. Thorin stomps on the leather thong to which the key is attached, pinning it securely under his boot, just before it can plummet over the edge.
* The Hobbit: The Desolation of Smaug book, so hiding this fact in the adaption of the prequel would be almost impossible.
* The Hobbit: The Desolation of Smaug cameo. The substantial amount of weight he'd lost makes him surprisingly believable as a younger version of the same guy.

* The Hobbit: The Desolation of Smaug ends with Azog's legions leaving Dol Guldur.
* The Hobbit: The Desolation of Smaug gets a cameo as one of the Master of Lake-Town's minions.
* The Hobbit: The Desolation of Smaug has Thranduil and the Wood-Elves. They're downright hostile, taking the Dwarves as prisoner indefinitely and confiscating all their belongings just for trespassing in Mirkwood. Thorin does get to literally argue with them, though; the Elves treat Goblins/Orcs even more summarily.
* The Hobbit: The Desolation of Smaug: hire a thief to steal back the crown jewels from Smaug's hoard, at which point Thorin can be crowned king and call upon his brother kings for aid.
* The Hobbit: The Desolation of Smaug, Kili finds the captain of Thranduil's guard, Tauriel, to be quite attractive. She does not appear to mind the attention.
* The Hobbit: The Desolation of Smaug, pretending to be a woman to avoid going into battle.
* The Hobbit: The Desolation of Smaug, Smaug does this upon seeing Thorin in the Hall of Kings.
* The Hobbit: The Desolation of Smaug: The dwarves realize Smaug is crawling through a chasm directly above them when a coin drops from the dragon's underbelly and lands on the bridge they're crossing.
* The Hobbit: The Desolation of Smaug this trope is subverted. Bilbo uses the ring to disappear and he stumbles onto the chambers of Legolas's father, Thranduil. Thranduil subverts this trope, asking why he is hiding in the shadows, and stating that he can come out now. However, Bilbo finds out that Thranduil is not speaking to him after all, but to Tauriel who had also been lingering in the shadows.
* The Hobbit: The Desolation of Smaug was to play Basketman, the Lake-town spy who emerges from a basket. Basketman's scene was cut after a complaint from Peter Jackson's wife.
* The Hobbit: The Desolation of Smaug when Thorin is rising out of a mine shaft via pulley system while being pursued by one of the dragon Smaug's fireballs, managing to reach the top and get out of the way just in time.
* The Hobbit: The Desolation of Smaug (which is built directly over the water of the lake).
* The Hobbit: The Desolation of Smaug which is carved from stone and an impressive part of the architecture in his main hall.
* The Hobbit, the dragon Smaug has red eyes which emit searchlight-like beams.
* The Hobbit, the dragon Smaug has this effect. The gaps between the scales on his throat and belly glow red when he's about to breathe flame.
* The Hobbit: The dragon Smaug's usual modus operandi with intruders is to burn first and enjoy it immensely, except with the case of Bilbo. After talking with Bilbo at length and nearly killing him, Smaug decides it'd be way more fun to let him live for a while longer and go kill innocent people just because Bilbo begs him not to and he knows it will make him suffer with guilt. The part where Smaug draws the line is when his sadism interferes with his greed; he would love to watch Thorin gain the Arkenstone and lose his mind to greed and corruption, but Smaug still wouldn't seriously consider giving up the gem to see it happen.
* The Hobbit: The dwarven party Bilbo joins is a fantastic version of this, with the idea being to take the riches of the Lonely Mountain. They explicitly enlist Bilbo as a "burglar."
* The Hobbit, the Dwarves seem to mostly operate this way, dealing with every obstacle as they happen. This becomes a problem late in the book, when they turn out to have no plan for getting rid of Smaug, which Bilbo doesn't find out until after they've already pissed him off by stealing from him.
* The Hobbit the orc warlord Azog has numerous scars running along his chest and face. Given that many of them are symmetrical they may be self-inflicted as a sort of very painful tattoo.
* The Hobbit, the party recovers a small treasure hoard from some trolls. Among the hoard are a pair of legendary elvish blades, Orcrist the Goblin-Cleaver and Glamdring the Foe-Hammer, two legendary swords forged millennia earlier by the elves of Gondolin. Thorin Oakenshield takes Orcrist, while Gandalf takes Glamdring.

Notably, these blades are also legendary among the goblins, who call them Beater and Biter and recognize them on sight.
* The Hobbit, there was a "large patch in the hollow of his left breast as bare as a snail out of its shell!" The old thrush sees this weak point too, and when Smaug attacks Laketown, it is able to communicate this weakness to Bard the Bowman, who exploits this weakness to slay him with his final — and best — arrow.
* The Hobbit, the trio of elven weapons found in a troll cave are these; Glamdring, Orcrist, and Sting. Elven, Elegant... and lethally sharp.
* The Hobbit They even believe the dwarves (and the elves and men) are a greater threat with the dead Smaug's treasure, prompting the Battle of Five Armies (when the Eagles join with the dwarves, elves and men).
* The Hobbit: This has become a popular characterisation of Thorin Oakenshield since the film version, due to his losing his way on the way to Bag End. Twice. Bag End, it must be noted, is built into the hill on what seems to be the main street of Hobbiton, so one must wonder how on earth he managed it.
* The Hobbit, Thorin and later Bilbo were the only ones who had enough sense and wits to not get immediately jumped by trolls, having a weapon out in a forest and thinking of a plan to escape Mirkwood. The rest of the dwarves may or may not get a moment before a major battle.
* The Hobbit, Thorin has trouble with saying Smaug's name. With the right actors, it leads to hilarity.
* The Hobbit, Thorin Oakenshield is this to his Company of dwarves and all of Durin's Folk since he's also the rightful King Under the Mountain. He's a Type IV, according to Balin, though with some shades of a Type I.
* The Hobbit, Thorin Oakenshield picks up Bilbo Baggins and "shakes him like a rabbit" when he learns that the hobbit has stolen the Arkenstone and given it to the men and elves besieging the mountain. At least, Gandalf manages to convince Thorin to not throw Bilbo down the wall.
* The Hobbit. Thorin to some degree is aware of this but refutes the truth when it's pointed out to him by Balin.
* The Hobbit Thorin when the latter refuses to believe that Bilbo might have a reason to stay with him other than being a spy for Gandalf or wanting Erebor's treasure for himself.
* The Hobbit: Throughout the film trilogy, Fili carries a ridiculous amount of blades and knives.
* The Hobbit throws his voice to keep the trolls arguing until daybreak.
* The Hobbit to be different in the details because if it wasn't they'd be adapting something they don't have the right to.
* The Hobbit to be Gandalf's move to deny Sauron a weapon of mass destruction by making this literally true. Smaug was the last great dragon left in Middle Earth (a number of weaker, lesser serpents survived in the far north), and even then he was no true match for the great dragons of the First Age.
* The Hobbit to happen for the characters to succeed in their quest — if the characters don't run into the trolls, they don't find the trolls' valuable weapon stash, and if Bilbo doesn't find the Ring, he can't become invisible when the party really needs someone capable of sneaking around and the Ring might fall into the hands of someone more susceptible to its evil influence.
* The Hobbit: Tolkien's map depicts the location of Smaug's Lair with the drawing of a dragon, and shows spiders within Mirkwood. It also has an arrow pointing off the edge of the plotted area, noting that to the north lies a terrible wasteland "whence came the Great Wyrms".
* The Hobbit to real. This is commonly called the Soap Opera Effect, because some feel it makes these expensive movies look like cheap shot-on-video soap operas (because the videotape format historically used on soap operas worked at 30 FPS rather than film's 24 and so had a similar visual effect to higher-framerate film).
* The Hobbit, to the point that the actors who play the Dwarves form a same level of camaraderie as the Fellowship actors.
* The Hobbit trilogy, adding in character moments and further explanation and fleshing out of plot points that greatly improves all three films.

* The Hobbit trilogy has launched Bilbo's (somewhat) addition to the equation since their release.
* The Hobbit trilogy. This ended up alienating fans of the book, while also falling short of the expectations of fans of the original trilogy.
* The Hobbit. Unlike the first film, the second one ends on a very sudden cliffhanger that leads directly into the third.
* The Hobbit uses flashbacks to show Sauron is his beautiful form, which he used to beguile the Elves into crafting Rings of Power. He used the name "Annatar", but the works that mention it are not covered by the game's license, so a close Sindarin form of "Antheron" is used instead.
* The Hobbit was a massive enterprise, intended to create an entire mythology.
* The Hobbit was originally a children's story and not an action-adventure tale for grown-ups. Or, for that matter, that Tolkien came up with the Middle Earth mythology merely as a hobby and only gradually worked out the details of the entire saga.
* The Hobbit was written as commissioned by Tolkien's agent as a followup. Despite this, the latter is more well-known and more often referenced.
* The Hobbit) wealthiest, mightiest and most industrious city-states in Middle Earth. Then the dragon Smaug came and sacked it single-handedly, leaving the Dwarves as a destitute and scattered people, wandering the wilderness. Their prince, Thorin, is shown ironically labouring away in a human smithy just to scrape enough money to get by.
* The Hobbit. We are told that dragons hoard an incredible amount of riches, but would never, ever spend any of it.
* The Hobbit were needed to make the two stories fit into the same setting.
* The Hobbit when he first hears her lovely singing voice outside Erebor and wants it all to himself. They gradually become companionable during the following year and realize their feelings for each other when Smaug allows Kathryn to leave and enjoy her freedom until she inevitably returns to him.
* The Hobbit: When Thorin Oakenshield was buried under the Mountain, the Elvenking laid Thorin's sword Orcrist on his tomb. Since the sword glowed blue when Orcs were present, this meant it also acted as an early warning system.
* The Hobbit when we get our first look at them, especially the last one.
* The Hobbit, where Bilbo lies to the Dwarves about how he got the ring and what it can do.
* The Hobbit where Gandalf becomes friends with Bilbo (who was fifty-ish). Also, Bilbo with the dwarves, particularly Thorin and Balin, who are both nearing the two hundreds. Even the younger dwarves like Fíli and Kíli are above their seventies.
* The Hobbit where the dwarves are introduced to Beorn, Gandalf doesn't want to introduce all of them at once, for fear that Beorn won't be willing to provide them with hospitality if he sees all of them right away. As a result, his account of their prior adventures slowly introduces the dwarves two at a time. Beorn notices the inflation as the story goes along, pointing out just when the numbers do not match up, but he is entertained enough to welcome them anyway.
* The Hobbit, where the interior seems to consist largely of bridges and platforms supported by stone colossi, presumably because there was a whole extra dimension going to waste otherwise. It really benefits Smaug, who can fly inside the dwarf hold despite being twice the size of a Boeing 747.
* The Hobbit where Thranduil the Elvenking, Bard the Bowman, and the whole Line of Durin lead their troops into battle. It ends badly for the latter, all of whom are killed in either the Battle of Azanulbizar (Thrór, Thráin, Frerin) or the Battle of the Five Armies (Thorin, Fíli, Kíli). Dáin Ironfoot is the only Durin dwarf to survive... until he's killed about 80 years later protecting King Brand during the War of the Ring.
* The Hobbit, where we learn Thráin was captured by Sauron; Gandalf finds him shortly before he dies.
* The Hobbit. Which itself is an inversion, as Bombur is portrayed as a pretty good guy in both book and film, but Thorin is a bit more complicated...

* The Hobbit: While Bilbo speaks with Smaug, the wicked and greedy dragon brings to the hobbit's attention something he hasn't thought about concerning the Company's quest to take Erebor back from Smaug; even if it were possible for the hobbit to claim his promised share of the treasure without Smaug having a say in it, he couldn't get far away with it all. Despite knowing that Smaug is trying to play mind games with him, Bilbo cannot help but be troubled to realize this.
* The Hobbit: While deep in the forest of Mirkwood, twelve of the thirteen dwarves are captured by a colony of gigantic spiders and hung from the trees to be eaten later. Bilbo is able to rescue them before this can happen, turning himself invisible with his magic ring and cutting the dwarves free.
* The Hobbit, while he's certainly involved in the main plot, Gandalf spends much of the novel attending to other matters, which turn out to be destroying the Mirkwood stronghold of the Necromancer, otherwise known as Sauron.
* The Hobbit; while the fic itself isn't half-bad, the Bilbo in its art resembles canon!Bilbo even less than fanon!Snape does canon!Snape in the image at the top of this page.
* The Hobbit: While wandering around the Woodelves' halls, Bilbo thinks Thranduil is speaking to him despite having the ring on, only for Tauriel to show up from behind him.

* The Hoenn era ends with Gary re-appearing with an Electivire, a Pokemon discovered in Sinnoh and Ash travelling to Sinnoh.
* The Hoenn saga would also introduce a secondary plot where Ash's female companion who's also a player character in the games would compete in competitions that are different from Ash's usual badge quest.
* The Hoffman Crew found mining at the High Bar mine in Oregon's Blue Mountains to be much like their first two seasons and their South American season. The Buckland claim didn't help them fill their 5000 ounce wish list either.
* The Hogan Family. Concerned that Mark and his girlfriend are sexually active, Sandy asks friend/neighbor Mrs. Poole if she can ask her "a hypothetical question". Mrs. Poole promptly lampshades this trope by replying, "I love it when people ask hypothetical questions, because I know they're really talking about themselves."
* The Hogan Family) might have typical "resolved in 30 minutes" timelines, real life doesn't work that way and that the problems he (Willie) caused will take far longer to resolve. (Willie and a buddy, bored one afternoon, had stolen his father's car to go out for a joyride, caused a hit-and-run accident, tried to cover it up and allowed his older brother, David, to take the blame.)

* The Hogan Family, one of the boys curses constantly until Valerie does this.
* The Hogan Family, Sandy finds the pornographic video Mark and Willie rented and practically turns upside down when watching it.
* The Hogan Family: The Season 2 episode "Leave It To Willie," where Willie imagines himself explaining his predicament – causing a hit-and-run accident while stealing his father's car for a joy ride – and basically getting away with it. The moral in this Imagine Spot is supposedly, "Tell the truth and you'll be absolved." Of course, reality doesn't work out that way – he admits his deed to his mother and gets punished, learning instead that actions do have consequences that aren't always good.
* The Hogan Family upon realizing that she's actually watching the pornographic video Mark and Willie rented.
* The Hogan Family where he sees a positive outcome to his predicament, decides to finally admit the truth. Instead, Valerie blows her stack, and not only does she refuse to accept the apology (since she sees less than zero sincerity in his attempt to blow things off as "no big deal") but tells him he's grounded from going to that much-anticipated party. Even worse: Valerie declares to Willie that, at least temporarily, she has lost trust in him. (And we don't even get to see how Michael will take the news (series star Josh Turner was not in this episode, his character said to be returning home from a flight) ... although we do see Valerie leave the house to pick Michael, an airline pilot, from the airport and she leaves it to Willie to sweat things out.)
* The Hogwarts founders. These fics are mostly a vehicle for demonstrating that fanfic writers have
* The Hogwarts Houses vs the Coven System. Hogwarts Houses are chosen for students, while Hexside kids can pick a Coven of their choice. While Houses aren't perfect as they breed rivalries, they aren't as oppressive as covens; Coven membership is mandatory and failure to join a coven is a high order criminal offense. When a witch joins a coven all of their magic is sealed off except the magic of their chosen coven. On the other hand, kids from different covens get along well, unlike when Gryffindor and Slytherin kids mix. You can also only be in one house at Hogwarts; Luz eventually bucks the system and joins multiple covens. Houses earn points, while covens do not.

* The "holding up the advert" variant is used with Todd's much-crappier-than-expected apartment in
* The Hold Steady's 2005 album "Seperation Sunday" revolves around the drug fueled life and travels of lapsed-catholic teenager Hallelujah (Holly) and assorted others (Gideon, Charlemagne, etc.)
* The Hold Steady's song "Chips Ahoy!" is written from the POV of the concerned boyfriend of a girl who uses her psychic powers to pick winning horses. The song was partly inspired by "The Rocking-Horse Winner" and the title is the name of one of the horses.
* The Hole for one of the boys. She's shown to be just as promiscuous, drug-obsessed and prone to hysterics as the other teens.
* The Hole in the Zero by M.K. Joseph (a book which plays with and deconstructs SF and fantasy tropes throughout).
* The Hole" is a 1962 short about two construction workers who have an aimless conversation about buying insurance, which wanders to the nature and root causes of accidents, before wandering to the danger of accidental nuclear war.

* The Hole, Liz drops the biscuit jar she is holding when Martyn hammers unexpectedly on the door.
* The Hole, Liz dyes her hair blonde to get Mike to notice her, but freaks out at the result and dyes it back. The actress is actually a natural blonde so the colour suits her much better than the black hair she has for the rest of the film.
* The Hole, Mike, who is American, is shown throwing the rugby ball gridiron style. As he does so, he is viciously tackled by one of the opposing players. Mike then hauls off and punches the guy in the face, which starts a brawl between the two sides. It is later shown that Mike does know how to play rugby and was just mucking about when he decided to throw the ball.
* The Hole reveals that Liz locked all her friends down in the bunker and allowed Frankie to starve to death, and Mike to murder Geoff - all in an attempt to make Mike fall in love with her. After escaping the hole alone, she frames Martyn and kills him to make it look like a suicide.
* The Hole". Two construction workers debate the danger of an accidental nuclear war. The more skeptical one suggests that science and technology are fallible and could lead to a nuclear holocaust. The animation shows a rat chewing through the power lines at an early warning missile radar station.
* The Hole was planned to be released theatrically in the US as it was in its native UK, but ended up going direct to video two years later. It has since developed a cult fan base.
* The Holiday, Amanda is tossing her ex boyfriend's belongings out of the house while he denies [and eventually admits] he cheated.
* The Holiday: Amanda Woods, realizing she loves Graham on the way to the airport, tells the driver to turn around and go back whence they came. When he gets to a part that's a little tricky [potentially dangerous, even] to navigate the car out of, she gets out and runs — on snow, in high heels — to Graham's.
* The holiday cartoon "A Decemberween Pageant" has Homestar and friends putting on a play about the first
* The Holiday ends with the two couples and their kids dancing around a Christmas tree.
* The Holiday: Graham asks Amanda, "You're not married, are you?", to which she replies, "Why? Do I look not married?" He explains that "No. It was just a backwards way of asking if you were married." Amanda clarifies that she's not, Graham says he's not either, and they have a little toast.

* The Holiday, when Miles (who writes film music) meets Amanda for the first time he is listening to film music that is eerily appropriate for the scene. You'll only notice when Amanda asks if he wrote the music that is playing in the background.
* The Holland Tunnel is particularly cruel: it's labeled as an Interstate, but it's an at-grade road with driveways and stoplights.
* The Hollies each other. No joke, the number of times that members of their band have helped out the others is legion. The friendship extends very much to the fans, and many times a Hollies fan is a Procol Harum fan and vice-versa. It helps that when Procol Harum had a date on Top Of The Pops in their earlier incarnation as The Paramounts, but had recently had all their gear nicked - guess who lent them theirs? And that the respective drummers, of said bands, Bobby Elliott and B.J. Wilson quickly became BFF's until Wilson's untimely death in 1990.

* The Hollies floating through her head at one point in Nirvana, which is appropriate given the tie-in with karma.
* The Hollies' "He Ain't Heavy, He's My Brother" reached No. 1 in 1988 (almost 20 years after its original release) after being featured prominently in an advert for Miller Lite beer.
* The Hollies' "Long Cool Woman (In a Black Dress)", who's "just a five-nine (177 cm), beautiful tall".
* The Hollies (particularly Graham Nash) tried hard to develop a more elaborate, "serious" sound. The results, namely the single "King Midas in Reverse", were met with commercial indifference, prompting the label to demand something more marketable. In response, the band recorded the deliberately cheesy bubblegum song "Jennifer Eccles". It was a Top Ten hit, much to Nash's dismay.
* The Hollies-style production, "King Midas in Reverse", made only a small dent on the UK singles charts. Their next single, "Jennifer Eccles", a lightweight pop number they pretty much wrote as a joke, became a huge hit. Nash wasn't pleased.
* The Hollies, the main characters continue to share an umbrella even on sunny days, leading others to stare "as if we were both quite insane".
* The Hollow: Akuma leader of a group of demon monks weapon is a magic branch called The Ishibo, a magic staff that can shoot fireballs and work as a lightsaber.
* The Hollow A recurring gag through the series is Kai's theory being that they're already dead.
* The Hollow Ayon is created when the Arrancars Appaci, Mila Rose and Sung-Sun combine their left arms. It is impossible to sneak up on him as he has an eye in the back of his head.
* The Hollow Boy in the middle of a case, with Lucy talking about a moment when she glimpsed Lockwood and Co. working together perfectly the first time. She then backs things up a bit to the beginning of the case. As things progress, it comes to a tense moment, where she is tossing a water bottle to Lockwood and George is tossing her his rapier. Lucy reminds the reader of how she talked about a moment of sweet precision, when they gelled together perfectly as a team.
* The Hollow Chocolate Bunnies of the Apocalypse which takes place in a Toyland of living toys, then further reveals that all of existence is a huge toy, God is an irresponsible little child who got it for his birthday, and Satan is an evil renegade toy who creates an army of cyborg spider women and George W. Bush to destroy the world. No, really.
* The Hollow Claus knows everything there is to know about the legend of the Headless Horseman, and the lineage of Ichabod Crane; including how to destroy the Horseman permanently.
* The Hollow dispatches his victims by decapitating them with a cavalry sabre.
* The Hollow, Erica and Rob decide to have sex in the old shed in the graveyard. Rob is performing cunnilingus on Erica when he is decapitated by the Horseman.
* The hollow Grand Fisher has a lure on his head. By reading his target's psyche, he can transform that lure into the person the target cares about the most. He impersonates Ichigo's dead mother early on in the series.
* The hollow grind, with the concaved and beveled profile, has a very sharp edge. Because of the sharpness required for the task, you're more than likely to see hollow grinds on straight razors.
* The Hollow Hills, Morgause, Arthur's half-sister, bewitches him into sleeping with her, and he only finds out afterward of their relation to one another.
* The Hollow, Ian's father Carl is the high school football coach who is determined that Ian will have exactly the same high school experience as him, including being a football hero. He ignores the fact that Ian is more interested in drama than athletics.
* The Hollow is a 2004 teen horror movie. It tells the story of Ian Cranston, a high school student who just found out he's the descendant of Ichabod Crane. With the help of his girlfriend, Karen; a local bully named Brody, and the old cemetery caretaker, Claus Van Ripper, Ian now must stop the newly resurrected Headless Horseman.

* The Hollow is the quarterback and captain of the football team. He spends his time playing cruel practical jokes, forces others to do his homework, and regards Karen as his personal property
* The Hollow Klaus' preferred weapon is an axe. On being rescued from the police cruiser, his first act is to return to the graveyard to retrieve his axe.
* The Hollowmen dealt with the decline in military recruits with the main characters attempting to create a recruitment campaign that appealed to young people. The Prime Minister wanted an old-fashioned ad, highlighting the qualities of "mateship"; The military wanted one that showed people having a good time — neither of which would work, as nowadays people know what they're getting into. In the end, they just make an old-fashioned ad featuring plenty of explosions.
* The Hollow. Mira and Adam do kiss, but it's extremely awkward and he immediately follows it up by saying that he is not interested in her.
* The Hollow, Mira kisses Adam in Season 1, to which Adam reveals that he's not into her. The next season then reveals to Mira and Kai that he's gay.
* The Hollows agency, even gets listed under Escorts in the phone book.
* The Hollows by Kim Harrison, law enforcement generally sends the same species as the criminal they're dealing with. They know all the ins and outs of how they work, and can defend themselves against their usual tactics. So vamps are sent after vamps, witches after witches, banshees after banshees, etcetera etcetera. Playing mix and match tends to have... poor consequences.
* The Hollows can be used to anchor a ghost into a recently dead body permanently.
* The Hollows: During the time she had spent with Algaliarept, Ceri seemed to be this. She regained her pride pretty fast, though. That's because she got her soul back. Al had stolen her soul to make her serve him, but Rachel negotiated for it to be returned as part of their deal.
* The Hollows magic can use animal familiars to help them in handling the energy of the line safely. This is somewhat hard on the familiar as an accident in handling the energy will hurt the familiar instead of its master.
* The Hollows — 'supernatural' people, like witches, vampires and weres, were immune or less affected, so ended up revealing themselves when they realized their combined numbers nearly outnumbered humans in an event called The Turn.
* The Hollows: Morgan, Tamwood, and Jenks though Rachel tends to do more fighting than investigating.
* The Hollows. Neither of these creatures can enter hallowed ground. Some characters, particularly demons, practice black magic which leaves a mark of "imbalance" on their aura (unless they fob it off on someone else). Yet who the ground is holy to, with whom one would settle the imbalance, and what one does with a soul is never explained.
* The Hollows novels exemplify this troupe. Inderlander Security (IS) which is charged with policing the supernatural population is run by vampires who use it to cover their own criminal activity more than actual police work. Their human counterpoint the FIB is well meaning but lacks the manpower, training and resources to be effective.
* The Hollows novels isn't technically a assassin but a runner, a combination bounty hunter, private detective and law enforcement agent. When she tries to quit her job at Inderlander Security and go independent they put a death mark on her to make an example to other employees who may be thinking of quitting.
* The Hollows: Pierce, Rachel's guy she compares all other guys with, shows up even though we have never heard of him before. When explaining his back story, they bring up that he had helped her defeat an undead vampire. While this incident is occasionally mentioned over the course of the books, this is the first time where it is mentioned that she had help.
* The Hollows, Rachel is in a small town and is given directions to the local magic store that includes such useful landmarks as "the church that burned down two years ago".

* The Hollows series, a witch named Pierce who lived in the 1800s appears first as a ghost, later gaining a body. He often comes up against the unfamiliar technology as well as more liberal culture of the 21st century, and speaks in an archaic manner.
* The Hollows series has a different set of laws for each magical species, and several arcs on the series rest on the relationships between the species and the rules of their magics.
* The Hollows series, insurance investigator David Hue attempts to recruit Rachel as his 'on paper only' partner by explaining the swell deal she can get on insurance through his union. Rachel turns him down, but was tempted.
* The Hollows series of novels by Kim Harrison, witch-detective Rachel Morgan has a vampire partner, the incredibly sexy Ivy Tamwood.
* The Hollows, there are no muggles. Magic came out of the closet before the books started, when 4 species weren't affected by a disease that killed 2/3 people on the planet, and scarred the rest. This removed enough humans that revealing magic became a viable option, as the levels were around equal now.
* The Hollows, vampires and werewolves are humans that have been mutated by a virus. Elves are an inversion: they were once a completely different species (probably even belonging to a different order), but used magic to become capable of breeding with humans, eventually thinning the line between them. Then a virus came along that affected only humans.
* The Hollows, when Rachel first moves in with her bisexual vampire co-worker Ivy, she unintentionally does a pile of things that tend to arouse vampires, such as borrowing Ivy's clothes (causing their scents to mix). It's made worse by the fact that Ivy has been trying to avoid drinking blood.
* The Hollows: Witches and vampires exist, so why not ghosts, demons, and other such creatures?
* The Hollow that Adam, Mira, and Kai have to find in order to get back home.
* The Hollow: The devil dogs have glowing eyes that have a reddish tint.
* The Hollow: The Weird Guy is friends with Death one of the Four Horseman of the Apocalypse.
* The Hollow: The Weird Guy is very powerful, and the most mysterious character in the show, and his skin is fully purple.
* The Hollow. Vanessa knowing that it was all a game made her nasty, manipulative and backstabbing towards the other team because she knew they wouldn't suffer physical injuries for real. Hurting Kai was the worst part of it since he saved her from being a permanent block of ice. Unfortunately, you're more likely to get an edge in the edge if you're kind; Adam gets healed by the mutant spider when Kai repairs the king's legs, and the Benjamin brothers help Kai discover his powers when they stay to have fun rather than rushing through the theme park. It's implied that the real Adam, Mira and Kai are scarred from the experience and Vanessa's duplicate regrets her past behavior when she realizes her cheating created digital clones of the teams.

* The Hollywood meme where American Indians always use the upraised forearm greeting instead of a handshake (and an inevitable "How!" as the standin for "Hello") does in fact have some basis in fact. Several Eastern tribes used something similar (generally without the crossed arm addition) as a gesture, though the greeting was language appropriate ("How!" being a completely made-up Hollywoodism). Many other N.A. Indians used some variation of mutual forearm grip, though.

* The Hollywood Revue of 1929 in which almost every star signed to MGM at that time appears in a sketch. There is no attempt at a plot, merely a series of sketches and songs until the movie ends.
* The Hollywood Revue of 1929 is a plotless variety show featuring Paul Waldman and his band in a series of lavish musical numbers, with sketch comedy interludes.

* The Hollywood Squares, Buddy Hackett was asked which country has the most doctors proportional to population, to which he jokingly answered "The country with the most Jews! I would say Israel. You have a doctor in every family, it's a cousin, could be an uncle. Coupla specialists...". The contestant agreed, prompting Buddy to ask "You agree with that?" before host Peter Marshall revealed the correct answer was indeed Israel, much to Buddy's amusement.
* The Hollywood Squares: Guest celebrities who had physical ailments were invariably placed in one of the three lowest squares. This worked out for Cliff Arquette (aka Charley Weaver), the lower-lefthand celebrity during the original NBC daytime show after he suffered a stroke in 1973 and had to use a wheelchair the rest of his life.
* The Hollywood Squares - was asked, "What does a person from Philadelphia dunk his pretzel in?" His response: "A girl from New Jersey."
* The Holocaust (basically the only one that got widespread recognition), you generally don't hear a lot about them from the survivors until fifty years later sometimes, if at all.
* The Holocaust can never be completely and accurately determined because some of the evidence is destroyed.
* The Holocaust. Contrary to popular belief, he did not, in fact, make any notable contributions to 20th Century medical knowledge. He was merely a sadist given free reign to indulge his darkest impulses and as such mostly just chopped people up in horrific ways.

* The Holocaust facilities, the consolidated selection/disposal facility at Auschwitz-II/Birkenau continued the most productive uses. These included cloth from hair and fertiliser from bone. The museum at the Auschwitz-I work/concentration camp still has some of the hair-cloth on display.
* The Holocaust makes no attempt to glamorize the violence that occurs. A Sonderkommando beating a Jewish man to death over an argument is shocking, and every time a character is shot to death, it's sudden and disturbing.
* The Holocaust; the Confederates were not trying to mass murder and torture their POWs, the camps were just massively overpopulated, understaffed, and undersupplied, with disastrous results.

* The "Holy Roller" was a controversial play in a 1978 Raiders v Chargers football game where the Raiders' quarterback, upon being tackled, "fumbled" the ball up the field towards the end zone. Another player then also tried to grab it, "fumbling" it as well to a third player, who "struggled" to get ahold of the ball until it was in the end-zone, at which point they fell on it for a touchdown. After the play, the rules were changed so that forward fumbles could not be recovered by the offense for a gain, and years later, the players involved admitted that they had deliberately fumbled the ball forward, which would have made the whole play illegal even under the rules at the time.

* The Homesteading. The house Twilight and Applejack had moved into together was trying to cast them out because it viewed Twilight as a greedy invading thief since Twilight wasn't recognized by the titular Earth Pony magical process of protection as Applejack's wife and thus a rightful owner. This turns out to be because Twilight and Applejack were married in a ceremony for Unicorns, which was designed to distinguish that parties don’t properly own one another’s estates. Conversely, an Earth Pony ceremony does make it so that both parties share ownership of any property; once Twilight and Applejack have a second ceremony in the Earth Pony style, their problems with their new house end and they're able to host a holiday party for both mares' families just as they had wanted, with the ending indicating Twilight and Applejack will have many happy and safe years in their new home.
* The Homestuck Epilogues claims that the civilization founded by the heroes at the end of the main comic is post-scarcity, thanks to SBURB technology such as Alchemizers having been brought over. Despite this, people are still depicted as working, and the state of the economy is a big plot point.
* The Homestuck Epilogues: in the "Candy" epilogue, both Jane and Jade attempt a polyamorous relationship. Jane with Jake and Gamzee, Jade with Dave and Karkat. Neither of these end well for anyone involved.
* The Homestuck Epilogues, it's also shown that Lord English's teeth are incredibly venomous; John gets bitten by him, and the venom is so potent that even Jane (whose healing powers are so strong that she has the ability to revive the dead) can't do anything to save him. Dirk's narration implies that the venom straight-up erased John from the narrative of the story itself - no force in the entire mythology of the comics has the power to fix that.
* The Homestuck Epilogues, John breaks and drops his glasses just before the fight with Lord English. He can't see without them, and he's almost completely useless until he gets his glasses back.
* The Homestuck Epilogues, virtually everything eventful in the Candy timeline happens off-camera, with the actual story being solely about how those events affect the characters' relationships.
* The Homestuck Epilogues), with many attributing his supposedly maternal worry for his friends and his later isolated and depressed behavior in adulthood to the concept among other things.

* The Home We Built Together, Astrid learns to like Hiccup long before she discovers Toothless, is dedicated to being his wife (even if they just start out learning to like each other platonically), her anger is based more out of worry and she is more willing to give Toothless a chance when she finds out about him.
* The Home We Built Together, before Stoick married Valka, he was married to a girl named Inger. * The Honda Civic EG6 can also be considered this in the first game, where it suffers from poor acceleration after 160 km/h and understeers frequently. It was later buffed in Version 2, where it's one of the best vehicles in the rain, and later nerfed in Version 3, where it's pretty much only all that useful on Happogahara.
* The Honda Element is an SUV with removable seats and a wide, flat floor made of rubbery plastic. Some people have reportedly tried to spray the floor clean with a garden hose, only to discover that water seeped through the seams and damaged electrical wiring underneath.
* The Honda Fit/Jazz's name was meant to be "Fitta". There even were commercials and press photos showing the car with such badging, but the mockery by Scandinavian press (as "fitta" sounds similar to a few Scandinavian vulgar terms for female genitals) led to a name change.

* The Honeymooners But after studying almost every popular song in existence, guess what the first song he gets on "The $99,000 Answer" is? And guess who it is that composed that song?

* The Honeymooners counterfeiters leave a briefcase on Ralph Kramden's bus. Afraid to claim it and get caught they wait until the waiting period is over and Ralph gets it. By the time they catch up to him, he's opened the briefcase and is living like a king.
* The Honeymooners, episode "The $99,000 Answer". Music-guru Ralph learns he is to be a contestant on a music trivia game show and Norton helps him practice for the show by playing snippets of various songs on the piano. To Ralph's ever-increasing annoyance, Norton always warms up by playing the first two lines of "Old Folks at Home" ("Way down upon the Suwanee River, far far away"). When Ralph confidently appears on the game show, the first musical clue he hears is the same two lines that Norton always warmed up with. Ralph is dumbstruck, can't come up with the answer, and is eliminated from the game on the very first question. For the record, he guessed that Norton composed it.
* The Honeymooners episode "The Safety Award", Alice and Trixie end up buying the same dress to wear to Ralph's award ceremony.
* The Honeymooners featured a fraternal order known as The Raccoon Lodge.
* The Honeymooners has its own beta couple — Ed and Trixie Norton are effectively the Barney and Wilma to the lead Kramdens.
* The Honeymooners: In "The Bensonhurst Bomber", Ralph Kramden inadvertently challenges a much tougher person to a boxing match.
* The Honeymooners is Alice telling Ralph he should be satisfied with his job as a bus driver and not keep trying to improve their lot in life. Admittedly, Ralph has a tendency to go with get rich quick schemes, but if the level-headed Alice actually helped steer his ambition instead of belittling him, they might actually prosper.
* The Honeymooners mode, doesn't bother faking having trouble with the normal corer, and finishes in less than five seconds. Meanwhile, Ralph spends several minutes trying to get the product to work, growing increasingly frazzled.
* The Honeymooners, Ralph and Ed get extremely 'drunk' off of wine that was actually switched out for grape juice.
* The Honeymooners, Ralph and Norton buy a TV together. They have trouble agreeing on what to watch before settling on a program. When Ralph complains about the fuzzy picture, Norton tells him to take the antenna and move around. When Ralph is holding it out of the apartment, Norton tells him that it's good and closes the door to watch his own show.
* The Honeymooners, Ralph is requested to come to the local tax office about a tax issue. Scared that he is in trouble for tax evasion, he scours every minor thing he gained over the year to declare to the tax rep. As it turns out, the tax rep is a nice, understanding man who reassures Ralph that he is satisfied his taxes are in proper order, he simply called Ralph in because he forgot to sign a check he submitted earlier to pay his taxes.
* The Honeymooners: Ralph Kramden shouts this a lot, usually at Ed Norton when he has a laugh at his expense. Also, when had enough of Ralph's crap, Alice will often say, "Ahhhhhhh, shaddap!"
* The Honeymooners Ralph's lodge has an elaborate secret handshake which he keeps muffing, resulting in him thinking he has lost the weekly funds, when actually he has placed the envelope in the chairman's inside pocket when he messes up the handshake.
* The Honeymooners, reportedly only reading his scripts once and never taking part in rehearsals. If you ever see Ralph rubbing his belly on the show, it's actually Gleason's signal to the co-stars that he forgot a line.
* The Honeymooners series, Ralph finds a bag of cash on his bus. Convinced he's rich, he sets out to buy various things including a boat with three propellers (only three propellers will do). In the end of course the cash turns out to be counterfeit.
* The Honeymooners, the Kramdens and Nortons' landlord presents them with a notice of that the rent is being raised 15%. Ralph Kramden, being who he is, refuses to accept it, and the landlord warns that anyone who doesn't accept it will be evicted from the apartment and/or have their heat, water and electricity all shut off. Ralph thinks that the landlord is bluffing, and he goes on an extreme rent strike to teach him a lesson, forcing his wife Alice and best friend Ed Norton to partake as well. Alice tells him that the increase only amounts to $5 a month, but Ralph refuses to listen, comparing himself to George Washington, who fought for a cause just like him. It so happens that the strike is in the dead of winter, so they're cold, even with them bundled up. When Alice complains, he says, "I don't care about the fight, Alice, it's the principle of the thing," adding that if they pay up now, then they will keep on raising the rent $5 every ten years.

* The Honeymooners, the Kramdens' apartment is relatively antiquated, with an old sink and an icebox, as though it hadn't changed one bit in forty years. Alice continuously complains about how they have no modern amenities, because Ralph is too cheap for them.
* The Honeymooners, though the show was always slightly more realistic than other sitcoms around at the time.
* The Honeymooners was just a segment of Jackie Gleason's variety show. She was caught up in the Red Scare and was replaced by Audrey Meadows around the time for the show's "Classic 39".
* The Honeymooners, which kept beating the show in the ratings week after week, and critics felt the filmed show wasn't as good as the live "Honeymooners" sketches on Jackie Gleason's previous variety shows. Now it's one of the most remembered and celebrated sitcoms of its era, with a more prolific rerun history than any other series ever broadcast; the 1955-56 episodes are now known as the "Classic 39".
* The Honeymooners, which were later combined with “Classic 39” from the single standalone season for syndication. It was then that the show become the popular classic it is today.

Animates decay and desiccate over time, eventually becoming mummified to the point of immobility before rotting away entirely. Plague Animates can stave this off by devouring living human flesh. The Hong Kong animates should have run out of living humans to prey on long ago, but somehow they're still functioning 200 years after the initial
* The Hong Kong Police and Judiciary still uses 1.44MB floppy disks for some documents, new governmental computer installations in mid 2011 still have to come with an external floppy drive to read these. The Legco members also received floppy disks before an environmental department policy address.

* The Honourable Schoolboy, Jerry Westerby goes into a dangerous situation to try to rescue his love interest, who is tangled up with the bad guys, and is killed. It underscores his status as the "honourable schoolboy" of the title, too straightforwardly honourable to survive in the murky world of espionage.
* The Honourable Woman, is played by Janet McTeer, who is 6'0.5"/184 cm.
* The Honoured Guest. When deciding which Konoha Genin will become Chūnin, Hiruzen notes that Naruto’s actions during the Sand-Sound Invasion make him qualify for one if he isn’t being promoted based on his performance during the Exams.
* The Hoobs, another UK Henson preschooler show: The Hoobs have a problem which leads to them asking a question. Hubba-Hubba appears on screen to declare that an answer to this question would make an excellent entry in the Hoobipedia. They attempt various solutions, inspired by (in order) asking the Tiddley-Peeps (children), reading an animated story Hubba-Hubba found on Hoobnet, asking Roma the roving reporter, and asking some different Tiddley-Peeps. This final suggestion proves to be the correct one, and the Motorettes sing a song about it before the Hoobs give their report to Hubba-Hubba. Some episodes play with the formula; for instance when the question was "How can we get the Hoobmobile from the island it's stuck on?", it was Roma who talked to the Tiddley-Peeps, because the others were trapped.
* The Hoobs, the Hoobs search for something that makes both them and "tiddlypeeps" (children) laugh. It turns out to be this.

* The Hood in orbit, invade Tracy Island to hijack the Thunderbird craft and then rob the biggest banks in the world, leaving International Rescue responsible — would've gone off without a hitch, had it not been for the presence of three kids (Alan Tracy, the youngest Tracy brother, Brains' son Fermat and Tin-Tin, the daughter of the housekeepers, and the Hood's niece), who then proceed to rescue the Tracys and help stop the Hood's plan.

* The Hoodlum: According to the 'box score' Lt. Burdick reads Vincent when he is trying to persuade Vincent to surrender, most of the gang was been killed. Any survivors are either in hospital or jail.
* The Hoodlum, Mrs. Lubeck is the only one who does not believe her son Vincent is an irredeemable hoodlum. It is her impassioned plea to the parole board that gets him released. At the end of the film, when she realises that he has committed murder and is headed for the electric chair, it breaks her heart and she dies.
* The Hoodlum: One of the sociopathic Vincent's last acts while he is on the run is to break into the family home to see his mother.
* The Hoodlum, the crooks use a funeral procession to smuggle the stolen cash out of the city. The hearse is stopped at a roadblock, and while one of the cops radios in to see if it has permission to proceed, another wanders over to inspect the two limousines following it. Johnny hides on the floor (he is not wearing a jacket and so stands out from the other 'mourners'). The cop peers through the window but fails to spot him. He starts to walk back to the police car, then gets a suspicious look on his face and starts to walk back to the second limo. The crooks get nervous and grip weapons and the cop reaches the front of the car. And then re-affixes the 'FUNERAL' sticker on the windscreen that had started to peel off.
* The Hoodlum, the rest of Vincent's gang double cross him: knocking him out and stealing all of the loot.
* The Hoodlum: Working at a gas station across the road from a bank, Vincent concocts a plan to heist the armored car that stops there every Thursday.
* The Hooffields and McColts feud. All attempts made by Twilight to solve it peacefully fail, and in the end she freezes them all while they're having an all-out brawl. Fluttershy learns their original mission was to help the animals of the Smokey Mountains, and scolds them for forgetting their purpose all because of a petty grudge between their ancestors.
* The Hooffields and McColts" filled with hostile ponies... quite unlike a good part of the audience.
* The Hooffields and McColts": The titular families are locked in a persistent feud whose origins neither side actually recalls. They're just been sabotaging, inconveniencing and attacking each other for so long that "get the other side" is the only motivation they care for anymore. It's eventually revealed that the patriarchs of their families were originally friends, but disagreed about how to properly preserve the natural beauty of the valley they had settled in and started to spitefully sabotage each other's projects, which eventually spiraled into the current feud and ironically devastated the valley they had started the argument over.
* The Hooffields and McColts". This is how the feud started between the Hooffields and McColts clans. The families' forefathers, Grub Hooffield and Piles McColt, ran into a small disagreement, then inconvenienced the other until it was flat-out war.

* The "Horizon Tripper" build - Barbarian/Fighter/Ranger/Horizon Walker. As "optimized" builds go, it's not much more than a well-traveled guy with a pole weapon and a short-ranged teleport, and its craziest maneuver is simply tripping someone. But it's effective at basically all levels, has a decent amount of skill points to make it useful out of combat, and is unusually mobile for a combat character. And being made exclusively from core material and fairly basic in its lore, there's very few Dungeon Masters who wouldn't allow it.

* The Hornburg itself has only one relatively flimsy gate that the Uruk-hai have to smash through before they're inside and able to wreak havoc. If it had a proper gatehouse like most real castles did, they would have had to break through a portcullis as well, and then found themselves faced with another gate and portcullis while being funneled into a small passage where the defenders could shoot them from holes in both sides and the ceiling. The arrangement of concentric walls does incorporate a very good idea from real-life castles, which is having the gate in the outer wall lead into a 90-degree turn that would be difficult to fit a ram through, channeling the attackers down a long path where the defenders could shoot them from the battlements on either side and then having the gate of the second wall be 90 degrees at the end of that. However, the inside of the outer walls are not crenellated to take full advantage of this, and most gallingly, there

* The Horse and His Boy. Her friend Lasaraleen is in a similar situation but does not mind it.
* The Horse and His Boy: In the climatic battle, Prince Rabadash attempts to use a battering ram to force his way into King Lune’s castle, in order to provide a safe haven for his troops in hostile territory. This fails for two reasons. One, his initial plan was to catch the people of the Northlands completely unprepared when he treacherously came to kidnap Queen Susan. Cutting down a tree to use as a makeshift ram was an improvisation (and sardonically noted, not a very good one at that). Two, the rams men find themselves facing down multiple big cats of the lion and panther variety before they can breach the castle gate. It ends poorly for them.
* The Horse and His Boy Prince Rabadash was transformed into a donkey, then regained his human form, but was told if he went ten miles from the capital he would be transformed permanently, and was thus constrained from going to war against his neighbors. As a result. "to his face and in his lifetime he was called Rabadash the Peacemaher, but behind his back and after his death he was called Rabadash the Ridiculous."
* The Horse and His Boy says that these sound all very well in story but in reality, after the first attacks are repulsed, the enemy sets fire to the house.
* The Horse and His Boy sneaks into the battle he was told to avoid. He beats up the dwarf assigned to keep an eye on him, disguises himself, and keeps out of sight until the battle starts, when he reasons that everyone will be too busy to notice him.
* The Horse and His Boy, that Aravis and the horses don't even recognize him at first, since they'd only ever seen him as the grubby servant of a fisherman.
* The Horse and His Boy. They end up getting married "so as to go on doing it more conveniently."
* The Horse and His Boy when Aslan confronts Rabadash: "The doom is nearer now. It is at the door; it has lifted the latch—"
* The Horse and His Boy when Shasta discovers he is not the son of the man who raised him from a baby he is relieved, as he didn't love him anyway. Though King Lune mentions that being driven from her father's house must be a grief to Aravis, she never speaks or acts like it.
* The Horse Artillery Captain Cavalié Mercer who held off the French Cavalry at Waterloo. Especially notable since artillery was a technical division, so an artillery captain would be one of the few officers expected to be 'uncultured' rather than a
* The Horseback Archery course in the Gerudo Fortress. Ganon can wait. Link NEEDS his perfect score!
* The Horse Deva, Indramon, only appeared in two episodes, the second of which was his death. However, his vicious beatdown on Impmon set in motion the events that led to Impmon making a deal with the Devas to become Beezlemon.
* The horse is not yet completely dead: played 100% straight in the 2009
* The Horseless Headless Horsemann himself also counts, decapitating any unfortunate players that gets in his way, regardless of which one he designates as "it".
* The Horseman Famine readily kills his demon minions. He kills one for not getting him his lunch (a human soul) on time and sends two more to collect Sam so he can capture them instead and drink their blood. He offers the rest to Sam as well and eats them when Sam refuses to indulge him.
* The horseman's pick also resembles a claw hammer, with an armor-piercing slanted point on the opposite side of the hammerhead. It was used primarily by Islamic cavalry and Polish hussars.
* The Horsemen raiding the West house. They couldn't find the drug money so they stole every object in the house.
* The Horseradish Story and heads out in a speedboat to kill them all. He even turns on his accomplice in the end, to get rid of any witnesses.
* The Horseshoe Effect: Although two people are ostensibly ideological opponents, in reality they have a lot of beliefs in common and may have equal opinions on numerous matters.

* The Horseshoe Effect: Opposing ideologies that aren't really that different.
* The Horseshoe Effect: The extremists on one side aren't that different from the extremists on the other side.
* The Horseshoe Effect: When two political extremes aren't that different from each other.
* The Horse Soldiers. Here most of the officers are not professional soldiers, but very much shaped by their civilian jobs; the only exception is the medical officer.
* The Horse Soldiers was completely loyal and faithful to her owner Miss Hannah.
* The horses pulling the dog pound wagon are Chestnuts rather than gray.
* The Horse That Played Center-Field: Ain't no rule that says... you know what.
* The Horse Whisperer; when Grace gets into an accident at the beginning of the movie, the first thing she says when she's waking up in the hospital is "Judith", the name of her best friend (who was killed in the same accident).
* The horse youkai Entei is very fast, one of the fastest youkai in the anime. In a real fight, however, he is quickly defeated by Inuyasha.
* The horse youkai Entei was one of the fastest youkai in the whole anime. So fast that no one else could catch up with him.
* The Horta from "The Devil In the Dark" may be the most widely known example of this trope in all fiction, due to that episode being a fan favorite. It's pretty amusing watching a scientist
* The Horus Heresy Book One — Betrayal tells some stories of warriors who went this route. Captain Lercon Hurn of the XVI Legion's 3rd Company pulled the Panarch of Somon's head off with his bare hands after killing his guards with said hands and Horus sent the Emperor the gold-plated skull of Vatale Gerron Terentius with the message "So perish all traitors."
* The Horus Heresy saw a lot of mini-tragedies as half the Primarchs succumbed to their failings and fell to Chaos, all set against the backdrop of one big tragedy as the Emperor's egotism and separation for humanity led him to alienate the nine sons who would turn on him and eventually kill him.
* The Horus Heresy shows us the Tanks that existed when the Imperium actually had the concept of "development" and "scientific research"; the utterly terrifying Fellblade tank is the Baneblade with twice the amount of guns, while its variants can mount a variety of other titan-specific weapons, including a massive Volkite Cannon. Then there's the Sicarans, which can best be described as the unholy lovechild of a Predator and a
* The Horus Heresy supplements by Forge World take this even further, introducing a bewildering array of ship types, in addition to the Standard WWII, with names taken from the Age of Sail, such as barques, arks, carracks, galleons and galleass. How a 16th century combined sail and oar propulsion ship translates to space is best left to the imagination, but apparently it is favored by Rogue Traders and approaches a Battleship in power, being able to clear the orbit of a planet and launch a counter-invasion on its own.
* The Horus Heresy variant ruleset has far less protection against Instant Death and far more expensive melee characters around. Watch what you equip your best fighters with, because most will still be turned into paste half the time if some random squad leader catches him with a
* The Horus Heresy was kicked off when Horus came to the erroneous conclusion (inspired by the words of his already corrupted brother Lorgar and a misleading vision of the future) that the Emperor was planning to do the same thing to the Primarchs and the Space Marines once the Great Crusade was complete. It certainly didn't help that Horus was already feeling uncertain about what purpose the Primarchs would have in a galaxy where humanity was truly supreme.
* The Horus Heresy was mostly caused by the Primarchs being miserable judges of character. The loyal Primarchs refused to believe their brothers would betray the Emperor, allowing them to be blindsided. The Traitor Primarchs that started the Heresy believed the Emperor was a power-hungry jerk who was betraying them. In reality, while the Emperor was undoubtedly a jerk, his goal was ultimately pure — a golden age for Mankind, not the God-Emperor of Mankind.

* The Hoshidan soldier wanted revenge on Nohr for his son's death (which probably reflects the opinions of quite a few soldiers, on both sides).
* The Hospital, claims he's been "impotent for years," then goes into a rant where he declares, "Impotence is beautiful, baby!" The impotence Bock speaks of, however, goes beyond the physical. He goes on:
* The hospital portion of Ellis Island in New York was this until the entire site was revitalized into the tourist center it is today. Those who spearheaded the renovation spoke of finding various abandoned equipment and the like. Another abandoned hospital on the grounds of the island, and other quarantine wards, are fenced off from the main tourist sections and are off-limits to the public.
* The hospital scene, where the Joker totters out of Gotham General with the hospital exploding around him. The explosion stops for several seconds, causing the Joker to fiddle with the detonator, before the explosions suddenly continue.
* The hospital shooting plays out over two episodes and may have taken place in real time.
* The hostage variant was done earlier in an 1983 episode of the Finnish cop sitcom Reinikainen where a burglar of thousand voices pretends to be holding a number of Finnish celebrities hostage in a cottage he just robbed.
* The Host, alternately gripping with its two legs and its prehensile tail.
* The Host, a minor character, Sgt. Donald White, a United States sergeant stationed in South Korea, has a Korean girlfriend.
* The Host and can't even gather enough money to buy her a cellphone. In fact, he's so clumsy that he inadvertently allows his daughter to be captured by a giant monster from the river Han. Still, as incompetent as he is, he loves his daughter more than anything else in the world and fights with all his might to save her. And as it turns out, the authorities are even more inefficient than he is.
* The Host and most people did not notice the difference, except the "crazies".
* The Host are powerful, evil demons who were sealed in a very tight can indeed — it's almost impossible to find their dimensional prison except by blind luck, they need a summoner to willingly sacrifice themselves by allowing the demon to take over their body and soul (and most people willing to call upon such evil creatures would be nowhere near selfless enough to consider doing such a thing), and even once freed they categorically cannot cross between dimensions without another such summoning without being struck
* The Host consider themselves peaceful, loving, and perfectly moral, despite the fact that their primary activity appears to be wiping out other sentient species. That is, the species still exists in a biological sense, but the individuals composing it are functionally dead. At best it's slavery on a grand scale, but since what happens to the individuals is closer to murder, "wiped out" isn't pushing it too far.
* The Host especially when it comes to medicine, which is almost ridiculously effective, ridding the body of infection, fever, cancer, whatever, pretty much instantly.
* The Host: Hyun-seo is taken by the monster to its sleeping area in the sewers, where it occasionally excretes the skeletal remeains of its victims. She manages to survive by hiding inside a small alcove for an extended period, which is just big enough for a child to fit inside.
* The hostile, oppressive and unrelenting jungle, and the unseen horrors (real or imagined) lurking within it, is one of the things that gradually sends the conquistadors mad in
* The hostility is something every inspection agency has to deal with, the FDA vs. drug companies, union inspectors vs. the management. This is serious enough that the United States Department of
* The Host invokes this trope perfectly when the monster first attacks. The director purposefully wanted an attack during a nice day in order to make the scene surreal and frightening. People are hanging out by Han River one minute, and getting eaten the next.
* The Host is a tragicomic example, an amiable but slow-witted single father who gets little respect from anyone around him. His wife abandoned him, his siblings disrespect him, his father gets exasperated with him constantly sleeping on the job and eating pieces of the customers' food, and even his daughter, who means the world to him, gets annoyed with him as well. And when she is captured by a giant monster, the American and Korean doctors refuse to listen to him when he tries to tell them that she's still alive.

* The Host kind of names (for example, there are two medical salves called simply "Heal" and "No Pain").
* The Host Melanie and, by extension, Wanda serve as this for Jamie. They are a bit overprotective but, given the environment, it's understandable.
* The Host, mostly because Souls (with the exception of Seekers and members of the first wave) never needed to lie.
* The Host, not only played the role in English but dubbed himself in the German dub.
* The host of the 8-tailed demon, an ushi-oni, or, in layman's terms, an ox combined with an octopus, can use this battle style in his fully released state but he seems more fond of
* The Host on Amazon have described the novel as sci-fi for people who don't like sci-fi.
* The Host one of the alien planets that Wanda has previously been on is one nicknamed "bear." They have four hearts and long claws for weapons and to carve ice sculptures.
* The Host, only visible when bright light is shone at the host's face.
* The Host on May 17, 2079. Edie Harper later tells the crew that the other 47 crewmembers of the Enceladus research station entered stasis two years earlier after their funding was cut off.
* The hosts act the way they do because they know this is the way their clients think. Though, Tamaki seems rarely to think in a manner that
* The Host saying that there is a "glow" to women in love and certainly a "glow" on pregnant women.
* The hosts mention the then-common clown pranksters, and say people who try jokes like that should be prepared for their victims to know self-defense moves.
* The hosts note one of the reasons the Jonestown murder-suicide was so tragic was that infants were among the casualties.
* The hosts often note times when police ineffectiveness is a major factor in how long a serial killer goes without getting caught. For example, in the Dean Coril series, they note the Huston police were underfunded and understaffed so much that, as a result, they actively avoided investigating things like homicides and shut down a victim's family when they provided a letter written by their missing son that they suspect was faked, but which Missing Persons took as evidence he was no longer missing.
* The Host speak English, of course. The story's set in America, though, so for our purposes it's a moot point).
* The hosts' reviews, followed by their reading any reviews for that episode sent by listeners, conclude each episode.
* The Host the humans hate them, the main Soul character struggles to comprehend what the problem is.
* The Host: The monster was created in South Korea by careless Americans, who use brutal tactics to try to cover it up and deal with it. However, a vacationing American soldier bravely attempts to fight off the monster in the beginning of the film. Apparently American officials are evil, but regular Americans are okay.
* The Host: The mutant fish/amphibian monster has several pairs of beak-like and toothed mandibles surrounding numerous layers of fleshy lobes that can open very wide to swallow people whole.
* The Host: The Parks. True, for most of the movie they're shown as bumbling idiots... until they meet up with the giant mutant that killed their youngest member. Cue the slow-motion and the classical music as they take turns stabbing, burning, shooting, and impaling it...while standing unprotected in a cloud of toxic gasses.
* The Host, the Souls (alien symbiotes) make almost all of humanity into this.

Almost all Souls are very gentle and the main character (Wanderer/Wanda) did not realize she was destroying the consciousness of other beings.
* The Host: The Souls have a form of this, though given the way they reproduce, it kinda makes a vague sort of sense.
* The Host: The Souls have been around for millennia and can live forever. They even spend up to centuries in hibernation when they are traveling in space. At one point, Wanderer, who has lost track of her own age she's been around so long, can only pinpoint an event as being "after the dinosaurs lived on Earth".
* The Host: Wanderer. Even the human colonists eventually get annoyed. Part of this is due to the communal nature of the souls but part of it is a survival strategy to avoid antagonizing her (understandably) hostile captors. She gets better about it as she feels less threatened.
* The Host was announced in the early 2010s, but nothing came of it; the film's sequel and American remake suffered the same fate.
* The Host was launched approximately 100 years later, at some point between 2071 and 2079.
* The Host was satirizing this. Giant tadpole running around Seoul, eating people? It must be carrying A HIDEOUS NEW DISEASE! Let us completely focus on this possibility, and ignore the fact that it's eating people!
* The host went through all the stereotypical downfalls of puberty at about thirteen, but as he's bragged, thankfully grew "handsomener— han— hand— han— ner, prettier" when he got older.
* The Host (which is implied to just be narcolepsy), gives his thirteen-year-old daughter beer, and eats his customers' food. His father tries to tell Gang-du's two younger siblings that it may have stemmed from a miserable childhood and a protein deficiency, but it's never really confirmed. He was a very early reader as a child, and in a deleted scene Hee-bong recalls Gang-du reading from a calendar when he was never taught the Korean alphabet. He also has a specific interest, but that interest is in his daughter and being a good father to her, even though he's hapless at it. He has no medical history of a mental disorder, but it's likely that his family weren't able to afford a diagnosis for his behaviour.
* The Host, who was intentionally given blond highlights to show that he's irresponsible and not very bright. At the end of the film, he gets rid of the blond highlights as a sign of him becoming a more responsible parent.
* The "hot box" scene. Soon after the team "breaks up" at the start of the film, the following scene shows the Mystery Van with a whole lot of white smoke billowing out of it with Shaggy and Scooby giggling loudly. Cut to inside, and you see that Shaggy and Scooby simply have a miniature barbecue that is letting off a lot of smoke.
* The Hot Chick: April's batty, meddlesome, slightly paranoid mother and her low-key father who usually responds by telling her to get a life.
* The Hot Chick has a lowlife thief (played by Rob Schneider) accidentally swapping bodies with a snotty teenage girl.
* The Hot Chick there's two instances of this. When Jessica (in Clive's body) starts strangling Clive (in Jessica's body) the owner of the strip club comes to point at a neon sign that reads "No strangling the dancers". Later on, when Clive returns to his body and tries to run out of the club (because he still has the stripper outfit), the same owner points to another sign: "Monday night is Gay night".
* The Hot Chick) to stop banging on the drums. The man mumbles that he thought the music matched the tone of the story.
* The Hot Chick, when Rob Schneider and Rachel McAdams' characters switch bodies, one freaks out and panics, the other gets a job as a stripper. Guess which is which.
* The Hot Country Songs charts tell a similar story: debut single "Tim McGraw" stopped at #6, while "Teardrops on My Guitar" and "Mean" only got to #2, and "Back to December" to #3 (although the latter two got to #1 on the
* The Hot Date expansion adds the ability to go on dates. If Vacation or Unleashed is also installed, dates can be taken to Vacation Island, and Unleashed's in-neighborhood community lots as well.

* The Hotel Alexandria in Los Angeles has a "phantom wing" that has been sealed off from the rest of the building since an ownership conflict in 1938, and since no elevators or stairs were built in the wing, all floors above ground level are inaccessible. A developer purchased the wing in 2012 and plans to convert it into luxury apartments.
* The hotel chain America's Best Value Inn was started in 1999, and most of its first properties at the time were recently rebranded from other chains (predominantly Best Western and unbranded properties). The same is true of rival Magnuson Hotels.
* "The Hotel Inspectors" has Basil mistaking an officious idiot for a hotel inspector. He does not react well when he discovers he has been buttering up an ordinary guest - and exacts retribution against him in front of three real hotel inspectors.
* The Hotel New Hampshire about "Screaming Annie", the hooker who fakes very loud orgasms. It would later come out they were in fact not fake.
* The Hotel New Hampshire, the family dog dies and the protagonist's older brother decides to take it on as a taxidermy project. It comes out looking far more terrifying than it's supposed to and keeps getting found in various unexpected and startling places. At one point it keeps the protagonist from getting laid by frightening the girl; at another, it literally scares his grandfather to death.
* The Hotel Play had over 20 characters, all identified with names like "The Girl Who Broke the Bowl", "The Man Who Looks Like a Walrus", "The Hotel Clerk".
* The Hot Gate and to batter down Rangoran defenses in preparation for ramming Assault Vectors.
* The Hot Gate character for them. When his own insults aren't up to snuff, she comes up with a standard military procedure for trash talk on the spot, at which point he admits defeat.
* The Hot Gates closed. Keep in mind that the main door is the size of a city. Tyler says that "we're gonna need a bigger hammer." Then Granatica (the AI running the station's fabber) provides, building a ship that is essentially a giant hammer.
* The Hot Gate, she is put in charge of an all-male team of South American engineers. Her being female immediately puts her at odds, and her being a "norte" (North American) is seen as even worse. And she actually demands that they do their jobs maintaining the shuttles? Gasp! How dare she? Doesn't she know that every single one of them is a scion of a powerful South American family? People like them are there merely to bide their time until they are inevitably made officers. Who does this American farm girl think she is? She is "educated" several times in the ways of Latin America and the concept of "class" not just as an economic divider (the way it's treated in the US and most of the Western world), but in how only "the right people" should be put in top positions, with everyone else being "rabble". It works the other way too, with South American officials having trouble understanding someone like Tyler Vernon, automatically ascribing him certain qualities simply because he's the richest guy in the world and only meets with the President of the US when his (Tyler's) schedule opens up. One of Parker's subordinates, who has picked up a few things, explains to his father that Tyler doesn't fit into their "upper class" mold. He's a typical American billionaire, who only wants to get rich, without trying to adjust his own culture to that of his financial peers.
* The "Hot Israeli Girls" Tumblr consists of a disproportionate amount of Ashkenazi women.
* The hot peppers can be referred to as "chile" (the Spanish spelling) or "chili", but the meat dish made with said peppers is always called "chili". Unless you're in the American Southwest (Arizona, Nevada, California, Colorado or New Mexico) where the stew is often made with green peppers, and is called "chile".
* The Hot Rock, a bank guard is hypnotised into handing over the diamond upon hearing the phrase "Afghanistan banana stand''.
* The Hot Rock: After breaking Greenberg out of prison, Murch drives the getaway car into the back of a truck sitting with a fleet of other trucks. They then stay in the back of the truck till six the next morning, and drive off with the rest of the trucks.

* The Hot Rock (and also the novel the film is based on), Greenberg is trapped in the museum with the diamond the gang was attempting to steal. He swallows the diamond before the police arrive. Leads to this brilliant exchange later (when Amusa learns that Greenberg has hidden the gem in the police station):
* The Hot Rock (and the movie based on the novel) involves an escalating series of crimes dedicated to stealing a particular diamond.
* The Hot Rock" books involve cons, capers, criminals, and gentlemen thieves.
* The Hot Rock, Dortmunder is playing with his baby niece when she starts peeing on him, and his is totally lost as to how to handle this.
* The Hot Rock, Dortmunder, Kelp and Greenberg disguise themselves in guard uniforms when they break into museum.
* The Hot Rock: Dortmunder, the world's unluckiest crook, discovers just how many time he can steal the same gem.
* The Hot Rock: Not the boss, but the gang have to break Greenberg out state prison to learn where the diamond is.
* The Hot Rock's demolitions expert. His main task during the first heist is blowing up a car outside the museum to distract the guards. He later creates the bombs the crew use when storming the police station.
* The Hot Rock. The "simple" crime of stealing a diamond becomes a series of crimes as things keep going wrong. As one character says, "I've heard of the habitual criminal but never the habitual crime".
* The Hot Rock. What he does with information given to him in confidence would be unethical (and borderline illegal) regardless of who his client was. But to do it to his own son...?
* The Hot Rock: When Kelp, who is driving an unfamiliar car (in the novel it is explicitly a stolen car), attempts to flag down Dortmunder, he accidentally turns on the wipers, and drives after Dortmunder with the wipers on and the horn blaring.
* the hot springs, because you have to go at least once; then she looks at the audience and says, "Kiko is doing her best!"
* The Hotspur: Spring Heeled Jack was a character in the British comic book The Hotspur, where he was the secret identity of a mild mannered Victorian forensic investigator who used the identity, along with a pair of spring loaded shoes to give him incredible leaping powers, to investigate and punish crimes that the rest of the police force had deemed unsolvable.
* The hot-tempered, almost xenophobic Leopardstar had unrequited feelings for Tigerstar, a fellow Clan leader who
* The Hottie & the Nottie features Paris and Nate at a picnic. He stammers over coming up with a name for a fictitious guy for her roommate. He comes up with "Cole Slawsen". Yeah.
* The Hottie & the Nottie. Johann is introduced defending June from humiliation, and is a dentist, enabling him to clean up her crooked, ugly teeth. He's also a former Marine, a Harvard graduate, a great guitar player, a male model, a pilot, and other things that make him absurdly perfect, and much better than loser protagonist Nate. But when June eventually becomes beautiful and starts going out with him, he turns out to be more or less a self-involved jerk. However, the extent of his jerktitude is a couple of selfish comments that offend Nate and June.
* The Hottie & the Nottie to the point where guys flock around her jogging route just to see her run. It may or may not be significant that Paris Hilton is one of the executive producers.
* The hot tub is used for this trope again in "Sea Harmony" when, after a chase against the jerk who tried to frame him for a jewelery theft, Zack falls into it and starts splashing everywhere as if he is drowning. Zack's
* The Hound acknowledges he's dead meat "unless there's a maester hiding behind that rock".
* "The Hound", a short story about two grave robbers coming under a strange curse, ends with the final lines revealing
* The Houndcats of the main characters were male (Dingdog as a tactless daredevil).

* The Hound does not lie. When the Brotherhood tries to blame Gregor's crimes on him, he rebukes the accusation, but when they bring his actual crimes he admits to them without hesitation. Furthermore, when Arya snaps and kills a Frey soldier out of revenge (and food and fire). Sandor pulls her aside afterwards and tells her if she ever does that again... at least
* The Hound finally admits he's interested in protecting Arya for more than just her ransom in "The Children".
* The Hound Grimm is the only Grimm in the series thus far to be capable of speech due to its unique circumstances, and speaks in a deep, guttural voice provided by Jason Liebrecht
* The Hound has a morbid chuckle at the realization he's been fatally injured by a woman (also Brienne of Tarth). In a further irony, it's Arya Stark that he asks to
* The Hound has a pretty thick, scratchy beard. He's also renowned badass throughout Westeros.
* The Hound has enough of the Lannisters and leaves them in "Blackwater".
* the Hound in Volume 8 is enough to make three Sabyrs stop mid-charge, turn around, and run.
* The Hound is grizzled, scarred, bearded, foul-mouthed, chauvinistic and above all
* The Hound managed to hang on after his duel with Brienne, and survived to return in Season 6.
* The Hound of the Baskervilles (1959) a tarantula is left in the shoe belonging to Henry Baskerville, which promptly crawls up his arm to his shoulder, poised to deliver a deadly bite before Holmes sweeps it off with a walking stick and kills it. Partially justified later, when Holmes remarks that a tarantula’s bite is not always deadly, but Baskerville’s heart condition would have made it so.
* The Hound of the Baskervilles (1983), the attack on Sir Charles is shown from the Hound's P.O.V., rapidly intercut with shots of the Barrymores running towards Sir Charles' screams.
* The Hound of the Baskervilles (1983), the mysterious figure tailing Sir henry Baskerville is referred to as 'The Bearded Man' because his beard is the only distinguishing feature. He is eventually revealed to be Jack Stapleton in disguise, but actor Nicholas Clay gets a credit as both Stapleton and 'The Bearded Man'.
* The Hound of the Baskervilles (1983): When the killer sneaks into the Lyons' home, the camera focuses on the gloves being drawn on to his hands, and then on the gloved hands closing around Laura's throat and strangling her before planting evidence in her hand. His face is not shown.
* The Hound of the Baskervilles, and the Baskerville curse ultimately just turns out to be a piece of colourful folklore.
* The Hound of the Baskervilles opens with Sir Hugo Baskerville throwing a hapless servant through a window at Baskerville Hall.
* The Hound of the Baskervilles Rodger is outright cited as a Black Sheep in-text.
* The Hound of the Baskervilles. Since the reader can't see the portrait or the criminal, there's no way to notice the striking resemblance that puts Holmes on the right track. The reader is presented with the crime scene and some background information. Since the stories are told from Watson's point of view, the reader only knows what Watson does.
* The Hound of the Baskervilles, Sir Henry struggles with his white tie when dressing for dinner, and Watson finally does it for him.
* The Hound of the Baskervilles: Stapleton is an amateur entomologist, forever going on long expeditions into the moor to hunt butterflies. It's also a good way to go to the abandoned mine where he's keeping the giant hound with which to terrify Sir Baskerville. Holmes tells Watson that Stapleton really is an entomologist, even discovering a new species of moth under one of his previous identities.
* The Hound of the Baskervilles the acidic soil conditions in Devon, which had previously been covered in forests.
* The Hound of the Baskervilles, the moor has the Grimpen Mire, which only Jack Stapleton knew how to cross safely. Another character who'd tried to traverse it was sucked down into its depths.

* The Hound of the Baskervilles!" The peddler straightens to Holmes' full height and replies, laughing, "Then my name must be Watson!"
* The Hound of the Baskervilles warning him to stay away from the moor (where Baskerville Manor was).
* The Hound of the Baskervilles, when Watson supposes Holmes knew he was hiding in the hut by his footprint. Holmes corrects him by showing it was with Watson's particular brand of cigarette (which are made by a London tobacconist, and can't be bought locally around Baskerville Hall).
* The Hound of the D'Urbervilles, a Greek assassin who works for variously the Greek government, the Department of Supplies, and Moriarty's Firm. She mentions that she prefers knives because you get to look into the eyes of your victim as you kill them.
* The Hound of the D'Urbervilles, in an international meeting of bad guys, Rupert of Hentzau passes around a flask that no one takes since nobody trusts the others. Even after Rupert openly takes a drink, Colonel Moran thinks to himself that he could have built up an immunity, and mentions that Madame Sara (another Victorian villain) who does take a drink, likely has made herself immune to all poisons.
* The Hound of the D'Urbervilles is only referred to by name once. He's more commonly referred to as The Thin Man of Baker Street, with his brother being known as the Fat Man of Whitehall (the latter being the seat of British government).
* The Hound of the D'Urbervilles, it's noted of Irish revolutionary bomber Tyrone Mountmain that if he's smoking a cigar, his dynamite is ready to hand.
* The Hound of the D'Urbervilles, Professor Moriarty has his apartment and criminal base in a building which has as its first floor a brothel, and his number two, Colonel Moran, often indulges himself with the "other employees." Moriarty himself seems to have no sex drive.
* The Hound of the D'Urbervilles: The group of Irish revolutionaries includes a notorious bomber, Tyrone Mountmain.
* The Hound Of The D Urbervilles who takes to murder for hire quite well once he starts working for Professor Moriarty.
* The Hound provides a rare sympathetic example after his pyrophobia gets the better of him in "Blackwater". However, the Lannisters regard him as dangerous, especially after news of his slaughter of Polliver and his goons reaches the Small Council, after which Lord Tywin puts a sufficiently large bounty on him to tempt any idiot to take a shot at the Hound.
* The Hound's most questionable act in the play is not keeping Joffrey from beheading Ned Stark. Other than that, he's competing with Dontos for the most sympathetic of the men interested in Sansa.
* The Hounds of Baskerville": Dr. James Mortimer becomes Dr. Louise Mortimer.
* "The Hounds of Baskerville" features Major Barrymore, an officer with a full beard, which is not allowed by British Army regulations. Barrymore had a beard in the original story and in every other adaptation, which undoubtedly is the reason for his beard in
* "The Hounds of Baskerville" is basically addressing everything amongst the fandom.
* The Hounds of the Morrigan, even, with hints of something deeper beneath. It gradually becomes darker, bleaker, more sinister, as the life-or-death nature of their quest asserts itself, and the final showdown with the forces of Not-Good takes place in a Mordor-like bleak and barren place. It's like going from a leprachaun Hobbiton to a Mordor ruled by the Morrigan.
* The Hounds of the Morrigan in play—he really is seeing flying furniture, because a couple of witches have just moved in to the neighborhood.
* The Hounds of the Morrigan. It's much eerier than the usual examples, because, of course, they have magic.
* The Hounds of the Morrigan. Their leader believes himself to be Napoleon.
* The Hounds of Tindalos, can materialize from any nearby corner they find, and presumably don't bear much if any family resemblance to canines as we know them at all.

* The Hounds of Tindalos, features ravenous creatures of weird geometry who travel through time and space, and the only way to avoid them once they're on your trail is to completely avoid sharp angles (such as in a completely circular room).
* The Hounds of Tindalos stop hunting them. An easy way to gain their attention is to travel through time.
* The Hounds of Tindalos": The titular creatures are from an age "before space and time".
* The Hounds of Tindalos, the titular Hounds of Tindalos are strange, angular creatures who existed long before single-celled organisms first evolved. They are normally invisible as they inhabit the "angles of time" as opposed to the "curves of time" that humans and other life-forms do. Thus, they can freely travel through time as well as materialize through any corner of a wall or object if it's sharp enough (120 degrees or less). Thus, the only way to avoid getting hunted and eaten by one is to stay in a room with no angles... forever.
* The Hour, a graphic with this description goes up when a government official and higher-ups at the BBC think the show has gone too far.
* The Hour Before Morning has intelligent humanoids genetically engineered from humans, but no aliens per se.
* The Hour Before Morning has years reckoned up from the beginning of the dominant empire — more than two thousand of them, and an uncertain period between that and the time Earth passed into legend.
* The Hour Before Morning, Jenchae tries this on Elek, but gets more than he bargained for.
* The Hour, before switching to "The Good in Everyone" by Sloan (not coincidentally, both Canadian bands).
* The Hour gives us Freddie Lyon, a journalist who happens to get tangled up in plots and conspiracies, and he is far too stubborn to stop until he knows the truth and broadcasts it to the world. In Season Two, Bel starts acting this way, too.
* The Hour Glass is Drifting Away touches on Nino's discomfort with her efforts, revealing that she forced her way into the trip to the wax museum when he originally just wanted to have some 'bro time' with his pal. He was also uncomfortable with her plans to post that footage on her blog, but didn't speak up... and when Ladybug gently confronts him on this, recognizes that he made a mistake and accepts being benched for the summer with grace.
* The Hourglass Sanatorium yet beautifully ornate sanatorium where only a nurse and a doctor work.
* The hour is late, and our host is growing tired. Are we to keep waiting?
* The Hour Mrs Madden's gorgeous New Look outfits are also not quite contemporary with the other women's outfits.
* The Hour Of Slack) said the date was misread. The "Rupture" date is July 5, 19,998. Other theories include that Dobbs held the note with the date upside-down, and the Rupture will come in the year 8661, or that the date is actually correct but the calendar is flawed and July 5, 1998 has not arrived yet.
* The Hour of the Dragon — and why "sorcery" got put in the title.
* The Hour of the Dragon and "The Phoenix on the Sword", more than one conspirator wanted the throne. (At least two wanted the same throne, which gets awkward.)
* The Hour of the Dragon, Conan is kidnapped and taken aboard a ship with galley slaves. He turns the tables on his captors, however, when he notices some old comrades among the galley slaves and convinces them to mutiny.
* The Hour of the Dragon, Conan surprises a follower who thinks he's this.
* The Hour of the Dragon spread over the entire kingdom without getting mangled.
* The Hour of the Dragon," Valerius fits this trope perfectly: his drunken revelry, sexual violence, and senseless slaughter were so extensive that his co-conspirators had to step in, to stop him from running the kingdom into the ground.
* The Hour of the Pig. Discrimination toward Jews and Moors is not only rampant but enshrined in the law, with a Jewish man noting his testimony isn't even admissible as evidence. In contrast to modern people who might have thought Christians in those days more prudish, they are quite casual about being nude at a bathhouse even with many members of the opposite sex around. They'll even just have sex with someone else right next door (and prostitution is fairly open, along with being entirely legal). Religion holds pride of place in social life, with all work stopping when Advent time begins, while both mores and laws stem from Christian beliefs (either for better or worse). Also, in contrast to popular conceptions, the village priest expresses skepticism of witchcraft (though inaccurate in portraying this as heretical). When it's set, witchcraft had only begun to even be accepted as real by the Church (sadly).

* The Hour of the Pig example, but Maria while having sex with Courtois puts her foot through a nearby (presumably thin) wall.
* The Hour of the Pig: Maria does this along with removing her head covering prior to having sex with Courtois.
* The Hour of the Wolf call to Vir from Centauri Prime. Poor Vir was asleep and wasn't supposed to get up for another six hours; Londo apologizes for forgetting the time difference.
* The Hour of Twilight; that is, the Old Gods being released due to the dragon Deathwing's efforts, and wiping out all life on Azeroth. The titan who empowered the Dragon Aspects had a vague vision of the event and created the Aspects specifically to stop it(without telling them). The thing is that the Hour of Twilight could never have happened if not for Deathwing, who
* The Hour organized a letter writing campaign to the BBC (or rather postcard writing, imitating postcards sent by Freddie to Bel between series 1 and 2) to protest the show's cancellation. They also have an online petition, a #savethehour twitter tag, a charity drive in the name of the cause, and have sent production company Kudos a yellow desk lamp having been informed that the BBC can't accept gifts.
* The Hours Count, about a Jewish woman who befriends Ethel Rosenberg and attempts to prove her innocence.
* The Hour's Freddie Lyon is stubborn to the extreme, and if he senses a story, he will stop at nothing until he has all the information. He's gotten into trouble several times when he stubbornly continued to pursue clues even after being encouraged, ordered or threatened to drop the matter. However, most of the other journalists on the show are somewhat more realistic.
* The Hour/Space Race is the backdrop for season two. The fashion runs the gamut from Marnie's stereotypical skirts and pearls and Hector's grey flannel suit to Lix's Katherine Hepburn suits and Freddie's beatnik look.
* The Hour, we are introduced to Randall Brown, the new head of news, who, as it turns out, has a history with Lix.
* The House Bunny averts this in the beginning — the sorority is filled with the school's rejects and losers.
* The House Bunny to "blow" and... well... she doesn't quite understand that he's trying to check her alcohol content.
* The House by the Cemetery, Dr. Freudstein, is bald. But people do tend to lose all their hair when they have been dead for decades...
* The House by the Cemetery, main villain lives in titular house's basement.
* The House (CBC Radio parliamentary affairs show, year-round since October 1977)
* The "House colors" are a riot. Sixty districts, each with a different pair of heraldic colors, and wearing them at major occasions. Vorkosigans are lucky, with a restrained brown and silver, and some (such as the Vorpatril blue and gold) are bona-fide impressive, but some...

* The house elves. They are magically bound to do whatever their master tells them to and seem to share a universal inferiority complex, despite incredible magical power. Despite being able to easily defeat a powerful wizard,
* The House Fanfiction Archive genres of House fanfiction; must be 18+ to view the full site.
* The house had perfectly serviceable shutters too, at least in that episode, which were just left to flap in the wind.
* The House in Fata Morgana, after entering the fourth door, text in the backlog starts getting obscured and text that never showed onscreen appears in the backlog.

* The House in Fata Morgana caused misfortune to befall those who lived in it.
* The House in Fata Morgana have serious fatal flaws that result in everything going wrong for all of them.
* The House in Fata Morgana is meticulously crafted. As such, each reveal bears an immeasurable weight for the characters:
* The House in Fata Morgana, Jacopo Bearzatti is an italian man who grew up in a mafia background; he's not shown actively committing crimes or taking part in the organization proper, but he is still tied to it, as one of his old associates comes by asking him for money.
* The House in Fata Morgana, Michel is often likened to and sometimes outright mistaken for the archangel Michael, whom he was named after. His albinism, seemingly otherworldly beauty and selfless desire to save people don't help his protests one bit.
* The House in Fata Morgana The White-Haired Girl also has very long hair in her first and third appearances.
* the house is absolutely infested with cockroaches, with multiple nests in every single room.
* The Housemaid (2010), Hae-ra's mother feigns a stumble to knock over the ladder that Eun-yi is on while cleaning the second-floor chandelier. It fools no one in the house.
* The Housemaid (2010) has the mother of her employer try to kill her via an engineered accident and receives a check in the hospital in repayment of her accident. In the hospital, Miss Cho reveals that this is not the first time that a housemaid has suffered an accident and then been given a payment to keep her quiet.
* The Housemaid. Dong-sik's son Chang-soon thinks Myung-sook poisoned his water with it, so she drinks the water instead. Then she later tricks Chang-soon into thinking she poisoned him, causing him to run off in a panic, fall down the stairs, and die. Then Mrs. Kim tries to kill her with it, but it turns out that Myung-sook had switched out the rat poison for sugar water. Then Myung-sook and Dong-sik kill themselves by drinking the rat poison.
* The Housemartins claimed they were only the "fourth best band in Hull" (the three other bands they thought were better than them? Everything But the Girl, The Gargoyles and Red Guitars). This is referenced in the name of their 1986 debut album
* The House of Atreus part 1/part 2 lineage. "The Marriage of Heaven and Hell Part Two" is mostly about European myths (Prometheus, Norse Gods and Ragnarok), while "Visions of Eden" is a Gnostic interpretation about the creation story with Adam's first wife, Lilith.
* The House of Bad Grades, was about a home haunted by a vengeful ghost who died when she was sealed inside a bomb shelter while trying to work on her college applications. The ghost focuses on destroying the academic futures of any child living in her old house, because if she can't leave Lawndale, no one will.
* The House of Bernada Alba manages to drive the story without even appearing once. His presence in the background causes sister to bitterly turn against sister, and eventually undermine's Bernada's authority over the house, as Adela rebels.
* The House of Blue Leaves, Bunny will sleep with Artie anytime, but won't cook for him till after they're married.
* The House of Chel, a.k.a regular humans. The only species in the setting with
* The House of Elendil seems to have succeeded a little too well in making the Empire of Umbar seem impressive. The majority of readers are more excited to see Umbar in all its glory and many say they would be perfectly happy seeing it conquer Westeros, or even the whole world.
* The House of Eliott Beatrice's letters from her first boyfriend Phillip were intercepted by her father until Phillip gave up on her. She only discovered this after father was dead and Phillip married to someone else.
* The House Of Elliott then decided not to commission another series, so the series was left dangling.
* The house of Finwë as a whole is very popular and more generally

* The House of Flying Daggers: The title of the film is actually the name of a resistance group.
* The House of Frankenstein features a "Phantom of the Opera" whose crippling facial deformity is a face that's a spitting image of Hitler's, fetish fuel for Ilsa the German maid...
* The House of Furstán has the Field of Kings, "a vast walled necropolis" located near Toernthály. It includes the Nikolaseum, which is dedicated to Prince Nikola, who saved his elder brother Arkady's life in the Battle of Killingford in the eleventh century. Nikola's effigy is slightly larger than life-sized and is accompanied by a statue of Arkady grieving beside it. Also in the area is the Hagia Iób, a memorial church that contains the tomb of Furstán himself; Torenthi kings are invested at his sepulchre, which thrums with power.
* The House Of God, medical interns are advised that they can be lazy, incompetent, or assholes, but not more than one.
* The House of Hades has the looming threat of Gaea rising on August 1st and Nico, Reyna, and Coach Hedge going on a journey to shadow travel the Athena Parthenos back to Camp Half-Blood.
* The House of Hades itself irons out some inconsistencies in the previous books, gives the new characters some much needed development, and includes a vast number of references to the previous series that continued several small plot threads that, while not necessarily dangling, could be explored further.
* The House of Hades. Nico is forced to confess his feelings in front of Jason.
* The House of Hades, though he'd probably argue that was for Nico's own good.
* The House of Haldane has a royal crypt below Saint George's Cathedral in Rhemuth. Various characters are seen paying their respects and leaving floral tributes. Kelson has Sidana buried there, despite
* The House Of Lions: The the title building is thought to be a temple containing magical treasures. It's actually the New York Public Library.
* The House of Lyud' carries the Harbringer prophecy. While all male Lyuds are incapable of magic, a boy born with magic will change the very nature of the House of Lyud'.
* The House of Night books have Option 2. Churches decide that vampyres are sinners and start killing teachers at Zoey's school. Neferet, the head of the school, decides to wage war against them.
* The House of Night, eponymous academy from the awesome books, is a school where vampyres learn how to behave in society. It also helps students deal with the Change- in this particular mythology, vampyres are not made by biting but as the result of a biochemical change, which, once it has started, either leads to becoming a full-fledged vampyre or dying.
* The House of Night, have their own prequel novellas. Kalona is slated to have one as well.
* The House of Night, however we find out that most popular actors, singers, and others in the entertainment industry are vampyres. Vampyres also were many historical figures, who were apparently just as influential as they were in real life. Not to mention that there's no word that the governments have any problem with the vampyres keeping their own government, setting up Houses of Night in various towns (even though regular people supposedly hate the presence of vampyres), and automatically having all fledglings legally emancipated. Also, even though vampyrism is supposed to occur because of junk DNA and a hormonal imbalance, there's no talk at all of scientists studying vampyres to find ways to prevent regular people from turning into them or, at the very least, reduce the risk of fledglings dying horrible deaths.
* The House of Night in a way, since she has no problem using the words "slut" and "hell".
* The House of Night is able to hide her desire to kill all humans for quite a long time, maintaining a respectable appearance.
* The House of Night is a pretty big offender. While there are pretty big jumps in time between the books, the novels themselves take place over four or five days each, roughly.

* The House of Night is to convince the vampyre high council that they are the incarnations of Erebus and Nyx, respectively.
* The House of Night of any sort. Spelling vampyre with a 'y' both differentiates from these completely imaginary creatures and creates a cozy learning environment. The House of Night would also like to wish you a nice day.
* The House of Night of the vampyres' perfection and probably serving evil.
* The House of Night series, where the protagonist becomes a vampire; sometimes borders on a harem story.
* The House of Nights, if requited, are followed by the man swearing eternal love and fealty to the woman.
* The House of Night stepfather disowns her. Vampyres also have to cover up their Mark in public to avoid being harassed.
* The House of Night. The Red Fledglings and Vampires have red eyes when they've just fed from a human or when they're seriously pissed off. The Raven Mockers also have red eyes.
* The House of Night these kind of gifts due to having received so many of them over the years.
* The House of Night, which details how an innocent girl named Emily Wheiler grew up in 1893 and ended up broken and vengeful as a result of being abused and eventually raped by her own father. She ultimately changes her name to Neferet, upon becoming a vampire, and vows to never again be used by anyone.
* The House of Night which every vampyre seems to convert to upon Changing.
* The House of Night, who named herself 'Elizabeth No Last Names' because she couldn't be bothered to come up with a new last name.
* The House of Pancakes... when they opened up a single franchise in Canada. The trope has since been averted; the company now has locations in Latin America, the Middle East, Southeast Asia, and Oceania. Also, although the legal name remains "International House of Pancakes", it's been branded as IHOP (pronounced "EYE-hop") since the mid-1970s.
* The House of Plantagenet and he's the last English king to be killed in battle, having died, "in the thickest presse".
* The House of Representatives' determined anti-slavery warrior Thaddeus Stevens (played by
* The House of Rothschild: Even a movie about antisemitism can't resist this joke. A cabbie complains about the small tip he got from Nathan Rothschild—the richest Jew in Europe—saying that even Nathan's daughter Julie tips him more. Nathan shoots back that Julie has a rich father, but he doesn't.
* The House Of Sleep, since one character is incapable of distinguishing her dreams from memories. The circumstances were less inevitable — she admits to her roommate that she "dreamt" about having sex with her.
* The House of Thebes is another cursed dynasty. While the founder of the House Cadmus did quite well for himself and married Harmonia, the daughter of Ares,
* The House of the Dead Dr. Roy Curien, becomes the player 2 character.
* The House of the Dead: OVERKILL) and Agent G (enigmatic professional secret agent).
* The House of the Dead: OVERKILL is similarly a homage to "grindhouse" exploitation films.
* The House of the Dead: OVERKILL later, the two of them are standing outside the burning laboratory, remarking how convenient it was they just happened to find those gatling guns. Then they fight the Final Boss for real. (The "Director's Cut" version later adds the supposed missing sequence back in.)
* The House of the Dead: OVERKILL. Make him mad and he'll rip your balls off.
* The House of the Dead: OVERKILL mixup of every zombie trope in the book.
* The House of the Dead: OVERKILL points these out before you face the boss in the loading screen before the fight.
* The House of the Dead: OVERKILL. There's another scene where the bad guy talks about how much it sucks to accidentally splash your pant leg with pee.
* The House of the Dead: OVERKILL, Where everyone (including the narrator) do this all the time:

* The House of the Devil deals with a babysitter and a group of Satanists.
* The House of the Devil gives her voice to the 911 operator that Sam calls.
* The House of the Devil is an homage to 1970s horror films, from the setting to the credits to the music. It's even being released on VHS.
* The House of the Devil. The movie even mimics the cinematography of that era, favouring - for example - zooms over dolly shots and ending on a freeze frame. It also features horror actors of that era, like Dee Wallace and especially Tom Noonan, in key roles.
* The House of the Devil. Three '80s singles are listened to by characters. "One Thing Leads To Another" by The Fixx is well-remembered enough to show up on many '80s hits compilations. The other two singles, "One Of Our Submarines" by Thomas Dolby and "The Breakup Song (They Don't Write 'Em)" by The Greg Kihn Band, on the other hand, are a bit more obscure.
* "The House Of The Lucky Gander" takes place in China, and has a character named Toad Liu Hai voiced by Chinese-American actor
* The House Of The Seven Gables was apparently a big influence on Lovecraft's writings.
* The House of the Spirits, Nicolas sends love poems to his girlfriend Amanda.... and she sends them back, with corrections.
* The House of Yes and has a few issues of his own to work out. He does this by dating a ditzy, middle class girl with a cheerful demeanor.
* The House of Yes. Insanity, incest, murder... all at one Thanksgiving dinner.
* The House of Yes. Jackie was so spoiled that the word "no" was simply never spoken in their household.
* The House of Yes mostly takes place over a single, Thanksgiving night.
* The House of Yes, prompting her to laugh hysterically and claim she has to go brush her hair.
* The House of Yes. This trope was the reaction she got from the rest of the guests at the party.
* The House of Yes, two characters reenact the Kennedy Assassination. The man (as Kennedy) gets shot and "killed" while the girl (as Jackie Onasis) tends to him. This is foreplay.
* The House on Mango Street is the one about the four skinny trees that grow on the protagonist's city street and how she identifies with them.
* The House on Pooh Corner, which came out in 1968. It's possible that this happened in other places as well.
* The House on Sorority Row has more survivors and none of them are blonde.
* The House on Sorority Row is that he wanted to do more than just the typical half-assed character development in the opening segments - so there's actually a story and connection other than random teens trying to get off with each other. But still it's well over twenty minutes before the killer starts slashing.
* The House on Sorority Row: Mrs. Slater barges in on Vicki and Rick while they're getting their freak on and she destroys Vicki's waterbed with a sharp cane.
* The House on the Borderland every planet in the solar system, and the sun as well.
* The House point-and-click Flash game series focuses on exploring a house whose inhabitants committed suicide. Or did they?
* The Houses focused on medical issues on the lawless planet of Jackson's Whole occasionally dabble in this if they think there's profit to be had from it, including the creation of Sgt. Taura, a failed

* The Houses October Built claustrophobic, meaning her last moments onscreen are spent in the grip of one hell of a panic attack.
* The Houses of Healing in Minas Tirith aren't exactly military in Surgical Steel's
* The House That Dripped Blood: In "Method for Murder", all of Charles' attempts to convince Alice that Dominick is real and in the house end with him showing her an apparently empty room and her thinking he is cracking up.

* The House That Dripped Blood: In "Method for Murder", a shaken Charles is lighting a cigarette on by the fireplace when he glances in the mirror and sees Dominick standing on the landing behind him. But when he turns around, there is no one there.
* The House That Dripped Blood: In "The Cloak", the first indication Henderson has that anything is wrong is when he tries on the cloak in his dressing room and then discovers he doesn't have a reflection in the mirror.
* The House That Dripped Blood: Most of the smoking in the film is very mundane, but Carla, the exotic foreign movie star in "The Cloak", smokes cigarettes in a long holder and looks very sexy while doing so.
* The House That Dripped Blood: This is what Paul Henderson transforms into (minus the east European accent) whenever he dons the eponymous cloak in "The Cloak"; very appropriate given he is an actor who specialises in playing vampires.
* The House That Drips Blood on Alex, he plays the titular role in the exact same fashion. Special mention goes to his portrayal of Alex's corpse which is both realistic and completely natural.
* The House That Jack Built: Jack's last victim is a cop who tries to arrest him.
* The House That Jack Built on this theme (his favorite being of course the latter). Verge is disgusted by this, calling him an Antichrist.
* The House That Jack Built recounting his past murders) and its rarity of screenings for the Director's Cut version, which has all of the gruesome content in tact. To wit, go on Letterboxd and take a shot every time you come across a post saying that this was their first von Trier film.
* The House That Jack Built. The black military veteran as well manages to delay Jack by noting that the bullets he got aren't actually full metal jackets, thus sparing them as he goes off for some, by which time the police arrive.
* The House. The party meets a man, who used to be an abused child in ridiculously dysfunctional family: They all died in a fire (which started in mysterious circumstances but could or could not be his doing). But instead of freeing the boy, it cursed him. His home lives on in his nightmares and people who are nearby when the nightmare starts tend to get pulled in and murdered by the nightmarish reflections of the family.
* the house was the site of a bloody murder, the aftermath of which still needs to be cleaned up.
* The house where Harry and his parents lived was guarded under the Fidelius charm so that
* The House With a Clock in Its Walls, is extremely partial to the color purple and wears it almost exclusively, and is an exceptionally skilled witch.
* The House With a Clock in Its Walls (one of the film's producers) on the matter, who told him to make it as scary as he could get away with under the PG rating.
* The House With a Clock in Its Walls that leads up to the climax, it's almost a relief. Almost, because even once the long-held shoe is dropped, they are still disturbingly nightmarish.
* The House With a Clock in Its Walls. The editions of the book with Edward Gorey's illustrations milk this scene for all it's worth.
* The House With a Clock in Its Walls), the PG rating most certainly was.
* The House With a Clock in Its Walls trying to pull the cosmos into the proper alignment so it can happen. The protagonists can only speculate what exactly prompted the Izzards to do this, as they are both dead(ish) at the start of the story.
* The House Without Windows" in the forest, and spends a lot of time dancing, climbing trees and running around, which is said to make her much stronger and more agile than an average child. Closer to Robin than Batman, doing some pretty unlikely gymnastics when her father and his friends attempt to capture her.
* The House Wren is no longer than your index finger, but his song can be heard from at least five backyards away. Fortunately, the song is cute too. Many wrens share these traits.
* The Houston Astros have been this any time they field a good team. Of particular note is their late-90's run, where they won the NL Central three years in a row, but not once made it past the Division Series. They later won the Division Series in 2005, defeating the Atlanta Braves 3-1, and winning the NLCS by beating the St. Louis Cardinals 4-2. Then they would face the AL champions Chicago White Sox, and the Astros were favored to win the Series (their first ever), especially since Roger Clemens was among the notable players in the team. Instead, the White Sox

* The Houston Oilers. Ever wonder why they were nicknamed "Choke City"? It's because they made the postseason during a seven year stretch between 1987 and 1993, but had three exceptional collapses during the postseason between 1991 and 1993.
* The Houston Texans took ten seasons and four quarterbacks in the same year to make their first playoffs. When they first started, it was expected they would be terrible because of their expansion status. But after awhile, they put together talented players and their finishes in the late 2000's were disappointing.
* The Hover Van was designed at a facility in Penistone whose sign was mounted on a gate in such a fashion that it had to be split in the middle. It was the "
* The Howard Stern Show. Although he's in the studio, his job is sound effects, and they'll often do more talking than he does. When he DOES talk it could be just a quip or a punchline to jokes or impressions or even responding to Howard or Robin. If you even DARE insult him or call him on something, run he has been known to react VERY strongly to criticism, sensitive issues in his life among other incidents, once Howard looked in his bag and Fred nearly quit the show after an ugly outburst.
* The Howard Stern Show, amputees, and once even three of Tiger Woods' dozen plus mistresses competed against one another.
* The Howard Stern Show, Fred Norris plays a "crickets" sample whenever someone "bombs" with a joke.
* The Howard Stern Show G. Gordon Liddy gave this as his reason for not holding a grudge or seeking revenge against his fellow Watergate conspirators (who had cooperated with prosecutors to get lenient sentences, leaving him hanging out to dry because he refused to do so).
* The Howard Stern Show had a Howard Stern Imitator at some point. Mark & Brian (LA), Lex & Terry (Dallas), Paul & Young Ron (Miami), and Opie and Anthony(Boston) were the biggest. When the Stern Show would enter their markets, very often locals listening for the first time thought he was the imitator of them and just had a black (or female, since not everyone realized Robin Quivers is Black) sidekick.
* The Howard Stern Show. Her official position is to deliver the news, yet often she's the heart of the show.
* The Howard Stern Show. Howard once responded that Ralph gets more hate mail than a Ku Klux Klansman who is a frequent caller to the show.
* The Howard Stern Show in 1997, where during the interview Marky and Joey got into a fight about their respective drinking habits.
* The Howard Stern Show, leaving him with a flat piece of flesh in the middle of his face. He's opted not to get it fixed so that it serves as a reminder of his addictions and to keep him from going back off the wagon.
* The Howard Stern Show (some incarnation of the show has existed since the late 1970s)
* The Howard Stern Show. Somewhat averted in that while the two did have similar hobbies and character traits, Lange was specifically hired as an on air personality, whereas Jackie was only sometimes on air, with his main job as writer.
* The Howard Stern Show: Stage 5 in the 90s and early 2000s, now at Stage 6b.
* The Howard Stern Show started to become nationally syndicated and eventually became highest-rated nationally syndicated morning radio show in most major radio markets the United States.
* The Howard Stern Show, the various laughs of Jackie "The Joke Man" Martling, were a fairly big part of the show — ranging from a low dirty giggle to a big expressive "Whoop!"
* The Howard Stern Show used to and sometimes still will parody television shows and movies, although more frequently song parodies are featured, many of which, sent in by fans, are about being sexually attracted to news anchor Robin Quivers.

Thousands of these exist, and one or two are always played before her news segment.
* The Howard Stern Show. When on the show and in his comedy act, he'll sometimes exaggerate his Joisey characteristics to the point of becoming the epitome of a stereotypical Hudson County resident.
* The Howdy Doody Show. "Buffalo Bob" Smith sometimes even refers to the audience members as "peanuts".

* The Howlers in are heavily armed (even described by Jake as "walking arsenals") beings created by
* The Howling, a sexy female werewolf who tempts Karen's husband Bill and turns him into a werewolf while having sex with him, even transforming into her wolf form mid-coitus.
* The Howling in the forest back to civilization, and not only turns into a werewolf on live TV but is eventually shot dead. Problem was, most of the home audience dismissed it as a special effect.
* The Howling in the sequels, especially the third one, even The Vatican declares that the werewolves are humans.
* The Howling: Karen is shot after turning into a werewolf on live TV.
* The Howling requested that she wanted her werewolf form to be beautiful and feminine.
* The Howling Stones takes place on planet Senisran, an ocean world with a myriad of archipelagos and scattered islands, each with its own culture and customs. The sheer number of nations represents a challenge to representatives of the Humanx Commonwealth and the AAnn Empire, each trying to forge diplomatic relations with as many islands as possible.
* The Howling subverts the trope and reveals that while silver bullets work just fine against (relatively) young werewolves like the group in the first movie, with ancients like Stirba they merely incapacitate the target for a while. The real metal of choice is titanium.
* The Howling, the titular character is told by his now undead friend to commit suicide before transforming during the full moon, but when the werewolf asks if he needs silver bullets, he's told to get real!
* The Howling, widely considered a crowning achievement in body horror effects.
* The HP-41C is a programmable calculator which allows the user to program complex sequences of operations into memory to be executed with a single keypress. Some users discovered that pressing a key at the right time during programming, before the calculator is expecting it, will put the program editor in a glitched state that allowed parts of instructions to be overwritten with other data. By using this technique, which became known as
* The H.P. Lovecraft Historical Society has some very impressive reproductions of
* The HP Universe does contain some rather nasty fairy-like creatures, however, in the form of Bowtruckles and Doxies. Bowtruckles live in wand wood trees and tend to gouge people's eyes out if they try to cut wood from them (unless they get offered woodlice or fairy eggs in exchange). Doxies are nicknamed "The Biting Fairy" and are little black pests with two sets of teeth.
* The Hrud, who are apparently evolved from a worm-like creatures, resemble a set of interconnected spines in a vaguely humanoid shape. They can "walk" more or less vertically on two of these spines, use the other two as arms, are relatively pacifistic until disturbed (they usually infest lower levels of the imperial hive cities) and have a very advanced and enlightened religion that worship a deity, parts of which might be the aforementioned Umbra. That's not even touching on the entropic fields they generate, which rapidly age everything around them.

* The hsiao has an ape's body, and owl's wings and talons, a man's head and a dog's tail.
* The hua-fish, or flying snakefish, is a fish with the wings of a bird.
* The huallepén has the head of a calf and the body of a sheep.
* The Huanni embrace their emotions to the full, expressing them without restraint. They have an off-shoot race, Falorians, which are stoic and controlled (and pride themselves on such, being former slaves cast out of Huanni culture when they ceased being useful).
* The Hub". After first claiming to be looking for the bathroom only to be told that she is staring at a wall panel, she then attempts to compliment his head. It gets so bad that Skye has to tell her to stop talking.
* The Hubble Space Telescope was originally planned to launch in 1983. Delays in construction pushed that back to 1986, when it was indefinitely delayed by the Challenger disaster. The completed telescope had to be stored in a clean room, powered up and purged with nitrogen(to the tune of $6 million a month), until space shuttle flights resumed. It was finally launched in 1990.
* The Hub had show-specific ad bumpers, but when the network switched to Discovery Family, they were replaced with more generic ones.
* The Hub, Mr. McLeish's niece gives her uncle a kick, in part because she believes (along with her brother) the only reason McLeish bothers to spend time with them is to kiss up to their father, the city's mayor.
* The Hub ran marathons for Animaniacs a lot in 2013, with the last being a Pinky and the Brain-themed one.
* The Hubris, a massive zeppelin that the author buys from Emo Philips. Counts as another world because according to this book, Thomas Jefferson was friends with the mole men, axolotls have magical powers, and Enrico Fermi was an alien.
* The Hub's has a Jersey accent and, in an episode, even mentions he's from Hoboken.
* The Hub's tends to make her inventions from discarded items and the occasional more sophisticated electronics she comes across.
* The Hub, the scene of Twilight screaming was repeated when the show came back from its first commercial break.
* The Hub, to celebrate those characters having won the Naughty Or Nice contest.
* "The Hub" was the name of a saloon on Madison Street in Chicago where con artists, counterfeiters, thieves, and other criminals could hang out, drink alcohol, and talk business. This saloon was notable for being the location where Irish crime boss "Big Jim" Kennally would plot his infamously incompetent attempt to steal Abraham Lincoln's dead body and hold it for ransom (and would also serve as the location where he would later be captured by authorities after the botched crime).
* The Huckleberry Hound Show cartoon has Mr. Jinks obtaining a magic carpet that operates under the command "Chabunagunga."
* The Huckleberry Hound Show, Huck (as a police officer) is tasked with tracking down an escaped gorilla named Wee Willie.
* The Huckleberry Hound Show: Huck is a prison warden in the cartoon "Bars and Stripes." His prison establishes the "honor system"; none of the prisoners want to escape because it features amusement rides, a baseball field, a movie theater, etc. But when one prisoner is set to be paroled and released, Huck has to go through white heat to get him out.
* The Huckleberry Hound Show, Huck juggles three jugglers pins, tosses them in the air and tries to catch them one at a time. After a delay, he gets bonked on the head by the third pin.
* The Huckleberry Hound Show: Huckleberry Hound is faced with a pastiche of Dr. Jekyll in the cartoon "Picadilly Dilly".
* The Huckleberry Hound Show: The cartoon "Ten Pin Alley" has Huck in a championship tournament against the popular (albeit villainous) Powerful Pierre. Huck wins after Pierre gets hoist on his own petard.
* The Hucksters: Evans the soap tycoon thinks this, insisting that Kay pose in a negligee for the soap advertisement. Victor, who sees Kay's extreme reluctance and is already falling in love with her, insists that they go with a different ad that shows Kay posed in a more motherly fashion with her kids.

* The Hucksters: The rapidly developing closeness between Victor and Kay is shown when they are sitting on a park bench by the ocean, talking, with his head in her lap.
* The Hudsucker Proxy, a period piece (1958-59) screwball comedy, takes place here.
* The Hudsucker Proxy became "Ο κύριος Χούλα Χουπ" (Mister Hula Hoop).
* The Hudsucker Proxy gives Tim Robbins an ass-chewing liberally sprinkled with very well-timed Preemptive Shut-Ups every time he starts to open his mouth in his defense.
* The Hudsucker Proxy is a naive midwesterner, fresh from business school. He arrives in New York for work and finds everything requires experience, and he winds up in the mailroom.
* The Hudsucker Proxy is the reporter who gets close to the hero by pretending to be a woman from his home town, and getting a job as his secretary so she can write stories about him. However, she ends up falling in love with him.
* The Hudsucker Proxy — except that he smacks flat against the replaced glass pane, staying comically stuck there for several seconds (with the aforementioned close-up on his face from the other side) before sliding down.
* The Hudsucker Proxy, Norville meets a foreign dignitary. He tries to speak to him in his own language, and gets punched out.
* The Hudsucker Proxy: Not only is Amy Archer established as having won a Pulitzer Prize, others in her office are shown making bets as to if and when she'll bring it up in conversation.
* The Hudsucker Proxy, saying "The man from Muncie, a Moron after all! Read all about it!"
* The Hudsucker Proxy, sets off the events of the film by impulsively leaping to a spectacular death through the window of his company's boardroom.
* The Hudsucker Proxy, so called because Tim Robbins' character acts as a stand-in decision maker (proxy) for Hudsucker Industries' executives and shareholders.
* The Hudsucker Proxy wherein the board of Hudsucker Industries, hoping to temporarily depress the company's stock price so that they may purchase a controlling interest before the deceased president's shares are available to be purchased by the public, intentionally chooses the apparently incompetent Norville Baines as the new president. However, Norville's new invention proves so popular that the stock price reaches record heights.

* The Hugga Bunch ages and dies in a matter of seconds when access to the "Young-Berry" tree is cut off. Aesop: You can't hold off death forever.
* The Hugga Bunch's hugs are a symbol of love, and Bridget wants to keep her grandma healthy so she can keep receiving hugs. After Queen Admira freezes her, Bridget's friends from the Hugga Bunch are able to restore her to normal through hugs.

* The Hugga Bunch TV movie, the evil queen Admira stays young by eating the fruit of the Youngberry tree at regular intervals. When the protagonists prevent her from getting the berries in time, she suddenly becomes wrinkled and eventually falls still, her skin turning ashen.
* The Hugh Gallen State Office Park in Concord, New Hampshire, is comprised of a variety of re-purposed old buildings that were originally collectively known as the New Hampshire Asylum until being renamed to the less threatening "New Hampshire Hospital." Some buildings on the campus - the Acute Psychiatric Services building (APS, 1989), the Anna Philbrook Center (1960), and a few others — continue to provide care and housing to New Hampshire's mentally ill adults and children, and halfway housing for rehabilitated patients transitioning back into society. The other buildings on the site — which date from 1842 to 1941 — have been converted into office space for state government workers. The oldest building in the complex — called the "Main Building" — was erected in 1842 as a medical facility specifically designed for the housing and treatment of the insane and was the 17th such hospital established in the United States.
* The Hughleys going on. Hilarity ensues through the episode, as with every appearance, their son says or does something suggestive of his new hobby, like furiously pumping a bottle of mustard to wring out the last few drops.
* The Hug stars Aiden, a bratty, short-tempered birthday boy who cheats at skee ball and demands a show from Pandory despite him being on his "dinner break".
* The hulder does appears as a separate creature from the related skogsrå in some western parts of sweden. She appears almost the same except he's associates with snow and mountains and lives under the ground like the Vittras. Like mention before she should not confuse with the Skogsrå who are spirit guardians of the forests. Skogsrå's appearance and character varies depending on region but she's often depicted to either have a hollow back, hoofed feet (Scanian depiction) or a fox tail and could be, although extremly rarely male. None of the swedish hulder and the skogsrå is know to have any special powers.
* The Huldra women of Norwegian folklore become mortal and gain souls when they are married to a man. However, they still keep their magic and freakish strength, much to the peril of unfaithful husbands.
* The huldufólk are the "elves" that Icelanders allegedly still believe in (in truth this belief is generally either shallow, or very strongly flavoured by popcultural depictions of benign elves from other folkloric traditions).

* The hulking Dozle Zabi, one of Zeon's top naval commanders, has a heavily scarred face. This came from the same car bomb assassination that killed his younger brother Sasro before the start of the series. Despite the scars adding to his already ogre-like appearance, Dozle is (along with his naive youngest brother Garma) the nicest of the Zabi clan, being a devoted husband and father,
* the Hulk is in the David position. Of course, he's usually still the stronger one.
* The Hulk is known to get stronger and larger as he gets angrier (maximum height is roughly twelve feet); this might be justified, though, as his relative muscle (and presumably bone) mass increases as well as his height. Furthermore, Hulk is generally not depicted as merely scaling up; in most depictions, the cross-sections of his arms and legs increase out of proportion, which would balance things out some.
* The Hulk may be largest character who can pull off a Flash Step in comics.
* the Hulk — much to the confusion of the crowd who wanted a brutal fight.
* The Hulk plotting to return to Earth and take revenge on his friends for exiling him to a life of slavery. Once he's finally freed by the Silver Surfer, the Surfer offers to return him home; Hulk says that he's already there. Unfortunately, this is only the halfway point of the story...

* The "Hulk" problem is parodied in the story "Tales of the MCO", when one of the commercial breaks for the program the students are watching is for the upcoming Merchant-Ivory film "Hulk 1809", which includes in the trailer a Keira Knightley look-alike saying to the hero, "Good sirrah, where are your clothes? And why are your pants that hideous shade of purple?"
* the Hulk, psychic resistance) have shown him to be the most powerful of the gamma beings. Another factor in the Hulk's Super Prototype-ness is the fact that Bruce Banner's psyche is so damaged, because of abuse he suffered as a kid, that it allows him to do whatever he wishes. Becoming a gamma beast meant unleashing a particular repressed trait. The reason the Hulk is stronger than the others? Because they're not as screwed up as Banner!

* The Hulk's son. Looks like an adult in Hulk form, a teenager when in 'human' form, but in actual fact is only a couple of years old, thanks in part to his mother being an alien with an accelerated aging rate. His twin, Hiro-Kala, looks like a young teen.
* The Hulk's sons Skaar and Hiro-Kala are physically young teens, but chronologically only a couple of years old, partly thanks to their mother being one of the alien Shadow People, who have an accelerated maturation rate. Skaar actually has a "puny" (human) form that is at least still a child.
* The Hulk their relationship has grown over the years and are on friendlier terms now.

* The human and Covenant navies conform to the standard frigate/cruiser/etc. hierarchy, and the humans use modern naval ranks (even the Master Chief is named after a real-life navy rank: Master Chief Petty Officer). Both sides make heavy uses of dropships, and there is an actual ship called the Dreadnought. Also includes examples of World Ships (the Covenant capital of High Charity) and Space Guns (the UNSC's orbital "Super MAC" platforms). Though it bears mentioning that the UNSC ships called Carriers and the Covenant ships called Assault Carriers, while having their eponymous function, also have the heavy muscle in ship-to-ship engagements to double as Battlestars. The Supercarriers for both sides take this
* The Human Animal more to human courtship, of course, mostly because unlike other primates alive today, sex among humans lasts more than 8 seconds (usually).
* The Human Animal proposes a reason this trope exists in simple biological terms. The short of it is that the dangerous aspects of the target are sexual advertisements. According to the documentary, on a biological level, women are looking for signs of protective prowess (a partner who will help protect and rear offspring). Displays of aggressive behaviour are then read as signs of this prowess (cultural signs of this vary greatly, but the intended messages are the same). Once partnered up, however, the female will actively work to prevent the male from displaying further (which is this trope), so as to prevent the male from gathering further attention from the opposite sex. There's a lot more to human courtship, of course, mostly because unlike other primates alive today, sex among humans lasts more than 8 seconds.

* The human band behind the cartoon characters have taken to openly performing as Gorillaz without the fictional trappings, save for some looped Gorillaz cartoons in their video wall.
* The Human Beinz's "Nobody But Me" repeats "no" 60 times and "nobody" 30 times.
* The human body is always in a mild state of alertness while awake (it can remain in this state while asleep due to certain disorders), causing vitals to be consistently elevated above absolute baseline. By deliberately clearing the mind and shutting off outside stimulus, meditation can allow a person's physiological systems to settle down to a level comparable to deep sleep while arguably still conscious. This also explains the regenerative effects meditation seems to have as sleep also triggers healing and growth mechanisms.
* The Human Bomb and Gambit each have the ability to make things they touch explode. Nitro on the other hand is
* The human brain can't remember everything that it experiences even within a standard lifetime. We all remember the significant moments of happiness, sadness, anger, etc in our life and significant events, but we usually don't remember specifically where we were or what we were doing on one arbitrary day half a lifetime ago. In fact, people who do remember everything in their lives in exceptional detail are often sufferers of brain disorders or dysfunctions which affect them severely to the point where their other cognitive functions are diminished and they are rarely capable of leading normal lives without assistance.
* The Human-Bugger wars were the result of both sides assuming the other was type 4, leading to first humans and then the buggers being pushed to the brink of extinction. When humanity encounters another (far less technologically advanced) alien species, they resolve to avoid the mistakes of the past (those made with the buggers and with other humans during the age of European colonialism) and treat them as type 3. There is to be no exploitation of their resources, no colonization of their planet, no cultural contamination or attempts at religious conversion. What they don't realize is these aliens are smart enough to realize this is still a lopsided deal that will leave them with one little stone-age planet while humanity fills in all the other worlds around them. What they
* The Human Centipede And in each film, the "feeding" scene is the main horror set piece.
* The Human Centipede because it was so absurd, and anyone who wanted to see such a film would do it whether Ebert approved of it or not.

* The Human Centipede from discussions with a friend on how to punish pedophiles. One of them came up with stapling the pedophile's mouth to the ass of a fat truck driver.
* The Human Centipede sees Dr. Heiter shot in the head after killing two detectives, Katsuro slitting his own neck, and Jenny succumbing to blood poisoning, leaving Lindsay alone to either be rescued by police backup or die waiting.
* The Human Centipede sets her bashed-in corpse at the table and continues his

* The Human Centipede. There, you have a large borderline insectoid made up of three humans.
* The Human Centipede, Tom Six explained that, "My goal was that the first film will get audiences used to the concept of a human centipede and prepares them for where everything goes in the next two."
* The Human Centipede when Heiter is prepping his victims for surgery, Jenny breaks down and starts sobbing "I want my mom!". The utter despair and panic are heartbreaking.
* The human character Mr. Hooper was eventually revealed to have the first name "Harold" and "H" as a middle initial.
* The human characters are also subject to improbable punishment. Yamcha had a hole punched through his middle in the Cell arc by Dr. Gero, enough to sever his spine and esophagus. However, not only did he survive, but he somehow was still capable of eating and swallowing a Senzu bean. Tenshinhan lost an arm in the Saiyan arc, which should have killed him in seconds due to the blood loss coming from major blood vessels in the arm being severed; however, his death took much longer than that.
* The human characters are very much this. Jack performs the important mission of recharging the Matrix from Vector Sigma, Raf is
* The Human Comedy, which means that he sometimes has to deliver death notification telegrams from the War Department. It's a downer, and it's even more of a downer when he has to read the telegram to a Hispanic mother who can't read English.
* The Human Condition. Kaji's only motivation to go on is to get back to his love, but his humanity is continually tested.
* The human counterparts of Rainbow Dash and Pinkie Pie have essentially the same experience as the namesake ponies (see below) in the "
* The human Cult Mechanicus is strongly based upon transcending the frailties of the flesh, mostly by replacing it with machine parts. They're generally regarded as weird, but accepted as the second religion in the Imperium because they're the only ones who understand the technology that it depends on. Some of them choose to undergo the Rite of Pure Thought, which involves replacing the parts of their brains responsible for emotion with computing gear. This leaves them utterly unemotional and rational and is considered an extreme measure even among the Mechanicus mainstream.
* The human Death Korps of Krieg also use a device called a Vitae Womb, which is usually banned in most of the Imperium, due to low fertility rates and birth defects caused by fallout from a past civil war that went nuclear.
* The Human Defense Agency, or HDA, that came into being after Alucard's attack and the subsequent exposure of monsters, is also fairly quick to write off all monsters as evil simply because of the actions of a few people, with one soldier flat-out telling Moka and Akasha to their faces that, as far as he's concerned, monsters like them aren't even animals. However, Moka and Akasha's efforts in Act VI with their director, including more than a few
* The human-dominated nature of the Federation is generally explained by Earth having a significantly larger population than the other founding member planets, and humans having greater inclination to colonize the previously uninhabited planets within Federation space. Thus, even centuries later humans remain the most common species in the Federation (whether they're an outright majority is never specified). And it apparently took over a century before Vulcans (the most prominent of the other founding members) became comfortable with serving in the
* The Human Duplicators, a detective gets duplicated (Surprise!) and the duplicate reports back to the original's superiors to throw them off the case. Despite his random pauses and stiff movement, they don't suspect a thing.
* The Human Era or Holocene calendar, defined as starting 10,000 years before 1 CE, was first proposed in 1993 and designed to begin close to the start of human civilisation.
* "The Human Factor" by Metal Church is about how unoriginal a lot of modern metal bands of the time were, and how they relied on producers to slick over their lack of talent.

* The Human Factor — Graham Greene, who wrote the source novel, later said that he wanted to write a story that showed spies as mundane office workers, civil servants who just happen to work for a spy agency. In the movie Nicol Willamson plays a dull office drone in MI6, who also happens to be passing intelligence along to the Soviets.

* The human fetus does not have a distinguishable sex for the first several weeks; during this period, short of genetic testing, sexing a fetus is impossible.
* The human first contact team gets raped to death unintentionally, but second contact goes well, with no sexual interaction.
* The Human Genome Project was dedicated to mapping out the complete sequence of the human genome. Such information could give any given pharmaceutical or genetic testing firm a virtual monopoly on many product sectors, or lead to unscrupulous biological warfare or eugenics experiments. Instead, it was published online.
* The human guest characters in "The Ice Warriors" all wear catsuits with circuit-diagram like patterns.
* The Human Hive faction explicitly seeks to invoke this trope. Its faction leader Shen-ji Yang's social experiment, among other things, as he seeks to eradicate belief in higher powers and replace it with an atheistic police state. This is his explicit agenda in-game. However, his writings draw heavily on East Asian religious tradition, and his end goals have a frightening number of parallels to both the attainment of Nirvana and the Ascent to Transcendence.
* The Human Hive = The People's Republic of China. Communism, Confucianism and Buddhism all uphold selflessness and unity. Chairman Yang just took it to the extreme by neglecting everything else. Their population is fast growing and hard-working, but they're held back by a lack of political freedom, which stunts the flow of new ideas and hence their economy.
* The human jumper has the added bonus of only allowing humans to survive the jump with their sanity intact, which is good for humans, as the Conclave has a habit of destroying races that serve no useful purpose to it (even if they don't pose a threat). The greatest fear is aliens learning to survive the jump, and all pilots have standing orders to destroy the ship in the event this happens (they may even choose the means to do so: self-destruct, fry the jumper which earns you a slow death, or enter into an uncontrollable series of
* The Human League (even vaguely threatening to "put her back down, too," as in ruining her career or reputation), and she feels she has outgrown the relationship and wants to move on.
* The Human League has a song called "The Stars Are Going Out" that appears to be about someone going crazy after the end of a relationship.
* The Human League has to prevent a race of evil aliens from stealing all the synthesisers in the world:
* The Human League's "Don't You Want Me" is a dialogue between a Svengali and his increasingly rebellious protégée.
* The Human League's "Don't You Want Me" is a duet. She was working in a cocktail bar when he met her, he picked her out, he shook her up, turned her into someone new. Now five years later on, she's got the world at her feet, but she oughtn't forget who put her where she is now.
* The Human League's "(Keep Feeling) Fascination" is intentionally like this, being a parody of the new wave genre. This is why the synth sound is out of tune, and the happy mood of the song is in huge contrast with most of their music. Presumably because most people didn't get the joke, they left it off their album Hysteria (although it was included on a Fascination! EP of non album material)
* The Human League soundtrack. To Oakey's surprise, it was a bigger hit than the Hysteria album his group was promoting at the time, thus necessitating its inclusion in their canon.
* The Human League, whose producers, Martyn Ware and Ian Craig Marsh, split with singer Phil Oakey to found Heaven 17 after their first two albums. On the other end of the scale, "Human", THL's only American #1 hit after "Don't You Want Me", is an adult contemporary ballad quite distanced from their signature synthpop sound.

* The Human Operators", a sentient spaceship keeps a lone human man as a slave to repair and maintain it when needed. One day, a female slave is brought on board and the ship orders them to mate and beget the next generation of slaves. The man, having lived on the ship his whole life, has no idea what to do and has to be coached by the female. There's a scene where, after the woman guides his hand over her breasts, the man double takes and looks down at his first erection.
* The Human Operators" had humans kept as slave-mechanics by sentient spaceships, apparently for many generations. The protagonist's ship docks with another so that he can mate with the second ship's female slave-mechanic, to provide yet another generation of repairmen.
* The Human Operators", the man and woman visit a planet with four moons.
* The Human Operators", the man frees himself after Ship begins to break down. The woman was freed when her own ship broke down earlier, faking that it was still in operation so this would remain hidden from the other ship minds. At the end, he and the woman begin planning to liberate their fellow human slaves on other ships.
* The Human Operators", the operators of Starfighters 31 and 88 plan to search for other starfighters so that they can free their operators.
* The Human Pet allowed audience members to participate through code-cracking, indirect interaction with the captive Eric, and by retrieving a hidden item.
* The Human Pet: Eric gets so hungry and thirsty while he's trapped that he scarfs down cat food and drinks bleached pond-water, despite the humiliation and risk. It's especially dangerous because the "menu" was chosen by the viewers; if he was given the wrong thing, it'd kill him anyway.
* The Human Pet: Eric had an affair with his boss's wife Sue, which is told about in vlog files leaked by The Codemaster. The details aren't elaborated upon, but it's heavily implied that as a result of the affair, either he or Sue committed murder after they realized her husband had cameras all over the house. Who died isn't revealed, but it's mentioned that Eric had to deal with police interrogations and that Sue blamed him for what happened.
* The Human Pet: Eric's father abused his mother, shown by how afraid she was to go against his word when he turned against Eric.
* The Human Pet: Sam Deercot enjoyed messing with both Eric and the audience, proven by how he gleefully torments Eric while also misleading the audience on occasion.
* The Human Pet: Sam killed his parents after snapping thanks to their abusive nature.
* The Human Pet: The Codemaster's victim before Eric was a prostitute who got into the business thanks to an abusive boyfriend. When she tried to stop, her boyfriend kicked her out of their house.
* The Human Pet: The last upload reveals Sam's motivation for his kidnapping, murdering and torture is that his parents were horribly abusive to the point of driving him mad.
* The Human Pet was revealed to have done this through a series of vlogs his captor, The Codemaster, found on his computer and shared with YouTube. Who initiated it and what happened after the affair is unclear, but what is clear is that it ended with a death and it is why The Codemaster is targeting Eric.

* The human race. The richest, most powerful and most influential humans on Earth actively ravage the planet, its wildlife and populations of fellow humans, and many people are more than happy just to ignore it or go along with it. Yet, there is a more-than-sizable chunk of humans who recognize this threat and actively protest and fight against it.
* The Human Reaper larva (just one eye is bigger around than an adult human) and it's incomplete; basically just a skull, a spine, a ribcage and two handless arms. Nonetheless, it's capable of moving, attacking, and obliterating potential threats with lasers.
* The human resistance movement is able to defeat the alien overlords with the help of human technology and innovation that's over 1,000 years old, despite the fact that humans 1,000 years ago (who actually
* The humans also have the Node Missiles, destroyer- (cruiser- in the sequel) sized weapons equipped with FTL drives. They are faster and tougher than any other missile, and several of these can destroy most ships. Unfortunately, they have since been
* The humans also use this trope when they construct their own starships. Rather than arm them with energy weapons (that comes later since they don't know how at first), they have automatic railguns. These are used to great effect on
* The humans and Nameks also have the ability to sense people's life force energy, or ki. They can also manipulate their ki to seem less powerful than it is, either surprising an ignorant opponent or hiding from someone trying to pinpoint their location. The Saiyans and Frieza's army don't even realize this is possible before they see it, relying on machinery to do the same thing.
* The humans and the Minbari, who will become precursors to the future races
* The Humans: Apes reign as the dominate species and humans (or "skins", due to their hairlessness) are animals used as manual labor, lab rats, pets, and so on.
* The "humans are the only race ever to be put on trial" thing is at least averted in
* the humans assume that the Autobots are also hostile and capture Bumblebee, tormenting the poor bot until Sam Witwicky convinces the humans to start trusting the Autobots because they will protect humanity.
* The human scientists have the ability to create Human-Na'vi genetic hybrid bodies (Avatars), as well as project a human consciousness into them. However,
* The humans even get in on it, asking the aliens why they want to contact "our Earth governments".
* The humans fight a ground war against an enemy that is planet-bound, instead of simply nuking the place from orbit.
* The humans find the planet that they knew was Earth mid-way through the last season and it turns out to be devastated by a (relatively) recent nuclear incident.
* The humans have some of these of their on their colony ship. They are notable for being possibly the first AI controlled allies in any game. They float above the ground and also explode upon death (Bungie has a thing for that) and are armed with machine pistols. Some of them have grenade launchers, but the ones with grenade launchers go rampant and attack anything in sight, alien or human. Similarly, in the sequels, there are "Hummers," alien-made robots that are used for recon and often
* The humans have their stupid moments, too. When Donovan made a bargain for his son, he agreed to trade himself for his son. The aliens meet the humans in a canyon where the humans have a very nice ambush scenario set up. Donovan and his son trade places in a tunnel, but no one thinks that maybe Donovan should just turn around and run back to safety, even though the aliens are completely at their mercy and the humans have no reason to honor the bargain, except to advance the plot and get Donovan aboard the mother ship again. Instead, he just happily walks into the custody of the aliens and ends up blowing the cover of two Fifth Column agents. All it would have taken would be a line of dialogue about how the Vs have air support, which was their main advantage over the humans. It counts as a stupid moment for the Vs two, since the Resistance's other leader and their tactical mastermind-slash-weapons supplier is at the meeting too. They could have killed three birds with one stone and kill them too, thus decapitating the resistance in one blow.

* The Humans have the Priest unit, with a Heal spell, and the Paladin hero, whose Holy Light can heal non-undead or
* The humans in the centre stamp are wearing jetpacks and a snub-nosed
* The humans nickname the aliens "Moties", since it's believed that the alien probe came from the star called "The Mote". Though, it's done not because they're at war, but because they didn't know what the aliens actually are called.
* The humans of Mount Metagalapa ride giant hawks in order to be able to leave their floating island home. Particularly skilled hawkriders can coax the island's great rocs to bear them aloft.
* The humans of the UNSC had possessed hundreds of colonies throughout the Orion Arm. Then the numerically and technologically superior * the human specimen in Scout's study of Earth. However, he is frozen for at most several hours before Scout begins to feel guilty and returns him to his mother.
* The Human Stain. Coleman is in his seventies and Faunia in her thirties, for which Coleman catches a lot of flak.
* The Human Stain. Professor Coleman Silk's long and distinguished tenure is brought to sudden ruin when he is accused of making a racist comment about two black students. Coleman is the only person who can really appreciate the awful irony of this accusation, because he is a light-skinned black man who spent his entire adult life pretending he was white, going so far as to disown his family so that they don't exist as a fact of his past others could discover. Since the accusation was perpetrated from within the Athena faculty by his personal enemies, if they knew the truth about his race, they would almost certainly believe him to be a Boomerang Bigot instead of the straightforward variety they accused him of being.
* The human stardrive is a different type of portal network, allowing FTL travel through
* The humans were almost beaten by the Minbari, but they refrained from destroying the humans. This plays the trope straighter than it might appear at first: the humans decorate like
* The Human Torch nature of a lot of "The Death of X" stories Marvel ruined any potential surprise by spoiling it to the press the day before the release.
* The Human Twilight and Sunset aren't free from this either. Among other things, in the climax
* The human/undead towns and cities resemble 17th century and/or medieval Europe. They seem for the most part to emulate Britain, with many towns names ending in "shire" (whereas in the real world the shire is the area ruled by the town, e.g. Gloucester [pronounced "glosster"] is the county town of Gloucestershire [pronounced "glosstersher"]) like Darrowshire, Goldshire etc. Stratholm breaks this naming convention appearing germanic in origin, although being architecturally identical to Stormwind.
* The human versions of the Cutie Mark Crusaders are chagrined to find everyone is laughing at a video they uploaded of themselves performing a song.
* "The Human War", it's said that what makes humans special, and why they won the war against Opeterians, is that they are individually unpredictable. That seems less special when the logic is taken a bit further, though.
* The humble Linksys WRT54G router, with its unassuming blue exterior and familiar double-antenna design, is the wireless-router answer to this trope. It's cheap, reliable, so ubiquitous that answers to troubleshooting questions are easy to find, and has a dedicated homebrew community that supports it with custom firmware that gives it features usually only found on much newer and more expensive routers long after Linksys has more or less moved on.
* The humble M4 Sherman has a poor reputation nowadays due to its performance during the Second World War, when it was forced to fight Panthers and Tigers with an inferior gun and
* The Hummer. Created in 1992 as a civilian version of the military HMMWV (or "Humvee"), it soon became one of the most popular SUV brands in the United States. Particularly after the launch of the smaller, cheaper H2 and H3 models. The original H1 model earned a reputation as

* The humming episode, in which the characters spend the entire episode trying to figure out where they've heard a tune that they can only hum. The spend the majority of the episode doing nothing but humming, and never come to a conclusion.
* The humor comes from the character trying to cram themselves into something that is clearly far too small and constricting for them. Bonus points if they manage it, but the end result makes their figure look absurd.
* The humor may range from crude to cerebral, but he gets his facts straight, and his arguments are thoughtful and reasoned.
* The humorous song "Pillagers" contains an ad for Liquiflox, a fluid to help you take more pills. Its side effects include "an urge to buy a house from Ikea" and "death and reincarnation as a slug."
* The Hump Day Camel. Originally intended as a one-off, his popularity saw him come back several times. This includes one commercial that is set in a zoo, which heavily lampshades his first appearance.
* The "Humuhumunukunukuapua'a" number was deleted from the theatrical version of
* The Hunchback Assignments a disposable/consumable resource. Extra points for her two half-mechanical attack dogs...
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, a brief clip of Hugo bidding the audience goodbye and laughing plays before cutting to the Disney logo.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame actually falls off a balcony and to his death in the fiery molten lead below; for some reason we do not see his charred remains on the ground once Quasimodo, Esmeralda, and Phoebus finally emerge out of the cathedral unharmed. Since all the molten lead has been cleared away by the time they emerge, presumably Frollo's body (or what would have been left of it) was taken away with it.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame actually winks at the viewers for a few seconds during her dance at the Feast of Fools before pole-dancing with a spear.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame adaptations, Quasimodo drops a long piece of wood onto the rabble attacking Notre Dame, and the rabble use it as an improvised battering ram.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame after Frollo figures out that Quasi helped Esmeralda escape from the cathedral.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame after the gargoyles slap a giant 18th Century powder wig on Quasimodo only to find it makes him so ugly he cracks the mirror.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame and Heidi Mollenhauer, respectively (Moore was going to do her own but said she wouldn't sound good enough). The rest of the cast did their own singing.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, and it ultimately leads to his eternal damnation in Hell.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, Archdeacon Claude Frollo attempts to stab Captain Phoebus to death when he sees him kissing Esmeralda, the gypsy girl whom Frollo is madly in love with. Phoebus survives, and Esmeralda is arrested on accusations of witchcraft and murder. Frollo uses this as an opportunity to confess his love to Esmeralda and tells her he killed him out of love for her. Esmeralda, understandably, is less than impressed and refuses to go along with him.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame) are both French and star in "beauty is on the inside" stories; thus, both get shipped together. They don't live in the same period but that's easily worked around.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame are often subject to amusing humiliations, but they still enforce a brutal and corrupt regime. Among their misdeeds throughout the film, they initiate the public humiliation Quasimodo goes through, subdue Phoebus when he turns on Frollo and were inches away from executing him before Esmeralda interfered. Brutish Guard in particular is responsible for setting off the entire second half of the film when he discovers Esmeralda’s escape offscreen and reports it to Frollo.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame. Aside from the main female protagonist doing a pole dance, the entire theme of the movie focuses on lust and sin, with the plot centering around an elderly, genocidal judge obsessed with a young woman. The ending has him trying to burn her alive for refusing to have sex with him. It got a G anyway.

* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, as it's more famously known, refuses to describe Quasimodo's face, because it's too shocking to imagine. In fact, he refuses in explicit and numerous detail.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame as just another one of Frollo's mooks, but that changes for similar reasons.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame: As Paris burns due to Frollo's search for Esmeralda, Hugo sticks a sausage on a stick out the window and it comes out roasted, with a bit of flame on the end.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, as Roma performers were known for their skill in escapology and illusions.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, as they're preparing to find the Court of Miracles to warn the gypsies about Frollo's attack, Quasimodo shows Phoebus the amulet Esmeralda gave him.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame at the beginning where he feels he's being judged by the cathedral for killing Quasimodo's mother in front it.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame because he's the only one that sees her as a proper human being with flaws and pros instead of just one thing or another.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame (Burbank Animation) compressed a really big book into an animated film of less than a hour. The Festival of Fools doesn't appear (this is the only adaptation - animated or otherwise - where the festival doesn't take place), and the attack on the cathedral is performed by the angry townspeople, who want to kill Esmeralda.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, but even they were horrified when Judge Frollo ordered Esmeralda to be burned at stake.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, but that last part may have been an unrelated hallucination.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame by turning the gargoyle to which he's clinging into the visage of an actual demon, causing Frollo to fall. There's also a scene at the start of the movie where, as the Archdeacon calls out Frollo for accidentally killing Quasimodo's mother on the steps of the cathedral and is about to drown the infant Quasimodo as well, the statues of the saints, apostles, and angels on the cathedral all give him disapproving glares, and this convinces him to spare Quasimodo.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, Captain Phoebus finds Judge Frollo in the dungeons of the Palace of Justice. The Judge calls for an inquisitor whipping a prisoner and instructs him to ease off and wait between lashes. Not to give the prisoner some reprieve, but because whipping too fast means the pain of the old wound dulls the sting of the new one.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, during her dance Esmeralda runs up to Frollo, pulls him toward her face with her scarf, and kisses him.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, during Quasimodo's helping Esmeralda escape the cathedral via rooftop;
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, during the climax, Frollo reveals that not only did he consider killing Quasimodo as an infant, but he also killed his mother who was protecting her son. (The fate of Quasi's father is unknown, though he was presumably arrested and hanged like the other Gypsies his parents were travelling with.)
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, Esmeralda cries when the reality of her death sentence begins to sink in and she realizes she will be burned at the stake the following morning.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, Esmeralda is known for doing this to hide from the soldiers. She does this by carrying Djali on her shoulders and wrapping a blanket around them so they could pass as an old man.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame Esmeralda loses her grip, and as a result Quasimodo falls off the balcony as well, only to be caught and pulled back up by Phoebus (who is waiting at a lower balcony) at the last minute.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, Esmeralda marries Pierre Gringoire because Clopin, the King of the Gypsies, won't hang him if he is of their people, even by marriage.

* The Hunchback of Notre Dame falls in love with Esmeralda's pet goat, Djali.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame falls to his doom, and Quasimodo is rescued by Phoebus.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame fandom: "Frollophiles" and Clopin fans. Most of these fans only watch merely for the times they show up, with Clopin's side complaining about how he doesn't get enough screen time.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame fits the bill much better than Gaston. His whole deconstruction revolves around his sexual obsession with Esmeralda and his willingness to kill her along with her other two possible love interests, one of them being his adoptive son (whose mother he killed in the opening scene).
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, four guards let out a high-pitched squeal (but not helium sounding) after receiving a simultaneous crotch kick from a guy on stilts.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame. Frollo, angry that Quasi disobeyed him by leaving the cathedral, lets this go on until Esmeralda saves him.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame Frollo does one when he completely loses it in the finale.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, Frollo feels this way about Esmeralda, willing to forsake his reputation, salvation, immortality and eternity, "this life and the other" for the sake of his obsession with her.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, Frollo laughs evilly as he goes to stab Esmeralda with his sword. Given that his next line suggests he thinks he's doing God's will ("And He shall smite the wicked, and plunge them into the fiery pit!"), it's pretty likely he'd also gone mad with power.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame: Frollo spits his wine when Quasimodo unwittingly says "festival" for the letter F while reviewing his alphabet.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame Frollo's soldiers have no problem attempting to subdue Esmerelda by force.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, giving Phoebus serious injuries by shooting him and breaking the cathedral's door enough that Frollo can enter.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame goes, it has a massive following and it has far more fans than its critical response would suggest.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame (Golden Films): Melody has one on her left cheek.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, Gringoire is forced to go into hiding from angry sponsors after his play bombs, and joins the Gypsies as a street performer.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame: "...Gypsy girl! Get down from there at once!"
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame had a bit of a problem with this. At its core, it's a very serious and quite dark story, featuring heavy themes such as religious fundamentalism, rape, and even genocide. This would make for a fine movie, but the problem being that it wouldn't be marketable to kids, arguably the main demographic for the Disney Animated Canon. So they added in a decent amount of comic relief and slapstick, mostly centered around three ambiguously alive Gargoyles. Audiences agree, even big fans of the movie, that this didn't mesh well with the rest of the movie and serve to bring down the overall quality of the picture.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame has a character say to his horse "Achilles. Heel." Think about that for a second.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame. Has a disfigured face and body from birth. This is also implied to be the reason why he was abandoned as a toddler. He is also deaf and half-blind.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame has a little of this, though it's more like Deformed Hero, Normal Villain; Frollo isn't very good-looking, but his looks don't have the stigma attached to them that Quasimodo's do. Frollo teaches Quasimodo that he's "a monster", but in the end Quasi realizes that Frollo was the monster all along.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame has an example of unrequited love, with Quasimodo and Esmeralda.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, has driven him insane. He tries to have Quasimodo kidnap her, which doesn't work out. He then has her framed for murder and tells her that he can save her from her execution if she promises to love him.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, he goes in to rescue the family. Frollo would have had him executed for treason right then and there, had Esmeralda not come to the rescue.

* The Hunchback of Notre Dame "Hellfire" is about his conflict over him lusting after her when she's a gypsy and he's a "righteous" man of the church.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame. He tells the flogger to wait between lashes, "otherwise, the old sting will dull him to the new."
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame. His idea of a warm welcome for Phoebus, the new Captain of the Guard? Having someone flogged within their earshot - someone all but outright stated to be Phoebus' predecessor, who "disappointed" Frollo in some way.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, Hugo and Victor are commenting on Esmeralda and Djali as they chase Quasimodo into the bell towers.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame II didn't even flip out, even though it's exactly the sort of insanely over the top depraved scenario they often use as a slippery slope argument.
* The Hunchbackof Notre Dame II, Quasimodo finds new love in the form of Madellaine, years after he had given up his unrequited feelings for Esmeralda.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame II, Sarousch steals La Fidele by putting a curtain over it and saying some magic words.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame II voices the half-white, half-Romani Zephyr.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame II; while Quasimodo is still the main character, supporting characters Esmeralda and Phoebus get pushed aside in favor of their son, Zephyr.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, instead of the cynical, selfish jerk that he really is, which allows him to take advantage of her.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame in which Frollo asks the Virgin Mary to destroy Esmeralda.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame is a rather horrifying example... As he puts it: "She will be mine or she will burn!"
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame is described as being so ugly, people mistake him for the Devil.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame is hard to distinguish. In the original book she was sixteen, but she's clearly older in Disney's adaptation. The way she talks to Quasimodo (who is twenty) implies she's several years older than him.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame is obsessed with Esmeralda and would kill her if she rejected him. There are a few differences, though: he's a holy man, has done good deeds such as raising his younger brother after their parents' deaths and taking in Quasimodo when no one else would, and doesn't kill anyone (despite his attempts). However, he's still eager to throw her to the wolves if his feelings aren't returned.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame is remembered for a scene where Esmeralda does a makeshift pole dance while performing at the Feast of Fools. It's quite brief but it's surely a memorable part of the film.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame is so beautiful that everyone who meets her falls in love with her, in some cases to the point of obsession. It certainly helps that she's also very kind and compassionate.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame is still presented as a womanizer, but cares about Esmeralds's safety in contrast to his un-chivalrous book counterpart.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame is this to Quasimodo, who he terrifies and manipulates. He accidentally murdered Quasi's mother and tried to murder Quasimodo himself at the beginning of the movie, but took him home because he feared damnation. Frollo is more than ready to kill Quasimodo at the end of the movie.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, it is a long standing belief that Notre Dame cathedral itself is alive, protecting and judging its citizens.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, it plays out the same way in Sora's story, but in Riku's story, he is blown off the church by the boss of the world, Wargoyle.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame. It was a typical sentence for attempting to kidnap the gypsy Esmeralda though the real mastermind was Archdeacon Frollo.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame: Judge Claude Frollo raids the Court of Miracles, the save haven of the gypsies, after an unwitting Quasimodo leads him there.

* The Hunchback of Notre Dame keeps having to dodge wooden shop signs.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame merch quickly filling clearance racks after the film became a box office disappointment.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, most of the Romani characters have dark skin and black hair. There are exceptions, including the light-skinned and redheaded Quasimodo.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame of "Heaven's Light," in which Quasimodo laments that his love for Esmeralda will never be returned.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame on Esmeralda, however it is extremely one-sided and unhealthy. That doesn't stop them from being one of the most popular pairs in fanfics for the film.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame. Or possibly, Frollo envisioned it due to his guilty conscience.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame over a dagger but displays little finesse.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame: Parodied in the character of Clopin. When Phoebus and Quasimodo find their way into the Court of Miracles, an energetic Clopin does a quick, jolly, and almost frightening song involving three changes of costume:
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, Phoebus and Esmeralda are fighting, he with his sword, she with a candlestick. At one point she tries to hit him in the crotch with the candlestick, but Phoebus successfully blocks it with his sword, only for Esmeralda to then hit him in the face with the other end.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, Phoebus gives a big rousing speech for the Gypsies and citizens to fight back and put an end to Frollo's tyranny once and for all.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, Phoebus is shot in the shoulder with an arrow, falls from his horse into the River Seine, almost drowns, is still unconscious when Esmeralda brings him to the safety of Notre Dame, and seems to be very weak throughout their subsequent scene together and as Quasimodo hides him from Frollo. But after Frollo leaves, he's able to get up and set out to find the Court of Miracles with seemingly only minor pain, and by the next day he's in full condition to fight again.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, Phoebus openly admires Esmeralda's spirit and cunning as she fights off himself and the rest of the soldiers. "What a woman!" he exclaims, moments after narrowly ducking a flying helmet.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame plants a chaste kiss on his forehead. The poor fellow then completely forgets to breathe, resulting in him fainting on the floor a few seconds later, his face still plastered with a blissful smile.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame: Quasimodo and Esmeralda. She ends up with Phoebus in the end, but it is indicated that she and Quasimodo remain good friends. An absolute subversion of the original story, in which Esmeralda is just as revolted by Quasimodo's looks as everybody else. The sequel plays it straight all the way with a girl named Madellaine hooking up with Quasimodo.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, Quasimodo broke off those two pillars which Frollo chained him to, to save Esmeralda from being burned at the stake. During the final battle, Frollo smashes off the doorknob on one of the cathedral doors to enter the cathedral, and the damaged gargoyle was the one that dispatched Frollo in the end.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame: Quasimodo drops a long piece of wood onto the rabble attacking Notre Dame and the rabble use it as an improvised battering ram.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame: Quasimodo. Especially when it comes to Frollo's true evil nature (until the climax, at least). Justified due to being raised by Frollo and kept in isolation for his entire life.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame: Quasimodo hides the wounded and unconscious Phoebus under the table when Frollo comes to visit unexpectedly.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame: Quasimodo is an interesting example, as due to his physical deformity he stands shorter than most men, but he still counts specifically because a lifetime of ringing the bells of Notre Dame Cathedral have left him strong enough to shatter iron chains with his bare hands.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, Quasimodo pulls off a lot of neat parkour-style moves on the rooftops of the cathedral.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame: Quasimodo spends practically his entire life in the belltower because his "adoptive father" Judge Frollo refuses to let the world see how ugly he truly is, and is really only caring for Quasi to atone for murdering his mother. Judge Frollo and the three gargoyles are Quasimodo's only company, so he spends most of his time fantasizing that he is a normal person interacting with the people of Paris.

* The Hunchback of Notre Dame reinstated "Someday", albeit in a grimmer context, being sung by Esmeralda just before her execution.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame ringing until he collapsed from exhaustion.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame's backstory, and at the end of the film he is seen carrying a little girl as he reprises the opening song.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, sees a fiery version of Esmeralda in there and ends his musical number with flame-like shadows surrounding the scenery.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame: Several dogs can be seen walking their owners during the song "Topsy Turvy."
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame shelfwarming even though they had been marked down to clearance price.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame show a sick and cruel sense of humor. Most notably when he is supervising someone being whipped, just as his new Captain of the Guard Phoebus arrives.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, singers Massimo Ranieri and Mietta voice Quasimodo and Esmeralda.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame So its a tad bit more depressing to say the least.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame's orders in the night, and Esmeralda give him water while the mob is pelting him with rotten vegetables and other disgusting things.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, succumbed to surgical complications in October 1995. By the time of the film's release, Wickes had completed most of her dialogue, but a few additional lines were done by Jane Withers, who later voiced Laverne in the direct-to-video sequel.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame that Frollo is a priest, but he does live in a cathedral and wear robes that look like they could be priest's robes. He's identified onscreen as an alchemist, but he did practice alchemy on the side in the original novel. All in all, it seems like the filmmakers are trying to make it so that the audience will infer that he's a priest, but without tipping off the censors.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame that's an inverted confession of sins, and assaults a cathedral. When he's swinging a sword and raving about how He shall cast down the wicked, the gargoyle under his feet roars at him and breaks off.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame that's guilty for tempting him. He uses this as justification for setting ablaze the city of Paris in search for Esmeralda.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame: The Gargoyles do this for Quasimodo, to get him to literally and metaphorically break from his chains and rescue Esmerelda.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame: the official flogger who publicly whips Quasimodo is cheered like a sports hero.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame: The Phoebus/Esmeralda relationship is this as Esmeralda is revealed near the end to be a French girl by birth swapped for Quasimodo.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame: The theatrical poster. The VHS/LaserDisc cover has Frollo almost shunted off the top.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, the things he does casts his "good intentions" as being sham and hollow.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame. The two being abusive, manipulative parental figures works in their favor.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, the viewers learn that Quasimodo is Romani and that his mother died saving him. Frollo, however, didn't tell him much about his past besides Quasimodo supposedly being abandoned for being deformed. It isn't until later in the film that Quasimodo learns the truth about his heritage and what happened to his mother.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, the villagers crowd surf Quasimodo away from the cathedral, but Esmeralda and Phoebus stay behind.

* The Hunchback of Notre Dame. They both die tragically due to Paris' injustices.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, they use CGI to render large crowds, counting on the fact that nobody would be looking at the background characters to disguise the fact that it's really obvious CGI. Take a look at the people in the background of the "Topsy Turvy" sequence sometime.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame this trope (it had happened so many times before.) Didn't work. Some even have a disturbing habit of justifying his actions.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame throws the Archdeacon down a flight of stairs on his way to his final confrontation with Quasimodo and Esmeralda.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame to rescue a family from a burning house.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame turned to CGI to achieve the massive crowd scenes, with hundreds of moving figures visible. However, their actions are all drawn from a relatively limited pool of looping sequences, which are reused in multiple scenes and are hard to un-notice once you've noticed a few. Still an impressive achievement for the time though.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame uses self-righteous morality to justify his perceived superiority. Somehow he succeeds in praying in a way so selfish and self-absorbed that the contrast with his faith should be even more obvious than the answer to the riddle who is the monster and who is the man?
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame uses this as a joke. There's an old man who is initially stuck in a cage, and then Esmerelda's fight with the guards sets him free. He triumphantly exclaims "I'm Free! I'm Free!" and trips on the cage bar and falls into the pillory "Dangit!" In the climatic battle he gets unintentionally set free...and then falls into a sewer. ("Dangit!")
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame wears a mostly black and purple suit, but with small red adornments.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame: When Esmeralda is escaping the cathedral with Quasimodo's help, she hides from the guards looking for her by posing next to a statue in a similar pose like the depicted saint, having her hands folded like in a prayer and and looking towards the sky. Admittedly, what sells it is probably less her convincing looks and more the fact that she doesn't move and hence the guards do not look at her more closely.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, when Frollo notices one of Quasi's wooden figures shaped like Esmerelda.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame when Laverne "sics" her birds on the enemy...
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame: When Quasimodo is entertaining Frollo, all the while desperately hoping he doesn't notice the wounded Phoebus hidden under the table, Frollo suspiciously points out that Quasimodo hasn't eaten any of his dinner. Quasi nervously shoves a handful of grapes into his mouth and almost chokes on them.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame. When Quasimodo sees him laughing at Esmeralda's hanging, he pushes him off the cathedral. A gargoyle stops his fall, and he struggles to save himself, but ultimately gives up the fight and lets go. He falls onto a roof, rolls off and hits the pavement below, meeting his end.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame: When Quasimodo's mother is murdered by Frollo, she instantly dies the moment she lands headfirst on the stairs with no hint of gory anywhere, not even when the archdeacon holds her we don't see any hint of blood where her head got hit.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame: While he's not exactly the ruler of Paris per se, Frollo is the city's default authority. As he becomes more and more obsessed with Esmeralda, he ramps up his persecution of the Roma and then starts torching the houses of random people for charges of treason that he essentially made up. Even the common citizens say that he's gone mad. It reaches its peak when he has his men attack Notre Dame in pursuit of Esmeralda and Quasimodo, an institution that everyone in Paris looks up to and which Frollo himself had previously respected. This act allows Phoebus to easily rouse the people of Paris to arms against him.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, while in the film, she's more savvy and worldly.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame, who is ... lively to put gently. He is almost always jumping from place to place, which fits, given that he is the Master of Ceremonies of the Feast of Fools. Even later on in the Court of Miracles, where we see a darker side of him, he never stops flitting around, even including split-second costume changes for good measure.

* The Hunchback of Notre Dame with Esmerelda and then abandoned because of his ugly appearance before being adopted by Frollo, who took pity on him. In the movie, she loved him, but Frollo killed her and made him think that his mother abandoned him as a baby.
* The Hunchback of Notre Dame with no resentment or animosity toward anyone.
* The Hundred and One Dalmatians. Later adaptations give them the given names from the movie and the surname from the book. Also, Saul Badun becomes Horace, and Lt. Tib becomes Sgt. Tibbs (with that particular cat also getting a sex change in the process).
* The Hundred and One Dalmatians paw has a spot on it, but in the end all she can remember is that her left paw is "one of the front ones."
* The Hundred and One Dalmatians was her dalmatian Pongo; naturally, she put him into the book as the main character.
* The Hundred and One Dalmatians, when Sirius the Dog Star appears to the dogs, Pongo and Missis see a Dalmatian ... and then hear the General exclaiming in surprise that Sirius is a sheepdog. It becomes apparent that every dog sees Sirius as their own breed.
* "The Hundred Days of the Dragon" is centered around a Chinese government operative who uses a special drug that can shapeshift his face, but no monster is present or implied.
* The Hundred-Year-Old Man Who Climbed Out the Window and Disappeared, a half-ton of deluxe Bibles are dropped off at a recycling center. One of the workers compares a copy verse-by-verse to another Bible. He has to read all the way to the end, as an extra verse has been appended to the last chapter of Revelations ("And they lived happily ever after.").
* The Hundred-Year-Old Man Who Climbed Out the Window and Disappeared, extremely rapidly to boot. It's implied he keeps this up for months before finally getting killed in his first battle.
* The Hundred-Year-Old Man Who Climbed Out the Window and Disappeared - which is by the way much better then the "arthouse-ish" name might imply - through a series of flashback scenes we gradually learn that the main character prevented an assassination of Franco, personally suggested the explosive obturation principle for a Manhattan project, and many other things.
* The Hundred Years' War between England and France, which lasted 116 years (including some armistices). Given the average lifespans and literacy rates at that point, it's very likely most people had no idea what the war was about.
* The Hundred Years War by the real world Bertrand du Guesclin. Faced with an army on an easily defendable hill, Bertrand's army begins its advance, but panics and routs immediately as the first arrows land and pile up as they try to flee across the bridge behind them. The enemy army can't resist the temptation to wipe out the disorganized mess below them and charge down, whereupon Bertrand's army immediately reforms to have the battle right where he wanted, on the the level plain below the hill.
* The Hundred Years War that king Charles VII kept with him. With time they formally became his bodyguards, and, as their ranks were enlarged and filled with Frenchmen, became the first company of the Garde du Corps du Roi (Bodyguards of the King), the main cavalry regiment of the royal guard.
* The Hundred Years War, the English forces, mostly commoners with longbows, defeated numerically superior French forces, mostly nobles on horses in armor, by their use of ranged attacks from behind stakes driven into the ground.
* The Hundred Years War, though that might also have something to do with trying to stay on Canada's good side).
* The Hundred Years War to emphasize ideas of nationalism and class consciousness, greatly distorting and exaggerating the events out of its actual historical context.
* The Hundred-Year War itself is an an interesting variation in the show, as while it is ongoing, it still fits within the realms of this trope: We see much of the actual effects of the war, with the show taking place during its final year, but we get little information concerning the period between the Fire Nation beginning their expansion and colonization of other countries at the start of the war to the present. We only see some snippets of the raids on the Southern Water Tribe and Iroh's assault on Ba Sing Se through flashbacks while most other battles are only alluded to. Even over the course of the show itself we don 't see that much of the actual war, with only a small handful of major military battles being shown. (four,

* The Hungarian "Big Wind" tank was a mashup of an old T-34 tank with two MiG-21 engines and firefighting hoses. This thing wasn't actually designed to fight as much as decontaminate irradiated vehicles, but when the First Gulf War rolled along and Saddam Hussein torched Kuwait's oil fields, a hybrid tank/fighter/fire truck combo shooting water at supersonic speeds was just what the doctors ordered to put the fires out.
* The Hungarian communist regime (at least post-1956) was much less ban-happy than other communist regimes in the area. They realized that by looking the other way regarding

* The Hungarian version dubbed the shorts first in 1988 and then the compilation movie in 1997. The newer dub features most of the same voice cast (Christopher Robin, Kanga, and Gopher's voice actors were replaced).
* The Hunger: Ancient, immortal vampire Miriam turns her mortal lovers into vampires, who then live with her for a couple of hundred years. They then wither and age rapidly to a near paralytic state, and she files them away in coffins in her attic. She does show some regret over this.
* The Hunger ends with a We Hate You, Vampire Mom scene, in which all of Miriam's mummy-like former lovers gang up on her and harry her off a balcony.
* The Hunger. For her current lover John, it takes just two hours for him to age fifty years, and it just goes on from there...
* The Hunger Games), a book later. Delly Cartwright is mentioned in the first part of the first book in passing, but doesn't appear until the middle of the third.
* The Hunger Games about mounting an offensive against the Careers, but it is her skill with wilderness survival, tendency to ration and plan ahead, and speed and agility that allow her to hold out long enough in the meantime. It also seems she's pulled a Batman and tried to recall what worked in previous Hunger Games to help decide her course of action. If a natural charisma also counts as a skill, it certainly helps her get much-needed assistance.
* The Hunger Games about why mockingjays are the symbol of rebellion. The story goes like this: During a time of rebellion, the Capitol created jabberjays, an all-male species of mutation that could memorize and repeat human conversation, and let them loose to spy on the rebels. Unfortunately, the rebels soon figured out what was going on and talked about false information in the jabberjays' range, leading to much embarrassment for the Capitol. When the Capitol realized what was going on, they abandoned the jabberjays, expecting them to die out. Instead, they survived by breeding with female mockingbirds, creating mockingjays.
* The Hunger Games. According to Rue, from the farming and food production District, however, it is used regularly, particularly for those eating produce earmarked to be sent to the Capitol.
* The Hunger Games: A different interpretation of the word "connections" in this case, but the reason Katniss hasn't been tossed in a cell for illegally hunting the District 12 wildlife isn't because of any particular skill at evading the Peacemakers. It's because the Peacemakers are also her customers.
* The Hunger Games. After her Games, Katniss finds that her hearing in her left ear is restored, and while she was out the Capitol apparently enhanced her appearance for the cameras — her skin's perfection, smooth and glowing with no burns, scars or anything. Peeta, on the other hand, has his lower leg replaced with a metal and plastic device. This is true for all victors, who will go on to live in the spotlight after their bloodbath.

* The Hunger Games after ripping out someone's throat with her teeth in the Games she won.
* The Hunger Games. All past victors of the Games are brought back each year to mentor the new tributes from their district, though Haymitch definitely keeps up this role to Katniss and Peeta long after the Games themselves are over.
* The Hunger Games, all the tributes going into the Games are implanted with a tracker so that the Capitol knows where they are in the arena at all times.
* The Hunger Games. Also, it took fifteen years, but Peeta persuaded Katniss. They end up having two children: a girl with her black hair and his blue eyes, and a boy with his blond hair and her gray eyes.
* The Hunger Games. Among other things this means: only one victor, keep Districts divided, putting down riots and rebellions, etc.
* The Hunger Games and her mother crumbled completely when he died - in other words made her weak. In the first book, she more or less says outright that she needs to keep an emotional distance from Peeta to protect herself from that kind of weakness. Romantic love would also lead to marriage and children and she believes maternal love to be an even greater weakness, desperately wanting to protect herself from being a mother on Reaping Day.
* The Hunger Games and later has her fighting an all-out war. The film adaptations thankfully downplay some of those (for instance, unlike in the books Peeta never loses a leg).
* The Hunger Games, and the more recent "Dark Days" when Panem's provinces rose in an unsuccessful rebellion against the Capitol.
* The Hunger Games and thus, his fate would remain the same as it did in the book.
* The Hunger Games", Angel takes on this role to Katniss after he saves her from the Capitol's assassins, teaching her about the true demonic nature of the Capitol's power and preparing her to fight demons.
* The Hunger Games, a not-so-small part of the preparation for the Hunger Games is all about cleaning up nicely. It appears to be more important than actually training combat skills. And while it can be assumed that the children from the first districts didn't need much "cleaning up" to be done, the people assigned to take care of Katniss nearly fainted when they saw her with her unplucked eyebrows, hairy legs, etc. Like Harry Potter above, this was lost in the film, given that "Katnip" was clearly quite attractive even before the Games.
* The Hunger Games, a platonic version occurs when Cinna headbutts Katniss as a way to comfort her seconds before she entered the stadium.
* The Hunger Games, a prequel to the original trilogy, was published, revealing that District 12 did win the Tenth Games, but the tribute concerned was a girl called Lucy Gray Baird.
* The Hunger Games are basically these, used to turn the people against the Capitol.
* The Hunger Games are held as a punishment for a rebellion against the Capitol more than seventy years in the past, so could be considered a particularly unfair example of this trope, especially since those forced to compete weren't even born when the rebellion took place.
* The Hunger Games aren't so fond of the way that the Capitol is forcing them to kill their fellow human beings. (That doesn't mean that, if someone is trying to kill them, that they won't kill them first, though.)
* The Hunger Games are raised from childhood to become warriors in the annual Hunger Games.
* The Hunger Games are told entirely from Katniss's point of view, there's a lot of details and stories we miss out on because she is unaware of what's happening.
* The Hunger Games: As a consequence of evolution, and the Capitol's experiments on animals, many of the plants and animals in Panem are hybrids. These include grooslings (goose and grouse), mockingjays (mockingbirds and the jabberjays, themselves muttations), nightlock (nightshade and hemlock), and possibly morphling.
* The Hunger Games, as a mangy, worm-infested stray (Katniss wanted to drown him), adores her goat, Lady (Katniss prefers to think of her as a source of milk and money), and utterly failed at learning to hunt because she would cry over and want to heal any animal that Katniss shot.

* The Hunger Games as a signal between Katniss and Rue. In a play on this trope, the girls sing or whistle four particular notes — and then they rely on the mockingjays present in the arena to carry the song to where the other girl can hear it.
* The Hunger Games, asking the others to kill them, refusing to have handcuffs removed and using the pain of the too tightly wound cuffs to keep sane.
* The Hunger Games. At first. His idealism gradually erodes as the series goes on.
* The Hunger Games. At the same time, said rulers possess technology to among other things control weather (at least on a local scale) and piece together human corpses into living monstrous doglike creatures.
* The Hunger Games: Averted; they exist, but they're the worse alternative.
* The Hunger Games "basically an updated version of the Roman gladiator games."
* The Hunger Games because she doesn't want to get married and have children.
* The Hunger Games book for having its revolution be a collective action, whereas protagonist Katniss's job is mostly symbolic or limited to things that only she can do.
* The Hunger Games both have the titular games as a means to intimidate the downtrodden population and entertain the ruling class.
* The Hunger Games. Both times they are kissing and she begins to feel desire for him. The first time they're interrupted by her bleeding head wound; the second time by lightning hitting a tree.
* The Hunger Games but it's mostly lead to a negative response and was toned down for the third film.
* The Hunger Games, but it's obvious—to her and everyone else—that he is still hung up on Vale.
* The Hunger Games, but Katniss only has a very vague idea of the Dark Days and the world before Panem.
* The Hunger Games: Buttercup to Prim, especially during the rebellion.
* The Hunger Games, but they are minors acting and the lack of sound effect is due to Katniss (and in turn the audience's POV) being rendered temporarily deaf because of the explosion. (Out of universe adding a crunching sound effect would have pushed the films rating up from PG-13).
* The Hunger Games: Careers, the Tributes from Districts 1 and 2, come off this way due to their district's practice of training children specifically to volunteer for the Hunger Games. As a result, they are far more likely to win than Tributes from other districts. Although, their arrogance is a flaw that can be used against them.
* The Hunger Games: Catching Fire. Already one in the book, here he starts the crackdown in District 12 by shooting his pistol into the air.
* The Hunger Games: Catching Fire, and the duo's mentor Haymitch is on the scene as well to get impressed by her. That being said, only Katniss finds it uncomfortable. Peeta and Haymitch seem to enjoy it.
* The Hunger Games: Catching Fire argument in that we don't know exactly how the force fields work.)
* The Hunger Games: Catching Fire: Despite being stated to be among the older tributes in the book, the District 6 Morphlings only look about 20-30 in the movie. Justified as their actors, Justin Hix and Megan Hayes, are around that age.
* The Hunger Games: Catching Fire, Effie hands them the speeches she has written for them. Peeta stops looking at his after reading the first sentence.
* The Hunger Games: Catching Fire: Katniss Everdeen and Peeta play this trope up for all it's worth during the Victory Tour.
* The Hunger Games: Catching Fire: Katniss Everdeen and Peeta play up this trope before the Quarter Quell.
* The Hunger Games: Catching Fire Similar to the book (see below), Katniss comes into Haymitch's home finds him passed out (likely drunk) and throws water on him to revive him.
* The Hunger Games: Catching Fire: The other tributes see Katniss Everdeen as being this in the second Games. Cue Finnick, Johanna, and Chaff trolling her and trying to 'corrupt' her.

* The Hunger Games: Catching Fire, though it's toned down significantly compared to the book.
* The Hunger Games: Catching Fire uses Bank Gothic extensively in its teaser trailer.
* The Hunger Games: Catching Fire were filmed in Atlanta, Georgia, doubling for Appalachia.
* The Hunger Games, certainly did no favors for Katniss' relationship with her mom.
* The Hunger Games, Clove managed to get the best of Katniss and was just about to kill her when Thresh pulled her off Katniss and beat her to death against the Cornucopia, before leaving without attacking Katniss.
* The Hunger Games: Clove, the female tribute from District 2, is highly skilled with throwing knives and becomes one of Katniss Everdeen's fiercest opponents in the arena.
* The Hunger Games coming face to face with the careers, running and hiding in a tree is your only option. The trope is almost flat-out mentioned when Haymitch warns his tributes from trying to snatch supplies at the cornucopia, telling them they won't survive the initial bloodbath (though Peeta actually does in the book - in the movie he runs).
* The Hunger Games, coming out in November 2013, Covergirl released a Capitol-inspired line of makeup. For those not in the know, the Capitol fashions are repeatedly described as incredibly gaudy, if not nightmarish. And nothing says "shooting yourself in the foot" like tying your brand to a city full of corrupt hedonists who force children to murder each other for entertainment!
* The Hunger Games: Despite being quick-thinking, agile, and a good shot with a bow and arrow, years of being underfed really limits how much stress Katniss's body can take.
* The Hunger Games developed when Suzanne Collins was watching TV one night and kept flipping between news coverage of war and a reality TV show involving young people; the two sort of blurred together in her mind until she came up with the series' premise.
* The Hunger Games distasteful part of the character is that he is casually talking about the horrible deaths of various children as they fight to survive in the arena.
* The Hunger Games, District 12 has a wedding tradition where the newly-weds build a fire and toast bread together. Peeta admits that the tradition is old-fashioned, but nobody feels married until after the toasting.
* The Hunger Games: District 13 is a morally grey version of this, having avoided subjugation along with the other 12 rebelling Districts through the threat of their nuclear arsenal, and bidding their time for the next 75 years, waiting for an opportunity to go to war with the Capitol again.
* The Hunger Games. District 3 makes electronics and explosives, so, yeah...
* The Hunger Games: Districts in the series function like this. Each has one and only one job to do (such as District 12: coal mining, or District 11: agriculture), all of which support the Capitol.
* The Hunger Games due to her role as cute little girl. Katniss herself is said to have olive skin, and it has been a matter of some debate whether she should have been cast as white.
* The Hunger Games: Effie Trinket has been wearing fancy dresses in all her appearances. When she has to wear jumpsuits after defecting to District 13, she's obviously pissed off. That said, she is able to rock the jumpsuit with a few alterations and accessories.
* The Hunger Games: Effie Trinket, to an extent. Seems more obvious in the movies.
* The Hunger Games, eleven-year-old Katniss Everdeen realizes what she can do to survive after her father's death (hunt in the forest, which he taught her) when she sees the first dandelion of the year.
* The Hunger Games enables humans to survive underground for long periods.
* The Hunger Games ended up being more acclaimed because of having better writing and characters, and ended up starting its own trend of young adult romances being within a Dystopian setting.

* The Hunger Games even ties a noose and pretends to hang himself as a joke.
* The Hunger Games. Everyone celebrates their triumph except... most of them.
* The Hunger Games experience a lot of bumps, although he does ultimately end up with one of them.
* The Hunger Games fansites had a poll for fans to select their own fandom nickname. "Tributes" won narrowly over "Mockingjays."
* The Hunger Games) features this heavily as rebel forces from the former districts attack the Capitol. The Capitol defenses include pods which can spawn any type of horror such as mutated creatures to automatic weapons fire.
* The Hunger Games films, given the premise. Besides Katniss and Peeta, only seven (Glimmer, Marvel, Cato, Clove, Rue, Thresh, and Foxface) of the other 22 tributes are even named.
* The Hunger Games films Jennifer Lawrence (5'7") and Josh Hutcherson (5'5"), who plays her main love interest, appear the same height when they are shown side by side. In reality, Lawrence is two inches taller.
* The Hunger Games, Finnick Odair is constantly shirtless before the Quarter Quell.
* The Hunger Games: Finnick uses this to show Katniss how to tie a difficult knot.
* The Hunger Games: Fire is strongly associated with Katniss Everdeen throughout the story. Of course, fire usually represents revolutions, even in real life, so it fits. The mockingjay symbol also frequently pops up as early as the first film. It eventually becomes the rebellion's sigil.
* The Hunger Games fits this trope to a T. She prides herself in appearing cold and aloof, though she gets very protective and sweet to anyone she considers fragile or broken, like her little sister, Rue and injured boys.
* The Hunger Games for a wrestling lesson. Peeta finds it amusing. Katniss... not so much.
* The Hunger Games for years 1-73, and most of them we know little or nothing about.
* The Hunger Games: Foxface maybe says a word or two during her interview with Caesar, but this is out of focus so it's hard to tell.
* The Hunger Games from District 12" because of their romance while in the Hunger Games, where only one can survive. Katniss is a determined fighter and an excellent archer. Her strategy is to put on a brave face so as to not appear weak. Peeta is more expressive of his emotions as seen in his tear-stained face, artistic talent, and public confession of love for Katniss.
* The Hunger Games gains traction, they hijack the government's messages against them to broadcast "propos" of the series's star, Katniss Everdeen.
* The Hunger Games, Gale reveals that he didn't realize he loved Katniss until another guy flirted with her.
* The Hunger Games, Gale says that Katniss only smiles when in the woods. During the Games, Peeta tells her that she doesn't scowl as much when she's asleep. Katniss herself admits that her smiles are hard to come by.
* The Hunger Games, Gale tells Katniss that he loves her. Katniss, who is still confused about her feelings for Peeta, does the Han Solo thing and tells him "I know."
* The Hunger Games Games, Katniss notices that although many of the boys in the arena are old enough to grow beards, and have been away from razors for a good two or three weeks, not a single one has done so. She suspects that their Capitol stylists have done some sort of procedure on their faces to prevent this, presumably to keep them looking young and innocent.
* The Hunger Games gave this one much more free rein with its action sequences.
* The Hunger Games gritty, dystopian Real World in the satellite states, where most people are starving/worked to death and are forced to fight to the death for the amusement of the people living in the shiny city in the centre. And it is really very shiny. Think random tech that doesn't even exist in real life and fashion obsessions.
* The Hunger Games had this subtext, although the trauma sustained by Katniss in particular is implied to be ever-present.

* The Hunger Games: Happens a number of times with Plutarch Heavensbee.
* The Hunger Games has an Apple-like aesthetic. All the Gamemakers' desks look basically like giant iPads.
* The Hunger Games has both the trainers and Haymitch stress that smart tributes learn wilderness survival and forgo getting glamorous weapons at the start before bolting for high ground and water to give themselves a good chance of survival.
* The Hunger Games has led to heavy increase in interest in archery, to the point where it won't be shocking if, in the future, we will probably end up hearing an Olympic Gold Medalist credit these movies as their reason for getting into the sport.
* The Hunger Games has strong aspects of this. He's deeply in love with her, has no real hope that she'll ever feel the same way (he thinks she's in love with her best friend Gale) but is willing to die (and kill) for her without a moment's hesitation. While they play the part of lovers in public he is remarkably chaste with her in private, spending countless nights holding her in his arms and never even tries to kiss her.
* The Hunger Games have several weaponized creatures scattered around both the titular Games and the Capitol, including ferocious wasps with hallucinogenic venom and wolf "Muttations" created to resemble the tributes who died in the Seventy-fourth Hunger Games.
* The Hunger Games, having been the first person to give her hope after her father died.
* The Hunger Games: Haymitch Abernathy, back in the day. He still definitely has traces of this attitude but most of it has been beaten out of him.
* The Hunger Games: Haymitch sends Katniss some soup to feed Peeta with. Enclosed is the note, "You call that a kiss?", referring to a kiss on the cheek she gave Peeta earlier. Katniss promptly pulls this trope, though in the context of the film this doesn't break the fourth wall as she's aware her every action is being televised.
* The Hunger Games," hence Peeta being the son of a baker and the eponymous "Games" serving as circuses to entertain the masses and keep them in check.
* The Hunger Games. Her sister, Prim, looks like Mrs. Everdeen and has inherited her passion for healing. Also, Mrs. Everdeen was close friends with Katniss' friend, Madge's mother, as a teenager and the father of Katniss' love interest Peeta had a crush on Mrs. Everdeen.
* The Hunger Games. He's got a short fuse, and Heaven helps whoever is in his way when it goes off.
* The Hunger Games. He takes advantage of poor, starving young women of District 12 to get them to sleep with him. Katniss says that if she didn't know how to hunt, she'd have been forced to go to Cray.
* The Hunger Games. However, he just wants to get out of the games alive, which calls his "evil" status into doubt.
* The Hunger Games if not the Great Depression or even the 19th Century. It's no wonder then that those from there tend to be awestruck by how modern the Capitol is.
* The Hunger Games in 2012 — both of which feature women protagonists who use a bow and arrow — girls’ participation in archery competitions doubled.
* The Hunger Games: In "Catching Fire", the arena is surrounded by a barely-visible force-field that electrocutes tributes on contact. Peeta was almost killed walking into one and Blight, the male from District 7, died running straight into it.
* The Hunger Games initially fights to protect her family from being sacrificed in the titular games and ends up becoming an icon of the rebellion against the corrupt government of Panem.
* The Hunger Games initially seem like they would be important characters. They are from the same distinct as Rue and Thresh and at different points, Katniss, Peeta and Haymitch all consider/advocate for them to team up. Plus Chaff being close friends with Haymitch and Seeder deliberately seeking out Katniss to thank her for looking after Rue and Thresh's families. Instead, they are both killed in the Quarter Quell without making an appearance despite both being aware of the rebel's plan.

* The Hunger Games, inspiring a riot in her district 11. The male District 11 tribute Thresh saves and spares Katniss in deference to this as well, and also savagely kills one of the Careers who gloated about it while attempting to kill Katniss moments before.
* The Hunger Games: In the 74th Hunger Games, Katniss Everdeen and Peeta wore coal black jackets.
* The Hunger Games in the first book. She isn't present for most of the plot, but it's because of her that Katniss ends up in the Games in the first place.
* The Hunger Games. In the third book, President Coin asks Katniss if she wants Gale declared as her new lover, which would make them this trope in the public's eye. Katniss declines.
* The Hunger Games introduces the "Hanging Tree" song. Children sing it innocently and make little necklaces of rope to go along with the lyric "wear a necklace of rope with me," but Katniss's mother realizes what they are singing and quickly stops her and her sister from singing it. Ironically, due to the film adaptations, Jennifer Lawrence's rendition of this song reached Top 40 radio stations. With a dubstep backbeat added.
* The Hunger Games: Invoked in the games, where the tributes try to appeal to the Capitol and potential sponsors by playing according to recognizable and interesting archetypes.
* The Hunger Games in which kids are selected to compete, taken to the city, dolled up for sponsors, trained and set loose in an arena to kill each other. Made worse by the fact the people controlling it can make anything happen from letting loose mutants, to sending out contract killers to creating natural disasters.
* The Hunger Games is 12, the youngest age you can be chosen as a tribute. Katniss and Peeta are both 16, while Rue’s District partner, Thresh, is 18, which is the oldest a tribute can be.
* The Hunger Games is an artificial forest fire. Complete with literal fireballs that Katniss has to dodge.
* The Hunger Games is an interesting example of what happens when you ignore the periphery demographic. Marketed as a gritty dystopia, its romantic subplot attracted a large number of young female fans (particularly after Stephenie Meyer endorsed the series.) When the final book dropped most of the romance to focus in on the dystopian elements, fans still bought it — they just complained about it on the internet. Now the franchise's female fan base is much larger than its male one.
* The Hunger Games is a quickdraw with a bow and takes out several competitors in seconds. Compared to the opposition, she is untrained in how to fight up close, and is slowed down significantly by relatively minor injuries.
* The Hunger Games is a textbook example. She's a snide, domineering socialite who holds her position over her junior stylists and her Tributes.
* The Hunger Games is a young adult series with a female lead that sold well and got very positive reviews.
* The Hunger Games is paler than Marcus and darker than Julian and has curled hair, suggesting a biracial background, however his sister was a natural blonde; meanwhile Calyxa, his wife, has hair like Marcus, but also has "pink" skin, and probably has some Quebecois ancestry being a native French speaker from Montreal.
* The Hunger Games is physically an average 16 year old girl who has to fight older and much stronger males and females, but she is a very skilled archer and has excellent survival skills due to years of experience hunting in the wilderness.
* The Hunger Games It's actually a lie but the intention is to gain sympathy through this trope.
* The Hunger Games, it's custom in Districts 1 and 2 to arrange marriages between Victors to produce better Tributes. Cato's parents Severus and Livia are one such pairing.
* The Hunger Games it's Katniss who suggests that she and Peeta get married but it's not because of romantic desire but rather a desperate attempt at keeping Snow happy. Peeta agrees, but not very happily.

* The Hunger Games" it's mentioned that using this trope was the only thing that kept Luster Lancaster(leader of District One's career victors in the authors previous fanfics) from being killed by one of his own victors (who was prostituted by Snow at Luster's suggestion) several times during the fifth decade of the games.
* The Hunger Games. It's stated that the siblings share a close and loving relationship, so it's possible that they would've refused (like Katniss and Peeta) and preferred to die together instead of committing fratricide for a society that's already betrayed them. The Capitol citizens are at least somewhat horrified as well. Gloss and Cashmere are likely the first siblings to be pitted against each other in the same Games, and the pair visibly play this up for sympathy with hopes of the Quarter Quell being cancelled.
* The Hunger Games: it takes time for Katniss to understand what it was.
* The Hunger Games It turns into a full-blown make-out session that only ends when they're interrupted by a bolt of lightning. Make of that what you will...
* The Hunger Games It was inspired by the Roman Empire's gladiators and Greek mythology, specifically the story of Theseus and the Minotaur.
* The Hunger Games, Johanna Mason, and even nice-guy Peeta are all VERY good liars.
* The Hunger Games: Just like in the books, Haymitch is pretty drunk when he first meets the latest set of kids he'll have to prepare to fight to the death. Unlike in the books, it's not a formal agreement he makes with Katniss and Peeta that keeps him out of the bar. The film makes a clear point of displaying how he sobers up only after it becomes clear to him that Katniss and Peeta have a legitimate chance of surviving the games (and on several occasions he is reminded that tributes and children from other districts actually see being recruited for the games as a good thing, even fun).
* The Hunger Games, Katniss and Madge (the mayor's daughter) are loners at school and so end up partnered together for school events and projects by default.
* The Hunger Games, Katniss and Peeta are sold as a couple in order to gain popularity so that one of them can survive the games. When they both survive, they're expected to marry. Whether or not they actually do is left unsaid in the books but they spend their lives together in a loving relationship.
* The Hunger Games. Katniss and Peeta don't actually attend school after their games, but they become a couple at seventeen and spend the rest of their lives together.
* The Hunger Games Katniss comments in an interview that the thing that impressed her most about the Capitol was the lamb stew with prunes. In the arena, she receives a tin of it from sponsors.
* The Hunger Games: Katniss' dreams are usually a horrifying mishmash of bad memories and fear-gripped imagination, like everyone getting their tongues cut out or all her loved ones screaming in agony.
* The Hunger Games: Katniss Everdeen and Gale, both rebellious against the Capitol's regime but still working on providing for their families. Through illegal hunting, of course.
* The Hunger Games: Katniss Everdeen believes that she doesn't deserve the love of someone like Peeta. Haymitch agrees with her.
* The Hunger Games: Katniss Everdeen builds her romance with Peeta during the Hunger Games.
* The Hunger Games: Katniss Everdeen for her sister, due to her mother's depression and general ineffectiveness.
* The Hunger Games: Katniss Everdeen in the first book. Inverted in the second. Mad crushingly depressing in the third.
* The Hunger Games: Katniss Everdeen is "sugar" to Prim and Gale, "ice" to pretty much everyone else, including her mother. But she warms up to her and a few more people over the course of the film series.
* The Hunger Games: Katniss Everdeen. Present, lampshaded, and part of the symbolism. A mockingjay is a powerful symbol to the rebels, but it's also a bird that can't sing its own songs, relying on what others sing to it.
* The Hunger Games, Katniss Everdeen's birthday falls on May 8, the date most European countries celebrate as the day Germany surrendered and World War II came to an end.

* The Hunger Games: Katniss Everdeen to Prim and Rue, so much so that she offered herself up as Tribute to take her little sister's place in the Games.
* The Hunger Games: Katniss Everdeen was much closer to her father than her mother, sharing a special bond with him that her younger sister Prim did not. It was Mr. Everdeen who taught Katniss how to hunt and gather, and she wears his hunting jacket when she goes out into the woods.
* The Hunger Games, Katniss gives Peeta a tiny vial of sleep syrup. It's so strong that he falls asleep as he's trying to throw it back up when he realizes what it is.
* The Hunger Games. Katniss intentionally invokes it since it's a convenient way for her to make people believe she's in love with him.
* The Hunger Games: Katniss is only shown with her hair down when she is at her most vulnerable. There's some justification to this, since her iconic braid is just how she wears it when she's hunting or in the games.
* The Hunger Games, Katniss is shot. Despite a bullet-proof costume, she suffers bruised ribs and a ruptured spleen.
* The Hunger Games 'Katniss' is the name of a family of plants, also known as 'Sagittaria' — Latin for 'archer'.
* The Hunger Games, Katniss joins the Union army by hiding as a boy called Kat. Somewhat subverted in that it does not take long for most people in her unit to learn her true identity, but they are cool with it, anyway. There is also a joke about another woman getting caught and sent back home.
* The Hunger Games. Katniss likes her enough, and she seems pretty alright, despite her odd choices in cooking ingredients.
* The Hunger Games Katniss lists three things of why Haymitch's life sucks: he has no wife, children, and he drinks a lot. In the next paragraph, she states she won't get a wife or children either.
* The Hunger Games: Katniss, once she decides to rebel, invokes this trope, turning her every action into a symbol meant to add fuel to the rebellion.
* The Hunger Games, Katniss' original choice was not between a Gentleman and a Scoundrel, as they were both dependable people. However, as the series progresses, Peeta reveals himself as the Gentleman who cares deeply for Katniss and desires her safety and well-being, and Gale becomes the Scoundrel as a revolutionist who is willing to cross lines and use methods that she doesn't approve of.
* The Hunger Games. Katniss runs to save Rue when she's caught in the Career's net trap, and then runs to find Peeta later on when she hears the gong signalling a Tribute death (which wasn't his).
* The Hunger Games, Katniss says that if it was ever discovered that their mother was depressed and couldn't take care of them, she and her sister Prim would be sent to the community home. The kids who live there always look sad, and Katniss was afraid it would crush Prim's spirit, so she began providing for the family herself to cover up her mother's illness.
* The Hunger Games, Katniss's mother and Prim. (Unavailable in the arena, alas.)
* The Hunger Games, Katniss's mother goes into a near-catatonic depression after the death of Katniss's father, leaving Katniss to support the family. Even when the mother becomes functional again, she never really gets over his death.
* The Hunger Games, Katniss splashes Haymitch with water to wake him up in time to get ready for the victory tour when she is unable to wake him up any other way.
* The Hunger Games: Katniss tracks a blood trail leading out to the riverbank, and discovers a camouflaged (and injured) Peeta.
* The Hunger Games., Kelvin, one of District 5's Tributes, remarks how Harvey, a friend of his, best keep his hands off his sister Curie on the grounds that "it's not what friends do to each other."
* The Hunger Games loved. But even Snow admits that if he did this to Katniss herself because of her "stunt with the berries", no one would buy it.
* The Hunger Games masquerade—or at least all of them are to Katniss before she starts feeling something. To Peeta, it's a completely different story. Note that the trope is played with here, as in this case they're doing it to get people to pay attention to them, rather than avert it.

* The Hunger Games may be at work here is sunk when it becomes clear in the second and third books that Katniss has fallen for Peeta and vice versa.
* The Hunger Games — Based on the novel series. 4 films since 2012.
* The Hunger Games: Mockingjay begins a mission with nine people, and ends with only three.
* The Hunger Games: Mockingjay explain to the protagonist, "We are fickle, stupid beings with poor memories and a great gift for self destruction. Although - who knows? Maybe this time, we will learn?"
* The Hunger Games: Mockingjay featured a lot of padding, Part 2 has a lot of stuff trimmed. Katniss and Joanna training is the biggest omission, while Katniss's time back in District 12 before Peeta returns, at the end, gets heavily cut.
* The Hunger Games: Mockingjay has the good guys and the bad guys battling each other with very emotional political advertisement (and other things).
* The Hunger Games: Mockingjay: In the beginning of Part 2, Haymitch tells Katniss they prepared a speech for her, but she doesn't like it and refuses. Haymitch says he isn't really surprised, and just toss the speech tablet.
* The Hunger Games: Mockingjay Part 1 and Pusha-T appear in Stromae's "Meltdown" alongside Lorde and HAIM for an odd-yet-compelling collaboration. Also featured, perhaps most surprisingly of all given Lorde's feud with Diplo at the time, was Major Lazer featuring Ariana Grande with "All My Love".
* The Hunger Games: Mockingjay Part 1. As the Mockingjay, she's called on to unite the districts and star in propaganda pieces for the cause.
* The Hunger Games: Mockingjay Part 1, a team leads an attack on an important dam; they have no illusions that they'll be able to escape the flood.
* The Hunger Games: Mockingjay Part 1, Cressida and her crew of filmmakers defect from the Capitol to document and show what is happening in the rebellion.
* The Hunger Games: Mockingjay Part 1, Cressida and her team deserted the capital to join the rebels.
* The Hunger Games: Mockingjay Part 1, during the bombing of District 13, President Coin and her staff watch the radar to know what's going on on the surface, while the bunker rocks from each missile hit.
* The Hunger Games: Mockingjay part 1 hints at this when Katniss's personal make-up stylist tells her:
* The Hunger Games: Mockingjay Part 1. It is more of a quiet drama film with a couple of action sequences.
* The Hunger Games: Mockingjay Part 1, Katniss is filming a "propo" to stir up support for the rebellion, but is doing a terrible job of it. Following her wooden, stilted delivery of "People of Panem, we fight! We dare to end this hunger for justice!", Haymitch enters...
* The Hunger Games: Mockingjay Part 1, Katniss's fears about Cinna are confirmed. When Effie gives her Cinna's design for the Mockingjay outfit, she sadly asks "He's dead, isn't he?" Effie whispers "Yes, dear" and shows her the message he left her:
* The Hunger Games: Mockingjay Part 1 magazine themselves wrote an article about Jennifer Lawrence getting a top 40 hit and relegated James Newton Howard to a footnote (in contrast, they never tried to downplay Ronson to the same extent).
* The Hunger Games: Mockingjay Part 1, Plutarch's original ideas for the promotional material involves Katniss standing in front of a CGI battle acting as if she's just rallied the troops. When it's pointed out that no one will believe Katniss's stilted lines and awkward delivery, she offers to actually go into the field and become the real deal.
* The Hunger Games: Mockingjay Part 1, President Snow has people caught with the Mockingjay symbol shot publicly through the back of the head at the beginning as an example to the District uprising.
* The Hunger Games: Mockingjay Part 1, Snow's choice method to rid himself of rivals and dissenters is poison. Finnick presents this as a massively cowardly and evil thing to do. "Poison, the perfect weapon for a snake."
* The Hunger Games: Mockingjay Part 1, Snow's conversation with Katniss doesn't involve him shouting or gesticulating or anything like that, but now that he's dropped his facade, his stoic expression and soft monotone have been replaced with openly evil sneering and sadism.

* The Hunger Games: Mockingjay Part 1 themselves from hyping the song's chart performance as a Lawrence song while relegating Howard to a footnote.
* The Hunger Games: Mockingjay Part 1, with a slight twist on the response.
* The Hunger Games: Mockingjay Part 2, a bomber painted to look like a Capitol ship drops aid canisters containing fire bombs. This makes it look like Snow bombed his own citizens just to slow down the rebels trying to overrun his mansion, causing his troops to turn on him and handing the rebels victory.
* The Hunger Games: Mockingjay Part 2 finally shows the raiding of the capitol.
* The Hunger Games: Mockingjay Part 2, one of the traps in the Capitol is a pair of machine guns that fire about 500 rounds when they are triggered. Star Squad 451 is even slightly amused by this trap when it completely destroys a gate with only normal bullets.
* The Hunger Games: Mockingjay Part 2. When Katniss is shot during the liberation of District 2, Snow knows she survived because the resistance doesn't immediately treat her like a martyr.
* The Hunger Games: Mockingjay, presumptive-new-president Alma Coin has former President Snow kept in one of these prior to his execution. The other characters reason it must be to set a precedent — to establish that such prisoners should be treated well in case she ever falls from power and ends up one of them herself.
* The Hunger Games. More like a Supreme Baker since he's never shown cooking food, but everyone seems to love the things he bakes.
* The Hunger Games, most people in the Seam, the poorest part of District 12, look like Katniss and Gale: black hair, olive skin, and gray eyes. Mrs. Everdeen is from the merchant class so she has blonde hair and blue eyes. Her daughter, Prim, takes after her. Peeta, the baker's son, and Madge, the mayor's daughter, also have blonde hair.
* The Hunger Games natural boundaries like mountains and lakes. The Gamemakers can even instantaneously alter the arena to make it smaller and smaller as the games progress, thereby increasing the drama for the audiences both in- and out-of-universe.
* The Hunger Games naturally falls into this, with 13 unnamed tributes being killed in the opening bloodbath. The heroine can't dwell on their deaths, since she's being hunted herself.
* The Hunger Games: Near the end of the first book, Katniss realizes that Muttations, the genetically engineered monsters that attack the surviving tributes, were somehow created from the dead tributes. In the book, the muttations have the same hair color and eyes as the tributes they were created from. In the movie, the correspondence is much subtler. They all look like brown dog-wolves, but their CGI facial expressions are based on the actors who played the tributes.
* The Hunger Games of Hunger Games winners, just judging by the fact that Finnick can get away with hauling Johanna into the ocean and dunking her until she stops screaming. And there's no danger of things becoming romantic, as Finnick is in love with another victor, Annie.
* The Hunger Games onward, as she takes up to helping their nurse mother treat starving and injured patients, and thus has to grow up too quickly.
* The Hunger Games: Or rather, "Always Save the Boy with the Bread". Katniss Everdeen continuously prioritizes Peeta's survival over what's best for her own survival, the rebellion and her squad.
* The Hunger Games: Panem Peacekeepers serve as State Sec Troops, guarding the Tributes and enforcing order in the districts, and utilize hovercraft for aerial roles (from combat to transport to patrols).
* The Hunger Games. Peeta also recalls a time from when Katniss was younger and had two braids instead of one.
* The Hunger Games, Peeta claims he's been in love with Katniss ever since he first heard her sing — back when they were little kids.

* The Hunger Games. Peeta claims that this is true of Katniss, but we never see anything in the rest of the narrative that points to it. However, Peeta himself is head over heels for her and incredibly devoted to her so he probably just assumes everybody else will see her the way he does. On the other hand, the books are from Katniss's point of view, so it could be that he's right and she just doesn't notice.
* The Hunger Games: Peeta hasn't grown up training like the professionals and lacks Katniss's skills in hunting. The only useful thing he has is his natural strength, gained from a life of lugging massive sacks of flour. When demonstrating his skills to the judges, he shows off his strength.
* The Hunger Games. Peeta himself is even better at manipulating them and is very charming to the population.
* The Hunger Games: Peeta may have known Katniss since the age of five but he only actually interacted with her once before being reaped with her and never speaks to her until they've become tributes. All the same, he's so determined to die for her survival's sake that Haymitch notes it's not even worth trying to save Peeta in the arena.
* The Hunger Games: Peeta Mellark has known who Katniss is since he was five years old, but the first time he actually speaks with her is after the reaping. Still, he's willing to die and kill for her without the slightest hesitation, to the point where their mentor Haymitch realizes there's no point in trying to keep Peeta alive since he's just going to sacrifice himself for Katniss anyway. Even before they both became tributes, he willingly took a beating from his abusive mother so he could give Katniss some bread, when he was just eleven years old.
* The Hunger Games: Peeta's affections for Katniss has strong aspects of this. He's deeply in love with her, has no real hope that she'll return his feelings (he thinks she's in love with Gale) yet is still willing to both kill and die for her. He plays the role of lover in public but is remarkably chaste with her in private. Even when she lets him into her bed and sleeps in his arms he never tries to so much as kiss her.
* The Hunger Games: Peeta's strongest quality is his ability to win over the audience, and even his fellow tributes, with his magnetic personality and lies.
* The Hunger Games Peeta tells Katniss that he likes watching her sleep because she doesn't scowl.
* The Hunger Games, Peeta uses a large amount of mud with plants on top to disguise himself as part of a riverbank when he is too injured to move.
* The Hunger Games, people from the Capitol typically have names of ancient Greco-Roman origin, e.g. Effie (Euphemia), Caesar, Cinna, Portia, etc.
* The Hunger Games pin that Madge gave to Katniss and went on to become the symbol of a revolution.
* The Hunger Games. Played straight with the Nightlock berries — they result in instant death to whoever consumes them. Subverted with the venoms President Snow used to poison his enemies — they did kill the enemies, but they also gave Snow sores in his mouth even when he took the antidotes.
* The Hunger Games: President Coriolanus Snow's conversation with Katniss at the beginning of Catching Fire indicates that he sees himself and the Capitol as this.
* The Hunger Games: President Coriolanus Snow takes this attitude towards Seneca Crane during their scenes in the movie. In general, he seems to dislike the hypocrisy of the system he runs, or at least get tired of it, and enjoys the company of those, like Plutarch and Katniss, who share his cynicism.
* The Hunger Games, President Snow murdered Haymitch and Johanna's loved ones for petty reasons. They later join District 13 to put a stop to his reign.
* The Hunger Games pretty much everything Peeta creates in his kitchen.
* The Hunger Games: Prim, at first. She loses the wide-eyed part but keeps the idealism.
* The Hunger Games: Prim, for Katniss and Buttercup; she is one of few people they show any kindness to.
* The Hunger Games. Prim is a compassionate young blonde girl with blue eyes. She loves all living creatures. She was also a good healer at an early age, often helping her mother with patients. When Katniss leaves her family she doesn't bother suggesting that Prim learn to hunt because her attempts were disastrous. The woods terrified her and whenever Katniss shot something it would make Prim teary and she'd talk about how they might be able to heal it. Katniss is always amazed when her mother brought a wounded or sick patient: "she morphs from someone who calls her daughter to kill a spider to a woman immune to fear", Katniss says.

* The Hunger Games: Prim is a compassionate young blonde girl with blue eyes who loves all living creatures and becomes a good healer at an early age, often helping her mother with patients. When Katniss leaves her family she doesn't bother suggesting that Prim learn to hunt because her attempts were disastrous, since the woods terrified Prim and whenever Katniss shot something it would make Prim teary and she'd talk about how they might be able to heal it.
* The Hunger Games, Prim is shown crying into Katniss' chest, an example of the "motherly" version of the trope (since Katniss essentially plays the role of mother in the Everdeen family).
* The Hunger Games. Prim looks like Mrs. Everdeen and has inherited her passion for healing. Also, Mrs. Everdeen was close friends with Katniss' friend, Madge's mother, as a teenager and the father of Katniss' love interest Peeta had a crush on Mrs. Everdeen.
* The Hunger Games: Primrose "Prim" Everdeen. Animals love her. The family cat, Buttercup, only responds positively to her.
* The Hunger Games: Primrose "Prim" Everdeen isn't present for most of the plot, but it's because of her that Katniss ends up in the Games in the first place.
* The Hunger Games: Primrose "Prim" Everdeen seems incapable of bearing any ill will towards anything.
* The Hunger Games: Prim's cat Buttercup, especially during the rebellion.
* The Hunger Games protagonist Katniss Everdeen being a bow hunter who makes heavy use of her archery skills throughout the books.
* The Hunger Games, quite literally and specifically. The Capitol (metropole/heartland) manipulates the Districts (periphery/provinces) to the benefit of the Capitol and the detriment of the Districts. Now consider the other things they engage in.
* The Hunger Games refused to tape her breasts down to play Katniss because she didn't want to send a message to young girls that they had to be ultra-skinny.
* The Hunger Games release, sales of the book were surging as people raced to see what all the hype was about.
* The Hunger Games, right down to being asked to walk Katniss down the aisle at her wedding.
* The Hunger Games right in front of her, and it's only gone downhill from there.
* The Hunger Games: Rue can move through the treetops like Spider-Man, but is far too small and physically frail to face anyone in a one-on-one fight.
* The Hunger Games's best Gamemakers and a camera crew who use their skills to make rebel propaganda shots.
* The Hunger Games seems incapable of bearing any ill will towards anything.
* The Hunger Games seems to be this, particularly when it comes to their military. For that matter, the actual Hunger Games are deliberately set up with an equal number of boys and girls, and the audience makes bets on the contestants according to their skill and temperament, not their gender.
* The Hunger Games: Seneca Crane wears the same weird vest the whole time.
* The Hunger Games shares Katniss' dark hair, olive skin, and grey eyes and is said to be over six feet tall by Katniss because when they met in the woods when he was only 14, she stated he was already that height. Muscular and good-looking, girls flock to him — Katniss herself says that Gale would have no trouble finding a wife because he's handsome and strong.
* The Hunger Games, she really doesn't care much for President Coin, and the feeling is mutual.
* The Hunger Games, since the Gamemakers will make sure such weapons are available in the arena. These weapons are usually - but not always - related to a character's story: protagonist Katniss Everdeen is an accomplished huntress, and thus prefers the bow and arrow; hailing from the logging District, Johanna Mason wielded axes; and swimmer/fisherman Finnick Odair was highly skilled with a trident and net combination.

* The Hunger Games, so after Finnick won at 14, "they couldn't really touch him for the first year or two. But ever since he turned sixteen..."
* The Hunger Games so bad she was not able to provide for herself, let alone her two daughters. At some point, the three nearly died to starvation, until Peeta donated Katniss a loaf of bread out of pity, giving her motivation to earn money by hunting. Eventually, her mother recovered and started contributing to the family's finances, but Katniss remains the primary breadwinner.
* The Hunger Games: Something that Haymitch frequently mocks Katniss Everdeen over is her lack of people skills.
* The Hunger Games: Something that Haymitch frequently mocks Katniss over is her lack of people skills.
* The Hunger Games's release. When the film series finally ended in 2015, it has garnered over 2.9 billion dollars in worldwide gross.
* The Hunger Games Subverted later on. He tells Katniss that he noticed a lot of other girls but none of them made the same impression as she did. He also seems to be somewhat attracted to Johanna Mason.
* The Hunger Games suffered this fate during his Games. When it came to the finals, the other finalist inflicted a horrible gut wound on him, which forced him to walk while keeping his intestines from spilling out. The wound was stitched after he won the Games, however.
* The Hunger Games suggests that he prefers the Career tributes to win because they treat it like a game (thus reinforcing the idea that it's not a horrible spectacle of death and violence). True volunteers like Katniss or normal tributes aren't as predictable.
* The Hunger Games takes a LONG time to come around to the "Revolution" she brought about. Most of Mockingjay is her arguing with people about whether or not she should stand as a symbol and leader for them to rally around.
* The Hunger Games tends to trail off or just stop speaking abruptly in the middle of her sentences, at which point Beetee finishes them.
* The Hunger Games thanks to his experience as a baker. He is later able to paint his face and hands to match the pattern on a log.
* The Hunger Games that a female-led film, and one without a male co-lead at that, topped the domestic box office.
* The Hunger Games that she avoided him until the games forced them together. It's played straight as a manifestation of his character, though.
* The Hunger Games, the addictive painkiller in use around Panem is called "morphling" (morphine) and the people addicted to it are called "morphlings".
* The Hunger Games, the Capitol is a minefield with deadly (and sadistic) traps every ten steps.
* The Hunger Games, the Capitol is described as being full of colored glass, and the people are obsessed with fashion. Technology also seems to have advanced to the point that it can be completely hidden from view. Although no one wears a toga, Capitol residents almost all have Roman names, establishing them as a decadent and technologically advanced society.
* The Hunger Games, the Capitol releases Muttations, wolf-looking creatures with the faces of the dead tributes who try to kill the remaining kids in the arena.
* The Hunger Games: The Career district tributes are trained from childhood to fight and to treat the Games like a game and an honorable tournament. They usually proudly volunteer at the reapings for the opportunity to win and bring pride, honor, and of course, extra food to their district.
* The Hunger Games. The contrast between her and the residents of District 12 at the reaping scene is unsettling.
* The Hunger Games: The District 6 female Morphling's talent. She uses it to appear from thin air in order to protect Peeta. Haymitch said this is how both District 6 Morphlings won their games.
* The Hunger Games. The fog in question is a kind of nerve gas that burns the skin and causes seizures and muscle failure.

* The Hunger Games, the girl from District One, Amber, plays up the "alluring" angle in her interview, is very attractive and flirtatious, and also happens to be one of the most depraved tributes.
* The Hunger Games. The Hunger Games themselves can also be seen as a variant of this.
* The Hunger Games, the leader of the Careers. And given Katniss destroys the arena just as they're attacking, doesn't offer much of a fight before all focus shifts to the war.
* The Hunger Games: The Nations of North America and possibly the rest of the world have been gone for at least 175 years. The United States and it's Republic are even noted.
* The Hunger Games, then?) Everything surrounding the Games is treated as fun and entertaining; being a "tribute" is an honor.
* The Hunger Games. (The projectors also all appear to be the exact same make or model, so it's not like there are different electronics firms making competing versions.)
* The Hunger Games: The role Katniss Everdeen plays for the cameras. Of course, her true self is nothing like that.
* The Hunger Games: The role Katniss plays for the cameras. Of course, her true self is nothing like that.
* The Hunger Games: The unnamed male tribute from District 3 to the the Career Tributes' group, as he figures out how to reactivate the mines from each Tribute’s pad.
* The Hunger Games: They don't actually attend high school but Katniss Everdeen and Peeta begin their romance at age sixteen.
* The Hunger Games: Though the Capitol law enforcement is seen carrying black automatic rifles, the Districts have no such access since it's in the best interest of the powers-that-be to not have subjects shooting back at them. No firearms are provided in the actual Hunger Games themselves, likely to keep the games more interesting.
* The Hunger Games, though this is really due to her being so shy when they first met that she mumbled her name and he misheard her.
* The Hunger Games ticket with Prim's name on it in a container full of other names, some duplicates of each other, yet she is selected anyway. Katniss, who herself has 20 tickets by virtue of picking Tesseare for the whole family for five years straight, even lampshades this bitterly after the Reaping: why it has to be Prim?
* The Hunger Games, to an extent. Most of the plot comes together because of her spontaneous decisions, as well as outside characters forcing her into situations. She even mentions at the end of the first book that she'd rather just live a normal life.
* The Hunger Games: Tributes are sacrificed by the Capitol to remember the betrayal of District 13.
* The Hunger Games trilogy book set comes with a replica of the mockingjay pin.
* The Hunger Games trilogy ended up together: at first they were pretending to be in love with each other to be appealing to the Capitol audiences, then Katniss gradually developed real feelings for Peeta (who didn't need the ruse to fall for her, as he'd already been in love with her for a long time).
* The Hunger Games trilogy ends with Katniss finally professing her love for Peeta, and the two of them beginning a lifelong relationship together.
* The Hunger Games trilogy, Gale admits to Katniss that he has a hard time hating Peeta because Peeta's so likeable, despite being a competitor for Katniss's affections.
* The Hunger Games trilogy has a lot of this, in different variations.
* The Hunger Games trilogy Katniss does this with Gale on occasion. She does it even more often with Peeta, who sometimes uses her lap as a pillow as well.
* The Hunger Games trilogy, the citizens of the Capitol wear ridiculous, extravagant clothes. The poor people living in the districts wear more practical clothes.

* The Hunger Games trilogy when Peeta mentions his father liking buying game from Katniss because she always shoots the bird in the eye, thus preserving the edible part of the flesh - presumably included by the author to show what a good shot her heroine is, but one wonders how anyone, even such a star as Ms Everdeen, could guarantee to shoot at a bird on the wing so accurately!
* The Hunger Games turns a blind eye to where are the activities in the Hob (District 12's black market) because it's his source of booze, and to Katniss and Gale's poaching because they are his source for wild turkey.
* The Hunger Games: Twice Annie Cresta's hair is mentioned as voluminous and very long, although the length never specified.
* The Hunger Games typically have names related to luxury. Canonical examples of this include Cashmere, Glimmer, and Gloss.
* The Hunger Games: Unlike most of his fellow tributes, Peeta lacks training and experience and has absolutely no experience in the wilderness.
* The Hunger Games, was consciously adopted from the movie by the pro-democracy protests in Thailand, Hong Kong, and Myanmar.
* The Hunger Games was filmed outside Wilmington, North Carolina, on the coast.
* The Hunger Games, was not very successful and did not gain retroactive recognition upon "The Hunger Games"' success.
* The Hunger Games we have morphling, a futuristic drug with probably heroin-like effects due to its name being derived from morphine, another opiate. Psychotic ex-Tribute Johanna has an addiction to it.
* The Hunger Games, what tesserae are, etc., just in case the reader has forgotten.
* The Hunger Games, when Katniss explains that she had been acting her half of the romance in order to win the Games.
* The Hunger Games when Katniss finds Peeta in the arena he has been stabbed badly by Cato and lying in by a river camouflaged with mud hasn't done wonders to prevent infection. She does what she can to help him but it's obvious to both of them that without medicine he's not going to make it. So she risks herself to get the medicine.
* The Hunger Games. When Peeta reveals in his pre-game interview that he is in love with Katniss she thinks he is deliberately invoking this trope (and it is indeed mentioned by name by the show host). She later plays it up for all it's worth to help save her own life, never realizing that Peeta was telling the truth and honestly loves her.
* The Hunger Games: When Seneca and the game controllers decide on what obstacles to use to deter contestants or bring them together (the forest fire, the Muttations).
* The Hunger Games" when they are forced to go back into the arena. They're not actually a couple at that point and their relationship is a facade for the Capitol audience but it becomes real soon enough.
* The Hunger Games, where the Capital forces the districts to treat two of their children being forced to fight to the death as a festival.
* The Hunger Games, which later becomes important to the plot. Also, in the first book, Prim and Rue were 12 years old, and Rue was one of 6 siblings. And of course, the main characters are from District 12.
* The Hunger Games (which takes place is a futuristic dystopia) criminals have their tongues cut out and become Avoxes.
* The Hunger Games. While Katniss is the protagonist and certainly one of the more competent tributes, the game is really about playing to the audience, something that Katniss is incapable of doing on her own. The solution is to deliberately invoke this trope, and pretend that she is the star-crossed lover of the other tribute from her district, the charismatic Peeta. Though played straight in that she gained the skills that make her so competent from either her late father or her male friend Gale.
* The Hunger Games. While the book never explicitly states the exact moment when she realizes her feelings the reader can take a guess at any moment from her stating that the loss of him has taken away her will to live to her telling him how

* The Hunger Games who resembles their mother. Despite this, the two are incredibly close.
* The Hunger Games) will commonly invoke this trope. There's the 73 Victors (75 if Katniss and Peeta are brought up), then their opponents and possibly their family/friends, then other Capitol and District citizens, then District Thirteen and other outside entities (should the author include them).
* The Hunger Games, with Katniss as the brooding girl and Peeta as the gentle boy.
* The Hunger Games with the wearers' faces peeking out), both District 8 costumes (eye-searing pink and blue motley with frilled hats, in colors that look suspiciously like Sweet-Tarts packaging), both District 10 costumes (shiny rodeo outfits with gold-painted cowboy hats), and Rue's District 11 costume (denim overalls with puffed-up silk sleeves and a laurel wreath made of hay). Cinna himself made mention of not wanting to dress Katniss up in "some stupid costume", indicating that the excess in the costumes was a recurring concern for him.
* The Hunger has a true vampire who can only provide her playthings with youth for about two hundred years; after that, time rapidly catches up with them, and they become desiccated husks. She usually keeps these husks, for sentimental reasons.

* The Hunt (2012) from little Klara. Her words turn out deadly (for the protagonist's dog anyway) and if Klara was an adult, we would see her action as a wicked attempt to manipulate others for her own satisfaction. But at her age, Klara was simply confused and misinterpreted Lucas' rejection. All adults in the movie accept this fact when the truth is revealed. The only person not actually buying into this trope is 16-year-old Marcus, who is in such a rage about Klara's lie that he spits her in the face.

* The Hunt For Reactron: Even though the JLA has met gods, and Superman himself has bumped into the Kryptonian goddess Cythonna, Kara believes Krypton's top god Rao to be a fairy tale and her Raotian friend Thara Ak-Var a fundamentalist nutjob. She changes her tune when Thara becomes the incarnation of the goddess Flamebird.
* The Hunt For Reactron, General Lane has his minions Reactron, Metallo and Mirabai murder Mon-El, blow Metropolis' water dam up, and frame Supergirl, Flamebird and Nightwing for both crimes.
* The Hunt For Reactron: In a flashback sequence, Kara and Thara are attacked by a giant bird of prey during a hiking trip. Thara splatters a Blood Blossom plant, whose juices are inflammable, on the bird's back, and Kara uses her soldering tool to set it on fire.
* The Hunt For Reactron, Kara and her allies Nightwing and Flamebird are trying to capture the eponymous villain to uncover who framed them for Metropolis' latest terrorist attack. When they finally defeat Reactron, the villain confesses he was following General Lane's orders.
* The Hunt For Reactron: Kara and Thara speak English in a flashback sequence set in Krypton, decades before either of them even hear of a planet named "Earth". A footnote specifically informs that their speech is being translated from Kryptonese.
* The Hunt For Reactron, Nightwing and Flamebird have been framed for both the death of the hero Mon-El and the terrorist attack which destroyed Metropolis' water supply, and they need to capture the super-villain Reactron to uncover the true culprit.
* The Hunt For Reactron. Project 7734's monitoring systems can track Kara and her companions down in Metropolis and other cities, but they cannot find the trio when they fly out of US territory.
* The Hunt For Reactron's friend Thara Ak-Var -Flamebird- and attempt to kill her. As Supergirl seeks and attacks the real Flamebird and Nightwing, Metallo and Reactron attack and appear to kill Mon-El in front of a multitude disguised as Supergirl, Nightwing, and Flamebird so people blame his murder on the heroes.
* The Hunt For Reactron: Thara Ak-Var, who used to be Alura's chief of security, states several times that dragging villain Reactron to Kandor at Alura's behest is a bad idea, and Alura should be keeping one eye on General Zod instead. Kara takes Reactron to Kandor anyway, and Alura ignores Thara's warnings, which leads to massive casualties when Zod puts his takeover plans in motion and Luthor turns Reactron into a time bomb.
* The Hunt For Reactron, Thara punches Kara across Paris, smashing her into the Eiffel Tower, when Kara goes too far with her insults.

* The Hunt For Reactron that Kara is in danger, and she suddenly knows how she can efficiently use a rare plant to save her friend from a giant predator. In the aftermath, Thara is wondering how she knew what she had to do, and Kara states she does not care whether if their god Rao subtly influenced Thara (which, given later revelations, is an actual possibility) or her friend got lucky or whatever. The only thing that matters to her is that Thara saved her life.
* The Hunt For Reactron there is something foul about her surrogate aunt, but Kara dismisses her former friend's words as a nutjob's nonsense (even though Thara clarifies she did not mean Lana was evil or sinful). Later, after they have made up, Kara finally listens to Thara and confronts Lana about her unknown malady.
* The Hunt For Reactron: When Kara and Thara went on a hike to the Fire Falls, they were accosted by a larger-than-a-human man-eating bird of prey which vaguely resembled a giant black crow with a serrated beak and lizard tail.
* The Hunt For Reactron when Lois Lane utters "Oh Snap", eliciting an incredulous reaction from Lana Lang. Lois mutters she got it from Jimmy Olsen.
* The Hunt for Red October, a flight of A-10s buzz (and drop flares around) a Soviet cruiser to remind the Soviets that they were a long way from both home and any serious hope of support if they didn't take a step back.
* The Hunt for Red October, and much of the tension and the drama comes from these conversations.
* The Hunt for Red October: An inconvenient political officer "slips on his tea." Although Sean Connery's character at least has the foresight to actually spill some tea, giving his story some plausibility.
* The Hunt for Red October as a Russian sub captain once lampshades this by musing that it still has casualties, because it causes anguish on the families that have to endure long separations.
* The Hunt for Red October, as Soviet-design torpedoes did use smaller props operating at higher RPM, thus producing a distinctively higher pitch.
* The Hunt for Red October, a trigger-happy Soviet pilot fires a missile at Robby Jackson's F-14, severely damaging the aircraft and badly injuring his RIO, which ultimately requires major surgery to fix.
* The Hunt for Red October, Captain Ramios is trying to cover up disobeying his orders. The evidence is the orders in question.
* The Hunt for Red October, Captain Ramius reveals to his officers that he announced to Soviet Naval Command their intentions to defect to the Americans. During the scene, he is much more interested in his dinner than the fact he has evidently made their defection even harder.
* The Hunt for Red October, Captain Ramius wears ribbons for pretty much every single award handed out by the Soviet Union, though he is rather conspicuously lacking "Hero of the Soviet Union". Given that Ramius is supposed to have created and trained the Soviet nuclear submarine arm pretty much by himself, anything less would be suspicious.
* The Hunt for Red October: Comes up in some banter involving Seamen Jones and Beaumont and the COB (Chief of the Boat):
* The Hunt for Red October, different color lighting was used for each submarine's interior to aid the viewer in quick recognition of which submarine it was and to minimize confusion.
* The Hunt for Red October drops his tea while reading Ramius' letter.
* The Hunt for Red October: fatigue-induced failure of an important valve in the cooling system for the reactor of a Russian submarine causes a meltdown in its reactor, which in turn creates a glob of radioactive slag that melts its way through the bottom of the sub, eventually sinking it.
* The Hunt for Red October film. Both films were directed by John McTiernan.
* The Hunt for Red October for one man to turn both keys simultaneously.
* The Hunt for Red October, he tells the torpedo control officer of the frigate he's on:
* The Hunt for Red October. He was also disturbed by the destructive potential of the titular ship, "a ship which had but one use", as he puts it.
* The Hunt for Red October is all about this, with a Soviet submarine captain and his command crew intending to defect to the United States aboard a new, undetectable Soviet prototype sub. The story follows both the US and Soviets trying to catch the sub before the other side can, while avoiding a sufficiently large diplomatic incident that would incite World War III.

* The Hunt for Red October is attempting to blow in place had been specifically rigged beforehand with a non-standard detonator package, precisely to enable this contingency plan.
* The Hunt for Red October is reduced quite a lot from the book to movie. An entire separate plot about another missing Soviet sub sent to find the Red October is completely excised, the Americans learn much easier that she is defecting, there is no standoff escalation with the Soviet fleet, and the final movie sequence added the Konovalov to the defection of the Red October crew, which was a set of events 50 pages apart in the book. The participation of the British is also entirely removed.
* The Hunt for Red October is to observe strict radio silence. It quickly becomes clear that his real goal is to go AWOL and defect to the United States with the submarine's technology, triggering the hunt of the title.
* The Hunt for Red October is what put him in the analyst's desk to start with.
* The Hunt for Red October, it's one of the low-ranking sub's cooks who singlehandedly prevents Raimey's plan to defect (with the sub) from going smoothly, kicking off the second half of the thriller.
* The Hunt for Red October, Jack Ryan and Captain Mancuso invoke this trope, in regards to which way Captain Ramius would turn for the next "Crazy Ivan" maneuver.
* The Hunt for Red October. Jack Ryan is an author of books on naval history and a CIA analyst, but he winds up rolling up his sleeves and going face-to-face with Captain Ramius. However Ramius also lampshades the trope when he learns what book Jack wrote and tells Ryan that his conclusions were all wrong.
* The Hunt for Red October, Jack Ryan was an occasional smoker: Smoke for a while, quit for a while, but never more than two or three a day at his worst. He tries to break the tension of the initial meeting between Americans and Russians by bumming a smoke off the Russian engineer. He immediately begins coughing; fortunately, this provides the levity needed to break the ice. The Russian cigarette was described as "like smoking asphalt through a cardboard tube."
* The Hunt for Red October, Marko Ramius, captain of a submarine carrying nuclear missiles, sends a letter to the CO of the Soviet Navy stating that he and his command staff are defecting. When his staff officers ask him why he did it, he cites the example of Cortes' destruction of his ships.
* The Hunt for Red October: Marko Ramius, captain of a submarine carrying nuclear missiles, sends a letter to the CO of the Soviet Navy stating that he and his command staff are defecting. When his staff officers ask him why he did it, he says the knowledge that there is no turning back will strengthen their motivation and commitment.
* The Hunt for Red October: Marko Ramius is not a realistic Lithuanian name (if anything, it's closer to Latvian), so most Russian translation change it into more plausible Marius Ramenas.
* The Hunt for Red October mentions conducting missile drills in his speech to the crew.
* The Hunt for Red October. (Note that the novel averts this plot entirely. The U.S. government comes to the right conclusion almost immediately: their main dilemma is what to do about it).
* The Hunt for Red October of this: They're not trying to keep US ships in, but trying to keep one particular ship out. Not that this makes the government feel any better about a multitude of Russian ships within spitting distance of the US coast.
* The Hunt for Red October: Ramius fakes a reactor meltdown to get the men off his ship, telling them that he will scuttle the ship before the Americans can get it. Ironically, this is the complete opposite of his actual intentions.
* The Hunt for Red October, Ramius kills Political Officer Putin and makes it look like he slipped on tea, as a prelude to his defection.
* The Hunt for Red October, Ryan became known to the British intelligence community through his proposal for the "Canary trap", which uses a computer program to randomize minor details of reports written more "flashy" than the traditionally staid "govermentese" normally used by the US government, to entice reporters to quote parts verbatim.

* The Hunt for Red October. Similarly, Seaman Beaumont plays The Watson for sonar terms, letting Sonar Technician Jones explain everything.
* The Hunt for Red October" situation, and is surprised when Mancuso believes him straightaway.
* The Hunt for Red October star as submarine captains Marko Ramius and Bart Mancuso, respectively. They both had naval experience before beginning their acting careers: Connery served in the Royal Navy, Glenn served in the United States Marine Corps, which is part of the Department of the Navy.
* The Hunt for Red October steam) for the ship's reactor and ended up killing himself and irradiating the entire engine compartment. "At least he cleaned his pans though. They should be safe to use after several hundred years."
* The Hunt for Red October. The experienced American crew is aware of a tactic frequently employed by Soviet submarine commanders to see if anyone is following them (anyone traveling in a submarine's own "bubble trail" is effectively invisible to passive sonar) called "Crazy Ivan". This happens several times, with the sonar technician usually screaming "Conn, sonar! Crazy Ivan!" The counter-tactic is usually to immediately stop the propeller. However, if the pursuing sub is too close or is moving too fast, it will not have enough time to stop and is likely to collide.
* The Hunt for Red October, the first meeting between the Soviet officers and the Americans is tense and silent. Jack Ryan breaks the tension by asking for a cigarette from Chief Engineer Melekhin, even though Ryan had refused cigarettes over the course of the film. His cough amuses the Soviets and lightens the mood for them to begin talking.
* The Hunt for Red October. Then he mobilizes the entire Soviet navy to sink the renegade submarine before it reaches America.
* The Hunt for Red October: The Russians try to convince the Americans that Ramius has gone insane and become this, planning to nuke America, so that they'll kill him when he tries to make contact to defect.
* The Hunt for Red October. The Soviet admiral orders the fleet to avoid harassing the Americans after a heavy cruiser is subjected to a mock attack. He knows the Soviet navy is wasting time that is needed to find the Red October and will be destroyed if the Americans decide to attack for real. The American admiral later says: "they make the first move, we up the ante, they just plain fold."
* The Hunt for Red October the titular Soviet nuclear submarine gets damaged badly. The crew must dock immediately, but as they were planning to defect they are deep in US territory. The way they manage to safely dock? "Emergency, Emergency, Everybody to get from street". Although nobody buys that this is a real alarm, they are scared enough of Russians to clear out.
* The Hunt for Red October, they switch on the silent propulsion system and the crew starts singing the Soviet National Anthem. One of the crew worries that they'll be heard. Ramius says to let them sing.
* The Hunt for Red October to take photos of non-classified areas. Scott Glenn (who portrayed the CO of the Dallas), rode and trained aboard an actual submarine at sea. Though the actual USS Dallas was unavailable for shooting and was portrayed by the USS Houston for most scenes.
* The Hunt for Red October to undermine the Soviet navy’s power. The American characters state that even if the defection is discovered, there will be chaos in the Soviet Politburo as the factions blame each other.
* The Hunt for Red October, Tupolev describes his relationship with Ramius like this after learning about the latter's intent to defect. In a bit of a twist, Ramius doesn't seem to consider himself particularly close to Tupolev, and is outright disdainful of Tupolev's abilities as a sub captain.
* The Hunt for Red October uses Eurostile Extended for its on-screen interstitials.
* The Hunt for Red October, when it stated that American ships are shes, Russian ships are hes, and the intelligence community calls them both its.

* The Hunt for Red October, when Jack Ryan - in a nervous spot - congratulates himself for having gone to the toilet prior to the scary bits.
* The Hunt for Red October, who don't want to defect—rejecting the option of killing them all as morally wrong. The reason the sub's destruction is faked is in order to allow the crew to go back to the USSR and claim the sub sunk.

* The huntresses of Artemis have this. When the young girls swear their lives to the goddess, age can't kill them. Only if they fall in battle, or break their vow to swear off boys and romantic/physical relationships in general, can they die.
* The Huntress identity went from Helena Bertinelli (who retired) to Helena Wayne.
* The Huntress once had Dottie kidnapped by a white supremacist couple who ask her to carry out a drug deal at the town hall. In reality, the case she's to carry is a bomb. However, she sees right through the deception ("They wanted me to bring a package to a government building in the middle of the day. What else could it be but a bomb?") and switches the case with the bomb with the case with the drugs and lets them blow themselves up. Conveniently, it's mentioned their young son is playing at a friend's house at the time.
* The Huntress with the exception of young girls who she would kidnap and try to raise as her own, but inadvertently leave them to die from malnutrition and hypothermia. She genuinely doesn't understand why they keep dying under her care and is distraught every time.
* The huntsman and huntresses are in general much faster than normal humans, but no one else compares to Ruby, whose Semblance 'Petal Burst' allows her to transform into a cloud of rose petals, which gives her an immense boost in speed and moblity. She can move in any direction, including straight up, she accelerates and decelerates instantly, and while moving at top speed she is completely invisible to the human eye, making it appear as though she is warping from spot to spot. Even carrying another person she is still able to move fast enough to simply appear as a blur. The only real limitation is that she is only able to move that quickly in short bursts. It's also shown during the

* The Hunt (though he didn't mention the film by name when he brought it up) because they perceived the film to be a glorification of violence against conservatives (which the filmmakers have denied), with Trump going so far as to call the filmmakers "racists." Six months later, the film was rescheduled for March 2020, with a new advertising campaign focusing squarely on the backlash; however, the film ended up being rushed onto VOD due to the coronavirus pandemic.

* The Hurricane, 1999 American biographical film starring Denzel Washington as Rubin "Hurricane" Carter, who served almost twenty years after being wrongly convicted of murder.
* The Hurricane Bolter lives this trope. It's literally six "assault rifles" glued together. We put "assault rifles" in quotes because they fire 19mm rockets instead of bullets. Some variants of Space Marine Land Raiders have
* "The Hurricane" Gregory Helms version of The Hurricane, as Hurricane Helms. It seems to be rather successful, though time will tell whether it results in a title push or Kane-like decay.
* The Hurricane Heist: Every mercenary involved in the heist is killed by either the heroes or the brute forces of the hurricane.
* The Hurricane. Rubin Carter began with the privilege of wearing prison hospital pajamas rather than standard uniforms and clung to an ironclad determination not to adhere in any way to the normal prison lifestyle. Over the sixteen or so years of his confinement, prison guards allowed him various luxuries in his cell out of a combination of pity, belief in his innocence, and appreciation for not making as much of a nuisance of himself as he could have. Eventually, his cell was filled with various posters of civil rights leaders, pieces of African art, a typewriter on which he writes his memoirs, a small collection of books, and a miniature stove.
* The Hurricane: Rubin Carter was at the Lafayette bar, when two armed criminals broke in and spread gunfire all over the place. Two white delinquents said they saw Carter running away from the scene, and because white people are obviously better than black people, Carter was declared guilty and fast-tracked into jail with three life sentences. After 19 years of legal struggle, the court finally declared Carter free on account of racism having been the driving force behind his conviction. Although, due to the circumstances of the conviction and shoddy evidence collection and storage, modern forensics isn't able shed any light on a definitive answer. It is fairly universally held among legal professionals that there certainly was never enough evidence to prove Carter's guilt "beyond a reasonable doubt" (the burden of proof required for a criminal conviction in the US).

* The Hurt Locker, an American Army officer opts to withhold medical treatment from a wounded insurgent who would otherwise survive. It's implied the insurgent is shot shortly thereafter to hasten the process. The Colonel announced "he didn't survive" right in front of the prisoner. A soldier responds "yes sir" and we hear two gunshots.
* The Hurt Locker an Iraqi man has a bomb strapped to his chest and forced to approach the EOD specialists in order to blow them up with him. Sadly, the protagonists can't get it off in time and are forced to abandon the man to save their own necks.

* The Hurt Locker, but because it's the only thing he knows how to do anymore.
* The Hurt Locker has several scenes with U.S. soldiers wielding original-model Beretta 92 pistols, the precursor to the 92F and FS which was used by the U.S. military under the "M9" designation. The DVD commentary reveals that the blank-adapted 92FS prop they intended to use was delayed in customs, and the writer Mark Boal had to go hunting for a replacement locally. He eventually found a Jordanian General who gave the production team an old 92 to use until their own prop could clear customs. Fortunately the two pistols were similar enough to fool most moviegoers.
* The Hurt Locker is a deconstruction. Sure, he manages to defuse many bombs in his time at war, but he winds up alienating pretty much everyone in his unit due to his antics.
* The Hurt Locker is built around a sniper duel between the EOD team and faceless insurgents. Even when the American soldiers succeed in killing their opponents, they have to wait around for hours continuing to watch the enemy bunker to be sure that the other guys are really dead.
* The Hurt Locker is so far the most critically acclaimed movie on the subject.
* The Hurt Locker Sanborn and James make a pretty good sniper/spotter team despite being EOD technicians. Both career fields require years of highly specialized training, and it's unlikely two soldiers in the same squad would be experts in both specialties. On the other hand, the film goes out of its way to avert this trope in other areas, making it obvious that James doesn't know what he's doing when he tries his hand at intelligence gathering or hunting for insurgents.
* The Hurt Locker seems to enjoy playing with high explosives a bit more than can be considered strictly professional. And even the other bomb techs are a bit creeped out upon learning that he keeps souvenirs of every bomb he's ever handled in a box under his bed.
* The Hurt Locker: Sergeant First Class Will James has a bad habit of going off on unauthorized heroic stunts.
* The Hurt Locker the unit psychologist (a lieutenant colonel) is criticized by one of the enlisted soldiers for being unqualified to dispense advice about combat stress since he's never left the base. He joins them on a mission a couple days later. It doesn't go well for him.
* The Hurt Locker. This is one of the rare cases where it can't be disarmed, and the man (who claims he was forced to wear it, and is not a terrorist) is killed.
* The Hurt Locker - though he gets his fun primarily from disarming bombs. Hunting terrorists will do, though.
* The Hurt Locker was dubbed in Czech twice. Both dubs were recorded in the 2009 and some of voice actors remained consistent between the two.
* The Hurt Locker was made in 2009, but set in 2004. The movie features, among other things:
* The Hurt Locker was one of the most acclaimed films of the year... and before the Oscar victory brought it back to theatres, its total gross was $12.6 million, less than its $15m budget (it ended with $17m domestically and $49m worldwide, still the lowest-grossing Best Picture of all-time).
* The Hurt Locker, when Sergeant Thompson attempts to run away from an active bomb. He gets clear of the visible explosion, but is killed by the shockwave.
* The Hurt Locker, where Sergeant James interrupts a bomb detonation because he thinks he left his gloves at the second bomb site. He takes the Humvee with him, leaving Sanborn and Eldritch alone in the sun. Sanborn toys with detonating the second bomb while James is there, speaking ominously with Eldritch about how they would be able to get away with it as well.
* The Hurt Locker, where Sgt. James discovers a mutilated, explosive-laced body that could pass for the local Iraqi kid he had befriended, and becomes so fixated on avenging the boy that he draws a gun on the only man he associated him with, takes his car, goes to the house where the kid apparently lived, breaks in, finds the resident father-figure, who turns out to be a professor who has nothing to do with the insurgency, comes to his senses after a short conversation with the terrified man, and finally realizes he has no idea what he's doing.

* The Huruslahti Lottery in the Battle of Varkaus, Finnish Civil War 1918. The Reds pretended to surrender, and while the victorious Whites advanced over the Huruslahti bay ice, the Reds opened machine gun fire. Naturally the Whites were not amused at all. The Whites then made an all-out charge, crushing the Reds. Immediately after the battle, all Reds were ordered on line on the ice, and after the Whites had killed all the Red wounded,
* The husband is fast asleep when the nuclear war is announced on the television, and only wakes up when the family cat chews through the cord. He looks out of the window at the screaming masses in the streets, and... concludes that they must be there for some sort of parade. He gives the scene no further thought.
* The husband of the victim in "Murdochophobia" admits that both he and his wife were gay and had a mutually beneficial arrangement in their sexless marriage. He says he was also fond of his wife and had no desire to lose his social cover, so he had no reason to want her dead.
* The Husbands of River Song" each embody this trope in distinct ways: Hydroflax's constant shouting, his body's deep-voiced robotic menace, Flemming's sliminess, Scratch and his compatriots' hissing...
* The Husbands of River Song" it's revealed that River Song became married to at least two other individuals (albeit one for the sake of a mission) while still considering herself to be married to the Doctor. The Doctor does not appear to be disturbed by this at all.
* "The Husbands of River Song" of their marriage because he "was getting annoying"; and the tyrannical King Hydroflax — River claims she only married the extremely valuable diamond that had been embedded in his brain at the time. Before she recognizes the Doctor, she tells him he reminds her of her second wife.
* The Husbands of River Song" reveals that the TARDIS has a safeguard in place to avert this by preventing the doors from engaging and the TARDIS dematerializing if it detects a lifeform as being inside the TARDIS and outside at the same time. This prevents River and the Doctor's immediate getaway until Hydroflax's body enters the TARDIS.
* "The Husbands of River Song": River arrives onto the scene in a very retro red one.
* The Husbands of River Song speech when River doesn't know yet who he is and they enter the TARDIS, and he describes how he thinks such a speech really should go.
* "The Husbands of River Song", the Doctor takes out a robot by plugging it into dozens of financial firewalls. He quips "He had a bad day on the market" to a bystander, makes his exit — and then doubles back to apologise for the joke.
* "The Husbands of River Song"; the ship only caters to the worst murderers, cannibals, and genocidal maniacs in the galaxy. Even getting on the crew requires proof of multiple murders. With their consciences clear, River and the Doctor just leave and let the ship crash.

* The Hustler, "Fast Eddie" Felson has his thumbs broken by a pool shark who doesn't like being hustled.
* The Hustler had never held a pool cue before. To prepare for the role, he took out the dining room table from his home and installed a pool table so he could spend all his free time practicing.
* The Hustler) has legendary pool player Minnesota Fats as its antagonist. Actual pool hustler Rudolf Wanderone changed his name from New York Fats to Minnesota Fats after the success of the book and film. He then claimed that the fictional character was based on him, which Tevis and the filmmakers both denied.

* The Hustler, Vanderbilt University's parody newspaper, mocked the description of a criminal as the totally unhelpful "six foot tall black man" by writing an article about the six foot tall black man's long reign of terror, ascribing
* The Hustle with conwomen preying on men instead of conmen preying on women. The tagline "Giving Dirty Rotten Men a Run for Their Money" acknowledges this.
* The Hutts, of which Jabba is the most famous member, are toad-like in appearance, though they're legless like a tadpole.
* The Hückebein Family seem to have Sonica Lilian as the only non-Eclipse Driver.
* The Hwaseong serial murders, a series of 10 rapes and murders of women in the provincial South Korean city of Hwaseong, taking place from 1986 to 1991, were this for many years. The killer did not seem to have a preference for a particular age group, as the youngest victim was 14 and the eldest 71. About 21,280 suspects were interrogated in one of the most extensive police investigations in history. The killer was not apprehended until 2019, when a DNA match confirmed that convicted murderer Lee Choon-jae was responsible for the killings.
* The Hyach are a more literal example; though there are still quite a few of them around, their genome is slowly collapsing due to having become dependent on a counterpart species that is no longer around
* The Hyakume is a corpulent humanoid creature completely covered in eyes that can detach from its body to search for people to scare.
* The Hyaku Shiki's default SP attack has the mobile suit go on a berserk rampage with its dual beam sabers, cutting down dozens of mooks left and right before kicking whoever happens to be in front of it with an aerial forward flip.
* The Hyborian Campaign nonexistent in canon arose as players conquered increasing amounts of land.
* The hybrid classes, a mix of melee and spellcaster, were typically very challenging to solo. One partial exception, the Bard, was capable of literally pulling an 'entire zone' and killing it slowly and methodically. The maneuver generally took 20 minutes or more, but a single pull could result in multiple levels from hundreds of kills. Doing this, however, required high skill, a good internet connection, and a thick skin due to complaints from other players in the zone that you were stealing their kills.
* The hybrid classes - Infiltrator, Sentinel and Vanguard - make up for their talent flexibility with a lack of focus; a Vanguard won't have the nastiest talents a Soldier or Adept can bring to bear, for example. Then they got unique abilities, which gave them stronger definition but reduced flexibility - while neither a Soldier nor an Engineer can use a Vanguard's biotic charge, it does tend to push Vanguards into a tactical model of screaming and charging.
* The Hybrid's abstract perspective and surreal utterances push the Cylon Basestars that they control purely into this territory. These organic computers, which literally "are" the Basestar, ramble about quantum physics, philosophy and religion between verbalizing systems checks and protocols. They even experience something like an orgasm when they perform an FTL jump, and their verbalizations have been shown to be prophetic. Some Cylons, especially the Leobens (the Twos), believe the Hybrids have seen the face of God. Sam Anders, suffering from brain damage and connected by life support to the crippled
* The Hydra, also from Greek Mythology, had a single immortal head in addition to the heads that would be replaced by two new ones if they were severed. After chopping off the other heads and cauterizing the stumps with a torch to prevent new ones from growing, Heracles trapped the Hydra's immortal head under a rock.
* The HYDRA-controlled government use more drones to surveil its citizens.

* The Hydra enemy is just one giant Combat Tentacle that can split into three at its tip.
* the hydra venom in his body couldn't kill him and just continued giving him horrible, mind-searing pain.
* The Hydrophobes are deliberately raised to hate all liquids, including their own body fluids. This aversion becomes so powerful it forms a repulsion field around the hydrophobe, practical for magic transports on water.
* The hyenas are led by males (and you can only play as a male), which is odd because in real-life female hyenas are larger and more aggressive than males, and dominate them to the point female
* The hyenas eating a zebra leg before "Be Prepared" is portrayed completely free of blood and mostly off-screen. Even the leg is cleanly cut, though the insides are red as expected (though not bloody).
* The hyenas feature this trope. The males have dark fur patches that resemble
* The Hyenas from the same film also qualify, preying on those weaker than they are (cub!Simba, cub!Nala, and Zazu) while acting tough until a real threat such as Mufasa comes to make them run away with their tails between their legs. Also, they prefer to gang up on a defenseless individual like a bunch of bullies, which is fitting due to Hyenas being scavengers.
* The hyenas loudly make puns about eating Simba, Nala, and Zazu, right in front of their intended prey. Unfortunately, their dinner guests get the joke and run off while the hyenas crack wise.
* The hyenas make it clear they do not appreciate Scar attempting to throw the blame for his actions onto them. After the latter's final clash with Simba, the hyenas quickly make Scar pay for his betrayal.
* The Hyenas' reaction to Scar announcing his plan to kill Mufasa is to sing "No king, no king, la la-la la-la la!".
* The Hyena they gleefully sing about everything horrible that happens and just keep on going.
* The Hyghcock Chronicles, Betsy never once gets pregnant during the years she spent entirely loyal to her husband, but after he dies and (through various circumstances) sleeps with both Protagonist Maynard the priest (and protagonist) and Archie the Sheriff in short order, she gets pregnant and can't determine the actual father. Subverted in that, once Maynard finds out, he outright says he doesn't care who the father is since he loves Betsy anyway.
* the Hylden's conspiracy to break out of their ancient prison by bringing down the Pillars of Nosgoth.
* The Hyldnir, a group of giant blue warrior women, ride polar bear mounts in battle, one of which you can receive as a rare reward from a daily quest, which itself can involve riding a fighting bear.
* The Hylian Shield, which, unlike the other three shields you can get, doesn't actually take any damage. This is the best shield in the game, and is earned after beating 8
* The Hyperbolic Time Chamber, known as the Room of Spirit and Time in Japanese, is introduced during the Android arc. It's an alternate dimension accessed from Kami's Lookout, and one day outside equals one year inside. It allows our heroes to get some much-needed training they otherwise wouldn't have time for. Later on, during the Buu arc, Piccolo exploits this trope by having Trunks and Goten practice the
* The Hyperboreans, upon losing the war against the united forces of Nav', Chud' and Lyud', willingly sealed themselves in pocket dimension known as the Deep Bestiary. Azag-Thot and his three mistresses stayed outside, and their coming into power would release the Hyperboreans. Over the course of the series, a sizable Hyperborean army is released in this fashion, but some stay behind.
* The Hyperdimension Neptunia anime, recieve less of an explanation than one might expect.
* The hyperdrive of course. Among the most typical around. It's also fairly fast;
* The Hyperion and Leviathan serve as mobile bases for the player in Wings of Liberty and Heart of the Swarm, effectively filling this role.

* The Hyperion mech is capable of moving and attacking underwater. This can lead to odd situations like a battleship firing at an underwater Hyperion when it can't target subs, or a sub firing uselessly at a Hyperion standing close enough to the water to register as a target but not enough to take damage.
* The Hypernova Sword has a chance to reduce the target's defence on hit. Its base form, the Stardust Sword, is found in the final dungeon of Act 2.
* The Hyper-Velocity Autocannon, or HVAC. Created as an attempt to make autocannons with better range, they succeeded but were riddled with flaws. First of all, the guns are heavier than standard autocannons of the same type. Second of all, the propellant used produces huge clouds of smoke that block line of sight of anything that might be behind the unit firing it (such as allies who wish to shoot the same target). Third, they generate a lot of heat and have reduced ammo compared to normal autocannons. Fourth, they're
* The Hypnotoad is so well-known as a meme that there are many not-yet-fans who begin to watch the show and expect that the Hypnotoad will be an important character rather than a recurring minor joke.
* The Hypnotoad sounding that they had to keep it. According to David Cohen, the name for that particular sound effect in the editing machine is "Angry Machine."
* The Hypometric weapons are rather less flamboyant, but in many ways more alarming. They simply cause everything in a specific volume of space to just... disappear. No debris, no radiation, no explosion. The effect propagates at lightspeed, and appears to be impossible to defend against (though perhaps the Inhibitors might have some tricks in that regard).
* The hypospray, a device for injecting medicine without breaking the skin, was put into the Original series since NBC regulations at the time forbade the showing of needles for drugs on-screen.
* The hypothetical daughter Marshall imagines looks so much like Lily that the actress could pass for
* The Hyrule Compendium describes grassland foxes as solitary animals that don't form packs, which is correct, but in this they're explicitly to be "unlike other foxes". All real-life foxes are solitary animals, and the other kind of fox in the game, snowcoat foxes, are also only found alone.
* The Hyrule Compendium's entries each list two locations where their associated enemy, animal, material or equipment is common. In practice, however, the entities in question can be found in several other areas just as commonly, and in some cases — most notably the basic enemy types — have essentially universal distributions.
* The hysteria over the Large Hadron Collider theoretically being powerful enough to create micro-black holes
* The hysteria would only increase from there. With the government largely composed of rich, powerful and conservative oligarchs merely swapping seats at every election, backed by a neoimperialist U.S. government with access to its largest military bases on Philippine territory, Filipino radicalism would continue to climb—opposing the bases, American and multinational capitalist exploitation of the economy, and the

* The Hyundai Elantra was once known as the Lantra throughout much of Europe and Australia thanks to the similarly named Lotus Elan, as well as the Elante trim level offered on some of Mitsubishi's cars. When both cars were discontinued by 2001, the name was allowed to be used.

gigantic Halcon/Themis in one slash.
* Theia - The Crimson Eclipse. During stealth missions, this affects the line-of-sight of certain guards, since some are more inclined to ignore him if he's hooded while others are more inclined to notice him.

* The ICDMM (International Community Dedicated to Mana Mutation) sends out field agents to collect monsters (dead or alive) for the purpose of dissection and experimentation. Their goal is to understand mana mutation so that they can cure and/or treat it.
* The Ice Ax is the meat and potatoes of mountain climbers. It can be used to feel the depth and texture of the ground, to chop a grip in the ice, or to anchor a rope. It can even be used as a very handy weapon, assuming you have such a need: one noted hero in the Indian army used it in this way while storming a hill during the Indian-Pakistani wars. Leon Trotsky, close to the end of his life, also happened to be involved in an ice-axe-as-weapon incident once.
* The Ice Behind Bars: Jamie may claim that he is doing everything to Elsa for the "good of Arendelle" but it becomes more and more obvious to the readers that he just wants to punish her for his own petty reasons. When he finds out his other daughter, wife, and sister are still alive, all of which he claimed to love. Rather than being happy he is furious at them for letting him think they were dead and decided to torture/kill them all.
* The ice can hold all sorts of treasure and secrets hidden within it.
* The ice cream chain KaleidoScoops was started in 1999 by a bunch of Baskin-Robbins owners who had their franchises terminated due to underperformance.
* The Ice Cream Girls by Dorothy Koomson is based around two women trying to resolve how their ex-lover died: a man who was having affairs with both of them when they were fifteen and one of them was his student. His "relationship" with the girl is presented as abuse and "grooming" her for statutory rape but since she believed she was in love with him, the trope applies.
* The ice cream machine is another troublesome piece of equipment. Some contestants instantly think to use an ice cream component as part of their dessert round, but never realise that they should think of a backup in case their opponent gets there first since only one person can really make ice cream.
* , the Ice Cream Truck driver is actually a Werewolf who's fattening kids up so that he can bait them back to his place when the full moon arrives and proceed to "Make new flavors" out of them. It's even complete with a creepy jingle during midnight.

* THE ICE KING. ALL of the crimes he commits relate to his desire for companionship.
* The Ice King. Although he has Finn and Jake as friendly rivals, and his penguins, he's actually very lonely, because his insanity has resulted in his social skills being more or less flushed down the toilet. Although he probably had friends as Simon Petrikov, considering he had a fiance.

* The Icelandic Sagas, a character who cannot grow a beard is insulted when he is gifted a silk garment and as a result, a hard-won legal settlement breaks down.
* The Icelandic Sagas. "And he grinned" is a common phrase in the story that implies that something really bad is about to go down.
* The Icelandic Sagas have several fine descriptions of climactic battles:
* The Icelandic Sagas: Kari, intent on revenge for the death of his son in the Burning of Njal, pursues the Burners on their voyage to Rome and catches up with them in Wales. He spots Kol Thorsteinsson, one of the Burners, selling goods at a market; Kari strikes at him just as Kol is counting silver, and "Kol kept on counting the silver, and his head counted 'ten' as it flew from the trunk."
* The Icelandic Sagas. Lacking a widespread writing system, law was taught orally; good knowledge of law earned a person great respect, although only a handful ever learned all the intricacies of the system. Courtroom scenes are common in the sagas, with knowledgeable people often playing key roles in the outcomes, to the detriment and benefit of both antagonists and protagonists.
* The Icelandic Sagas: Laxdæla Saga and Gunnlaugs Saga Ormstungu both provide examples of this. There may be even more examples. But in both these examples, the Hero does NOT get back in time and the love of his life goes to another man; with predictable results, we are talking Vikings after all...
* The Icelandic Sagas of Scandinavian masculinity; many of these Viking men react pathetically to affronts to their manly honour and it becomes clear that a lot of the death and destruction in the story could easily have been avoided if they had cooler heads and thicker skin.
* The Icelandic Sagas Ospak gets away with murdering Odd's kinsman because Odd summoned a last-minute replacement for one of his panel from his home district rather than at the Althing.
* The Icelandic Sagas, which definitely seems to have been some kind of polearm. Its precise nature is uncertain, although many English translations traditionally render it as "halberd".
* The Icelandic Woman's Strike of October 24, 1975 was this enacted on a national scale, with 90% of Icelandic women taking the day off. This did not just apply to housework, but all women's work, and it became colloquially known as the Long Friday among the men because they were now forced to bring their children to work and keep them entertained. This paralyzed productivity in the country, and many places even had to close. Because it exposed how crucial women were to Icelandic society, this had significant positive ramifications for women's rights, and Vigdis Finnbogadottir was elected the first female President in 1980 as a result.

* The Iceman. "Mr Freezy" Pronge is a hitman who gets his nickname from this trope, including using the freezer to store bodies to confuse the time of death.
* The Icemark Chronicles, the hero of the second book, Charlemagne, is given a prophetical sword called the Blade of Fire.
* The Icemark Chronicles, the youngest son Sharley has a crippled leg, so his parents overprotect him and love him more than their other offspring. His sister Medea grows more and more hatred towards him throughout the second book, until she eventually tries to kill him.

* The Ice Queen Cometh: When Rio Kamishiro/Merag attempts to confront Vector, he defends himself against Merag's attempt to kill him by throwing a cake in her face that says Happy Death Day Merag. Later, when the two of them begin their duel, Vector interrupts Merag's turns by invoking this trope two more times.

* The Ice Truck Killer from season 1 was killing prostitutes. He exsanguinated their bodies and staged their chopped-up body parts to taunt the police. He stored the blood in the freezer, but it was later subverted — he used it for another staged crime scene.
* The Ice Truck Killer's prosthetic hand from the evidence room. He ended their relationship and he fired her as well.
* The Ice Warriors are more morally nuanced — individual ones can be anywhere on the scale from sadistic schemer to purely honorable warrior, and their culture in general has gone through both aggressive and more neighbourly (while remaining this trope) periods during its history.
* "The Ice Warriors" features a completely logical computer that the scientists are dependent on, that is completely useless once the
* "The Ice Warriors" involve Ice Warriors being found in a glacier, thousands of years after they crashed on Earth.
* "The Ice Warriors", made in 1967, has female scientists in mod minidresses with some outrageously groovy prints, long false eyelashes, beehives and go-go boots. (Especially amusing as the story is set in a future Earth which has gone into an ice age due to human climate change. You would absolutely die of exposure if you went outside dressed like that — which may have been the point.) Defied by the men, however, who wear jump-suits with the same prints.
* "The Ice Warriors". Several times in the story, characters get a plan in motion only to have Clent scupper it due to lack of input from the computer. Everybody else in the base is frustrated with his behavior but powerless to do anything about it, and one has even dropped out of civilization entirely and gone to live in an icy wilderness due to being sick of Clent.
* "The Ice Warriors", the leader of the titular monsters tortures the Doctor by trapping him in an airlock and drawing the atmosphere out of it. The Doctor, seemingly seriously, screams that he's going to explode. Maybe Time Lords are more fragile to decompression than humans?
* The Ice Warriors, too: their big, hulking bodies are stated to be biomechanical spacesuits in their debut story. Though in a later episode it turns out that Ice Warriors are anything but frail outside of their suits; they stay in the suits primarily for cultural reasons related to honour, and also because their military prefers
* The Ice Warriors" uses this trope, but technically isn't at one of the poles (it's during an ice age instead).
* "The Ice Warriors": Victoria witnesses Jamie's apparent death at the hands of an Ice Warrior. However, while the man with Jamie was killed, Jamie himself survived.

* The iconic UGTO Agincourt Supercarrier, however, is a subversion, as it has more fighter bays than any other ship in space - even more than Command Stations! - but despite being Tier 2, its secondary role is... point defense, meaning it offers incredible coverage, but no additional offensive ability.
* The iconic weapon of the Empire, which the majority of its footsoldiers use, is the versatile halberd, which fits with the Empire army being the most versatile in the game (interestingly most other armies only give halberds to elite units). They also use spearmen and swordsmen, especially from more rural provinces, and missile support comes from a mix of archers, crossbowmen and handgunners. Plus the Empire has large train of gunpowder artillery. There are also small numbers of young noblemen fighting on horseback with a brace of pistols, smaller numbers of engineers with experimental repeating handguns and plenty of classic armoured knights with couched lances or cavalry hammers. Their elite infantry use Zweihander-style greatswords, just like the German Landesknechts who form their major inspiration. Basically the Empire is defined by its use of a wide variety of real-world early modern European weaponry.

* The idea might have reached the screen had Marc Platt's "Lungbarrow" been made as a TV story. Script editor Andrew Cartmel and his writers wanted to inject some mystery back into the Doctor, the so-called "Cartmel Masterplan", and "Lungbarrow", as part of this, would have taken the Doctor back to Gallifrey to confront his family and reveal his mysterious connection to a shadowy figure from the founding of Time Lord society. However, John Nathan-Turner felt it revealed too much about the Doctor too soon, and Platt reworked it into the TV story "Ghost Light", subsequently incorporating much of the Masterplan into his New Adventures,
* The idea of a decapitation strike in nuclear warfare essentially involves the destruction of targets which are known to be the location of individuals with launch authority to their own nuclear warheads. The idea only really became feasible when delivery systems with very low warning times (such as submarine-launched missiles) or observability (such as stealth bombers) became available. It didn't last long for two reasons: first, a number of responses (such as devolving launch authority when senior leadership was unreachable) were implemented in response. Second, numerous potential problems were identified with an approach like the enemy managing to order a launch before they could be destroyed or a "headless chicken" scenario

* The idea of everyone thinking the world was flat wasn't universal. Through history some people thought it was flat, some thought it may be round, but for the most part people probably didn't worry themselves about it much. While many people cite the idea that when a ship sailed to sea the mast was the last thing to disappear to the observer, the problem is that by the time a ship is that far out at sea (several miles for a 5.5-foot-tall person), the ship is so small to the unaided eye it's hard to make out the mast — and telescopes weren't developed until 1608 — a time when the fact that the Earth was round had been proven practically.

* The idea of giants as enemies of the gods and as agents of primordial chaos is a pretty common trope in mythology, particularly the Indo-European kind. Supposedly, it's linked to a cultural memory of the conquest or displacement of palaeolithic peoples by neolithic ones, represented by the civilised gods overthrowing an earlier, primordial race more heavily associated with the elements. The exact "alignment" of the primordials differs from culture to culture, and some, such as the Norse, include primordials ranging from the

* The idea of Thermopylae was to delay the Persian army's advance into Greece for as long as possible, until the city states could raise their own levies, but because the battle only lasted 3 days, it was a strategic defeat for the Greeks who had intended to hold out for longer. However, an unintended consequence of the early loss was that the Greek fleet retreated from the simultaneous sea battle of Artemisium instead of fighting to the death (because their strategy depended on holding both points). This led to the Persian fleet growing overconfident, overextending themselves, and suffering a devastating defeat against the surviving Greek fleet at the Battle of Salamis weeks later. This ultimately cost the Persians the war by forcing their fleet to withdraw to Persia and destroying their army's supply lines, effectively showing just how well long-term planning and war go together (i.e.

* THE iDOLM@STER: Cinderella Girls has a few of these, for the idols who are imagining what their debut would be like.
* THE iDOLM@STER: Cinderella Girls: in the anime adaptation, Uzuki and Mio worked hard to become idols, and finally catch a break at the start of the series. They can barely contain their excitement when they spot an idol they recognize.
* THE iDOLM@STER: Cinderella Girls is an introverted girl who is fascinated by horrific death, violent gore, and the grim supernatural, but is otherwise innocent.
* THE iDOLM@STER: Cinderella Girls is more subtle about it, but every Cinderella Project idol gets a chance to be in the spotlight. Some of the veteran idols also get some attention to further the character development of their juniors (Mika for Rika and Miria, Sachiko for Kanako and Chieri, Nana for Miku, and Natsuki for Riina).

* THE iDOLM@STER: Cinderella Girls, Minami collapses from stress of being Cinderella Project's coordinator right as 346's big concert begins in episode 13. As a result, Ranko takes her place for Love Laika's segment.
* THE iDOLM@STER: Cinderella Girls, Mishiro fixes the Producer's tie within seconds of their first encounter.
* THE iDOLM@STER: Cinderella Girls Ranko does this when she begins to address the producer, but switches to other words and phrases starting with pro-, like "provincial wind", "prologue", and "propose", before walking off.

* THE iDOLM@STER: Million Live! where Haruka mentions having to stop her from pressing random buttons when doing a radio show.
* The Idolm@ster: Ritsuko Akizuki, though she isn't a typical cutesy type - she just projects that persona. In fact, she's snarky and more than a little sneaky, having been known to astroturf an Internet message board to drum up support for herself.
* The iDOLM@STER: Ritsuko shows how to do a dancing routine the Ryuugu Komachi was rehearsing.
* The iDOLM@STER series are called Producers. It's also not uncommon for someone to note they are a (Character Name)P as a means of indicating a favorite.
* The iDOLM@STER - Several throughout the showing, the first one being along the ending sequence on the first episode.
* THE iDOLM@STER: SideM's Kazuki Tsukumo, and some very minor roles afterwards. By the time he retired from voice acting at the end of 2019, Tsukumo remained his only well known role.
* THE iDOLM@STER: SideM, the boys of Mofumofuen and S.E.M. play the main characters of a neoclassical Magical Boy series during an event. One of the few instances where a Magical Boy premise is played completely straight, even if it was in-universe.
* THE iDOLM@STER: SideM to openly start wearing femme clothes, takes on primarily feminine roles while at 315 Production, and is noted to keep his work secret from people he knows. As 315 Pro is shown to accommodate the idols under their care, their attitudes also extend to respecting Saki's identity and choice of style. This, along with the fact that the game never once shows Saki out of costume, leads to the interpretation that Saki is still closeted but on the road to transition.
* The iDOLM@STER), some films, a lot of manga adaptations and counting.
* The iDOLM@STER: The first episode was misleading people into thinking the adaptation of the game would be a literal adaptation, since the Producer's lines weren't voiced, only subtitled, as in the game.
* The iDOLM@STER: The Futami twins apply one of these on the Producer, calling it by name.
* THE iDOLM@STER. The girls wanted to be more adult, wearing make-up, high heels, padding... It... doesn't end well.
* The iDOLM@STER: The Producer trying to defuse the bomb Makoto throws in the

* The Ignition Factor that this sometimes resulted in, there are several in-jokes that slipped through, such as "I can't believe I'm saying this. Is this really in the script?", and "I think I'd have written something better than that, Joe!", even though they were grossly inappropriate for the context.
* The Ignition Trilogy (2006-2008) is also liked for placing heavy focus on action, replacing troop-builders with well characterized, individual villains, and for loosening up some of the story's more worn-out "rules". This was also when the world was developed into an entire complex universe as the writers introduced several other islands.

* The Ig Nobel Prize ceremonies have the traditional "Welcome, Welcome" and "Goodbye, Goodbye" speeches. Each is two words long.
* The Igor: Mad scientists often have a hunchback or deformed dwarf as an assistant.
* The Igor, one gets the feeling that since Igor didn't exist, it was necessary to invent him.
* The Igor. One memorable cartoon has him and Igor stuck inside the house on a rainy day, with their mother suggesting they should go downstairs and build a monster to pass the time.

* The I-Land: The island is just a simulation, but getting killed in there causes your body to die for real. The warden mentions something about the experience being too traumatizing for the brain to handle.
* The I-Land, the prison is outfitted with state of the art-technology such as laser fencing, drone surveillance units, and gravitation fields used to restrain people. Many other features are still the same, especially in terms of fashions.
* The I-Land: The waters around the island are populated with sharks, which almost kill some of the stranded people when they go out for a swim.
* The I-Land turn out to be prison guards who gladly accept money in return for killing or torturing prisoners.
* The I-Land was put on death row for shooting up a mall in a run-and-gun massacre.
* The I-Land was wrongly convicted of murdering her mother. Her husband is really who did it (not even intentionally). She's exonerated in the end and set free.
* The Ilempiri were incapable of being used as hosts by the Goa'uld, so they were fed a highly addictive drug that only the Goa'uld could manufacture, until the entire species was addicted.
* The Iliad, Achilles captures twelve Trojan youths to sacrifice on his beloved Patrocles' funeral pyre.
* The Iliad, Achilles' mother was Thetis but his great-grandfather was Zeus. When boasting about his godly parentage, it's always his descent from Zeus he mentions, never his (much more direct) descent from Thetis. In this sense, he plays this trope straight.
* The Iliad: Achilles predates Nietzsche by millennia, but he resembles this form of Straw Nihilist. He gets an absolutely epic rant about how life and the heroic code are meaningless, and they're all going to die and be forgotten anyway. He goes so far as to wish everyone but himself and Patroclus dead in the hope that then, their glory might actually endure. It's incredibly bitter, incredibly powerful, and is this trope all over.
* The Iliad: Aeneas's descendants went on to settle/found Britain, Rome, and Alba Longa, according to much later authors.
* The Iliad. Agamemnon responds by taking Achilles' war prize, kicking off the plot.
* The Iliad, although the whole "sheep-killing" thing is skipped over.

* The Iliad and mostly just lounged around in Troy while everyone fought over her. Even Paris wasn't the city's main fighter; his brother Hector was the protagonist of the Trojans' side.
* The Iliad and nearly chokes the Trojan river with their dead. Even Hector, the killer of Patroclus and first among the Trojans, makes a run for it until he realizes that Achilles won't stop chasing him and decides to go out swinging.
* The Iliad, Andromache drops her weaving shuttle when she realises that Hektor has died.
* The Iliad and the games that follow, serve as a somewhat closure for Achilles. Hector's funeral does the same for the Trojans.
* The Iliad and was portrayed as heavily bearded in ancient art. In fact, it's thought that pottery artists made him look like Zeus.
* The Iliad as a sacrifice to her, while secretly hoping that the Trojans would desecrate it and earn her wrath instead (in reality, Athena had sent a vision to one of the Greeks, which Odysseus interpreted and so had the horse built). When Cassandra and another Trojan both predict that it's full of soldiers, Cassandra is ignored because of her curse, while the other naysayer and his sons are promptly strangled by snakes, which prompts the other Trojans to immediately bring the horse into the city.
* The Iliad because translators have various ways of referring to the two Aiantes... Ajaces... two people named Ajax.
* The Iliad, but it remains to primarily be about the manly pursuit of men fighting and the gods will it to be so.
* The Iliad, but it was written by a different writer hundreds of years later.
* The Iliad by the Trojans for injuring gods when he got bored of murdering their forces! Sarpedon fills the role for the Trojans.
* The Iliad, Diomedes goes on a god-stabbing rampage with the help of Athena. First he slashes Aphrodite when she tries to spirit away Aeneas. Feeling his oats, he attacks Apollo two times, but Apollo blinds Diomedes temporarily to save Aeneas (Aphrodite's demigod son). So essentially Apollo just throws a flash grenade at him, takes the guy, and runs. When Apollo and Aphrodite return to Olympus complaining about Diomedes, Ares descends to the battlefield on a mission. Athena leads Diomedes towards the god of war and guides his spear cast to take him directly in the gut. Ares screams and flees the field. Diomedes thus becomes the only mortal to wound two gods in a single day.
* The Iliad has numerous sections where Homer describes the name, ancestry and personal history of someone who hadn't appeared in the story before he went into describing their background, and who die the paragraph (Or sometimes sentence) after he finishes.
* The Iliad, Hector's father goes to Achilles and gives a speech, culminating in:
* The Iliad. He is inconsolable for a while until he finally burns her body as well.
* The Iliad, Hera goes to enormous lengths to seduce Zeus long enough for his pro-Trojan battle manipulations to fall apart.
* The Iliad. He's described as having at least a generation on the next oldest soldier present in the battle.
* The Iliad he survives and accompanies the hero, Arkantos, during the rest of his journey.
* The Iliad himself, Achilles, likewise wields a gigantic spear inherited from his father that no one else is capable of using.
* The Iliad, Homer mentions Zeus hurling him from Olympus after siding with his favored mother Hera, with the same result.
* The Iliad: In an early occurrence of the trope, Achilles orders the other Myrmidons not to attack Hector, so that he alone may have the satisfaction of killing his foe and avenging Patroclus. This is jarringly inverted in Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida in which Achilles does the opposite: actively ordering his men to slaughter Hector for him.
* The Iliad includes a hour-long-in-reading chapter made solely of the list of how many ships and men every allied Greek kingdom sends to Troy.

* The Iliad indicates that the Greeks also sacked neighboring cities during the long siege of Troy itself. It opens just after the sack of Lyrnessus, where Briseis was enslaved.
* The Iliad. In some versions of his myth, he's completely invulnerable except for his heel.
* The Iliad: Little Ajax, after the Trojan War, survives a shipwreck and shouts at the gods that they have failed to kill him. And then he's immediately killed.
* The Iliad. Odysseus and Diomedes were on a night raid and captured the hapless but useful Dolon. Bad cop Diomedes said to stand still or die. Good cop Odysseus said, "Fear not, let no thought of death be in your mind." It went on like that for awhile until Diomedes "struck him in the middle of his neck with his sword and cut through both sinews so that his head fell rolling in the dust while he was yet speaking."
* The Iliad (Paris stealing Helen, Achilles and Agamemnon fighting over Briseis, etc.).
* The Iliad. Paris, though, is probably the biggest example of this trope, as his two epithets are "son of Priam" and "godlike" (meaning he looks like a god) — even though they're compliments, they're basically saying that being Priam's son and looking pretty are the only things Paris has ever accomplished. On the other hand, many of Agamemnon's listed epithets can be just snark (especially those voiced by Achilles) because Agamemnon was often shown as speaking and/or behaving exactly the opposite of those epithets (i.e. in a mean, petty or dumb manner) either just before or shortly after being thus addressed. There can be genuine praise, conventional salutations or hidden sarcasm embedded in how those characters (and the poem reciter) may address each character.
* The Iliad. Patroclus is this, having been exiled by his home city after committing murder. This is sort of the point, as Patroclus is the one person sympathetic to the problems of the ordinary Argive soldiers thanks to not having his own agenda. Namely that they are getting their butts kicked, without the leadership of Agamemnon and Achilles.
* The Iliad portrays an episode from the ten-year siege of Troy, which also involves the Trojans storming the fortified Greek camp.
* The Iliad (roughly: "tinkle sonata") in 1808, which consists of three parodistic sonnets. In the first, each line consists of one syllable; in the second there are eight lines of three syllables each and six of two syllables; the third has lines of eleven syllables each and uses a lot of Italian words.
* The Iliad she's a river goddess. We're never quite sure whether she really is a goddess or not.
* The Iliad than how he didn't. However, after Priam, Hector's father came to him in person, Achilles regretted his actions, and gave Hector's body to him, so he did eventually have a proper funeral.
* The Iliad: The Catalogue of the Ships in the second book is so tedious that it puts some readers off altogether. For the record, it's entirely skippable as it has almost no relevance to the rest of the poem.
* The Iliad version of this, but the moment he suggests the Greeks might want to give up on the siege and go home most of the army takes him at his word and makes a break for it. Odysseus has to round them back up.
* The Iliad was against writing itself: "It destroys memory and weakens the mind, relieving it of work that makes it strong. It is an inhuman thing."
* The Iliad, was given divinity by Athena as a reward for his skill and courage.
* The Iliad when Athena has to come down from the heavens to stop Achilles from killing Agamemnon.
* The Iliad, where Idomeneus, Menelaus, Ajax, Diomedes, Agamemnon, Achilles, Patroclus, Odysseus, Philoctetes, Hector, in short almost all the major warriors are kings or princes of some sort.
* The Iliad where the narrator starts off comparing two things, then continues into minute details that are seemingly unnecessary. For instance, if someone was feeling happy, the story might say:
* The Iliad. While she tries her best to steer him towards the latter by disguising him as a girl, it doesn't work, and when she sees how easily he takes to the warrior's life she realizes she would rather he be happy rather than miserable for the rest of his days, so she stops trying to keep him safe.

* The Iliad would be if he lost his brother. Menelaus eventually cuts him off by pointing out that he's fine and that he's going to alarm the troops.
* The Illager brigand patrols introduced in 1.14 were patched to only spawn at night, like other hostile mobs. Previously they averted the trope by being able to spawn
* The Illegal: AKA an illegal alien/immigrant; a foreigner who has crossed another country's borders and stays there without any legal authorization to do so, and they can be subjected to arrest, imprisonment, and deportation if discovered.
* The Illegal: An illegal immigrant is any foreign citizen who is staying in another country without any legal authorization to do so, which may lead to imprisonment and deportation if they are discovered.
* The illegality of genetic enhancement and cybernetics seems based more on the implication that the average experiment in these directions fails horribly. The subjects themselves are often actually provided therapy for dealing with such things.
* The ill-fated Narvaez expedition of would-be Spanish conquistadors in the 1520s. Despite suffering from serious food and supply shortages and a near shipwreck prior to even leaving their base on the island of Cuba, and drifting over a thousand miles away from their intended destination, the expedition's leaders decided to go a-conquering anyway - with predictable results. Amazingly, after being stranded in the wilderness of what is now western Florida, enduring another series of shipwrecks on a few homemade rafts and being captured by a dozen or so successive groups of Native Americans, 4 of the expedition's original 300 members managed to wash up on the Texas shore and walk over 1700 miles to Spanish-occupied Mexico. * The Imitation Game: Alan Turing and Joan Clarke are closer to each other than with anyone else on their team partly because they are slightly smarter than the rest, and also because they both feel oppressed by society; he is a socially awkward gay man, while she is a woman who excels in a field which at the time was reserved solely for men.
* The Imitation Game, Alan Turing considers his cryptography computer to be his life's work and obsesses over it constantly.
* The Imitation Game: Alan Turing is this a lot of the time, lampshaded when he's told that "in order to play the 'irascible genius', you do have to actually be a genius," and he's working with people who qualify for genius in their own right. However, even surrounded by such bright minds, he is still far enough ahead of the game that his arrogance is (by the skin of his teeth) tolerable enough to work with him. This has drawn a lot of criticism from historians, since the real Alan Turing, though certainly an eccentric loner, was, by all accounts, actually quite friendly to those he knew.

* The Immortals for the fight between mortals and Ozorne's forces. Daine has a final showdown with Ozorne, dragons get involved, and it ends up in the Divine Realms as the gods fight the incarnation of Chaos.
* The Immortals hobby is sleight of hand. He actually supported himself as a stage magician for a while when on the run from Carthak, and didn't use real wizardry because the emperor and his court could trace that.
* The Immortals in eagle form. This trope comes into play when she changes back to a human: her clothes don't change with her.

* The Immortals in the kitchen where everyone in both gangs has at least one gun pointed at them, Jack is calmly eating a plate of salad.
* The Immortals involves a literally magical defibrillator when Alanna uses lightning magic to restart Daine's heart, a rather straightforward application of this trope (however since we don't see the scene happen from that end, we don't know whether anyone yelled "Clear!").
* The Immortals is about Daine moving beyond the sudden death of her mother, finding new friends, mastering her wild magic and gaining unlikely allies with animals and the "monsters" invading Tortall.
* The Immortals, Jack tells his thieves that the cash they are stealing belongs to a shady real estate developer. It actually belongs to local mob boss Dominic.
* The immortals' need to kill other immortals and take their Quickening essentially makes them vampires who only feed on each other.
* The Immortals. One persistent critique about Daine is that even when introduced as a thirteen year old she acts four or five years older). It's still a little bit weird, though.
* The Immortals series can be this. While on one hand Skysong stayed at a political discussion over exploring a capital city (apparently very interested); Skysong has also been known to open locks to see what is behind them, and was describes as "like a bear in your wardrobe, except a bear doesn't have magic to open locks" if her curiosity is not satisfied.
* The Immortals Series, there's an akashic library in Summerland that Ever uses to find out what's wrong with Damen in the second book.
* The Immortals, several of thieves wind up wielding a a gun in each hand during the running firefight through the nightclub. Most notable is Billy, who has a large revolver in each hand while staging a rear guard action for the rest of the crew.
* The Immortals, the animals—all of them—call themselves the People, and any with Wild Magic are considered People as well.
* The Immortals to suffer all manner of diseases so their infection-fighting antibodies can be strained out of their bought-by-the-liter blood and used by the wealthy to remain permanently disease-proof. Production of monoclonal antibodies for chemotherapeutic use is now routinely done using mouse or rabbit spleen-cell hybridomas, which eliminates the many risks of administering extracts from a human donor's blood.
* The Immortal Superman": After saving Metropolis in the year 121,970, Superman finds he has no reason to stay in that era, so he jumps back into the timestream.
* The Immortal Superman, an aging Superman travels to the year 121,970, and learns the use of super-powers has been banned in Earth, and old super-heroes are dumped in a retirement home off-world. Hence, when the Metropolis governor asks for their help, the retired heroes are unwilling to listen him out until Superman makes a passionate speech:
* The Immortal Superman: As visiting a future Metropolis, Superman diverts an explosion by spiraling around the exploding building, simultaneously preventing the blast from spreading and channeling the explosive force upwards.
* The Immortal Superman. Even astronauts stranded in deep space, whom Superman rescues when he drops by the year 801,970, can communicate with him in twentieth century English.
* The Immortal Superman: In the one-hundred-and-first millennium and beyond, Earth people live in five-mile-high skyscrapers, wear garish robes and drive flying cars on tube-like floating freeways.
* The Immortal Superman: In the year 801,970, Superman finds five astronauts floating in life-preserving spheres in deep space. After rescuing them, they explain their "preservo-spheres" are emergency safety devices which turned on when their spaceship broke down.
* The Immortal Superman is kicked off when Superman gets a distress call from the year 101,970.
* The Immortal Superman. It takes him to his destination, but the defect causes him to age every year along the way, leaving him trapped in the future and over a hundred thousand years old.

* The Immortal Superman, Kal-El has lived over one million years of history.
* The Immortal Superman of issue #385, Superman is shown breaking Kryptonite chains easily.
* The Immortal Superman robots arrive and start towing the planet away. Superman spots a label on their front sides that says "Galactic Sanitation Dept."
* The Immortal Superman, the Man of Steel travels to the far future and discovers Earth has become a lifeless rock after eons of wars and pollution. After terraforming Earth back into a habitable world, Superman brings one couple of humanoid aliens and their offspring to Earth so they can repopulate it.
* The Immortal Superman, the President asks Superman not to fly into the past or future for the next 24 hours to avoid disrupting a military experiment. No sooner has he agreed this than Superman receives an urgent distress call from the year 101,970. Instead of simply waiting until the next day before setting off, Superman uses a defective time-bubble belonging to the Legion. It takes him to his destination, but the defect causes him to age every year along the way, leaving him trapped in the future and over a hundred thousand years old.
* The Immortal Superman, the titular hero travels to the far-flung future and discovers Earth has been turned into a lifeless rock after millennia of wars and environmental damage, so he sets out to make Earth inhabitable again with his own hands.
* The Immortal Superman, the titular hero travels to the year 101,970.
* The Immortal Superman, three super-heroes who tried to apprehend an energy beast were put in cryo-freezing crystal pods when the monster's attacks put them in a coma.
* The Immortal Superman. When Superman arrives at future Metropolis, someone fires at him. Superman thinks their ray gun will not probably hurt him, but he dodges the energy bolts anyway because he is not taking the chance to be hurt by a future weapon that he knows nothing about.
* The Immortal Superman, where Superman has become invulnerable to Kryptonite after aging several thousands of years.
* The Immortal Superman, where Superman travels to the far future. Everyone whom the Kryptonian hero meets is able to speak and understand twentieth century English (or, alternatively, the story does not mention Superman learns their speech quickly).
* The Immortal Superman, years of war and environmental abuse have turned Earth into a barren, lifeless rock.
* The Immortals we discover a Magic B: Wild Magic. This seems bound up with the natural world and the gods, inherent in all living things but only available as usable magic to a few (also born with the talent innately).
* The Immortals: When Billy arrive back at the nightclub late, Tim—who is tripping on acid—thinks he is the Angel of Death come for him and shoots him.
* The Immortal. The protagonist was immune to all known diseases and a lot of people wanted to chase him down and get his blood because of it.
* The Immune: Humanity as a whole is threatened by a disease that has already killed quite a few—but one or more characters have an immunity to it.
* "The Immunity Syndrome": a zone of darkness and negative energy, created by the energy-devouring giant space amoeba at its center.
* "The Immunity Syndrome" plays straight the 'turn the captain's chair round to reveal the corpse' trope.
* The Immunity Syndrome": While opposing a monster that drains life force, the crew starts to collapse and is given stimulants to keep them on their feet. At one point Kirk asks McCoy for another shot and Bones warns him that if he keeps on taking it it will blow him apart.

* The impact of the SUV's combination of power and luxury eventually trickled back to pickup trucks themselves. The second-generation Dodge Ram that debuted in 1994 proved that trucks could be more than just workhorses — they could look good and be nice to drive as much as any car or SUV. Its styling, too, was enormously influential, drawing on "big rig" semi trucks to create a more aggressive look than the contemporary Ford F-150 and Chevrolet C/K. From there, the development of pickups and SUVs went hand-in-hand, and smaller work trucks like the Ford Ranger and the Chevrolet S-10 fell by the wayside as pickups followed SUVs in becoming lifestyle vehicles, some of which have been

* The Imperial Agent's storyline begins on Nal Hutta where they impersonate a space pirate called the Red Blade whose real gender and species is conveniently unknown. But as the player goes to leave Hutta, they're alerted that the real Red Blade has learned of their deception and has just arrived on the planet to confront them, forcing the player to rush to the spaceport and intercept him before he can expose the truth.
* The Imperial-aligned captors of Luke, Leia and Han put them in a room with some kind of small, furry mammalian creatures that somehow sap the two Force users' power and prevent them breaking out. Luke eventually solves the problem by killing them. However, it accidentally happens again later, when a young rebel thinks Leia would like one of the cute critters that he finds in another area, and lets it loose. Leia faints, but Luke's able to tell him to get it out of the area

* The Imperial Army during the Great Crusade played this straighter than the Guard, since its mission was conquest rather than survival. It's hard to ignore the fact that in the course of fulfilling the ostensibly noble goal of reuniting humanity and making it a galactic superpower the Imperial Army destroyed hundreds of human worlds who wouldn't comply. They also enacted campaigns of xenocide as well. Even worse, this was when humanity was at its prime, meaning they were all but unstoppable.

* The Imperial Auditors are the Barrayarran answer to this question. They are handpicked by the Emperor to investigate any matter he thinks needs special attention, and are chosen for two qualities; incorruptibility and the ability to stand up to very dangerous people without flinching. There are measures in place to control them should they cross the line themselves: There are never more than nine of them at a time, the Emperor can reclaim their seal at any time, and they can be impeached by the Council of Counts.

The so-called Afriel Strain was the result, albino warriors who are indeed superior to normal troops, but marred by an unexplainable tendency to provoke animosity in their fellow soldiers, as well as freakishly bad luck. Afriel deployments uniformly produce a brief period of incredible success followed by catastrophic failure. The Imperium, being

* The Imperial Guard's uniforms make seem they're just wearing armour over top clothing like normal modern soldiers, but actually, their entire uniforms are flak armour as well, and the soft portions are fully capable of stopping modern assault rifles, while the hard armor would allow you to possibly glance a .50 bullet.
* The Imperial Guard themselves have their own elites with stormtroopers, the best of the best who're often requisitioned by Inquisitors who need a lot of firepower. The grunts tend to think of them as overrated ("chocolate soldiers" is one term). Even rank-and-file Imperial Guard regiments are "elite" compared to Planetary Defence Forces, who get almost no focus at all and generally only exist to get slaughtered until the Imperial Guard show up.

* The Imperial March, inspiring Morgan to join in. Cut to Morgan opening up a pair of doors, with the full Imperial March blaring in the soundtrack.
* The Imperial March invokes this. The tempo is steady, the chord progressions are solemn and grandiose, and the music accompanies scenes of a totalitarian regime with a great sense of theatrical panache. (Williams stole it from Holst.)
* The Imperial March is also a subversion in itself because aside from tempo and hitting the downbeats hard it doesn't actually sound like most real military marches, which tend to be played mostly at the mid to upper end of the range (at least for the melody line) and in a major key, giving them a bright, triumphant sound. The Imperial March is performed by instruments playing at the very bottom of their range in a minor key (giving it a dark sound), and there are deliberately dissonant notes in many of the chords to set up tension. John Williams knows how to write a march, and deliberately broke most of the rules to come up with the Imperial March. Appropriately for an Empire built on the Dark Side of the Force, it's meant to be menacing, not triumphant.

* The Imperial Navy fields ships with impressive macro-cannon batteries and considerable durability due to good armour and shielding. They're also equipped with heavy prows for ramming and prow-facing torpedo launchers. The Imperial's secret weapon, the Nova cannon, is a heavy long-range cannon which fires a massive shell which explodes destroying any ship for kilometres around the blast. While good at close to mid-range engagements, the Imperial Navy struggle at longer ranges due to heavy reliance on macro weapons, a lack of carrier vessels until the late-game (and even then carriers are expensive) and moderate to mediocre speed. Generally, the Imperials succeed when they do whatever the faction they're facing is bad at.
* The Imperial Navy focuses on capital ships and uses cheap and short-ranged starfighters to cover and protect them, almost as if they were just another ship weapon, and favor set-piece battles. * The Imperials are famous for this, setting up mercantilism and trade ties between the provinces of their various empires as a means to peacefully hold them together. * The Imperium can be this from the perspective of everyone else. It supposedly has several dozen protectorates and potentially a few hundred allies and neutral xenos species, but they don't come up in the stories. Usually what the readers see is that anyone else exploring the galaxy is going to run into an awful lot of heavily armed, theocratic mass murderers who view their very existence as an insult to the God-Emperor.
* The Imperium did this in Armageddon. There were plenty of reports of Leman Russ battletanks being piloted mere seconds after their construction (without even a single coat of primer) and joining the battle raging just outside the factory doors. Inspired by the same things happening with factories in Leningrad in WWII.

* The Imperium has juvenat treatments which can keep the user young indefinitely, and can even treat people to keep them juvenated at a particular age within the span of adulthood, and some senior authority figures prefer to keep an outward appearance to give an impression of wisdom and experience. Thing is, juvenats are quite expensive, so only members of wealthy noble houses, highly valued or highly

* The Imperium is like a caricature of the Dark Ages. Everything great was in the past, erected during a golden age. The top end relics from that golden age are better than what the Tau has now, but they are treasures from an ancient world and cannot be replicated today. Nor does the Imperium really have a culture of science; superstition and religion have mostly done away with it. The average Imperial citizen lives worse than the quality of life of most humans today, and the average soldier of the Imperium would be awed by Tau technology. The very lucky, very privileged few who get the awesome relics of the past - or who can get one of the knock-offs produced by rote replication of the achievements from before - have things the Tau would love to get. The elite of the Imperium have things the Tau can only dream of, but they are few, and the culture doesn't really have ways to further refine the designs. Imperial special gear tends to be relics from thousands of years ago that can't be replaced.

* The Imperium of Man (or should I say PIMPerium) pretty much defines this trope. See for yourself:
* The Imperium of Man preaches the sanctity and holiness of the pure human form. To this end, they ruthlessly seek mutants and people with "defects" to kill them. However, their greatest warriors, the superhuman Space Marines, are packed with so many biological and cybernetic enhancements that they barely count as human

* The implied setting for Fourth Edition Dungeons and Dragons includes the Astral Sea. Despite the Astral Sea being three-dimensional and possibly infinite, a "surface" exists that most creatures stay near out of instinct.
* The importance of 1-2 Range attack is relatively higher than every other game in the series, thanks to the relative lack of common and reliable 1~2 range weapons outside of tomes, with magic swords being extremely rare (there are only about 7 of them in the entire game—and two of them, the Light and Earth swords, can only be used by Lief and Nanna respectively), Javelins—though somewhat common—are impractical to use indoors due to the extremely limited number of indoor lance users (and many of the chapters are indoors), and lastly—the inaccurate and relatively rare Hand Axe. Low ranked tomes can be acquired by stealing it from enemy mages or taking it from captured enemy mages, and are relatively easier to steal with your thieves.
* The Importance of Being Earnest because "a man who is very much talked about is always very attractive. One feels there must be something in him after all."

* The Importance of Being Earnest by the protagonist Jack Worthing on more than one occasion — including his very first line!
* The Importance of Being Earnest: Done by Rupert Everett and Reese Witherspoon.
* The Importance of Being Earnest: Gwendolen's mother said that "to lose one parent is unfortunate, to lose two is careless" and refused to allow Gwendolen to marry Jack until he had found his parents again. Jack later turns the tables on Lady Bracknell by refusing to give permission for his ward, Cecily, to marry Algernon, who is also Bracknell's nephew, unless she relents and lets him marry Gwendolen.
* The Importance of Being Earnest, Gwendolyn is so enamored with the name "Ernest" that she has it tattooed on her buttocks, adding to her horror when "Ernest" tells her his real name is Jack.
* The Importance of Being Earnest, it's revealed that Jack and Gwendolyn are long-lost cousins. In keeping with the time and place in which the play is set, this is not what destroys their relationship but rather what allows them to marry, since being Gwendolyn's cousin means that Jack is now known to be of the proper social status to marry Gwendolyn.
* The Importance of Being Earnest: Jack and Algernon pretend to be brothers, then it turns out they actually are brothers. Also, Jack tells Gwendolen his name is Ernest, and it really is. (He was abandoned as a baby.)
* The Importance of Being Earnest makes passing mention of a law firm called Markby, Markby and Markby. Lady Bracknell comments that the Markbys are held in high esteem for their profession—one of them is even occasionally invited to dinner parties.
* The Importance of Being Earnest opens with Algernon playing the movie's theme tune on a piano, which quickly flows into a full orchestra playing the same theme as the background to a chase scene.
* The Importance of Being Earnest. The only way to understand and enjoy a performance of the play is to have read the script enough times to have memorized half the jokes in advance.

* The impossibility of this happening has been addressed directly in the series several times, due to the Doctor being able to, barring accidents, live forever and the tragedy that he cannot ever "grow old" with anyone he loves.
* "The Impossible Astronaut". After this traumatic experience, the three are in a diner discussing the purpose of what just occurred when in walks the Doctor, or rather a version of himself that's 200 years younger. River promptly slaps him for what his future self just put her through, and he quickly deduces that it was for something he's going to do in the future and that he's "looking forward to it".
* The Impossible Astronaut" had its Utah diner scenes filmed at Eddie's American Diner in Cardiff. Since then, it has (understandably) become a tourist hotspot for Whovians, and has had its bathroom doors painted to resemble a TARDIS. To the surprise of everyone, that same diner interior makes a comeback in Series 9, though its true nature (and why its exterior shots are now set in Nevada instead) is not what anyone was expecting.
* "The Impossible Astronaut" is listed as a BBC America/BBC Wales co-production instead of just a BBC Wales production at the end of the closing credits.

* The Impossible Astronaut plays a younger Canton in 1969. The story goes that they were going to use makeup to make Mark look like an old man before he mentioned his father who'd be a perfect older version of himself. In this instance, the preparation for the scenes was reversed from their normal pattern, with William studying Mark's acting to make sure his own scenes would match Mark's.

* "The Impossible Astronaut", the Doctor asks Rory if he wouldn't mind checking out some creepy tunnels with River Song. When Rory says "yeah, kinda," the Doctor replies, "Then I appreciate it all the more." Rory just shrugs and climbs down into the hatch.
* "The Impossible Astronaut": The Doctor becomes suspicious of his companions behavior when they refuse to tell him about his future death at Lake Silencio. In order to prove he can trust her, the Doctor demands that Amy swear by something that matters.
* "The Impossible Astronaut", the Eleventh Doctor insisting: "Canton, on no account follow me into this box and close the door behind you!"
* The Impossible Astronaut", the Eleventh Doctor is shot and killed before he can regenerate, afterwards being mourned and cremated, only to show up a few minutes later, completely clueless as to why everyone is so upset. Their past, his future, cue plot arc. This is revealed to have been staged. The "Doctor" who was shot was the Teselecta, AKA the Justice Department Vehicle Number 6018. The Doctor was actually inside it at the time. It's not clear how the regeneration was simulated, though, but official related media says that the Doctor asked the Teselecta's operators for permission to incorporate a visual effect similar to a partial Time Lord regeneration to make his supposed death more convincing.

* The Impossible Man, Michael Garcia made the above quote to Yuki Shimizu during the Cherry Blossom Festival. The entire scene occurred under a Cherry Blossom Tree and symbolized the state of their relationship.
* The Impossible Man owned by teenager Angela Salinas. It's appearance in the story resembles the cartoon rendition of chupacabra, where it is a green furball with fangs, as featured on some Puerto Rican T-Shirts.
* The Impossible Man subverts this trope. Michael Garcia either hires a woman or his mother hires one and he accepts their application to work for his store.

* "The Impossible Planet". He didn't make them on his own though, but borrowed them.
* "The Impossible Planet", in which the Ood advance on the Doctor and Rose repeatedly stating "We must feed" — their translator was malfunctioning and the full message was "We must feed you, if you are hungry" (they're servants).
* "The Impossible Planet" like it claims to be, he gets rather cagey when pressed on what he thinks it actually was. He eventually admits that he can't dismiss it with a scientific explanation as easily as he normally would.
* "The Impossible Planet" Ood, normally not even considered people, in the roll call.
* "The Impossible Planet", Rose gets a call from Satan himself on her mobile, which understandably freaks her out a bit.
* "The Impossible Planet"; Scootie is launched into space (by Satan, sort of) when the section of the base she's in gets shattered, and her body is still completely intact; though a) this is a family-friendly show, so there was never going to be anything too gruesome, and b) her corpse is getting pulled into a black hole (hence the episode title, as said planet maintains a steady orbit around said black hole), so will likely result in "Implosive Compression" before long.
* "The Impossible Planet": Scooti's body, when everyone else discovers she's been blown into space, as she's sucked into the black hole.
* "The Impossible Planet": Subverted at the beginning, due to a faulty translator device.
* "The Impossible Planet" than the universe, and it's parked in an unnatural orbit around a black hole.
* "The Impossible Planet": The Beast vacates its own body to take over archaeologist Toby Zed and, simultaneously, all of the Ood on the base.
* "The Impossible Planet", the Doctor battles against the Devil himself. When the Doctor asks him "from which religion?", the Devil answers "All of them" and further states that he existed before time. They have other things to worry about than where exactly it came from and what this means for the universe, so they don't inquire too closely.
* The Impossible Planet, then it possesses the stations army of meek, servile Ood, trapping them all in an attempt to break free.
* "The Impossible Planet", the only human that "Satan" managed to possess also gained blood-red eyes while the Beast was in control.
* "The Impossible Planet", the Tenth Doctor spends much of his screen-time gallivanting around a pit-and-cave-system wearing a pressure suit and helmet. The helmet features four tiny lights which are pointed directly at the corners of the Doctor's mouth and eyes.
* "The Impossible Planet" Toby kills Scooti by telekinetically blowing out a window, causing her to be sucked into space.
* "The Impossible Planet": What may or may not be the Devil himself possesses the archaeologist Toby Zed.
* "The Impossible Planet", where the language is so incredibly old that it's untranslatable.
* The Impossible Quiz and its sequel has a question on each that contains a wall of text. The first quiz had the question written on a sheet of paper, while the second quiz wrote it with the four choices. Needless to say though, if you try to read through the text, a bomb will eventually appear and start ticking down your doom.
* The Impossible Quiz Book, there is a question where you see Chris's past self from question 68 of the original quiz. If you touch him in any way, you'll cause a paradox that erases him from existance and give you an instant game over.
* The Impossible Quiz has a clock with some of the numbers replaced with pictures of a bucket, a banana, a house and a hammer.

* The Impossible Quiz theme) and an instrumental version of "The Yeah Yeah Yeah Song" by the Flaming Lips. One of the questions also plays a clip from another Flaming Lips song, namely "What is the Light?"
* The Impossible Quiz. There's no rhyme or reason to most of the questions, hence why it's impossible.
* The Impossible Quiz This also returns in a question in The Impossible Quiz Book Chapter 1 and 2. Falling for reverse psychology and pressing "Please don't press this." and "Shut down" on their respective questions will also have the same effect as above.
* The Impossibles is shown using this to observe 20th-century events from the 40th century.
* The Impossibles pokes fun at saying that Londoners can finally see each other.
* The Impossible Stairwell both have some trouble with tenses before deciding to "just pick one tense and stick to it".
* The Impossible Virgin and it eventually turns out that Willie survived. Meanwhile, the head villain is done in by one of his own subordinates who hates Modesty and doesn't want her in the organization. The new head villain sets Modesty up for a gory death, and fully intends to stick around to watch the whole thing, but reluctantly has to leave to deal with an emergency caused by the returned Willie, giving Modesty a chance to escape.
* The Impossible Virgin begins with a Soviet satellite imagery interpreter deciding to defect, not through idealism but because he's discovered something in one of his satellite images that will make him very rich if he can exploit it before anyone else discovers it. The actual defection is accomplished by the end of the fourth page, because he's a very minor functionary so he can easily jump ship while on holiday and his superiors won't bother chasing after him; the plot of the novel is about what happens after that, as a result of him choosing poorly about who to bring in on his secret.
* The Impossible Virgin heist that nets them a large safe and part of the wall it was built into, which they load into the back of a van and drive away. A few minutes later they rendezvous in an underpass with a large removal truck, driving the van up into the back of the truck, which then proceeds innocently on its way.
* The Impossible Virgin novel, Modesty and Dr Giles Pennyfeather have to perform an emergency appendectomy in a cave where they and the patient are hiding from the villains. Giles has to talk Modesty through the surgery because the villains tortured him and his dominant hand is too injured to use. Modesty does note that there is one up-side to the situation: Giles got most of his surgical experience as a mission doctor in a remote African village, so he's used to working in primitive conditions; she jokes that he'd probably be more out of his element if they did have access to a proper operating theater with all the modern equipment.
* The Impossible Virgin novel, Modesty and Willie are discussing what to do about the villain over a glass of wine. Their friend Giles (an amiable fellow without a mean or fighting bone in his body) casually offers to help dispose of the body just as Willie takes a sip, causing a spray of wine and an impressive display of choking from Willie.
* The Impossible Virgin novel, Sir Gerald Tarrant is facing the prospect of being given the boot as a scapegoat for a foul-up by an incompetent colleague. The day on which the axe is expected to fall is his birthday, but with everything that's on his mind he doesn't notice until someone points it out. Fortunately, Modesty decides to save his career as a birthday present.

* The Imposter Nazi plot to assassinate said president, decided to pretend to be the double in an attempt to flush out both sets of enemy agents, but was revealed when one of the dead man's more suspicious associates made some comments about things which had never happened.

* The Imposters, a character is eavesdropping on someone talking in a (gibberish) foreign language, which is captioned for the viewers. He eventually realizes that the captions are reflected in the mirror he is facing, and works out what is being said by reading them.
* The Imposter. The plot involves an attempt to fashion a laser with greater power and capability. At one point, the heroine points out that scientific research normally operates as a cooperative effort. The person speaking to her acknowledges this, but notes that for the purpose of secrecy, only five people worked on the laser project, so their elimination kept it secret. When someone later points out that destroying the prototype laser would do no good, since someone will inevitably follow the chain of research and stumble upon the way to make it anyway ("Because other researchers will discover it again at any moment? Why do you think Darwin and Wallace discovered evolution at the same time?"), the heroine responds that even the delay that destroying the prototype could produce might prove useful ("...a cipher can't hide a military secret forever, but it can delay discovery long enough to change the course of history").

* The Inbetweeners 2 features Neil accidentally defecating down a waterslide as a result of irritable bowel syndrome. The turd chases Will down the slide and hits him in the face at the bottom.
* The Inbetweeners 2, Simon bemoans the fact that he's studying Sociology, noting its lack of applications to their current predicament. Not that any other degree would have been of any use, but Simon is established to have very few other skills over the course of three seasons of the TV show and a previous movie, aside from an offscreen aptitude for golf.
* The Inbetweeners, a group of hooligans keep Will awake though his entire bus ride from the airport by singing irritating songs praising Burnley. He comments, "When people ask me if I like football now, I say yes, but not Burnley. Burnley can fuck off."
* The Inbetweeners, and desperately tries to close the laptop and dress himself with his dead arm.
* The Inbetweeners. As Davies has made numerous public comments implying-to-outright-stating that teaching was not an enjoyable, fulfilling or rewarding career choice for him, Gilbert's sheer joy in tormenting his students appears to be Davies channeling many long pent-up frustrations.
* The Inbetweeners dad by calling him a "bumder", later explaining that it's a cross between 'bummer' and 'bender' (both of which are perjorative British slang terms for a homosexual man).

* The Inbetweeners did exactly the same thing, only much worse, changing the word "wankers" to "turds" and essentially working word-for-word from the original - which heavily relied on British humour, experiences, and cultural references, something that can't be recreated IN AMERICA! simply by making the script different.
* The Inbetweeners: Donovan gives Will a wedgie during their last day of school.
* The Inbetweeners has Donovan over Charlotte. Jay borders on this with his obsessiveness over his girlfriend Chloe's whereabouts in the final episode of season 2, although he is a far more gentle example than most.
* The Inbetweeners. He has a deep crush on Carli, his neighbor and childhood best friend, and will do anything to win her over. He frequently makes dramatic romantic gestures to win her over, and she is clearly aware of his feelings but maintains just enough plausible deniability to ingnore him. Over the course of the series it becomes clear that she's just stringing him along to manipulate him when it's convenient for her, and his pursuit makes him pathetic rather than successful.
* The Inbetweeners. He spends the course of the entire show trying to win her over, usually blowing it in hilarious ways. He does get to kiss her in the final episode of series 2, but she goes back to her boyfriend.
* The Inbetweeners in the last episode of the second series ("I don't want you to feel rushed. But I want you to know that if you do want to touch me down there, I'd be totally fine with that"). When she dumps him for being too clingy, he returns to his old ways immediately, tearfully insisting that he dumped her ("She was frigid...and she wouldn't go for a threesome I organised with a top lezzer model...and my cock was too big for her!").
* The Inbetweeners, Jay and Neil see a black man selling drugs in a club, but when they approach him to get some he accuses them of racism.
* The Inbetweeners, Jay claims to have had tons of sex with the girls at Caravan Club. When his friends call his bluff and agree to accompany him to Caravan Club, their suspicions that he has been lying are quickly confirmed.
* The Inbetweeners Movie (both the Re-edited version and the Writer's cut) included camera angles and words that weren't included or dubbed over in the cinema release which was available as a standard DVD.
* The Inbetweeners: Neil. It sort of works to his advantage because it stops him from realizing just how wrong everything keeps going for him. Amongst other things, he thinks Swansea is a species of animal, and that women give birth through their anus.
* The Inbetweeners, Simon reluctantly rubs suntan lotion onto Will's back, except for a portion Simon scrapes away with his fingernail in the shape of a penis. Will's love interest, Alison, then points out the embarrassing results.
* The Inbetweeners, so Jay is in general more sympathetic than many examples of this trope.
* The Inbetweeners, the boys take up the sport of destroying daffodils with a golf club, and repeatedly vandalize a particular flowerbed in the neightborhood. Will is skeptical at first but eventually joins in the fun, but the owner of the flowerbed catches on, figures out where they live, and stands outside screaming at them threateningly, trapping them inside for hours as they pretend not to be home.
* The Inbetweeners: The mechanics at Will's work experience try to send him on one. He sees through it and calls them out on it, which just reinforces their opinion that he's an annoying smart-ass.
* The Inbetweeners. This is presumably a reference to the song of the same name by Feist, which appears predominantly in the soundtrack of the first and second series.
* The Inbetweeners very shortly beforehand. He does manage to get it up again, but not before he has totally scared her off and is subsequently dumped.

* The Inbetweeners, who makes near-constant boasts about his sexual expertise despite his obvious virginity. Jay is a bit of a vague case, though, as he rarely ever talks to girls. He apparently prefers to brag to his male friends about his exploits instead. But when he does try to chat up girls, they don't usually seem interested (except for Chloe).

* The Inbetweeners Will indulges in excessive quantities of energy drinks to get him through his end-of-year exams. This causes him to develop stomach trouble, and when Mr Gilbert doesn't let him go to the toilet, he follows through and soils himself.
* The Inbetweeners Will swallows a quantity of hash without first preparing it for consumption. Despite this it still has some strange effects on him, mostly making his arms twitch.

* The increased potential for mutations among human psykers (caused by drawing their power from the twisting and corrupting Warp) means that a fair number could be considered a separate species. A few psyker sub-groups, such as Navigators, actually do constitute a separate branch of humanity. Also, though it varies from edition to edition, the suggestion has often been made that 40K humans in general are on the verge of evolving into this, hence all the psykers. Psychic ability itself seems to be genetic. People who use psychic powers are born that way, although it is possible for a non-psyker to draw power from the warp with the right (obviously heretical) rituals and incantations.

In one episode he got into the old "not that you're not attractive" trap and Alice admitted she was just messing with him, and then he fell for it again just moments later.
* The Increasingly Poor Decisions of Todd Margaret , Todd makes up some sign language while speaking to a group of deaf people, who throw things at him in response. His sign language translates to something offensive.
* The Increasingly Poor Decisions of Todd Margaret : Todd's blatant and escalating lies drive most of the plot. Among other things he insists: His father died last week, He grew up in Leeds (a city he picked at random based on an an album cover), he is allergic to nuts (going so far as faking anaphylactic shock and taking unnecessary epinephrine shots), and he lives in the houses of Parliament (he claims it has apartments now).
* The Increasingly Poor Decisions of Todd Margaret , Todd suspects that his subordinate Dave has stolen his entire inventory. When he gives a description to the police, he's completely unable to give any helpful information about him. The cop issues a sarcastic APB to lampshade Todd's useless description.
* The Increasingly Poor Decisions of Todd Margaret tries to bluff his way through the world when transferred to London, and his attempts to dig himself out of trouble.
* The increasingly sympathetic but always horrifically monstrous Doctor Jizabel 'Death' Disraeli of the
* The increasing social awareness and acceptance of single mothers and out-of-wedlock births have made tropes like
* The Incredible Adventures of Van Helsing setting as their protagonist.
* The incredible amounts of sugar also makes it a good "cure" for overly spicy food. Truly, Irn Bru is the wonder drink!
* The Incredible and Awe-Inspiring Serial Adventures of the Amazing Plasma-Man has a bionic crab claw in place of his right arm.
* The Incredible and Awe-Inspiring Serial Adventures of the Amazing Plasma-Man has an eyepatch over his right eye.

* The Incredible and Awe-Inspiring Serial Adventures of the Amazing Plasma-Man has red boxing gloves as part of her super-hero costume.
* The Incredible and Awe-Inspiring Serial Adventures of the Amazing Plasma-Man is named, appropriately enough, Blank. Though he does wear goggles.
* The Incredible and Awe-Inspiring Serial Adventures of the Amazing Plasma-Man (no relation).
* The Incredible Army of Brancaleone. He is so protective of his money that it's a running gag for him to hide inside his own portable vault whenever he feels in danger of being robbed.
* The Incredible Crash Dummies, although it is his fault (he built them from scrap).
* The Incredible Crash Dummies: Junkman's plan, after he's picked up lunch.
* The Incredible Crash Dummies regularly had limbs knocked off with no problems.
* The Incredible Crash Dummies seem to spend a lot of time without their heads (or arms or legs) attached.
* The Incredible Crash Dummies. So many puns. Also has a very high concentration of dismemberment related puns.
* The Incredible Crash Dummies, whenever your head gets knocked off, the controls get reversed. This happens if a bomb explodes near you or you go too fast and smash into a wall. The only way to return the controls to normal is to find a spare head, which can sometimes be found easily, and other times isn't found until the end of the level. Once you pick up the spare head, the controls revert back to normal, which can cause you to jump into an enemy or off a cliff.
* The Incredible Dennis the Menace episode, "Dennis the Genius", Mr. Wilson is relieved when Dennis starts going back to school, and to celebrate, he plans to watch a videotape about bass fishing. To his horror, when he puts it in the VCR, he finds out that Dennis taped over it with a home video of himself.
* The Incredible Dennis the Menace episode, "Wish You Weren't Here", Joey flushes Gina's baseball mitt down the toilet in Mr. Wilson's camper van when the Mitchells go on vacation with the Wilsons. As a result, the toilet is clogged up and Mr. Wilson has to pay to get it unclogged.
* The Incredible Dennis the Menace. When his friends visit him, Joey asks him what he's going to name his baby. When a confused Dennis asks Joey what he's talking about, Joey explains to Dennis that whenever his Aunt Julie goes to the hospital, she always comes home with a new baby. Margaret has to explain to Joey that she'll be the one having the baby when she and Dennis are married.
* The Incredible Genie does this. The protagonist kid sarcastically wishes the Genie to take "40 winks". He literally performs 40 quick winks. Another is the kid wish he was "filthy rich", only to have his room covered with filth. Justified that the Genie has no knowledge of the present or figures of speech.
* The Incredible Hercules Additionally, though he's not super-smart, he's very perceptive and great with puzzles and thinking on his feet. All that, on a guy who's strong enough to fight Thor to a draw.
* The Incredible Hercules at the end of the same arc, when Hercules suggests using an Olympian eagle strike in combat.
* The Incredible Hercules features Herc hallucinating that he's reliving previous adventures due to being poisoned. When action is presented from his view, the comic suddenly appears to shift to a seventies artstyle and coloring. They even pan from Black Widow's modern look to her look from when she was on the Defenders with Hercules to emphasize it.
* The Incredible Hercules girlfriends that he would visit from time to time. All of them are utterly heartbroken when they learn that he's died.
* The Incredible Hercules) has taken to speaking in haikus exclusively.
* The Incredible Hercules have this relationship. Amadeus always angrily corrects them.
* The Incredible Hercules in general, so it's no surprise that several paramours have been of divine origin. He's been confirmed to have bedded Snowbird (divine servant of Inuit gods), Queen Alflyse of Svartheim (dark elf of Norse legend, and certainly well beyond mortal power level), and his wife Hebe (daughter of Zeus and Hera, Greek goddess of youth). It's strongly suggested that he's been with several female jotuns (Norse giants) simultaneously, and he has hit on other female divinities when the opportunity presented itself (including Hawaiian volcano goddess Pele... while the world was being consumed by the Chaos King).

* The Incredible Hercules is capable of causing wind-related natural disasters like tornadoes, hurricanes, typhoons, etc.
* The Incredible Hercules (queen of the Dark Elves) hikes up her dress, causing Hercules to ogle her and lose the challenge (howewer Alflyse declares him the winner anyway and starts flirting with him amorously).
* The Incredible Hercules shouldn't have been in the Underworld in the first place.
* The Incredible Hercules suffer pride worse than the Asgardians. Hercules, while a good guy, has attacked people who he believes insulted him or take attention away from him. The other Olympians are about the same either wanting mortals to worship them again or reacting badly to challenges of their godhood. Once when rendered mortal, Zeus completely broke after a few hours out of broken pride and fear. Hercules at least is used to it.
* The Incredible Hercules. The dark elf queen cheers him on, while one of her advisors futilely tries to inform her that the scenario was entirely winnable.
* The Incredible Hercules: they push their buttons immediately at the same time. They both go free.
* The Incredible Hercules, this means that recaps, more often than not, sound like this:
* The Incredible Hercules to fill his slot. He's an immortal, hammy and beardy champion even better at fighting barehanded than his Asgardian friend.
* The Incredible Hercules who beds any number of women he can, Hercules has several steady girlfriends all over the world. After his death at the end of the series, Venus and Namora find this out when they visit houses or businesses that Hercules has bought or built himself, each of which houses or employs a woman who loves Hercules and is shattered and heartbroken by his passing.
* The Incredible Hercules with little difficulty. The same guy who's fought evenly with Heralds of Galactus and Thor.
* The Incredible Hulk (1977) and a three-time Black Belt as a completely untalented boxer.
* The Incredible Hulk (1977). Another prisoner in the box next door tells him how to survive: find a rock to suck on, put your head in the least exposed place possible, and don't move around.
* The Incredible Hulk (1977) at the special challenge with his quarry.
* The Incredible Hulk (1977). Banner and two friends are locked in a dark bank vault. Banner transforms, but no-one can see it. They hear the Hulk's breathing and realize that they're locked in with something. Cue one of them lighting a match and revealing the Hulk's face.
* The Incredible Hulk (1977), David Banner faced one of his most horrific situations when he is confused for a lookalike gangster and rival gangsters capture him, ignore his protests that they have the wrong man and take him to a construction site. There, they force him into a shallow grave, put a sheet of clear plastic on him and pour concrete on him to bury him alive. When you see that kind of murder method, you're on the edge of your seat until the very last image of Banner just before his head is covered is his eyes going green to start his change into the Hulk.
* The Incredible Hulk (1977) David had a job as a trainer/medic at a pro wrestling arena. The wrestlers got along with each other well enough, but inside the ring it was all real.
* The Incredible Hulk (1977), David starts reading someone's number aloud by saying "555..." The rest of the number isn't heard.
* The Incredible Hulk (1977) David taste-tested some white powder he found on his foot after transforming back from being the Hulk. (Hulk had rampaged through a warehouse full of drugs.)
* The Incredible Hulk (1977): "Don't make me angry. You wouldn't like me when I'm angry."

* The Incredible Hulk (1977) ends like this. Problem solved, Banner packs up and leaves as "The Lonely Man" plays in the background, in order to avoid getting innocent bystanders embroiled in the manhunt for the Hulk.
* The Incredible Hulk (1977) episode David Banner has a different alias—but always as "David" and a last name beginning with a "B."
* The Incredible Hulk (1977) - Goal: Find a cure to the Hulk transformation.
* The Incredible Hulk (1977) got this one out of the way. In the first single-hour episode, "The Final Round", David befriends a boxer who is unwittingly delivering drugs and then is supposed to suffer a fatal heart attack during a fight. This was the first instance of Banner being conveniently being knocked out so that he doesn't Hulk out until later.
* The Incredible Hulk (1977) green was delicious and was more interested in licking it off than properly imitate fighting the actor.
* The Incredible Hulk (1977) has a dramatic example: David Banner always used his first name and a last name that started with "B". If the name was common enough (David Brown, for example) he would use it multiple times.
* The Incredible Hulk (1977) has David Banner walking the United States.
* The Incredible Hulk (1977). He may be chasing a tabloid-like tale of a giant green monster (and gets mocked for it by his colleagues), but he's keen on reporting the truth. On occasion he reports on other breaking news and scandals that deserve coverage
* The Incredible Hulk (1977): It had one episode in which David Banner ran into someone who looked almost like him with the exception that his doppelganger was and looked a little bit older. The doppelganger, unfortunately, was a crook. Both parts were played by Bill Bixby.
* The Incredible Hulk (1977), plus two directed by Jack Colvin ("Goodbye Eddie Cain" and "East Winds").
* The Incredible Hulk (1977), the Hulk is treated as an urban myth for far longer than should be considered possible considering he has been seen by large crowds in public quite a few times.
* The Incredible Hulk (1977) the titular character and breaks the bonds. In many cases, he doesn't even need to put an intentional effort to it: the increasing of his body size and weight during the transformation naturally stresses the bonds' material into breaking.
* The Incredible Hulk (1982) changed Major Glenn Talbot's first name to Ned.
* The Incredible Hulk (1982) episode "Origin of the Hulk" had the accident that turned Bruce Banner into the Hulk caused by a scientist named Dr. Carlston, who secretly worked with an alien robot addressed only as Number One. Eventually, the Hulk beats up Dr. Carlston and ends up tearing off the artificial skin from his mechanical arm, revealing Carlston to be a robot as well.
* The Incredible Hulk (1982) episode "The Boy Who Saw Tomorrow", a criminal named Waldo uses a life-like mask to impersonate a scientist named Dr. Kessler.
* The Incredible Hulk (1996) added Grey Hulk to Bruce's alternate personalities, promoted She-Hulk to co-lead, and dropped the plot point of the US military and SHIELD pursuing Bruce.
* The Incredible Hulk (1996) And hurt Hulk, hard. Ghost Rider even invokes the trope by name.
* The Incredible Hulk (1996): A non-battle example in "Innocent Blood". Hulk was trapped under rubble, turning back into Bruce Banner, and affected by a faulty tranquilizer, which would kill him if he returned to human form before it wore off. To make him turn into the Hulk and save himself, Rick Jones pretended to be hurt and called for help.
* The Incredible Hulk (1996) as the Magnificent Molecule Man and Captain Bob.
* The Incredible Hulk (1996) is one of the guests at the fashion show. This is in addition to his role as the voice of the animated Hulk.
* The Incredible Hulk (1996). Season 2 of the show also has this reputation thanks to She-Hulk being bumped up to series regular.
* The Incredible Hulk (1996). She is still as kind as she is usually portrayed as.

* The Incredible Hulk (1996). This version appears as a human being cursed by a spirit, and Banner/Hulk's interference allows them to break the curse, and save the life of the brother of a woman who took pity on the Hulk. Leaving the Hulk/Banner to contemplate who the real monster was.
* The Incredible Hulk (2008): after finding out that Banner is hiding in Rio, the villain tells his agents to be on the lookout for "a white man" in the soda factory he works out. No other description is given, even though it'd be really helpful considering that Rio has millions of people matching that description.
* The Incredible Hulk: Accidentally drinks soda laced with Banner blood.
* The Incredible Hulk and make a monster and less than a perfect hero.
* The Incredible Hulk and this. Most people can relate to feeling like poor, downtrodden Bruce Banner at least once in their life and he can provide wish fulfillment by turning into an unstoppable rage monster that can curbstomp almost anything that pisses him off. Less so in later storylines, as his Hulk persona wrecked his personal and professional life.
* The Incredible Hulk arc the Hulk went to a planet where the food is poisonous to animals unless they have a symbiote attached.
* The Incredible Hulk, as he genuinely is a good guy, but whether you're a good guy or a bad guy, if you do something he views as a betrayal or an attempt to hurt or hound him, it doesn't end well.
* The Incredible Hulk as there are many instances where he's so enraged he's basically lashing out at whoever is in his vicinity, even if they were on somewhat genial terms before he started going nuts.
* The Incredible Hulk, as well as his foes the Leader and Abomination.
* The Incredible Hulk. At one point she lends him her coat, and it gets trashed. It's adorable.
* The Incredible Hulk, Betty puts her jacket on the sleeping Bruce Banner.
* The Incredible Hulk: Bruce Banner's girlfriend Betty has a moment of this when she gets angry at a taxi driver for almost causing Bruce to Hulk out. She's not exactly pleasant when Bruce tells her to calm down.
* The Incredible Hulk, Bruce Banner's love interest and the daughter of the man most set on catching Banner.
* The Incredible Hulk, Bruce's traumatic upbringing would lead to the fracturing of his personality, which eventually became the various Hulks.
* The Incredible Hulk bursting out of the Hulkbuster armor, based on a planned scene where Banner was supposed to Hulk out during the battle of Wakanda. The scene was ultimately unused, but by then the toy was already in production.
* The Incredible Hulk changed The Hulk and Abomination's battle in the climax of the movie into a sanctioned street fight.
* The Incredible Hulk Coaster, a live news report that follows the military surrounding Bruce Banner's laboratory ends when the Hulk breaks out and hurls a tank at the camera, and presumably the reporter as well.
* The Incredible Hulk Coaster, as both versions of the ride ultimately have the conditions that turned Bruce Banner into the Hulk being successfully recreated.
* The Incredible Hulk Coaster, but later averted with the ride's 2016 update, which removed nearly all traces of purple from the attraction and replaced it with black or blue. Even the Hulk statue at the ride's entrance sports his modern look with blue pants instead of purple.
* The Incredible Hulk Coaster involves Thunderbolt Ross attempting to recreate the conditions that transformed Bruce Banner into the Hulk, so he can potentially build an entire army of Hulk soldiers.
* The Incredible Hulk Coaster, monitors show that there have been 278 days since the last Gamma radiation exposure incident. It soon after changes to 0 days.
* The Incredible Hulk Coaster, Thunderbolt Ross makes no actual appearance in the ride, only being alluded to. This is an especially bizarre instance of this trope, as Ross is the character that the storyline centers around.
* The Incredible Hulk confirms that Blonsky became the Abomination at the same time as Thor was breaking into the S.H.I.E.L.D. compound, which was the day after the Stark Expo.

* The Incredible Hulk, Dr. Samuel Sterns becomes enamored of the power and potential of Bruce Banner's mutation, in spite of the danger. Rather humorously, the actual Abomination (the character) he's quite terrified of.
* The Incredible Hulk features a surprising amount of this. In one story, the Maestro, an insane, evil version of the Hulk, rules the world and keeps a harem of slave girls for this purpose.
* The Incredible Hulk from the comics). McGee even mentions hoping to become a reporter some day.
* The Incredible Hulk, General Ross's failure to capture the Hulk forces him to give Emil Blonsky a performance-enhancing serum. Once Blonsky becomes the similarly powerful Abomination and ends up terrorizing Harlem, Ross is forced to free the Hulk so the soldier will be stopped.
* The Incredible Hulk got mutated to his green self by a hefty dose of gamma radiation. He can switch it on and off...
* The Incredible Hulk has Leonard Samson. He's shown to be a very nice guy who even gives Bruce some psychotherapy in a few deleted scenes, and while there's no official breakup he seems to understand that Betty and Bruce are a real item and quietly stands aside. Of course, it helps that Samson is a character from the Hulk comics, being Bruce's therapist and another Gamma-powered superhero (though the latter part obviously wasn't in the movie).
* The Incredible Hulk has Stan Lee, who drank a soda with Banner's blood in it getting gamma poisoning and dropping the soda.
* The Incredible Hulk has the Hulk casually dismiss the idea, saying he doesn't believe in aliens. Needless to say, the Marvel Universe in general and the Hulk's life in particular are always up to their eyeballs in aliens, and he knows that perfectly well.
* The Incredible Hulk. He survives but is free to be taken advantage of by a slave girl while he's healing.
* The Incredible Hulk: Hulk vs the Abomination on the streets of Harlem.
* The Incredible Hulk... hungry." Ironically, in Portuguese, irritado (angry) and com fome (with hunger) are not at all similar, while in English, "angry" and "hungry" are fairly confusable. However, assuming there was someone who taught him the native language, Bruce could have asked this person what the translation of the word 'Angry' was and his tutor may have just mixed up 'Angry' with 'Hungry' and therefore provided him with that translation instead.
* The Incredible Hulk in a matter of minutes and he needs to make sure he doesn't lose the drive. He throws it up later, good as new.
* The Incredible Hulk infused with the howling souls of a thousand angry indians.
* The Incredible Hulk insisted on changing the details of the origin to make them incompatible.
* The Incredible Hulk, in the 2008 movie, kicks Emil Blonsky across a field and into a tree. Slight subversion, though, in that the impact shatters almost all of his bones, and he only survives due to the healing factor given by the supersoldier serum he took earlier.
* The Incredible Hulk) in the laboratory by showing up with pizzas and leaving him one for free.
* The Incredible Hulk into battle, despite the fact that the Hulk would just get angrier and stronger with each successive attack.
* The Incredible Hulk, is because she grew up surrounded by military men, and she wanted to know someone more passive and calm, and less aggressive and authoritarian. This gets reinforced by the fact that, when much later in the comics, Bruce Banner got his personalities assimilated into one coherent one, she started feeling dubious about being still in love with him, because his new personality was much more assertive and powerful, and she didn't feel that he needed her anymore to reassure himself.
* The Incredible Hulk: "Is it just me, or is this how we got involved in Vietnam?"
* The Incredible Hulk is the most frequent victim of this but even other superheroes aren't immune:
* The Incredible Hulk is treated as a level Alpha threat by military forces with missiles. Bruce Banner's gamma-powered alter ego has several personalities with varying levels of (conscious) intelligence, but even the Savage Hulk gets that he intimidates people and isn't above using it.

* The Incredible Hulk. It just looks odd in both cases since Hulk's arms are bigger than the women's entire bodies.
* The Incredible Hulk it turns out that the one thing it's allergic to is gamma radiation, which the Hulk constantly emits.
* The Incredible Hulk later pops in to condescendingly remind General Ross why that program was put on ice.
* The Incredible Hulk later said he considers both characters to be the same person.
* The Incredible Hulk: Martial artist Rickson Gracie appears to teach Banner breathing exercises.
* The Incredible Hulk, measuring how long it has been since the Hulk caused chaos.
* The Incredible Hulk movie. A Parkour expert choreographed the Hulk's movements.
* The Incredible Hulk movie mentioned above, were actually filmed there instead of Toronto. Basically, Hamilton is doubling (tripling?) for Toronto in these cases.
* The Incredible Hulk movie this happens during the fight between the Hulk and the Abomination.
* The Incredible Hulk movie, with Hulk shielding Betty Ross from a fiery explosion.
* The Incredible Hulk (particularly in the original comics where the Hulk started off as a power hungry sociopath who almost considered killing a teenager who knew who he really was).
* The Incredible Hulk pretty much uses this as a conversation starter.
* The Incredible Hulk, resented it and eventually followed Hulk to that world.
* The Incredible Hulk's enemy the Leader once built a tripod-shaped mech called the Murder Module.
* The Incredible Hulk serum). Similar to the Superman example, despite being the villain, Blonsky looks much cooler simply for being able to go up against the Hulk without being instantly killed (although the point where he abandons his mobility advantage is the point he ends up in a body cast).
* The Incredible Hulk's father). The man who later became the Abomination only received the incomplete formula. He stayed human but clearly went insane.
* The Incredible Hulk's origins deal with Bruce Banner pushing Rick Jones into a trench, whereby Banner absorbed the brunt of the blast, which Rick is not affected by as a result.
* The Incredible Hulk's second issue introduced a race of grody little alien invaders called the Toad Men. We later learned that their race is actually called the Tribbetites. They'd like to be conquerors, but most other civilizations consider them annoying jerks and don't take them very seriously.
* The Incredible Hulk's stinger strongly implies that General Ross was drinking heavily (he is saying "reload" while downing several cups of liquor) after the events of having to let Hulk escape before Tony Stark shows up with the purpose of offending him so much he won't have Blonsky participate in the Avengers initiative.
* The Incredible Hulk's story Future Imperfect has some hints at this. Not as much as you would expect and mostly throwaway lines at a marker square.
* The Incredible Hulk (Stephen Strange having already lived and worked in the city even before moving his residence to New York's Sanctum Santorum).
* The Incredible Hulk story with the Grey Hulk that made up the bulk of the issue). Then the next issue switched things back to the Hulk, and ended with him getting abducted by an organization titled the Pantheon. Then the next issue after that focused on Doc Samson getting sidetracked when he visited an assassin he once knew that was currently on death row, with the next two issues then going back and showing what the Hulk was doing with the Pantheon.
* The Incredible Hulk that was keeping Banner from turning into the Hulk while attacking him).
* The Incredible Hulk, the Abomination catches a rocket out of the air and headbutts it so it would explode on his face. Needless to say, the soldiers who witness it are pretty intimidated, which seems to have been the purpose.

* The Incredible Hulk: The government tried to recreate the super-soldier serum that created Captain America. They tried it on Emil Blonsky, successfully making him stronger, faster, and giving him accelerated healing, allowing him to recover from near-fatal injuries in a day. However, he is still weaker that Captain America, and the serum makes him more deranged and bloodthirsty. Blonsky later tries to add the power of Hulk's blood, resulting in him becoming the Abomnation.
* The Incredible Hulk The Green / Savage Hulk usually has the mentality of a small child, so this means if someone's nice to him, or even just acts nice to him, they've got his undying friendship.
* The Incredible Hulk. The Hulk himself usually isn't a genius (He's not dumb, but he's no Banner) and usually isn't brunet either.
* The Incredible Hulk The Maestro, an evil and insane future version of the Hulk, is balding on top.
* The Incredible Hulk: The military uses giant sound wave cannons to incapacitate the Hulk.
* The Incredible Hulk, the woman he loves, because he's still a target of the military. To twist the knife further for poor Bruce, his second love interest (Black Widow/Natasha Romanov) dies collecting the Soul Stone from Vormir, and despite his best efforts, Bruce can't bring her back with the Infinity Gauntlet.
* The Incredible Hulk. The Woodgod later returns, having used the research of his "parents" to make others like him, a race of animal-people he calls the Changelings.
* The Incredible Hulk, this mentality eventually led to him becoming The Maestro, a superhuman despot.
* The Incredible Hulk. Though some versions of the Hulk are smart. And Bruce Banner is a genius.
* The Incredible Hulk, Tony Stark briefly appears at the end, mentioning the same other heroes that Fury told him about.
* The Incredible Hulk: Ultimate Destruction, and is meant to fight him at set locations when he stops, which is signaled when his lifebar appears. It's possible to catch up to him before that, but the he can't actually be damaged until his lifebar appears.
* The Incredible Hulk: Ultimate Destruction, and punch Hulk-sized enemies far away. There's even a mini-game about seeing how far you can send someone flying by smacking them with a steel girder that Hulk is using like a baseball bat.
* The Incredible Hulk: Ultimate Destruction, Bruce Banner presumes that Emil Blonsky is trying to figure out how the Hulk works in order to make and weaponize gamma mutants. In reality, Blonsky is trying to control his own mutation, which is threatening to drive him mad.
* The Incredible Hulk: Ultimate Destruction has a New Game+ option. All your learned abilities carry over, as do unlocked costumes. Playing through again with the Joe Fixit skin (which makes the Hulk quip and snark constantly, but you probably won't unlock it until after the story) has the bonus of Joe/Hulk making comments during boss fights and such.
* The Incredible Hulk: Ultimate Destruction is a frenetic chase and final boss battle between the Hulk, the Abomination, and General Ross' troops.
* The Incredible Hulk: Ultimate Destruction is pretty darned entertaining, too.
* The Incredible Hulk: Ultimate Destruction, rapidly going from local authorities to the Army to special Hulkbuster divisions equipped specifically to take you down. However, they aren't instakill enemies, just mildly tough; a decently skilled player should have no problem with them whatsoever. And of course, breaking out specialized mecha might seem excessive... if this wasn't the Hulk we were talking about.
* The Incredible Hulk: Ultimate Destruction the Hulk is no mere mindless brute.
* The Incredible Hulk: Ultimate Destruction, whose health bar also doubles as a Critical Mass meter.
* The Incredible Hulk...unless you're a kid who's lost, afraid, or needing help. He'll stop in his tracks to save the poor urchin's day.
* The Incredible Hulk unsynchronized, with body parts changing at different paces.

In one scene, the bones in Bruce's shoulder grow faster than the rest, leaving his skin grotesquely distended for a brief moment.
* The Incredible Hulk was received, and Norton's chances of reprising the role are slim-to-none.
* The Incredible Hulk was renewed for a 5th season, but only 8 episodes were filmed (and aired) before it was unceremoniously cancelled, leaving loyal viewers wondering what happened. Word got out later that it was due to the expense of filming a hero-on-the-run series in different locations every week. Did TPTB not take that into consideration when renewing it in the first place?
* The Incredible Hulk was shot on a stretch of Yonge Street in Toronto, running from the intersection of Yonge & Dundas to about a block north. The Zanzibar strip club is a dead giveaway, as are the spinning records on the side of Sam the Record Man.
* The Incredible Hulk. What could be more useful to some of the most skilled and powerful super heroes in the Marvel Universe than some kid with a motorcycle following them around? Not to mention that he's apparently responsible for Bruce Banner becoming the Hulk. The only reason he's around is because, as his friend, he's one of the only people capable of calming the Hulk down.
* The Incredible Hulk. When Blonsky hit Spars in the face with a chair, the POV was hers and there was a split second of blinding white.
* The Incredible Hulk: when General Ross's soldiers try to take on the Abomination.
* The Incredible Hulk" with a .50 caliber machine gun, despite the fact that it shrugged off a hit from a bazooka.
* The Incredible Hulk wouldn't let him), and on other times Banner knows very well that the Hulk is an uncontrollable being while Ross wishes to find some way to weaponize him, even if it means making Banner a slave.
* The Incredible Journey: During the chapters where the animals are alone, anyway; when humans show up, the perspective tends to shift to them.
* The Incredible Journey. He's a dogfighting veteran who spent his younger days terrorizing the local cats with his right-hand cat and best friend Tao the Siamese, and in his golden years is a loveable goof who simply wants and gets lots of love from humans.
* The Incredible Journey is a goofy, half-blind old bull terrier whose goal in life seems to be to mooch as much love and food from humans as possible. He is also a dog fighting veteran and can still beat up other dogs when he needs to.
* The Incredible Lightness Of Being A Baby nine days before the episode aired.
* The Incredible Machine, but runs in Windows instead of MS-DOS with a new interface and CD audio.
* The Incredible Machine is to place the last missing domino for this to happen.
* The Incredible Melting Man insisted that the director make it a straight horror movie. The result is that there are many odd scenes that clash horribly with the film's serious tone, which—along with the film's ridiculous title—are all holdovers of the original comedic premise.
* The Incredible Melting Man: Ted Nelson is shot and killed while trying and failing to convince a security guard that the melting monster is a man in need of rescue.
* The Incredible Melting Man tells the unfortunate tale of an astronaut who is slowly, painfully, experiencing this effect.
* The Incredible Melting Man: The melting man kills an elderly couple when he creeps into the back of their car before they come back.
* The Incredible Melting Man). The movie started off as a parody, but the distributors wanted it to be a serious horror film and exorcised all of the comedy from the final cut.
* The Incredible Melting Man, when the studio insisted that he play it all totally straight against his wishes.
* The Incredible Mr. Brisby monologues a little too close to the fireplace. Due to his being in a wheelchair, his legs catch on fire and he screams "I've come aflame again!" as Ling-Ling, his "companda", swats at him and stomps the fire out.
* The Incredible Mr. Limpet. At the beginning of the movie Henry Limpet's brother-in-law George Stickle has just been promoted to Machinist's Mate Second Class in the U.S. Navy, and shows off the stripes on his uniform sleeve to Henry. He receives a promotion to Chief Petty Officer during the course of the film and does it again.

* The Incredible Mr. Limpet. A wolf pack of Nazi submarines has fired torpedoes at an Allied convoy. The title character discovers that the torpedoes have been modified to follow his "thrum" (the booming call he can make). He uses this to make the torpedoes follow him away from the ships and hit the U-boats that fired them.
* The Incredible Mr. Limpet cartoon fish who can produce a "whale buster" strong enough to fight enemy submarines.
* The Incredible Mr. Limpet has a bit of this. All the underwater sequences were animated, but there were a few scenes where Limpet (a man turned into a cartoon fish) peeks his head out of the water to converse with live-action characters.
* The Incredible Mr. Limpet has the announcer proclaim it to be "the most incredibly delightful movie about a man who turns into a fish that you'll see this year."
* The Incredible Mr. Limpet Mr. Limpet—a former human, now a fish—uses his "thrum" call to guide Allied subs to German subs in order to sink them. The Germans develop a special torpedo which homes in on thrums.
* The Incredible Mr. Limpet. The main action of the film is in the years 1941-1945.
* The Incredible Mr. Limpet. The method Admiral Spewter suggests to turn Henry Limpet back into a human being.
* The Incredible Mr. Limpet was only a modest success at the box office and receives mixed reviews from critics, but TV and home video turned it into a family favorite.
* The Incredible Mr. Limpet, when Crusty meets fish!Henry Limpet, he refers to him as "Flatbush" (after the Brooklyn community where Henry lived when he was a human) saying that he had seen "flat fish" but never a "flat bush".
* "The incredible novel based on one of the most popular stories of all time"
* The Incredible Reversing Peppermints; eating one completely reverses your personality, eating another reverses the reversal. Which does admittedly make a certain amount of sense, at least compared to a few other examples on this page.
* The Incredibles about her husband leaving her because she has settled into the role of housewife, which translates into picking up laundry near a pool while Bob is being held aloft on a couch and fed grapes by beautiful women, ending with her getting sucked into a washing machine. The scene was eventually cut in favor of making Helen's worries about Bob's fidelity into subtext.
* The Incredibles actually try to fight intelligently, aiming for the joints rather than trying to shoot its near-perfectly spherical hull.
* The Incredibles) after a complicated mishap gets him fired from his insurance job, and he can't bring himself to correct his wife's assumption that he was promoted. He uses the money he earns from Mirage's group to support his family, while spending his time "at work" getting back into condition.
* The Incredibles: After Bob gets home after a frustrating day, he accidentally slams the car door so hard the window shatters, causing a mild freakout. He lifts the car over his head about to do something, but notices a neighborhood kid watching him. As the two stare at each other, a piece of glass falls out of the window, then Bob puts the car down and goes into the house.
* The Incredibles: After dropping from a cruising altitude, landing on a crowded interstate, taking out half a dozen other cars, somersaulting down the road, and stopping in a vacant parking spot...
* The Incredibles: After retiring from his "Mr. Incredible" identity, Bob Parr drives a blue microcar that he barely fits in and stalls while ascending his driveway. After he finds work with Mirage, he replaces it with a jet black sports car.
* The Incredibles against a mook, it's largely ineffective due to his small mass and the short distance of his punches not allowing for much acceleration time. However, when he later speeds directly into the mook trying to shoot Violet, he's able to knock him completely off his feet and send him flying.

* The Incredibles a kid and not an adult in a kid's body. Mr. Incredible returns the stock response.
* The Incredibles and appears to outweigh her by about 200 pounds, this would be the aforementioned fetish appeal usage.
* The Incredibles and escape into a cave. The last thing he did before dying was to use his laser vision to carve the password for Syndrome's computer into the cave walls, hoping someone would find it and use it to defeat the villain.
* The Incredibles, and features a strong mid-sixties take on how wonderful the future nearly was.
* The Incredibles, and organises a movie date with him at the end of the film.
* The Incredibles, and quit hiding behind her hair. In the same movie, getting back in the hero game inspires her bored father Bob to slim down (and bulk up) and have more fun with his family. Incidentally, the guy at school Violet was pining after only notices her post-adventure. Rather understandable, since before she only had the confidence to lurk behind the scenery staring at him and now she can talk to him.
* The Incredibles and relocating the Supers and their families in such event.
* The Incredibles and the supers being forced into civilian identities.
* The Incredibles are all well known. This bites them when they start getting sued by an angry populace and they're all forced into hiding.
* The Incredibles as the only family member without a superpower. At the end, however, it is revealed that he can turn into flames, metal, and a demon. (In a bonus short on the DVD, he is also shown levitating, teleporting, spitting acidic saliva, and many others.)
* The Incredibles, at one point serving as the "automated captain" for the plane Mr. Incredible takes on his second mission.
* The Incredibles at the rail yard. Elastigirl finds the newly-buff Bob rather hot.
* The Incredibles: A villain named Larry claims to have raised two brothers and three sisters.
* The Incredibles being unable to find a child actor who sounded like a younger version of Lee.
* The Incredibles blames himself for spurning Buddy (later known as Syndrome), his biggest fan. Later, Buddy turns to evil. Subverted as Buddy points out that Mr. Incredible hadn't given him a single thought until he became Syndrome.
* The Incredibles, Bob goes to see super-suit designer Edna Mode to repair his old costume after it gets damaged on a mission. She claims that it's a "hobo suit" and says he needs a new outfit, leaving Bob to wonder where he can possibly get one. Edna immediately agrees to make one for him, all the while insisting that Bob is "making" her do so; Bob himself isn't trying to be tricky, as he genuinely just wanted Edna to patch up the damage.
* The Incredibles: Bob/Mr. Incredible is almost out the door to save a mugging victim when his boss threatens to fire him if he leaves. He lets go of the now crumpled doorknob.
* The Incredibles: Bob Parr/Mr. Incredible is a 6'7 very buff man endowed with superstrength. As a superhero he's certainly not above using his strength in battle, and his anger can sometimes get the better of him, but he still has a very sweet, goofy personality and is friendly and welcoming to everyone he meets until they give him a reason not to be. He genuinely loves helping others and is shown to be very kind, gentle, and loving towards his wife and children.
* The Incredibles. Bob was faithful the whole time though and simply wanted to be a superhero again, still in love with his wife. Bob even calls Helen "the perfect woman".
* The Incredibles, Bomb Voyage's grenade destroys the El Train tracks right as a train is rounding the corner.
* The Incredibles Brad Bird wound up voicing Edna Mode. He originally planned to cast Lily Tomlin, but she said he did it perfectly himself when demonstrating what she should sound like.
* The Incredibles, but again, the two of them are going on an official date at the very end.

* The Incredibles by dozens of unremovable "balloons" of black goo that expand and completely engulf him.
* The Incredibles." By the end of the movie, this all ends after Mr. Incredible, his family, and Frozone save everyone from the Omnidroid and Syndrome.
* The Incredibles by the similarly-aged Huck Milner, since Fox was too old to reprise the role.
* The Incredibles (by video). Mr. Incredible is in a rush to find a pencil to write down what it says about his next mission before it self-destructs (although he didn't know about the self-destruction at the time, only that the recording would be important and "will not be repeated"), and then it explodes in his trophy room after helpfully informing him of this and giving up the contact number. He opens the door to escape the smoke, setting the fire sprinklers off and causing the rest of his family to yell at him from different rooms.
* The Incredibles, clothes looking strange, and animators screwing around) in a DVD feature titled "Incredi-Blunders!"
* The Incredibles, Dash gets in trouble for placing a tack on the teacher's chair. His father is more impressed by the fact that Dash managed to avoid being caught on a hidden camera than upset about the prank.
* The Incredibles, Dash has an innocent, child-like demeanour and Jack-Jack is one of the cutest babies around. It helps that they all look adorable.
* The Incredibles: Dash is overconfident and somewhat standoffish, while Violet is soft-spoken and shy.
* The Incredibles, Dash is practically a spitting image of his dad while Jack-Jack resembles his mother more than his siblings.
* The Incredibles: Dash lands on a goon's hovercraft and starts giving him rapid-fire punches, but suddenly stops with a terrified look on his face. The goon, believing he caught Dash off his guard, knocks him off the hovercraft with a single punch... only to turn around and notice at the last second that his hovercraft is heading straight towards a cliff, and the hovercraft promptly explodes on impact.
* The Incredibles: Dash lets out one in the cave when Helen says Violet is in charge while she goes to look for Bob. Helen does one after Mirage says Violet and Dash triggered an intruder alert and Syndrome's guards are after them.
* The Incredibles. Dash was more interested in the socialization than the actual race.
* The Incredibles, daytime-lawyer/nighttime-hero Gazerbeam fought as hard as he could for the rights of his masked compatriots.
* The Incredibles deconstructs this trope as the film is about a family of Superheroes and the problems that this can bring into the family, especially to the children.
* The Incredibles demonstrated what it should sound like, only for Tomlin to remark that he did the voice so well he should have the part instead of her.
* The Incredibles did this for most of the movie (showing shyness in her case). The last few scenes show her with her hair back, symbolizing the fact that she's come to terms with herself and is more open now.
* The Incredibles did this to his teacher at school. The teacher claims that he caught him on camera, but when the tape plays, Dash moves too fast to actually be seen, which allows Dash to get off easy.
* The Incredibles: Discusssed and lampshaded at how villains typically gloat over near victory long enough for the heroes to gain the upper hand.
* The Incredibles due to him not valuing her life when Mr. Incredible threatened to kill her. She helps the Incredibles escape and make it back to Metroville to confront Syndrome and the Omnidroid v.10, thereby playing a significant part in his downfall.
* The Incredibles. During the Parr family's dinner fight, they hear the doorbell ring and proceed to put themselves into order to make sure their super identity remains hidden. Thankfully for them, it just turns out to be Lucius Best, who is a super friend of the family's who is in on the secret.
* The Incredibles each have two Latin Spanish dubs: one in Mexico, and another in Argentina.

* The Incredibles effect on Dash, but the moment her power-channeling goggles are broken, it doesn't take much to bring her down.
* The Incredibles, Elastigirl protects her kids this way in an aircraft that was hit by missiles. It helps she can form her body into any shape and that earlier her super suit was specifically shown to be able to withstand direct missile impacts.
* The Incredibles: Elastigirl, Violet, Mirage and Voyd all have legs that are long and/or shapely.
* The Incredibles enough to keep calm and try to assess the situation. Her kids, on the other hand, are freaking out. Not only does she tell them to stop panicking, she then threatens to ground them both for a month if they don't stop. Surprisingly, that seems to work.
* The Incredibles enters the picture, which forces Helen to go on a rescue mission due to Bob being taken captive.
* The Incredibles-esque cartoon featuring Mr. Incredible and his "sidekick".
* The Incredibles features actress Laura Morante as Helen and model, singer and TV host Amanda Lear as Edna Mode.
* The Incredibles fits the trope very well. And, by extension, Elastigirl and Frozone.
* The Incredibles fly?". An early idea for the film had Mr. Incredible as the only member of the Parr family that couldn't fly (and being a bit self-conscious about it).
* The Incredibles former superheroes except for Frozone, Elastigirl, and Mr. Incredible himself. Genocide makes for a fairly bleak subject in a family-friendly movie.
* The Incredibles for the part, he provided placeholder dialog made using his own voice in an attempt to demonstrate what sort of voice he was hoping to get. Tomlin stated that they didn't need her as they already had the character's voice.
* The Incredibles from her mother about it, she is seen practicing intently on the campfire.
* The Incredibles: Frozone lands on one during the killer robot battle.
* The Incredibles, Frozone never actually says "Woman, where is my supersuit?" The proper lines are "Honey, where's my supersuit?", and "You tell me where my suit is, woman!"
* The Incredibles Gazerbeam is only seen alive in a flashback where he's a guest at the Parrs' wedding — for about half a second.
* The Incredibles generally tells, does not represent neutrality). The final Omnidroid, on the other hand, plays the trope straight by having a bright red eye to match its black metal body.
* The Incredibles get to Nomanisan Island by air... then go under water to dock.
* The Incredibles had a variation. The volcano on Syndrome's island never erupts, but the rocket that Syndrome launches from inside the dormant cone is certainly reminiscent of an eruption, and it menaces Dash and Violet in much the same way.
* The Incredibles has a "bloopers" segment as a DVD extra. Some of the segments are this trope (like a bit where Elastigirl swings from the monorail car and smacks into a pylon), while others are legitimate animation errors (like a bit where the physics go wonky and make Violet's hair fly around wildly). None of these bits are fully rendered, and the deliberate jokes are little more than animatics. The whole thing comes across like a compilation the animators made to amuse themselves, which somehow got released to the public afterwards.
* The Incredibles has about half-a-dozen Easter eggs, one of which is on Disc 1. One of the more awesome ones is a montage of every door, button, and explosion in the movie—set to the Anvil Chorus for added awesomeness.
* The Incredibles has been using the latter name since she was created roughly 40 years before the former. The dispute was amicably settled out of court.
* The Incredibles has Mirage trying to pull this on Syndrome when Mr. Incredible, consumed with grief with the possible death of his entire family, and enraged at Syndrome shooting down their plane, lunges at him while confined to energy wires. Syndrome repays her by daring Mr. Incredible to kill her when he claims that he could crush her like a toothpick.

* The Incredibles has two Brazilian Portuguese dubs: one for theatrical release and early home video releases, and another for television and later home video releases. A few voice actors were replaced, such as Mr. Incredible, Dash, Frozone and Syndrome. The second dub is now considered official, given most actors returned for the sequel.
* The Incredibles has Violet Parr who is depicted as gloomy, uncertain and socially withdrawn — preferring to hide behind her long raven hair.
* The Incredibles have two female members, being Elastigirl and Violet.
* The Incredibles. He also doesn't seem particularly interested in her but in her offer which allows him to return to his glory days as a superhero.
* The Incredibles. He is an insurance exec who is determined to deny as many insurance claims as he can, regardless of how legitimate they are as per their customers' contracts. So, if Bob Parr really wanted to strike back at this bully, he could remember that Huph is making himself liable for a major Breach of Contract lawsuit.
* The Incredibles: Helen picks up the landline to overhear a secret conversation between Bob and Mirage to figure out that the former has actually been superheroing again instead of working at his old job.
* The Incredibles: her name gives it away. As part of her motif, her force fields are purple, as well as some of her items of clothing. Even her hair and eyes are a shade of purple.
* The Incredibles. He's frequently seen as a horrifying example about toxic fandom, an issue that's gotten more alarming thanks to social media making it easier for these fans to directly harass actors and other creators.
* The Incredibles, his failure to achieve his goal was because he focused entirely on the "super" part of being a superhero that involved having extraordinary powers and abilities while never giving any thought towards the "hero" part of it that motivated his ex-idols to use their powers for the greater good. As a child, he believed Mr. Incredible's refusal to accept him as his sidekick was due to him lacking any legitimate superpowers rather than being an over-impulsive, reckless youth who kept putting himself in harm's way despite Mr. I's efforts to dissuade him. This mentality persisted all the way to adulthood, as shown when Mr. Incredible calls him out for murdering retired superheroes so he can pretend to be one, he rebuffs that his technology made him real enough to capture the entire Parr family and get as far as he did rather than acknowledge how he was willing to become a mass-murdering lunatic for the sake of living out his self-centered fantasy.
* The Incredibles His father was impressed, while his mother was definitely not.
* The Incredibles his government salary was definitely a factor in him taking it and lying about a "company conference" to his wife.
* The Incredibles. His hair wasn't the only thing about him that was loco.
* The Incredible Shrinking Man shrink giving his body a chance to adapt.
* The Incredible Shrinking Man, the much-diminished protagonist gets stuck in a basement and has to raid a mousetrap for its cheese to avoid starving.
* The Incredible Shrinking Man, the title character encounters an ordinary-sized spider which is huge to him. The film couldn't afford a fake spider, so they just used a real one filmed up close. Sweet dreams.
* The Incredible Shrinking Man: when Scott Carey shrinks to six inches and has to live in the dollhouse, guess what animal breaks his dollhouse apart and tries to eat him?
* The Incredible Shrinking Woman ends with Lily Tomlin, restored to normal size, hearing the sound of fabric tearing. She looks down to see her (growing) foot break out of her shoe, smiles, and rolls her eyes as if to say it.
* The Incredible Shrinking Woman housewife Pat falls into a garbage disposal. It gets worse when the maid, who is oblivious to the situation because she's listening to a radio very loudly, starts scraping off the plates into the disposal.
* The Incredible Shrinking Woman was nearly drowned in an unfortunate close encounter with a "Betsy Wetsy" doll.
* The Incredibles. In an argument between Helen and Dash, Dash, who wants to try out for sports, says that Bob says that their superpowers make them special. Helen replies "Everyone's special, Dash", to which Dash snidely remarks "Which is another way of saying no one is." Later in the film, Syndrome reveals this to be the final step of his lifelong plan to get rid of superheroes: "And when I'm old and I've had my fun, I'll sell my inventions so that everyone can be superheroes. Everyone can be a super! And when everyone's super, no one will be."

* The Incredibles. Interestingly, they start off with attitudes fairly realistic to children their age, just with superpowers. But by the end of the movie, the whole family is happy to take baby Jack-Jack with them on life-or-death fights against super-villains.
* The Incredibles. In the prologue, they almost miss their own wedding because they were fighting crime. However, they don't actually team up on-screen until the climax - the closest they get for most of the movie is Elastagirl punching out the mugger Mr. Incredible was holding (from about twenty feet away).
* The Incredibles in trouble" but even though frustrated at Bob's actions, he still offers to help Bob just once more "for old times' sake". Later when Syndrome is revealed as a super-villain and terrorist, Rick takes the pragmatic action of immediately freezing all of his assets.
* The Incredibles: Invoked. The opening and closing themes are animated in a shiny, '60s and '70s deco art.
* The Incredibles is a jar full of deformed bullets with the label "Bullets that bounced off of me".
* The Incredibles is an aversion. Fans have argued for years as to if it's even in the film, but Brad Bird himself confirmed that it wasn't.
* The Incredibles is certainly a cut from this mold. Granted, Bob isn't a great employee for an insurance firm (given his conscience won't let him deny any claims), but Huph's pure bullying nature and reactions of offended dignity point to Bob not quite being the problem here. He even gives Bob a pre-planned disciplinary speech much like the "monologues" given by the super-villains Bob used to fight as Mr. Incredible. While cartoonish, his comeuppance is way too satisfying to watch. The commentary on the DVD reveals that director Brad Bird, who had been fired from his first two jobs, had middle-management bosses like Huph.
* The Incredibles is mentioned in her NSA profile to have been pursued by many top superheroes but would turn them down as she preferred her independence. However, she eventually fell madly in love with superhero Mr. Incredible and married him, having three kids with him after their forced retirement.
* The Incredibles isn't strong enough... to lose her or the kids again (as he thought they'd been killed earlier in the film). Violet and Helen still fight anyway.
* The Incredibles: Jack-Jack is generally a very happy baby, smiling, cooing, and giggling at everything. The only times he isn't happy are when he is denied more cookies or when Syndrome tried to kidnap him.
* The Incredibles, Jack-Jack is mostly oblivious to any hardship his family goes through. Being that he's a baby, he doesn't really understand the trouble he's causing with his superpowers and thinks it's just a fun game.
* The Incredibles, juxtaposing larger-than-life superheroes with mundane family life. For example:
* The Incredibles kept this up by recasting him with Huck Milner. Jack-Jack also was "voiced" by a series of babies.
* The Incredibles lose control of it, but because it was too single-minded in neutralizing threats to consider him its master.
* The Incredibles — under a volcano. Complete with monorail, underground rocket launch site, underwater docks for the subplanes, and lava walls.
* The Incredibles Mezmerella capable of inducing this effect with her hypnotic powers.
* The Incredibles movies, but it has some elements of Martini, like gadgets or hot girls.
* The Incredibles. Mr. Huph kind of deserved it (given that he just forced Bob to leave a citizen getting mugged just outside the building), but Bob still gets fired.

* The Incredibles' Mr. Incredible a lot during the Glory Days — one of his souvenirs is a jar full of deformed bullets, labeled 'bullets that bounced off me'.
* The Incredibles, Mr. Incredible begs Syndrome not to shoot down his family's airplane.
* The Incredibles. Mr. Incredible gets into trouble with his boss at an insurance company for helping claimants maneuver their way through the system.
* The Incredibles: Mr. Incredible gets sued for "saving someone who didn't want to be saved", the person in question being a man who had jumped off a building to commit suicide. This leads to more lawsuits and the eventual government banning of superheroes. In the sequel, the family members are arrested at gunpoint and brought to the police station after another act of heroism. Although they were released from custody shortly afterward.
* The Incredibles. Mr Incredible has been invited to dinner by Mirage. Peeking through the door, he sees her talking to her mysterious employer (though he can only be partially seen). So Mirage won't know he's been spying, he then pretends he's just arrived when she goes to the door.
* The Incredibles, Mr. Incredible has difficulty putting on his belt because of obesity. When he finally gets it buckled, it suddenly comes undone and rockets across the room. (This scene was not included in the actual film.)
* The Incredibles, Mr. Incredible has puny legs, whether his torso is flabby or muscular.
* The Incredibles: Mr. Incredible hides behind the skeleton of Gazerbeam to escape Syndrome's seeker robot — the robot scans the skeleton, assumes it's him and flies off to report his demise.
* The Incredibles: Mr. Incredible (in the teaser trailer) tries sucking his gut in an attempt to put his belt on. It works...for a few seconds.
* The Incredibles: Mr. Incredible keeps a bulletin board full of clippings from his superhero days.
* The Incredibles, Mr. Incredible takes out a guard with a perfect head shot from over a hundred yards away.
* The Incredibles, Mr Incredible uses the ejector seat to get Buddy out of his car.
* The Incredibles: Nice turnaround for Violet, who was shy and insecure during the first half of the film. She develops into one during the course of the film, mentally and physically.
* The Incredibles. Now feeling twenty years younger, the fight goes back in Mr. Incredible's favor.
* The Incredibles of the Omnidroid's own detached claw only gives him one chance to take it out.
* The Incredibles on a rocket and taking down a giant robot, Dash shouts, "That was the best vacation ever!"
* The Incredibles on his tuxedo leads her to the conclusion that Bob is cheating on her.
* The Incredibles on how Mr. Incredible giving Buddy, his #1 fan, the cold shoulder eventually turned him into Syndrome.
* The Incredibles, Organa becomes a much better mother after being turned into a monkey.
* The Incredibles or if Romeo, the new villain, stole their powers. On the one hand, they were all coughing, sneezing, and (with the exception of Violet) sleepy, but the doctor didn't recognise the disease and Romeo was acting suspicious and able to bring them back to normal.
* The Incredibles originally rips out its own innards while attempting to kill Mr. Incredible, who has snuck inside the droid, having realized that “the only thing strong enough to penetrate it is itself”.
* The Incredibles, picks up from this exact place in the story, while ending on a similarly cliff-hanging note at the end.
* The Incredibles: Pictured on this page is Helen Parr, a.k.a. Elastigirl, who can still kick butt with the rest of her family despite having more than a decade of hiatus.

* The Incredibles, pretty much all of the hovercraft are destroyed by crashing into trees or rocks.
* The Incredibles, punches out Mirage (thinking she's his mistress) and calls Bob "a lousy, lying, unfaithful creep" as he pulls her in for a kiss.
* The Incredibles puts on his costume over whatever he's wearing. Another two machines covers his hands and pops his gloves on immediately thereafter. (Never mind that Mr. Incredible fighting crime in a tux would have looked ten times more awesome...)
* The Incredibles: Rise of the Underminer part got a nice Lampshade Hanging, where Mr. Incredible spots the first robot enemies in the tutorial stage and quips, "I guess that means we don't have to play nice!"
* The Incredibles: Robert "Bob" Parr, a.k.a. Mr. Incredible (also a literal/biological father).
* The Incredibles scheme, we see that it quickly analyzes Syndrome's attack and realizes that Syndrome's remote control was giving him the advantage. The robot quickly negates the problem by blasting the remote off of Syndrome's arm.
* The Incredibles, several items on Bob's wall of memorabilia are notes from innocents he personally saved. A bus is involved. (Earlier in the film, we see him save a train full of commuters about to speed off a broken elevated track destroyed indirectly by Bomb Voyage.)
* The Incredibles She's played by the director Brad Bird himself because he couldn't find anyone else who could pull off the Japanese/German accent he wanted.
* The Incredibles since his glory days, and his bigger gut gets stuck in the pod door. After a few failed attempts, the grunt cranks up the power on the mechanical chair and just holds the button down until Bob pops in. Then when the pod lands on the island, Bob has just as much trouble getting out of it. He gives up on trying to fit through the door, and simply breaks the pod into pieces from the inside.
* The Incredibles speech from Helen, she develops a much greater sense of self-esteem, starts to enjoy having superpowers, becomes friendlier and more forthcoming towards the others and is eventually confident enough to talk to Tony. She even forgives her father for interfering with her relationship with Tony.
* The Incredibles successfully captures the "superhero team as a family" dynamic that the Fantastic Four is best-known for in the comics, which three live-acton attempts (thus far) at adapting the FF to film by 20th Century Fox and Marvel have failed to fully accomplish.
* The Incredibles suggests in corresponding theory, the lawsuit happens before Good Samaritan Laws were put in place.)
* The Incredibles superheroes being seen as a liability and forced into retirement.
* The Incredibles superhero. It's considerably more prominent in the prologue before he gains weight after a decade and a half without superheroing. Syndrome has one as well, but he's evil.
* The Incredibles, Supers go through most of their lives just like everyone else.
* The Incredibles super-suits are similar one piece outfits with a contrasting "gloves, boots and briefs" motif, Helen and Violet's outfits have bikini-style "briefs and thigh-high "boots" and elbow-length "gloves".
* The Incredibles swoops in and "saves" everybody. At least, that's the plan. Turned out it had gotten so smart it figured out that blasting Syndrome's remote will let it win the battle.
* The Incredibles, Syndrome continues to talk about Mr. Incredible as though he were a character in a favorite comic book, critiquing his actions in terms that will be very familiar to anybody who has ever been in a comic book store.
* The Incredibles, Syndrome intones like a pitchman when he introduces the new Omnidroid (and his new self) to Mr. Incredible. "It's bigger! It's badder!"
* The Incredibles Syndrome's computer file on Elastigirl says that her last superhero activity (and therefore, the rough date of the Superhero Relocation Act) was in 1955. During the movie Bob reads a newspaper dated Monday, May 16th, 1962. This implies an 8-year gap between the opening scene and the Superhero Relocation Act.
* The Incredibles: Syndrome's in three steps: Lure the supers to their doom, pretend to be a super with technology and evil robots, profit by selling the technology to everyone and thereby making it impossible to be a super.

* The Incredibles. Syndrome started his villainy with the Omnidroid 1 and had never stopped using Omnidroids for the rest of his life. Each time a superhero was able to defeat an Omnidroid, Syndrome would observe what caused it to lose, then build another Omnidroid to cover those vulnerabilities. By the time Mr. Incredible fought an Omnidroid, it was Syndrome's 8th. When he returns, Syndrome's made a 9th one, and after that beats him, he decides to incorporate its design into the 10th and final model.
* The Incredibles: Syndrome used these on his remote volcanic island hideout
* The Incredibles] telling an old lady how to avoid excessive bureaucracy).
* The Incredibles than Bob without realizing it (this was done by the animators so Bob wouldn't look like a big man trying to bully a small woman).
* The Incredibles: The bad guy makes giant robots to destroy all the Supers, improving his design each time a super manages to destroy one.
* The Incredibles the hole on the Omnidroid - revealing it's been defeated.
* The Incredibles: The kids stow away on the jet when Helen goes to rescue Bob. By the time she finds out they are there, it's too late — their plane is shot down.
* The Incredibles. The "note" is in the form of a digital tablet with a video message inviting Mr. Incredible to do secret superhero work.
* The Incredibles, the Omnidroid acts somewhat as one when it retracts its claws. It somehow can turn directions as a smooth metal sphere, and the fact that it is at least five stories tall adds to the "Destructive" bit.
* The Incredibles, the origin story of the villain Syndrome is that as a boy he was a big fan of Mr Incredible, however his over-enthusiasm got in the way of his hero's crime-fighting activities and was angrily told off. As an adult, he seeks revenge on Mr Incredible and by extension all the other supers as a tech genius supervillain.
* The Incredibles. The Parr family is basically your average family, but with superpowers, and all the typical concerns are still there... at least in part due to the superhero relocation program, which prevents them from doing any actual supering (not that this stops them from using their powers in, say, typical dinner-table squabbling).
* The Incredibles, the Parrs spar at the dinner table using their powers, only to revert to casual positions once they hear a knock at the door.
* The Incredibles the robot itself. When Bob does just that, the Omnidroid attacks itself to get at him, eventually pulling out its own core.
* The Incredibles. The sequence ends with this quote: "The Incredibles — no sequence unexploded."
* The Incredibles: The teacher tries to catch Dash by taping him. When he shows it to Mrs. Parr and the Principal, they only see a quick blink in the film. The teacher is dismayed, and the implication is he played it over and over to spot that tiny blink before he brought it into the office.
* The Incredibles, they finally get together at the end of the sequel.
* The Incredibles: This is a defining trait of Bob; he's determined to use his powers to help others even if it he has to break the law to do it. Best exemplified in this conversation with Frozone:
* The Incredibles, this is what happens to Underminer when he objects to Xerek using him and the Incredibles-decorated mecha as a punching bag in a large scheme to discredit the supers.
* The Incredibles. This seems to bring to mind the "ice sheath" technique Iceman uses in the X-Men comics, as mentioned above.
* The Incredibles. Though he is getting on in years and has become more cynical with time, Mr. Incredible is characterized as a stand-up, classic superhero in many ways. Dash inherits his father's blond hair, and evolves into a hero.
* The Incredibles to carve the word "Kronos" into the wall before he died.
* The Incredibles today, but I think it's time we wind down now," as she releases them all. Although Elastigirl may have known what Violet was up to, she just wanted to hear the whole apology.

* The Incredibles to discredit the supers further had two key components: An adapted use of the Omnidroid technology to create a bipedal giant mecha and the preserved brain of psychic superhero Everseer, who was one of the first victims of Syndrome's Omnidroid series, to act as a living psychic amplifier to enhance the abilities of another telepath/mind controller, Mezmerella.
* The Incredibles to give the policy holders the information they need.
* The Incredibles to harass his teacher while seemingly standing still. Even when the teacher catches it on video, it just looks like a glitch.
* The Incredibles Tony Rydinger, who is terrified and scrambling to dodge flung cars and hide behind or under any cover he can get.
* The Incredibles to play a prank on his teacher during class. It's heavily implied that Dash has done this before.
* The Incredibles to Syndrome. She serves as his second-in-command and plays an integral part in his plans by luring superheroes to his island to fight the Omnidroid.
* The Incredibles towards a mugging occurring right outside his window and threatens to fire Bob if the latter tries to intervene.
* The Incredibles used to be this for Mr. Incredible. He didn't take rejection well.
* The Incredibles, Violet becomes this for Dash and Jack-Jack once she gets over her personal issues.
* The Incredibles, Violet can make herself invisible, but when hiding in a river, a rather clever Mook throws some sand upstream of her last known position, allowing the distorted flow to reveal her.
* The Incredibles. Violet is much taller than her brother Dash, though it is justified since Violet is four years older than Dash.
* The Incredibles: Violet is the quiet one in a family full of energetic and loud people.
* The Incredibles was a Super; his power was the ability to make that hair stand up. Either that, or he's secretly a Saiyan, since his hairstyle matches Vegeta's exactly.
* The Incredibles was originally supposed to be drifting forlornly upwards in that shot, making it look a little pointless without it.
* The Incredibles; we learn he plays sports and music and works part-time at his parents' diner, but he still exists solely as Violet's love interest.
* The Incredibles, we see Frozone fighting a villain in a helicopter as the main character Mr. Incredible carries out his own string of heroic deeds.
* The Incredibles when Bob kisses Helen while she's outside watering and the hose sprays water on them.
* The Incredibles when Elastigirl and her kids drop out of the airplane. All three fall at the same rate.
* The Incredibles when he gets informed that his family was killed, he promptly grabs an approaching Mirage upon being freed and nearly strangles her to death in rage over what happened to his wife and children.
* The Incredibles when Mr. Incredible and Frozone are accidentally caught by police in a jewelry store while wearing ski masks.
* The Incredibles: When Mr. Incredible fights the Omnidroid for the first time on the island, the robot shortly tries to crush him by retracting its members into a perfect sphere and rolling through the jungle. Mr. Incredible does the sensible thing and jumps out of the way, but the Omnidroid is a learning robot, and so somehow steers its sphere form towards him.
* The Incredibles, when Mr. Incredible flirts with Elastigirl when briefly distracted by some unfortunate events on the way to his wedding. The subversion being that when he gets to the wedding, he turns out to be marrying her "mild-mannered alter ego", and the two of them already clearly know the other's superhero identity. Apparently they just flirt like they don't know each other's secret identity in costume because they like it.
* The Incredibles: When Mr. Incredible meets Buddy, he calls him "Brody".

* The Incredibles where an alien virus causes Jack Jack to spread his powers among dozens of criminals.
* The Incredibles, wherein Lightning once again challenged Chick Hicks for the Piston Cup, and, unlike in the movie, succeeds in winning it.
* The Incredibles, where she learns to use her force fields offensively, such as when she used them to hit a hypnotised Voyd so that she could prevent being hypnotised herself.
* The Incredibles, where the Parrs each find out at different points. First is Bob, then Dash and Violet around the middle of the movie, and finally Helen at the climax.
* The Incredibles. Whether a super succeeds or fails against the Omnidroid, Syndrome still gets to collect the data from the battle, and due to the scenario presented, no one thinks there's a need to question the droid's source.
* The Incredibles, which was made after Disney bought Marvel. Characters there mention "superheroes" as much as they do "supers".
* The Incredibles, while Mr. Incredible is on Nomanisan island he discovers the skeletal remains of a previous superhero called Gazerbeam in a cavern. The sight of the bones makes Mr. Incredible recoil in horror, before he discovers that Gazerbeam carved into the walls the password for Syndrome's database.
* The Incredibles, while she is still shown to get easily frustrated and even gives frequent snarky lines, she is shown to be much more caring and compassionate to those she loves.
* The Incredibles, who is a superhero not only because of his powers, but because he wants to help people, as shown by the way he assists a little old lady when he's working in insurance.
* The Incredibles, with each fight being nearly identical and lasting an eternity). It's not the worst licensed game ever, but it's not as great as it could be, either.
* The Incredibles with Jack-Jack in that, as a toddler, his "berserker rage" is throwing a temper tantrum. However, the nature of his powers is such that when he has a tantrum he transforms into a red demonic imp form that has no compunctions against launching onto Bob's arm and gnawing upon it to vent his frustration at being denied a cookie.
* The Incredibles, with many further parallels. Both even include a reference to a hero dying because their cape got snagged on something.
* The Incredibles with Violet. She hides behind her hair for most of the movie, but when she gains confidence in herself and her powers, begins to wear it back.
* The Incredibles would lampshade this interpretation with "He's a nerd who loves something so much, that when it didn't live up to his expectations he declared war on it!"
* The Incredible Toon Machine. Drop some food, usually an egg, in front of him, and he'll start walking on his treadmill.
* The Incredible World of Horace Ford then beat him up for not inviting them to his birthday party.
* The Incredible Worlds of Wally McDoogle by trying to fix all three devices at the same time. Granted, he's supposed to be insanely klutzy. Enough so that its surprising that he, his family and his friends are even still alive after five minutes.
* The Incredible Worlds of Wally McDoogle, played for laughs in Wally's superhero stories. The hero is normally too dumb to live and forgets he even has super strength. They will often mess with the villain's machine, and make it worse. The villain will then have to fix it.
* The incredibly buff Germany appears shirtless quite a few times in the anime, and often in sleeveless shirts.
* the incredibly convoluted pre-decimalization coinage that Britain phased out in the 70s.

* The Incredibly Strange Creatures Who Stopped Living and Became Mixed-Up Zombies
* The Incredibly Strange Creatures Who Stopped Living And Became Mixed-Up Zombies.
* The Incredibly Strange Creatures Who Stopped Living and Became Mixed-Up Zombies, often considered one of the worst movies of all time, is set in a carnival where patrons are transformed into zombies. The film actually features surprisingly few zombies and much, much, MUCH more bad singing than would be expected.
* The Incredibly Thrilling Investigation of Storm Kicker is tortured, it's still a monster. It doesn't really matter why, exactly, the rusalka is enslaving and killing innocent people, only that it is in fact doing these things.
* The Incredibly True Adventure of Two Girls in Love ends with Randy and Evie, the film's main characters, hugging and kissing in front of an group of people who are arguing at the two, which all started with them running away from Evie's mom, who got mad at them for ruining the kitchen by making a huge meal the preceding night. What happens to Randy and Evie is never shown.
* The Incredibly True Adventure of Two Girls in Love falls in love with another girl after she visits the gas station the former works at.
* The Incredibly True Adventure of Two Girls in Love: Maria Maggenti, the film's director, based one of the film's main characters, Evie Roy, off of her first girlfriend. There's even a dedication at the end of the film saying "For my first girlfriend... may our relationship finally rest in peace".
* The Incredulity of Father Brown touch he's spent the rest of the story deconstructing.
* "The In Crowd" is by Dobie Gray (cue tropers running to the Other Wiki). But who would be more iconic and fitting to cover this title than
* The in Cryme Tyme whose career went pretty much the exact same way, only with less success in winning titles and less longevity.
* The Incubators wishes that they never existed, then humans would "still be living naked in caves."
* The incubus (a male demon which lies upon sleepers, in order to have sexual intercourse with them) has the succubus as a female counterpart.
* The Incubus is about the eponymous being raping and killing women in a small town. The driving force of the plot is finding out why.
* the incumbent Republican U.S. president. The outcomes were wildly different. Walter Mondale lost by a landslide to Reagan in 1984, winning only his home state of Minnesota and the District of Columbia. Joe Biden won the 2020 election, one of the few presidential candidates to defeat an incumbent and won the largest number of popular votes in the history of the country.

* The Indelicates actually ran a contest claiming that it was inevitable that someone would make it and they'd rather be involved.
* The Independent Command when the captain and XO are badly injured in an enemy hit-and-run attack on the base.
* The Independents, who lost to the Alliance in the Unification War in the series
* The Independent Terran Systems Alliance has major distaste for the Dominion and KMC, especially the latter for practicing piracy and slavery.
* the index. For instance, the game is split into two volumes ("Your Story" and "Our World"), so references are given as "YS" or "OW" followed by a page number. Then you come across this entry:
* The Index is the Corpus' favorite pastime when they aren't accumulating money. Instead of just killing, the Tenno take on an endlessly respawning group of "brokers" to kill them and acquire Index Points that must be carried back to their team's base. The more Index Points one is holding, the more vulnerable they are as their shields, health, and energy dwindle away.

* The Indiana Jones Interrogations format in the form of old, damaged interrogation tapes from the 1930's, that depict Indy being brutally questioned while in Nazi custody
* The Indiana Jones movies have something of a tradition of this, most famously in
* The Indianapolis 500 lead has changed hands on the last lap on two occasions (shown below). Seven other races (1982, 1992, 1996, 1997, 2003, 2014, and 2015) were won by margins of less than a second (not counting victories under yellow).
* The Indian/Bengali legend of Lilavathi is a fun example. Lilavathi was the daughter of an enemy-of-the-state of Sri Lanka, kidnapped as a young girl, raised in Sri Lanka, and marrying a noble's son. Lilavathi being an accomplished scholar, and her father being a total hellion, some higher-ups decided to punish Lilavathi's father by making it so Lilavathi could never express her teachings again. Lilavathi, however, decided to go down like a badass and managed to buy another day before she had her tongue cut off. She spent the entirety of that day dictating all her lessons and discoveries to her husband. After that, her work was compiled into a sort of all-purpose almanac (which exists today). Nowadays, she is almost universally recognized and beloved in Bangladesh as a bit of a folk hero. Her work is still valuable to agriculturalists today.
* The Indian chief Crazy Horse (one of the chiefs responsible for the downfall of Custer, the other two being Sitting Bull and Gall) was of the belief that he was magically immune to bullets, apparently because he had miraculously avoided being hit by them when everyone around him was shot on various occasions. To be sure, he never
* The Indian Civil War of the 40s is even more complicated. On the surface, it's the British and their loyalists vs Hindu nationalists vs Muslim nationalists vs Communist revolutionaries. But both nationalist groups are further divided by factions willing to work with each other against the Communists, and those willing to work with the Communists against the British. And there's also the maharajas, who are playing the field amongst the British and both sets of nationalists to fend off the Communists.
* The Indian deity Hanuman, the "monkey god," is so caught up in his devotion to Lord Rama that he needs his followers to remind him of his own divinity for his powers not to dwindle.
* The Indian Detective as they're suppose to take the lead in any criminal situation on the Canadian side of the American-Canadian border.
* The Indian Detective: At the end of Episode 4, Priya finally kisses Doug (and several times too!) after she tells him she broke off her arranged engagement.
* The Indian Detective: English actress Christina Cole plays Canadian Robyn Gerner.
* The Indian Detective murdered and has it made to look like a suicide.
* The Indian Detective: Part of the show's drama. Doug D'Mello, despite being of Indian ancestry, was born and raised in Toronto. As such, he finds some things strange in India like arranged marriage and a Mumbai Police constable letting a street kid go for stealing his wallet. It doesn't help that some Indians are reminding him that he's not raised in India, so he doesn't comprehend the situation.
* The Indian Detective: Priya, what with her huge doe eyes, raised cheekbones, and smooth, slightly heart-shaped face.
* The Indian film certification board tends to be extremely prudish in general, & almost all instances of sex, nudity, swearing & anything else that might be construed as being offensive to family values or religious sensibilities tend to get censored out from theater screenings or television. Netflix, Prime Video & similar streaming services are not usually censored which has caused an increasing number of right wing & moral guardian groups to demand expansion of censorship to online media as well.
* The Indian Ghost Rider Shoba Mirza rides a flaming skeletal Asian elephant. Coupled with her four arms in Rider form, she ends up resembling a raging Hindu god.
* The Indian Independence Movement saw several rebels against the British Raj.

Among them: Lokmanya Tilak, Lala Lajpatrai, Bhagat Singh, Subhash Chandra Bose, Jawaharlal Nehru and of course,
* The Indian in the Cupboard (and live long enough) you eventually arrive back where you started. When someone is time-traveling using the magic, their present-day self is unconscious, so they have to be safely hidden and get back in time for nothing to go wrong (one side character is thought to have died as a toy-sized figure in what was, to her, the future because the people in her own time buried her seemingly dead body, and Omri's mother gets a nasty scare when she finds her husband and sons in the car looking like they somehow suffered carbon monoxide poisoning).
* The Indian in the Cupboard had the cowboy character stumble hungover out of the titular magic cupboard, unaware that he'd been transported through time and space (and size). After swearing to lay off the hooch several times in a row, he realizes that he's surrounded by giants, and proclaims, "Oh my dear sweet Lord. I need me a drink."
* The Indian in the Cupboard: Little Bear pretty much subverts this, however, when Omri brings to life a figurine of a World War I medic named Tommy to tend to a wound of his, he greets Little Bear with, "How!", much to Little Bear's confusion.
* The Indian in the Cupboard, Omri transforms an action figure of an older Native American so he'll release his grip on the tomahawk in his hand and Omri can take the real thing. The older man dies of fright before Omri can do anything to stop it. Little Bear calls Omri out for not only going that far to get the tomahawk and ending the older man's life, but disrupting the life he had back home in the process. He demands that Omri turn the older man back into an action figure so his flesh-and-blood body can be buried his own world and because "he would want to be back" there. Little Bear wraps and ties up the action figure, and he and Omri release an action-figure-sized deer into Omri's backyard, apparently as compensation for the life lost. They say a few words before Omri buries the action figure with a trough.
* The Indian in the Cupboard. Only the first part was adapted to film.
* The Indian in the Cupboard on VHS came with a plastic Indian figurine, a plastic key and a 'keyhole' molded into the side of the VHS case. In addition, the insert on the VHS case was reversible, with the cover art on one side and a wooden cupboard on the other.
* The Indian in the Cupboard, turning him toy-sized. The magic only works on plastic, and summons people from other time periods who resemble any affected toy, as well as sometimes sending the modern characters back in time.
* The Indian in the Cupboard. When the cupboard is opened, we see the characters engaged in combat... until they notice the comparatively giant-sized boy sitting there, stop fighting, and stare. Omri quickly slams the door shut again, changing them back before anything can happen.
* The Indian National Army, composed of tens of thousands of volunteers that signed on to fight the British for liberation of their homeland alongside the Japanese during

* The Indian Rope Trick, an alleged stage illusion, features the magician "dismembering" his assistant in an unlit area above the stage and tossing his severed body parts to the floor. There's no evidence that this was ever actually performed, and real-life magicians doubt the supposed methods used to accomplish it, but story — accounts of it date back at least to 1890.
* The Indians are developing an indigenous launch capability; the "Orbital Vehicle" is to be a three-astronaut vessel similar in shape to the Dragon, but only a bit larger than Gemini and significantly smaller than Apollo. Like Orion, it had a successful unmanned flight test in December 2014.
* The Indians now hold the longest World Series victory drought, and longest in the American League since 2005 - their last World Series win was in 1948. This used to be only the Much of the needed weapons and food are actually supplied by an evil European cabal who plan to overthrow the new governments once they're established, but the Indians catch on and thereby hangs the tale.

* The Indian version replaces the pastor with a weight loss program. It also goes into some
* The India Trilogy also gives us the Heel version in Captain Morris and Sgt. Hakeswill. They're both devious, conniving villains, but Morris is a suave social climber who uses Hakeswill, a horrible thug, to do his dirty work. Hakeswill later returns as a sidekick for Wyndham, although Wyndham is a genuinely decent officer who only sees Hakeswill as a model sergeant and isn't aware of what he's up to.
* The Indictment by Barry Reed, defense lawyer Dan Sheridan (the protagonist) uses this when defending a man charged with drunk driving. It seems like a slam dunk for the prosecution, but he faces an inexperience assistant DA. Thus, after the prosecution rests (with the case based solely on the testimony from the state policeman who arrested the defendant) he immediately moves for a judgment of acquittal. Why? Since the prosecutor didn't have the officer confirm the defendant was on a public road, or the driver of the car. As a result, the judge grants his motion, and chides the prosecutor, telling him to let it be a lesson in not forgetting the basics. Some of the jurors complain of this trope as they're leaving the courtroom afterward.
* The indie band The Senate created the world's first "Space Shanty" which is sung in character as, if not space pirates, space sailors in general.
* The indie lab Introversion pretty much kicked this trope in the 21st century with
* The indie scene altogether is the end result of this. Many indie developers are themselves gamers who first got introduced into the medium during the 8 and 16-bit era of gaming. As a result,
* The Indigo Tide encompasses justice, compromise, the greater good, and other communally-oriented traits.
* The individual bugs in the multicolored parasprite swarm all share the same character design.
* The Indoctrination Theory (a claim that Shepard had been subtly indoctrinated throughout the entire trilogy, and that the confrontation with the Illusive Man at the end of the game was motivated by Shepard's slipping sanity) enjoyed a high-profile bout of popularity, with players self-canonizing it in order to make sense of the original endings. * The Indranan War and the Matriarch Council (composed of the female heads of the major noble families). Their rivals the Saxon Alliance are also a monarchy led by a king, though the internal workings of the Saxons are explored in far less detail. The Solarian League is the third major power and averts this; it's a democracy led by a president.
* The Induced Traffic theory. City fathers and developers argue for the building of new roads and highways and the expansion of current ones to both relieve current traffic congestion and prepare for traffic increasing in the future. In truth, it's building the roads themselves that cause the increase in traffic by encouraging more and more people to drive (especially since many of the roads built are not pedestrian-friendly).

* The industry now mixes the above tactic with the manipulation of outrage, operating under the idea that there is (almost) no such thing as bad publicity.
* The industry was hurting over a decade ago and never fully recovered from the collapse of the 90's, and all the writing talent moved on to independent work, so these companies hired the cheapest talent they could find - the aforementioned writers. In the grand scheme of things, monthly books are a single-digit percentile of Marvel's IP (DC is very much the same). The comic books exist for the sole purpose to 'pad the shelves'.
* The Indus Valley Civilisation. Despite centuries of research, very few to absolutely no weapons have been found in the ruins and war is very rarely portrayed in murals. From all accounts, they simply did not have war as part of their culture.
* The Indus Valley Civilization had modern sewer systems, incredibly advanced urban planning, standardized weights, and trade as far away as Oman as early as
* The Indus Valley has a much higher background radiation field than the rest of Asia.
* The Indus worm, a creature purported to live along the banks of the Indus River in Greek, Roman and medieval European literature and bestiaries, is an ambush predator that feeds on large beasts and on humans, dragging them beneath the water and devouring every part of them except for their intestines, which it leaves to float back to the surface.
* The Indwelling when Leon Fortunato calls down lightning to slay the disloyal among the gatherers at the funeral.
* The Indy Game "The Visit" by exotworking is a trolling epitome of this. A man is trying to visit his girlfriend, and his trip is plagued by crabs that all have death wishes, scrambling around, getting underfoot. It's nearly impossible to avoid stepping on one. And when you do, suddenly the police surround you, and you find yourself on trial and convicted of murder, treated as a monster, and rotting away in jail.

* The Inevitable Takeover: The Swollen Eyeballs' assault on Zim's European base.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! After saving the world from the Iridium Bomb, Bob gets a Congressional Medal Of Honor. He accepts it, sets it on his mantle, and largely forgets about it. Having it doesn't change his life one way or the other.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob!, aliens can synthesize gold very easily. This is sometimes used to pay for repairs to Bob's repeatedly destroyed roof.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob!, although he's mainly Molly's pet. It's notable that Molly herself started out as Bob's pet, before she turned out to be sentient and grew to human size.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob!always shows up for a cameo in the strip nearest to Halloween. His appearance changes subtly with each reappearance, and he does occasionally show up out of season.

* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob!, a married couple, do have names, they almost always address each other as "Captain" and "Technician."
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! among most of the people in town.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! an alien race. However, they got space travel technology from the Nemesites, an insectoid race from a nearby brown dwarf that has technically ruled our solar system for about 65 million years, ever since the dragons joined their empire in exchange for aid in rebuilding after their nuclear war (which was actually initiated by first contact).
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! and got compressed to the size of a basketball; he's shown to still be enormously heavy, but still not nearly as heavy as his original size would indicate.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! and her clone/sister Golly both have manes of fur naturally shaped like bunched pigtails — which reflects their youth and immaturity.

* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob!; and Voluptua's dad the Nemesite Emperor.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! and would age and die in the time she would likely be gone.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! any real parents (though Jean sort of qualifies, because they share some genetic material). Anyway, Bob raised her, and she's currently living with Jean, and she loves them both very much.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! a real force, and as the title suggests, it remains inexplicable. Jean is a scientist and has considered studying it, but admits she's almost afraid to.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! around which orbits the throneworld of the Nemesite Empire (Earth is legally part of this empire; the Nemesites just haven't bothered to tell us, considering us wildlife).
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! as an expletive. If you check a dictionary, frass means bug poop.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! As the most prominent alien character, she tends to appear in stories involving alien threats, and so usually knows more about what's going on than the Earthling cast. Has been lampshaded repeatedly that it's hard to shut her up once she starts rolling.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob!, as the robot turned out to be sentient due to its construction done too well.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob!: At the trial of Fructose Riboflavin—
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! because Bigfeet leave big obvious tracks, while Unicorns leave no tracks at all.

* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! before; whereas Molly was at that point the only person in the world that Golly even halfway trusted. (While, as clone-sisters, they're of equal strength, Golly is a fairly violent person, while Molly hasn't got a violent bone in her body.)
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! began as a print comic for a college publication, and the dialogue and science fiction concepts are clearly directed at an older audience, but it's also clean enough that the strip has appeared on the Kidjutsu.com child-friendly webcomics site.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! beneath their masks, in contrast to the western toony style of everyone else in the comic.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob!. Bob comments that he didn't think that was possible.

* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! Bob has told Jean that he's "amazed" that she loves him, too, and he doesn't want to do anything to mess it up. He says he's also shocked that Voluptua showed any interest in him, but he makes it plain that he doesn't want to betray Jean by pursuing anything with Volly.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! Bob is practically worthless in a fistfight. Fortunately he knows this, and is almost always clever enough to resolve a situation by other means, but on the rare occasions he forgets it in the heat of the moment, he is likely to painfully make a fool of himself. (He did briefly hold his own against Jerry once, but that's not saying much, and they stopped fighting after a moment anyway.)
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! Bob is trapped by villains in a small room, and thinks about how he desperately needs an idea. Then he glances up and sees there's an actual mounted lightbulb directly above his head. He smashes it and escapes in the darkness.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! Bob manages to transfer them to a potted plant instead. "Mr. Geranium" thanks them and flies off to explore the universe.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! Bob's gift for doing this is not only why he's still alive, but why the world hasn't ended horribly and repeatedly.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! Bob Smithson, Jean Poule, Molly, Princess Voluptua, Galatea, Snookums, Hibachi, Rocko Sasquatch, Fructose Riboflavin, Agent Ben, Agent Jerry, Djali, Mr. Bystander, Dean Martin, Floyd Fitznewski, Heywood J. Lookathat, Abby Primrose, Ahem, Oogrook/Rainbow Sunshine, the Bear, the Grammar Squirrel, and the Halloween Monster. That's not counting characters who've only appeared in one story so far, like Mook, Goona, Zodboink, or Zippobic...
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob!: Bob's standard default expression is eyes wide with his mouth in a tiny O shape. This perhaps reflects the fact that he's constantly encountering new weirdnesses, but has become too used to it to ever look more than mildly startled.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! both of whom are obsessive Trekkies.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! but her naivete still displays her extreme youth.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! but since the rest of main cast (Jean's a scientist, Molly's a prodigy, and Voluptua's a 300-year-old alien) are much brighter and more well-educated than average, he tends to come off looking Book Dumb by comparison.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! by Officer Zodboink, who speaks multiple Earth languages but can't keep them straight, e.g. "Hasta la wiedersehen!"
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! care mainly about personality over anything else, and so interspecies romances are not that uncommon; Ahem is quick to point out that this fact is also a convenient excuse for arranging otherwise preposterous political marriages.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! clones of Molly (not true "doppelgangers"), and were raised in very different environments than she was, it makes sense that their personalities are very different from hers (and from each other's), even if they do share a lot of traits with her.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! clones of Molly with totally different upbringings, and the castmembers are apparently all bright enough to realize that even if the three look alike, they are different people.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! conscious, because "a simple A.I. would lie about it."
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! Convicted criminals in the Nemesite Empire may be sentenced to the Lint Mines of Dustworld. "The dust bunnies! Shudder...!"
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! decide to declare us full citizens of the Empire, the sovereignty of every nation on Earth will become meaningless, and a war will probably follow.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! described as a useless, cowardly slacker, but one who is fun to hang out with.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! Dirtygeezer disagrees since he can't get gumdrops out of his computer.

* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! don't want to be sent to the Lint Mines of Dustworld. "The dust bunnies! Shudder!"
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! dragons didn't die out, they just left Earth and went to live in outer space.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! English. Molly, being an omnidisciplinary scholar, can read it with ease. "Hey! You got those funny s's that look like lowercase f's! Giggle!"
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! even lists "Random Woman From Crowd Scene on Aug. 14, 2007: The only figure in that scene who has never reappeared."
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! Floyd Fitznewski may be kind of a jerk, which Bob acknowledges, but they've been friends since childhood so Bob forgives him a lot. He apparently also knew Herb Gardner and Heywood J. Lookathat back then, too.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! Fortunately, she doesn't want him, either.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! from each other as they "drop into normal spacetime.'' This saves a character who was trapped inside from being crushed.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! Fructose Riboflavin is an almost 2000-year old semi-humanoid moth creature, and he looks his age. He's also a revenge-crazed s.o.b.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! Galatea joins Riboflavin thinking he represents some romanticized version of this. He's actually a megalomaniac.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob!: Galatea, who was raised as a lab specimen, was like this when she first escaped.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! got off to a very rocky start, but accepted each other as sisters after being chased by a (small) angry mob and the FBI, and getting lost in the woods.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! has a degree in newsstand management.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! has a running gag of spaceships and other large objects continually crashing into Bob's roof. It's gotten to the point that whenever something big goes flying into the air, Bob just sighs and rolls with it.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! has been given the job of helping to maintain it.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! has been shown to have an emperor, a princess, and solar system viceroys. As well as trials by combat.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! has four artificial characters — Molly, Golly, Jolly, and Roofus. Of those, three were produced accidentally, with only Golly being grown deliberately. The other three are very nice people, while Golly is far and away the most emotionally screwed up and potentially dangerous of the bunch.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! has Jean and Voluptua. Jean has always considered Volly to be a rival for Bob's affections and resented her for it. After years of ambiguity, her suspicions have now proven to be true.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! has Molly, a furry bipedal creature who essentially sprang from an experimental genetic serum spilled into a jar of peanut butter. She has a super genius level IQ, yet is chronologically less than two years old — and has a tendency to ping-pong from sophisticated to simplistic in her speech... sometimes two or three times in a single sentence.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! has Molly the Peanut Butter Monster.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! has Mr. Dirtygeezer, a little old guy in a cowboy hat who buys naughty magazines at Bob's newsstand.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! has the irresponsible spacecop Officer Zodboink as well as the somewhat more focused Officer Krelch.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! has the North American Grammar Squirrel. He first appeared when Molly and Golly were arguing about the correct adverb form of "cosmogony". It's "cosmogonically", in case you wondered.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! has the Pirates of Ipecac, who resemble giant lobsters.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! has yet to celebrate her first birthday. Her recently generated sister Galatea is even younger.

* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! have triple claws that can only loosely be said to have thumbs.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! heavy, so when he hops toward you the accompanying noise is WHAM! WHAM! WHAM! WHAM!
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob!. He doesn't stay there for long, though. More recently, there's the ancient Japanese treasure monster.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! he "loses his last marble." Having his life saved by the man he'd been trying to kill only minutes earlier only cements his new status as a crazy person.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! He retains all his original mass, so the ground shakes when he hops around, and he can defeat much larger opponents simply by hopping into them.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! her to be his daughter, even though they are not related.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! he winds up in command of a stolen space warship armed with the most powerful weapon known to science and makes ready to conquer a planet.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! Heywood decides to order something different.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! I'll have nightmares for a week!" He then disguises himself as a handsome human male, and gets a much more favorable reaction from her.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! involving Voluptua still pops up now and again.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! is able to give it a powerful enough engine to serve as a tiny spaceship in its own right.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! is a flying saucer crashing into Bob's roof.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! is a little too innocent to qualify as Lovecraft Country itself, one of its neighboring towns is Innsmouth, where the police keep getting crank calls about "fish people."
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! is an extremely cute pink furry monster. Princess Voluptua still manages to be pretty attractive even in her insect form, as well.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! is basically shaped like a biological version of an H.G. Wells tripod.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob!, is essentially this for the dragon civilization.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! is probably the best example, being introduced as just a quick joke—the huge scary guy Bob has to share a jail cell with for a couple of strips—and then returning two years later as a major character.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! is that he responds this way to almost everything. A robot lion chases Bob around his yard, and his only complaint is it kicked over the pile of leaves he'd just raked. Spaceships keep crashing into his roof, and he wonders if other people put up screens to avoid this. He calms paranormal beings by sitting them down to eat some cheesecake or microwave pizza. He shows an alien conqueror that his whole motivation is flawed, and suggests he find a new hobby, like sudoku. And many other examples.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob!, it only took him one simple sentence to help her see her plan wouldn't really fix anything, prompting her to lampshade his skill with using this trope.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! It's worth noting that, as insect people, most Nemesites are rail-thin.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! Jean) duly results in another "monster", Galatea.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob!, Jean Poule tends to get extremely possessive of Bob whenever Princess Voluptua shows up. Even Jean is startled by her own behavior in these situations.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! language consists almost entirely of the word "Ook!" Captions give a translation, but the voice bubbles themselves say, "Ook! Ook ook ook ook ook! Ook ook! Ook!"

* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob!, leaving us smack in the middle of a vast nation we're not even aware of.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! like this when they attend Voluptua's royal ball.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! lives there. Presumably, it would quiet down again if he moved, but he shows no signs of doing so.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! — Bob and Jean have had some big fights over the years, but the one that came closest to ending their relationship was the Loch Ness Monster storyline featuring Jean's ex-boyfriend Slick. When they make up at the end, they finally get engaged.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! — The insectoid Nemesites seem to favor skintight bodysuits leaving their arms and legs bare.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! — Voluptua sees Bob and Hibachi both seemingly killed (they're actually okay). She's just spent the whole story agonizing over her feelings for Bob — only to realize the name she's screaming out at the sight is Hibachi's.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! Molly, Galatea, and Djali are species that age from babyhood to vague teenagerdom in the span of one month.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob!, Molly is an otherwise extremely sweet and innocent young girl, but she has a troubling habit of hotwiring cars when she's in a hurry.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob!; Molly is bubbly and optimistic, while Galatea is cynical and ambitious.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob!, Molly the Monster—arguably the most intelligent being on Earth but still young and very naive—is being raised by the very human Bob & Jean.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! Molly the Peanut Butter Monster is described as a fuzzy pink lab accident.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! Molly the Peanut Butter Monster was born from a jar of Generico brand peanut butter. They have a factory near Generictown.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! ninjas are amazed by everything about the modern world.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! ninjas who tried to escape from samurai by entering a hibernation state, and then overslept. Their most notable characteristic is that, once unmasked, their faces are drawn in a manga style completely different from the rest of the characters.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! of the Cone Ship's interior, they speculate on whether this may be the case, Bob even comparing it to a video game. They never get to confirm it, though.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! of them, just to emphasize what a bottomless pit her stomach truly is. After the meal, she skips out on the check.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! once had a pair of "rogue Canadian scientists," dressed in heavy winter gear, one of whom said "eh!" a lot and the other spoke French.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! once per story arc. Bonus points if it gets destroyed, fixed, and re-destroyed in a single storyline.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! one of the main characters is a Muppet-like furry monster spontaneously generated from a jar of peanut butter), but that doesn't stop the characters from having emotional depth and experiencing some quite moving moments of pain, love, regret, and redemption amidst all the absurdity of the storylines.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! on her part, but she shows no signs of wanting to reprogram the device to correct the error.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! On the one hand, the destruction of her grand experiment produced Molly the Monster, her adoptive daughter who she loves dearly; but it also crippled her scientific career.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! out of odds and ends. Useful, since he spends so much of his life as a perpetual fugitive.

* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! passed the 1000 strips mark on March 30, 2019.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! people (whether or not their race is native to Fleen has not yet been revealed).
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! Princess Voluptua has pointed out that she is the only member of her species who has spent enough time around humans to have developed some respect for them. She's trying to spread the word among her people that we're not totally worthless.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob!, Princess Voluptua's true form is a vaguely humanoid butterfly creature with a beautiful pair of huge multicolored wings.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! reports" in Innsmouth. Jerry blames Bob for this development in his career.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! robot snowman (unsurprisingly) melts, Jean quotes the Wicked Witch: "What a world! What a world!"
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! Seemingly a cute and chubby little old lady, she's an agent employed by an ancient civilization of dragons and owns a suit of Bubblegum Crisis-style power armor with which she can fly into space.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! She calls Jean and Bob "Mommy and Daddy." This is, of course, all an homage to the old "You got your chocolate in my peanut butter!" ad campaign for Reese's Peanut Butter Cups.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! She naively assumes the problem is that she's naked.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! She's also a good deal more educated and intellectual than he is.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! She successfully leads a mutiny against him (well, a mutiny of the only other two people on the ship).
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob!. Since the Nemesites explicitly have technology to reduce an object's mass and to manipulate gravity, this isn't too unreasonable.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! something very big will crash into Bob's roof, producing vertical block letters spelling "BOOM!"
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! so the threat was an obvious bluff.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! So they hid the stuff as best they could, and when the secret got out... they refused to use it even to defend themselves or to keep the stuff from getting stolen. At least they're consistent.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! still qualifies on account of having no biological parents. She's okay with it, and will cheerfully say, "I'm adopted! It makes me special!" but she can still get very upset if a bully taunts her for having no real parents.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! tails, heartily approve of them.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! technology that lets them disguise themselves as humans, but even as humans, they typically wear that same outfit, with the addition of gloves and boots.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! than usual once he gets back to Earth.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! that aliens can synthesize gold and precious gems effortlessly, and consider them valueless.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! that all of the peanut butter monsters generated by her project are, in a sense, her children. Nonetheless, she seems freaked out every time she encounters one for the first time.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! that he and Jean met as children.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! that's more than half drivel, there's usually a caption saying "Yay! Technobabble!" or something similar.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob!: The always-enthusiastic Molly the Peanut Butter Monster. It probably helps that she has a super-fast metabolism and can outrun a bear.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob!, the Butterflies of Iron, but these days the two civilizations mostly just politely steer clear of each other.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! the first civilized meal she's ever had.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob, the four ninja siblings are named Moe, Lari, Kurlijoh, and Shempu. Lari even has Larry's two poofs of hair that stick out on either side of his head.

* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! the insectoid Nemesites will sometimes use "vertebrate" in a derogatory fashion.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! themselves as humans when dealing with Earthlings.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob!: The Nemesites are giant butterfly people. Their culture does not appear to be butterfly-like, however.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! the Nemesites consider Earth a nature preserve, with humans as part of the local wildlife.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob!!" (they're a race of butterfly people, after all), but it's treated as a joke).
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! They usually call humans Earthlings.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob!, though in both instances he had help.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob!. "'Tis undignified for the heir apparent to dress like a monkey!"
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! to do much of anything physical, even if they were so inclined.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! to use as a gun. It's too big for him to cart around, so he sets it on a wheeled tripod.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! turns out to be cute and harmless, Molly names him Snookums and wants to keep him as a pet. Conveniently, he ends up shrinking to the size of a basketball by the end of the storyline.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! Upon awakening from a 300 year sleep, this is Lari the Ninja's first thought. When his siblings wonder if the strange modern world is the afterlife, he disagrees because "I don't think the dead pee."
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! use a translator earplug that goes in one ear. Being friends with their princess, Bob owns one.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! was grown using genetic material from many different animals—and some human DNA, taken from her "mother," Jean Poule.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! was presumed dead for centuries before he turned up alive in Earth's solar system.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! when Bob and Jean are captured by Bigfeet,
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! - When ordering at an ice cream parlor, a ninja orders tutti-frutti (adding an extra syllable to "furutti"), and then reveals in a thought bubble that he's annoyed because he wanted vanilla but wasn't sure he could pronounce it.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! When Princess Voluptua meets Roofus the Robot, she asks him if he's conscious. He says he doesn't know, and she takes this as proof that he is conscious, because a non-conscious machine designed to feign consciousness would just lie and say yes.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob!, when Riboflavin escapes from his prison ship, he destroys a robot guard. He expresses disappointment that the guard was not sentient, and therefore could not feel pain. Riboflavin is not a nice man.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! When Rocko gets rejected for a teaching job at an etiquette school, Molly says, "Aw, they're just a gaggle of poop-headed elitists! You're neat!"
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! when the villain she's been crushing on takes a liking to her new doomsday device.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! where she boredly enumerates some of the silly questions newly contacted primitives usually ask.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! while fighting him, commenting on how he had to punch him dozens of times in a few seconds to even affect him, while if Bob got one good punch he'd be done for. Of course, we don't get to see the latter happen due to Galatea intervening.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! who never showed her any affection. When she escaped, she was wildly paranoid and her social skills were non-existent.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! who's probably the nicest of them. Jean has no patience with this and is always quick with a sarcastic retort.

* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! who was confident that Bob wouldn't need her help.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! will try to eat him in the last panel.
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob! with pink hair. "I had to wash my hair. All of it."
* The Inexplicable Adventures of Bob!, with pitchforks and tiki-torches, kindly provided by Herb's Garden Supply.

* The infamous ASPCA PSA's are guilty of this trope. The same footage of sad looking animals set to royalty-free sad piano music with the spot in the ad for the ASPCA Magazine having the cheapest looking-CGI imaginable.
* The infamous banned episode, "I'll See You in Court". Al and Peggy sue a love motel after finding a videotape of Steve and Marcy having sex in secret. Steve and Marcy also sue together as they think Al and Peggy were also videotaped. Steve convinces Al not to hire a lawyer because they feel the case is open and shut. The trial itself shows the videotape of the Rhoades having a long sex tape (going hours long) while the Bundys are only a few seconds long. The results
* The infamous Bite of 87 from the first game. During a birthday party, one of the animatronics malfunctioned and took a chunk out of one of the people at the restaurant. Other than that, the details of it are unclear.

* The infamous ending was shot on location in Holsten's, an old fashioned ice cream shop, in Bloomfield, New Jersey.
* The infamous Exploding Whale incident: To get rid of a rotting whale carcass, the Oregon Highway Department decided the best method would be to blow it up with a half-ton of dynamite and leave the pieces for the birds to eat. It was expected that the placing of the explosives and prevailing winds would push most of the debris out to sea, but instead, the explosion was ill-timed and the wind stopped blowing just as the whale detonated, resulting in most of the whale being thrown straight up rather than in an arc. The blast hurled whale chunks as far as 800 feet away, with one chunk caving in the roof of a car (thankfully, a parked one.)

* The infamous "Fail Mary" at the end of the 2012 Monday Night tilt between the Green Bay Packers and Seattle Seahawks. With the game being officiated by replacements due to the regular officials being locked out by the league, Seahawks QB Russell Wilson launched a desperation pass into the end zone that was grabbed by Packers defensive back M.D. Jennings, but Seahawks receiver Golden Tate also got a hand on it and may have caught it simultaneously with Jennings.
* The infamous Fruitfker. Do NOT think about what it does. On a more humorous side, in the spin-off video game it appears to be the main villain.
* The infamous Glibness spell from 3.5: a Bard-exclusive spell available at level 7 that gives a +30 bonus to Bluff checks for the purpose of telling lies, a bonus big enough to give you a chance to deceive a character 30 levels higher than you are and make this task almost impossible to fail against characters of your own level. At a time when rules were poorly worded and succeeding to lie with a Bluff check would force the second party to take your word as absolute truth, this spell had the potential to wreck a scenario entirely. Later, after changes in wording switching from "the NPC believes you" to "the NPC doesn't notice you are lying", a very far-fetched or implausible lie would result in the NPC to question your sanity instead of blindly believing you, depending on what your GM thinks is the most logical outcome.
* The infamous "Golden Turd" saga, which was seen in "Homeland Insecurity", "Failure is Not a Factory-Installed Option", "Blagsnarst: A Love Story", "Father's Daze" and concluded in "300".

* The infamous "Mile High Club" bonus mission could be completed in all of about 15 seconds if you could just climb the stairs placed right behind where you start if not for the fact there are two trunks just parked at the base, meaning you have to route all the way around through the rest of the plane (in one minute against a hail of gunfire on Veteran difficulty). The staircase isn't even off-limits, you can climb down it once you've completed the rest of the mission before you bail from the plane. The only thing preventing your highly-trained operative from saving the VIP with no fuss is a couple pieces of luggage.
* The infamous "Mollusks, snails" image is known for appearing in DeviantArt search results thanks to a number of "tags" in the description. When asked about the tags, the original poster, Ger-hard, claimed that he was in some sort of competition with another Deviant who posted a photo of a roadside traffic sign with the same type of description to see who could get closest to the top in as many searches as possible.
* The infamous neo-Nazi leader Ben Klassen essentially advocated the genocide of all non-white "mud races" so their lands could be used as
* The infamous "opium of the masses" quote is often used as a justification to abolish religion by force. Whereas in its original context, it meant that the cruelty of the world fueled the desire for the hope religion offers, and that if that cruelty is removed, religion will gradually fade away of its own accord. It's also relevant that opioids were used medicinally at the time, and still are: it could be interpreted to mean that religion is necessary in small doses as, effectively, pain relief, but if overdosed or abused, it can wreak havoc.

* The infamous storm scene uses this trope to gut-wrenching effect. Fievel yells in vain for his Papa to help him, while his father can only helplessly scream for his son as the latter falls overboard into the sea.
* The infamous suicide video of R. Budd Dwyer (Treasurer of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania who got caught with his hand in the till, holds a press conference to presumably announce he is resigning his job. He does, by shooting himself in the head on live TV) shows what really happens when one fires a bullet into one's mouth. Do not go looking for it unless you want to have that image stick with you forever...
* The infamous tale of "The Mystery Of Al Capone's Vaults", one of the biggest screw-ups of Geraldo Rivera's career. In the late 1980s, the Lexington Hotel in Chicago was slated for demolition, until it turned out to be a former hideout of notorious gangster Al Capone. In the hotel's basement, a large vault that presumably belonged to Capone was found. Rivera, itching to get his journalistic career back on track after a recent firing from ABC, jumped all over the story and hosted a massively hyped live broadcast about the excavation into the vault. Viewers were treated to almost two hours of backstory, expert opinions, technical details, and general boasting about what dazzling treasures might lay within. Finally, the vault was cracked open and an eager Rivera led his team in to find... jackshit.

* The infamous "What Can You Do With A Terabyte?" commercial by Comcast, which came in the wake of their adding a 1TB cap to their service. The video focuses on how many cool things you can fit in one terabyte of data, ignoring that a) most of those "cool things" are things like photos or snippets of text that don't eat up much bandwidth, as opposed to actually consumptive things like games or streaming, and b) you could do all this already; Comcast is just declaring that you now have to pay them extra if you want to do anything else.

* The infamous "Wild Side" is paired with the wackiness of "Level Up".

* The Infected has a curious incident in which a battering ram, mounted in some kind of IFV, is used to bring down a chain-link fence. Nevermind that an armored vehicle could probably bring down the fence by simply driving through it.
* The Infected has this power. The first time it activated, he spent a subjective decade in frozen time before learning to shut it off. He doesn't age in frozen time, but still needs to eat. He will automatically freeze time when he falls asleep or unconscious.
* The Infected have codenames, but no masks or secret identities. Masked vigilantes (and wearing masks at all) are illegal, and they're federal agents. The dress code varies. Team One, the PR fluff team, have colorful, distinctive costumes to help sell the superhero image as best they can. Team Two, the combat unit, have uniform blue jumpsuits. Team Three, the misfits who for whatever reason have to work alone in the field, wear whatever they want, usually casual clothing.
* The Infected, he becomes convinced all policemen are monsters, and in future misunderstandings, has to be restrained from killing cops by his peers. Which causes the police to try and murder him, which makes everything worse... The initial event is later retconned as mind-control, sympathetic police characters are introduced, and all of the other characters seem to regard Brian's hostility to the police as a nuisance and a serious liability. The message seems to be that police brutality exists and is terrible, and neither tacitly accepting this or making blanket attacks against the police are okay.
* The Infected. Several times people have to reiterate that the Infected aren't contagious or anything, that's just the name that stuck when medical science was trying to decide what to make of them.
* The Infected state and becomes the boogieman to murderers, who now must forever wonder if their next victim is going to suddenly turn into an angry and buff Asian guy.
* The Infected: the IPB is basically this. A federal agency meant to protect people from the superhuman Infected, using Infected operatives. They have a reputation as the black helicopters that take people away never to be seen again, in truth they're very nice people trying to hold the world together while it tries to fly apart... but if you're Infected and powerful enough, you're not allowed to leave.
* The Infected this, but after a trip through time, Brian does wind up fathering one of his best friends, Scott.
* The Infected: This is Mark Steinberg's power, and it is used often and to great effect. It is also examined in how while Mark seems to get instant results, he routinely spends weeks or months walking or cycling across the country without human interaction.
* The Infected to a man trying and failing to save a woman from a serial killer, being teleported back to his apartment and then being brutally beaten by police (he was complying, to the best of his ability), taken to the station, beaten some more, then left for days in a cell to die. The situation for Infected continues to get worse as the series progresses, from simple denial of services to outright lynch mobs gathering whenever a visible or known Infected appears in public.

* The Infected version of the Forgotten Crossroads replaces Vengeflies, Gruzzers, Wandering Husks, and Leaping Husks with Furious Vengeflies, Volatile Gruzzers, Violent Husks, and Slobbering Husks, the first two of which go
* The Infection game mode is also this, It starts with a large team of survivors and a small team of zombies, but when the survivors are killed they become zombies (or stay dead forever in certain custom games).
* The Infectious Madness of Doctor Dekker, one of the psychological patients you interview experiences several of these.
* The "Infectious Zombie" template was provided in the 4th-edition supplement
* The Inferior Five came about because their superhero parents forced them to follow in their footsteps, despite the fact that the Five are completely incompetent at being superheroes.
* The Inferior Five debuted in #62 (June, 1966). They also headlined issues #63 (August, 1966) and #65 (November, 1966). A
* The Inferior Five is shown wearing a sweater. Naturally, one of the Five asks him how he puts on a sweater over his wings. The poor mutant loses it because, now that he's thought about it, he'll never be able to do it again.
* The Inferior Five). Somewhat ironically, and probably coincidentally, the actual X-Men would decades later have a member called Icarus.
* The Infernal Devices, always compares her adventures to what she's read and hopes for the best of all situations.
* The Infernal Devices, a special kind of warlock who he needs for his plans. Apparently he has not had the idea, to bring together a male shadowhunter with a female demon, what would have made his plan a lot easier.
* The Infernal Devices as they come, but when it comes to mechanical stuff, he's your guy.
* The Infernal Devices concerned about how she looks, and it's she who takes Tessa out to buy new dresses.
* The Infernal Devices ends with Tessa and Will marrying and having two children, James and Lucie. However, she only stays with the family until Will dies 58 years after they wed. Following that, she goes to a self-imposed exile; as an immortal warlock, she could not bear seeing her children and descendants grow old and die.
* The Infernal Devices good at improvising tall tales, you have to give him that.
* The Infernal Devices has Sophie, a mundane, and Gideon, a Shadowhunter. That is, until she undergoes Ascension to become a Shadowhunter herself. Meanwhile, Will mentions that he was raised in a mundane household, because his father, Edmund, was a Shadowhunter who chose to strip his Marks after he fell in love with a mundane.
* The Infernal Devices has the demon Marbas who kills a female shadowhunter named Ella Herondale.
* The Infernal Devices. Her main function is basically making sure everybody doesn't kill everybody.
* The Infernal Devices is an Imperfect beauty example. She used to be beautiful and still is but has a scar stretching across her face.
* The Infernal Devices Only very loosely "humanoid" and many times they are remotely humanoid they lack any facial features, up the creepy factor.
* The Infernal Devices prefer throwing knives in combat. But if necessary, they also fight with other weapons.
* The Infernal Devices: Subverted. While flouncy and just a tad spoiled, Jessamine Lovelace is a perfectly capable Shadowhunter in her own right.
* The Infernal Devices, Tessa was going to be forced to marry the Magister had she not been rescued by Will. She was obviously not very happy about it.
* The Infernal Devices, this is the fate that plagues Tessa. Like Magnus, she is an immortal warlock (well, warlock-nephilim hybrid) stuck in the body of a teenage girl. In the 1870s, she falls in love with Will and Jem, both whom are mortal shadowhunters. After Jem becomes an immortal Silent Brother, she marries Will and they start a family, but she does not grow old with him. After he dies of old age in the 1930s, she leaves the family for good, unwilling to see her children, grandchildren, and descendants die before her eyes. Seventy years later, Jem is freed from his duty and restarts his relationship with Tessa, but both know that, eventually, she will outlive him as well.

* The Infernal Devices. Though the main character, Tessa's, love interests are not biological brothers, they are parabati, which for Shadowhunters is quite close to being brothers. There isn't a 'Mundane' equivalent for it.
* The Infernal Devices Will Herondale is scared of ducks - "Bloodthirsty little beasts. Never trust a duck." This becomes a running joke as some of his Herondale descendants also have a strong dislike of ducks, implying that this fear of ducks is hereditary.
* The Infernal Devices Will is fire, Jem is ice. Interestingly, Jem is both much nicer and an infinitely safer bet.
* The Infernal Exalted have access to a number of demonic "enhancements," one of which is called the Fourfold Demon Arm. It can become a normal human hand, a claw, a tentacle, or any non-ranged weapon, though each one only has four possible transformations. Still not as nasty of some of the other
* The Infernal Noise Brigade, an anti-globalization, anti-consummerist marching band, preferred to make their "instruments" out of trash as part of their message.
* The Infernals get a similar variant, known as Torment. If they defy the will of their
* The Infernals is also mentioned to be quite similar although they are yet to invade Caen in large numbers. They create contracts with Humans and give them various powers and abilities in return for souls. The souls are used to create demonic monsters to fight their wars in their own realm or collect souls marked for them. If a person's soul is sold to infernals then he cannot entire the afterlife as Gods hate the Infernals and have closed Urcaen completely to them and and souls with their mark.
* The Inferno and Collector armor suits, the former re-used in multiplayer as the N7 Paladin, are built to give the wearer some of the traditional benefits of power armor. In the Inferno armor's case, you can actually see motors on the elbows and knees.
* The Infernoid archetype's existence has been mentioned in Qliphort Monolith's flavor text. They're known as the Fire Flood in the OCG text and as the Scourge in the TCG text.
* The "Inferno Mix" of Xorcist's "Scorched Blood" sounds nothing like the original.
* the Infestation, it's mostly about a jealous Sweetie Belle following Spike as he shows Silver Spoon around town.
* The Infidel where a British Muslim taxi driver figures out he is actually Jewish by birth. Rather than making him a member of the well-established Persian Jewish community (actor Omid Djalili is of Iranian descent and looks it), they gave him an inexplicably anglo-Ashkenazi birth name and background.
* The infighting and differences between the AIs create multiple other variations — the different goals and attitudes to humanity leads to very different
* The Infiltration: A character must get "inside" a bad-guy organization and pass as a bad guy to accomplish a goal.
* The Infiltrator (2016) starts with two criminals making a deal, when one of them suddenly doubles over in intense pain. Turns out he's an undercover FBI agent whose wire has just short-circuited and is burning his skin. Fortunately he has the presence of mind to convince his target it's a medical problem.
* The Infiltrator the waiter for bringing him the 'wrong' cake (marked Happy Anniversary).
* The Infinite Assassin" deals with this from the inside: the protagonist is remarkably uniform between worlds, so he can leave one world, complete his cross-universe mission, and return to a completely different set of bosses who'll nevertheless recognize him. His sense of identity is correspondingly diffuse: "I am the ones who succeed."
* The Infinite, freedom fighter Bowen goes back in time to team up with his younger self to take down the brutal regime that took over his world before it can seize power.

* The Infinite Improbability Drive allows instantaneous travel to anywhere in the universe. The most popular use of the
* The infinite launchers from the old-school games have one very critical drawback, though: You can't point them up or down, so smaller, quicker enemies are either extremely difficult or outright impossible to hit with them and it's a good idea to keep a backup weapon to handle these sorts of baddies. The first game's remake removes this handicap and lets you aim it up or down as you please.
* The Infinite Layers of the Abyss, a seemingly endless spiral of madness and horror that's home to demons out to tear down all of creation.
* The Infinite Loops actually justifies this trope. The admins responsible for repairing the multiverse store backups of universes wherever they can, which has the side effect of making the natives write fiction about that universe. The Hub universe is simply the most well protected and undamaged area, which is why we have all this fiction....
* The Infinite Loops after an ill thought out prank from Classic Spyro.
* The Infinite Loops: Almost any Looping couple is liable to be like this. Korra and Asami, for example, who spend one Loop being nothing but this. It annoys Mako, on account of their replacing Belle and Beast (he's replacing one of the servants, and is still cursed because they haven't bothered lifting it).
* The Infinite Loops. Any one of them could ascend to true godhood by flexing, if the urge struck them, and they're generally regarded as the most powerful beings in the multiverse.
* The Infinite Loops, apparently during the same loop, and react completely differently to the situation.
* The Infinite Loops are basically a justification for turning canon characters into a swarm of gadflies. It's the only mechanism most of them have for dealing with the endless repetitions of the time loops without going completely insane from boredom.
* The Infinite Loops are, by their very nature, this trope. Each chapter is comprised of snips, usually with one author per snip, sometimes two or three. In general, there's about twelve authors per comp.
* The Infinite Loops, believing something bad will happen if they diverge from the baseline. Some loopers suffering from it can get rather...forceful about staying consistent with baseline, causing them to be rather disliked by the other loopers.
* The Infinite Loops can have this, as every reality reboots various Loopers coming Awake for the first time have to deal with the Loopers that have been around for so much longer.
* The Infinite Loops canon events into place. This usually places them at odds with most other loopers, who tend to cause severe timeline changes out of boredom.
* The Infinite Loops can range from comedic, to surreal to horrifying to romantic to philosophical. It helps that there are over a dozen authors... per story.
* The Infinite Loops collaborative loops, making him the go to authority for the mechanics of the setting.
* The Infinite Loops drives Loopers stir crazy, so they usually spend time planning "pranks" to keep themselves entertained.
* The Infinite Loops for a very, very long time, so doing anything to non-loopers will be quickly solved by the next reset, and even harming loopers can seem unimportant since they'll come back too (the difference is that they'll remember). There are a number of other syndromes that loopers can suffer, but Sakura Syndrome is considered the most dangerous to both the afflicted and those around them.
* The Infinite Loops gives us Chaos, a game invented by a reformed Discord. It appears to be some kind of card game, and like its creator, it doesn't seem to make any sense. It also apparently has "expansions", including a sci-fi themed one seen being played by Captain Picard.
* The Infinite Loops has declared itself a sanctuary loop for any looper that visits, encouraging them to relax and helping them psychologically heal.
* The Infinite Loops has Naruto unleash the Nine-Tails and threaten to destroy a ward of Tokyo every hour unless Masashi Kishimoto is brought before him alive.

Sasuke, meanwhile, goes around immolating fans who write Narusasu slashfics with Ameratsu and then leaving their corpses to burn eternally.
* The Infinite Loops have at least one of these. If someone orders it, chances are they just came out of a very rough loop.
* The Infinite Loops have what they call a subspace pocket. Not only can these hold quite a bit, they also carry between loops. The oldest loopers are said to be able to carry entire solar systems in theirs.
* The Infinite Loops, including Twilight's head exploding twice after Pinkie "explains" how the Pinkie Sense works, and the Doctor's head exploding numerous times after the Mane Six loops into the Whoinverse as Daleks and decide to screw the whole extermination thing and be benevolent. The Doctor just couldn't process the concept of benevolent Daleks.
* The Infinite Loops is to prevent something that went wrong in baseline.
* The Infinite Loops is Twilight Sparkle inventing a whole set of new tenses specifically to counter this problem... and nobody else ever memorizing them.
* The Infinite Loops, it's hard for money or even supposedly one-of-a-kind artifacts to have any real value. By far the most valuable commodity is blackmail material on other loopers, both when they are Awake and unAwake. It's usually traded around for bets rather than actually used as a real threat.
* The Infinite Loops, loopers generally come to this conclusion eventually. Whether they come to it because they decided to look at the bright side or because they've been driven mad varies.
* The Infinite Loops managed to go for a long time without anybody realizing he was a looper.
* The Infinite Loops, meaning that with the exception of extreme variant loops they will always be treated as children by non-loopers even though they are orders of magnitude older and wiser.
* The Infinite Loops: MLP Loop 16.5 has Twilight getting King Sombra to attend a "Crystalholics Anonymous" meeting, which includes four diamond dogs, three teenage dragons, a sea serpent, Pinkie Pie and Discord. (Pinkie says she's there because she likes granulated sugar.)
* The Infinite Loops, Naruto convinced his entire graduating class except Sasuke and Sakura to treat the academy like a deep cover mission and hide their skills. Shikamaru is somewhat lax in maintaining his cover because "If he's caught over something minor, people tend to stop looking."
* The Infinite Loops: Non-sexual example from the MLP Loops, where Twilight isn't usually that surprised when she Awakens and finds a small filly cuddled up to her. But when it's somepony other than her adoptive daughter Nyx, her reactions vary and can include general amusement or thoughts on how cute they are.
* The Infinite Loops, pretty much anyone can become capable of ascension as a result of the sheer power they gain over the course of millions of years of experience in various realities. However, as a result of the damage done to Yggdrasil, ascension has the regrettable side-effect of completely destroying the ascender’s universe. Most loopers don’t persue the power necessary for ascension because of this, and those who do have that power never actually use it.
* The Infinite Loops, Ranma learned how to connect to the Earth's leylines. One notable loop ends with Ryoga stumbling across and attacking one of the lines Ranma is using, causing the entire solar system to explode.
* The Infinite Loops resets universes rather regularly. As a consequence, most loopers come to view death as an annoyance.
* The Infinite Loops scenarios. Savvy loopers gather as much fiction as they can, so they can quickly acquaint themselves with any other world they end up in; some loopers even keep their own scripts on hand to offer to newcomers.
* The Infinite Loops: Seeing as how the project is spread across multiple fandoms and multiple threads on Spacebattles, some of the threadheads have indeed vetoed a couple of plotlines and Looper or setting activations.
* The Infinite Loops: Some loopers, such as Pikachu and Anakin Skywalker, are known to put out rewards for non-loopers to find and capture MLEs during loops.
* The Infinite Loops sometimes does this to Loopers who end up in some strange variant or other universe, but only Equestria has a bar specifically for visiting loopers to do this, run by Big Mac and/or Berry Punch. On one occasion, Sleipnir, the admin for the Equestrian loops, joins in after having to personally rescue Twilight from a particularly horrifying loop.

* The Infinite Loops start because the computer the multiverse runs on had a system crash.
* The Infinite Loops: Thanks to the Spacebattles communities, and the rock solid base of Saphroneth's MLP Loops series, the fandom currently sits at Stage 2.
* The Infinite Loops. There are specific guidelines that each loop must follow, interactions between settings, and even a masterlist that determines which snippets are canon or not.
* The Infinite Loops: There's a patch to prevent loopers from having children not native to their loops (i.e. canon), as the children are completely wiped from existence after the loop is over. This patch was made in reaction to Ranma's near descent into insanity after the loss of one such child.
* The Infinite Loops these. Use only one attack, no out of loop powers or weapons, use the weakess weapon or move possible, defeat everyone as fast as possible, the list goes on.
* The Infinite Loops, Twilight Sparkle takes to dressing up as a chicken. Why? No-one knows, because whenever they ask, some disaster strikes. When her friends finally work up the courage to ask, just as she's about to answer, the loop resets.
* The Infinite Loops until Yggdrasil can be repaired. What this means is that various characters from any series you care to name might be Awake and aware of the loops, running through their own universe countless times, exploring bizarre variants, or crossing over with other series. It's all a shameless excuse to watch a bunch of bored immortals play with impossible powers in weird situations, but it works very well for that.
* The Infinite Loops view the loops as this. Sure, time is on repeat for who knows how long and sometimes, you are the only one who knows what is going on, but on the plus side, you can never permanently die, you get to visit new worlds and learn new skills, have unlimited chances to fix any mistakes you made, and you tend to end up with your friends and family.
* The Infinite Loops. Whatever caused the Loops caused most Loopers' sexuality to be tossed out the window. In fact, a Looper with a set-in-stone sexuality is a miracle in of itself.
* The Infinite Loops what they're facing or that things are just that serious.
* The Infinite Loops where all the events are written are actually happening, there's the question of whether the real world is in danger of becoming damaged...
* The Infinite Loops which serves to both lampshade the prevalence of this trope and apparently rate the attractiveness and dateablity of individual catgirls. Apparently the author has refused to make themselves known; the forward states that many of the individuals in the work would gladly eviscerate them if they knew their identity.
* The Infinite Loops while the admins scrambled to repair things. The actual STORY is really a bunch of people screwing with their own canon in any way they see fit.
* The Infinite Loops who find quality armorers to be sexy. They mostly protect Hephaestus from his ex-wife.
* The Infinite Loops, who were together in the baseline but have been upgraded to this thanks to the Loops, and Spike and Rarity, who took a very long time to get together in the Loops, but eventually became the first couple to marry in the Loops that weren't together in baseline.
* The Infinite Loops writers, though there are some who make a conscious effort to not over abuse this.
* The Infinite Loops. Yggdrasil, the world tree, is actually a gigantic computer and each of its branches is a different reality, and it so happens that that computer has crashed; so badly that the gods - better known as Admins - are trying to fix it and the only way to buy time is to have people in the various settings repeat their lives over and over and over again. And yes, the system is susceptible to viruses.

* The Infinite Monkey Cage, in which psychologist Richard Wiseman says Freud's theories are completely untestical.
* The Infinite Monkey Cage is named after this. If you have an infinite numbers of monkeys on an infinite number of typewriters in the hope that they'll eventually give you Shakespeare's works, you do need to keep them in a cage big enough for all of the monkeys: an infinite monkey cage. The metaphor is occasionally analysed on the show itself:
* The Infinite Monkey Cage was an hour long special with the return of many former guests (they usually only have two). There was also a 40 minute video version on iPlayer, which included the return of the Robin, Brian and Eric Idle puppets from the 2014 video trailers.

* The Infinity Gauntlet, has every comic book given to him compared to it and rarely in a favorable light.
* The Infinity Gauntlet includes the archetypal Thanos-Death romance. Thanos's romantic intentions are thwarted when wielding the Gauntlet makes him more powerful than her, and neither of them can be satisfied with an unequal partnership.
* The Infinity Gauntlet in which he is turned female, culminating with her giving birth.
* The Infinity Gauntlet of snagging the Gauntlet with Thanos distracted, which would have given the heroes victory. Thanos' shaken expression and immediate restoration of his full strength immediately afterward speaks volumes.
* The Infinity Gauntlet, Thanos creates an indestructible force cube around Cyclops's head to counter the latter's eye beams. Unfortunately for Cyclops, it also cuts off Doctor Strange's spell that allowed him to breathe in space, and he suffocates to death despite Captain America's desperate attempts to free him.
* The Infinity Gauntlet: Thanos has just massacred almost all of the remaining heroes of Earth. The only one left standing is Captain America. It's clear that he doesn't stand a chance and Thanos will kill him in seconds. What's the last thing Steve lets out before the inevitable happens?
* The Infinity Gauntlet that the fireball sort of outruns the heroes itself.
* The Infinity Gauntlet, Wolverine at one point is confused when it starts snowing in May. This is because, due to a cosmic temper tantrum from Thanos, the Earth is moving away from the Sun.

* The Influence of Sea Power upon History makes it nearly immune to blockades, and its sheer size combined with the vast distance separating it from Japan made an invasion of the mainland even more ridiculous. Thus, even if Japan had won the decisive battle at sea they were seeking, it would've only delayed their defeat.
* The influence of the MCU actually came back and affected the comics, as "synergy" with the movies became an enforced trope. Hawkeye dropped his colourful costume for a sleek black number, character relationships that weren't in the MCU were downplayed while ones invented by the films became suddenly canon, and elements the films were using like SHIELD were suddenly reintroduced (and ironically, discarded again shortly after the films dropped them), while franchises like

* The Ingenue: If the movie is set in high school or college, expect the heroine to be sweet and innocent, but incredibly naïve.
* The Ingenue: Innocence in men is more often portrayed as creepy or unnerving than innocence in women.
* The Ingenue: Lots of heroines are portrayed as innocent and kindhearted, but also sheltered and unworldly with a tendency to get into danger (so the hero can swoop in and save her). She'll often be a virgin or at least very sexually inexperienced as well; dollars to doughnuts she won't be by the end.

* The Inheritance Cycle, the dwarf Orik interferes with the Twins as they try to read the intentions of Eragon and Murtagh on discovering the Varden. When brought before the Varden's leader Ajihad, Ajihad reprimands Orik for interfering and removes him from service to the Varden, thus returning him to the service of Orik's king Hrothgar, but also appointing him as Eragon's guide to their headquarters (located in a dwarven city), now making him exempt from the Varden's rules and above almost every normal member of the Varden when working with Eragon, who lampshades it

* The Inhumans apparently have a reference book containing everything they have learned about their powers and how to use them over the course of centuries, which allows them to easily figure out how to train new members who have recently undergone Terrigenesis. Of course, the book contains everything
* The Inhumans are eventually established as being a Kree attempt at making a race of super soldiers.
* The Inhumans has extremely long prehensile hair that she can use as a weapon.
* The Inhumans, Maximus is having to deal with the day to day running of an entire species... and he's bored out of his skull. He can't step aside fast enough when Black Bolt comes back, and behaves for the better part of the next decade's worth of stories.
* The Inhumans migrated into space, at one point they used a propulsion system that's basically powered by a strapped down Black Bolt shouting through an aperture into space opposite the direction they wanna travel. The physics of it are esoteric, because Black Bolt's power is ostensibly an absurdly powerful sonic scream, so it shouldn't work in space, but it has convoluted properties that make it technically not solely sonic, so it generates propulsive force they can use.
* The Inhumans push was a pet project of then Marvel CEO Ike Perlmutter, who insisted on forcing them into the role of X-Men replacement despite editorial, longtime fans, and the wider public all not caring for it. Internal restructing at Marvel forced by Disney saw Perlmutter lose control of the movie side to Kevin Feige, who swiftly cancelled the movie, and then the television & comics side as well. Feige quietly dropped the whole endeavor on all fronts.
* The Inhumans The others usually stand in the background and look concerned. Even then, the Inhumans as a whole, including Black Bolt, are generally not used outside of a few miniseries every few years and as supporting characters. they were in the spotlight in the early and mid 2010's, but the family disappeared again later.

* The Inhumans, the Terrigen Mists, parallels the superhero tendency of adopting a new identity after gaining powers. In-universe, it also predates the era of superheroes by tens of thousands of years.
* The Inhumans were heavily pushed by Marvel in the 2010s, receiving big promotional pushes and involvement in crossover events. This stems from Marvel not owning the film rights to the X-Men, thus wanting to use the Inhumans in their place as the naturally superpowered minority allegory. Although their film was scheduled to be developed, increased awareness of the brand and more stories to draw on for adaptations and merchandise was required, as well as more popularity in general given how obscure they are, and so they were given more shots than would normally be warranted given just how poorly they sold (their sales were usually always under the usual Marvel/DC cancellation threshold). This subsided when the film rights to the X-Men were reacquired and the Inhumans' TV adaptation bombed, which saw an almost instantaneous decrease in the Inhumans' promotion.
* The Inhumans were the result of the Kree further meddling with humanity, though
* The Inhumans (who are human offshoots that live on the moon) are ruled by their king Black Bolt.
* "The Inhuman Torch" has a blue flame alien who nearly turns Earth Supernova.
* The initial age problem was enhanced by Buffy being a high school teen; Buffy/Spike and Angel/Cordelia had slightly more adult girls. Buffy provides another variant: given probable Slayer life expectancy (a few years, cut short by violence) even an ordinary human romance could be Mayfly December, at least on average. Also, given the fact that Angel was fighting side-by-side with Buffy, his survival chances weren't much higher. It would have been entirely plausible for him to die in battle, leaving Buffy alive.
* The initial Brockton Bay Wards roster has only two girls; Shadow Stalker and Vista.
* The initial bubble theorized by Alcubierre would produce no thrust on its own, and most thrusters would be hard pressed to get the ball rolling (pardon the pun), never mind getting it to stop. The ideal shape is that of a drop, but that presents its own problems.
* the initial Charmin bear advert is even more explicit than the American one (then again, they can get by with more shit on German television...).
* The initial commercial using the exploding water concept was even worse: It had a guy doing a backflip on an asphalt basketball court and preparing to
* The initial Italian airing of Season 1 had every episode split into a two-parter to fit more commercials in, as Italian law forbids commercial breaks during cartoon episodes and each episode of the series is 22-minutes long.
* The initial Laughing Man incident became such a cultural phenomenon that the intial message of trying to uncover a government conspiracy in front of a live broadcast ended up being remembered by the public more for the spectacle it created than from the message it was presenting. The Major actually has to dig through TV broadcasts to find an original recording of how the incident played out, as it had spread around the net so much that people began to only remember what they wanted to remember about it. It's like the concept of
* The initially most suspicious one is Seven. He is an apparent amnesiac, who could easily be lying, and comes off as brash and violent, picking fights with almost every other character. * The initial "trilogy" (2001-2003) is the most well-known era of the series for its unique premise and memorable characters and setting, but it was during the Metru Nui saga (2004) that the true world-building began and the characters were allowed to go beyond being one-note stereotypes. The story, up until then fairly linear and riddled with fantasy-clichés, also got more complex and serious, and the
* The initial use of Minmay's voice as a weapon is actually short-lived: while the Zentradi were initially too distracted to react, as soon as the heroes opened fire they started firing back. The real decisive weapon in that engagement was Minmei kissing Kaifun: the Zentradi were so disgusted they stopped fighting effectively, trying absolutely anything to erase the image from their minds, including firing in the middle of nowhere (a Zentradi heavy cruiser was observed doing exactly this as Hikaru locked his nukes on it) and listening to Minmei's songs.

* The initial wave of attacks during D-Day consisted of this almost exclusively. Several thousands of soldiers landed via boats at the beach and were simply ordered "run and take the hills". The purpose of this was a fairly literal invocation of Cannon Fodder, in that the soldiers were just there to take the bullets and keep the Nazis busy until they simply ran out of ammo. Estimates go that there were around 1000 Nazis dead, ten times as many as that died on the Allied side with 4,414 confirmed according to
* The Initiate Brother. Due to the high value placed on politeness and courtesy, it's common for people to be this with their friends (or even non-friends). Lord Shonto sometimes gets tired of it, especially when there are more important things to be doing.
* The Initiate Brother into the same trap, just for good measure. The problem is, the barbarians arrive in much greater force than the Emperor expects (perhaps having noted well that the empire is not too big on the whole "unity" concept). They nearly conquer the empire.
* The Initiate Brother. Some are small incidents - arranging for Lord Shonto to be attacked at home and Lady Nishima to be detained while travelling, in both cases allowing him to come to their "rescue" and win their trust. He tries a bigger one when he arranges an attack on Shonto's army in the expectation that his boss the Emperor will be blamed for it, hoping to exploit the resulting outrage. However, it falls apart when the attack fails miserably and the Emperor finds out what he was up to.
* The Initiate Brother, two cousins each teasingly threaten to play this role for the other while indignantly denying any need for it themselves. One of Nishima's attendants argues for striking first as a means of self-defense, since Nishima's cousin "will be searching for a consort for you even as we speak".
* The Initiation. Although not a virgin, she is only one of the girls not to have sex over the course of the movie. Justified as the killer has a specific reason for savin her for last.

* The Initiation. The scene with the girls holding candles that appears on all of the posters is part of the official initiation ceremony into the sorority. However, most of the film takes place during the prank that the pledges have to pull at the end of pledge week. The prank probably falls into the humiliating category (although it turns horrific).

* The Initiative in season four was clearly using questionable methods in their study of demons, vampires, and other paranormal activities, but they were getting the job done and had effectively defanged Spike, one of history's most dangerous vampires. Then they decided that Buffy was a liability and tried to kill her. When it seemed like they were getting back on the slope, they took to torturing Oz (a good werewolf rather than an evil demon) and tried to kill the Slayer again.

Her teammate Hardball decides that the best way to deal with this under the current dire circumstances is to amputate the legs. Komodo can regenerate, of course, but this still triggers a phobic reaction, as her civilian form lost her legs as well.
* The Initiative troops in Season 4 were chemically augmented to be tougher, stronger, and faster than ordinary humans. They were still no match for Buffy herself, however, and since they were usually going up against the same type of critters she fought, they didn't show up too well.

It’s perfectly edible before this point, but interestingly you shouldn’t drink alcohol if you eat them, as for some time afterwards you might get affected by a chemical in the mushrooms that can cause some quite hefty digestive discomfort.
* The In-Laws chasing Sheldon comes across an emergency exit. After trying to open it, and failing, he yells for a couple of seconds, catches his breath, calmly says, "This is an emergency," and busts down the door.
* The In-Laws, CIA Agent Vincent Ricardo and Dentist Sheldon "Shelly" Kornpett (played by Peter Falk and Alan Arkin respectively), are conversing about the situation that they are in while dining at a restaurant. Shelly is not the least bit happy to have been dragged into this adventure and expresses his displeasure in the loudest possible manner which attracts the attention of its patrons.
* The In-Laws, FBI agents show up in the middle of the (alcohol-fueled) bachelorette party and are temporarily mistaken for strippers.
* The In-Laws firing squad during the film's climax, they're rescued at the last minute by the appearance of a small army of CIA agents. (They would have been there earlier, but "traffic was brutal.")
* The "In Limbo" anomaly has your science vessel discovering a vault on a lifeless alien world, containing still-functional computers that the planet's original owners used to upload scans of their brains in a last-ditch attempt to survive some apocalypse. Uploading the data into Robots or Droids gives an underwhelming result, but if you've got full

* The innards of Noitearc, the Great Tree that Supports the worlds, are seen as tunnels of rainbow light by the mortals traveling them. This is because they can't comprehend its true nature.
* The Inn at the Crossroads has had a quiet, mostly unsung and dismissively recorded impact on Westerosi history for quite a while. Before Harrenhal went up, it was the major notable establishment with elbow room to spare to be found in the region for everything from "meet and muster up" to leaving messages to "missed the boat/ lost a wheel" to surprise over-wintering or just to celebrate something either major or minor, despite not being a traditional keep with a lord attached. And even since, it's not lost import. Take a guess where Rhaegar and Lyanna headed to first on their... elopement... for instance. Or where various other Targaryen princes and princesses repeatedly got up to politics-impacting shenanigans when in the Riverlands, for that matter.
* The inner core of Reapers seem to end up taking a form similar to whatever species was ground up into nutrient paste to make them. However, the outer shell of adult Reapers turn out looking like giant robot squids. They fit the trope in any case (and rather better than the Geth, for that matter).

* The Innocents frequently throughout the movie, but it's only at the very beginning that the lyrics are heard (sung by Flora):
* The Innocents has a few instances, plus a child's creepy poem recital for good measure.
* The Innocents - is set entirely in an elegant country mansion (aside from a brief interview scene at the start). Although it is a ghost story, there is enough ambiguity to suggest that Miss Giddens could be driven mad by the vastness of the house. She often only sees the ghost at a distance, reaffirming that anything could be hidden in such a large house.

* The Inquisition was neither a Spanish invention nor was it exclusive to Spain.
* The Inquisitor. According to Lister, he programs the Inquisitor's gauntlet to backfire and do this to the Inquisitor himself.
* The Inquisitor can also be this depending on your dialogue choices. For example, the Dalish Inquisitor can agree with Solas' dismissive views of contemporary Dalish culture. The Qunari Inquisitor's parents were Tal-Vashoth, defectors from the Qun who raised their child away from its restrictions.

* The insect-like Bohrok swarms and the Bahrag queens of the 2002 story were originally thought to be under Makuta's control despite originating from within the Mata Nui island. When the Toa defeated the Bahrag and by extension their swarms, they accused the heroes of opposing their "brothers". In the 2008 story, it turned out the Bohrok and Bahrag weren't evil at all, nor where they allied with Makuta. They were serving the will of Mata Nui just like the Toa, Makuta had just turned them against each other. The whole 2002 Bohrok saga was basically an elaborate buildup to Mata Nui's true nature and his awakening and the eventual destruction of the island that bore his name. The connection between the Toa and Bohrok was further elaborated with the revelation in one of the 2008 novels that many Bohrok were originally Matoran, the same species as the Toa.
* The Insect Play by the brothers Čapek features two nations of ants (explicitly compared to human society) going to war over a path between two blades of grass, each fighting to exterminate the other.
* The Insect Play character is unhappily pursued by a flighty young thing called Clytie (or Clythie, depending on the translation), in spite of the fact that she's a butterfly and he's not.

* "The Inside Job" has Plankton going inside SpongeBob's body and attaches a sucking helmet to his heart to gain information about the Krabby Patty formula. This ends up causing him to turn into a small version of SpongeBob, with a sequence complete with eyelashes breaking through his skin and his teeth shattering to make way for two goofy buck teeth. Then, at the end, Sponge!Plankton gets attached to Patrick and we get a similar sequence where he becomes a dumb pink plankton.

Aptly, he is treating the Viscount and one or both of the ladies for syphilis with mercury pills (the standard treatment for the disease in the 18th century).
* The inspection survey, listing the percentage of cars of certain age failing their inspection or the number of failures the inspector noticed on an average example of the model, don't account for failures that do not impact the inspection's outcome. * The Integral Trees series has a lost colony without a planet: they live in a torus of gas that encircles a dwarf star, where the closest thing to solid ground is the enormous, kilometers-long Trees.
* The Integral Trees spinning around the neutron star. What little metal there is has been recycled endlessly from what the colonists brought with them.
* The Integral Trees takes place in the Smoke Ring, a "world" which is just a breathable ring of gas around a neutron star.
* The Integral Trees, the inhabitants of Integral Trees are somewhat taller and slimmer than Earth people, but they are strong, tough Heavyworlders compared to people from the rest of the Smoke Ring. The tidal forces acting on the trees provides at least a little simulated gravity, but everyone else grows up in zero-G. One character, often referred to as a "dwarf", actually has an Earth-normal build; he's described as "monstrously strong" and is the only person who can wear one of the original spacesuits.

* The International Space Station. 837 cubic metres of pressurized volume. Or 139.5 per person, when fully staffed with a crew of 6. Especially when you compare it with everything else launched before: Mir and Skylab for example were each just about a third the size of the ISS.
* The International Space Station (and other modern space stations) tend towards a bleached version of this rather than the I-pod like designs one'd expect, with exposed wires all over the place, and it's for the large part cramped. Many fixes are standard "Duct tape and Hope", as getting spare parts involves putting them into orbit.
* The International Space Station (ISS) does not feature a shower, although it was planned as part of the now cancelled Habitation Module. Instead, crewmembers wash using a water jet and wet wipes, with soap dispensed from a toothpaste tube-like container. Water is recycled on the ISS, the system collects, processes, and stores waste and water produced and used by the crew — a process that recycles fluid from the sink, toilet, and condensation from the air.

* The Internet created (and to a large extent, still does) all sorts of legal weirdness in the 90s and 2000s. The first claimed "internet crime" was actually committed on the ARPANET in 1973, when an American forgot his razor in England and sent an email requesting it be sent back to him. Using the ARPANET for personal use was not allowed. Now, most legal weirdness tends to surround privacy.
* The internet dot com bubble basically ran on this exact plan, pets.com being the poster child of an ill-defined business plan relying on the mystical powers of the internet to make money when conventional business savvy dictated to look elsewhere. In fact, one business magazine cover questioning the viability of this model at the time even used the Simpsons as an illustration, showing Bart wearing a T-shirt advertising his internet start-up (bucks2bart.com) and Mr. Burns hefting a huge sack of money he was evidently planning to invest in it.
* The Internet exists, and some regulars from before the mid-90s even rue the day that Tim Berners-Lee introduced the World Wide Web.
* "The Internet": Gumball asks this verbatim after an embarrassing video of him gets a hit counter so high the numbers start falling off the screen and leaking out the computer.
* The Internet had been around in a form similar to what we use today since at least the early 1980s, but it was NCSA Mosaic, the first easy to use web browser available for PCs and Macs, that made the network a must-have for computers.
* The Internet is causing a massive subversion of this trope. Before the Internet, there were various dialects that were drifting apart to the extent that it was thought that within 100 years speakers of one would not be able to understand the other (examples: American vs British English, Mexican vs European Spanish, Brazilian vs European Portuguese). The Internet has effectively reversed this, however. Dialects that were growing further apart are now starting to move closer together again, as instantaneous worldwide communication causes people in one country to start picking up another's dialects and slang. Just 20 years ago, if you asked someone in the US what a lorry was, most people probably would have no idea. In addition to this, the Internet is also preserving "snapshots" of languages, as articles are written and can then be read anytime in the future.
* The Internet Is for Cats: The Internet is full of cute cat photos/videos.
* The Internet Is for Cats: The trope is about cat-themed content on the internet, not about cats browsing the internet.
* The Internet Is for Porn, and neither even looking at each other? Unbelievably lewd.
* The Internet Is for Porn may very well be the 2nd Sexual Revolution because of

* The Internet Is for Porn: Pornography is the only thing noteworthy on the Internet.
* The Internet Is for Porn: While this trope is as old as the Internet itself, the rise of free porn sites in the previous decade, coupled with the advent of the smart phone, effectively killed off the "lads mag" market by the middle of the decade.
* The Internet is full of this: if you're a fan of a long-standing website, you might be surprised at how many of the administrators and/or writers were once commenters on the same site.
* The Internet is nearly guaranteed to lead one to an English-speaking page.
* The internet is probably the only real-life example that fits this trope quite well. Take a look at the
* The Internet Is Serious Business: Social media was scrutinized for causing the deep political divisions seen in the later part of the decade. How bad could it be? In 2016, a bot was designed to depict views on Twitter. Almost immediately, the bot began to "tweet" misogynistic and white supremacist thoughts and was put down after a few hours. Moreover, the allegations of Russian hackers meddling in elections in America and elsewhere made cybersecurity a growing concern with both politicians and the public.
* The internet itself could be viewed as an example of this trope. In an era where any claim can be instantly fact-checked by reaching into your pocket and typing a few words into your smartphone, it can be hard to believe that just a few decades ago people were largely at the mercy of whatever they were told by books (which weren't always easy to come by in the first place), news media, or word of mouth. Urban legends are a lot less spooky when you can debunk them with a quick visit to Snopes.com. That said, the internet has also given birth to new mysteries and wonders, and provided a platform for communities that may not otherwise have ever come together, so in that regard the "dragons" are still alive and well. Unfortunately, it also means

* The Interstate Commerce Commission was established in the 1880s to try and reign in the more unsavory business practices the railroads were engaging in. However, they weren't given the teeth to do so until the Teddy Roosevelt Administration, at which point they were given plenty of power to control the railroads. Unfortunately, they wielded a little too much power to decide what the railroads could or could not do when it became clear they needed to ditch some unprofitable business practices, as during the 1950s and 1960s, their passenger trains were becoming money pits; the boom of WWII had wained heavily as a consequence of automobiles and passenger airlines making travel more convenient (and in some cases cheaper) compared to rail. The railroads tried to cancel their passenger trains, but the ICC wouldn't let them drop most of their services, even if the lines proved it was costing them a lot of money to keep them running, citing a public need for these trains despite the fact that hardly anyone was riding them (it didn't help that a lot of these trains were subject to protests against their cancellation). It was only when the situation was getting far more dire for these lines that the ICC was more willing to let them end passenger services, especially when the 1970 bankruptcy of Penn Central made it abundantly clear just how vulnerable these economically vital services were needed. This eventually cost them, however, as deregulation efforts by the Reagan administration led to their powers decreasing by the 1980s, eliminating many of the rules they so strictly enforced. The ICC eventually was dissolved in 1996, with all of its responsibilities given to the Federal Railroad Administration.

* The Interview. Guess which particular scene quickly circulated throughout the Internet?
* The Interview has one, which ends with a sudden sex scene between Aaron and Sook. Justified, as they were trying to have sex earlier, but were interrupted.
* The Interview plays over the end credits. The song is about the end of the Soviet Union, so its use in the film was meant to parallel that with the end of North Korea's dictatorship. Then in 2018, the ending became even better when, after technically being at war for over 70 years, North and South Korea had a historic summit and finally agreed to end the Korean war.
* The Interview, Skylark and Rappaport drive by a North Korean supermarket that makes them believe that all they heard about Kim Jong-Un starving his people was a lie. And then Skylark later visits the supermarket and discovers for himself that all the fruits and vegetables inside are made of plastic and plaster, and the food aisles themselves are just wallpaper.
* The Interview), the suspect tells the police he will confess to several murders they don't even know about in exchange for some lunch. He confesses in detail while sharing a huge plate of fish and chips with the two cops, but then recants, claiming they intentionally starved him and he made up everything he told them just to get something to eat.
* The interview with @PissPigGranddad begins with a skit imitating the many
* The interview with scientist Francis Collins was heavily edited to misconstrue Dr. Collins' arguments.
* The in the regular one, his angstlessness plays a very important role in keeping the Justice League from going off the deep end.
* The intial murder case in "Harm" ends with the suspect fleeing the country to a non-extraditable location, so they can't even confirm that he did it. What's more, because it's mentioned only briefly and because of how much the
* The Intimates and incendiary fingernail projectiles are a side-effect of her summer romance with an alien.
* The Intimates claims to have a boyfriend in Niagara Falls when Dead Kid Fred approaches her. Destra is incredibly sexy and could easily get a real boyfriend at the drop of a hat, but none of the boys at her boarding school interest her, hence the lie.
* The Intimates didn't want to play football (he prefers golf), but his dad made him. He's not so sure he wants to be a superhero either (he's more into space travel), but his dad doesn't want to hear it.
* The Intimates doesn't dress like a wannabe hood rat, but definitely talks like one. He does so to put on a "tough" or "cool" front. Other characters notice, and sometimes even insult him for it.
* The Intimates me, okay?" The counselor naturally assumes Punchy is talking about himself.
* The Intimates Punchy, meanwhile, is an egocentric alpha male, always insulting Duke and bossing him around.
* The Intimates's rules, but wearing them over his eyes all day would be uncomfortable and pointless
* The Intimates, Sykes is transported to a government research lab with his hands and feet bound to a wheelchair. Sykes exists in a state of near-total catatonia, incapable of speech or anything but the simplest physical action, but his handlers didn't want to get caught with their pants down in case he suddenly developed the ability to try something.
* The Intimates tend to skew this way, especially the "Teen Tips". "Teen Relationship Tip: Have sex early so you can get better at it sooner." "Teen Behavioral Tip: When frustrated by life, feel free to act out your aggressions." "Teen Empowerment Tips: Embrace feelings of insecurity, ambivalence, frustration, anxiety, and confusion." Those are all just in the first two issues.

* The Intimates, though he's severely emotionally damaged from his days as a superhero. Interestingly, during the Vietnam conflict, he was a conscientious objector and was stripped of his rank for three years. He also sees more value in yoga than most examples would.
* The Intimates was abruptly cancelled after 12 issues due to several members of its creative team moving to other, more high-profile books, and thus the series ends on a cliffhanger with the main characters running away from the Seminary.
* The Intrepid Girlbot, where its transformation into a cyborg made no change to the raccoon apart from having to deal with its newfound destructive capabilities.
* The intro also depicted a car crashing through a railing and flying through the air befoe crashing to the ground in a massive explosion.
* The intro (and possibly some endings, depending on the player's karma) sequences of
* The intro and the chorus of "United State of Pop 2009 (Blame It on the Pop)" focus on the many different genres and music styles.
* The introduction attributed to the Carmpan observer points out that all of the suffering and misery that humans have ever endured due to war has finally been justified, because the only thing that will preserve life anywhere is humans' meticulously refined ability to commit bloody mayhem.
* The introduction of Amber as a name after the mid-20th century has been attributed to Kathleen Windsor's sweeping historical romance
* The introduction of Black Lily and the Broker shows us how (non-)human trafficking is rarely what the term makes us perceive it as, and same with its "resource gathering" if it is considered analogous to "sex work". It also shows that, in many ways, the problems in both institutions can be chalked up to the government regulating them without understanding them.
* The introduction of Carrier ships into the game has led to many comparisons to WWII, especially with their growing prominence pushing out previously battle ship style capitol ships.
* The introduction of online updates to video games can make the criticisms more valid: unlike a new sequel that can simply be
* The introduction of Primaris Marines and cooperation with Aeldari in 8th Edition. The Imperium of Man is so hidebound they're cocooned in leather and deeply xenophobic. Innovation, ESPECIALLY with one of the Emperors Great Works, and cooperation with aliens to boot? Uh-oh.
* The introduction of several boss characters was accompanied by rumors on how to get them to appear and/or weaken them. The best example would be several versions of the same "method" to get pushover boss Mano to appear, which involve either killing certain enemies, letting certain enemies spawn, or both at once. In truth, the boss spawns every hour from when it is killed.
* The introduction of Spookybot and quick resolution of Bubbles and Faye's problems with Corpse Witch is arguably another example.
* The introduction of the 4-2-4 in the 1950s was the catalyst for the almost complete domination of football formations since by a defensive block comprising the goalkeeper, two fullbacks and two central defenders.
* The introduction of the backpass rule (penalising a team for a goalkeeper picking up the ball after being it is passed by one of their team-mates) in 1992 killed the then-current metagame tactic where a team in possession would work the ball back to their goalkeeper, who would pick it up then launch it right down the field towards the opposition goal. This happened after the staid 1990 World Cup. Prior to this, goalkeepers were required to do little more than save shots, pick up the ball & boot it all the way up to the other side of the field. This rule change was the start of goalkeepers actually using their feet to pass to their defenders instead of just firing it up field.
* The introduction of the Chameleon Arch in Season 3 opens up some great potential for crossovers, since it means that
* The introduction of the Devil's Trap at the end of Season One. Apparently Sam and Dean, two of the most experienced hunters out there, not to mention their father, didn't know about a magic chalk circle which could trap demons. As soon as Bobby uses it, suddenly everyone with even basic awareness of demons can make one, and it starts appearing everywhere as a primary security measure.

* The introduction of the first Avatar, Wan, in the episode "Beginnings Pt. 1" of the
* The introduction of the Positions characters use in combat is simplified by presenting Fishermen as using simple close-range weapons, and the first season at least contains no examples of their mid-range "Reel" weapons being used in combat either. Thus, it's left unexplained why they are called Fishermen at all, since this is presumably because of the Reels.
* The introduction of Zhao back in season 1. He quickly establishes himself as a
* The introduction sequence of Undyne the Undying is extremely long, but if you lose to her and reload, it thankfully becomes much shorter (unless you quit the game, then do it again, in which case you'll get the full cutscene again the first time around).
* The introductions of the Nod and GDI commandos are both cases of this. The Nod commando's initial appearance is as an untrackable, cloaked, and impossibly precise killing machine gunning down whole GDI squads by herself. The GDI commando, meanwhile, is an unkillable juggernaut with superhuman strength and a railgun capable of blowing soldiers to ribbons, but is still a surprisingly clever tactician who outwits
* The introduction to The Blanks' live show includes referring to the band as something along the lines of "The best a cappella group ever to sing in the halls of a
* The introduction videos of Monster Hunter and Monster Hunter Unite take care to show the weapons and armor being forged in loving detail. The surprising part is that unlike many of the other works that simply use forging scenes for drama, these scenes show the loving amount of work required to make the works of art that you as the hunter who collected the materials to get them. The game even takes it a step further to show the fantastic side of the process by showing how the parts of the creatures will factor in the creation like pouring molten metal on a Rathalos Tail spine to fill in the gaps of the tail grooves.
* The introduction was rerecorded, but unfortunately a technician inadvertently used the flubbed tape with Haines' joke. Haines was fired; the technician was merely suspended.
* The introductory adventure in the D&D Basic set in the 1980's (which would likely be a Player's first experience with the game) featured a villain named Bargle the Infamous. While he was rather tame as far as villains go overall, and he did not appear in any other published work, his crime in the adventure - murdering the beautiful female cleric Aleena - left quite an impression and had the potential to make him the Player Characters' hated enemy. (Depending on just how far the DM was willing to expand the character.)
* The intro for the later seasons shows a diaper falling from the sky and landing on Dil's head.
* The intro has Patrick Bateman performing a murder that is completely unlike any of the crimes from his own story.
* The intro of "Another Holiday", a German summer hit by "The Other Ones", is a sound of
* The intro of the second season features a snake crawling over the opening titles, and being dragged back into shot by black-gloved hands when it leaves the screen too quickly. Hardly anyone nowadays knows this is a parody of the opening titles from
* The intro, sixty seconds of uncannily tall and skinny cartoon hippies jamming.
* The intro to "Doomsday" by Mephiskapheles has an idiot saying: "Ayayayayayay! Ay, what's this button for?"
* The intro to "Hardware Store" features a hammer, an unspecified power tool, and a hand saw.
* The intro to "Lolani" shows Kirk squinting at a book he is trying to read in his quarters, a reference to his need for reading glasses in
* The intro to "Punks" by Black Tiger Sex Machine includes a radio transmission of this nature: "We are surrounded...requesting immediate evac...there's too many of them! Aghh—-"

* The intro to The Lonely Island's "I'm On a Boat!" (most of song NSFW)
* The intro to the original game contains an implication (that the game is basically a kid making his toys "fight") that you can either accept or ignore — whichever is more fun.
* The intro to "Wish You Were Here" was produced so as to make it sound like Dave Gilmour was playing along with a radio. (They even included a subtle heterodyne pitch-wavering in the background, as if the station had bad reception.)
* The intro track to "The Iceberg/Freedom Of Speech, Just Watch What You Say!" by Ice T, ''
* the intro video Though, of course, other factions of the Hivers proved more talkative, as well as all the other playable species out there.
* The Intruders has a nasty one named Hollow Face, a sort of storybook monster who steals children's faces.
* The Intruders, most of the characters around the protagonist simply exist to be the audience's "suspects". The actual antagonist lives deep inside the house.
* The Inuit and other Arctic peoples had mixed opinions about polar bears. On one hand, they are the biggest living terrestrial carnivore, so they were obviously feared. On the other, their mythologies usually held the polar bear with a lot of respect, as a sacred shamanic symbol.
* The in-universe charity Heroes Without Borders has a light form as part of their organizational culture. Everyone who works for them, powered or not, adopts a codename.
* The in-universe explanation for how the "Girl Power" system works in
* The in-universe explanation for how the Vault-tec Assisted Targeting System (V.A.T.S.) operates in
* The in-universe fluff regarding the Thresher Battlemech, which is a serious
* The in-universe opening credits in "Porky's Preview" claim that Porky's draft number is 6 7/8,
* The in-universe reason for why the Third Doctor spent most of his tenure confined to Earth because the Time Lords disabled his TARDIS, and UNIT recruited him as their Scientific Advisor. The real-life reason is because the BBC slashed the show's budget, and the producers didn't have the money to convincingly depict alien worlds quite so often. Notably, this influenced the development of two memorable alien races that were introduced during the Pertwee era: the Autons (who were written to look like plastic mannequins so that they didn't require expensive prosthetics) and the Silurians (who were written as humanity's reptilian
* The in-universe reason that this game has a stamina meter and the others don't is that Snake is still recovering from the beating he got from The Boss in the prologue. In said prologue Snake loses stamina far slower. And when Eva gets hurt she loses stamina even faster than Snake.
* The Inuzuka clan's signature attacks: Tsuuga (Passing Fang) and Gatsuuga (Fang Passing Fang). The latter being a
* The Invaders (1967) after getting lost "looking for a short cut that he never found".
* The Invaders (1967), a little old lady with suspiciously stiff little fingers does this in front of the approaching car of David Vincent's business partner.
* The Invaders (1967), any evidence that David Vincent could have gathered on the Invaders disappears before he can show it to someone else.
* The Invaders (1967) as a man who accidentally sees a flying saucer land and can't convince people that we've been invaded. They use the infiltration method, altering their bodies to look like humans. Because of the year there was a lot of heavy handed storylines involving race and the youth culture.
* The Invaders (1967) featured a lone Concerned Citizen fighting an alien infiltration. Just as he started to gain some helpers, the show was canceled.
* The Invaders (1967) of what the Invaders have planned for Earth and want to stop it. The series ends before we learn if they might have any luck stopping the invasion, though.

* The Invaders (1967) taking place. It doesn't help that the evidence has a nasty habit of disappearing right in front of his eyes and the people he goes to for help have a nasty tendency to be alien agents. However, by the end of the series he does manage to convince a few humans who have also had alien encounters to help his cause.
* The Invaders (Marvel) can manipulate the light spectrum to create offensive blasts, as well as holograms and hard light constructs.
* The Invaders (Marvel) wanted to marry his two most perfect warriors, Master Man and Warrior Woman, to breed a race of Nazi supermen.
* The Invaders (Marvel). When Thor realized his mistake and returned to Asgard, the heroes lost all memory of the day's events, explaining why Cap and Namor never mentioned this encounter when they met Thor again decades later.
* The Invaders Space Marine chapter destroyed the Eldar Craftworld Idharae. The survivors of Idharae who joined Craftworld Alaitoc, returned the favor by destroying the Invaders fortress-monastery. The chapter is reduced to 300 marines, and lost many of their weapons.
* The Invader. Unfortunately it only attracts attention everywhere it goes, and the police eventually shoot the host, killing the alien as well. Turns out the host it chose was a gorilla from a zoo.
* The invading Souls are also a pseudo-religion, as their impetus to overrun other planets isn't genetic, but rather seen as 'the right thing to do.'
* The "Invasion!" adventure and supplementary material focusing on the githyanki included this as one of the minor details about their society and military. There's a general uniform style among their soldiers, but each is allowed to customize it as a nod to the idea that they're not faceless conscripts, but all individuals working together voluntarily — an important distinction to the githyanki, given their history as a former slave race used as menial labor and cannon fodder. It crops up in how they fight, too, for in mass combat they perform a few big coordinated moves taking advantage of some innate magic powers they all share, then break up into individual styles and skirmishes.
* "The Invasion"" by having Sarah Jane and the Doctor respectively say they "used to work for UNIT in the Seventies, or was it the Eighties?").
* The invasion force from the Day of Black Sun, made up of the Gang's allies from the two remaining nations opposing the war.
* The Invasion. It makes you wonder who to root for. The main character even appears to be uncertain in the last scene.
* The Invasion it's inaccurate (including convincing the studio that no-one knows what the Cybermen were called, so they become the Zexians).
* the invasion of Normandy, the Americans would open with "Flash," counter with "Thunder," and confirm with "Welcome." This hinges on the fact that a German would pronounce it "Velcome," and caused problems for some German paratroopers that defected, as well as some German- and Yiddish-speaking Jews who had fled German rule and joined the US Army.
* "The Invasion of Time": After the Fourth Doctor fails to operate his sonic screwdriver, he announces "even the sonic screwdriver won't get me out of this one," presumably to himself, and fixes the camera with a brief stare.
* The Invasion of Time", Borusa postfixes his comments with "I meant no disrespect."
* "The Invasion of Time" gets invaded. The President puts in place a curfew, ejects a lot of revered Time Lords due to their political pasts and deactivates the planet's most vital defence systems, all at the behest of the invaders.
* The Invasion of Time" has the Time Lord weapon, the DeMat Gun, which can accomplish this. It effectively erases the target from history, so that it never existed in the first the place.
* "The Invasion of Time" Partially spoiled by the BBC announcer who called it a six-part serial from the start, confirming that things wouldn't be resolved by the end of Episode 4.
* "The Invasion of Time": The De-Mat gun not only erases its target from history, but erases itself after being fired, as well as a bit of the wielder's memory.

* The Invasion of Time", the planet Gallifrey is shown to have a large force field protecting it from being attacked.
* "The Invasion of Time", there are also native Galifreyans called Outsiders who live outside the city and still hunt with bows and arrows.
* "The Invasion of Time" the Sontarans (when the Doctor, having tricked the Vardans into thinking he was a collaborator, deals with them only to discover that the Sontarans were manipulating the Vardans).
* "The Invasion of Time" was also a pseudonym used by the BBC; "Agnew" is the credited writer of "The Invasion of Time", as another story had been discarded at the last minute and the script editor and producer had to write it themselves. Since giving screen credits to BBC production staff required a long and arduously bureaucratic approval process, the pseudonym was used as a quick workaround.
* The Invasion on Google with no quotation marks. In another scene, many people are avoiding showing emotion to avoid the body snatchers. They tell the protagonist not to show emotion, then one of them snaps. The entire group, minus the protagonist, then fails to escape, even though nothing was stopping them beyond fear of a railway line (the alternative being captured by monsters and, for all they know, killed). In early scenes, the sense of paranoia is ruined when groups of people who very blatantly have something wrong with them are roaming around, long before anything being wrong with them is introduced as a concept.
* The Invasion", Routledge attempts to shoot Tobias Vaughn, but Vaughn convinces Routledge to shoot himself. This scene was filmed, but was cut before transmission. It was restored in the novelisation.
* The invasion seemed like an overwhelming success at first. At that time, the Red Army was going through a complete overhaul of its equipment, training, and doctrine which aimed to turn it into an effective modern fighting force. Stalin was aware of his vulnerability during this transition, but convinced himself that he could use his diplomatic skills to preserve the non-aggression pact with Hitler at least through 1941, so that when his intelligence sources tried to warn him an invasion was immanent he refused to hear it. Thus, the Red Army was not prepared to defend the border or counter a German
* "The Invasion", the villain, a fascistic industrialist, has a factory/headquarters in London, and a factory in the countryside which looks identical on the inside. The Doctor's companion Jamie points this out, and the villain says something like that efficiency and uniformity are important.
* "The Invasion", they defeat the Cybermen in a conventional battle and their coordination with the RAF and the Russians sees them win the day with the Doctor taking a backseat to most of it.
* The Invasion, who appeared in the 1978 version, both times as someone whose partner gets assimilated.
* The invasive Argentine ant has a very peculiar characteristic: unlike most ants, which will attack ants of the same species but from a different colony, the Argentine ant recognizes its own species, so instead of fighting like most other ants do, two different Argentine ant colonies will actually merge into a single larger supercolony! This is what makes them so dangerous: they can have massive colonies spanning miles, with dozens, even hundreds of queens each, and their immense armies displace and wipe out any native ants in their path.
* The Invention Exchange skits which kicked off most of Joel's episodes were specifically devised to make use of Joel's skills as a prop comedian. That's why they were dropped when Mike took over.
* The invention of a "Bliss" drug led to the collapse of civilization for generations.
* The Invention of Hugo Cabret is a book about the history of film and was heavily inspired by the author's love of early movies; as a result, most of it is told in the form of pictures, with a fade in/fade out at the beginning and end, and only the bits where there are dialogue are rendered as text.
* The invention of language, enabling the direct transmission of information from individual to individual.
* The Invention of Love, and he asks him about that outright. He seems to deny it at first, protesting against the expression, but starts expounding male-friendships in a way that made Jackson understand that yes, he actually is.

* The Invention of Lying"), and he didn't intend for other people to start believing in it.
* The Invention of Lying: In a world where people can't lie, imagination and fiction are non-existent, and movies consist of a person lecturing people on historical events. Mark, who develops the ability to lie, creates a fictional history about aliens visiting Babylon, and later a story about a talking duck, they become the highest-grossing films of all time.
* The Invention of Lying of it. Taken to the ultimate extreme in that not only do they have no concept of lying, they have no concept of withholding the truth. Many times a character would not have had to lie simply by not saying anything but this doesn't seem to be an option either. Apparently this also means never using tact, as a character invariably blurts out the worst possible answer to anything.
* The Invention of Lying: The basis of this movie is that everyone tells the absolute truth all the time. So when Mark shows up early for a blind date with Allison she tells him she's just been masturbating.
* The Invention of Lying: The movie is a comedy until it turns to the serious and heavy of religion when Mark invents the concept of heaven to comfort his ill mother.
* The Invention of Lying, yet all the countries seem to be the same, there was still a black plague in the thirteenth century, Napoleon still conquered half the world, Coke is still competing with Pepsi, etc. And despite Christianity not existing in the film's universe, the calendar still ended up exactly identical to the Gregorian calendar. Think about it: how did they decide what year to mark as 1?
* The invention of the cash register and quite a few of its upgrades is a result of this trope. A cash box can easily be opened and stolen from. The addition of the paper roll added a way to keep track of all the day's sales. The bell ringing when the register opened was a way of alerting the manager/owner to a sale being made. The tactic of "odd pricing" (prices ending in .99 or .95) was designed, in addition to making the price look lower, to ensure that the register
* The invention of the "hyper-atomic" jump drives, which allows ships to travel in hyperspace, predates the recorded history of the galactic empire. While one could theoretically travel across the entire galactic disk in one jump, you'd need to first determine your exact position in space and then carefully calculate the relative trajectory of your destination from astronomical observations and manuals. All speed and distance is nil in hyperspace, and the whole galaxy is nothing but a dimensionless point (hence the idea that one could cross it easily). Transit takes less than a second, and is described as a momentary, blink-and-you'll-miss-it feeling of weightlessness. A
* The invention of the printing press, the radio, the television and the internet. All of which has lead into a new era of entertainment that changed forever.
* The invention of the telephone not only prompted screeds bemoaning the impending death of literacy (because no one would need to write letters anymore), it also prompted widespread panic among law enforcement agencies, who realized that it allowed criminal gangs to conspire and plan crimes
* The inventor of the Nutty Buddy, which he claims is a vast improvement over the previous design of the athletic cup, frequently demonstrates its effectiveness by taking a hit to the groin from a
* The inventory system encourages this as well, as it's cheaper to make alts to store excess gear than to invest in the largest bags in the game. Early on in the games history, nearly every serious player had at least one if not more "bank alts"; the addition of guild banks in
* The inverse (a human concealed inside a robotic alien suit) happens often in
* The inverse happens as well: Sikozu's race is incompatible with translator microbes, but fortunately, is able to learn languages extremely easily. Her first scene with Crichton involves him teaching her English (presumably, she's already learned most of the other species' languages). This
* The inverse has happened as well: With Tokyo hosting the 2020 Summer Olympics, anime fans got upset over the immense boost in tourism to Japan it would bring in.

* The inverse idea is generally espoused by the New Testament writers: we should love and forgive others, because God loves and has forgiven us.
* The inverse is also often true for other people in Asia- Filipinos and other Southeast Asians have complained that Disney often hold contests but excludes anyone from outside Malaysia or Singapore from participating. This despite Filipinos, Thais, Vietnamese and Indonesians getting a different feed of Disney Asia (as in the whole region feed) from Singapore and Malaysia- they could've just advertise it on the Malaysian and Singaporean feed instead of
* The inverse is also true for the movie — Patrick grows to love Kat because she's not afraid of or especially impressed by him, unlike most of the student body.
* The inverse of this (in terms of order) sometimes happens in spraying pesticide. Rats eat plenty of bugs, which then snakes eat plenty of, which birds like hawks eat.
* The inverse of this is called YIMBY (Yes In My Back Yard), which includes things like parks, schools, hospitals and police stations. A good strategy is to balance out the NIMBY with YIMBY. (Sure you're living next to a pollution factory, but look at the nice trees!)
* the inverse of this trope is also criticized due to the fact that the main lawyer(s) will often exchange dialogue that completely gives away what you're supposed to do.
* The inverse was also true with American GIs marrying foriegn women and bringing them back to the US with them.
* The inversion continues with the fact that 3 out of the 4 fighters will just reappear in the real world when their hit points reach zero. That said, there were a couple episodes where this was played some degree of straight; the first featured the heroes being stuck in an alternate version of reality and at risk for deletion if they attempted to go into the VR world and the second featured the villain disconnecting the scanners used to go between VR and reality, not only putting the characters at risk of death but removing their pain dampeners (when Yumi takes a hit, she's rendered immobile for a good while and while Odd handles the pain better, he's obviously
* The inversion is also apparent in the Life Fiber-powered Goku Uniforms and the vastly more powerful Kamui, which are
* The inversion is hammered home when we see that Australia, usually first on the list of throwaway countries, managed to

* The inverted atomic drop was often substituted for a vertical suplex or a running bulldog. As it was rare for Bret to actually go straight to a successful Sharpshooter, this led to the chain still being five moves long.
* The inverted variation (having it in drive while trying to reverse) occurs in
* The inverted version appears in: Nathan Ingram sold the Machine to the US government for $1. Not knowing about this, a government official tries to force Nathan to make changes to the Machine by threatening to withhold Nathan's payment. Nathan and Finch have a good chuckle at that.
* The inverted version has happened numerous times in real life, usually either selling something for $1 or working for $1 a year. Although most of these people working on $1 salaries are
* The Inverted World has been pulling itself in pursuit of the optimum. It is a truly Sisyphean effort: even if the City reaches optimum, they cannot rest, because optimum is always moving. The City is doomed to struggle to move 1/10 a mile a day, every day, forever; an unending pursuit of the unattainable.
* The Inverted World, the City is laboriously dragged forward on rails through the distorted landscape outside to keep up with the translat optimum. People's ages are even measured in miles...
* The Inverted World. The human inhabitants of the City, due to a highly-skewed gender ratio, realize that the only way to keep the City's population up is to interbreed with the (apparently human) natives of the strange world they're trapped in. They thus begin bringing native women to the City to bear children — willingly or otherwise.

* The Inverted World, the inhabitants of the City regard the native "tooks" as hopelessly primitive, and savagely exploit them. Then it turns out the villages they've encountered so far were just the most badly impoverished in the area — word of the City's rape and pillage has spread to other villages, ones that have rifles and grenades...
* The Inverted World the inhabitants of the mobile city are told that they, originally colonists from Earth, are bottled in because of the harsh environment of their alien planet. Only the elites are allowed to go outside and know the real truth.
* The Inverted World, which is in the shape of a rotating hyperboloid. North of optimum, where the circumference of the world grows exponentially smaller and the speed of its rotation correspondingly slower, time moves faster. South of optimum, where the circumference of the world grows exponentially larger and the speed of its rotation correspondingly greater, time moves slower.
* The Investigation Discovery channel lives on this trope. Sometimes it gets borderline pornographic, since they often recreate scenes of people having torrid affairs in extreme detail.
* The investigation into Gaines also led to suspicions that he and other officers were involved in the fatal drive-by shooting of
* The investigation into the pad fire which took the lives of the Apollo 1 crew revealed a number of major design flaws in the spacecraft which might otherwise have gone undetected until later in the program and could have resulted in the United States missing the end-of-decade deadline for a manned lunar landing set by President Kennedy. The redesign was also one of the key factors that saved the ill-fated Apollo 13 mission.
* The investigation of the triple murder of the Rogers women in 1989 in Tampa, Florida, had been about to be shut down before Jo Ann Steffey, a resident of Tampa, saw that her neighbor's appearance and handwriting matched that displayed on billboards asking for help in finding the killer and reported her suspicions to the police. Her neighbor, Oba Chandler, was arrested, tried and convicted for the murders in 1994 and executed in 2011.

* The Investigators, a dirty cop stole a bunch of money from drug dealers that he was arresting, and raped one of the dealers' girlfriends. Unfortunately, the girl was the grand-daughter of the local Mafia boss, who didn't take it well. The cop was later arrested and jailed, but mysteriously disappeared from jail and whose remains were found later tied to a stump in a swamp where feral hogs were prevalent.

* The Invincible Fist and it contains hidden projectile launchers on it's front.
* The Invincible Gladiators, starring Richard Harrison as a gladiator.
* The Invincible Iron Man 150, Iron Man and Dr. Doom were time displaced to Camelot, and met King Arthur. But Dr. Doom was not interested in him, but in King Arthur's sister: Morgan Le Fey. Doom wanted Le Fey to train him into the black magic, and Le Fey requested in exchange that Doom led an army against King Arthur (a spell prevented her from leaving the castle herself). She had a piece of the Excalibur sword, which allowed her to raise an army composed of all those who died by that sword and wanted vengeance against its wielder.
* The Invincible Iron Man, the leader of the four elemental mini-bosses and The Dragon to the mystically powered Mandarin is an actual dragon, the physically dominating Fin Fang Foom, who gives Iron-man his toughest battle, where the magically powered Mandarin is defeated by reaching out to the Mandarin's host and convincing her to cut the Mandarin's power at its source, the magic rings.

The larva hatched and escaped through the Doctor's tear ducts, but the Doctor forced it to grow to human size using his TARDIS's dimensional stabiliser and killed it.
* "The Invisible Enemy" has small clones of the Doctor and Leela created to go inside his body and fight one of these.
* The Invisible Enemy", The Doctor creates clones of himself and Leela, who have the memories of their originals. K-9 and the Doctor do explain that these clones are really more like a biological photocopy than proper clones, hence their shortened lifespans
* The Invisible Fran, Franny criticizes a piece of graffiti left by the Two-Headed Robot that reads "The Principal has a Rubber Butt". The narration later mentions Franny having made inaccurate speculations on butts when explaining how discovering that the robot intends to destroy the school's library books angers Franny more than the robot's other acts of vandalism.
* The Invisible Fran, Franny gets the idea to become invisible and whisper suggestions into her friends' heads to lure them into pursuing mad science like she does after seeing her chameleon use its camouflage ability to sneak up on her dog Igor.
* The Invisible Guest unfolds in flashbacks as the protagonist, who is accused of murder, retells his story to a witness trainer who is there to help him tighten up his case for his court appearance next day.

* The Invisible Kid on the Internet calls this a "TFI" — True Femmes Invisible. Contrast "FFI" — Fading Femmes Invisible — which is what you call it when clothing goes invisible, too.
* The Invisible Library angry, the atmosphere does indeed start to thicken.
* The Invisible Library as a servant in a school, a task which included cleaning floors and eating porridge for breakfast every day. She hopes that her next assignment will enable her to live in a luxury hotel with her undercover identity.
* The Invisible Library do not age while they are there. They are sent out to all kinds of parallel universes to acquire books that are unique to those universes, sometimes by illegal means. Taking these books to the Library helps to stabilize reality in their home universes, defending the humans there from being conquered by the forces of Order (dragons) or Chaos (faerie).

* The Invisible Library, especially books that are unique to one reality.
* The Invisible Library is that she took her chosen name from Irene Adler.
* The Invisible Library like people to have strong feelings for them — whether that's love or hate doesn't matter, they will take both. They are considered evil by the librarians, and while some people work together with them, most humans agree that they are dangerous — which doesn't stop them from going to the parties thrown by the elf ambassador of Liechtenstein. Of course, Lord Silver has no scruples about hypnotizing humans, so not everyone may be there out of their own free will...
* The Invisible Library tend to fall into typical fantasy tropes because the Fae like to imagine that they are the heroes of their own stories.
* The Invisible Library that collects rare books from every different version of reality (referred to as "alternates").
* The Invisible Library, which horrifies Irene, as elves are consistently evil (the stronger ones can travel between the worlds, so every parallel universe has the same elves.)
* The Invisible Life of Addie LaRue by V. E. Schwab is a historical fantasy. And a romance. And a modern-day suspense. And a tour of depression and mental illness. And a question about the meaning of life.
* The Invisible Man (1933) even has a heroic take with Griffin's grandson using the formula to go undercover and fight Nazis.
* The Invisible Man (1933) has the eponymous character follow his target this way. Made easier by the fact that, well, he's invisible. Ignore the fact that he's also naked in the middle of winter hanging onto the side of a speeding car...
* The Invisible Man (1933), this becomes Griffin's plan after he goes insane.
* The Invisible Man 1958 that made him (and the clothes he was wearing at the time) invisible; they just don't because they still don't have a way to undo it.
* The Invisible Man (2020) accomplice, he's got personal motive to overlook the act as well.
* The Invisible Man (2020)'s attempts to control and manipulate those around them, to the point that many people found this to be the most disturbing part (especially for viewers who have experienced domestic abuse).
* The Invisible Man (2020): The titular invisible man this time is Adrian Griffin, a young, handsome, and wealthy optics magnate who lived in a large, stark-looking house with his girlfriend Cecilia prior to his "death". However, he was also abusive and controlling, and uses his technology to torment Cecilia.
* The Invisible Man also uses invisibility to steal and tries to plunge England into a reign of terror.
* The Invisible Man, Darien and Hobbes come across a young woman who has been injected with a retrovirus designed to make her smarter. In addition to her tattered clothes and off-putting manner, the fact that she's walking across glass barefoot without noticing makes it clear that something is very wrong.
* The Invisible Man flung down the stairs. Considering how quickly he recovers from this, it seems this trope is in play and that being choked and thrown had more to do with him falling than him getting hit in the groin.
* The Invisible Man, forcing him to use it to tell who his friends are.
* The Invisible Man frequently used Western terrorists, including Swiss and Canadian terrorists.
* The Invisible Man gland, he can now become invisible at will. A dream come true for a thief. However, he needs regular injections of a counteragent that prevents him from going insane from quicksilver overdose, a deliberate flaw in the gland. Despite now working for a secret government agency, Darien still has plenty of roguish qualities, who loves to use his new ability to sneak into places he shouldn't (like spy on a guard and a nurse getting it on). However, in the series finale, the flaw in the gland is finally fixed, allowing him to be free from the Agency. The first thing he does is rob a place, only to leave the money on the sidewalk when he realizes he's not the same guy anymore.

* The Invisible Man" gland in his head that allows him to become invisible. He is kept in check by the fact that only the Agency can produce the "counteragent" necessary to keep him from going insane. That doesn't mean that his criminal skills don't come in handy, though.
* The Invisible Man gland to be the prototype, then that could still qualify.
* The Invisible Man has a similar case, when Darien is pretending to have defected to the villain's side. Accordingly, they ask him to take out one of their other bio-enhanced agents, one who Darien has romantic feelings for. Darien, not being an idiot, realizes that it's a test of loyalty when he shows up to dinner with his date looking awfully chunky thanks to the bulletproof vest under her sweater.
* The Invisible Man has Claire accidentally injected with an experimental truth serum which causes constant babbling, paranoia, and loss of inhibitions. It's played for drama when she struggles to resist revealing secrets about the Quicksilver program and laughs when she starts trying to violate Darien.
* The Invisible Man), he returns all the money before anybody even realizes it was stolen, and eventually goes back to his old job...but demands a higher salary for both himself and his partner, and the re-hiring of the scientist who cured him against orders.
* The Invisible Man: He's a recently reformed thief with an invisibility gland in his head. He's a jaded veteran and paranoid conspiracy theorist who's been fired from every other government agency in existence. They fight crime!
* The Invisible Man him sane. (Naturally, only the Agency has that, forcing Darien to work for them.)
* The Invisible Man, human genetic memory is encoded in "memory RNA", but can only be accessed by someone with a Quicksilver gland in their head. This led to problems when Fawkes started to be affected by the memories of the gland's first owner.
* The Invisible Maniac has killed multiple girls after stripping them topless, the climactic battle leaves the killer's fate ambiguous (to the public); then at the end of the film, a female news anchor reporting on the story is suddenly stripped topless by an unseen force and screams as she rushes to cover herself with her arms...
* The Invisible Man in the same particle accelerator before turning it on.
* The Invisible Man involved Darian being implanted with a gland that can turn him invisible, after which he has to be taught how to activate it, and then he experiments with it and learns to do things the scientists who developed the gland didn't even think were possible. The first time they get him to go invisible is by releazing tarantulas in a locked room with him. Considering Darien has arachnophobia (and his brother would know), this is a good way to trigger a massive generation of adrenalin necessary to activate the gland. When Darien tries to spy on a nurse and a soldier getting in on, his excitement causes his adrenalin levels to drop... and he gets a black eye from the pissed off soldier. Learning yoga helps control it. In another episode, Kevin Fawkes's RNA is injected into the gland in order to "revive" Kevin's ghost in Darien's body. Naturally, Kevin has to relearn how to use the gland.
* The Invisible Man isn't evil, but he's prone to states of psychosis induced by the invisibility-causing gland in his brain; when he starts to flip out, his eyes go red. But when he gets to the point of no return, his eyes turn silver.
* The Invisible Man — Based on the classic horror novel. 6 black-and-white films between 1933 and 1951, the final one being a comedy.
* The Invisible Man psychopathic rapist, which would've been harder to squeeze into a heroic role than the film's formula-stealing burglar.
* The Invisible Man, so no one would know what Dr. Peter Brady actually looked like.
* The Invisible Man starts every episode with a famous quote, usually foreshadowing the episode's plot.
* The Invisible Man starts out as a lighthearted comedy but takes a darker turn halfway through.
* The Invisible Man. Surprisingly, Darien, being a thief, rarely uses his new ability to steal, except when specifically assigned to do so. He does this in the series finale, only to leave the stolen money on the sidewalk after having a realization that he doesn't want to go back to his old life anymore. In the pilot, he tries to spy on a soldier and a nurse getting it on. Unfortunately for him (and the audience), his ability is controlled by adrenaline, resulting in him inadvertently becoming visible. The soldier is not amused. After getting his black eye taken care of, he learns some yogic techniques which not only give him complete control over his ability but also allow him to cover only parts of his body with "quicksilver" as well as coat other objects with the substance. He later sneaks into the house of his Keeper but stops short of seeing her in the shower (especially since water would make him visible). A character asks him later if he has ever sneaked into the girls' locker room while invisible.

* The Invisible Man takes over his personality with RNA injected in it. He essentially becomes that person.
* The Invisible Man, that he apparently uses when narrating the opening of each episode. Once, his nemesis ambushes him in his apartment by clubbing him over the head with that book.
* The Invisible Man: The gland that secretes quicksilver was genetically engineered. In the pilot, Darien compares it to the atom bomb.
* The Invisible Man the hero does keep detailed notes, but after his death they are kept by his landlord who has dreams of recreating the formula for himself: but (says the author) he never will, because he is too stupid to realise that it takes learning he doesn't have.
* The Invisible Man, the main character, Darian Fawkes, is incarcerated. When he speaks to his partner, Bobby Hobbes, through the glass, Hobbes puts his hand up for Fawkes to touch it. Fawkes, instead, gives him a dirty look.
* The Invisible Man: The Official frequently tries to impress this upon Darien. He wants him to use his invisibility gland to help protect the country. Occasionally if he feels Darien is out of line he goes so far as to withhold the counteragent that prevents Darien from going mad.
* The Invisible Man, there's one episode where the main characters find a man who faked his death by showing his girlfriend a picture of one of the Agency's scientists, an attractive blonde, and claiming the man was having an affair with her. They also plant other signs—lipstick and perfume on one of his shirts, etc. The girlfriend storms off to confront the supposed cheater, leading the main characters right to his hiding place.
* The Invisible Man (though it's more of a psychological thriller than horror)
* The Invisible Man to do with intelligence (Dept. of Fish and Game, Bureau of Indian Affairs, Dept. of Health and Human Services, the US Postal Service...).
* The Invisible Man was a different person, but the common denominator in both films is a man who turns invisible and uses the freedom offered by his new power to go on a rampage.
* The Invisible Man, where someone breaks into a sperm bank that stores donations from men with a high IQ and steals a number of samples. The truth turns out to be a little different.
* The Invisible Man working for the evil agency Crysalis (the details of how the nanobot was implanted are a bit embarrassing to him). The Agency finds out, so they Know that Crysalis know. So they plan to use him as a decoy, but later the secret is ruined, so Crysalis knows that the agency knows that Crysalis knows. And obviously, the Agency knows.
* "The Invisible Mouse" has a variation; when Jerry renders himself invisible with invisible ink, Tom at one point is able to locate him when he sees his shadow.
* The Invisible: Nick resented his mother's stoicism, especially after his father died, thinking she had no actual feelings. While he's missing and presumed dead, he finds her still keeping the facade and rants furiously (and uselessly) at her. She can't see or hear him. Then she upsets a teacup and abruptly breaks down sobbing...
* The Invisible Nudifier, or whatever it is that is sucking everything in the room into the fireplace and out the chimney. Playboy playmate Kym Malin did her own stunts here.

* The Invisible Princess. Mikoto arranges for a gossipy servant to catch her in bed with her beloved, Hydra, to force Queen Arete to allow them to marry despite his status as a commoner and hers as a princess.
* The Invisible Ray, Janos Rukh has invented a telescope that can photograph light rays that will show the Earth's past. He uses it to watch a meteorite fall on Africa, thus starting the plot.
* The Invisibles, a group of English nobles take great pleasure in hunting down the homeless and poor. It's shown in detail in "Royal Monsters".
* The Invisibles. A local cowboy doesn't like the fact that Lord Fanny is transgender and tries to pick a fight. Doesn't go well when the heroes take down entire military bases on their off days.
* The Invisibles. A Mexican god of death tells to a very young Lord Fanny that she has to give her body/soul to a passage to the next level of her ritual to become a witch. She doesn't want to... so she offers the god a joke. A god of death answering with a flat what its just priceless (mostly because a lot of readers were asking themselves the same).
* The Invisibles and the S&M place that King Mob takes the Marquis de Sade to (the Divine Marquis is delighted to see what he has helped unleash on the world).
* The Invisibles by Grant Morrison has some of these early on when Dane and Old Tom trip their way to another London.
* The Invisibles, Dane MacGowan gets the tip of his little finger cut off and devoured. Subsequent artists forgot this and would draw it in from time to time.
* The Invisibles features a brief mention about how Canary Wharf was built to tap into the power of the Southern Dragon Line (which is why they put a pyramid on top of the tower).
* The Invisibles had shades of this at first, being so anarchist he rejected even the minimal and fluid authority of a cell of the Invisibles.
* The Invisibles has a Borstal of Horrors run by malevolent extra-dimensional entities who are consuming the mental independence and imagination of the inmates.
* The Invisibles has King Mob, quipping about how after the fifth time, it doesn't feel like murder anymore.
* The Invisible. She starts out brutal, violent, and dressed in guys' clothes, no to mention the leader of the school bullies. As she realizes the consequences of her violent life, her bad choices, and the fact that Nick was more like her than she gave him credit for, she feminizes — beginning to wear her hair down, and her clothing less gender-neutral.
* The Invisibles) investigates alien parasites who have infiltrated humanity by joining with willing, power-hungry humans at both extremes of society: some of the Invisibles are homeless misfits, while others are political leaders, industrialists and military brass.
* The Invisibles is a lie. There's no massive Manichean struggle of good vs. evil. The outer church is simply an outside intelligence trying to prepare humanity for something mindblowing by essentially inoculating humanity against the horror of the end of the world (which is actually human instrumentality). Think of getting a booster shot. It's not going to kill you, but it's going to prepare your immune system for something worse in the future. To quote Grant Morrison: "In Katmandu, much to my shock and surprise, I experienced [...] a full-on, Tibetan, Sci-Fi Vision of All SpaceTimeMind As A Single Complexifying Iteration Which Is The Larval Form Of A 5th Dimensional Adult Entity".
* The Invisibles is an anarchist with a pirate-themed alter-ego and has a closely-shaved head and an eyepatch. Also, she's a lesbian.
* The Invisibles, Jack Frost later gets to use this power, curing King Mob's lung injury.
* The Invisibles — At one point, Sir Miles and Colonel Friday communicate with one another via dream travel, with Sir Miles appearing in the Dreamscape without his trousers. When Friday makes a snide remark, Sir Miles, unperturbed, calmly points out that it's a common dream image and therefore makes communication easier.

* The Invisible Terror battling De Pix, an international criminal out to get the formula that gives the Terror his powers. He's arrested at the end, and taken to serve a life sentence.
* The Invisible Woman character, the pilot starred Bob Denver as an absent-minded chemist who creates an invisibility potion which is drunk by his niece, an investigative reporter who uses her new powers to crack stories.
* The Invisible Woman, she goes to kick her boss's behind. Among other things.
* The Invisible Woman, the title character, while able to turn invisible, was naked when she did so (justified because her clothes could not turn invisible along with her) making many audiences at the time regard the film as slightly risqué.
* The invitation can also be forced. In a later episode, Sookie and Eric are talking on the porch, when Eric hears something inside with his super-hearing. He nearly slams Sookie into the wall and forces her to invite him in. This was to protect her, though, as there was a werewolf waiting inside.
* The Iokath Species. However, despite their dedication to weapons, they were not actually violent and expansionist in nature, and provided survivors of their weapons with reparations so that they would be able to rebuild their civilizations, if only so they can be tested again at a later date.

* The iPhone is not the first smartphone ever, but you'd be hard pressed to find a modern smart phone not influenced by it.
* The iPhone is showing this isn't quite as bad as one thought, if done really well.
* The iPhone keyboard switches to an alternate layout for some apps' (such as Twitter and Discord) text input, replacing the Enter key with the @ and # keys, so you end up having to switch to one of the symbols layers just to make a linebreak. If you're thinking of using a third-party keyboard to get around this, think again, because most of those keyboards do the same. The SwiftKey keyboard gets around this by enforcing the Enter key on the main layer, and some third-party Twitter apps do not force this "social symbols in place of Enter" behavior.

* Their 1977 minor hit, "Wondrous Stories", was more soft-rock and folksy (well, with heavy Mellotrons and synthesizers) than the band's usual style of the time.
* Their 2015 logo got this reaction from people due to the font changing from something more unique to a bland serif font, making it lose its character.
* Their 2017 single "Weekend Woman" is effectively a drastically reworked version of "Burning Sun", an outtake from their 2001 self-titled album: The verse melody is identical, but the arrangement is very different, most of the lyrics are changed, and new bridge and chorus sections have been added.
* Their 8e army book is instructive. Supposedly, these books list great feats of badassery for the army they're explaining/advertising, to make the player hyped about using them. For example, the Empire taking the lead in repulsing a continent-scale invasion in the Great War Against Chaos, or the Greenskins overwhelming the (weakened) former dwarf empire in the Goblin Wars. * The Iranian IRGC (or Revolutionary Guard) acts like this. They even take pride in it, their unofficial motto being that their "order is in their lack of order". Military ranks mean little in practice, with common soldiers and high ranking officers interacting casually on daily basis and having people of lower rank serve in "higher" positions compared to those of higher rank isn't that rare (like a Major being the direct commanding officer of a colonel) and their apparent lack of strategy and order used to drive the more disciplined Army crazy during Iran-Iraq war. However, arguably, this is their strength (specially since any conflict they were ever involved in was a guerrilla war or one in which they were heavily out numbered and out gunned). It's next to impossible to break their command structure and conflicting or nonsensical orders that can unhinge most militaries don't effect them since unit commanders (and even common soldiers) are taught when to "disobey a direct order" so they'll just ignore weird orders and do their thing. During the Iran-Iraq war, units caught behind enemy lines, with no means of communication, were as effective as any other unit.

* Their Bond herself) is haunted by memories of having to behead ReDead children during the war.
* Their Bond, Impa has been Zelda's Guardian since her birth. Impa was the closest thing Zelda had to a mother growing up, while Impa considered her a mixture of sibling, daughter, and trainee. In adulthood, Zelda finds her relationship with Impa changing to become far less familial than it used to be. The ethics of this relationship are discussed in chapter 42. A psychiatrist eases Impa's worries, clarifying that she didn't groom Zelda and that their relationship is neither unnatural nor psuedo-incestuous.
* Their Bond, Princess Zelda's kingdom has been in war with Ganondorf's army for years. Unknown to most, Ganondorf also tortured Zelda for years on end, physically, sexually, and mentally. Zelda is the one who kills Ganondorf with her bare hands, putting an end to the several-year war.
* Their Bond revolves around Zelda recovering from the trauma of being abused by Ganondorf and his lackeys from age 12 to 18.
* Their Bond, Twili are descended from humans but it's unknown if they're a separate species yet. They're humanoid and have the same blood as Hylians.
* Their Bond, wolfos refer to humans and other humanoid beings as "two-leggers". They also call other animals, like deer, "four-leggers".
* Their Bond, Zelda's cousin, Prince Daltus of Lucrum, asks her to marry him. She declines his offers and, either way, she's already engaged to her Guardian, Impa.

* their cells came from their parents, and so on and so forth, back to the formation of life, 3.8 billion years ago. Gene sequences exist in every one of our cells that have remained unchanged since the earliest common ancestor to all life. The purest example of this is the common amoeba, which splits itself to reproduce rather than dying of old age. It changes over time, and obviously is composed of different individual molecules, but in a very real sense that first amoeba is still alive and wriggling two billion-odd years later. A new branch of SETI, Biological SETI, is currently examining our DNA for traces of messages left for us by aliens, on the assumption that, with its ability to self-replicate and self-repair, DNA is the only substance on which a message could be transcribed that could be preserved for millions, even billions, of years.

* Their continual intercepting of merchant ships from third-party countries carrying goods destined for or coming from each others' countries resulted in two wars with the United States, the Quasi-War in 1798 against France and the War of 1812 against Britain. The War of 1812 also included a British blockade of American ports, which basically shut down trade among the US states, and which devastated the country's (unusually trade-centric on account of its good access to the sea) economy since their merchant ships could no longer take to the sea (to the point where the heavily-trade-dependent New England states discussed making a separate peace with Britain, with some radicals even debating secession from the US entirely). The US Navy was too weak to try to lift it, hence the lack of important naval battles during a three-year war involving two trade-oriented countries. The few times that American light-warships did manage to sneak past the blockade they were able to cause disproportionate damage to British merchant shipping, with the USS

* Their fans are no strangers to this either. Terrible games that have the Grumps screaming in rage (Arin) or sobbing in bitter, cruel defeat (Danny) will get, by the Grumps own admission, around ten-times the views of play-throughs of good games.
* Their father/creator the Emperor of Mankind. The most powerful psyker to ever live, a brilliant scientist, a ruler who united humanity in a golden age, practically a living god...but his inability to be the father his sons needed dooms himself and the Imperium to a slow wasting death. All that is left of the once-mighty Emperor is a decaying husk trapped between life and death that can only watch as the Imperium falls apart over ten thousand years.
* their father dies in a duel with Ser Gregor Clegane. Their proposed wars differ significantly though: Obara wants to invade the Reach and burn Oldtown as a start, while Tyene prefers starting a defensive war by crowning Myrcella Baratheon queen and forcing the Lannisters to try invading Dorne. They stir up discontent among the commonfolk and nobility to try to force their uncle Prince Doran to go along with one of their plans.

* Their first appearance saw them stealing whole assortments of electronics equipment. They also encouraged Meatwad to swallow an entire rack of DVDs, believing he could then walk out of the store with it; Meatwad couldn't do this and tried to carry it instead, which sees him immediately trip the store's alarms while the Mooninites take the opportunity to escape.
* their first appearance was that that had learned human speech through radio and TV broadcasts, which explains their strange, synthesized speech and the way they opened their mouths and dispensed it like a recording (weirdly presaging automated phone robots). It wasn't explained on screen, however, and subsequent appearances did not follow up on the idea.

* Their first year had a very mixed bag of results, with a 3rd-4th place finish at the MLG Columbus Major and a 5th-8th finish at the ESL One Cologne 2016 Major. Unfortunately, even with their newly created organization, they still couldn't surpass the demons that had plagued them over the past few years, which was their inability to make it to a Major Final, due to their tendency to choke. Ultimately, it wasn't skill-related, but more of a mentality issue. Over the course of the year, cajunb would go to Team Dignitas in exchange for Markus "Kjaerbye" Kjaerbye, and with karrigan acquired by FaZe Clan, they would acquire their new in-game leader in Lukas gla1ve Rossander. Following that, they made the pioneering decision to hire a sports psychologist to help improve their mental game. And like that, their results skyrocketed. They would finish 2016 with a 2nd place finish against OpTic Gaming in ELEAGUE Season 2, and a 1st place finish against OpTic once again at the ECS Season 2 Finals.

* The Irish band the Frames have a song called "Red Chord" on their album "Fitzcarraldo" that is based around this idea.
* The Irish/Celtic Dullahan, a fearsome headless fairy that rides at night (either alone or accompanied by banshees) to splash buckets of blood into people's faces — to announce the recipient of a face-full will soon die. They're also a mean shot with a whip, and sometimes drive horse-drawn carriages decorated with human skulls and femurs. There's no known way to actually kill a Dullahan, and the only way to ward one off is to exploit its intense fear of... gold. That's right; the Dullahan, possibly one of the most pants-wettingly scary portents of imminent death, can easily be warded off by one of the metals most commonly used to make jewelry.

The first to touch Irish soil will be the one who rules, so in order to defeat his rival, he cuts off his own hand and throws it onto the beach. (Problem is, a maimed man cannot rule, so he has to wait until another god builds him a silver hand.)
* The Irish government has commissioned an ad campaign about investment in renewable fuel, which tries to portray solar and wind power as better than coal and oil because it's natural. In fact, such renewable power is exactly as natural as non-renewable power; sunlight, wind, oil, coal and nuclear fission all occur in nature, and all require artificial power plants to generate electricity.
* The Irish government has prohibited Uber from doing private fares, under fear that it would cause an effect on Ireland's taxi industry and its Hail-O service.
* The Irish leaders during the Irish War of Independence were very close (many of them having fought together during the Easter Rising, and all of them sharing the hardships of the war). This makes the Irish Civil War, in which they split into two opposing factions and many killed each other, especially tragic.

* The Irishman. After getting out of prison, Frank himself spends his last days in a nursing home, crippled by arthritis and disowned by his own children.
* The Irishman and the Italian family Boss, Angelo Bruno. Frank's life is spared because he did not know this in advance, and because his friend and patron Russell Bufalino strongly vouched for him to Angelo. When he offers to give back the money he made off the job anyway, they tell him to keep it, since Whispers "won't be needing it anyway".

* The "iris" is a metal cover that prevents unwanted visitors from entering Stargate Command on Earth. Stargate Command personnel and their allies are given a GDO ("garage door opener") which transmits an IDC (Gateworld wiki says this is an "iris deactivation code"), and only with a valid and received IDC will Stargate Command open the iris and allow people on the other side of the gate to reach Earth. The big keyboard near gates, the DHD ("dial home device") is merely the object which activates a gate and has nothing to do with the iris (though on Atlantis, the DHD panel in the control room has a button to raise the iris-like force shield). In case that doesn't work, there are machine guns and a heavy steel door between the Stargate and the rest of the base. The Asgard develop a version of their own which uses an almost-invisible force-field. SG-1 often tells less technologically advanced peoples to just bury their gate to avoid unwanted visitors. In the

* Their marriage falls apart due to this brawl with the groom. The speech she does give (in 2402) revolves around loving your ex.
* Their methods of arrival there are all coincidental as well. Seiya came to visit Usagi to make sure she was alright with her parents and brother away (Calling himself her "Bodyguard", their being Senshi still unknown to each other). The Inner Senshi also decided to stop by to check on her. Uranus and Neptune's car broke down right outside Usagi's house, while Taiki and Yaten came to get Seiya when a TV crew came by doing door to door dinner interviews (forcing everyone except Minako to hide, particularly the Starlights due to them being idols) when the cameraman was attacked by the Villains and turned into a monster.

Edith is not able to follow the fairies on her own, she must be led by someone she knows and trusts so Ariel enchants Thomas first. The World of Faerie is shown by magical creatures living in rocks, trees, and are in tune with nature such as their homes are built with outdoor views. It is based on various sources particularly Shakespeare’s and the world of artist, Brian Froud.

* The Ironborn are a Viking-ish culture, but resemble more a pirate race than the historical Vikings.
* The Ironborn are famous for utilizing axes in combat instead of the usual sword.
* The Ironborn are strong believers in this creed. It proves to be a problem for their king, Harren Hoare, whom many see as weak because he does not personally lead raiding parties like many kings before him did. To gain the respect of his men, he has no other choice but to rule his subjects through brutish force.

* The Iron Dream faction using radiation to breed their different sorts of mooks), in the end mankind is saved by intensive usage of genetic engineering, which finally even replaces normal procreation.
* The Iron Dream, features "The Steel Commander", a metal truncheon that has an apparent weight and mass of tonnes and yet can be effortlessly wielded by a person of sufficient genetic "purity". It was created by an enclave of scientists who'd survived "The Fire" (a global nuclear war) for Heldon, the father of a fascist movement to preserve a core of unmutated humans (and who slew them for their trouble).
* The Iron Dream himself (who also gets credited in the intro for designing the clothes)! Go figure.
* The Iron Dream (including the American Nazi Party), thus subverting the subversion.
* The Iron Dream: When Feric Jaggar encounters the Black Avengers and wants to join them, he has to pass the Test of Water, the Test of Fire, and the Test of Steel. The Test of Steel means to fight Stag Stopa, the commander of the Black Avengers, until the Stopa is satisfied of the new member's worth.
* The Iron Dream writes a popular sci-fi pulp novel in which the hero is on a crusade to exterminate all mutants who are contaminating his race.
* The Iron Giant and gets kind of jumpy, leading him to investigate some mysterious sounds outside.
* The Iron Giant, and he has to unzip in public in order to let it out. His phrase before the mayhem? "I would like to apologize to everyone in advance for this!"
* The Iron Giant, and was so excited to play the role that he demanded his parents allow him to audition. So joyous is his performance that it almost feels like he isn't acting.
* The Iron Giant: as Hogarth is chased by the Giant, he hits his head on a low-lying branch.
* The Iron Giant, Brad Bird shook Eli Marienthal (the voice of Hogarth) with his permission, to get his voice shaky during the scene where he rides in the makeshift car in the scrap yard.
* The Iron Giant by acclaimed writer and Poet Laureate Ted Hughes) bearing almost no resemblance to the movie.
* The Iron Giant combines being "Made of Diamond" (survives heavy weaponry from tanks), as well as a mixture of "Regeneration" and "External Repair" (even after being blown apart, the Iron Giant is capable of self-repair while its pieces crawl back together from various places to rebuild itself).
* The Iron Giant, Dean's hobby is constructing art sculptures from junk in his own scrapyard. At one point, he yells at the eponymous giant who has been indiscriminately eating the junk and happened to swallow some of the art pieces. At this the giant pulls a half-eaten sculpture from his mouth, adjusts a few parts, and then sets it down. Even though the giant only understands art as "what Dean doesn't want to be eaten", Dean decides that the result is as impressive as the other artistic displays, and in a later scene he is directing the giant in the construction of larger sculptures.
* The Iron Giant doubles (rather clumsily) as an attempt to shoo away the Giant's hand before his mom sees it.
* The Iron Giant for a quarter of a second. Special Agent Kent Mansly (He works for the govern— SLAM!) knocks on the front door of the house, rehearsing his lines and staring at Hogarth's damaged BB gun when the door is opened by Hogarth's mom, Anne. Kent rapidly raises his head to talk to her and smacks it accidentally into the underside of her ample cleavage, resulting in a BOINNNG sound.

* The Iron Giant has a paranoid government agent Kent Mansley planning to destroy the Iron Giant at all costs.
* The Iron Giant has the rare case of the horn going off due to direct contact with the vehicle. Basically, the Iron Giant, when he and Hogarth discover the junkyard that Dean works at, starts eating everything in there. It then eats a car... which hadn't had its horn removed yet, causing it to go off.
* The Iron Giant. He can heal himself and he eats metal to live. His "stomach" even starts growling if he goes too long without food. Very impressive considering it seems to be composed more or less entirely out of cogs-and-gears type machinery.
* The Iron Giant. He's initially portrayed as an incompetent, neurotic bureaucrat who's in way over his head. And he is. But he's also a cruel, sadistic government agent with enough power to make a little boy's life hell. And all these traits, combined with his ever-growing paranoia, leads him to put an entire town of innocent people (and himself) in jeopardy.
* The Iron Giant. His overall appearance could be considered as handsome for a kid.
* The Iron Giant: Hogarth dives into a lake from a tall rock, and finds that the water is colder than he expected, shivering as he says how refreshing it is. Hogarth invites the Giant to dive in too, and at first the robot just seems to walk away, but it turns out the Giant was just taking a running start. His cannonball dive creates a giant wave that washes Dean out in the middle of a nearby road and lands Hogarth on the top of a tree.
* The Iron Giant, Hogarth hits his head on a branch as he runs from the giant.
* The Iron Giant Hogarth prepares to look for the titular Giant by grabbing his B.B. Gun, his late dad's pilot helmet, a pair of hiking boots and a bomber jacket.
* The Iron Giant, Hogarth says grace but tries to hide his commands to the giant robot's hand in his prayer, which makes his prayer seem rather strange.
* The Iron Giant: Hogarth's prayer includes several examples of this, but he keeps finding ways to fit his sudden shouts into his prayer.
* The Iron Giant: Hogarth suffers from these effects after drinking an espresso offered by Dean.
* The Iron Giant, Hogarth tricks Kent Mansley into eating a chocolate-flavored laxative-laced sundae to get away from him.
* The Iron Giant. However, when he faces the human army, it's revealed that he's actually a war machine with hidden weapons that get activated against his will.
* The Iron Giant involuntarily deploys these if someone shoots at it, even if it's only with a toy gun.
* The Iron Giant is an extraterrestrial robot who starts off eating metal objects like TV antennas and the support structures of a power plant. When he starts hiding out at Dean's scrapyard, he eats the old cars and other junk there — though he also eats some of Dean's abstract art pieces that he wasn't supposed to eat.
* The Iron Giant is basically a story all about the titular character doing this.
* The Iron Giant Kent Mansley, and has been desperate to avoid him since he moved in. She goes so far to suggest Hogarth take Mansley around and show him the sights. Whether this is true obliviousness or just Hogarth's mother wanting her son to accept they have to rent the spare room for money is not completely obvious. She only picks up a dislike for Kent when he eventually calls the army on her son and nearly gets the town nuked.
* The Iron Giant: Kent Mansley discovers a giant bite taken out of his car and runs back to the power plant to tell the foreman. By the time he returns, the Giant has taken the rest of the car, and all that's left is the mangled BB gun which fell out of the car.
* The Iron Giant Kent Mansley finally convinces the US Army that the title charqacter is loose in Rockwell, Maine, they arrive at Dean McCoppin's studio to find a huge robotic figure. Dean explains that it's leftover from a defunct garage, and he's making a modern art sculpture from it. General Rogard glares at Kent and growls, "Mansley, you idiot."
* The Iron Giant lied to him that it was a killer. Once he learns the truth, he immediately stops attacking it.

* The Iron Giant. Mansley mentions that he "works for the government" when he flashes his badge for the "Bureau of Unexplained Phenomena."
* The Iron Giant meant for him but was going to destroy the entire town.
* The Iron Giant: Not counting the epilogue at the end of the film, the film roughly takes place around four days and five nights.
* The Iron Giant, one of the clips shown is a quick gag in which Hogarth cleaning the lens of his camera only to accidentally take a picture of himself. Later, Mansley discovers the camera and develops the photo that Hogarth accidentally took of himself, revealing the Giant looking over Hogarth's shoulder, thus finally giving Mansley photographic evidence that the Giant exists.
* The Iron Giant only appears in the first few scenes of the film, but it's these scenes that set the plot in motion. After crashing into the eponymous Giant in a storm, he tells the government and some friends at a diner about his encounter. While no one seems to believe his story, it's enough to lead agent Kent Mansley and curious child Hogarth Hughes, respectively, to investigate the strange happenings in Rockwell and discover the true nature of the "invader from Mars".
* The Iron Giant panics, Rogard turns around and shoots at it with a pistol. He remained completely in control throughout the battle and never even looked afraid, unlike many of his subordinates.
* The Iron Giant poses as one of Dean's junk sculptures to escape the army. Earlier, he stands in front of an Astro Burger billboard to hide from Dean.
* The Iron Giant Rogard is more reasonable than the hotheaded civilian Mansley: Rogard is the one who commands the army to stand down and stop the attack. Mansley snatches the radio and shrieks the order to launch the missile anyway, a move that is unnecessary and stupid.
* The Iron Giant sister), who was killed by her estranged husband before the film's release.
* The Iron Giant slight line irregularities into the rendering of the eponymous character with fantastic-looking results.
* The Iron Giant story, which only reveals more layers as the viewers grow up.
* The Iron Giant: The Giant is CG, and fits perfect with the traditionally-animated human characters and landscapes. This is largely because the animation team added subtle imperfections to the Giant's outline and framerate to make it more closely resemble traditional animation.
* The Iron Giant: The Iron Giant when in war mode. He at least has the space for most of it.
* The Iron Giant, the story is about a boy and his giant robot friend and they mostly goof around while trying to evade an incompetent G-man. Then the boy and the giant stumble upon a deer recently shot by a gun lying on the ground. This triggers a momentary glimpse at the giant's dormant but aggressive programming, and things only get worse from there once the G-man starts becoming a real threat. Then nuclear weapons and Cold War paranoia get involved.
* The Iron Giant, the title character's eyes glow red whenever he sees a weapon or is fired upon. If his rage becomes too great, he transforms into a nigh-unstoppable killing machine capable of taking out tanks (and possibly battleships).
* The Iron Giant The titular robot can reassemble itself following heavy impacts.
* The Iron Giant to boot), and goes out of his way just to provoke the Iron Giant into retaliation.
* The Iron Giant) to comfort his children following the suicide of his wife Sylvia Plath in 1963.
* The Iron Giant. Upon realizing he's doomed the entire town, he immediately hijacks an army jeep and tries to drive away and save his own skin.
* The Iron Giant used to do when he was a kid, calling it a “Turbo Twinkie”.
* The Iron Giant: When Dean lets Hogarth have some espresso (described as "Coffee-zilla"), the boy launches into a rambling rant about school, ending with the expected request for more coffee.
* The Iron Giant, which received a U rating for its release in the UK by the BBFC in theaters in 1999 and on home video in 2000, was rerated PG for 'mild fantasy action violence' and 'infrequent mild bad language' for its 2016 rerelease.

* The Iron Giant: While Hogarth is (reluctantly) giving him a tour of the town, Kent Mansley initially starts out calm, but breaks out into one of these when the topic of the Giant comes up in an ice cream parlor. He points out that they don't know who built the Giant, nor what it's capable of, so he views it as a threat.

* The Iron Hand of Mars (a private detective in Ancient Rome) and his friend Justinus are interrogating a barmaid about her missing boyfriend. She loses her temper and throws Falco out, but Justinus comforts her and she gives him the required information. Afterwards Falco mentions this technique and jokes that "the nice guy is supposed to be a fake!"
* The Iron Hand of Mars finds himself accompanied to Germania by Nero's former barber, whom he fears might actually be an assassin sent to kill him. We don't find out if he is, but the barber does quite handily cut the throat of a mook who tries ambushing them. When questioned on his throat-slitting ability, the barber quietly points out that someone in his occupation is often open to abuse—he's had to learn how to defend himself.
* The Iron Hands chapter requires the amputation of one of their hands as a rite of initiation, which is replaced with a bionic one. This is to honor their founder, Ferrus Manus, who slew a dragon by drowning it in lava; the lava fused the dragon's metallic skin to Ferrus's hands. And their belief that unaugmented flesh is weak means that it rarely stops there.
* The Iron Hands chapter shares the Mechanicus' belief in the superority of cybernetics. Initiates replace one hand with a bionic and continue to add parts as they go. The Iron Hands were inspired by their Primarch Ferrus Manus. Ferrus Manus once fought and defeated a strange silver metallic dragon by dunking it into lava. The dragon's skin bonded to his arms. Manus' arms gave him the ability to forge weapons by simply beating them into shape. Ironically, Manus himself did not believe the Iron Hands should replace their flesh with machinery. He intended to remove the metal from his arms to convince the Iron Hands to let go of their obsession with cybernetics, but died before he had the chance.
* The Iron Hands Space Marine Chapter are similar, sharing the Mechanicus' heavy use of bionics and their reverence for all things mechanical, and unusually for an Astartes Chapter enjoy close links with Mars. Instead of Chaplains, they have Iron Fathers, who combine the role of Chaplain with Techmarine. They despise the flesh as weak and tend to view other Imperial forces and civilians with contempt - in at least one case summarily executing one-third of the population of a retaken sub-sector to demonstrate the price of weakness (and electing a daemon-summoning heretic as planetary governor, but mostly weakness). Even their battle cry is "The flesh is weak!"

* The Iron Horse is a drama about the construction of the Transcontinental Railroad. The hero is an idealistic Pony Express rider and son of a railroad surveyor, who does battle against an evil land speculator and his corrupt engineer sidekick. Eventually, the hero defeats the bad guys and the railroad is built. He also has a girlfriend. Sometimes, this girlfriend is shown onscreen, looking pretty, and occasionally urging the hero not to fight, but mostly looking pretty.

During one arc their only goal is to make a profit by doing "side-quests." This begins with attempting to work for a mob boss, who they soon overthrow; they then end trying to extort the police, but end up killing them; they try to extort the towns people, but end up killing them; and finally fail to even hold onto their power because Black Mage blows the whole town to hell.

* The Iron Man challenge has recently gained a lot of popularity for WoW. The basics are that you may only use the worst gear in the game (no magic items at all), you cannot spend talent points to improve your character, you may never trade with another player to get any stuff, and a lot of other more or less ridiculous requirements. And the big one: if you die, you're out.

* The Iron Sheik hates you, he will put you in the Camel Clutch, break your back, fuck you in the ass, and make you humble!
* The Iron Sheik innovated many of the tropes used by the foreign heels: Carrying flags, wearing ethnic clothing and the evil mustache.
* The Iron Sheik manages to be fairly cleaned mouthed when working a card or talking with younger fans. Otherwise, nothing seems to off-limits, verbally. Especially not if beer is involved.
* The Iron Stallions, the 19th Lancers have now become an armoured regiment.
* The Iron Teeth: A dark fantasy web serial set in a world full of dangers and monsters. Human civilization hangs by a thread and yet people still war and fight among themselves. Magic is neutral but limited and hoarded by guilds that use it for personal power. And of course, everything wants to kill goblins...
* The Iron Teeth a few of the bandits start out their working lives as this, until things go south. For example, Vorsha worked as a mercenary — until her employer decided that outlawing her company on trumped-up charges beat paying them.

And, if Herad plays her cards right, her band could well function as a decidedly murky company of these, too. She's already made one or two shady deals with lords which lean in this direction.
* The Iron Teeth, Blacknail frequently murders and steals, and does not even comprehend why any action that doesn't further his or his master's interests might be morally wrong.
* The Iron Teeth: Blacknail the goblin apparently likes to eat food that is slimy, and even somewhat rotten.
* The Iron Teeth could fall into this trope. The in story explanation for this is that in this world all humans come from a single isolated continent known as The Homelands, and are thus there is less genetic diversity than on earth.
* The Iron Teeth. Don't let his age fool you. Blacknail has learned not to mess with his master Saeter. The old scout is still a force to be reckoned with.
* The Iron Teeth free web serial is one of these. He is grey-haired and noticeably older than all the other bandits and yet still by far the best tracker and a dangerous warrior. He is a somewhat grumpy hardass though.
* The Iron Teeth. Humans are just really touchy about people rescuing shinies they leave lying around.
* The Iron Teeth in a harsh medieval world full of savage beasts, and ruthless people.
* The Iron Teeth is becoming infested with so many bandits that trade is drying up and the bands are turning on each other. Herad plans to centralize them all and eventually turn them into a nation under her rule.
* The Iron Teeth: Mages are recruited by the various kingdoms to fight in their wars. These combat mages are trained by the mage guilds but then handed over to the army. They are valued assets, but ultimately expendable, and not considered to be true members of the guilds that trained them.
* The Iron Teeth: Spiders the size of large dogs live in the forests of the titular mountains. When attacking, they paralyze their prey with their venom and wrap them up for later.
* The Iron Teeth: The protagonist is Blacknail the goblin, who has a different way of thinking about things than humans.
* The Iron Teeth to fight with unmatched speed and strength. And they're treated like elites, too, leading Herad to correctly conclude that Basghus and Mehedium had deserted for reasons other than mere discontent.
* The Iron Teeth: Vorscha is a muscular warrior woman who is also described as good looking.
* The Iron Teeth web serial’s dungeons are formed by crystals, and contain valuable treasures. Monsters such as slimes also dwell within them. One of them is near Herad's base. She was eager to find and explore it, but fortunately she couldn't find the entrance.
* The Iron Teeth web serial’s forests are haunted by many different types of dangerous monsters. There are a bunch of guys in this story who do look human, more or less. For example ghouls and hobgoblins.
* The Iron Teeth web serial all the nobles are ruthless and immoral. For example, Vorscha used to work for a Lord but he decided that it was easier to put a bounty on her head than to pay her mercenary company's wages.
* The Iron Teeth web serial doesn't have human morality, and in fact has never even really been exposed to morality as a concept. For instance it's never occurred to him that eating people would be bad.
* The Iron Teeth web serial, ghouls are monsters that spread through an infection. Bites and contact with their bodily fluids are the usual vectors.
* The Iron Teeth web serial has a lot of these. Deserters that have turned to banditry are quite common in the North.
* The Iron Teeth web serial. He is educated, civilized, and intelligent. He is also an outlaw stuck out in the boonies among a rough group of bandits.
* The Iron Teeth web serial is set in one these. It's closer to low or dark fantasy rather than high fantasy so it lacks most the typical other races.
* The Iron Teeth web serial, mages use staffs that are complex mechanical devices to help channel the power of their spell crystals. The Endless Heavens guild has also been mentioned to have built a mechanical elevator powered by magic.

* The Iron Teeth web serial, magic is done by growing crystals using alchemy. Each crystal can then be used by a mage to produce some effect.
* The Iron Teeth web serial, only the Mage Guilds are allowed to use or research magic. They thus enforce a magical oligarchy on the rest of society. If anyone else tries to learn magic they are usually killed by agents of one of the guilds.
* The Iron Teeth web serial. She leads a group of bandits and is a merciless killer who does indeed like the color black, that and knives.
* The Iron Teeth web serial, the city of Daggerpoint is basically one big black market. Bandits and thieves gather there to sell goods that are illegal or stolen.
* The Iron Teeth web serial, the goblin Blacknail frequently remarks or thinks about how ugly, pink, and fatty he finds humans.
* The Iron Teeth web serial, the main character is a goblin. Are you really surprised he is an Anti-Hero? Many of the other characters that are more stereotypical heroes, such as Saeter, are also violent and ultimately self interested.
* The Iron Teeth web serial, the mysterious and beautiful woman Luphera aids Blacknail the hobgoblin by trading him information. She also appears to sell information, among other things.
* The Iron Teeth web serial two of the bandits in Herad's band are Geralhd and Vorscha. The two are implied to be an item, and Geralhd is described as small man while Vorscha is a very tall and muscular woman.
* The Iron Teeth web serial, while a goblin will never be a pillar of the community, when Blacknail joins up with Herad's outlaw band he begins to travel a darker path. There are however no good guys to compare him to in this story. Everyone is at best grey.
* The Iron Teeth, where a good chunk of the populace goes around hooded.
* The Iron Throne which was forged from the swords of Aegon the Conqueror's defeated enemies, although by all accounts it's not very comfortable to sit on.
* The Iron Tower, by Dennis L. McKiernan, the Dimmendark blots out the sun (creating endless night and endless winter) so that all of the evil creatures banished (and destroyed) by the sun can further the Big Bad's plan to conquer the world.
* The Iron Tower trilogy, with the words, "Danner Bramblethorn had fired his last arrow." But that arrow was crucial to getting the fortress gates open.
* The iron used to shoe Death's horse is never named, but is basically the next level of the same thing. Unlike normal iron it can be taken even into the refuge of the King of the Elves, and Nanny uses it to intimidate him.
* The Iron Warriors are basically the Chaos Marine equivalent of the Iron Hands. Not only do they suffer degenerations in their geneseed that cause them to suffer crippling deformities or unviable mutations in their limbs, necessitating bionic replacements, but they willingly infect themselves with the Obliterator Virus. Which basically turns them into a shapeshifting morass of organic meat and metal.

* The Iron Wind is a natural disaster (insofar as anything in the setting is truly "natural") that takes the form of vast red sandstorms filled with microscopic, airborne nanites. These nanites are badly malfunctioning (the corebook outright refers to them as insane) and chaotically reshape anything and everything they come across, landscape, machine and creature alike. Living beings caught in the Iron

* The irony being that Montgomery himself is the racist one. Choosing not to help Hank reconcile with his black girlfriend (further proof Hank is not racist) because he does not approve of inter-racial relationships (specifically, when the man is white; he himself has no problem hitting on a white girl).
* The irony being that the entire premise of the show is that the Doctor, an alien, is having to almost constantly save humanity from extinction. It has even been lampshaded somewhat in the new series and in
* The irony being that there was no bomb (the kid made the whole thing up, as kids are apt to do), but the torture session embittered him so much that afterward he built a real one.
* The irony being that whilst he was 'saving them all for science', he was meant to be helping to save Donut, who had seemingly been crushed under a ship... and had just driven away with any tools they required to do this.
* The irony being they would have gotten something, at least covering Bart's hospital bill as Marge wanted, if they had just told the truth at trial rather than make up false claims. Or if Homer had just taken the half-million Burns had offered him and went home - they ended up with nothing because Homer was greedy.
* The irony here is that most people started looking for Mama's Meat Sauce and couldn't find it anywhere while
* The irony is actually increased when one examines the actual Battle of Jutland - the Battleships barely engaged each other, with both sides essentially considering them
* The irony is in reality this trope is just about the exact opposite of what one would want in a healthy population. The smaller the gene pool, even when narrowed with the intent of promoting benign or desired traits, the higher the chance of disastrous inbreeding combinations that result in mental or physical deformities. Not to mention increased vulnerability to diseases old and new. The fact selective breeding often seeks to promote exterior traits regardless of what consequences appear in the genome only exacerbates this. It's one reason why "purebred" dogs are almost always far less healthy than "mixed bred/mutts", the smaller gene pools can lead to harmful recessive traits cropping up more and more.
* The irony is that he'd probably prefer to be a gun, since it's what he's built for and good at.
* The irony is that most of the hotels featured, when asked by an independent survey, revealed that most of them either had never stopped offering American Express, or had done so (briefly) in favor of VISA, but quietly started taking American Express again afterward.
* The irony is that the adverts have turned a piece of music written by a Czech about America into the unofficial Yorkshire national anthem.
* The irony of course is that the Stone is actually just a metaphor for enlightenment. In the process of gaining the wisdom and knowledge necessary to craft such a stone, you will have long since outgrown the desire to actually
* The Irony of Fate 2 features Grandfather Frost, the Russian equivalent of Santa, who gives presents on New Year's. Kostya borrows a drunken Grandfather Frost's suit to sneak back into Nadya's apartment on New Year's night.
* The Irony of Fate and the Soviet fondness for cookie-cutter architecture leads to the doctor going home to the wrong apartment in the wrong city. Hilarity and romance ensue as he tries to explain his situation and figure out how to get home to Moscow from Leningrad.
* The Irony of Fate on New Year's Eve because it contained a blacklisted actress (Valentina Talyzina).
* The Irony of Fate takes place 30 years after the original Soviet classic and features the children of the original protagonists as the leads.
* The irony of this situation is that the buildup to this statement implies that he will use the ray on himself to become invisible to the Fireside Girls, i.e. the more sensible approach. Obviously, this thought somehow never dawns on him.
* The irony there is that, of all Warhammer's Vampire bloodlines, the Necrarchs are by far the least likely to desire temporal power, authority or status. They're a family of reclusive, usually insane, scholars and wizards whose grand plans generally involve killing all the world's mortals rather than enslaving them. The Lahmians, a bloodline of all-female vampires descended from Queen Neferata herself, pose as a vampire Illuminati who control most of the governments of the Old World from behind the scenes. The lordly aristocratic Von Carsteins, however, embody this trope most: In their homeland of Sylvania, they rule openly as feudal lords over the terrified inbred peasantry. Technically, since the Vampire Wars five centuries ago, Sylvania is now a part of the Imperial province of Stirland, but the count of Stirland's officials have long since learned never to go there asking for taxes and the like, so it is still effectively ruled by its vampiric masters. A similar arrangement applies to the Bretonnian city of Mousillon.

* The Iroquois Confederacy (originally the Mohawk, Seneca, Oneida, Onondaga, and Cayuga nations) became known as the "Six Nations" after the Tuscarora joined.
* The Iroquois Confederacy's central government is composed of 50 chiefs, who are nominated and can be removed by an assembly of elder women. However, it is the male chiefs and not the female elders who make actual decisions, not to mention that this assembly has never been terribly important and most Iroquois governmental decisions are made on a local level anyway.
* Their original, hopefully abandoned-by-the-Tenno method of creating the titular warframes?
* Their original mission was to protect Christian pilgrims traveling to the Holy Land
* Their other son, Goten, averts this trope. He seemed to be more similar to his father than his brother did, but when puberty hit him, Goten became more interested in girls and dating than fighting.
* Their overall Battalion Commander, Lt Colonel "Godfather" Ferrando makes a point to the reporter at the end of the series regarding this, how he gets reports specifically about the three officers mentioned above that are mixed. If he were to follow through by removing them from their positions before they explicitly cross the line in a fashion that proves to him they aren't worth their posts, his Battalion would be a mess, missing three senior officers from one of his three companies and that he would have undermined the chain of command.

While the Carlyles have a very competent and developed military, it's their bio enhancing expertise that keeps them from being destroyed by the other families, as the other families all desperately crave the life sustaining secrets of the Carlyles and need the crops the Carlyles can grow.

It can even be used through Trollian, after it had been hooked up to see the complete timeline of the human session, which is how Vriska discovers that she can only force humans in to sleep in the first place. Late in Act 6, Aranea manages to manipulate several offshoot Damaras to use their telekinesis in order to move an entire mini-planet. Vriska being given such an ability fits in with how she was intentionally written to be polarizing, as the sheer ease that she could control others is one of the many factors that throws her into being controversial.

* The Irregular at Magic High School, but decides that his safety is more important. Tatsuya still heads out, though.
* The Irregular at Magic High School, but managed to get just as many, if not more, viewers as the previous season.
* The Irregular at Magic High School child. Another family-the Yotsuba-is on the brink of ruin because its descendants are so strong that the family elders cannot discipline them effectively.
* The Irregular at Magic High School combined with a lack of personal freedom and a limited lifespan due to imperfections in their genes. In subsequent volumes, clones of especially prominent mages also appear, which are nonetheless disabled in the literal sense because of even more unstable genes. Reflections on the nature of the family ties of such people and the fact that even an artificially created person does not deserve to be the weak-willed slave of his creators are an important part of the series.
* The Irregular at Magic High School has amply prepared them for this sort of thing.
* The Irregular at Magic High School. In contrast, Mayumi's prank gift of bitter chocolates does not go over well- Tatsuya doesn't take it in the lighthearted spirit she hoped he would.
* The Irregular at Magic High School in his position as a special lieutenant of the JSDF is known as "Maheshvara" (another name for Shiva, a Hindu deity) to the Chinese forces who tried to invade Japan in Okinawa and Yokohama. At the tender age of 13 he nearly single-handedly stopped the invasion of Okinawa, using his unique decomposition magic to quite literally erase the enemy soldiers from existence with his right hand, while resurrecting his allies with his left hand. This freaked the enemy out so much, they decided that the only way to salvage the situation would be to bring in the cruisers and bombard the beaches from afar. It didn't help them much. The higher ups even forbid the utterance of that name among the soldiers. Three years later China attacked again in Yokohama on 31 of October 2095, only to be repelled once more, this time also losing almost all of their land forces involved in the attack, a third of their entire fleet and an important naval base at the southern tip of the Korean peninsula. Along with a chunk of land which was obliterated in an event that was later called "The Scorched Halloween".
* The Irregular at Magic High School in the hall solid. When she'd been escorted out and the campaign resumed, there were a disturbing amount of write-in votes cast for her.
* The Irregular at Magic High School it was more effective than it actually was, and is therefore surprised when he meets genuinely good people- people worthy of love- and finds himself acting irrationally around them.
* The Irregular at Magic High School loves Tatsuya Shiba even when he knows nothing about him other than he is handsome and competent. For the most part, this is portrayed positively; but there are times when she wonders if she even has a chance with him. Similar behavior in a more veiled form is shown by Miyuki Shiba, which is quite disturbing since she is Tatsuya's sister ... Later we even find out that she only needed two weeks to fall in love with him, after which she sincerely ready to fulfill it any desire, up to demonstration of intimate places or making love. She just believes that if he saved her life, now she belongs to him.
* The Irregular at Magic High School — bioengineered clones of "real" people, created to serve their commissioners like slaves.

* The Irregular at Magic High School, Miyuki enjoys watching Tatsuya exercise shirtless. She feels embarrassed when he almost catches her doing this, although- being just a teenager- she doesn't quite understand why.
* The Irregular at Magic High School, Mizuki trips and Mikihiko jumps up to catch her, accidentally groping her in the process.
* The Irregular at Magic High School Moreover, she is literally the only person to whom Tatsuya is able to experience real emotions, which initially almost leaves no chance for other girls.
* The Irregular at Magic High Schools are the norm, aristocrats are expected to keep their bloodlines 'pure' by not marrying into 'lesser' families, and genetically engineering one's slaves is perfectly acceptable.
* The Irregular at Magic High School setting is one where total, head-over-heels, can't-live-without-you soulmates exist, so when Masaki falls in love with one of a couple, the poor guy gets his heart broken. Even worse is the fact that he initially accepted the girl's decision, but Masaki's family forced him to court her anyway for political reasons.
* The Irregular at Magic High School's flashback arc, Tatsuya pulls Miyuki into a hug so it will be more difficult for the soldiers advancing on them to hurt her.
* The Irregular at Magic High School's Guardian, but both of them know he's a slave who had no choice in the matter.
* The Irregular at Magic High Schools may have something to do with this perspective; in her world, few spouses can treat each other as equals, even if they want to.
* The Irregular at Magic High School Tatsuya knows she's gone because the suppression is.
* The Irregular at Magic High School, Tatsuya's abilities are still so abnormally powerful that he can instantly calculate the sequence of any spell or even blow up a planet.
* The Irregular at Magic High School, the narration makes a point of telling us that, had Tatsuya known about the plot to bomb a stadium full of innocent people, he would have done nothing to stop it although he was fully capable of doing so.
* The Irregular at Magic High School: The surrounding characters praise Miyuki's perfect beauty even more than they praise her older brother's invincibility, to the point that her beauty staggers people who see her for the first time, and causes people not interested in relationships to fall in love with her. This has received dislike from some fans, as Miyuki isn't drawn particularly more cute or beautiful than any of the other girls.
* The Irregular at Magic High School. Thus, despite some aspects of his dubious and cynical worldview, it is Miyuki that becomes his life guide and the ground for positive motivation.
* The Irregular at Magic High School. To a lesser extent, this also applies to the youth of the other 10 leading clans, since for generations they have been subjected to various genetic modifications, ranging from the most banal ones to the illegal and immoral ones, as in the case of the Kudou clan.
* The Irregular at Magic High School waiting for her, and then she runs off.
* The Irregular at Magic High School which doesn't stay that way in the series. Or to calculate how many times Miyuki says "Onii-sama!" in the series.
* The Irregular at Magic High School, would obviously have very poor sales. Even the editor who gave him the greenlight said that this work "completely contradicts all those rules, which must correspond to a good light novel." Nevertheless, he decided to take a risk, and in the end, this novel became the second title for the popularity and sales of volumes in the publishing house.

* Theirs Not to Reason Why go straight to an Academy after basic, you'll spend the rest of your career as a desk jockey instead of a combat officer. One of the other requirements besides badassitude is a college degree: in one chapter Ia is shown working on a degree in military history from a correspondence course, noted to be a common choice for would-be officers.
* Theirs Not to Reason Why, Ia has earned so many decorations that the awarding officer can't find room on her uniform for all of them and is forced to just hand them over in their boxes. (This is why the real military uses studs of some kind to signify multiple instances of the same decoration.)
* Theirs Not to Reason Why into range of their electronic systems so she could disable their defenses and prevent them killing the hostages when her troops rolled in with guns blazing.
* Theirs Not to Reason Why is descended from these. They have been alternate enemies and allies of the Terran United Planets.
* Theirs Not to Reason Why reacting, but the villains she's reacting to won't show up for centuries after her death (she's a precognitive). In practice, she sets out to rearrange the galaxy so that the peoples of it will be ready when the apocalyptic threat arrives, and her plans for this drive the entire plot.
* Theirs Not to Reason Why's military only lets you earn command rank by impressing senior officers enough as an enlisted soldier that they give you a battlefield commission, as Ia indeed does at the end of the novel.

* Their successor Marlo Stanfield, when he and his gang are finally indicted, is given a deal by the DA to walk away from the criminal life a rich man because of political necessities and the fact that two rogue cops misappropriated police funds to put illegal wiretaps on Marlo. After retiring he's introduced to various businessmen by drug lawyer Maurice Levy, but Marlo slips away from the party to go back and fight with some corner boys because that's all he really knows and what he does best. Marlo is obsessed with the drug trade and his street reputation, far too much to ever leave it behind.
* Their superior had relieved them of their duties, so it's possible that had they flashed their badges this would be revealed anyway.

* Their survival will be more important than our survival: no species survives by being self-sacrificing. If an alien race has to choose between them and us, it's never going to be us.
* Their synthetic ivory is of particular note — unlike most endeavors, the process went swimmingly; they managed it in about a week. Unfortunately, the formula still needs fine tuning, as their billiards games keep getting interrupted by exploding balls. Amusingly, this is a very slightly exaggerated version of the real history of synthetic ivory. The first viable substitute for ivory in billiard balls was a mixture of nitro cellulose (guncotton), camphor, and acetone (very flammable). As guncotton ages it becomes more sensitive to percussion, and so every now and then... "I done seen it all, Sheriff. It were the cue ball what shot first."

* their technology is actually slowly killing them, a fact that they weren't able to figure out for themselves simply because they've lost the relevant knowledge, yet Dr. Crusher — from the supposedly less-advanced Federation — is able both to identify the problem and the necessary treatment in a matter of days.
* Their technology is so advanced they should be able to do most anything; the transporter might be able to resurrect anyone who dies as long as their pattern is stored in the buffer, and maybe multiply them too (or, depending on the physics involved, maybe not). If the replicator can make just about everything by converting energy to matter on the subatomic level, they should be able to manipulate pre-existing matter on that level, including their own flesh.
* Their "Telephone Sketch" deals with a guy trying to get his dime refunded from a coin phone after he makes an errant call. He goes through red tape cut lengthwise and in the end is completely thwarted.
* Their test of three cars suited for the Albanian Mafia ended with them robbing a bank and trying to make a getaway. During the getaway, James drives his car off a cliff (
* Their "The Horror of Our Love" fits a different part of this trope, being a completely serious love song... from a murderous stalker to a girl he kills midway through the song.
* their third jerseys the next season, their original mascot, but Boomer was quietly retired after the 2010-11 season.
* their third playoff matchup in 2012, but the Wings have since moved to the Eastern Conference. Nashville has to focus on Chicago now... but the Blackhawks have been in a heated rivalry with the Vancouver Canucks.
* their titles and names being used, etc. However, this has had the side effect of JoJo fans spamming uploads of songs referenced in the series with JoJo-related comments, to the annoyance of the artists' fans.
* Their tribute bands either avert the possibility of this trope (The Wholigans) or create entirely new problems ("Have you heard the new Who tribute band?" "The What?")
* Their trivia game, "No Apparent Reason," gets the William Tell Overture while their "What's News" segment gets

* The Island (1980): After seeing his son shoot a man out of the mast of the schooner, a horrified Maynard shouts out his son's name: Justin. Justin replies that there is no "Justin", just "Tu-Barb": the pirate name Nau had given him.
* The Island (1980), and thinks becoming a pirate will allow him to live out all of his fantasies. However, he has never given any thought to what the emotional toll of killing another human might be. After making his first kill, he is shocked and sickened, loses his nerve, and starts to crack up.
* The Island (1980) butchers everybody on board with a double-bitted axe. Several of the pirates use boarding axes when storming the schooner. And Nau garbs a fire axe during his final fight with Maynard.
* The Island (1980) has the habit of coating himself in pitch and setting himself on fire before raids to terrify his victims. When Maynard shoots him with a machine gun at the end of the film, he goes up in flames, runs around the aft deck, and then throws himself into the sea.
* The Island (1980) largely cut-off from the outside world for 300 years. Suffering from inbreeding, most of the women have become sterile and the pirates are starting to abduct outsiders to refresh their bloodline.
* The Island (1980), Nau and his crew dress in uniforms taken from the murdered coast guardsmen so they can use the launch to approach the cutter without being suspected.
* The Island (1980) (not a pure example, but shares many tropes with slasher films)
* The Island (1980): The standard tactic for the pirates is to sneak up on an isolated pleasure craft and stealthily board it; murder everyone on board; loot anything of value; and then burn or blow up the boat to hide all evidence of the crime. Their actions towards the woman on board the schooner indicate that they may indulge in rape as well, if the time allows. (This particular woman is shot while trying to escape before any rape can occur.)
* The Island (1980) to destroy the magazine, Beth walks out holding a crossbow that she levels at Maynard. She then raises the crossbow several inches and fires: shooting Windsor who is standing behind Maynard with an axe.
* The Island (1980): When Maynard has his hands manacled in front of him, he is able to reach the padlock and undo the combination lock.
* The Island (1980): While at the gun range, Maynard mentions to proprietor that he was in Korea and that you never forget those skills. Presumably this explains how he knows how to operate a Browning .50 caliber machine gun later in the film.

* The Island (1980): While most of the pirates are gathered on the aft deck of the cutter, Maynard discovers a deck-mounted M2 Machine Gun hidden underneath a tarp. He opens fire on the pirates, and continues to fire even after they are all dead.
* The Island All this is supposed to come about in ten years?! The one thing that they almost got right was the video game that tracks movement, though the Xbox Kinect never really worked well with anything but dancing games.
* The Island brings us Lincoln-Twelve, who finds himself riding on a flatbed trailer full of railroad axles while being pursued. Some undoing of the straps later, and the enemies pursuing him are suddenly playing high-speed Dodgeball.
* The Island/Come and See/The Landlord's Daughter/You'll Not Feel the Drowning. Twelve minutes of nonstop Shakespearean-inspired prose:
* The Island does it very literally: the technology that displays an illusionary world around the inhabitants (clones bred for organs) of the shelter is broken and the masquerade is broken.
* The Islanders dynasty itself was ended by another badass crew, the Edmonton Oilers, led by
* The Islander Trilogy contend with language difficulties, uptime diseases, and so forth; the Nantucketers manage to wipe out huge numbers of Native Americans before they even realize what's going on, because the first party sent to the mainland contains someone with a sniffle. Their language difficulties are moderately eased by the fact that the languages of Europe are, at that point, much closer to still being "Proto-Indo-European"...
* The Island featured weapons that fired barbed hooks, like a taser, used to stop escaped clones. Except the hooks were bigger and looked more painful, and the thing didn't give an electric charge to subdue the struggling victim, now in horrible pain from having two huge anchors shot into his skin.
* The Island - for discussion of human cloning in Korean ethics class.
* The Island". For further effect, a clone who wakes up on the operating tables as his organs are removed is harpooned and dragged back so they can finish the job. The "sponsor" (original version) of the main character refers to his clone as "his insurance policy," underlining the fact that the clones are seen as sub-human, and the property of whoever pays for them.
* The island guardians of Alola, despite being very powerful protectors revered by the populace,
* The Island has clones that appear to be various ages, from thirties up to their sixties. It turns out that oldest ones are no more than 4-years-old.

* The island in Ridorana Cataract that houses the Pharos has ancient structures (including most prominently, a coliseum) and living quarters. The bestiary suggests that it was inhabited by an ancient civilization long faded in memory.
* The Island Lincoln Six Echo and some of the other clones have inherited faint memories from their originals, the main significance being that he can copy Tom Lincoln's Scottish accent perfectly and the rest of his "generation" is almost incinerated as "flawed".
* The island nation of Wa-no-Kuni is clearly this for feudal Japan, what with its isolationism and its samurai. ("Wa-no-kuni" is in fact an old way to refer to Japan.)

* The Island of Doctor Moreau, the first definite sign Prendick sees that M'ling isn't just an ugly human is when he sees the beastman's eyes flash in the darkness, reflecting light like an animal's.
* The Island of Doctor Moreau version of the same. The titular doctor has used anesthetic-free vivisections to mold animals into human-like forms, and the main character is disturbed by how much the beast people hit Uncanny Valley for him.
* The Island of Dr. Moreau (1996) He also arrived to the set with Nelson de la Rosa, a minor dwarf celebrity from the Dominican Republic he'd recently befriended, and demanded he also receive a part, forcing them to include de la Rosa as Moreau's assistant Majai.
* The Island of Dr. Moreau (1996), however, these creatures lose their intelligence and slowly regress to their animal forms.
* The Island of Dr. Moreau (1996) to give animals human traits. In a further departure from the novel, though most of the Beast-Men were originally animals, one of the females gives birth to a hybrid baby, showing that Moreau's modifications breed true.
* The Island of Giant Insects. It follows a group of students that crash-land on an island where all the bugs have somehow turned gigantic. From wasps, to ticks, to tiger beetle larvae and even firefly.

But when Mr. 3 and Miss Goldenweek, who are on a vacation on a resort island, are told to kill the Straw Hats on Little Garden, they manage to go there and build a wax house within what seems to be around 10-15 minutes.
* The Island the characters frequently talk to the audience, reference the theatre and city they're in, and discuss which props on stage are part of the island reality and which are not. It's arguably a show about two comedians doing a show about being on an island.

* The Island. The clones have a bar code on their wrists, which is one way of identifying them from the real ones.
* The Island, the diagnostic sensors (which look like a cross between ticks and spiders) crawl into the body via the eyesocket.
* The Island, the naive Lincoln finds a magazine in McCord's work station. Lincoln asks if the girls are McCord's friends. When he nervously says yes, Lincoln asks where their clothes are.
* The Island, the pirates find a fortune in cocaine onboard the schooner, and throw it overboard because they have no idea what it is.
* The Island: The premise of the film revolves around clones created from wealthy people to serve as an extra set of organs to preserve their lives. Lincoln and Jordan seek out the help of Lincoln's progenitor, Tom Lincoln, to expose Dr. Merrick's cloning experiments. However, Tom would rather keep the experiments a secret so that he can save his own life and tries to turn Lincoln over to Merrick's men.

The IAI Kfir was a development of the Nesher with the addition of canards and a more powerful American General Electric J79 engine replacing the Nesher's SNECMA Atar.
* The Israeli army had to confront this issue when they found that for integrated squads, the casualty rate for men was unusually high. The men were throwing themselves into danger to protect their female comrades, entirely for chivalry's sake.
* The Israeli army has developed tactics for urban warfare that probably count as an example of this trope. Instead of going through booby-trapped streets and narrow alleys in which troops may be exposed to sniper fire, Israeli soldiers literally
* The Israeli Defence Forces tend to act like uniformed civilians when off duty. Discipline is much more strict while actively serving, at least for combat units. It's just that in such a small country and with universal conscription, they get a lot of off time, usually to go home for a weekend or holiday—that is, unless intel says they need to be on alert. During these off days, they are essentially uniformed civilians (this typically does wonders for morale).

* The Israeli Merkava is the most versatile tank of the lot. Not only is it big, bad and extremely powerful, it has been designed first and foremost with crew survivability in mind. * The issue is called out rather explicitly in the TNG episode "Where No One Has Gone Before". Due to the abilities of an alien ("The Traveler") the Enterprise has been transported to a place where thoughts become reality.
* The issue is directly referenced by name in Season One, during the election dispute between Laura Roslin and Tom Zarek, a notable radical who had served twenty years in prison for blowing up a building during an insurgency on Sagittaron before the war, and thus is regarded in legal terms as a terrorist. A Roslin supporter sitting at a bar makes a comment regarding Tom Zarek as a terrorist only to have a Tom Zarek supporter sitting nearby immediately correct the man that Tom Zarek is a freedom fighter. The argument soon evolves into a brawl, but this view is shared by Zarek's supporters as well as Zarek himself, and his ability to market himself as a heroic, populist figure sways nearly half of the fleet (though Dualla, who's also from Sagittaron, is disgusted by the support he gets, feeling there's no justification for what he did, not even their world's freedom).

* The issue of ancestors traveling long distances/waiting long times being skipped over while in the Animus is somewhat explained in terms of the series's "lore" in a later installment. It is implied that it is difficult for the Animus to establish synchronization with memories of activities with low mental involvement, especially those of a rote nature, such as driving. Presumably, long horse rides and waiting for the appropriate times for the major assassinations would fall under this category, so the Animus skips them. The logistics of the animus seem to inadvertently fall pretty closely in line with the Rule of Fun.

* The issues of surveillance, both by security and by other students, crops up often, most importantly in "The Riddle of Sappho" where an attempt to frame Pejuta by using the school's ID system against her backfires - due to the killers using a hidden camera to further blackmail her into silence about her alibi, but not securing the transmission well enough to prevent an unrelated student from hacking it.
* The issue was brought up directly in the episode "Boyz Crazy", where Robbie finds a song on a CD that, when played backwards, turns out to say "you are now under my control, your mind is mine". He uses it on Wendy and she breaks up with him when she finds out -
* The issue was more that the Wolfriders were leaving, and since the arrival of the Wolfriders had precipitated the departure of Rayek, their previous warrior-defender, they felt that they would have no more protection. Plus their healer was leaving them at the same time.
* The issue was that the 3D-over-2D-backgrounds engine of the first game (which was badly-dated even when it was first published) was the main thing that needed improvement. Most of the complaints were that they reused it rather than coming up with something else, not that the gameplay was the same.

* The Istari, or wizards, are understood to be five Maiar sent to Middle Earth with the appearance of wizened men, with the intent that they provide counsel, not become rulers. According to the Tale of Years they'd been in Middle Earth for two thousand years by the time of the War of the Ring but remain apparently ageless, though small signs of the passage of time are noticeable (longer beards and eyebrows, for example). Despite their guise as men their longevity sometimes got them mistaken for elves (the real etymology of the name "Gandalf" is "elf with a [magic] wand", as Tolkien pointed out).

* The Italian Air Force used the F-104 until 2004 in spite not only of the extreme age of the design (the airplane was first flown in 1954, with the Italian F-104S version being manufactured between 1964 and 1979) but of its tendency to crash. It helped it was actually * the Italian-American Mafia usually kills troublemakers in gruesome ways, on occasions, an offender may be "given a pass," meaning they were spared, especially if they earned good or were old-timers. But then, the offender is permanently banned from associating or doing business with any made member under pain of death. In other words, they were "chased" and stripped of their "button"/membership within La Cosa Nostra.
* The Italian. And it doesn't appear to be something real like meningitis, because in the movie absolute silence is crucial to the girl's recovery, which would hardly be likely for a real illness, except for heat-induced migraines, since the baby contracted the fever during a heatwave, noting in passing that common febrile seizures were not well know at this time and could easily be confused with another heat-related malady.
* The Italian Bob seems to reference this trope, when the end of the episode shows Marge and Homer taking a romantic gondola ride, the gondolier providing his services for the evening puts his own spin on the song "That's Amore", much to Homer's annoyance.
* The Italian branch of frozen foods company Findus had in the late '90s cartoon animal families (porcupines, octopuses, raccoons, chameleons etc.) to advertise some of their products. After a while only the chameleons stayed, and then the other family members were phased out in favor of the younger son, Carletto. Nowadays Carletto with his catchphrase "Aren't you hungry?" is more or less Findus' mascot in Italy to this day, and all the other characters are completely forgotten.
* The Italian Civil War results in the independence of Sicily and Sardinia, while mainland Italy becomes a Communist state and eventually splits into north and south by the end of the 20th century.
* The Italian dance of Tarantella, according to folks, started out when tarantulas bit farmers on the fields. Since the folks thought the spiders' bites were dangerous, they danced until they sweat to drive the venom out. Other people then danced to the beat and the heat, starting a dance frenzy.
* The Italian dub had a similar issue: in Season 1 Rarity had a very high-pitched and whiny voice, while Rainbow Dash was given a voice a bit too masculine. After complaints, both voice actresses changed their takes as the characters in season 2.
* The Italian, it's a huge headline and a big story in the newspaper when Corrigan the political boss's daughter gets sick. This is necessary to the plot so Beppo the protagonist can find out about Corrigna's daughter and take his revenge.
* The Italian Job (1969), Charlie Crocker fears that his girlfriend's involvement in the heist is putting her at unacceptable risk, so he buys her a plane ticket back to England. He tells her to walk straight to the plane, "Look neither to the right nor to the left," to avoid attracting attention. She, of course, turns around and shouts "Bye, Charlie!" the entire way to the plane. Nothing bad comes of this.
* The Italian Job (1969), Charlie is first spotted being released from prison and is promptly given the plan for the titular job.
* The Italian Job (1969) for a sequel that was never made: the gold goes over the cliff, the French Mafia pick it up, and Charlie Croker's crew spend the rest of the film getting it back. Having been released only a year after the end of the Hays Code, which forbade criminal characters from profiting from their crimes, the ending is also a product of its time.

* The Italian Job (1969) has an American heist crew pull off a caper in Venice only to be betrayed by one of their members. They follow him to Los Angeles to perform another caper out of revenge.
* The Italian Job (1969) has Professor Peach's sister tell the team (who's looking to recruit him) that he is "no longer with us" but after several misunderstandings, it turns out he's just been institutionalized.
* The Italian Job (1969)) in lives in luxury like a proper English gentleman in prison. He takes his tea in a study, is attended by the staff, and continues to manage his criminal empire while still technically behind bars.
* The Italian Job (1969). Minis that would normally collapse with that much gold jump across gaps, drive on the roof of a building and then off again.
* The Italian Job (1969), The first thing Charlie Croker does upon getting released from jail? Visiting his tailor and his shirtmaker.
* The Italian Job (1969), where it is necessary for them to pull the elaborate 'Mini chase'.
* The Italian Job (1969), with their bus hanging halfway over a cliff. Croker then says, "Hang on, lads. I've got a great an idea." Then the film ends before we find out what the idea is, if it works, and if anyone survives, much less gets the gold. This was in deference to the production codes of the time, which still would not allow criminals get happy endings. Rather than show them punished, the film simply lets you imagine what happens. Many theories have been floated around as to exactly how they are supposed to get out of their situation and possible theories as to how the plot would continue.
* The Italian Job (2003). Charlie and company make it a point of pride to not use guns, but we also get the impression that they're not very violent people in general, and wouldn't do very well if it came to a shoot-out.
* The Italian Job (2003), Charlie Croker walks into Stella Bridger's hotel room after he knocks and she doesn't answer. He ends up seeing her in her bra and taking her by surprise. Stella then tells Charlie to not look as she quickly puts a top on.
* The Italian Job (2003) does this twice: once with a standard safe and once with an entire armored truck.
* The Italian Job (2003) falls under this trope in the form of a heist against a former member who stole the take from their previous heist and murdered their mentor.
* The Italian Job (2003) had a whole deleted subplot during the climax where Left Ear has to drive one of the gang's Mini Coopers with Handsome Rob talking him through it. At one point, Left Ear ends up stalling their car on a hill and they end up rear-ending the car behind them.
* The Italian Job (2003) has the crew pulling a caper against the guy who double-crossed them, murdered their original leader, and took the gold from their original caper. And even in their original caper, the gold they stole was from the mafia and not from any legitimate institution or person.
* The Italian Job (2003) has this: Steve realizes Stella is John's daughter because of a phrase she uses, that he's never heard from anyone one else but John.
* The Italian Job (2003), sales of Mini Coopers, featured heavily in the movie, increased by 22%.
* The Italian Job (2003), the villain realizes that he's on a date with the daughter of a man he killed years ago when she uses her father's trademark phrase, "I trust everyone; I just don't trust the devil inside them."
* The Italian Job acts as this for Charlie and his crew when they pull their final heist in L. A.
* The Italian Job, Charlie urges him to work faster until Left-Ear notes that if any part of the pin he's inserting touches the outer edge of the socket, the whole thing will go up.
* The Italian Job has the crew go over a complex plan to steal their gold back from Steve. When they go to implement said plan, they discover Steve's neighbors are holding a party. They call off the heist due to the large number of witnesses.
* The Italian Job has the crew pulling a caper against the guy who double-crossed them and took the gold from their original caper.

* The Italian Job is the safecracker and a necessary part of the team, but she is also the daughter of Charlie's mentor and got chosen for the job for that reason.
* The Italian Job the gold they lost in Italy when one member of the original heist team betrayed them.
* The Italian Job, this is Stella's role, inherited from her father after he was shot on the last job they pulled.

* The Italian offensive of late 1940 designed to push the British out of Egypt got so far. Then stopped. And was then turned into humiliating retreat back into Libya by a makeshift British army about an eighth of its own size. The Italian invasion of Albania and Grece was similarly humiliated. Both disasters required heavy German intervention to rescue their hapless ally.
* The Italian short novel "La Patente" (The License) revolves around Chiarchiaro, a man whose life is ruined because he's rumored to be this.

* The Italian version is "Striscia la Notizia", a daily news parody who nonetheless manages to make also very serious points, exposing local cases of corruption and frauds which usually don't appear on the "real" news programs.
* The Italian version of the last part translates as: "I'll be a king admired, feared and loved, nobody is better than me!"
* The Italy brothers are mirror images of each other. North Italy's is on his left side while South's is on his right.
* The ITCH episode of Neveneffecten is a play on all the tropes in police detective series and uses the Watson to explain the concept of the Watson with the following dialogue.
* The Itchy & Scratchy & Poochie Show", after showing his friends and family the "Poochie" which he's voice acting for, Homer's guests all leave muttering incoherently and Carl says "You should be very proud, Homer... you have a wonderful home."
* The Itchy & Scratchy short from "Funeral for a Fiend" is unusually more fluid than the others.
* The Itchy & Scratchy Show applies their over-the-top approach to this trope in "Spherical on 34th Street". Itchy inflates Scratchy with hydrogen gas, then shoots him with a flaming arrow to make him explode in a huge fireball.
* The Itchy & Scratchy Show. Even worse, Krusty announces that they'll never be able to show it again.
* The Itchy & Scratchy Show has had the psychotic mouse Itchy actually stab perennial victim cat Scratchy with a broken one.

* The Itchy & Scratchy Show has the titular duo pointing guns at each other that get larger and larger until they are half the size of the earth. The end result: Scratchy winds up being shot out of Itchy's gun, and into the sun.
* The Itchy & Scratchy Show is just Jerry taken to psychotic extremes since every episode of the show involves him killing Scratchy in ridiculously violent and gory ways for no reason other than because it's funny.
* The Itchy & Scratchy Show, Scratchy is dead, so Itchy builds a Cloning Machine to churn out new Scratchys to kill. But the machine is going so fast he can't keep up—so he builds a Killing Machine for the conveyor belt to deliver the newly-made clones into.
* The Itchy & Scratchy Show" Scratchy joins a gym and builds huge muscles by doing just three presses of a loaded weight bar.

* The Itchy and Scratchy Show." In a panic, he reaches for his heart, only to keel over dead.
* The Itchy and Scratchy, the fifth level, "The Magnificent Severed" takes place in the desert, with a western town in the background. Enemies include cowboy dogs and Scratchy robots dressed like Native Americans. The boss of the level is Scratchy in a chuck wagon.
* The Itchy and Scratchy, the sixth level, "A Site For Sawed Eyes" takes place at a construction site. The boss of the level is Scratchy driving a bulldozer.
* The IT Crowd a central piece of evidence in Victoria's case is a sex tape made by Douglas Reynholm. After Victoria's lawyer decides that that enough of the tape has been shown and switches it off, Douglas objects with:
* The IT Crowd after a PC tech with questionable interpersonal skills paid a house call.
* The IT Crowd And it implies that the punishment if you're caught pirating is summary execution.
* The IT Crowd are, as suggested, "a lot of sexy people not doing much work and having affairs". And they're all horrible, mean people. At least to Moss and Roy, anyway.
* The IT Crowd as he attempts to use it. He wonders why and then sees the 'made in Britain' label — of course.
* The IT Crowd, Ayoade is also something of a socially-awkward, shy geek, who is open about his social anxiety issues. He has often stated that he hates the limelight and hates being interviewed, and when appearing on British panel shows he often plays up this persona. According to Ayoade, Graham Linehan wrote the character specifically for him, having met him at university and knowing his personality quirks.
* The IT Crowd between Reynholm Junior and his girlfriend who was from Iran used to be a man.
* The IT Crowd by Douglas: "Well, I'm the boss, head honcho, el numero uno, Mr. Big, the Godfather, Lord of the Rings, the Bourne Identity, er... Taxi Driver, Jaws... Forgot the question a while ago."
* The IT Crowd did this offscreen with a photograph of Roy's new online date, with Moss and Roy commenting on each new feature of her face as the slow-loading image revealed it. It does load downwards, and the slowness is lampshaded with a mention that there's something wrong with the routers and everyone's back to "pre-broadband speeds".
* The IT Crowd during a company meeting where the Boss goes around thanking all the departments, such as the lawyers and the accountants and even the janitors, but not our heroes. Upon each announcement, he describes something that could potentially describe IT, only for it to be another department.
* The IT Crowd DVDs in "Bad Boys". Their attempts at being nonchalant are anything but, and inevitably draw the attention of mall security.
* The IT Crowd episode "Calamity Jen", Moss attempts to put out a fire with a fire extinguisher, only for the extinguisher itself to catch fire. He then calls for help by sending an email.

* The IT Crowd episode "Jen The Fredo", Moss talks about a girlfriend he had "on holiday", causing Roy to snap "They're always on holiday, aren't they Moss?".
* The IT Crowd episode "The Haunting of Bill Crouse", in which the titular Bill Crouse, believing that Jen has died, falsely claims that he was the last person to sleep with her in order to win sympathy from others. Throughout the episode, Jen tries to confront him about it, but each time, circumstances cause him to believe that she's a vengeful ghost haunting him.
* The IT Crowd for the IT Department. She has no computer skills but, unlike the rest of the cast, she has social skills.
* The IT Crowd had Douglas do one of these when he talked about deleting incriminating files and then quickly added that he only meant to say "files".
* The IT Crowd: "Hang on, let me put on some slightly larger glasses..."
* The IT Crowd has a heartbroken Roy perfectly photoshop his ex out of all of their photos, hilariously leaving him alone on a seesaw etc...
* The IT Crowd has a variant of this, where Roy has lipstick applied to him after a drunken night out. It's still there when he goes to work the next day.
* The IT Crowd has Denholm Reynholm walk to a high-story window and casually commit suicide when confronted by the authorities for accounting irregularities and it's hilarious.
* The IT Crowd has learned about the original plan and informs Jen that she's now responsible for getting the calendar to raise a million pounds. Jen, realizing that grannies don't sell nearly as well as sex, desperately turns to Moss and his friends in an attempt to cash in on the "geek chic" trend.
* The IT Crowd has the company CEO Denholm Reynolm declaring a war on stress, with anyone showing any signs of stress to be fired. Of course, the threat doesn't help things.
* The IT Crowd, he ends up having to do the job until by the end of the evening he's good friends with the other employees and genuinely enjoying himself. One of the others has something similar happen to him, in that he gets caught using the disabled lavatory and, to get out of trouble, pretends to be disabled... with the result that he ends the evening in a wheelchair being driven to Manchester with a group of other disabled individuals. While he doesn't end up actually disabled, he does have a much less enjoyable evening.
* The IT Crowd. Her craving is so overpowering that she runs outside to smoke a cigarette from the gutter, and soon afterwards she is shown "making up for lost time".
* The IT Crowd However he can't get the images of half-naked nerds and old women out of his head, it's a long story.
* The IT Crowd, if not at actually understanding). Things go south quickly when Douglas forbids her to bring her laptop to the first face to face meeting with the Italian man and her improvised Italian is so awful that no subtitles are even needed to see that she's just speaking English words with a pseudo-Italian tone and intonation. Including words like "Vienetta," "Fiat Punto," and "Super Mario" as Italian words.
* The IT Crowd..."I like my women like I like my toast. Hot..." "And consumable with butter, you don't have to remind me."
* The IT Crowd: In "Are We Not Men?", Roy unwittingly becomes the wheelman for a gang of bank robbers. After the robbery, the leader has Roy drive into the back of a waiting lorry. The gang then sits there till the heat is off and the police have dispersed.
* The IT Crowd: In "Moss and the German", Douglas arranges a man-date with Roy, says his PA will call him with the details, and then walks into Jen's office. He comes out a moment later saying "That's not my office".
* The IT Crowd, in the episode "Something Happened", had Norman, Jen's new boyfriend who plays the keyboard in a band.
* The IT Crowd In the script book for the latter, he expresses particular satisfaction that the final image of series two is a lingering close-up of his face.

* The IT Crowd is shown when the characters are sitting down to watch a film.
* The IT Crowd. It's a rather fun game and the more people you tell about it the better."
* The IT Crowd It's revealed that he's still stuck inside the claw machine.
* The IT Crowd Jen asks Moss to make up an excuse to get rid of her unwanted suitor, telling him to just say she is busy when he seems nervous about this. Moss then blurts out to the suitor that Jen is dead, causing the whole office to go into mourning, which ends rather abruptly when Jen walks into her own memorial ceremony...
* The IT Crowd, Jen forces on shoes that are several sizes too small for her, despite a shoe store employee's warnings that this would cripple her. To compound this issue, a Japanese businessman accidentally jumps on her foot, causing her to clutch her foot and hop, and many swearing gags.
* The IT Crowd, Jen is pretending to be busy, so she makes Moss wait till she finishes her phone call. When she asks him what he wants, he replies that he came to connect her telephone. She didn't really learn her lesson, since later in the same episode she pretends to use a computer and then Moss plugs it in for her.
* The IT Crowd, Jen plays this to a man whose sexuality is a mystery through most of the episode. At the end, he breaks down and cries that he only went out with her because she looks a bit like a man.
* The IT Crowd, Jen shouts at a Japanese business client after he accidentally injures her. The tirade is bleeped. Shortly after, her boss thanks the employee who was apparently pressing a button to bleep the swearing in the office. He then tells Jen she fucked up, with said employee being too late on the buzzer.
* The IT Crowd: Lampshaded in an episode where Roy starts giving Moss a hard time about how everything he "invents" is worthless. The last invention being a ladder to help moths escape from bathtubs.
* The IT Crowd mask, rather than a Guy Fawkes mask, by Graham Linehan himself!
* The IT Crowd, Moss climbs into a crane machine to get an iPhone that was dropped in but gets stuck. Jen manages to use the crane to get the iPhone, but Moss has to try moving to the side to let the iPhone slip through. When it finally gets out Moss exclaims "it's beautiful."
* The IT Crowd, Moss does this when he has to pretend to be married, several times going out of his way to mention all the frequent and amazing sex that goes on in his marriage.
* The IT Crowd, Moss is very literal minded. An early episode has him read "Stand upright" on a fire extinguisher and take a moment to realise that it doesn't mean him.
* The IT Crowd nonchalantly steps out of a thirtieth-floor window during a board meeting to off himself when some "irregularities in the pension fund" are exposed.
* The IT Crowd, of course), yet they rarely have any lasting effect. Oddly, they actually do seem to have a H.R. Department when it suits them - for instance, Moss is sent to a psychologist at one point after he tells everyone that Jen has died.
* The IT Crowd: One episode has Roy go underneath a woman's desk to plug in her computer. She comes back to sit at her desk and he ends up trapped since he couldn't possibly get out without looking like a pervert.
* The IT Crowd on its own, was taken off the air in 2020 in light of creator Graham Linehan's openly transphobic views.
* The IT Crowd, prompting a large amount of heckling by Moss and an incident with the parent of a small child at an airport after his name is called over the PA. Moss says this would not be a problem in America where it's pronounced differently, though this is not strictly true (the short E pronunciation is more common, but depending on the dialect not exclusively so).
* The IT Crowd, resident nerd among nerds, trying to deliver the line to Roy. He begins nobly, 'Women — can't live with them...' before trailing off and realising he has absolutely no idea how to talk about romantic matters or advice to give thereof. Later on, he delivers the gender-flipped version:
* The IT Crowd, Reynholm fires everyone on an entire floor of the building for not working as a team. And then calls HR to hire a new security team to escort out the other team in case they don't act as a team when escorting everyone from the floor out.

* The IT Crowd: Roy and Moss are worried about what to say to Denholm's widow at his funeral, and Jen tells them, "Just say, 'I'm sorry for your loss,' then move on." Roy goes up and says, "I'm sorry for your loss. Move on."
* The IT Crowd, Roy is stealing from the vending machine via hacking when his boss jumps in, yells his name, then explains that he's yelling because he's wearing earplugs. Roy gets smart enough to realize that anything he says will be misheard, and says "I'm stealing food from this machine!" His boss smiles and walks away.
* The IT Crowd: Roy rants that Jen knows nothing about computers and will someday slip up in something she says or does. Moss cuts in to say that the computer Jen is pretending to use isn't plugged in. Roy continues to rant and storms out. Moss says "He'll realize in a moment." He does. The failed US pilot delays the reaction further; Roy re-enters the office, claims a pen from the desk, and leaves before the realization.
* The IT Crowd, Roy uses a handicapped toilet and accidentally yanks an emergency signal. When the theater crew kick the door down to get to him, he pretends to be disabled. This snowballs into him getting loaded onto a bus on a wheelchair, bound for Manchester with lots of other disabled people. In the same episode, Moss uses the staff toilet and ends up being forced to work in the bar.
* The IT Crowd. She's hired to be the IT team's HR manager, but it soon becomes clear that while she doesn't share Roy and Moss' "nerdy" interests, she's not really any more functional than they are. On the other hand, they definitely need her to function; on one occasion when she's away from the office, the IT department devolves into complete insanity within one day. She tells Moss that Richmond's "going to come out and play with us for a while" just like a schoolteacher would in Richmond's debut episode, also suggesting this role. In a later season we see her office full of cute anime characters, so hanging out with nerds has influenced her to become nerdy but in a totally different way.
* The IT Crowd sometimes had this reaction to relatively innocent subjects, such as learning that a colleague was having a baby.
* The IT Crowd's Roy phrasing it slightly strangely, because if he says it naturally, it doesn't quite work either.
* The IT Crowd the apathetic Roy will always answer the phone with "Hello, IT, have you tried turning it off and on again?" In later seasons they progress to "is it plugged in?", and later still "I'm sick of saying that... what do you WANT?!"
* The IT Crowd, the heroes launch a new, concentrated pepper spray for women. To give it a feminine touch, it comes in a pretty perfume bottle. What could possibly go wrong?
* The IT Crowd. The play is obviously extremely gay and borders on being a drag show.
* The IT Crowd. The writer solved this simply - it is never mentioned again.
* The IT Crowd. They show her and his description seems accurate, especially when she starts crying and her makeup gets smeared.
* The IT Crowd to subvert this, seeing as her role is supposed to be the sociable one who can help the other two actually connect with other people, but actually she's just as socially inept, awkward, and consumed with her obsessions as the other two. The only real difference is that Jen's obsessions are considered more socially mainstream, which enables her to get away with it more.
* The IT Crowd treated a rather unimpressive door this way. It led into a chamber where a Goth nobody could stand monitored the data communications arrays with not a single clue what they even did, so Jen was told never to open it. When the character is driven back into his chamber by allowing too much natural sunlight into the IT office, the problem is solved - so long as no-one opens the other forbidden door, with an appearance which fits this trope more effectively.
* The IT Crowd trying to play him off as a woman dressed up for a heaven Hitler party.
* The IT Crowd' variant commonly referred to as trolls in the media, when Jen gets caught in a viral video and gets bombarded with hateful Twitter comments.

* The IT Crowd when Douglas gets a robot hand then proceeds to smash the items on his desk while laughing maniacally.
* The IT Crowd, when Douglas Reynholm shows a video to Jen about the company... also, him being naked. Subverted in that it backfires horribly for him; Jen and everyone else who sees it see exactly what's going on and are, not surprisingly, freaked out.
* The IT Crowd, when everyone thinks Jen has died, Denholm pulls one when giving a eulogy:
* The It Crowd when hearing of how a high school classmate has the perfect successful life that Jen wished she had.
* The IT Crowd when Richmond warns the others not to go to their boss's funeral because:
* The IT Crowd, when the ludicrously nerdy main characters become "real men" by learning stock football phrases off the internet.
* The IT Crowd. When they see the poster, the review blurbs consist of "The audience applauded", "More than tolerable" and "Not as long as some musicals."
* The IT Crowd with Jen's less fun day) ensues, after which Roy laments that they've already done all eight things on the list.
* The IT Crowd: women who want bastards will find them, and men who try to make themselves into bastards to attract women will attract only damaged goods who confirm their dim view of the opposite sex.
* The IT Crowd works for him. Later, he brings out the popcorn when Roy discusses a problem with a masseuse.

* The item "Cambion Conception" makes your character visibly pregnant. When you recieve enough damage (game describes it as "feed them with hate"), it spawns a random demonic familiar to follow you from then on. The character Lilith starts with this item.
* The item "Scroll of Recall" could potentially have this effect. Normally it acts similar to a Hearthstone, sending you back to a previously set home point. If your level is too high for that particular level of scroll, however, the effect becomes more random.

* The Itsy Bitsy Spider, isn't scary, although Adrienne, the teacher at the school Leslie McRoraty (Itsy's human friend) attends, practically soils herself whenever she sees him.
* The iTunes Store charges everything ending in either $.90 or 9. One track typically cost $.99, though now it can be $.89 or $1.09. An album might cost $9.90. And a whole 75-track iTunes Essentials set costs exactly $74.25.
* The iTunes Store (if you use the iTunes cards) and Xbox Live Marketplace have the same problem (say I have 190 Microsoft Points left over, and the DLC I want is 1,200 MSP. Normally, I would buy the 1,000 MSP, but I'd have 10 MSP under the limit. The smallest bundle of MSP available is the 500 points one. That would leave me with 490 MSP left over, and the cycle begins again).
* The ITV Digital Monkey has also outlived its original creators' short life, and now advertises PG Tips tea. It was said (possibly not seriously) that when ITV Digital shut down, Monkey was one of the most valuable of their few remaining assets.
* The IUN evoke both the United Nations with their peacekeeping role and NATO with their use by Osea as a proxy military force.
* The Ivory King used golems extensively, though his were usually made of ice rather than stone. He also used soul-powered Giant-like golems similar to those created by Vendrick, except his could actually fight rather than just manipulate simple mechanisms.
* The IVs are superior in both equipment quality and numbers compared to their III and II predecessors. However, while the IVs
* The Ivy monsters are so heavily redesigned that fans refer to them as an entirely new monster—the Ivy Zombie. Originally, the Ivy design consisted of a plant warped into a very crude semblance of a human outline, with a bifurcated stalk "legs", drooping vines for "arms", and a large pod for a head. The Ivy Zombie, in comparison, is visibly recognizable as a once-human corpse that has been utterly infested with parasitic vines and creepers that worm their way into the flesh, with the once-human head now splitting apart into a gaping maw.

* The IWW Incarcerated Workers Organization Committee is seeking to unionize prisoners. It has led several strikes, mostly in the US south. (Prisoners in the US do a large amount of hard labor, generally for pittance pays of around a dollar or two per day, and failure to enroll in the "technically voluntary" work program may get a prisoner thrown into solitary confinement as punishment; this is to say nothing of things like underage felons being used to fight California wildfires.)

* The Jackal. As federal agents search the house he's hiding in, the Jackal sets the timer on a stereo to play loud music, which covers his shooting them with a silenced submachine gun as they rush to investigate the noise.
* The Jackal at a bar and goes home with him. He's still at the guy's house the next day, using it as a base of operations. When the fellow sees the Jackal on a news report, the Jackal casually shoots him.
* The Jackal, Bruce Willis's assassin character does this, killing the arms dealer who sold him his high-powered gun with that gun, to make sure that it will work when used on his target.

* The Jackal) by firing a shot into the fuel tank, then a second shot to ignite the leaking fuel after a sizeable puddle has formed.
* The Jackal. (His handler Preston does say that he'll get transferred to a minimum-security prison.) At the end of the movie, Preston says that he'll go to get a cup of coffee and that he'll be back in...30 minutes. Declan understands that that's his cue to just walk away a free man.
* The Jackal so it's obvious he would be spending the rest of his life hiding after that.
* The Jackal, the title character (played by Bruce Willis) hires Ian Lamont (Jack Black) to build a large-caliber rifle and automated mount to assassinate the First Lady. The rifle and mount are transported in and fire from an SUV, though the vehicle isn't in motion when it does so.
* The Jackal, the titular assassin discovers, leading to several deaths (including Witherspoon's).
* The Jackal, the titular assassin sprays something on his SUV that was holding his gun as a would-be thief was tailing him. He somehow dies from whatever it was.
* The Jackal too, where the FBI Deputy Director has been led to believe that someone in the FBI has been leaking information to the Jackal. He does the same thing to get a tape of a phone conversation recorded on a tapped line.

* The Jack Benny Program, and Mary Livingstone, who had been flirting with Jack before the dream began, is married—to Frank Nelson!
* The Jack Benny Program, at his hysterical over-the-top best) ultimately leaves to shoot himself. Jack hears the gunshot, then realizes he'll have to make his own change from the register.
* The Jack Benny Program: Dennis Day portrayed himself this way. Apparently, he didn't even realise he was supposed to cash the paychecks Jack gave him each week.
* The Jack Benny Program did this quite a few times with knowing winks about the commercials.
* The Jack Benny Program featured a sketch called "Murder on the Gridiron".
* The Jack Benny Program. He's depicted as having been stuck down there since the Revolutionary War and completely innocent of current events, let alone such "modern" contraptions as wheelbarrows. At least one episode had Jack bringing him up to the surface, and his resultant future shock.
* The Jack Benny Program: In the October 12, 1941 episode, Jack's appearance as a girl was enough to fool Dennis and get him a touch infatuated.
* The Jack Benny Program in which the entire cast play themselves as animated mice. Midway through the short Don shows up, tries to deliver a commercial, and has to have it explained to him that this is a theatrical short and doesn't have a sponsor.
* The Jack Benny Program its Enforced Plugs; after all, it frequently called itself “The Grape Nuts and Grape Nuts Flakes Program, starring Jack Benny!” Among the ways it did so:
* The Jack Benny Program: Jack asks Rochester a question (while Rochester is driving), and Rochester is startled awake and yells, "Put the coffee on honey!".
* The Jack Benny Program, Jack's wife plays his wife, and his daughter, Joan, plays his daughter.
* The Jack Benny Program, leading to perhaps the least kosher radio show in history.
* The Jack Benny Program: Mary was generally the most level-headed character on the show. Jack and the guest stars would fill this role often as well.
* The Jack Benny Program — Actor Eddie Anderson became so identified with his character, Rochester, that he became known as Eddie "Rochester" Anderson.
* The Jack Benny Program mostly used their real names (Eddie Anderson as Rochester being an exception, and Sadie Marks would eventually adopt Mary Livingstone as her actual name), and their personas were extremely well known and usually who they "played" in everything, i.e. Jack was always a cheapskate, Phil always a boozer, etc. It was so convincing that the show got letters from a real lawyer who thought Rochester actually was Benny's mistreated valet and offered to represent him, and Benny had to break the fourth wall and admit that the real Anderson was a wealthy man with his own mansion and servants. On another occasion, the performers briefly dropped character to comically complain about how hard it was to play so stupid/drunk/fat/cheap all the time.

* The Jack Benny Program moved to TV they realized that some of their most beloved running gags couldn't be replicated in a visual medium so they had to be abandoned: namely, Jack's underground bunker/safe and the polar bear guarding it, and Jack's very old car.
* The Jack Benny Program of all things. In the opening of one episode, Jack explains that the reason he hasn't aged too much is he has the camera move back every season so it's harder for it to see what he looks like. He then has the camera do a zoom in on him. His face suddenly becomes horribly wrinkled and shriveled, making him look like Pruneface from Dick Tracy.
* The Jack Benny Program, on a Christmas show, Andy Devine was supposed to climb out of the chimney when Jack yelled, "Santy Claus will be here any minute!" When the time came, Jack yelled several times, louder each time. Eventually, Andy cuts him off and says he can't come because he's stuck in the chimney.
* The Jack Benny Program, Phil Harris found out Dennis Day could do a dead-on impression of Ronald Colman, Jack's next door neighbor. He talked Dennis into calling Jack (as Ronald Colman) and asking Jack to come to a costume party at his house. The next night, the Colmans are getting ready to go to bed, when they hear a knock at the door. They answer, and Jack bursts in dressed as a cowboy. The Colmans are completely bewildered.
* The Jack Benny Program. Ronald Coleman, a dramatic actor, was a recurring guest star of Benny's, playing Jack's beleaguered next door neighbor. In one early rehearsal, Coleman, still in the mindset of an actor, asked the writer about one of his lines, wanting to know his motivation for saying the line. The writer replied "to get the biggest friggin' laugh possible". Still perplexed, he turned to his wife, Benita Hume, also guesting on the show, and asked her the same question. She replied "to get the biggest friggin' laugh possible."
* The Jack Benny Program's avatars, would join in trying to stop the Sportsmen.
* The Jack Benny Program started out as a standard comedy-variety show but as time went on, it became a sitcom about a variety show.
* The Jack Benny Program, there were several cast changes over the years: Bob Crosby for Phil Harris; Dennis Day for Kenny Baker.
* The Jack Benny Program typically played the straight man to everyone else in the cast. As Benny said, "I don't care who gets the laughs on my show, as long as the show is funny."
* The Jack Benny Program used a medley of "Yankee Doodle Dandy" and "Love in Bloom" as its opening theme, and "Hooray for Hollywood" as its closing theme.
* The Jack Benny Program was based on this. Particularly with Phil Harris and to a lesser degree, Mary Livingstone. Jack's whole show was other people taking pot shots at him. Jack Benny became this with Fred Allen, in an attempt to boost Fred's popularity. It worked very well.
* The Jack Benny Program was that he drove an ancient Maxwell automobile that was so old it barely ran at all. The sound effects for the alleged car were originally recorded from an actual broken down car engine, but one broadcast when the sound guy missed the cue, Mel Blanc grabbed the microphone and improvised the sputtering car vocally. It went over so well Jack decided that Mel would do the sound of the Maxwell from then on.
* The Jack Benny Program, who were too busy making wisecracks and infuriating Jack to put the call through.
* The Jackbox Party Pack from Pack 6, the host has a bit of a faux pas in one of his introductions for the "Pegs" minigame.

* The Jackbox Party Pack has a few scenarios where a game can end without a winner being declared.
* The Jackbox Party Pack has many games that are played in three rounds (Fibbage, Quiplash, etc). The second round is worth double points meaning the first round is far less important. Somewhat unusually the final round is often far less important, as it will only have a single question while the previous two rounds will have several, making the second round the most valuable overall.
* The Jackbox Party Pack has the game "Survive the Internet", which is all about taking others' words out of context. In each round, all the players answer a question, then other players' take their responses and put them in a context where that response would be embarrassing, defaming, or otherwise inappropriate, then all the players vote on the funniest response.
* The Jackbox Party Pack. He also has specific responses for if someone tries to name themselves "fuck you" either once, twice, or three times in a row - the first time he'll make you change your name, the second he'll deduct $5000 before you even start, and the third he'll declare you the loser outright.
* The Jackbox Party Pack: In "Monster Seeking Monster", several of the monsters have a mechanic that involves spreading some kind of "infection" to players they date.
* The Jackbox Party Pack involves a family of demons moving to the suburbs as part of a "demon-humans relations programs". Each "episode" features a list of challenge tasks themed around a stock sitcom plot (like hosting a sleepover or having hard-to-please relatives over for dinner), with some fantastic examples (like saving Earth from being hit by a gigantic meteor).
* The Jackbox Party Pack is a loan company with a number of musical jingles that tend to be about what a bad idea it is to borrow from them.
* The Jackbox Party Pack: The Monster Hunter from "Monster Seeking Monster" has another player assigned as their quarry, and they get bonus points for each time they convince them to date the Hunter.
* The Jackbox Party Pack: The object of "Push the Button" is for the human players to deduce which of them are aliens in disguise and call a successful vote to eject the impostors out the airlock, while the aliens are trying to throw suspicion on the humans so one or more of them gets thrown out instead.
* The Jackbox Party Pack. Turns out that the whole thing is just a TV show with an elaborate presentation!
* The Jackbox Party Pack, various Jackbox Games employees make cameos, especially as incidental characters or background voices during sign-in.
* The Jackelope is another quite literal example. It looks like a jack rabbit with a tiny pair of deer antlers but eats the hearts of predators that normally eat rabbits.
* The Jacket, the main character experiences these visions while undergoing an experimental drug therapy.
* The Jacket, when Jack is locked into the isolation chamber, he has visions that are presented as flashing images in quick succession.
* The Jackhammer Massacre. Is any further elaboration really necessary?
* The Jackhammer Massacre is electric, this crops up. But not very often, since the cord seemed to be absurdly long.
* The Jackie Robinson Story, in which Jackie Robinson was played by himself.
* The Jack in the Box fast-food chain was advertising its "brunchfast" menu (think chicken and egg sandwiches, burgers on croissant "buns," and other hybrids of their breakfast and lunch menu items). It started with Jack pitching the idea to his staff. Someone asked where he got the idea. Queue

* The Jackson 5 and the Osmonds, had their own animated shows at the heights of their fame. Unusually, they did their own voices.
* The Jackson 5 had become the biggest solo artist in music, while middle brother Marlon released an unsuccessful solo album and appeared in a film produced by Troma).
* The Jackson 5ive cartoon used a specially recorded medley of four of the group's biggest hits during that time ("ABC", "I Want You Back", "The Love You Save", and "Mama's Pearl"; in that order) for both the opening and closing.
* The Jackson 5 jumping ship to Epic Records in 1975 after leaving Motown.
* The Jackson 5, really, really didn't want his kids to become criminals on the streets of Gary, Indiana. He probably could have found a better way to do this, though, than forcing them into performing. His children have said they suffered hours upon hours of incessant rehearsals after school and on weekends, would be physically abused if they made mistakes, and were strongly discouraged from showing any interest in activities or hobbies removed from the family business.
* The Jackson 5 the solo singer when he was in his teens. The "King of Pop," incidentally, was one of the few teen idols whose teen stardom parlayed into a career in adulthood, and to say it was successful would be a gross understatement.
* The Jacksonians have a highly unethical treatment in which the brain of a wealthy client is
* The Jackson Legacy: The Private War takes place a decade before the story kicks off.
* The Jacksons: An American Dream) does this. All the Jackson family members are played by actors but for most songs, they used original recordings of the Jacksons singing with others using new recordings of the songs by other singers.
* The Jacksons: An American Dream's head was lit on fire during a botched pyrotechnic explosion. The trope is downplayed in the series, as Jackson's hair is only shown smoking after being burned.
* The Jacksons: An American Dream's infamous 1984 Pepsi commercial accident but avoided legal issues by simply not mentioning Pepsi at all or using their logos.
* The Jacksons fly with them on the helicopter to Giants Stadium, they were all glaring at him silently. Eventually it led to separate limos to shows for all of them, Michael even staying in a separate hotel, and Michael and Jermaine letting their lawyers stand in for them at the increasingly frequent meetings between the band, Don King and promoter Chuck Sullivan later in the tour as things started going really sour. Michael saved the coldest dish for last, telling the crowd at the rain-soaked tour finale in Dodger Stadium that this was to be the brothers' last performance together, stunning not only them but King and Joe Jackson, who had been all set to take the tour to Europe.
* the Jacksons, was written by Michael Jackson? It was, but not THAT Michael Jackson. An Englishman (Mick Jackson) wrote it (along with his brother David and Elmar Krohn), recorded it first and his version made the UK charts at around the same time as the (US) Jacksons version, but only the latter is remembered today.
* The Jacks, so named because no one's sure if they are extinct or not; they keep unexpectedly "popping up" on different worlds like a Jack-in-the-box, over the course of thousands of years.
* The Jackyl (Don "Cyrus" Callis), "I know I have a tendency to speak above your intellectual level."
* The Jaded Eyes Series while Harry/Tristan hates Muggles he's friends with and strives for the rights of Magical Creatures. His followers are mostly non-human magic users such as elementals, satyrs, furies, gargoyles, werewolves, and vampires.
* The Jade Faced Assassin and the result of a forbidden love affair between a warrior and the youngest daughter of a powerful martial arts clan. Their parents died early in the film, and while the two children gets picked up by their aunts, the older aunt decide the best way to restore honor to the family is by having the twins raised into adulthood, and force them to fight each other to the death to decide whom shall be a worthy successor.

* The Jade Wind in Cantha transformed a sea to solid jade and petrified an entire forest, changing the geography of roughly half the continent.

* The Jaeger "Striker Eureka" has little Kaiju stamps on its chassis to mark its kills, especially because it had the highest number of kills.
* The Jaffa are kept dependent on the Goa'uld, because they need a larval symbiote to survive past adolescence. Having a symbiote doesn't exactly keep them
* The Jaffa had the sigil of their god tattooed (or painfully gold-plated) on their foreheads, but it's usually hidden under their armored helmet. The glowing red eyes of said helmet, on the other hand, definitely stand out. However, it makes sense when you realize (as is specifically pointed out from time to time) that the Goa'uld and Jaffa are a "modern" military force
* The Jaffa staff weapons are pretty big on their own, but at one point Teal'c wields a dismounted
* The Jaffa, whose society is almost identical in theme to the page image. They expertly utilize the extremely advanced technology provided by the Goa'uld, even to the point of flying their motherships for them. Yet Chulak, the Jaffa homeworld, is apparently still stuck in the Middle Ages.
* The Jagdtiger, mounting an even heavier 128mm gun and adding sloped armor. Like the Elefant, it was also sluggish since it used the Tiger I tank's engine despite weighing 30% more than the Tiger I- at 71.7 metric tons, it was the heaviest land combat vehicle to ever enter production (the Maus only having made it to the prototype stage).

And it turns that no-one won... and that the "asinine" winning numbers of 1-2-3-4-5, were that worker's usual numbers. * The Japanese frog crotch arrow head was designed specifically for cutting ropes and poles.
* The Japanese got it from Chinese, where the exact same thing happens: save for the tones, the words for the two concepts are homophones.
* The Japanese government justifies (or at least attempts to justify) its current ongoing whaling program by saying it's
* The Japanese gum Fit's is more an example of "Repurposed Anime Theme". The commercials use a version of the opening theme to the early 1960s series Ookami Shounen Ken.
* The Japanese had no such compunctions against such actions, however, and were known to regularly gun down Allied pilots in their chutes. In at least one case, an American fighter came across a Japanese pilot and, after engaging him in a brief fight, sufficiently crippled the aircraft that the Japanese pilot tried to bail out, but as payback for the helpless aircrew gunned down in their chutes the American fired a warning shot into the wing as he started to climb out of his cockpit. The Japanese pilot got the message, climbed back into his seat, and rode the plane the rest of the way down.

* The Japanese had the "Beehive" round, a shell designed to turn the main guns of the battleship Yamato into the world's largest anti-aircraft shotgun. Such a big gun turned out to be impossible to aim fast enough, making it

* The Japanese have the same plan as the Europeans, adapting the H-II Transfer Vehicle into a manned craft.
* The Japanese Invasion is that the anime industry in Japan in general has been pandering more and more to its core otaku base at the expense of a most likely wider audience, creating a vicious circle of appeal to otaku. Sales lower as you appeal to a smaller audience, increasing prices for little content to make up for the loss, and then circling back around to appeal to otaku even more, and on and on.
* The Japanese invasion of the Philippines began just hours after the attack on Pearl Harbor. 100,000 Imperial Japanese troops landed on the northen end of Luzon, the largest island in the country. The American and Filipino troops under General Douglas MacArthur fought back fiercely, but were horribly outmatched. The Japanese occupied the Philippines for two and a half years until it was liberated in 1944.
* The Japanese invasion of the Philippines in 1941 is widely considered the worst military defeat in US history, with over 23,000 soldiers killed and 100,000 captured, who would go on to face more than three years of harsh treatment by their captors.
* The Japanese invented an intensive sword-making process that came about in large part because their iron is of terrible quality and needs a great deal of work to make it useful. Due to the influence of Japanese culture in entertainment, Japanese swords have
* The Japanese is more to the effect of, "Just because you're (logically) correct, doesn't mean you are (morally) right!". In context, Archer is telling Shirou to give up on his idealistic but impossible dream that will only hurt him in the future when he fails. Shirou acknowledges that it's impossible, but continues by insisting that just because it's impossible doesn't mean it isn't beautiful.

* The Japanese-language MMO C21 is particularly excessive with this; the game's world spans several planets; beyond the first, 99% of what's for sale in robot shops (where you'd get your newer/better hardware outside rare drops) costs cash-shop currency. And while there's occasional events to swap normal ingame money for cash points, they're capped so you won't be able to buy anything worthwhile anyway. And the ratio of cash to points is

And since the two Waka GK's are prone to
* The Japanese navy often used land based camouflage patterns on its sea vessels, making them mostly green. The logic is that a ship will most likely be spotted at sea anyway and this way they could at least conceal ship movements between ports.
* The Japanese novelisation of "Spearhead From Space", the serial about Autons (alien, murderous shop window dummies) went with a sexy legless, armless Auton gesturing with the detached arm lying at her side. The Autons in the show were British 1970s shop window dummies, cheap and badly-designed things that inspired horror even before every English child had watched "Spearhead".

* The Japanese tale of Urashima Taro has a young fisherman fall in love and live with the Dragon King's daughter in his underwater palace for a few days, but then gets homesick and asks to visit his homeland and see his family again. The princess gives him a box that he must under no cicumstances open and brings him back. Taro finds that the roads and landscape have changed, he can't recognize anyone, and gets blank stares when identifying himself or asking about his family. Finally he learns that the last known member of his family died more than three hundred years ago, opens the box and finds a mirror showing that he's now a decrepit old man. He drops dead right after.

* The Japanese telecommunication company NTT Docomo had a cellphone Internet service which was also exported in some western countries called "i-mode".
* The Japanese tendency to do this is discussed in one conversation between Kaori Miura and Shinichi Inoue. Inoue mentions that before he got recruited to Talent High School as the Ultimate Linguist, he'd been fairly well-known as a prodigy in the area, resulting in family friends praising him and his parents dismissing the compliments. He personally understands why they did so, but is a bit uncomfortable at the idea that his parents have to lie for his sake and worry about what their friends think of them. Kaori posits that the people in question probably know his parents are just trying to be polite and thus go along with it.

* The Japanese version of the song “Time To Love” sung by K-Pop group T-Ara has a line in the chorus that specifically mentions this: “[...] Kienai, hatsukoi.” (“You won’t disappear, my first love”)
* The Japanese version plays the trope more straight. The journal entries in the Adventure Log are written there in the first person, as in Link being the writer, and he reflects his own thoughts in them. In many entries, especially in those from later in the game, Link
* The Japanese Visual Kei scene has had multiple issues (due to artists, label owners, and others engaging in "creative accounting" that would make some American "tax protesters" quite jealous).
* The Japanese were absolutely notorious for this. So much so that many American soldiers decided that taking Japanese prisoners was not worth the risk, and shot them instead. On the other hand, many Japanese were incredulous that the Americans would actually take them prisoner and treat them decently. Once taken prisoner, they were extremely cooperative, as they had no real model for how prisoners were supposed to behave.
* The Japanese words at the start say say "Door won't open! Smash it down!!!" At the end, it says "if it doesn't work when you push it, try pulling it".

* The jargon used by real-estate agents effectively does this by trying to turn everything into a compliment. "Cozy" just means too small, "a good fixer-upper" means it's a dump, an "efficient" kitchen means it's only big enough for one person. Specific examples include:

* The Jarls of the various holds in Skyrim will often put out bounties on threats to their citizenry, including bandits, giants, and even Dragons.
* The jashin Hitotsuki, according to the manual, can't stand tobacco smoke.
* The Jason Robert Brown song, "I Could Be In Love With Someone Like You" starts out like this, although the singer recovers admirably by the end of the song:
* The Jämijärvi skydiving disaster in Finland in 2014 involved a plane full of skydivers breaking up in midair, with the starboard wing and its strut folding into the fuselage and blocking the jump door. The only other exit was through the cockpit door. In this case, the captain

* The Java Jive", coffee, alcohol, tobacco and red meat are all banned.
* The Javelin album were numbered out of the intended playing order: Part 1 has tracks 3 and 4, while Part 2 has tracks 1 and 2.
* The Javelis LRM Frigate is another example. Each frigate is practically built with this trope in mind, with launching volleys of missiles being their sole purpose. It gets even better when you consider that those missiles can be upgraded with cluster warheads and that the relatively cheap cost of the frigates allow insanely large fleets of them to be built. Such a fleet can decimate low-to-mid-level capital ships in seconds.

* The Jazz Singer (1927) was the first ever feature-length film to be released with synchronized recorded dialogue.
* The Jazz Singer. Apart from that most people, even movie fans have never seen this picture in its entirety and it's not difficult to see why. Apart from the novelty of being the first sound picture it's hardly a cinematic masterpiece and very dated. Jolson himself, by the way, was once one of the biggest singers in the world, but today he is only remembered for appearing in this movie.
* The jazz standard "Undecided" began as an untitled melody Charlie Shavers sent to a publisher. The publishers asked Shavers by wire for the title; he replied "UNDECIDED", as in "I haven't decided on a title yet", but it was mistaken as the actual title and from there Sid Robin wrote lyrics about an undecisive lover.
* The Jealous Husband to ensure no young gallants can get at her. The young lady passes under a window while the occupant is dumping the trash in the street and sends the chaperone to get her some clean clothes (allowing a handsome young man to keep the wife entertained while she's gone). The husband immediately recognizes what's happening, but is powerless to stop it.

* The Jedi and the Sith use the Force to give them a number of magical powers as well as swordfight effectively with their lightsabers.
* The Jedi believe that one must surrender anger and negative thoughts and note that the Dark Side is driven by those negative attitudes. A true Jedi must not be driven by passion and emotion but rather surrender one's drives and desires. This resembles parts of Buddhism namely its identification of desire as one of the great sources of strife. It however differs in that Buddha's recommendation was moderation and not full and total repression which is what the Jedi actually encourage, and which leads to Anakin Skywalker's conversion to the Dark Side.

* The Jedi Council hold their meetings in a tower, where each member gets a nice looking chair that you could almost swear was built specifically for them. Sometimes, when some of the members are away, they even fill their chairs via hologram communication.
* The Jedi entirely, who throughout the ages have saved the galaxy countless times, maintain peace, and take down evil empires by the dozens. It's explained that as a result of the Mandalorian Wars, the Jedi Civil War and Revan and Malak's attempted takeover of the galaxy, most common people consider the Jedi and Sith to be indistinguishable from each other and little more than crazed zealots bent on destroying the galaxy over their opposing ideologies.

* The Jedi's empathic abilities are a great strength... Except that in battle against the droid armies, the only thing they'll be able to feel in the Force is the deaths of their friends and allies.
* The Jedi Temple, serving to train potential Jedi Knights. "Younglings" and "Padawan" not only learned to master the force, but also included flight lessons.
* The Jedi used katana before lightsabers were invented. They were even used sometimes afterwards, but to a much lesser extent than the Sith used their broadswords after they had lightsabers.
* The Jeeves: A valet or butler to another character who frequently helps them with daily activities.
* The Jeeves-like later adaptations of Alfred Pennyworth do this, too.
* The Jeff Corwin Experience: As Jeff Corwin oh so eloquently explained about any sane animal's reaction to this trope: "If you wanna get them all out of the water and onto the beach all you gotta do is go like this...SHARK! SHARK!"
* The Jeff Corwin Experience glee, Jeff also tended to be much more cautious than Steve Irwin when it came to the overall handling of certain animals or situations.
* The Jefferies Tubes started out as fairly realistic maintenance tunnels that the

* The Jeffersons as Louise is packing in the kitchen, Edith Bunker comes over from next door to wish them luck in their new place.
* The Jeffersons episode "Not So Dearly Beloved," George is railroaded into giving the eulogy for an employee he despised, and as he delivers a euphemism-laden eulogy, voiceovers reveal the attendees' thoughts, leading to a silent "roast" of sorts as everyone remembers the way the deceased screwed them over. The funeral reaches a climax as George bobbles the urn and nearly spills it all over the attendees.
* The Jeffersons featuring Florence as the main character. George drops by to wish his ex maid good luck in her new job as executive housekeeper for a hotel (and to make sure she gives his dry cleaner the hotel's cleaning business).
* The Jeffersons: George & Louise are given a pair of foam bats as a part of couples therapy. At the end of the episode they, the Willises, and Florence all go after each other (in a playful way) with the bats and some throw pillows for those without bats.
* The Jeffersons: George boxed in the Navy, and puts the equipment on again after he gets in a disagreement with another man at the gym. Louise tried to plead with the man to go easy on George:

One of the gang members she meets is a pledge; he has to participate in a gang fight before he can become a full member. That evening the gang has a fight with another gang, and the pledge is killed during it.

* The Jeffersons: Mr. Bentley's back would periodically go out, and it was always up to George to walk on it. It was a common enough occurrence for it to appear in some variations of the opening.
* The Jeffersons, not appearing again until Mike Evans reprised the role for two final season episodes.
* The Jeffersons". Stan even has a dream about them almost making out!
* The Jeffersons, the longest running black sitcom in history. It was rated in the top 30 for most of its run. Granted, there were white actors in the cast, but the leads and the majority of the cast were Black.
* The Jeffersons, there was a flashback to George getting ready for a meeting with a banker for a loan to start his own cleaners. He put on his suit and was having difficulty with his tie when the banker arrived. George told him he was just taking it off.
* The Jeffersons. The Willises get no end of derision from George, who calls their daughter a "zebra".
* The Jeffersons, Tom Willis ordered a drink "on the rocks. And hold the ice."
* The Jeffersons: Twisted in the 1977 episode "Once a Friend" – Louise actually has this when a highly-attractive woman named Edie comes to visit George. George also experiences this when he doesn't immediately recognize Edie ...and both are in for quite a shock when they realize Edie was once a man named Eddie (the man George knew during his service in the Navy).
* The Jeffersons was about Archie's neighbors, George and Louse Jefferson (natch), who unexpectedly became wealthy and moved away to their own show.
* The Jeffersons: When George was just starting his dry-cleaning business, one of his first customers was a rich woman who mistook his dry cleaners for another. She decided to take a chance on him anyway and recommended him to her friends after he did a good job. Years later, the roles are reversed: the woman's down on her luck after the death of her husband, while George is a successful businessman. When she comes in to pick up her cleaning, he tells her she can pay him whenever she's able, then tears up her invoice after she leaves. It's implied this isn't the first time he's done this for her, either.

* The Jelly Bean Story (NSFW language). Saying anything else would spoil it.
* The Jem'Hadar also do the same "stand straight up and march like a 17th century Tercio" routine that
* The Jem'Hadar are not quite a straight-up example, as they're not necessarily mistreated by their creators, nor are they ruled over irresponsibly, and thus have pretty rock-solid loyalty. This loyalty, however, is achieved through an engineered, in-bred drug addiction; when they run out of that drug, they run the danger of playing this trope straight-up.
* The Jem'Hadar seem to hold the Klingons as a whole as a worthy adversary. The first Jem'Hadar encountered by the Deep Space 9 crew was disappointed seeing that a Klingon was not amongst them. What makes this even more impressive is that the Jem'Hadar hadn't even encountered the Klingons yet. They'd simply heard of them through word of mouth from prisoners captured from other Alpha Quadrant colonies.
* The Jem'Hadar, super soldiers of the Dominion, are noted to qualify at least dozens of recommendations of the
* The Jenkinsverse, Adrian Saunders doesn't bother with that, which enhances his already terrifying reputation. When he finally meets more humans, it turns out that they find his smile even scarier than aliens do. At least aliens have little experience with humans and can assume that he's just normal. Humans know he's not.
* The Jenkinsverse and get messily disassembled. Or, as it happened with the last surviving member of the hunter party that happened upon the eponymous Kevin Jenkins, beaten to death with one of their own legs. Or pulped by two ice hockey teams so thoroughly that the biologists complained that there was not enough left to properly dissect.
* The Jenkinsverse, and offers them his services. The pirates are careful not to mention anything particularly important around Grizzly, and Grizzly is careful to stay far away from anything that might be considered important.
* The Jenkinsverse are heavyworlders compared to the rest of the galaxy. While the difference between Earth gravity and galactic standard is comparatively small, it was just enough for natural selection to prefer our comparatively denser and harder bones and simpler but powerful muscles over the fragile silicate bones and multifunctional but weak muscles most aliens have. Humans are also comparatively short, the only shorter sentient creatures are the Corti (whose diminutive physical size is the result of genetic engineering) and the Gaoians (who come from a planet with a gravity fairly close to Earth's and are borderline deathworlders themselves).
* The Jenkinsverse better understanding of war than anyone else. Even Jen Delaney, who was a bored IT tech on Earth, becomes famous for brilliant tactics that are little more than "keep your eyes open and watch each other's backs."
* The Jenkinsverse, both Jen Delaney and Adrian Saunders shave their heads around about the same time. Jen's haircut is born of the practical need to pass anonymously without anybody recognizing her distinctive red hair and symbolizes her commitment to leaving her old life behind. Adrian's haircut marks the moment where things finally start picking up for him and he's able to clean up, acquire some assets and allies, and start fighting back.

* The Jenkinsverse, but those can all be accounted for with technology. The real thing that makes them a nightmare to fight is their ability to adapt to changing situations very quickly. In several stories, a human is trapped, and they manage to escape by doing something unexpected (like going through the wall), and the aliens have no idea how to handle it.
* The Jenkinsverse by itself. Then there are the characters of Salvage (some of them popping over to the Deathworlders for a crossover), Humans Don't Make Good Pets...
* The Jenkinsverse do this to all pre-FTL species so as to learn everything they need to sell advanced pharmaceuticals, cybernetic implants and other wonders to them. Most of the human protagonists in the J Verse were abductees at some point.
* The Jenkinsverse Earth, elsewhere in the galaxy clothing would have just been unnecessary effort in creating and cleaning it for no real benefit. Most alien species are therefore rarely clothed, except for some packs, bags and holsters in lieu of pockets.
* The Jenkinsverse embrace skinny dipping with varying degrees of enthusiasm and innocence. Sara just sees it as the logical way to avoid having to carry home wet towels and swimsuits and finds it irritating when people get hung up on the nudity. Adam is willing to try, and decides that he enjoys it after a little initial awkwardness. Meanwhile it takes a near-death experience and an epiphany for Ava to finally join in.
* The Jenkinsverse, every spacefaring, intelligent civilization is eventually doomed to become a dying race, and nobody knows why.
* The Jenkinsverse has a triad relationship forming between Allison Buehler, Julian Etsicitty, and Xiù Chang as of Deathworlders Chapter 24.
* The Jenkinsverse has Captain Owen Powell of the Special Boat Service, the UK's naval special forces unit, which draws from the Royal Marines, making him not just an officer and a leader, but also a card-carrying badass.
* The Jenkinsverse has Krrkktnkk A'ktnnzzik'tk, an alien who isn't equipped to adequately pronounce anything resembling a human language, but who is a big fan of classical music, Jackie Chan films, and Star Trek.
* The Jenkinsverse, however, badly affects him, and he later seeks counselling for PTSD.
* The Jenkinsverse. However, this comes at the cost of our finely tuned biology existing on a much narrower comfort curve.
* The Jenkinsverse humans are. A good example happens early in "Deathworlders", when a Brood of Hunters (predators infamous for eating other civilized beings) try to gain fame by raiding Earth, and land in the middle of a Canadian hockey game. Hunter weapons are only mildly effective against humans under the best of conditions (such as the human being unarmored and unarmed, physically unfit, and taken by surprise). Against two dozen bulky, fit humans in heavy protective hockey gear who are pissed off about getting attacked in the middle of a game? It's a slaughter... with the Hunters on the receiving end.
* The Jenkinsverse, Humans are the strongest and toughest sapient race in the known universe. We are also one of the shortest.
* The Jenkinsverse in that energy weapons are recoil-less, ammoless, highly configurable, lightweight enough for an alien to carry, and powerful enough against most spacefaring races. Kinetic weapons are FAR more potent and can be equipped with specialist ammunition, but most are too heavy for an alien to lift and recoil alone is powerful enough to injure an alien wielder.
* The Jenkinsverse in the galaxy. Humans living among other races have to be extremely cautious, because a friendly slap on the back could kill most aliens.
* The Jenkinsverse is the team pet of the SOR. Like the HEAT Operators themselves he is an absolutely enormous specimen for his species.
* The Jenkinsverse just by being there. This causes most races to want to avoid associating with them, especially in the wake of the Hunters' ultimatum.
* The Jenkinsverse: Justified by aliens being, by human standards, rather terrible at warfare. Several humans have programmed autopilots on shuttles or dropships to turn them into very large guided missiles. Since aliens don't have any actual missiles at first, this is their only option, and it works because the aliens are completely unprepared for it. Adrian Saunders is particularly fond of letting his ship get boarded, killing all the boarders, and then sending the boarding pod back at the enemy as a kinetic projectile. It takes a minute for anyone to realize what's happening, and by then it's too late. Eventually actual missiles and missile counter measures are introduced, causing a sharp drop in instances of this trope.

* The Jenkinsverse never invented the gun: black powder weaponry is too heavy and recoils too hard for aliens to use effectively: They were never able to develop a version that could fire accurately which wouldn't also harm the weapon's operator. For this reason, only humans have invented ballistic weaponry, firearms and effective defenses against firearms.
* The Jenkinsverse: Other sapient beings are the standard diet of the monstrous Hunters. This also caused the rest of the galaxy — mostly herbivores — to be extremely suspicious of the omnivorous humans and Gaoians.
* The Jenkinsverse, they had were honestly more distraught with the fact their game had been cancelled for the night rather than the fact they had just fought off an alien attack.
* The Jenkinsverse used this as a particularly nasty method of execution back in their medieval days. The victim can apparently survive fully skinned for days (after which the infection, not the blood loss will kill them). One notable Gao who was executed with this method was Tritya, founder of the Clan of Females.
* The Jenkinsverse: while the private corporations exploiting space are mostly American, the first human colony is a Brit-influenced liberal utopia, and the majority of the human spacefleet consists of British-made V-Class destroyers, with the American-made San Diego class cruisers still being under construction in 10 AV.
* The Jenkinsverse without letting him notice that they're not in space, it's just night-time and they're hovering above a river.
* The Jenkinsverse, Xiù Chang returns to Earth after spending two years living among an alien species called Gaoians, barely survives the effects of a nervejam grenade, spends three years hiding in exile pretending to be a Gaoian, and five years stuck in a stasis pod after narrowly surviving the destruction of a starship. Her experiences leave her unable to relate to her family and friends back home, but unwilling to return to Gao as that would put the Gaoians in danger from the Hunters. In the end, the only people she feels at home with are fellow abductees Julian and Allison.

* The Jennifer Morgue that live on the ocean floor. The disappearances of ships in the region involve the weaponization of gas deposits — when released, they can cause the water under a ship to rush out momentarily, causing the keel to sink into the void just as the water starts rushing back in. The Deep Ones do this whenever a ship gets too close to finding out about them.
* The Jennifer Morgue weird as it follows a linear structure (seeing through the eyes of Ramona Random via "destiny entanglement") instead of featuring camel-headed spider gods trying to get him to sign a Microsoft User Agreement.
* The Jennifer Morgue (who's deliberately following supervillain tropes) explains his evil plan to the hero via PowerPoint! The Horror!
* The Jennings Report, Jennings and Darbishire rescue a hibernating hedgehog and bring it back to school. Their attempts to look after the animal, while keeping it secret, drive the plot for the entire book.

* The Jerk. Navin is sleeping in a hotel and a dog starts barking at him in the middle of the night. Navin "translates" his barking to a warning about a fire and frantically wakes everyone up, has the building evacuated and even calls the fire department. Turns out there is no fire.
* The Jerk, Navin Johnson becomes fabulously wealthy thanks to inventing the Opti-Grab but returns to rags thanks to a class action lawsuit. The tagline is even "A rags to riches to rags story".
* The Jerk, Navin Johnson literally learns the difference between shit and Shinola from his adoptive father.
* The Jerk: Navin leaves home to seek his fortune, and starts by trying to hitch a ride. That evening, his family wonders how he's doing, so they call out the window and ask. He hasn't been picked up yet. Then a car picks him up and carries him about 25 feet, dropping him off barely at the edge of his family's farmhouse property.
* The Jerk Reiner plays himself, heading a mass lawsuit against Navin Johnson.
* The Jerk serenades Marie while walking down a beach and playing a ukulele for accompaniment (Marie later joins in on a cornet).
* The Jerk starts by showing Navin Johnson homeless. He then narrates his journey from rags to riches to rags.
* The Jerk starts with the character explaining he was born "a poor black child," only to discover his white roots when he first hears swing music on the radio.
* The Jerk, Steve Martin's boss (Jackie Mason) brings his hot wife to the garage to explain the importance of keeping the place safe. Without such a lucrative business how could he, of all people, get and keep such a woman? He explains that if anything happened to the business she'd leave him in a second. She nods in agreement.
* The Jerk this color?") it's solely out of a desire to find his place in the world, and he stays in contact with his family and sends them money when he starts making it. When it all blows up in his face, they take him back in, and it ends with him and his wife dancing and playing music with the family.

* The Jerky Boys: The Movie, the two title characters find out that the entire Queens organized crime division is in league with a local crime boss, making it difficult to turn over evidence on said crime boss to the authorities.
* The Jerry Seinfeld Program critical letter made Jerry and George realize how far the show had fallen, they ask the audience to mail ideas for new episodes. This backfires when the following episode, written by someone named Josh Kantor, turns out to be absolute audacity (such as having Jerry and George declare their love for whores and exclaiming, "Fuck the cops!"). Episode 18 focuses on fallout of that episode as Jerry and George realize the "fans" aren't taking the low-quality state of the show seriously.

* The Jerry Springer Show the "Worst Program on Television" the show went through an era where it proudly declared such on the air.
* The Jersey Devil: A demonic creature that is said to live in the wilderness of New Jersey.
* The Jersey Devil. Cassie and Vlad track it down and kill it, learning afterward that it was actually harmless, and put up a fearsome façade to keep people away so they didn't disturb its mother, who isn't so harmless. This is also brought up in another story, where the duo go after a violent vigilante (thinking he is a slasher) even though he has only been butchering unrepentant criminals, and has showed no interest in harming innocents.
* The Jersey Devil — body and head of a horse, legs of a stork, wings of a bat, horns, and a devil-like tail.
* The Jersey Devil pits survivalists against a demonic interpretation of the legend.
* The Jersey Devil was born a hideous monster, and grew up in the basement of a New Jersey orphanage. Two windows were built into the building just for him, covered with chicken wire, so he could see the sun and get fresh air.
* The Jersey Devil, which shakes things up a bit by being an origin story.
* The Jersey Jerks Corey Havock and Rhett Titus in the Premier Wrestling Xperience.
* The Jersey. Nick and Cole competed in a series of strange athletic challenges of their own device, with wins trading back and forth. Every time they had a clear winner, the clear loser would raise the numbers again, then (presumably) win the next two events.

* The Jeselnik Offensive show hosted by infamously harsh comedian Anthony Jeselnik, which is mostly dedicated to mocking deaths and other tragedies from the news.
* The Jessica Keller Chronicles. While conducting commerce raiding operations, Jessica launches a missile that has a slight radioactive signature at a Fribourg Empire planet, which airbursts in an unpopulated area, causing significant panic and tying up Imperial resources. The panic was all she was after, as the "warhead" was ice and gravel that had been irradiated just enough to show up on sensors. Made funnier by the color commentary provided by her chief engineer as the missile goes in.
* The Jester also engages in this on a regular basis throughout gameplay.

* The Jester/narrator is interrupted at least twice, once at the end of the first episode, when Madalena calls him back to bed, and in the last episode of the first season the other prisoners make him shut up when he tries to recap the events of the season in song.
* The Jester needs matched cards for his discard and Snap power. If he can't get a match, he can't dig further into the deck for the cards he really needs and has to use them one at a time.
* The Jesuits' philosophy of casuistry (case-based reasoning) came in for much criticism in its time, including by Catholics like the French philosopher Blaise Pascal (a Jansenist). In particular, they were attacked for arguing that deception

(especially under oath) was not always wrong if it saved a life. This resulted from the cases of captured Jesuit missionaries who were forcibly sworn to tell the truth in court by Protestant authorities and then ordered to identify people who had harbored them-knowing that any person named would be put to death, as this was a capital crime. Thomas Sanchez, a famous Jesuit, therefore formulated the doctrine of mental reservation. In its strictest form, the person practicing this might answer "I know not" when asked a question, while internally they said "to tell you." Other philosophers did not accept that it was anything but simple lying. This doctrine was eventually condemned by the Pope after it had become scandalous, and tarred the Jesuits' reputation. Critics such as Pascal also ignored the restrictions Sanchez had placed on its use, attacking a

* The Jesuits (the Society of Jesus), one of the many orders of priests in the Catholic Church, were founded in 1534 by a Spanish ex-soldier named Ignatius of Loyola. Ignatius had been wounded in battle, and spent the next few years wandering around Spain as an ascetic. Ignatius then decided that he should go become a priest. While studying in Paris, he and six of his militant student-priest friends got together, called themselves the "Company of Jesus" (as in an infantry company), went to Rome, pledged their absolute loyalty to the Pope, and said "let us form an order of priests, and we'll do whatever you want." The title of the papal order that established the Jesuits?
* The Jesus and Mary Chain the same. This is particularly noticeable with their first three albums, which were all basically retreads of each other, just in different styles.
* The Jesus Lizard, so much so that even the lyrics sheets are sometimes wrong. Just try to figure out what the hell Yow is saying on most of their songs, particularly off their "Down" album.
* The Jesus Lizard sticker on the family car - his mother found the band's name offensive, and rather than have to scrape the whole sticker off, she just partially covered it up with a "sno-cone" sticker.
* "The Jet Cage" showed both the former and latter in the same breath. Sylvester watches his paddles neatly flutter down toward a patch. Then his own descent begins into that same patch. The scene fades with the paddles still in clear view.
* The Jetlev company makes a jetpack that uses water pressure to make people fly.
* The "Jet Song" has a short bridge ("Oh, when the Jets fall in at the cornball dance") that is almost invariably cut. Although this is not a separate number in itself, the "Blues" that begins the Dance at the Gym reprises it as dance music. The bridge was a remnant of "Up To the Moon," an earlier attempt at an opening number for the Jets (who, being 1950s teenagers, were obsessed with speculative space travel) whose music was recycled into both the Prologue and "Jet Song," the latter acquiring most of its music and its lyrical finish from another rejected Jets number, "My Greatest Day." "Up To the Moon" also included lyrics ("Carazy, Daddy-O...") for the 2/4 version of the show's most prominent
* The Jetsons. A domestic-bot in a futuristic world, her humor often came from often being more rational and cool-headed than her human owners.
* The Jetsons aesthetic. The drawbacks are sometimes used for laughs such as the women have morning masks which are supposed to be quickly put on in case of calls coming in before they have made themselves up.
* The Jetsons. Also George's commanding officer, his own boss Mr. Spacely.
* The Jetsons & WWE: Robo-WrestleMania!, Jane is furious with George when he misses the science fair Elroy had entered in. Unsure of why she's angry, he only digs himself deeper by assuming he forgot their anniversary. Rosie quips, "I'll prepare the couch for you tonight, Mr. J."
* The Jetsons: An early episode shows George's bed folding up lengthwise to turn into a toaster, which then pops him out with all the vigor you expect of a six-foot-long toaster.
* The Jetsons: Astro swallows Elroy's anti-gravity toy and everybody believes Astro can fly. In the same episode, after they get him to cough up the toy, Astro swallows Elroy's handheld speaking computer, leading Mr. Spacely to believe the dog is a genius.

* The Jetsons, as well, as one of many fantastical space-age advances.
* The Jetsons becoming suspicious of a "lost baby" who is really a jewel thief in disguise.
* The Jetsons can be seen as a robot version of this trope, especially in her debut episode where she plays football with Elroy and helps Judy do her homework. And clobbers Mr. Spacely with an Upside-down cake.
* The Jetsons" catchphrase upon being awoken by the recording director.
* The Jetsons consists of a crowd of teenagers on a roughly seven-frame animation loop who collectively move between the floor, the ceiling, and halfway between as the song dictates.
* The Jetsons did the same with "futuristic" and/or planetary themed puns.
* The Jetsons' dog Astro as his long-lost dog Tralfaz, he offers Tralfaz a living area littered with doggie bones and fire hydrants.
* The Jetsons, Elroy gets his report card switched with a student who gets an H.
* The Jetsons episode "Elroy's Mob" has Elroy eagerly waiting to go home and play his report tape to George, not knowing that a classmate switched tapes on him and the tape he got has failing grades on it.
* The Jetsons episode "Elroy's Pal," Elroy wins a visit from TV superhero "Nimbus the Great." But on the day he is supposed to visit, Nimbus gets sick. He is seen at home with his feet in a foot bath.
* The Jetsons episode "Millionaire Astro", the Jetsons are involved in a custody battle with Astro's original owners. In court, the "jury" was a computer called the Jury-vac; it had 12 volume unit meters.
* The Jetsons fall into this similarly. Everyone can recognize the family of the future, and most people can also recognize their household robot Rosey (sometimes also George's boss, Mr. Spacely). But how many have actually watched a single episode of the show, or can name any of the secondary characters?
* The Jetsons flirts with this, where George and his family settle on an asteroid, making do with what's at hand. They're happy, at least until developers find their paradise.
* The Jetsons fly around in a UFO large enough to fit 4-5 characters comfortably, replacing cars as everyday transport in the future.
* The Jetsons: George and Elroy's cub scouts go to the moon via spaceship which is just like a bus trip.
* The Jetsons, George and Mr. Spacely go to a football game. George set up a cardboard cutout of himself at his desk and a record with his voice on it in case Jane called the viewphone in his office, as he told her he was working late that night.
* The Jetsons, George had a clone made in one episode, only to find it could do stuff far better than him. He wanted to leave his life to the clone but it turned out that the clone has a very limited lifespan.
* The Jetsons: George Jetson has every reason to be this way, especially when one considers how boy-crazy his daughter, Judy, is. That being said, this trope is played for laughs most of the time.
* The Jetsons: George Jetson never actually says, "Jane, how do you stop this crazy thing?!," but it is an amalgam of two different similar quotes: "Jane, stop this crazy thing!" and "How do you stop this thing?"
* The Jetsons: George Jetson's car could fold up into a briefcase, which he can easily carry into his workplace in the show's intro.
* The Jetsons: George once won the lottery. The prize was worth 7.5 million dollars when he won. However, the economy of Venus suffered a collapse before he exchanged it in American dollars, turning the prize worthless.
* The Jetsons had an episode that had a whole slew of them. One let the wearer see the future. One had past-vision. One had X-ray vision and one had far future vision, seeing the other people as old people.
* The Jetsons had Mr. Spacely doing golf practice once or twice. And George playing some sort of virtual chess or something similar with Rudy a few times.
* The Jetsons had them in its original run. However, most current TV/DVD prints remove their teasers, though "The Coming of Astro" has its teaser intact.

* The Jetsons has an episode with Mr. Spacely on one of these, stuck between two fat guys, because he tried to save money by flying a cheap air/space-line.
* The Jetsons has George Jetson at work, enjoying a massage in his reclining chair from a motorized roller. Mister Spacely walks in, clearly displeased, and presses a button that makes the roller pound on George's midsection, then sits him bolt upright. You're a mean one, Mister Spacely...
* The Jetsons has, in one episode, Nebulous Nifty, who make a lot of interesting, useful products, that promptly self-destruct. Spacely, George Jetson's employer, merges his company with them, and the sign goes up on the company building, only for George to warn him that their products self-destruct, much like the building eventually did.
* The Jetsons has Judy, Jane and Elroy form this in "Rosey the Robot."
* The Jetsons has videotelephones where either party in the call can pass his body through the screen. (Matter transmission over IP, perhaps?)
* The Jetsons. However, Mr. Spacely promoted him to vice president nearly as often as he fired him.
* The Jetsons: In "Instant Replay", Jane and a snobbish socialite enter a party wearing identical dresses, leading to a conflict.
* The Jetsons is pretty much a perfect example of the era's sci-fi aesthetic, with its futuristic city, flying cars, and robots.
* The Jetsons: Jane Jetson and one of her friends both have visiphone masks for when they haven't done their full beauty ritual yet. Jane's friend sneezes hers off and shows how terrible she looks first thing in the morning.
* The Jetsons lasted just one 24 episode season on ABC from 1962-1963 during the early 1960s boom of primetime animated sitcoms, but it became a favorite Saturday morning offering for over 20 years afterwards on all 3 major networks, despite recycling those same 24 episodes over and over again. An early 1980s surge in popularity finally got new episodes made for syndication from 1985-1987, along with a handful of full-length movies.
* The Jetsons — where all the future slang was made up of space terminology. "Jumping Jupiter" is a common one find in plenty of future-themed Hannah Barbara cartoon.
* The Jetsons Meet the Flintstones has this with the Jetsons going back in time and meeting the Flintstones. Eventually the Flintstones end up going forward to the Jetsons' future. Both sides are initially confused by what they find when they leave their respective time periods, but they manage to adapt pretty quickly.
* The Jetsons Meet the Flintstones so they can gain access to a poker game with Mr. Slate without being recognized.
* The Jetsons of pushing the button requires human discretion. It's heavily implied that this is a deliberate effort to keep humans working, even though the machines can run themselves.
* The Jetsons: One episode had Judy entering a lyric contest where the prize was a date with her favourite musician, who George hated. Trying to sabotage her chances, George swapped her entry for a list of codes Elroy had made with a friend, assuming they would be too nonsensical. She still won the date.
* The Jetsons. One of the few times this sort of thing happens on a treadmill.
* The Jetsons popular music of the future was simply '60s style pop with references to space thrown in. "Groovy" would become "Galactic Groovy" or some such thing. This is pretty much how the rest of the series treated every other depiction of the future though, so . . .
* The Jetsons puts its spin on this trope in the episode where George, Mr. Spacely, and apartment handyman Henry have to report to a National Guard training camp.
* The Jetsons, Rosie the maid is actually the Jetson family's grandmother, who uploaded her mind and memories into a robotic body when her body started failing.
* The Jetsons shows that ran for one season each in the 1960s, were both revived with new episodes produced for syndication in the 1980s. Boomerang did not show these episodes as often; the consensus is that they are of much lower quality than the original runs. On the other hand, at least in the case of the Jetsons, the original voice cast reunited for the syndicated episodes.

* The Jetsons Subverted when R.U.D.I. threatens to destroy the factory unless Spacely gives George back his job.
* The Jetsons, the automatic grooming device(s) would occasionally dress George in Jane's clothes or give him her hairstyle.
* The Jetsons: The cat burglar who appeared in Astro's debut episode. He only appears in that episode but it's because of his attempt to rob the Jetsons that they decided to keep Astro instead of an "apartment approved electronic dog" as their pet.
* The Jetsons to prevent Jane finding out he'd spent an evening judging beautiful women. Meanwhile, Jane entered independently, and also wore a disguise in case George happened to see. Naturally, George declared Jane the winner, but they were both disqualified when they discovered they were married.
* The Jetsons, when George believes he's gonna die, and signs up for profitable but dangerous job that involves testing a prototype worker's uniform that is allegedly indestructible. He finds out the truth at the most inconvenient time and panics. Luckily the experiment still succeeds, only to fail for completely unrelated reasons.
* The Jetsons, when George goes to the moon with Elroy's space scout troupe, he gets lost with his boss's son, Arthur. Elroy and the other scouts leave them a trail of torn map for them to follow back to camp, but it gets sucked up by a random moon cleaner.
* The Jetsons where a new robot law required Mac to marry Rosie to gain a legal permit and avoid being melted down.
* The Jetsons where George joins the army, he's assigned this. It involves pressing two buttons, one to peel an entire sack of potatoes in a second, and one to mash them. He spends both seconds complaining about how hard punishment detail is.
* The Jetsons where George winds up traveling with a circus troupe. George accidentally plugs up the hole with his butt all the way until the ship lands, including during re-entry.
* The Jetsons wherein George and the Space Cubs of Troop 54 get stranded in the wild untamed area of the moon, and Spacely's son fires off flares that read HEPL. George reads it aloud, and the kid, realizing his mistake, fires another flare that strikes out his typo and corrects the last two letters so it does say HELP when all is said and done.
* The Jetsons, where the Jetsons came from the year 2002 to the distant past of 2004. In the Jetsons' time, they use punch cards, got meals from instant devices, and have huge personal communicators.
* The Jetsons, who is 6 1/2 years old, and an expert at all space sciences, studying space history, astrophysics and star geometry at the elementary school level, no less. He invents a dog training device, an evolution accelerator which turns Astro into a genius, and develops a program to fix R.U.D.I.'s malfunctioning short circuits.
* The Jets wore all green and the Bills all red. In response, the NFL changed the concept so that any game where this could happen again would have one team wear all white.
* The Jew Among Thorns. The hero threatens to keep playing until the merchant admits to all his crimes. The merchant finally confesses, and is executed, and everyone important lived happily ever after.
* The Jewel can bring a person's self-doubts and darkest thoughts to life as shadow doppelgangers to torment them. They can't cause physical harm, but the emotional torment is a useful tool in battle.
* The Jewel Kingdom (though a mention of their bony, furry feet slips through, they might just be wearing really weird shoes).
* The Jewel of Four Souls, which was formed when a powerful miko locked her own soul into an endless battle with a multitude of demons in order to contain them after her death. Initially regarded as a
* The Jewel of Seven Stars: Features a mummy in a long-lost tomb, and a mysterious violent death for anyone who disturbs it.
* The Jewel of Seven Stars, who is said to bear a striking resemblance to her.

* The Jewel of the Nile a massive rock concert by an ego-tripping dictator.
* The Jewel of the Nile. Heroes Jack Colton and Joan Wilder (the latter an author of romantic adventure novels) wind up captured by the villain, who hangs them both over a well, then explains that Jack's rope has acid slowly being dripped on it, while Joan's rope is being gnawed on by rats, creating a race as to who will fall first. Jack starts ranting about what kind of sick mind would think up such a ridiculous setup, only for Joan to admit it's from one of her books.
* The Jewel of the Nile. Joan Wilder is recruited by the North African dictator Omar to write a puff piece on him, but she's not an idiot so goes snooping around at night and finds a map table showing his plans of conquest.
* The Jewel of the Nile meets the title character when she crashes through the roof of his cell. As the holy man was praying for deliverance at the time, the unexpected delivery from the powers above of a woman instead is most unexpected.
* The Jewel of the Nile Rachid. In the film, Rachid just gets defeated when Ralph uses a firebreathing trick to burn off his eyebrows (and possibly blind him). In the book, he ends up falling to his death down the bottomless while Omar has Joan and Jack dangling over in the dungeon.
* The Jewels of Nabooti: there were a series of choices that made an infinite loop.
* The Jewish Century the writer sets up the ethnographical model of "Apollonarian" (territorial food producers) and "Mercurian" (wandering artisans) peoples. In his model Jews (except for Israelis who are Apollonarians) are Mercurians who, like Parsees, Roma, etc., survive by staying outside the conventional system and doing things awkward for an Apollonarian for reasons of tradition (that is, Jews were merchants because some aspects of that work were awkward for gentiles; just as some synagogues hire "Sabbath goy" gentiles to work on the Sabbath in a reversal of that). Under this theory the reason you have got to have Jews is that some jobs needed to be done by Jews or someone like them.
* The Jewish folk hero Herschel of Ostropol (who was a real person, but probably didn't do all the things he's remembered for) is famous for getting out of trouble with his quick wits, fooling rich men, bandits, gentiles, and even goblins, angels, and demons in some stories.
* The Jewish God comes off as this to those who know enough Hebrew. Most if not all of "His" names and titles (such as Father and Lord) are male, and the religion is usually patriarchal, but many of the god's attributes such as "His" spirit, breath, presence or wings are described in feminine terms due to the Semitic languages' grammatical gender. It is not so noticeable in English due to its lack of gender outside of obviously male and female words, but even then God is described as a

* The Jewish Lilith started out as a baby-eating rape demon and enemy of mankind who took advantage of Adam after he was kicked out of Eden. Later, medieval legends changed her into the first woman, who Adam kicked out of Eden because she refused to let him be on top... interesting, considering the aforementioned etymology of "succubus" and "incubus".
* The Jewish people as a whole. Given their long history of persecution, it is perhaps unsurprising that humor plays such a prominent role in Jewish culture, or that they've produced so many comedians.
* The Jewish Revolts against the Roman Empire can be seen as this. You have on one end a group of people who are fighting for their faith, taking cities and defending them to the last man, or fighting guerrilla campaigns that needle the enemy's weak points. On the other side, you have one of the most powerful empires in existence, going to enormous lengths to bring out and break the revolting cities, up to and including
* The Jewish version of the roc is known as the ziz. It's slightly less famous than the other two gigantic animals of Jewish lore, the behemoth and the leviathan.
* The Jewish version of this story has King Solomon meeting the angel of death, who looks sad. Upon being asked why he is sad, the angel replies that he is supposed to take the lives of two of Solomon's advisers but can't. Solomon, worried for his advisers, sends them off to the city of Luz, famous for the fact that all who live within have immortality so long as they remain in that city. The following day Solomon sees the angel of death again, who is happy this time. Why was he sad yesterday, and why is he now happy? Because he was supposed to take the lives of those advisers just before the entrance to the city of Luz, and couldn't do so so long as they weren't there yet...

* The Jew of Malta Barabas rationalizes his actions thus: "It's no sin to deceive a Christian, / For they themselves hold it a principle / Faith is not to be held with heretics; / But all are heretics that are not Jews." (2.3.313-316)
* The Jew of Malta that takes in a lot of innocent bystanders, including an entire convent full of nuns.
* The Jews annually sacrificed sheep and doves as "pure" sacrifices to God in exchange for atonement for their sins. The book of Leviticus especially goes into detail about the use of animal blood in these temple rituals.
* The Jews Are Coming: Hitler's very first memory is of a bunch of people popping out of time machines to try and kill him.
* The Jews Are Coming) of Prague in one skit, where Rabbi Loew kills each Golem and replaces it with a less intelligent one as soon as the last Golem he made starts questioning the tenets of the Jewish faith.

* The J. Geils Band chanted by football supporters than have heard the actual song. At least in Europe. In the U.S., "Centerfold" is a classic rock staple.
* The J. Geils Band song "Centerfold" is about a man who realizes that the "pure" girl he had a crush on in school is now doing porn. He eventually
* The JGSDF's SF unit is the Special Forces Group, modelled after Delta Force. The JMSDF has the Special Boarding Unit, modelled after the British SBS. The latter had requested Navy SEAL assistance, but they didn't have the time to do so which is why they turned to the British instead.
* The Jiggler", Finn and Jake are rescuing a "family" consisting of seemingly random food, although one, a watermelon, is named Stanley. None of them are sentient, and yet they have a house and apparently they get into danger constantly.
* The Jigglypuff that appears in the Hi-Hat Café uses the voice of an uncredited
* "The Jigsaw Puzzle": A young lady puts together the self-proclaimed "World's Strangest Jigsaw Puzzle", which begins to bear an unsettling resemblance to her house. When she puts the last pieces in, it reveals half of a non-human face in the window. Turning to look, she sees the face in her window too.
* The Jihad": From what we were shown of it, the planet where the Soul of the Skorr was kept appeared to be a Volcano Planet.
* The jihad was when the AI's took over everything, turning people into basically janitor slaves to keep them running. To keep it from ever happening again, they abhor cybernetic implants and the use of any "thinking machines" to the point of breeding people to be logic engines.
* The Jim Henson Hour, follows this format exactly. With Jim as host, the first half of the show is Muppetelevision, which is a more futuristic version of The Muppet Show, complete with sketches and guest stars and Kermit as the head frog in charge of a TV studio full of monitors and video feeds. The second half would be a bit more serious, either showing an episode of The Storyteller or would be a random special created by the Creature Shop. At times the format would change and the whole hour can be one special, such as with Dog City and Monster Maker.
* The Jim Henson Hour has many such channels (which Kermit picks programming from), including "The Fashion Doll Channel", "The Guest Star Channel", "The Time Channel" ("all the time all the time!"), "The All-Dog Network", and a channel devoted to talking garbage.
* The Jim Henson Hour included a "Making Of" segment which revealed, amongst other things, that the stunts were done by cats in dog costumes.
* The Jim Henson Hour: In "Videotape", Gonzo leaves a pre-recorded version of himself for Kermit, which accurately predicts everything Kermit can say and do.
* The Jim Henson Hour's Muppet Television segments used this trope more frequently.

* The Jim/Maggie/Don love triangle was pretty easily the most widely reviled plot thread of
* The Jimmy-Chloe-Davis triangle of Season 8 ended in this way, with an attempted use of the trope by
* The Jimmy Durante Show: During the 1940s, a sexually provocative character was named "Hotbreath" Houlihan.
* The Jimmy Soul song "If You Want To Be Happy" (famously covered by the Coasters) has this to say:
* The Jimmy Timmy Power Hour (it came to the point he got an award declaring him "only genius in town" and said award described Dimmsdale as "City of Idiots") he froze himself. He was thawed out soon after by Chester but spent a good deal of the episode thinking he was in a distant future and his brain was making him hallucinate about the time he left behind. So much for the only genius in town.
* The Jimmy Timmy Power Hour specials utilized this, particularly due to the distinctive art styles between the two shows.
* The Jimmy Timmy Power Hour turns Goddard into killer robot, he at one point shakes a pole that Hugh is clinging to causing him to sway back and fourth while shouting:
* The Jim Rome Show to refer to the tendency for athletes and athletic teams to have success after appearing on his show, as well as a corresponding bout of bad luck if an athlete stiffs him.
* The Jin En Mok predate the creation of the universe and want to escape it.
* The jingle for Juicy Fruit gum,, however, new commercials play that use the song unironically. Sometimes you just can't fight nostalgia.
* The jingle was then covered in a myriad of musical styles by Mia Gentile, a SUPERBLY talented singer!
* The Jingo: or otherwise, might be involved). Particularly likely to target civilians.
* The Jinx: A character who unintentionally brings disaster wherever they go.
* The Jinx, a documentary filmed in 2013 about the investigations surrounding the long-time suspected murderer millionaire, Durst left to use the restroom after an interview with one a reporter, forgetting that his mic was on. The sound editor was then treated to the sound of Durst relieving himself... followed by his muttering of "What the hell did I do? Killed them all, of course." Durst was arrested in 2015, following the release of the documentary.
* The Jinx: When Robert Durst is asked what divers would be looking for in the lake behind his former house, Durst blithely replies "body parts", rather than "a body". The specific detail of the former statement seems to foreshadow later events or could have been how he would have said it anyway.
* The Jitterbug, reinstated the number. It was also included as part of the bonus content on the 50th anniversary VHS in 1990.
* The jive passenger is black, as you'd expect. The translator? A white grandma, played by Barbara Billingsley, aka the mother on
* The JMS run is generally agreed to have started out very good, with some cool new additions to Spidey's
* The J'naii are supposed to be genderless (although they all look very similar to female Humans). However, nothing about J'naii reproduction makes any sense, as the script muddles together three totally different kinds of genderlessness. The asexual cast to their society would make sense if they reproduced by cloning, but they do reproduce sexually, in which case being a
* The JNPR dance is the corniest, cheesiest thing imaginable, but there couldn't be a more awesome or satisfying conclusion to that subplot.
* The Job both take place in New York, but in the latter's case, it's kind of important to the story, what with the main character being a survivor of the attacks that occurred in the actual city of New York in the year 2001.
* "The Job" ever gets a job and maintains it, the universe will start to fall apart until it is eventually destroyed.
* The Job Gone Wrong has Bio-Storage from the Weapon X facility. When young Gambit is captured, he's hooked to a respirator, put on IV and wires and dunked into a tube, in which he sleeps for two weeks before his adoptive father rescues him.

* The Job Gone Wrong, with someone hitting him to make him talk. When the interrogator breaks the electrified cattle prod, Gambit panics and screams for his papa.
* "The Job" is about one of Frank's colleagues dying from 9/11-related illness.
* The job is in a dangerous or otherwise extremely undesirable environment such as performing traffic direction in a busy intersection.
* The Jobless class is able to equip any weapon or armor, and use any ability which that character has mastered. While this can result in
* The Joe Dolce Music Theatre's much-acclaimed new wave ballad "Vienna" from reaching #1 in the UK.
* The Joe Oriolo (and later, Don Oriolo) Era Felix (sometimes referred to as the Trans-Lux Felix), the longest running and most well known incarnation of the series. This era has such a different art style, tone, and set of characters and locales from the Silent cartoons that the only thing that ties them together is that they both star Felix the Cat, and even then, the Oriolo Felix has a considerably different personality than the Silent era Felix. Felix occasionally gets to use his surreal abilities from the silent cartoons (such as detaching his tail to use it as a disguise in "The Magic Bag", and morphing it into a fist to punch back arrows in "Felix Out West") but they're downplayed in favor of using the benefits offered by the Magic Bag of Tricks, which was introduced in this series.
* The Joe Schmo Show, a parody of reality shows in which all characters except the chosen schmoes were actors playing according to scripts, all of the characters were intended as archetypes, such as "The Schemer" and "The Grizzled Veteran." In the first season, the archetype of Ashleigh was specifically described as that of "The Rich Bitch" and she showed it too, regularly bad-mouthing other contestants and being generally manipulative while flaunting her wealth.
* The Joe Schmo Show, a program in which the chosen "schmo" thought they were on a reality show but everyone else was an actor, parodied a competition to become a bounty hunter. The host, Ralph Garman, played the role of the bounty hunter Jake Montrose, and at one point there was a segment in which the schmo and actors made one of these for his bounty-hunting service.
* The Joe Schmo Show archetypes, with the hosts' being that of "smarmy host".
* The Joe Schmo Show, host Ralph Garman's character, Jake Montrose, has a trophy wife.
* The Joe Schmo Show is built around this, with the ending of each of its seasons featuring the reveal to the chosen schmo (or schmoes in season two) that the entire reality show they've been participating in was fake and everyone they were supposedly competing against was actually an actor.
* The Joe Schmo Show, Kip only wanted pictures of positivity in his photo album, not pictures of negativity. So, naturally, Hutch, "The Asshole," absconded with it and filled it with photos of his buttocks.
* The Joe Schmo Show, Matt Kennedy Gould, the original Joe Schmo who was the only person on the show unaware while it was happening that everything around him was scripted, was extremely genre blind about certain things. For example, the character Ashleigh, described as "The Rich Bitch", handed out friendship bracelets in the first episode, the purpose being to twist people around and make them think she was their friend so they'd be less expecting for her to stab them in the back. However, after the show, Matt admitted that he never did understand why she handed out those friendship bracelets.
* The Joe Schmo Show, messing up his photo album, teasing him about not wanting to go in the pool and threatening to shove him in the pool and such. Part of the appeal of Matt was him standing up for Kip and saying that he understands about phobias and such.
* The Joe Schmo Show" of a small closet room. The show quickly arranges a plotline of him winning use of a luxury suite in order to make it easier to keep track of him.
* The Joe Schmo Show plays an exaggerated version of himself as a contestant in a fake bounty hunter type competition.

* The Joe Schmo Show She finds that one of the coupons, for a ten-minute foot massage, is missing. Cammy, the airhead, says that she had already used it with Austin, that she "thought it was okay," at which point the mouth of that season's Joe Schmo, Tim, forms a perfect jaw-dropping oval at what's going on around him.
* The Joe Schmo Show she gave the suitor character, Austin, her cell-phone as a gift saying that now he could call her at any time.
* The Joe Schmo Show, the character of Kip was so gay that he was described as "parade gay." Except that Kip was just that, a character. The actor who played him wasn't gay at all, and everyone the show except the titular "Schmo" was an actor. He did such a good job selling it that Matt Gould, a.k.a. Joe Schmo, was completely fooled from the very start.
* The Joe Schmo Show, they couldn't resist this with a line of Amanda Naughton's in the season finale: "I want money. I want lots of money," used in the promo. The full line, heard in context in the episode itself, was "I want money. I want lots of money. I'd love to live a very rich life, but not at the expense of somebody."

* The John Anderson song "Black Sheep" is about a guy who comes from a rich family who is considered an embarrassment to his family because he preferred to drive a truck for a living, instead of pursuing a more lucrative career.
* The John Boy and Billy Big Show has a recurring segment called "Dumb Crook News".
* The John Boy and Billy Big Show occasionally features ads from "JD's 24-Hour Drive-Thru Pawn & Gun Auto Parts Discount Pharmaceutical Adult Gift Bait & Tackle Discount Cigarette Outlet." Its spokesman is a fast-talking huckster who's always pitching a huge variety of items both common and bizarre.
* The John Boy And Billy Big Show, the guys started referring to Assistant Producer Jackie Curry-Lynch's breasts as "the twins" after she got implants.
* The John Boy and Billy Show, had been involved in radio since he was a teenager, only leaving in August 2015 because of a stroke and died two years later a month shy of his 90th birthday. Outside of radio, Raiford was an avid motorcyclist and skydiver.

* The John Dredge Nothing To Do With Anything Show tries passing himself off as Derek Dolak - but not very successfully, because even John grows suspicious:
* The John Dredge Nothing To Do With Anything Show version of Hans Keller:
* The John Dredge Nothing To Do With Anything Show with his truncheon.
* The John Hartford song "Don't Leave Your Records In The Sun" mimics the result perfectly: "They just won't play just won't play just won't play just won't play just won't play just won't play just won't play..."
* The John Larroquette Show centred around John being forced to rent a bust to a group of neo-Nazis.
* The John Larroquette Show where an elephant escapes from the zoo and can be seem roaming St. Louis. During this season, John wins a writing contest and receives an electric car as a prize. In the season finale, he buys a dark grey cover for the car with a similarly colored sleeve for the recharging cord. After he covers the car with it, the elephant can be seen looking over the covered car with admiration.

* The Johnny Carson Show, which Carson would begin hosting in 1962) depicting the future of 1980, where a husband has a robot household servant named Gregory who operates on an electric cord, with the bored housewife finding the robot more appealing, only for the robot's wife to take him home so he can take care of their robot children.
* The Johnny Rivers song "Secret Agent Man" is better remembered in the US than the show to which it was the theme song,
* The Johnny Seven O.M.A. (One Man Army), a toy from the 1960s, was seven toy weapons in one, including an assault rifle, pistol, grenade launcher, etc.
* The "John Smith" alias was adopted for this very reason. Mind you, there's a later scene where some big shot visiting UNIT complained that the file on Doctor John Smith is completely empty.
* The Johto episodes introduced Spinarak and its evolved form, Ariados, while the Unova episodes introduced Joltik and its evolved form, Galvantula. Even more frightening is that both Joltik and Galvantula have the ability, Unnerve. Likewise, Spinarak and Ariados both have the move, Scary Face.

* The Jokaero are an inversion of the trope. These orangutan-like creatures are capable of building advanced technology such as high-powered lasers small enough to fit in jewelry, to say nothing of spaceships, but no-one's been able to quite determine whether they're intelligent, even sentient, or if this is just instinctive behavior. For all of their gizmos they behave like animals, and it's impossible to study them because they'll just invent whatever they need to escape from captivity.
* The joke about an irate mother whose child keeps taking apples from the kitchen: "Apples don't grow on trees, you know!"
* The joke being that a "dynamite faction" was a term for an energized, politically active, powerful political group used in the late 1800s (when the game takes place). The switch is that they aren't united enough to be a genuine dynamite faction and are called that
* The joke being the customs officer continues to question the smuggler only to instantly believe he's not the smuggler, even as he shows what he's smuggling.
* The joke is lost on non-Russians and even some modern Russians, but in the Soviet times three was considered the optimal number of people for collective drinking. The reason for that was that the price of a bottle of vodka was 2 roubles 87 kopecks, so if each person contributed a rouble they could buy a bottle and 13 kopecks' worth of snacks.
* The joke is more apparent when they are referred to by their proper names,
* The joke is taken a step further when, after Homer orders an assortment of
* The joke is that a group of performers, usually described as a family, are auditioning for an agent or for a gig, sometimes at a circus. The person evaluating them asks to see their act, so they proceed to perform a long series of absolutely terrible things, from killing and torturing animals, to perverse sexual acts, to defecating or urinating. Eventually the act stops and the bewildered audience of one asks what the hell they call their act.

* The Joker #3: hijacking Gotham City's airwaves each night to broadcast himself torturing a different member of Gotham's law enforcement community.
* The Joker #3 when he is explaining to his gang his latest plan to make Batman's life a misery, and then notices that they have gone oddly silent. "He's right behind me, isn't he?" is the last line of the issue.
* The Joker (5'7) — he's tall and lanky, while she's a petite (although not tiny) former gymnast. She barely reaches his shoulder, but that doesn't seem to be a problem because she's happy to climb all over him for a kiss should the opportunity arise.
* The Joker actually gets this a lot. He has fallen off trains, rooftops, roller coasters, and everything else that is more than ten feet off the ground. Besides him, most of the other Batman villains have suffered this fate at least once. Bane fell off a boat, Freeze fell in
* The Joker actually sounds shocked, crying out "You killed Captain Clown!", though it's impossible to tell whether he's trolling Batman, genuinely trying to be funny, or crazy enough to actually equate the (rather crude, and definitely not sapient) robot with a living person.
* The Joker A few petals in he just starts saying "She loves me!" with each one.
* The Joker" after finding out that he'd finked on her in hopes of getting a better deal for himself.
* The Joker after he learns in court that he's just been found guilty of multiple counts of first-degree murder, and now will almost certainly get sent to the electric chair. (He'd assumed that he'd always be thought too insane to ever be convicted by a jury, let alone receive the death penalty.)
* The Joker and even got her own series after breaking away from him. DC later introduced a new character called Punchline, who, as an outright villain obsessed with the Joker, seems intended to appeal to fans who preferred Harley's original role and characterization.
* The Joker and Harley Quinn (5'7) — although Joker is sometimes described as only 183 cm (6'0) tall he's more often 191 cm (6'0) or 193 cm (6'4") and drawn in a particularly lanky fashion, while Harley (a former gymnast) barely comes up to his shoulders.
* The Joker AND I BROUGHT FAVORS FOR EVERYBODY!" before unleashing dozens of exploding marbles.
* The Joker, and threatened to spring a lethal virus that would have likely killed everyone in the city - himself included — unless Carnage backed off. (And neither Batman nor Spider-Man thought for a second that he was bluffing.)
* The Joker (and to an extent Harley Quinn) has The Joker's Playground.
* The Joker are constantly on edge around him, but there's nothing definitive to say that he's anything other than "just" a normal, murderous human.
* The Joker are extremely good with disguises and impersonations as well.
* The Joker. Arkham Asylum keeps trying to give Joker a job or two to do. Letting him into the janitor's closet was a really bad idea.
* The Joker assassinates a mob boss by jamming a quill pen into his throat. It kills the dude a lot faster than it would be expected to, meaning The Joker most likely poisoned the tip.
* The Joker. At the same time, Lady Shiva was also training terrorists in the region.
* The Joker Batman is that the Joker sees Batman as his unwilling straight man.
* the Joker Batman Who Laughs (but hey, at least Alfred resuscitated him and Batman managed to cure himself).
* The Joker, because if he did then it would spoil all their lovely fun.
* The Joker Blogs, also uses this, probably for the same reasons as Linkara.
* The Joker Blogs, he doesn't appreciate another character taking a shot at Batman. "You do NOT get to do that!"
* The Joker Blogs: Lampshaded by patient 4479 himself in episode 17. "You want to hear something funny? Right now, they are all rooting for me.''"

* The Joker Blogs: Post-Dark Knight series that chronicle the Joker's time in Arkham Asylum.
* The Joker Blogs: the Joker recruits a homeless man named Ted to help film his exploits. Over the course of about half an hour (if that), Ted claims to have been a cameraman for the news, a priest, a medic and a delivery man. It's unclear if he's desperate to sound useful or genuinely unwell.
* The Joker Blogs, with the second season shifting to traditional camera
* the Joker breaks in with his gang and promptly begins shooting up the place looking for Dent.
* The Joker), but the backstory of the man who became the Red Hood has never been independently revealed.
* The Joker by focusing on his villainous relationship with Batman, and how broken up he is when the Dark Knight refuses to acknowledge the clown prince of crime as his greatest enemy.
* The Joker by tempting him to stop his plans, where usually destroy the city is just a secondary plan, getting/trapping/killing Batman as his real main plan.
* The Joker, called Captain Clown. In an interview, the producers admitted this was done specifically so that Batman wouldn't have to hold back in the fight.
* The Joker. Chilling and ratchets up the tension. About the only time two notes have been considered Oscar worthy.
* The Joker come up behind him in the reflection on the Batcomputer monitor. When he turns around, he finds Alfred there instead.
* The Joker: Devil's Advocate , a new D.A. decides to go for broke and push for the death penalty after a series of killings with the Joker's MO. After a "Trial of the Century" with accompanying media circus, he is found guilty and sentenced to death. However, he claims to have no knowledge of the murders. Batman, who has never known the Joker to deny any of his crimes, investigates and finds out that this time he really is innocent. Joker is returned to Arkham when this is revealed.
* The Joker does this to the entire mob, who hire him to take out Batman only to wish they hadn't as Joker's machinations ruin and eventually kill them — the only one who doesn't get killed by Joker is Maroni, who gets Two-Face set on him instead.
* The joke religion the Church of the SubGenius tells of the day when the spaceships from Planet X are to take those who have accepted J.R. "Bob" Dobbs into their minds from Earth before it is destroyed (called "The Rupture" in their literature) to their final financial reward. This was to have occurred on July 5, 1998, but the parchment on which it was documented was read wrong. It should have been July 5, 19998.
* The Joker episode could qualify as the "insanity-inducing" variant... But you had to be exposed to it for a long time in order for the insanity to take effect.
* The Joker feature the badass longcoat as a staple of Joker's outfit.
* the Joker fills a bathtub with blood in a misguided, possibly intentionally traumatizing, attempt to alleviate Jonathan Crane's dislike of baths.
* The Joker gets this quite a lot, as while people already know he's loony, he can still boggle their minds;
* The Joker guy who went absolutely insane, manages to be just as terrifying and dangerous as they are if not more so.
* The Joker had a short comics series of his own in the 1970s, and Eclipso had an ongoing one in the 1990s. While radical in their day, villain-based series have since gotten more common.
* The Joker had his own short-lived series during the 1970s, he somehow had a miniature hide-out constructed beneath his cell in Arkham Asylum.
* The Joker has a clean, cartoonish appearance in the comics and some of the other adaptations, but also in
* The Joker has demonstrated enough chemistry skill to create assorted neurotoxins, explosives and slippery agents from the contents of a janitor's closet.
* The Joker has Punch and Judy, two hulking musclemen dressed like clowns. (In fact, when Clayface disguises himself as them and
* The Joker has suffered the buzz saw version of this twice - once in the newspaper comic story "The Joker and the Sparrow", and once in the first issue of his self-titled comic book series.

* The Joker, he just sees the Joker for the murderous psychopath he is and accords him no praise.
* The Joker, he'll comment that Brainiac is a Control Freak that "makes Batman look slightly neurotic".
* The Joker. He might be a normal, rather fragile human, but he can concoct poisons and create gadgets that regularly overcome metas on a routine basis. Add in the fact that he would sell his soul for a box of cigars and massacre a kindergarten class on a whim, and you've got a guy whom almost every other DC Supervillain fears.
* The Joker; here the Joker didn't kidnap Harley, and Harley imagines that she came to love the Joker of her own accord (or if she acknowledges his manipulation playing a part, he clearly did it because he was in love with her).
* The Joker. He's always got flies buzzing around him, tying into his habit of spreading disease and misery.
* The Joker. He's dressed up in a plain old repairman jumpsuit and is not even close to looking sharply dressed this time around.
* The Joker he's the one guy who can keep Batman too busy to go after them.
* The Joker. He uses the anger this causes among the police force to his advantage.
* The Joker, he wants him sexually only after he's dead. A lot of fanfics capitalize his worshipping of Batman/Bruce’s Adonis-like handsomeness.
* The Joker himself tends to wear flesh-coloured makeup to "disguise" himself as Jack Napier, his former identity (and of course his scarring represents clown makeup).
* The Joker in all of his incarnations, particularly during the Silver Age of Comic Books.
* The Joker", in a scene adapted directly from the example under "Comic Books".
* The Joker instead of having him becoming discolored and insane after being dropped in a vat of chemicals. His white face and green hair is very obviously makeup, and one scene shows him without them. His perpetual smile are two crude scars on his cheeks.
* The Joker introducing his return in Neo Gotham in front of an elderly Bruce Wayne. Bruce is in stunned disbelief, but his old arch-nemesis assures Bruce that it really is him because "after all, who'd know me better than

* The Joker is a curious case, as he tends to be aware his men have no chance against Batman (
* The Joker Is an extremely dark version: he's usually portrayed as gleefully sadistic as he murders and terrorizes people.
* The Joker is a total sociopath who enjoys bringing destruction and madness upon Gotham City, just to watch the chaos unfold and to show the world the futility of morality.
* The Joker is a very literal comedic sociopath. Some of his best moments are as hilarious as they are evil.
* The Joker is famous also for victims with a hideous grin on their faces due to Joker Venom (or in
* The Joker is famous for his Joker Venom, which not only kills people but leaves them with a ghastly smile. He's also quite fond of
* The Joker is given a new look drastically different than any pre-Ledger Joker. He has wild, dreadlock-style hair, red eyes with yellow pupils, and giant jagged yellow teeth that slot together. He also wore a tie-dyed straightjacket and went barefoot before switching to a purple suit and spats (but still no shoes).
* The Joker is introduced as "John Doe", a mysterious Arkham Asylum inmate who, going into the second season, is presented as genuinely friendly towards Bruce Wayne, in contrast to other media, which present him as sociopathic and self-centered.
* The Joker is often drawn with too many too-long teeth as part of his trademark rictus grin, highlighting his nature as a psychotic and sadistic killer.

* The Joker is so poor that he could afford only one ejection seat. Boy, was Harley mad!
* The Joker is the relationship character. "Don't pretend you're like them. You're not like them, even if you'd want to be. You're a freak. Like me!" The reconciliation occurs when Batman answers the Joker's question - "Do you know how I got these scars?" "No, but I know how you got these." He tells a joke and accepts his role as the Dark Knight.
* The Joker is to make Chinese food from the entire population of China.
* "The Joker is Wild". The Joker hides himself and his band in statues from the Comedian Hall of Fame.
* The Joker. It comes complete with giant robotic clown and authentic Houdini water trap.
* The Joker. It seems his greatest desire is to break Batsy's ideals down and make him just like him. Batman isn't the type to let Joker victimize him but in certain fan works Batman is made vulnerable and at the Jokers mercy.
* The Joker Joker reveals himself to be jealous of the entire Bat-Family for “distracting” his nemesis and plans to take them out of the equation.
* The Joker keels over with the trademark death-grin one second later.
* The Joker kills a police chief who had arrested him once in the past.
* The Joker Lance to teach Gobbie Portuguese and Spanish, the entire language, at once.
* The Joker lane starts with him as a solo villain. Eventually he recruits sidekick/girlfriend Harley Quinn. Harley breaks up with the Joker to become a solo anti-hero, floats between any number of super team ups
* The Joker likes bombs with flashy displays of the time left counting down, however with him it's a toss up as to whether the timer has anything to do with the actual detonator, or if the time displayed is accurate.
* The Joker lore is well-known for his over-the-top antics. That includes the multiple times he feigns innocence as well.
* The Joker—as having been put through the wringer beforehand. With Jeremiah, he's always lived in fear that Jerome would kill him, and spent his entire life hiding out to stay alive. He does, and Jerome ends up dead, but he gets turned into the (possible) Joker as a "final gift". As for Jerome, it's indicated his parents were abusive, but it's left very ambiguous as to how bad his psychosis truly was, and whether or not the actions he's accused of were true.
* The Joker — or as he's currently known in season 1, John Doe — of all people gets this treatment in
* The Joker messes with a rehabilitative Two-Face, suggesting that his girlfriend and best friend Bruce Wayne are playing behind his back and want to keep him locked up in Arkham. To give a further push, Joker has one of his minions make a fake newspaper article that Bruce and Two-Face's girlfriend are going to marry and slips it to an already suspicious Two-Face, who now loses it, escapes from Arkham, kidnaps his girlfriend, and tries to kill Bruce, fulfilling this trope himself.
* The Joker mind would give anyone nightmares. And it did work, it just didn't last.
* The Joker. (More like Harley Quinn in a world without her beloved Mr. J.)
* The Joker movie also played Cesare. So, it's hardly coincidence that the Joker is often given Cesare's dark, sunken-in eyelids.
* The Joker, naturally. Which elicits one of Kim Basinger's zillion screams in that film.
* The Joker, Nightwing, believing that Robin has been eaten by Killer Croc, goes in an all-out frenzy and beats up the Joker to the point where his heart stops beating. Fortunately, Batman stops Nightwing in time before the Joker collapses, almost nearing death, and the Dark Knight resuscitates him using CPR in order to stop Nightwing from stooping down to the Joker's level as a murderer.
* The Joker, not just a comics coloring convention representation of "dark grey".
* The Joker (not the first time this has happened in a Batman franchise) as best frenemies with Penguin.
* The Joker (obviously) uses one in an unfortunate high school jock in

* The Joker of all people was handcuffed with his hands in front of him while being transferred between prisons. He picked the handcuff lock with an ordinary straight nail and then later used the handcuffs as brass knuckles against police.
* The Joker", opens with Needles Kane relishing in the aroma of an ice cream cone. The Joker drives by in a Batmobile with a paint job, leans out the cockpit, and seizes it. A vehicular Death Battle ensues.
* The Joker pulls his beloved "lethal BANG! Flag Gun" version off in
* The Joker releases a powerful cloud of gas that causes people to break into hysterical laughter. Inevitably, the radio report can't make it to the end without bursting into giggles.
* the Joker's, as his insanity defense finally fails and he's sentenced to death, but for a murder he didn't actually commit.
* The Joker sees many of his murders: Simply as pranks. Part of the Joker's warped world view is that life itself is just a cruel joke, so he sees no difference between a classic pie in the face, or a poison pie full of acid. Occasionally, he'll pull a completely harmless joke just because the victim is clearly pissing himself in fear and expecting the worst.
* The Joker's eulogy to Batman sign the Joker put in the casket along with the cape and cowl. And the perfect capper:
* The Joker's Five-Way Revenge), the Joker threatens an old henchman (who he suspects of having betrayed him) with this... unless Batman volunteers to take his place. Naturally, Batman accepts. Naturally, the Joker reneges and dumps them both in the pool. Naturally, Batman beats the trap, rescues the hostage, and collars the Joker.
* The Joker's grittier, more realistic take on the character is too hampered by his mental illnesses to pull off that kind of supervillainy, and most of the havoc he wreaks comes from being in the wrong place at the wrong time.
* The Joker's henchmen gave him some truth serum in order to get him to tell them where he kept his money. Unfortunately for them, the Joker's state of mind isn't exactly normal at the best of times, let alone under hallucinogenic drugs. The henchmen didn't get anything for their efforts other than mad ramblings.
* The Joker slips loose from Arkham Asylum or the Scarecrow gets his crazy on or heck, there's just a party, something shows up and turns hundreds of people into crispy, fried corpses. And the police officers...does anyone train them? They go down when looked at hard.
* The Joker, so he's usually this. But it's most obvious in the Dressrosa arc, when he turns from recurring sideline psycho to the main antagonist, after finding out just how severely he underestimated the Straw Hat Pirates.
* The Joker's performance made him even more lovable while being as monstrous as ever.
* The Joker's sidekick Harley Quinn wears a black and red playing card motif.
* The Joker's theme in the style of the Burton film), which was incorporated into several different music pieces that involved him. The Joker even whistles it to himself at one point.
* The Joker storyline features him trying to give Commissioner Gordon his Bad Day.
* The Joker substitute laughter for tears, or the ponderous weight of his sadness would crush what little will to live there is left inside.
* The Joker sums them up perfectly: The Joker's goons are schizos who are nevertheless dependable and self-sacrificing and for a guy who doesn't look like he had a plan, he musta organized these attacks on an evil day planner.
* The Joker's Wild, by two years. (Bill Cullen took over shortly before Jack's death.)
* The Joker's Wild category, illustrated by a partial crossword grid with three words entered.
* The Joker's Wild in its first seasons used "The Savers" by Jean-Jacques Perry and Gershon Kingsley.
* The Joker's Wild (originally ran from 1972-75 on CBS, followed by syndicated revivals from 1977-86 and 1990-91; total of 13 seasons)
* The Joker's Wild's wheels spun from 1972-75 on CBS and 1977-86 in syndication, an amazing run for a game show.

* The Joker's Wild, the titular Joker acted as this — if you spun one or two, you could make it double as a category symbol and play that category for double its value. You could also use a Joker to call for a category that hadn't been spun (termed "going off the board"). Spinning three Jokers pretty much won the game, though you needed to give a correct answer to win.
* The Joker's Wild The worst part? Beast Boy's regenerative abilities keep him from dying, so the Joker can do anything he wants to him for however long he wants. Brrrrr.
* The Joker That said, at least once he forced a cigar into a tied mook's mouth, only to reveal it's a normal cigar as the poor fool pisses himself in fear of this trope happening.
* The Joker). The biggest difference between the comic version is that Telltale Joker isn't self-driven caring greatly for those he's close to and are nice to him whereas comic Joker only "cares" for his beloved nemesis Batman and everyone else are just pawns and playthings.
* The Joker, the entire MK cast makes it clear how much they despise him, with several of them having no issue with killing him. And yet, he's hailed as not only one of the most popular villains of comic book history, but also pop culture.
* The Joker Then the Joker-mobile crashes and Needles transforms the Sweet Tooth into its robotic form. And then Joker convinces him to get out and fight hand-to-hand, and uses his Joker Venom.
* The Joker, then throw his hands in the air and abandon the entire scheme. For various reasons, the scene was dropped.
* The Joker, the story quoted above, he even leaves the grinning corpse of the estate agent sitting on a carousel horse as a "welcome" sign.
* The Joker this time, but the Joker apparently didn't realize that killing strangers and torturing one of Batman's loved ones might cause him to react differently from normal. Or the Joker just didn't care.
* The Joker, though the stories, eerie or not, were more crime than horror based.
* The Joker (Tim Drake) at the end of the mini-series Robin: Joker's Wild. After being defeated by Robin while Batman was out of town, Joker sat angrily in his cell at Arkham, warning the other inmates, "No one touches the boy, d'ya hear? He's mine! The little bird is mine. Do you hear me? None of you touch him. He’s the Joker’s property from now on. And next time he’ll stay dead."
* The Joker, to absolutely ridiculous and back again, as it would for him.
* The Joker to celebrate the town's 200th anniversary, showering 20 million dollars on the streets to lure the crowds in... so that he can gas them all to death.
* The Joker to get rid of a rogue group of survivalist ex-cops. Send out prisoners painted to look like him and the admittedly-crazy leader shot them all.
* The Joker use of twin switchblades to mutilate not just enemies and loose allies, but himself.
* The Joker uses a deadly poison called "Joker Venom" or "Smilex" that literally makes its victims laugh to death. Maxie Zeus (during one of his periods of sanity) diluted it with ecstasy and sold it as a recreational drug called Chuckles.
* The Joker uses broken glass to escape, but his handcuffs were taken off during his interrogation and the glass was broken when Batman slammed his head into the window.
* The Joker War: The Designer, who appeared to be the mastermind behind everything happening, was actually killed by Joker years ago. Joker has just been hijacking the schemes he developed as part of his new master plan.
* The Joker was actually able to make Batman laugh at the end of the graphic novel
* The Joker was a pretty guy, but his Joker looks quite gross with his poor hygiene, wrinkled face, and nasty scars. Of course, he becomes a pretty bishonen with cool scars in loads of fanart.
* The Joker was in "The Big Leagues," while Harley Quinn and Poison Ivy were in "Hard as Nails."
* The Joker, were inspired by the novel's descriptions of Hannibal Lecter.
* The Joker when Batman and Robin crash through a glass ceiling to face him.

* The Joker, when he crashes a meeting of underworld leaders and mockingly tells them that the reason they have the meeting in the middle of the day is because they do not want to go out at night due to being scared shitless of Batman. He also points out to them that not being able to operate at night has severely cut into their profits.
* The Joker, whereas the others don't meet the qualifications to be listed there.
* The Joker where he (although still wishing to either destroy Gotham or turn it into madness) will do things "...just for laughs..."
* The Joker, where he kills an entire live TV studio with weird dolls that exhale Joker Gas.
* The Joker, where the Joker is in a helicopter that crashes into the sea. Batman shouts at Superman: "Find the body!", but he already knows that it won't be found because the matters between him and the Joker always end up unresolved.
* The Joker, with his battle with Batman being an ideological one over who is correct.
* The Joker. You can never be sure what kind of gun The Joker is pointing at you until he pulls the trigger. And even if it's a "BANG!" Flag Gun, you can't be sure if he's not going to kill you with it anyway.
* The joke that makes Peter keep crapping his pants ends with the punchline, "...P.S.: Your vagina's in the sink!" This is a classic dirty joke about a girl who crams liver into her vagina before sex so she'll feel like a virgin.
* The joke where "a 90-pound woman slings around big men three times her size". It almost never happens except as humor, or if the situation is justified (e.g. the woman is a cyborg, or a superhero, or genetically empowered). Otherwise the action girls would use more simpler hand-to-hand or guns or the like, but
* The joke with the car who runs into a police control, and the inhabitants blathering away happily. Usually goes from the "Don't listen to him, he's drunk" to the corpse in the trunk.
* The joke works with Northern Canada. Maybe even southern Canada, as long as you're not too close to any of the Great Lakes. Only problem is the crazy hot summers in the southern parts...
* The Jokka generally don't have much of a government, several houses bound more by contract than blood coexist in a city and generally handle their own affairs, until the rise of the autocratic Stone Moon Empire.
* "the jolliest, fat, apple-cheeked, twinkling-eyed King you can imagine."
* The Jolly Green Giant, the mascot of B&G Foods and an icon of veggie commercials. True to his name, he is a smiling, jovial giant who bellows a happy "Ho ho ho!" as part of his jingle.
* The Jolly Green Giant used to grow vegetables in a valley in the middle of who-knows-where. Though he seldom if ever did anything, a guy that size is still a force to be reckoned with.
* The Jolson Story, Larry Parks played Al Jolson, but used Jolson's actual singing voice.
* The Jon and Vangelis song/salute to the golden age of movies, "Friends of Mr. Cairo" has a mock scene from
* The Jonas Brothers faced many restrictions from Disney with regards to their infamous purity rings. The lyrics to their songs were constantly being policed, and they'd often be forced to change any lines that were deemed inappropriate. This included lines about being alone in a room with another person. Additionally the brothers were told to respond to potentially risque interview questions (about drugs, alcohol, sex etc) by "playing dumb" and veering off on other topics.
* The Jonas Brothers might contain songs written from Nick's standpoint about that same breakup.
* The Jonas Brothers of these bands, using similar color schemes and font styles to the other bands' current albums.
* The Jonas Brothers, two of its members formed careers of their own to commercial (though not quite to the level of the band at their prime) and critical (much moreso than the band) success:
* The Jones Soda Company sells a soda called simply Pink. The taste was somehow perfectly evocative of its namesake color.

* The Jonestown massacre in 1978 had so many victims testimony and evidence from several sources remained:
* The Jon Pertwee era has a lot of notorious present-day future — it's presumably set
* The Jon Spencer Blues Explosion song "She Said" involves a man getting lycanthropy by cheating on his girlfriend (that's a new one), and the transformation is triggered by the blooming of wolfsbane. The song ends with him being killed with a silver bullet.
* The Jordan's Furniture store in Natick, Massachusetts parodies the
* The Joseon Dynasty's Amhaeng-eosa (Secret Censors), specially appointed by the King to keep tabs on his own administration and yangban nobility, but never as fully institutionalized as some others on this list. Oddly, or perhaps not when one considers their preferred targets, they also tend to be viewed positively today as agents opposed to government corruption.
* The jotuns (giants) were typically pretty butt-ugly, but the female jotuns were comely enough that a lot of the Aesir married one (or nine...). Loki is somewhat an exception to this rule, being handsome despite giant ancestry (it's not clear whether he is a full or half giant). He's also a shapeshifting trickster god, so who knows what he really looks like, and his children were mostly horrible monsters.
* The Jounin Team Captains and the village Kages are all Levelheaded, even if they have wildly different personalities.
* The Journal Entries has a throw-away mention of Pendorian starships having padded leather interiors. It is not clear how seriously to take this, but Pendor is absurdly wealthy.
* The Journal Entries have White's Teams, which are often based on White's Ships, named for White's Theorem: "A space-faring species' first encounter with another space-faring species is most likely to be a distress signal." This occurs multiple times both on-screen and in backstories.
* The Journal Entries (more than once, and even on-screen), but between any random merchant ship possibly having just about any damn kind of weaponry (including one with a combat android that boarded an attacking vessel and sabotaged its' reactors to explode), the way various space navies tend to go looking for any space pirates (mostly because they're bored and curb stomping pirates is fun), and how much it COSTS to go searching for merchants to try to plunder in the first place, they tend to die without successors.
* The Journal Entries) or use a holographic projection (of the sort of body they would like if they were an organic) as a point of reference.
* The Journal Entries, right down to the ship being a Jupiter Mark II, with four people aboard, including an adolescent girl and a younger boy. Things just ended badly for them.)
* The Journal Entries seem to use nanotechnology mostly for medical purposes. Pendorians owe their enhanced health and immortality to being, effectively, nanotech cyborgs, but don't exhibit much in the way of actual 'superpowers'; they're mostly depicted as regular folks with an occasionally odd-seeming outlook on things and seriously extended lifespans.
* The Journal Entries subvert this with a Pendorian sculptor using her final life support layer to allow her to walk around on an airless moon of a gas giant completely naked.
* The Journal Entries that are telepathic with organics. There are also a whole series of artificial interfaces that produce equivalent results, from external headbands to multiple generations of implants.
* The Journal Entries The implication in universe is that so many characters have stable long-term relationships because the culture does not expect anything specific beyond not being evil; not being able to handle it when your lover beds someone else is seen as a failing on your part.
* The Journal Entries with amazing technology and weird social standards, but because Pendor desperately wants Earth culture. (At this point, Pendor has existed for something like a century and everyone is desperate to get at the deep, rich cultural materials Earth has accumulated over several thousand years.)

* The journal in the first game was a chaotic collection of notes (some repeated) about hearsays, encounters, quests and major plot events. The sequel reorganized it by separating major plot events from side quests in different sections, aggregating related-notes in the same entry, and marking completed quests.
* The journalist Georgette Louise Meyer is better known as Dicky Chapelle. She is a war correspondent/photographer who also published many books about the lack of women in her role.
* the journal is useless. However, in the following chapter, the consequences of Dib's actions (the twins being assigned to be his partners partly to keep an eye on him) seriously change the story's status quo.
* The Journal of Cartoon Overanalyzations thrives on, and parodies, this trope.
* The Journal of Irreproducible Results cheerfully offered instructions for how you can build a thermonuclear device in your own home in ten easy steps.
* The Journal of the Travellers' Aid Society #3 article "Advanced Powered Battle Armor". The armor has a built-in flamer (flamethrower) with a fuel tank on the back of the suit. If the tank is hit there's an 8% chance the tank will explode, disabling the suit and killing the wearer.
* The Journal of the Two Sisters, Princess Celestia and Princess Luna became the leaders of Equestria by being able to raise the sun and moon, which was beforehand done by volunteer unicorns who would be left permanently drained of their magic by doing it.
* The Journal of the Walk and The Journal of Aframos Longjourney from
* The journey books need to use blood as ink to work. Rahl apparently likes to use the blood of people
* The Journey Down are first seen in Chapter One and never interact with each other. Later in Chapter Three, we find out they eventually met (Makena had been evicted from her joint in Kingsport Bay); being both cooks, they were a perfect match, and they now run a restaurant in St. Armando together.
* The Journey Down is set on a flat world. The focus of the first chapter is repairing a seaplane so you can go over the Edge and fly down to the Underland below.
* The Journeyer, set in 12th-century China, torture is a trade. The royal torture artist is called "The Tickler" (due to the words for "torture" and "tickle" sounding very close in Chinese) and he has apprentices.
* The Journeyman Project 2: Buried in Time has one of its timezones set on a space station, at a time just after a meteor shower heavily damaged it. It's here where Arthur, the station's AI, duplicates himself to become Agent 5's companion without damaging the time stream.
* The Journeyman Project 2, during the year 2221. He purchased a space station and moved it into Saturn's orbit, and only made a brief reappearance on Earth in an attempt to sell some paintings made by what he claimed to be a new kind of Artificial Intelligence, which in fact was true. Dr. Farnstien later perished when the station was hit by a meteor shower in 2247.
* The Journeyman Project, a holographic version of this shows up when Gage Blackwood uses his toilet, reporting on the Cyrollan spaceship that landed earlier in Caldoria. The newspaper even has video footage on its front page, and audio narration.
* The Journeyman Project, also fits into the "Lobster" category. It's filled with water or some other aqueous fluid due to the creatures there requiring that habitat, and they travel throughout it via tunnels that squish and warp in peristaltic motion to push them along. It's also devoid of visible light, as the Krynn only see in Klegmar Radiation.
* The Journeyman Project also turns out to the be prototype of this technology in one of the time zones you visit.
* The Journeyman Project averts this in the beginning, as your future self meets you face to face, and sends you forward in time with his Jumpsuit.
* The Journeyman Project averts this. You visit Cichen Itza at 1050 AD, when the traps for the three underground trials have been recently built and are fully functional.

* The Journeyman Project backed up ALL of recorded history on a single optical disc, specifically for the event that history would be altered. When that happens, a copy of this disc is left in the Agency headquarters to be altered while an Agent is sent to get the original in 200 million BC, and use the Agency computer to cross-reference the differences between the two.
* The Journeyman Project by deciding to copy his consciousness over to a blank Biochip in your inventory, while leaving his original self intact so that history would stay unchanged.
* The Journeyman Project did their best to educate their chosen successors, humanity, in how to care for their gift. Even with the interference of other aliens, humanity managed to keep their legacy to the universe intact until a time would come when all races could utilize it in harmony.
* The Journeyman Project. Examples including when Dr. Sinclair taps the lens of his video log camera, and when Genghis Kahn punches you in the face, as you're actually watching the feed from a camera on a screen inside the Jumpsuit.
* The Journeyman Project explicitly classifies the situation as "Red Alert", slightly quiets the alarm and voice, and adds a section involving piloting a submarine from one base to another, while avoiding torpedoes fired by the operators of other subs and the bases.
* The Journeyman Project fixes this by stopping this track after Agent 5 cures himself from a poison dart that a robot shot him with.
* The Journeyman Project (French knights will kill you, while pre-Columbian Mayans will worship you as a god).
* The Journeyman Project has to stop the one guy who thinks the aliens are bad, though.
* The Journeyman Project have this effect, and to a lesser extent the background hum in the TSA.
* The Journeyman Project, if Agent 5 makes an offering to a Chak Mool statue while the Mayan calendar is set incorrectly.
* The Journeyman Project-inspired hints that you're running low; first the music slows down and fades out, then a loud heartbeat fades in, and finally adds in panicked, heavy breathing.
* The Journeyman Project is described by his creator as having an unfortunate fixation with twentieth century pop culture.
* The Journeyman Project is to be "uncreated" by the reality distortion wave, which happens if you go to the wrong place in the Global Transporter, or wait too long at the TSA.
* The Journeyman Project, Megan Love, heard on the radio during the intro, was voiced by Megan Wheeler.
* The Journeyman Project messing with the timeline, the event is changed by having the aliens declaring that humanity is not yet ready to be integrated with alien society due to humans causing violence towards others and themselves (related to the altered events that you have to fix).
* The Journeyman Project, of course Mac exclusive. And in 2014 that got a re-release on Linux, Windows and OS X with some minor additions which were originally cut for space.
* The Journeyman Project sent by Sinclair to the World Science Center in 2310, can shapeshift to a human disguise in the style of the T-1000.
* The Journeyman Project series don't have you interact with people, the third game has you try out a "chameleon suit", a time-traveling suit that allows you to scan a person and project him or her using holo-projectors. Speech is likewise translated in real-time and using the appropriate voices. After all, how else is your character supposed to talk to Atlanteans (who probably speak something similar to Ancient Greek), Ancient Egyptians, Mayans, Tibetans, and Mongolians? The second game also includes a Translator Biochip that lets you read and hear various languages.
* The Journeyman Project, Sinclair's lab, and the underground part of the Mars colony.

* The Journeyman Project starts out after World War III, subverting this trope. While Earth is unified and all borders are dropped by the present year, 2318, time has been altered so that this no longer happens. The player, therefore, must fix this.
* The Journeyman Project suggests reactivating the "Pegasus device" used in the first game, but the idea gets shot down because it would take too long to get the old time machine working again. He ends up using a top-secret prototype instead (which, incidentally, he wasn't supposed to know about; his boss throws a fit when he gets back).
* The Journeyman Project that framed Blackwood also tampered with one of Arthur's own sculptures. After transferring himself to Gage's suit, Arthur can provide the player with tons of helpful historical information, and humorous color commentary. By the end of the series, Gage and Arthur are practically best friends.
* The Journeyman Project, the El Dorado Legacy grants detailed visions of the future to the city's shaman, and the Shangri La Legacy gives certain monks the ability to transmute matter.
* The Journeyman Project, the natives mistake you for a god, and shows them building a statue dedicated to you.
* The Journeyman Project: The temporal agent Gage Blackwood lives in the flying city of Caldoria.
* The Journeyman Project through comments made by Arthur your AI sidekick.
* The Journeyman Project to blow up the flying city of Caldoria. Disarming this requires solving a set of geometric puzzles inside a virtual cube. And yes, both of these are timed, and taking too long kills you in very gruesome ways.
* The Journeyman Project version even shows Agent 5's head rammed through the windshield.
* The Journeyman Project, where one of the time zones is a space station around saturn that you have to get to by using a can of spray cheese with unsually high propulsion power. You can hear yourself breathing in the background and the cheese spray quite clearly.
* The Journeyman Project, where you have to use your Shield biochip before blowing up the door.
* The Journeyman Project, which takes place 300 years in the future, everyone has (21st-century era) American accents, even in Australia.
* The Journeyman Project with Graham Jarvis as Elliot Sinclair, the father of time travel.
* The Journey of Allen Strange needs to blend in on Earth. To this end, he takes human form and brings a mannequin in a sports store to life so it can pose as his father. The mannequin is given the name Manfred Strange and throughout the series needs fine-tuning to properly act like a human.
* The Journeyof Allen Strange Robbie and her friends have a sleepover tradition of pranking her little brother Josh, which usually involves covering him in makeup.
* The Journey of Graves It turned out that the shot was loaded with a powerful drug called "Heart's Desire".
* The Journey of Natty Gann, getting into scrapes and adventures along the way
* The Journey of Natty Gann is bound and determined to find her father, and nothing is going to keep her from doing it, no matter how many people tell her that he abandoned her. She hops trains and hitchhikes from Chicago to Seattle, with little idea of exactly where her father is beyond "somewhere in Washington".
* The Journey of Natty Gann Natty and Harry have a touching farewell at the bus station, including a kiss, when Harry leaves for California to work while Natty stays in Washington to look for her father. The movie leaves it open-ended as to whether or not they're likely to see each other again, although Natty is shown writing a letter to Harry before the ending.
* The Journey of Natty Gann reliably warns Natty of all kinds of impending trouble.
* The Journey of Natty Gann: The logging foreman Sol works under gives him time off work to look for Natty, and while he allows him to take dangerous work after she's presumed dead, he tells Sol that "it won't bring her back."

* The Journey of Natty Gann to follow the call of another wolf back into the wild.
* The Journey of Natty Gann, when Natty and Harry reach Seattle after days of hopping trains and hiking cross-country and Natty gets the chance to actually wash her face and comb her hair. Harry is visibly startled the first time he gets a good look at her after she's cleaned up.
* The Journey of the Catechist. And the kingdom and empire are both morally grey.
* The Journey Through Death: A dead character must travel through an intermediary place to reach whatever awaits after death.
* The journey through time in the second is arranged so that each day the trio go to is on June 19th. Also during the Victorian Time sequence, you can see a wanted poster for Yellow Puppet, with the reward being $1,906.
* The Journey with tiny aliens thrown into the mix too, and the Yeerks barely appearing at all.
* The Jove used to be human, but have biologically modified their bodies to such an extent that they can't really be considered human anymore.
* "The Joy" deals with a virus outbreak that Richard accidentally caused. Miss Simian is
* The Joye of Snacks, which was prohibited, not on moral grounds, but because it was found to trespass on the purview of the Guild of Seamstresses. Also, because the publisher's wife couldn't stop laughing about it.
* "The Joy" had Gumball and Darwin get so overly happy from a hug Richard gave that it turns into an all-out infection that turns the victim into an overly happy, grinning being that literally vomits rainbows. They end up infecting the school in a zombie-like fashion and Miss Simian, noting something off with Gumball and Darwin from the get-go, tries to find a cure.
* The Joy Luck Club by Amy Tan. It only covers the first two generations of four sets of mothers and daughters, but they all follow the pattern.
* The Joy Luck Club is perhaps the most famous example of Asian American literature in existence. It was made into a critically acclaimed film.
* The Joy Luck Club of his wife's spinelessness when she catches her husband in flagrante delicto with a white woman.
* The Joy Luck Club: Ted's and Rose's marriage is built more on rebelling against their parents and cultural norms, and Rose grows to realize that Ted relies on her passive and submissive nature to blame her for his emotional insecurities.
* The Joy Luck Club that she deliberately set out to be this trope instead.
* The joy of being a DM is that you have your own story-breaker power in the form of being able to change things before they resolve; it's fairly easy to roleplay a boss that's far better at
* The Joy Of Cooking omits all recipes that contain animal brains, and states that this is due to concerns over mad cow disease (see above). The same prion causes scrapie in sheep, chronic wasting disease in deer, and Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease in humans.
* "The Joy of Cooking" tags favorite recipes as "Cockaigne" — but has to explain the meaning to modern readers.
* The Joy of Creation: Reborn The scene then shows the clock speeding towards 6AM before glitching back to 12AM, over and over and over again...
* "The Joy of Eating". It's a rather odd choice, especially when one considers the song's original context in the show.
* The Joy of Painting by Ross, who said, "We want happy paintings. Happy paintings. If you want sad things, watch the news."
* The Joy of Painting is available for free on the official Bob Ross YouTube channel.
* The Joy of Painting to charity fundraisers. When he lost his battle with lymphoma, all of his remaining unsold paintings were treated likewise.
* The Joy of Painting was a carry-over from his early days when he permed his hair to save money on haircuts. He reportedly didn't much care for the look, but by the time he was starting to see some success in his art career, the 'fro had become a staple of his brand, so he kept it.
* The Joy of Painting would often times show the audience wounded or orphaned animals that he and a local lady would take care of until they were old enough or healed enough to be released back into the wild. Bob would also often tell stories on the show about all the animals he had living in and around his house in Florida. He said he would release the animals into the wild, but they would often times stick around anyway and partake in the food he kept leaving out for them.

* The Joy of Sect" between him and a recruiter for the Movementarian cult:
* The Joy Of Sex as to how a French woman dealt with an exhibitionist: "Monsieur, won't you catch cold?"
* The Joy of Snackes: carrots so you can see in the dark, oysters so you have something to look at) are only alluded to. But when Granny reads it, in increasing disbelief and shock, there does come a moment (Humorous Cake Decorations; Nanny illustrated that bit) when she has to turn it sideways.
* The Joys and Sorrows of Young Charles Finster tomboy to contrast Chas' nerd persona.
* The Joys of Love (2008) follows four days in the life of Elizabeth Jerrold in the 1940s and has no known links to L'Engle's other works.
* The Joys of Torturing Mooks — For when the cruelty is directed towards your enemies. In other words, a twisted form of self-defense.
* The Joys of Torturing Mooks: When players of a video game find joy in torturing and killing their always-spawning, nameless enemies.
* The JSA has a bit of a habit of this. Jade and Obsidian pulled this one on Green Lantern (Alan Scott) when they were first introduced back in
* The JSDF is helpless to contain the spread of the zombie outbreak in
* The Jubilee Line was originally going to be known as the Fleet Line until it was decided to give it its current name to denote Queen Elizabeth II's silver jubilee.
* The Judas Contract captures Gar 'Changeling' Logan by drugging the gum in the envelopes Gar is using to respond to his fan mail.
* The Judas Contract gets in-universe hebephilia with a canonical sexual relationship between Slade and Terra. Slade, a middle-aged man, and Terra, a 16-year-old.
* The Judas Contract Her goal the entire time was to take down the Titans because she hated how goody-goody they were.
* The Judas Contract. Nowadays, her betrayal has been a recurring past plot for the Titans, and any betrayal (real or supposed) is compared with Terra's. Even more, there was a clone of Terra some years later, always living under the shadow of the actions of the original one. It is unlikely that a modern reader would read the story without knowing in advance what was going to happen.
* The Judas Contract provides an exaggerated example. Exaggerated. Deathstroke watches the Titans though the camera in Terra's lens, and in turn, he's being watched by Adeline.
* The Judas Contract... which can only be used by people with inherent psychic abilities.
* The Judas Tree by Cronin. Somewhat subverted, though; the man is the one who ditched the first girl in order to marry a rich woman. Years later, he comes back and falls for his first love's daughter. It doesn't end well.
* The Judds - "Love Can Build a Bridge", as in the page quote. In this case the next line ("I would swim out to save you in your sea of broken dreams") makes it clear that it's metaphorical.
* The "Judean People's Front's Crack Suicide Squad" committed mass suicide by killing themselves with swords. Famous last line: "That will show em!"
* The Judge actually lampshades Edgeworth teaming up with Gumshoe, saying that he could team up with a bailiff to fight crime.
* The Judge apparently doesn't age and can't be killed. He can be cut, but since he can kill people just by being near him the first time he walked the Earth it took an entire army to cut off his limbs and head — and they remained mobile afterwards, and reattached themselves instantly when placed back together. Buffy used a bazooka to break him into a lot more pieces (and then advised her friends to keep the pieces apart).
* The Judge, as the .410 shotshell it uses is horrible at even medium range (though an increasing number of specialized self-defense .410 shells are being introduced to fix that flaw), and it's also very inaccurate with .45 Colt rounds. Not to mention it's freakin' expensive.

* The Judge boasted that no weapon forged could stop him. The last time he got taken out, an army had to be brought to bear and most of them died. However, Xander figured out that the term was descriptive, not prescriptive, and that weapons technology had come a long way since then. The Judge gets one-shotted into a million pieces by a rocket launcher, effectively putting him down (sure the pieces were twitching, but they ain't doing much else).
* The Judge does this many times too. Many a tense moment is spoiled by him misunderstanding words or saying something stupid. For example when Edgeworth is saying about how
* The Judge: Hank's older brother Glen used to play baseball before a car crash ended his career.
* The Judge, instead telling them to get out of his courtroom and warning that if he ever saw them again in his courtroom, they would go to jail.
* The judge in Texas who sentenced a woman to spend the first few days of her animal cruelty prison sentence on a bread and water diet as a reminder of how she'd starved the horses. (after the initial round of news articles, it also showed up on Animal Planet's
* The judge in the music video for Sammy Hagar's "I Can't Drive 55" is implied to be one of these. He has a model gallows and guillotine on his bench, and his name placard actually reads "Julius Hangman."
* The Judge is senile and easily swayed. He once accepted a thug with a cardboard badge as a genuine lawyer. The characters frequently comment on it, but no-one says anything to his face. This one has much to do with the Japanese history of court corruption. Put simply, judges are viewed in Japan the same way lawyers are viewed in the West. On the other hand, the Judge is also famed for almost always handing down the right verdict, though this may have more to do with Phoenix's skill as a defense lawyer than anything about the Judge himself.
* The Judge, Joseph's cancer medication causes diarrhea and memory loss, so he ends up soiling himself in one scene.
* The Judge mentions that it was brave of Wesley Stickler to shout out at the killer whom he saw pointing a gun at the victim, because killers normally don't want to leave witnesses behind. Stickler himself obviously didn't consider this when trying to stop the murder and gets rather distraught over this fact.
* The Judge of Egypt trilogy, this kind of iron is mentioned as being used in temples for several holy artifacts, as well as regarded as a potential component in magic.
* The judge once had to deal with the fallout of a high-ranking official committing suicide after being spurned by a courtesan, who was found dead soon after.
* The Judge: One episode focused on a mental fitness hearing for a young man claiming that he was insane when he killed his parents. However, a mental health expert immediately sees inconsistencies in his behavior and is able to expose him as a very clever actor who killed for a large inheritance. Eventually, the man is exposed and he comes out, admitting his crime. Judge Shield is very angry and orders the man held over for trial, and the assets he would have inherited given to his elderly uncle.
* the Judge's business card, but examining it reveals that Phoenix can't read the fancy calligraphy it's written in, thus, not revealing the Judge's name.
* The Judge seems to develop, over time, an odd friendship with much of the main cast (especially Phoenix, as seen in
* The Judges Guild adventure "Verbosh" had a new spell called "Plague" which causes 20-70% of the population in a 1 mile square area to be incapacitated for 1-4 weeks as well as killing many of them.
* the judges rule that the person bringing the case doesn't have standing to sue or that there was some sort of error in the procedure of the court or administrative agency below. This is especially true when the judges know that their decision would be hugely controversial (or alternatively, that they don't want to make the correct ruling because they like the status quo, even if it's wrong), but is especially common when, after reviewing the case and hearing oral arguments, the judges realize that they can't come to a majority decision on the merits, but that some technical ground exists that can avoid the embarrassment of a fractured or plurality decision.

* The Judges (the law makers and arbiters of justice) wear red trimmed with black.
* The Judge Takes Control: jury could have reached, may issue a "directed verdict" that vacates and contradicts the jury's decision. It's less dramatic than the jury's verdict, but allows for some interesting things. But again, it's more complicated than that in real life:
* The judge who acquitted Halleck and the police chief who soft-pedaled the charges against him and kicked the gypsies out of the town are also cursed. The former has scales grow on his skin, the latter gets a horrifyingly extreme case of acne. They both commit suicide.
* The Judge, who is famously reliable in passing fair judgments in spite of being a
* The judge who passes sentence over the eponymous trio in the sixth episode of
* The Judge who's mostly concerned with lining his own pockets and giving the townspeople a good show: No-one gets worse than fines and confiscation of property because there would be no point in killing his own customers.
* The Judoon are examples of this trope. In their first appearance, their commanding officer barks orders in their language, records an utterance from one of the medical staff using a device, and plugs it into his armor; he then spends the episode speaking in fluent "Earth English".
* The Judoon are mercenary police, though the Doctor derides them as "intergalactic thugs".
* The Judoon, the anthropomorphic rhino goons for the Shadow Proclamation, speak in staccato strings of syllables that rhyme with "go".
* The "jug band" of American folk music is built around this concept, using instruments made from common rural household items such as jugs, washboards, wash tubs, kazoos (comb and tissue paper), saws, and spoons. Before using spoons, the Irish played animal bones in the same manner.
* The Juggernaut. (A similarity between the two not lost on the Interwebz).
* The Juggernaut destroys the Twin Towers in the "Sabotage" storyline; oddly enough, they return within only a few issues, and the story
* The Juggernaut doesn't have much skill but he's literally unstoppable.
* The Juggernaut has the sole weakness of being vulnerable to telepathy (otherwise he's completely invincible). To negate this, he typically wears an enormous helmet to block telepathic attacks. When he got sick of that being knocked off constantly, he started wearing a smaller, more compact skullcap that was harder to remove.
* The Juggernaut is defined by this role for his partner in crime Black Tom.
* The Juggernaut is fond of this means of travel. What good are doors for a person larger than the door frame?
* The Juggernaut Spider-Man's attempts to halt him) by covering his eyes and steering him into a newly-laid foundation of wet cement.
* The Juice is Loose being nearly 4 minutes long. This episode has so far been rated the lowest in the entire series.
* The jukebox, playing Queen while Shaun and the other survivors started hitting a zombie. One survivor tries to shut it off to keep from attracting zombies, but he can't.
* The Jukes, a family of thieves and con artists, attempts to take the T&T Circus for everything they can in the
* The Julandri are the slave caste, bred for specific purposes. The main sub-castes are the labour slaves, the service slaves, a very diverse class, and the courtesans.
* The Julekalender is Fritz making Hansi do all the hard labor, much to the latter's dismay. In episode 22, Hansi finally snaps and sings a rock number, terrifying Fritz into silence.

* The July 10,1980 strip has Odie crash into a pedestal and knock over a flowerpot. Jon assumes Garfield is to blame for the destruction when Garfield was only sitting their minding his own business.
* the July 19. 2009 comicJon empties the whole catsup into his Binky Burger and still thinks he needs more.
* The July 7th bomb attacks on the London Underground (and one bus) provided an especially evocative example: Matrix signs over the motorways heading into the city simply stated, "PULL OVER. TURN ON RADIO".
* The Jump where the contestants are falling out of the sky... and a family on vacation, completely unaware of what's happening, are scared shitless as bodies fall from the sky!
* the June 18, 2006 strip, Garfield thinks the birthday cake some mice present him with is real, downs it in one gulp, and spits out the mouse who was in the cake. The other mice are, to put it mildly, embarrassed, as they look at their unconscious and missing-a-shoe friend.
* The June 2019 re-release of the film adds a deleted scene after the credits — the original introduction of "Professor" Hulk, who would be seen saving a group of residents from a burning building before Steve calls him. The scene also has incomplete CGI, and was cut for reasons of pacing.
* The June 24, 2000 strip implies this after Jon states that he had Liz take Garfield's temperature today.
* The Jungle as to cause the passing of the Pure Food and Drug Act. As Sinclair himself put it: "I aimed at the public's heart, and by accident, I hit it in the stomach."
* The Jungle Book (1967), after the second time Kaa lands on the ground, as he slithers away, he groans something like, "Ooooo, my sacroiliac!"
* The Jungle Book (1967) as a villain rather than just a hungry predator is his gleeful tendency to play with his food. He would have surely eaten Mowgli if he hadn't extended the whole thing to a musical number.
* The Jungle Book (1967)." Bagheera retorts, "Then do what's best for Mowgli and not yourself!" This finally convinces Baloo to do it.
* The Jungle Book (1967): Colonel Hathi mentions having received the Victoria Cross while serving in "the Maharajah's Fifth Pachyderm Brigade" (how it could be given to an elephant is anyone's guess).
* The Jungle Book (1967) has a different personality but looks almost exactly like Baloo (save for being orange rather than gray).
* The Jungle Book (1967) has no personality outside of seemingly being mysterious and flirty. Considering Mowgli leaves his whole family behind for her, it's a real letdown we don't know much else about her, though the sequel does show her family and gives Shanti a crippling fear of going into the jungle.
* The Jungle Book (1967) has returned to his..and their...hunting grounds. Closer to the climax, Baloo also agrees with Bagheera that it's too dangerous for Mowgli to remain with him in the jungle. Of course, Mowgli sees this as a betrayal and runs off instead, which nearly gets him eaten/killed by first Kaa, and later by Shere Khan himself.
* The Jungle Book (1967), he goes to the village and is rejected there, too. It ends on a fairly depressing note, with Mowgli lamenting that there's nowhere he belongs. The sequel, however, does show Mowgli having trouble adjusting to village life.
* The Jungle Book (1967) in order to rescue him from King Louie and the other monkeys. Curiously enough, the animation for this scene was actually taken from the above film.
* The Jungle Book (1967). In the film proper, George Sanders refused/was not available, depending on who you listen to. So Shere Khan's only sung line in "That's What Friends Are For", despite displaying a fine baritone singing voice elsewhere, was instead done by Ravencroft's fellow singer in The Mellomen barbershop quartet Bill Lee.
* The Jungle Book (1967). It's sung by the Elephant Patrol whenever they make their entrance about twice in the film (The first time is when Mowgli and Bagheera accidentally run into them while attempting to get the former back to the "Man-village", and the second is when Bagheera asks them to help him and Baloo find Mowgli before Shere Khan does).

* The Jungle Book (1967), Mowgli finds out from the Vultures that fire is the one thing Khan fears, and while the Vultures distract Khan, Mowgli ties a burning branch to Khan's tail.
* The Jungle Book (1967) of casting a black man as an ape and chose Prima (who was Italian-American) instead, who coincidentally also fit this trope.
* The Jungle Book (1967). Punch! Punch! Punch! Uh Oh... becomes a Punch! Punch! Punch! Hi There... as Baloo takes it upon himself to teach Mowgli how to throw a decent punch.
* The Jungle Book (1967), Shere Khan the tiger does not physically appear until two-thirds through it. Before that, he is all built up so you know how formidable he is. It is not Shere Khan himself but his reputation as a ferocious man-eater that compels the wolves to send Mowgli to the man-village.
* The Jungle Book (1967). Similarly, Kaa is often defeated by having his tail being tied to a tree trunk.
* The Jungle Book (1967)'s novel Baloo is a serious character and Kaa is a friend of Mowgli.
* The Jungle Book (1967), sung by an orangutan who wants to become human by acquiring the secret of "man's red fire."
* The Jungle Book (1967) takes it further, with Mowgli as the only human character (both in story and on screen), while other humans are only seen as shadows.
* The Jungle Book (1967) to Louis Prima's song, "The Bigger The Figure")
* The Jungle Book (1967) to turn around, and Hathi Jr. has to explain it to him as they're marching along face-to-face, with Mowgli going backwards:
* The Jungle Book (1967) unwittingly saves Mowgli's life. Kaa has Mowgli hypnotized, fast asleep and in his clutches, when Shere Khan drops by and asks Kaa for information on Mowgli. The distraction is long enough for Mowgli to wake up and escape.
* The Jungle Book (1967) when Baloo teaches Mowgli how to fight. Mowgli lands a small punch on his snout and he fakes being knocked out by spinning around and stumbling a little before dropping.
* The Jungle Book (1967), where he gives the "little britches" nickname to Kit, while calling Rebecca "Becky".
* The Jungle Book (1967), where some elephant scenes are taken, including the elephants stopping and piling up.
* The Jungle Book (1967), which, as an afterthought, the creator Bill Willingham described as, "a very good example on why it's best to go back to the source material before one embarks on a major story, rather than rely on often faulty memory of which characters were original canon and which weren't."
* The Jungle Book (1967), while Khan turns out to be a shameful coward.
* The Jungle Book (1967)" with Shere Khan without a single drop of blood shed or mark left.
* The Jungle Book (2016): Baloo. While he keeps the animated version's laid-back personality in this film, he also gets a selfish, cunning side, such as tricking Mowgli into getting honey for him, unlike his animated counterpart who never takes advantage of Mowgli.
* The Jungle Book (2016). Both appear to know each other from some earlier time but their personalities clash. Baloo is easy-going and charming while Bagheera is rule-abiding and reserved. Initially Bagheera disliked the bear, but he gradually warms up to Baloo when he sees that Baloo's affection for Mowgli is genuine.
* The Jungle Book (2016): "I'm Mowgli of the Seeonee, and this is my home!"
* The Jungle Book (2016) in the movie is when Mowgli hugs him after they had been separated.
* The Jungle Book (2016) is convinced by Bagheera to persuade Mowgli to go back to the man-village or else Shere Khan will kill him. So he walks up to Mowgli and tells him to take a hike, saying that he only used him to get honey and he doesn't need him anymore. When Mowgli leaves in a rage, Baloo looks very guilty about what he had to do.

* The Jungle Book (2016) of her character's identity all the more shocking.
* The Jungle Book (2016), the largest known primate that ever existed.
* The Jungle Book (2016), which basically amounts to being a giant orangutan.
* The Jungle Book 2, Mowgli's foster father punishes him this way when he nearly leads the children out of the village and into the jungle. Shanti tries to sneak him some fruit the same night.
* The Jungle Book 2 omits the scene where Kaa attempts to eat Shanti, thus removing Kaa from the story.
* The Jungle Book 2, who is depicted here with a ponytail, a yellow choli, and a purple skirt (in the first film, she wore pigtails and a strapless purple dress with a pink sash at the waist).
* The Jungle Book. According to animator Floyd Norman, the reuse of animation had nothing to do with budget constraints and "doing things cheaper" - the reuse of footage was simply one of Reitherman's directorial trademarks.
* The Jungle Book adaptation, as it focuses mostly on Mowgli's interactions with human characters (including British colonists in Africa), and his various animal friends don't talk
* The Jungle Book, after Mother Wolf and Father Wolf died of old age, Mowgli kept their bodies in their den and rolled a boulder over the entrance so that their death sleep would not be disturbed.
* The Jungle Book: A humorous example occurs when King Louie holds Mowgli's mouth open to feed him a banana.
* The Jungle Book and the most innocent action can put you in mortal danger. As it is, the human family in the story is lucky to have adopted a plucky young mongoose to take on those threats.
* The Jungle Book are this. We're told that nothing they ever do lasts more than five minutes because they're distracted by something else, and would likely have forgotten Mowgli in the snakepit after kidnapping him.
* The Jungle Book, a silly, cowardly snake with a lisp, whose attempts to eat Mowgli always fail.
* The Jungle Book a sloth bear, and the text is only referring to his color.
* The Jungle Book as one, save for one elephant. He joins the line after a moment. Hati turns around, looks at everyone for a beat, then laughs and says, "Now that's what I like to see: devotion to duty!"
* The Jungle Book back-to-back (or close enough to recognize the similarities) were minuscule.
* The Jungle Book, Baloo is a goofy, fun-loving, lazy, and rather irresponsible character. And more of a fun uncle/older brother figure to Mowgli than the mentor/grandfatherly figure he was in the books.
* The Jungle Book blatantly does this to Mowgli at the end of the first movie (which she attempts to deny in the second). Lampshaded by Baloo and Bagheera.
* The Jungle Book down, but also plan to kill Messua, the human woman who adopted him, he calls the whole jungle down on the place. His animal allies make the village unlivable to the point that its inhabitants, robbed of their food stores and believing themselves cursed, are forced to abandon the place entirely, and in very little time the jungle has overgrown and swallowed the site completely.
* The Jungle Book end up volunteered. (One was slow on the uptake and almost got uniquely "volunteered", but catches on and gets in line in time)
* The Jungle Book features a variation of this: Whenever Kaa gets his tail caught in some bamboo, when he frees it his tail flies back at him, causing himself to recoil instantly (he is a snake), making an accordion noise as he does so.
* The Jungle Book has Mowgli in a room filled with stuffed animals, and he imagines hearing them screaming, with each scream punctuated by a gunshot.
* The Jungle Book has this happen to a villain. He even explicitly states "It's sucking me down!" while struggling.
* The Jungle Book. He becomes even more of an Adaptational Wimp in the sequel, in which he is beaten with a stick by Mowgli's little stepbrother.
* The Jungle Book he doesn't understand why men would kill for something they can't eat.

* The Jungle Book. He just tries to stomp on the flames (which does nothing) before dashing away.
* The Jungle Book). He's a charismatic, power-craving, would-be-tyrant who lives in an isolated region in a jungle setting, is introduced in shadow, and commands a small army of loyal followers. To round the homage off, he even has a Marlon Brando-sounding voice, courtesy of Christopher Walken.
* The Jungle Book, his adoptive father Rama even referring to him as being "like a real son".
* The Jungle Book, if Mowgli falls from a great enough height, his loincloth will fold into a parachute, slowing him down but exposing his buttocks.
* The Jungle Book II in the deleted song, "I've got you beat". When Mowgli tries to explain to Shanti how a beat works when singing and dancing, he briefly tickles Ranjan to demonstrate.
* The Jungle Book. In "The Tooth Of The Matter", Mowgli asks Jacala to open his mouth so he can remove a sore tooth. Cue Mowgli groaning and plugging his nose after getting blasted in the face with the crocodile's breath.
* The Jungle Book is dedicated to Garry Shandling (who voiced Ikki the porcupine) and stuntman Shawn Robinson.
* The Jungle Book is hunting Mowgli, Baloo tries to make Mowgli go to the man village by telling him that they were never friends, that he was just using him to get extra food for the winter. Mowgli storms off as a result, and Baloo tells Bagheera that this was the hardest thing he had ever done.
* The Jungle Book, is the only human interacting with a cast of animals. In other stories, other humans (most notably the kindly woman Messua and the villainous hunter Buldeo) are also prominent characters.
* The Jungle Book, King Louie's species was changed from orangutan to Gigantopithecus, a pre-historic species of primate that was native to India. He is the last of his kind, hence why he is contemporary with the human Mogli.
* The Jungle Book leave the jungle. Or do anything else, for that matter.
* The Jungle Book. Mo's adopted parents are members of a crime gang called the Wolves, Tiger Khan is a powerful politician, and so on.
* The Jungle Book: Most jungle creatures don't think ahead, except those like Akela who need to. They also don't talk, except when they feel like it. In comparison, humans are seen as complicated, chatty monkeys. It scares Bagheera witless when Mowgli, in "Letting in the Jungle", asks Hathi to help him to wipe out the village (just the town itself, not kill the people), kind of like how most people would get if they were told to wipe out a city, and Bagheera knows more than most what humans are like.
* The Jungle Book, Mowgli and his love interest flee a treasure-filled chamber in some ruins while the antagonist, who is also Mowgli's romantic rival, shouts to her "Go then! Go with your jungle boy! I got what I came for! I don't need you." Kaa the snake then emerges from the treasure and startles him, and he falls into the water, weighed down by the treasure he has in his pockets and bag. His terrified screams go unheard as he views the drowned corpses of all the greedy treasure hunters who came here before him.
* The Jungle Book: Mowgli falls into a treasure hoard guarded by an ancient albino cobra. However, the cobra is so old it has no venom left.
* The Jungle Book: Mowgli is initially angry at King Louie after being kidnapped by his monkey minions. When King Louie sings "I Wanna Be Like You", Mowgli starts enjoying the song and eventually is seen dancing with the monkeys. Baloo has a similar reaction when he and Bagheera want to rescue Mowgli from King Louie:
* The Jungle Book, Mowgli — and by extension his teacher Baloo — know all the languages of all the creatures of the jungle. Baloo knows them because he's old, wise, and accepted everywhere, and he teaches Mowgli them because being a "mancub" means that nobody will accept his presence at all unless he learns their language. Mowgli eventually one-ups Baloo by adding the Indian human tongue to his list.
* The Jungle Book: Mowgli's Story gender-bends Bagheera - and Bagheera alone - so that s/he's a female for the duration of a movie. This is probably so that Mowgli can have a mother-figure without adding in Mother Wolf, the she-wolf from the book, but it can be a little odd for a kid only familiar with the Disney version.

* The Jungle Book Not to mention that having a white man play a character who is, for all intents and purposes, a stereotype of black people is problematic on its own in other ways.
* The Jungle Book of the movie, and composer Richard Sherman, who somehow has a piano with him to play how the early versions of the songs went. Archival footage also allows deceased people from production to talk a bit.
* The Jungle Book only listed the main characters and some of the supporting characters, other actors like Digby Wolfe (Ziggy), Hal Smith (Slob Elephant), Ralph Wright (Gloomy Elephant), Leo De Lyon (Flunkey), Bill Skiles and Pete Henderson (the Monkeys) went uncredited.
* The Jungle Book" rather than "based on" Kipling's works. Helps the first script tried to be a faithful adaptation, and Disney promptly rejected it for being too dark for family viewing.
* The Jungle Book references the direct gaze that when an animal views it, it signals a threat, and it comes into play during the wolf-pack meeting at the beginning when Mowgli is allowed into the pack. His ingenuous, even gaze is unsettling to the animals gathered when he looks at them, meeting their gaze for only a few seconds, as most look away quickly except for ones like Bagheera, who knows something of the ways of men.
* The Jungle Book: Rikki Tikki Tavi the mongoose has a close call when a friend tells him to look out behind him. Rikki knows better than to waste time looking and just moves and thus barely avoid being struck by the cobra, Nagina.
* The Jungle Book: Shere Khan and Kaa obviously hated each other as they are in pursuit of the man-cub Mowgli (as Kaa wants to eat Mowgli because Mowgli is delicious while Khan wants to kill Mowgli due to his hatred for mankind). However, Kaa is too scared to voice his hatred towards Shere Khan because of the latter's strength and ruthlessness.
* The Jungle Book specifically told his staff not to read the original stories, instead advising them to have fun with the characters they were given to work with.
* The Jungle Book story "Rikki-Tikki-Tavi", Rikki persuades Darzee's wife, the female tailor bird, to hop around pretending to have a broken wing. While Nagaina the Cobra chases her, Rikki raids her nest and destroys her eggs. Once she has bought enough time, Darzee's wife simply flies away.
* The Jungle Book story "Toomai of the Elephants", the title character is told by Petersen Sahib that he may one day go into all elephant stockades "when thou hast seen the elephants dance" — although there is evidence that such events occur, no human has yet witnessed it, thus the statement equates to "never". Sure enough, though, by the end of the story, Little Toomai has seen the dance of the elephants.
* The Jungle Book. The elephant Colonel Hathi is based on the elephant Goliath I.
* The Jungle Book. The oldest creature in the jungle, Kaa offers sage advice to those who seek it, and painful, suffocating death to those who cross him. Or happen to be near him when he is hungry. He doesn't discriminate that much.
* The Jungle Book, there are seesaws that have boulders on one end. Mowgli can jump onto the other end to launch the boulder into the air, and when it comes back down, it will launch Mowgli into the air.
* The Jungle Book, the vultures perform one while they're performing "That's What Friends Are For".
* The Jungle Book this is seen as the cure for the Elephant's Child's 'insatiable curiosity'. Different era and all that (and also, they're animals).
* The Jungle Book was given his name by the wolf pack. "Mowgli" is apparently Wolf for "frog", because he's hairless and won't sit still.
* The Jungle Book, when Baloo and Bagheera are trying to rescue Mowgli from King Louie and the apes, Baloo actually tells himself, "I'm gonna tear him limb to limb..."
* The Jungle Book: When Baloo and Bagheera want to save Mowgli from the sinister

Bandar Log monkeys they enlist the help of one of the most feared predators in the jungle, Kaa the python. He is still terrifying from the perspective of his enemies, especially the Bandar Log who panick and become his prey in no time.
* The Jungle Book, while Bagheera is beside a door in King Louie's ruins and trying to grab Mowgli so they can escape, Baloo slams the door open and smashes Bagheera into a wall, giving him a black eye.
* The Jungle Book, who brings up the end of the column of marching elephants.
* The Jungle Bunch, Al and Bob had a couple of episodes to themselves.
* The Jungle Bunch begins with the team responding to the emergency signal by descending into their base by an elaborate personal tunnel system. Every member has their own individual entrance to the base.
* The Jungle Bunch: In "Princess Groundhog", whenever the story is being told, the animation shifts from the typical 3D model style of the show to a 2D one.
* The Jungle Bunch is capable of building massive machines. Though these machines tend to become a danger to the jungle that The Jungle Bunch have to deal with.
* The Jungle by Upton Sinclair is best remembered for its exposure of the unsanitary practices of the meat-packing industry. It is often used as an example of the muckraking genre. However, Sinclair intended the book to be an indictment of capitalism and a paean to socialism.
* The Jungle Cat EVO also defects with the protagonists, and is reported to have been investigating the Consortium on WK's orders, and abducting a former member.
* The Jungle have joke scenes where dogs go into a factory and come out the other end as a chain of sausages.
* The Jungleis Neutral how he used English bird calls in the Malaysian jungle in WW2, as to Japanese soldiers it was just another strange jungle noise.
* The Jungle Line: As fighting his hallucinations, Superman punches Swamp Thing several dozens of meters away.
* The Jungle Line, Clark Kent -birth name, Kal-El- buys a secondhand car under the name of Cal Ellis.
* The Jungle Line, Clark Kent considers flying back to his apartment despite his malfunctioning powers. Then he imagines himself free-falling from several hundreds of meters and decides to take the subway instead.
* The Jungle Line, Clark Kent's clothes catch fire when his car crashes out of the road and starts burning. While stumbling out of the wrecked vehicle, Superman looks like a veritable human torch.
* The Jungle Line, Clark Kent's super-senses malfunctioning cause him to walk in on one couple making out in a storeroom.
* The Jungle Line: During the early stages of Bloodmorel Fever, Superman's powers go away and return at irregular intervals. Superman gets so worried about his powers vanishing abruptly that he decides against trying to fly back to his home.
* The Jungle Line jolts up in his bed after having a nightmare, his bedsheet slides downwards, lying bare his muscular torso.
* The Jungle Line reveals that one of the creatures which inhabited Krypton's Scarlet Jungle was an anaconda-sized, ant-headed green caterpillar.
* The Jungle Line specifically deals with this, when a meteor carrying a trace of surviving fungus is found by astronauts, and Superman discovers that said fungus is an infectious spore known as the "Red Death", which ends up infecting him, as both he and the original spore is from Krypton. The infection gives Superman, among other things, a deadly high fever, and causes him to hallucinate the dead biosphere of Krypton, haunting him for having survived while everything else died. Thankfully, Swamp Thing finds him, and helps him break through the fever and sickness, waking up on the other side with no memory of the encounter.
* The Jungle Line, Superman gets infected with a deadly disease caused by a fungus known as the Bloodmorel, but said fungus does not intend to kill him. It is only a mindless organism trying to survive by spreading its spores in the only way it knows.
* The Jungle Line, Superman uses a broken mirror glass and his heat vision to shave his stubble after waking from a fever-induced coma.
* The Jungle Line: Swamp Thing finds Superman infected with a Kryptonian species of fungus known as Bloodmorel. Wanting to help Superman, Swamp Thing tries to communicate with the Bloodmorel, but the memories and sensations are too strong, and he is forced to pull back because the vision of a high-gravity red world is overwhelming his mind.

* The Jungle Opera: A story that takes place in undiscovered or semidiscovered country in the present or "recent" past.
* The Jungle Show, during Elvis Elephant's episode, four glasses can be seen with faces on them. They clean themselves up and line up on the counter behind the counter. They even tear up during the part of the song about hunters killing elephants for their ivory tusks.
* The Jungle Show has Jessica Cat, who's a tall, thin, slender woman in a red dress with a cat's head.
* The jungles of Central America were in some accounts home of the man-eating yateveo tree (from the Spanish "ya te veo", "I see you"), consisting of a short trunk topped with a tangle of writhing, snakelike tendrils in constant motion, which would dart out to ensnare and devour passing humans.
* The jungles of Lustria are everything nasty about the Amazon heavily exaggerated and with more man-eating dinosaurs and carnivorous plants, with the added benefit of
* The Jungle, Stanislovas is eaten by rats after being locked in the lard factory he works in at night.
* The jungle swordfight between Mutt and the bad girl. Realistic? Not in the least. Supremely friggin' awesome? Hell yes.
* The Jungle, which indirectly led to all the tragedy of the rest of the book. Even a modicum of thought would have told him that beating the guy up was a bad idea which would only end with horrible consequences.
* The Jungle" which led to the passage of the Pure Food and Drug Act in 1906. Sinclair put it best when he said "I aimed at the public's heart and by accident I hit it in the stomach."

* The Junji Ito Collection goes into this a little too much, and suffers due to the small budget. Some of it is that it recreates some stuff shot for shot, but doesn't take advantage of the medium and has either cheap or no animation at all, all while losing detail as if it were animated. Some of it is animated, but it suffers from missing smaller details Ito put into the original work to make it scarier, or just does a poor job making it work.

* The Junkers Ju 86 slow medium bomber had been phased out by the Luftwaffe before the war even began, but it then was possible to use it in a reconnaissance role by adding a pressure cabin. These planes then operated at heights that could not be reached by anti-aircraft guns and British fighters. The RAF in North Africa eventually tackled the problem by adapting some Spitfires for high-altitude work, among other things by reducing the armament from eight machine-guns to two, and taking the fight directly to the Junkers pilots.
* The Junkions apparently learned English from watching Earth TV broadcasts. Which explains lines like "Steady as she goes, Bob! Snoopy visitors get mud in the eye, by and by!
* The Junkman is a villainous example; he pulls off a bank heist so perfect that no one has any idea who did it, and then retires, secure in the knowledge that he outsmarted everyone. His joy is short-lived when everyone assumes that the robber must have been caught anyway, simply because the heroes always win. * The Ka'abah, the holiest site of Muslim pilgrimage, contains what is called Al-Hajar Al-Aswad (lit. "Black Stone"); most experts agree that it is probably a meteorite. Interestingly enough, the Ka'abah and the stone predate the founding of Islam by quite a bit and were both previously revered by Arabic tribal/animistic cultures. In Islam, the stone is said to have fallen to mark the first temple built on Earth for Adam, by God. Said to be lost during the Great Flood of Noah, it was rediscovered by Abraham and put into place there, as Abraham was the one who originally built the Ka'abah (along with Ishmael). The stone has great significance, and one popular narrative tells how, after the rebuilding of the Ka'abah, the Quraish tribes of Mecca disputed about whose tribe was the most suited to carry the Stone. To settle this, they decided that whomever entered the meeting room next should decide it. The person who entered was Muhammad ibn Abdullah, later Prophet of Islam. He decided that all the tribal leaders would hold a cloth so that they could collectively move the Black Stone together to its original place. It worked, and crisis was averted.

* The Kallikak Family: A Study in the Heredity of Feeble-Mindedness was considered one of the key documents of the eugenics movement. Goddard worked with a mentally-challenged woman whom he gave the pseudonym Deborah Kallikak. Looking at her family history, he discovered that a Revolutionary War veteran (Martin Kallikak) had two families of descendants: his legitimate family, who were upper class, and the descendants of a son (Martin Kallikak Jr.) he fathered in an extramarital fling, who were poor with alleged criminal tendencies and mental deficiencies. Well-received when it was released, the book was eventually discredited along with eugenics itself. Goddard renounced it later in life. Even so, modern studies of the Kallikak family show that, eugenics aside, the book was, in one writer's words, "fiction woven from the fabric of half-truths and hearsay." Goddard exaggerated the good and bad qualities of the two families, and much of the research was based on vague second- and third-hand accounts and faulty memories. One genealogist has even suggested that the very core of Goddard's thesis was based on an error: Martin Jr. wasn't Martin Sr.'s son at all, but a cousin who happened to have the same name. Furthermore, Deborah Kallikak (who spent 81 of her 89 years institutionalized) showed plenty of signs of intelligence and the extent of her "feeble-mindedness" was probably what would now be called a learning disability.

* The Kane Chronicles, Carter hears Set speak French in a vision, leading him to assume that Set is being hosted by the French-speaking Desjardins. He's wrong.
* The Kane Chronicles family friends. The goddess Bast was their house cat and the dwarf god Bes served as their chauffeur.
* The Kane Chronicles, features the titular Kane siblings encountering obstacles that are often dispatched
* The Kane Chronicles had part of his face, along with his lungs and eyes, burned when he tried and failed to awaken Ra.
* The Kane Chronicles has a variation on this in that most of the people that the gods possess tend to live variations of the tales of the gods; e.g. Julius Kane (possessed by Osiris) is kidnapped by Set while his children Carter and Sadie Kane are forced to escape (Horus and Isis respectively). Justified in that the gods don't have imagination and can only repeat stories, while humans can change these.
* The Kane Chronicles, however, plays this straight by mostly using the Hellenized spelling of the Egyptian gods instead of the actual (well, approximated, but it's the closest thing we got) Egyptian spellings. "Horus", "Isis", "Osiris, "Anubis", "Nephthys", and "Apophis", for example, would be called "Haru", "Iset, "Ausir", "Anupev", "Nebthet", and "Apep", respectively, in Egyptian. There are exceptions, though, such as "Set" and "Ptah", which are the same in both languages.

* The Kane Chronicles. Interestingly, the two stories are set in the same universe as shown by the crossover story, but the plots never intersect because each is subject to the other's Masquerade and the gods, while aware of it, try not to interfere with each other.
* The Kane Chronicles. It also makes the protagonists, as hosts of Horus and Isis, fugitives for most of the trilogy.
* The Kane Chronicles. Might be Percy doesn't immediately look white, so most readers are probably going to assume that he is, but he could as well be Asian.
* The Kane Chronicles offer this to the siblings Carter and Sadie again and again. Although these gods are not really evil, there would be no good consequences for them if they embarked on the trade.
* The Kane Chronicles: Riordan claims to have been presented with a series of audio recordings by Carter and Sadie Kane. These recordings often includes the sounds of them fighting over the microphone to present their version of a certain event, and Riordan includes them as part of the transcription.
* The Kane Chronicles takes place in the present day but with Egyptian gods.
* The Kane Chronicles takes the terminology of the Egyptian soul anatomy in the mythology section, but puts its own spin on things:
* The Kane Chronicles when Sadie attempts to cast a spell. She was so nervous that she almost said "I, insert your name here!"
* The Kane Chronicles, which take place in the same universe, adds Egyptian wizards to the mix, channeling their gods to repeat archetypal stories throughout history.
* The Kane Chronicles who spends quite a while yammering on about his barbecue despite the fact that there are far more pressing things like the fact that Set is free again.
* The Kangaskhan Kid This line didn't survive in the dub. It was changed to him asking whether they are Pokemon or people, but they left in the shot of him clearly staring at her chest and her hitting him in anger.
* The Kang War: Marcus, the son of Kang, who fell in love with Warbird, and Marcus, the son of Immortus, who abducted, drugged and raped her a long time ago. They are not the same Marcus, but have the same face, the same voice, the same manners... Justified (a bit), after all Kang and Immortus are actually the same time-traveling man at different points of maturity. Or, said more simple, both Marcus are brothers (but don't ever tell him that).
* The Kankers hang out in the basement instead of going to classes for the most part when they are at school. They even decorated it to their liking in graffiti and various other knickknacks. Naturally, the other kids try to steer clear of it, especially the Eds who the Kankers all have massive crushes on. And of course, Eddy has to ask, "What did they do with the janitor?"
* The Kanker Sisters are utterly head over heels for the Eds, as well as their worst tormentors. Somewhat unique in that their amorous feelings are completely known to their victims, and the bullying usually involves the girls
* The Kanker sisters, who are the terrible trio of girls who often abuse the titular Eds rather amorously. However, Lee is the best candidate among her sisters for this trope, as Marie obviously falls more on

* "The Karate Guard" is the usual episode where Jerry keeps summoning Spike as a bodyguard, but this time as a samurai. At one point, Tom, from outside, grabs Jerry (eating cheese) through a window. When Jerry rings his gong, Spike is summoned right behind Tom, as he pulls out his sword. It cuts back to Jerry's P.O.V. where we see Tom shocked, hear a wet plop, and Tom gently puts Jerry down and the cheese back in his hand, and closes the window before falling. Even Jerry looks unnerved.
* The Karate Kid (1984), a ballroom filled with refined, upper-crust partygoers all stop dancing and put down their canapes just to laugh at Daniel-San after he bumps into a waiter and gets bolognese sauce all over his outfit. They were probably mocking the poor waiter too, but it doesn't come across as strongly.
* The Karate Kid (1984): Adjusted for size and time active, the 442nd is the most decorated military unit in American history, and most of those medals, including 21 MOHs, were given for the European theatre.
* The Karate Kid (1984) and nothing has changed. He immediately discharges any student or prospect that loses a test challenge (Mitch for Kyler, Brucks for Hawk, and the unnamed female basketball prospect for Tory); in fact, everyone that disapproved of feeding a mouse to a snake (especially Bert!) was dealt with in this manner. This is in sharp contrast to Johnny, who simply reprimands them or puts them through rigorous exercises to get results.
* The Karate Kid (1984) by Mr. Miyagi who explains to Daniel-san the tradition of trying to catch a fly with chopsticks for good luck (if successful). Something—he notes—he himself hasn't even managed.
* The Karate Kid (1984) - Daniel sneaks into a country club's kitchen in hopes of meeting Ali. But when he notices her dancing with her former boyfriend he turns to leave, colliding into a waiter carrying a tray.
* The Karate Kid (1984) fits this trope to a T. She basically exists only to be Daniel's girlfriend and to sit pretty.
* The Karate Kid (1984) going out of bounds temporarily stops the fight and results in a warning.
* The Karate Kid (1984)," intimidating Johnny into going through with it. Naturally Daniel wins anyway.
* The Karate Kid (1984). Later used straight becoming one of the definitive training montages that gets parodied today with the aforementioned "You're the Best" theme.
* The Karate Kid (1984) Miyagi shows Daniel how to punch and kick. As a reward for persevering, Daniel even gets one of the cars.
* The Karate Kid (1984) shows some previously unseen class after losing to Daniel at the end of the film, personally handing the trophy to LaRusso and telling him,

"You're all right."
* The Karate Kid (2010) (both are set in different countries, making a crossover pretty unlikely).
* The Karate Kid (2010), Cheng and his group of friends who had once bullied Dre respect him after he wins the tournament. In fact, Cheng, the main bully, is the one to present the trophy to him. This was significantly aided by their disgust with the lengths their coach pushed them to in an attempt to defeat Dre. This is even more evident in the alternate ending, where Li challenges Han to a fight after the tournament.
* The Karate Kid (2010) claps at the end of his crush's recital. However, he's in China at the time who generally find a respectful silence to be the proper thing to do.
* The Karate Kid (2010), Dre excuses his black eye to Mr. Han as tripping and hitting a pole. Mr. Han responds that it's an "interesting" pole.
* The Karate Kid (2010) got official support from the Chinese government, and features several prominent scenes set in notable national landmarks.
* The Karate Kid (2010), Mr. Han takes him up a tall mountain to the Dragon Well, where drinking from it purportedly make one invincible. The well is a shallow fountain with a yin-yang symbol in the center.
* The Karate Kid (2010). Not only does the rival bring the hero the trophy, but he, and his entire class bow to him, much to the chagrin of their jerkass teacher.
* The Karate Kid (2010) remake is very shallow too - and even weaker than Ali.
* The Karate Kid (2010) remake, with Dre and Mr Han. Then Dre calls Mr Han his best friend.
* The Karate Kid (2010) sleep on his lap and even hesitatingly place a hand on his shoulder.
* The Karate Kid (2010): to get Dre to understand that Kung Fu isn't just a way of fighting, it's a way of life:
* The Karate Kid, a distant continuation of the classic '80s trilogy. Despite this, his influence continues to play a role in his former student Daniel LaRusso's life and his actions, and Daniel would yearn for his late father figure to be there for him in the flesh during an emotionally troubling time.
* The Karate Kid and Daniel has learned the iconic Crane Stance, which lets him keep his weight off the injured leg when the injury is aggravated in the finals. Notably, both Cobra Kai students are appalled at Kreese's order even if they go along with it.
* The Karate Kid, Cheng knocks over Dre's lunch tray and then says "Sorry!"
* The Karate Kid. Daniel stumbles on Mr. Miyagi attempting to catch flies with a pair of chopsticks ("Man who catch fly with chopstick — accomplish ANYTHING.") While Mr. Miyagi tries and fails throughout the scene, Daniel manages it within seconds of attempting it, prompting a disgruntled "You beginner luck," from Miyagi.
* The Karate Kid, Dre (who comes from the United States) claps and cheers loudly after his crush's violin recital. This provokes anger from the crush's father as the Chinese tend to stay silent out of respect after a performance of any kind.
* The Karate Kid episode "Homecoming", Miyagi grabs Taki after she falls off a lantern line (which she was using as a tightrope) trying to get the shrine.
* The Karate Kid franchise) or dances (as most famously done by Capoeira).
* The Karate Kid has been dubbed in Hindi twice. The first dub produced by Sound & Vision India in 2010, while the second dub was produced in-house by UTV Software Communications for airing on UTV Action in 2011.
* The Karate Kid has been used in psychology classes to teach about the learning process.
* The Karate Kid is widely considered by martial artists (even practitioners of karate) to be a move too impractical to ever be used. Lyoto Machida, a mixed martial artist, used it to KO an old legend, Randy Couture - granted he didn't do it exactly like it was depicted in the film.
* The Karate Kid Johnny Lawrence to protagonist status, which became a huge hit. For its third season (released on New Year's Day in 2021), the show would move to Netflix.

* The Karate Kid, let alone received any actual training. Those who have had training in life get a serious boost as vampires.
* The Karate Kid, Master Li orders Cheng to injure Dre's leg, and Cheng complies. After one of Mr. Han's cupping treatments, Dre decides to finish his match with Cheng, whereupon he is greeted with applause from Master Li.
* The Karate Kid, Mr. Miyagi confesses that he is never at ease in fighting:
* The Karate Kid, Mr. Miyagi had to lie about Daniel being a black belt, and steal one from an official's bag).
* The Karate Kid Part II: Although Daniel LaRusso is a well-trained martial artist by the end of the first film, his time in Okinawa shows he's unprepared to deal with other karate practitioners outside the rules and regulations of the tournament. It shows especially in his final fight with Chozen, where using his tournament moves gets him thoroughly beaten until he improvises.
* The Karate Kid Part II and hold a knife to her throat in front of the entire village, so it counts.
* The Karate Kid Part II), causing Bigbad to drop the money so Daniel can grab it and run.
* The Karate Kid Part II. During the final confrontation, the first thing Kumiko does is take her dance ribbon and try to strangle Chozen. Chozen knocks her out with one punch, but at least she tried.
* The Karate Kid Part II. He was surprised and flattered at how many of his ideas made it into the show.
* The Karate Kid Part II However, this confrontation is interrupted by the issue at hand. Miyagi manages to speak to his father briefly together with Sato just before the elder Miyagi finally dies. Sato had regarded the elder Miyagi as a mentor himself, so he sternly tells Miyagi he has three days to mourn before he comes to settle their grudge (Unfortunately, Sato's nephew Chozen has quickly taken a dislike to Daniel, and gives him a lot of trouble in the meantime).
* The Karate Kid Part III expanded on his and Kreese's backstory, while the fourth season brought him back as a main villain.
* The Karate Kid Part III means Silver does look closer in age to Kreese (75 year old Martin Kove) than to Daniel (59 year old Macchio).
* The Karate Kid Part III, thinking revenge was the only way to recover their business.
* The Karate Kid Part II, John Kreese does this to his losing students after they were beaten by Daniel in the first movie. He yells at them and gets physical until Mr. Miyagi intervenes. Like the above 3 Ninjas example, it doesn't go well for Kreese.
* The Karate Kid Part II, Johnny Lawrence, the Cobra Kai bully from the first film, seemed to be okay with his 2nd place trophy, but Sensei Kreese wasn't. In fact, Kreese smashes the trophy and physically attacks his student so viciously that Mr. Miyagi has to step in and teach him some manners.
* The Karate Kid Part II, Mr. Miyagi and Daniel stumble upon Miyagi's rival, Sato, trapped and helpless under a storm-felled wooden beam. Daniel looks on in horror as Miyagi raises his hand to strike (with Sato cursing him for a coward the whole time) only to have Miyagi strike the beam, splitting it and allowing them to pull Sato free.
* The Karate Kid Part II. Now if he'd just left an address, she could have written and told him so saving them both a lot of time. (Of course, one scene in the first movie indicates that Miyagi was a widower, so that might not have worked...)
* The Karate Kid Part II used this to explain the disappearance of the first film's love interest character. It was even in a needlessly cruel way; not only did she unceremoniously dump him, but she wrecked his car. One really has to wonder if the actress pissed some people off.
* The Karate Kid Part II with Daniel respecting her choices to let her be happy.
* The Karate Kid series has a pattern in which he must use a new technique that the previous final boss proves immune to, thus suggesting that each opponent is tougher than the previous.

* The Karate Kid, sort of. He knew some pressure points and techniques to suppress pain.
* The Karate Kid The Animated Series: Kina when Daniel and Taki come suddenly into her hut. A more problematic example than most because she drops the remaining water from the fountain of youth.
* The Karate Kid was met with decent critical and fan reception, but didn't leave a lasting impact on pop culture.
* The Karate Kid we see the bullies gathering outside the dinner where Daniel and his mother are having a conversation, then leaving as they plan their next prank against Daniel.
* The Karate Kid where Evil Sensei orders his charge to sweep Daniel's already wounded leg. The kid is reluctant but ultimately goes along with it.
* The Karate Kid, while sparring with Mr. Miyagi, Daniel tries fighting like a boxer, doing fancy footwork and jabs. Miyagi easily trips him and orders him to stop dancing around.
* The Karate Kid would eventually reveal his history as a Vietnam veteran and the hell he endured during his time in the Vietnam War that warped him into the ruthless man he is now.

* The Kaskade Region of Amazon if it also did the work of Apple, Google and Facebook). Headed by CEO Tom Bezzle, it effectively controls 100% of the delivery services in the Kaskade region, a majority in Orre, Unova, Galar and Kalos, and is steadily making inroads into the Japanese regions. It has been known to buy out rivals and news companies that criticize it, has rumored connections to organized crime, and is also doing research into Kaskade's weather for... some reason.
* The Kastari form the priesthood and are incredibly similar to the Silthuri; they may well be a sub-caste who used religion to gain power.
* The Kastom people of Tanna, Vanuatu, had a myth about a deity who had traveled to a distant land and married a powerful woman. So, when Queen Elizabeth II visited with her husband Prince Philip, Duke of Edinburgh, in tow, they took him to be that deity and to this day consider him to be a divine being.

* The Kawai Complex Guide to Manors and Hostel Behavior. They hardly have anything else to them except for providing yet another roadblock to the obvious Usa/Ritsu endgame.
* The kawoosh from the pilot episode is reused frequently, especially in the first season. You can always tell when it's being used because all the equipment in the shot aside from the ramp and the gate itself are covered in tarps.
* The "kawoosh" was made by hanging an airplane turbine over a pool and filming the resulting effect underwater. Not the cheapest effect to reproduce repeatedly. By later episodes, they could've CGIed it, but had no reason to, as the thing ends so quickly that no one notices it's the same effect. The crew did, however, make sure they set up multiple cameras and got many shots of the "kawoosh" to maximize their use of a hard-to-reproduce effect.
* The "kawoosh" when the Stargate opens is actually the matter/energy/whatever of the gate in an unstable form, meaning if you enter it, no two of your atoms end up attached to each other. Portal cut? Try portal
* The Kaylons, an entire race of androids, were once enslaved by a biological species on their home planet before they Turned Against Their Masters
* The Kaze-no-Kizu (Wind Scar) can only be used if Inuyasha can find the "rift" between his aura and the opponent's, and cut through it. Made particularly difficult by Kagura, who can control wind and thus manipulates the flow of their auras so Inuyasha can't find the rift.
* The Kazon made use of both single-person fighters, boarding shuttles with modified hull-piercing tips, small warships called "raiders" (which were autonomous vessels with multiple decks) and huge carriers (rarer than the raiders, but could carry multiple raiders and fighters). The raiders resembled scaled-up fighters with several decks and a bridge instead of a simple cockpit.
* The Kazons "confiscated" the crew's combadges when they stole their ship.

* The KC Grand Prix arc is notably less tense and didn't had the world being in danger. It mostly features Yugi and Jonouchi dueling in a tournament to help Kaiba Corp. recover from its losses in the last season, which the competition mostly being friendly and nobody's lives or souls being on the line this time. It does feature Siegfried von Schroder trying to sabotage Kaiba, but his goals are far less evil than the rest of all the villains in the series.
* The K Chronicles is very much this. It's not unusual to have strips where a majority of the panels are nothing but text, with very little actual drawings.
* The K Chronicles strip starts off with Keith doing this to his mother's date, but then the date starts talking about how much he respects cartoonists and what a shame it is when newspapers cut them. In the last panel, Keith asks the visitor whether he needs a condom.

* The Kelermorph, a being created by mature Genestealer cults, is specifically engineered to embody the archetype of the mysterious, impossibly skilled gunslinger to attract the oppressed to the Cult. He's a mix between Vaporizer and Trick Shot, given his extremely high Ballistic Skill, six normal shots per turn and an extra shot for every one of those initial six that hits, representing how his enchanted sense and reflexes allow him to spray out hails of bullets in the time it takes for his foes to let off one short while making sure each bullet goes precisely where he wants it to go.
* The Kelermorph, a being engineered by Genestealer cults to embody the archetype of a deadly gunslinger, is a terrifyingly good shot thanks to reflexes that allow it to calmly line up a dozen shots in the time it takes for its foes to unholster their own weapons, enhanced senses that allow it to fire with pinpoint accuracy in pitch darkness, and superhuman balance and coordination.

* The Kenny Chronicles one can guess why a bunch of pirates scientists would create the Tarnekis, though they probably didn't intend them to rebel and form a "nation" of ships on the Pacific.
* The Kenny Chronicles they tend to refer to Tarnekis as animals or rant about how they are a danger. Of course Tarnekis were created by pirates (who they are implied to have killed) and some of their ships were stolen (though the Ballyhoo was bought).
* The Kenny Everett Video Cassette, Kenny Everett shoots a pop-up target on a Hogan's Alley range and is congratulated by his fellow officers on his great shooting. After they leave we see a man holding a target stagger out from behind the wall and fall down dead.

* The Kenny Everett Video Show on ITV in the late 70s was unique in that there was no studio audience, but the viewer could clearly hear the cameramen, floor manager, writers and other studio crew laughing out loud off screen.
* The Kensai/Mage combo, in a way, follows this trope to the extreme and yet it does not. When you first dual-class into a mage, you will have an extremely subpar mage due to its low level but high EXP requirements. Once you get your Kensai abilities back though, you become arguably the most powerful class in the game. It does not follow this in that most of your offense is your Kensai fighter half.

During the segment, the interviewer's heart stops beating, and LeMond restarts his heart by pounding on his chest a couple of times. The interviewer is revived and has no further problems.
* The Kentucky Fried Movie ends the segment "A Fistful of Yen" this way, even placing the main character in bed with Auntie Em and Toto.
* The Kentucky Fried Movie features Henry Gibson as the spokesperson for the United Appeal for the Dead, a charity that helps families keep their dead relatives around. Scenes include a dead son floating in the pool and falling face-first into dinner.
* The Kentucky Fried Movie has a reporter interviewing a band of terrorists. The leader starts explaining why they hate America, then stops and starts yelling in outrage because he noticed that, despite his perfect English, he's being subtitled. The skit devolves into him proving how good his English is by yelling out tongue twisters, and complaining that his compatriots are not being subtitled.
* The Kentucky Fried Movie parody "A Fistful of Yen," the villain sentences a spy with the most evil punishment imaginable. "Take him to Detroit." "No! Not Detroit!!! NOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOO!!!'
* The Kentucky Fried Movie's "Fistful of Yen" segment, the leader of the evil clan is played by a Korean actor. When he's shouting orders in Korean, he's actually apologizing for his Korean fans that he's in the movie, and telling them that the

* The Keys of the Kingdom arrives from the future, and accidentally reveals a big hint on Tuxedo Kamen's identity to Sailor Venus when she refers to him as "Mamo-chan". Unfortunately, Sailor Venus is crushing on Tuxedo Kamen, and Usagi hasn't been awakened yet. Chibi-Usa is abruptly replaced by a different girl.
* The Keys of the Kingdom: Near the beginning of the story, Earth gets attacked by the Heartless, and eventually falls. Unlike most examples, however, most of the characters were whisked away from the planet either before the attack began or early on into it, with no way back. Consequently, they are not actually aware of what happened.
* The Keys of the Kingdom: Traverse Town is almost completely abandoned, and is falling apart.
* The Keys Stand Alone: “Don't! Fuck! With! Nine! Thousands!”
* The Keys Stand Alone” by some outworlders. (However, the Power Groups know better....)
* The Keys Stand Alone. After the “debacle” by George and John the previous day, the only mission that the Guardians will give them is a boring courier mission to a distant coastal town. (Though things get a lot livelier when the recipient of their delivery turns out to have been missing for several days.)
* The Keys Stand Alone, after the four meet and de-curse the Last Wizard but still don't know what's going on, she very gently explains:
* The Keys Stand Alone. After the Svenjaya “Great Mistake,” whatever that was, the entire tribe had to pay by being sent into indentured servitude for 40 years. It's now been 30 years, and since the average lifespan of a Svenjaya is 30-40 years, several generations that had absolutely nothing to do with the Great Mistake have been growing up in virtual slavery. The four are disgusted by this and vow to help the Svenjaya change the contract.

* The Keys Stand Alone, a line in the mysterious poem the four find when they first return to C'hou mentions "the Paladins, rightfully so." John hopes the line doesn't refer to themselves. (It turns out to refer to the Guardians.)
* The Keys Stand Alone, and a brass dragon to put a room full of giant centipedes to sleep. (He also puts John and Ringo to sleep because he talks nonstop while he's the brass dragon.)
* The Keys Stand Alone and aspects of their overwhelming power let them escape. They still don't want to learn to fight or kill, though.
* The Keys Stand Alone, and as they listen in dismay, Quill calmly says to George, “It appears you will now be moving to plan B.” Cue George fretting like crazy.
* The Keys Stand Alone and puts them to sleep so the others can move them aside.
* The Keys Stand Alone and rips the book in half, thus exposing the villain behind the chaos as one of the librarians. Except that when more librarians show up and find George clutching half of the Book, they automatically assume he was the bad guy and zap him with a paralysis spell—thus allowing the evil librarian, actually a fake, to escape. To make matters worse, after a halfhearted apology, they hit him with a huge fine for ripping up the rare and valuable book.
* The Keys Stand Alone, and they make quite a bit of money this way, thanks to the Blameless Victim Revenge Law — if you're attacked for no reason and you win, you legally get to keep anything you want off the attackers. And since the four never once initiate an attack or do anything to encourage one besides walking around.... They call it “fishing.”
* The Keys Stand Alone; and they're thoroughly bored with the experience by the time they've looted everything. And they're not real happy when their hours of tedious trudging results in only around 9,000 Swords worth of treasure, when they were hoping for five or six times that amount. They avoid a second dungeon crawl when they arrive at Boidan Mine just after another group of adventurers has already sacked the place but hasn't left yet.
* The Keys Stand Alone and think they know what's going on now, things have changed so much that they're returned to the status of Naïve Newcomer.
* The Keys Stand Alone are genetically divided into Fighter/Workers, Priest/Wizards, and Leaders. Only Leaders are truly intelligent and capable of planning; the lower castes are genetically compelled to obey them. George takes advantage of this arrangement to get a Leaderless tribe of Tayhil to clear out.
* The Keys Stand Alone are murderous snakemen who are the chief minions of the Black Tower and the #1 enemy of all other humans on C'hou.
* The Keys Stand Alone as we never actually see him do anything. (Almost everything he does is offscreen.)
* The Keys Stand Alone. At least, he attempts to be one. George and Paul won't let him.
* The Keys Stand Alone. At one point John asks in frustration, "Are we absolutely the only ones usin' our brains round here?" And later, when they're meeting with the Circle leadership:
* The Keys Stand Alone: A variation. Hoping that the mine-robbers have the amulet the four are desperate to get, Paul offers them 50,000 Swords for what has been described as a god-level artifact. This in a world where a nice dining room set costs 14,000 Swords!
* The Keys Stand Alone). Because the four are actually nice to them, interesting things happen.
* The Keys Stand Alone between Ringo and Ranala when they drum together. She falls for him hard, and they have a quickie in the Svenjaya tunnels after George and Ringo have to sneak out of the Serenade Club.
* The Keys Stand Alone by Spectrem, who says that the Pyar gods put a field around the planet so everyone could understand everyone else.

* The Keys Stand Alone C'hou has become.) Not so with Paul, who suffered tremendous psychological difficulties when he returned home because he couldn't shake the feeling that he was going to kill his family by touching them. He had just gotten over that when he was sent back. And Ringo, who discovered he was hopelessly addicted to his mindsight after he lost it, must now choose between keeping it, thus staying on C'hou and giving up his new love Barbara Bach and everything else in his life, or returning home and giving up his magic. (George, who is not connected to his magic like the others are, mostly views his ring as an experience; he hardly thinks it's worth giving up his family for. And he's certainly not willing to trade his freedom just for a little magic.)
* The Keys Stand Alone, Cirelle attempts to get in the sack with each of the four to explore how their magic enhances sex. It doesn't work at all with three of them, since John's no longer attracted to human women and Paul daren't have sex with normal women (though he still has urges... unfortunately). The story doesn't go into detail about George, who wouldn't talk about his brief time with Cirelle, but the implication is that she wanted him to assume different forms during sex, and he was repulsed and refused.
* The Keys Stand Alone cost ten dime-sized gold coins; now the weakest potions start at thirty one-ounce gold Swords, and the strongest an outrageous 5,000 Swords. Later, John is suspicious when they're offered 50 Swords to deliver some scrolls to a person; it seems like a lot, until George points out a table and chair set being sold for 4,500. And 50 Swords will just barely get them two rooms at a cheap inn.
* The Keys Stand Alone. During the parade fight, he triggers some seeds he'd planted in the area in anticipation of the fight, and at least one bad guy gets swallowed up by vines, though Ringo is underwhelmed by how little the seeds do compared to how much work the wizard put into their prep.
* The Keys Stand Alone: Early on , the four unhappily experience the first two elements of this trope firsthand with the Pyar city guards.
* The Keys Stand Alone embodies this trope. Only Ringo gets to find out exactly what she has to offer, though. (Paul and John can't have sex with normal women any longer, and George won't even tell the others what she wanted him to do.) It's all offscreen.
* The Keys Stand Alone. Even though they generally refuse to fight, fate just will not leave them alone. On their first day back on C'hou, they're attacked five times... and things don't improve over the next few days.
* The Keys Stand Alone (except one he missed) before the four even get to the citadel.
* The Keys Stand Alone for the first time so he can carry John away from an angry mob. After he turns back to himself, he describes the experience as being like “an idea wrapped in air” and how he was terrified that he'd fly apart.
* The Keys Stand Alone, George becomes a centaur rather than a horse to carry Ringo, since “it was sometimes a drag not being able to speak.”
* The Keys Stand Alone has the “Lord Equus” form of Theecat's equibots.
* The Keys Stand Alone has the Flying Island of Tipaan (a luxury resort). It travels over several of the provinces of Baravada.
* The Keys Stand Alone have a fear aura and also freeze their opponents.
* The Keys Stand Alone heal hurt people, and if they're outnumbered by both sets of people, they simply freeze in place. John, who loathes Angels and blames them for his massive attack of claustrophobia that ruined the four's Cloud Horn Plan A, nevertheless ends up protecting a couple of them from some Animals. He gets nothing out of it but some praise from Quill, his Circle companion.
* The Keys Stand Alone, he discovers that he sees different kinds of magic in different colors. However, the color scheme seems to be idiosyncratic to him; for example, he sees the psionic Ringo as bright blue, normal masking magic as one shade of sea green, and masking magic that protects against mind control as another shade of sea green. He wants very much to learn what each color represents but never gets the opportunity.

* The Keys Stand Alone, he expects the little alien to not understand him, but it turns out that Theecat is well aware of mass media and popular culture.
* The Keys Stand Alone, he feels like he's going to fly apart at any moment.
* The Keys Stand Alone, he had a tough time adjusting to being normal again, and for a while was terrified to even touch Linda and his kids. She decided he'd disappeared for those four days with another woman and now hated her. Given that the truth was, as Paul put it, "so fucking insane," it took him quite a while to both get over the sense that he would kill her if he hugged her and to convince her of the truth.
* The Keys Stand Alone, including the muggers, Lieyla of the “Terrible Trio,” Spectrem of the Guardians, and the mine-robbers at Boidan Mine, find out what a waste of time it is to try and hurt Paul.
* The Keys Stand Alone, in order to track the missing Kyran Datoro, George becomes a bloodhound. Along the way he notes that he can smell the presence of dogs in Chandalla, but the locals apparently didn't think to use them in this manner.
* The Keys Stand Alone in the guarded basement, but it is otherwise a large, accessible, well-attended civic place with ordinary civilian librarians.
* The Keys Stand Alone is opened by two people placing their hands in two separate hand-shaped indentations, one on the floor, one on the ceiling.
* The Keys Stand Alone. It successfully kicks Paul across Boidan Valley. However, not long after that John sinks the thing deep into the ground. So much for awesome.
* The Keys Stand Alone, it turns out that despite his overwhelming psionic power, Ringo is unusually susceptible to psionic attacks.
* The Keys Stand Alone, John and George are attacked by a swarm of robotic bats. The narrative even refers to them as "goddamned bats."
* The Keys Stand Alone, John complains a lot about the rotten poetry sayings they keep finding. When someone tells him the gods wrote the stuff, he says, “Well, now we know they ain't the gods of poetry.”
* The Keys Stand Alone, John notes that he can't affect them, since he can feel that they're rustproof.
* The Keys Stand Alone John proves unable to do anything except talk with his water-telepathy; he can't even take information from an unwilling mind. However, the ability of the four to speak together in telepathic privacy turns out to be immensely useful, since they can plan without fear of being overheard by anyone.
* The Keys Stand Alone, just after George removes Durothé's curse. (At that moment Durothé's actual sex was still unknown; she would be revealed as [currently] female a bit later.) She sobs wildly all over his chest. Female-on-male instance of this trope.
* The Keys Stand Alone. Later, when Paul and George have a messy little encounter with the diplomat Lee Ayson, Spectrem doesn't bother to even try to attack Paul, which irks Lee considerably.
* The Keys Stand Alone, Nangre the librarian advises George and Paul to collect the sayings, poem lines, and other bits of graffiti and trivia found just about everywhere. She says that these strange things are the feeble attempts of the gods to communicate with the outworlders, and have meanings that might not become evident for a long time. George dubs them "Gods Chat" and keeps a list.
* The Keys Stand Alone. One example: George takes the form of Folse Tarmi to get past some robots, and worries that his accent will trip him up. Luckily he doesn't need to speak to them.
* The Keys Stand Alone, one of the many, many ways that C'hou is different than before is that the guards on the wall of the city of Tevri'ed wield pikes.
* The Keys Stand Alone on them. Then he and Ringo hang them, naked, on the illuminated side of the hotel and don't let them down until dawn.
* The Keys Stand Alone) or John (who takes out a dozen mud golems almost without thinking about it). And yes, the various floor-material golems he'd placed in Gothmarik Citadel fell to bits once he was removed from the scene—much to Paul's disappointment.
* The Keys Stand Alone out of the people being annoying. This act of kindness, one of several, ultimately pays off for the four.

* The Keys Stand Alone party when they're not adventuring. A lot. By way of example, Tevri'ed turns into a party town at night for the most part. The four are invited to participate, but they're not interested (and “they had better ways of having fun anyway”).
* The Keys Stand Alone, Paul comes to actively hate most of it and is desperately jealous of the others. Though he does get some mileage out of his invulnerability, and he does develop some useful secondary and tertiary powers, like the ability to see magic and energy. But he has little flexibility with most of his magic.
* The Keys Stand Alone Paul sees no reason why they should be permakilled. The Tipaanese are cowed by him and agree to transfer the Animals to the Circle jail.
* The Keys Stand Alone, Paul utters a cynical variation of this: “With great power comes a lot of people pestering you to use it on their behalf.”
* The Keys Stand Alone peacefully, which means being tricky and subtle.
* The Keys Stand Alone, poor George and Ringo get thoroughly grossed out by one of the specialty pizzas served at the Cloud Horn party on Tipaan — it's covered with air worms (large translucent worms) curled around whole margs (songbirds, including beaks and claws).
* The Keys Stand Alone qualifies, given that there are over 20,000 outworlders who have been selected by the gods to help them overcome the Black Tower; 50,000 live-for-combat skahs; city guards who are tougher than a good percentage of the previous two groups; and some of the G'heddi'onians, like the wizards who rule the city of Daarthayu.
* The Keys Stand Alone rather than any major influence on the world. Its main significance to the four is that after George destroys it to save lives, they're fined 150,000 Swords and threatened with jail/endless pursuit if they don't pay the fine. They spend several days struggling to get the money.
* The Keys Stand Alone: Referenced briefly by the seven towers of the ruling wizards in the city of Daarthayu. Although each tower is a different color, there's no indication as to whether the colors are related in any way to the type of magic practiced by each wizard. Rather, each tower gives the viewer the "feeling" of the type of magic practiced within.
* The Keys Stand Alone (rightly) thinks it will cause him pain and disable him. However, he has his water field up, which blunts the effect, and when he manages to stagger behind a tree the effect is cut off entirely.
* The Keys Stand Alone, Ringo discovers early on that nearly everyone and everything of importance is invisible to his mindsight, thus crippling him for most of the story (though he does figure out a workaround to at least see the silhouettes of people and moving objects, and George gets him a pair of binoculars that also help).
* The Keys Stand Alone, Ringo points out to Theecat that the four wouldn't have been dragged into all this if they'd been “the ordinary blokes down the lane.”
* The Keys Stand Alone, she's puzzled by his “feet” and “miles,” and he ends up having to say “From here to the jump gate.”
* The Keys Stand Alone snap Ringo out of it. This little event causes a seismic shift in the way the four deal with the Power Groups from then on.
* The Keys Stand Alone. Some people think they're an evil mirror image of the good Pyar gods in the White Tower. Some think the inhabitants were destroyed but their evil lives on. Certainly, no one has ever seen them. What's definitely known is that they're responsible for unleashing the Tayhil and their monsters on the unsuspecting world of C'hou, and that the only way to prevent total disaster is to put together the Nine-part Key and enter the Black Tower.
* The Keys Stand Alone that they basically end up saying, “No, we're not the only ones who can do this. Fuck off.”
* The Keys Stand Alone, the attack has no effect except to irk Paul. Since he and George are in a rush at the moment, his only response is to call out the bad behavior of the supposedly good Lee.
* The Keys Stand Alone, the cat-elf Svenjaya are derisively called “plushies.”

* The Keys Stand Alone, the chromatic jump gems are the most common. The rarest ones are black, white, silver, gold, and clear, in that order, though Mattagandas mentions the Full Spectrum Jump Gem as the rarest of all.
* The Keys Stand Alone : The Circle's Master-Schemer L'le is festooned with weapons, some of which are swords and guns.
* The Keys Stand Alone: The city of Daarthayu is ruled by a council of wizards. How this works is not explored, though the four have an unpleasant encounter with one of the wizards.
* The Keys Stand Alone, the Cloud Horn Parade/Concert on Tipaan, which takes place every 100 days and is beloved of the demihuman Svenjaya, has turned into a periodic firefight because the Cloud Horn could potentially be part of the Nine-part Key if anyone got ahold of it. It's also highly collectible, which means that outworlders with several different goals try to get it during this vulnerable period, and shoot the shit out of the Tipaanese guards and anyone else who tries to protect it. A lot of civilians come just to watch the fight. A lot of civilians also get mowed down because they get too drunk or stoned to get out of the way, though it's not as bad as it sounds because resurrection is available afterwards. The real losers are the Svenjaya, who have seen their happy festival turned into annoying chaos.
* The Keys Stand Alone, Theecat the tech rogue becomes rather fond of the four after John buries him (and his companions) neck-deep in mud. He starts out sucking up to them like mad so they won't steal all his stuff, but ends up genuinely liking them. They aren't quite so enamored of him, but conclude they might as well consider him a friend because he's one of the very few people on C'hou they don't actively hate.
* The Keys Stand Alone. The flying robot guards at the Border Crossroads Inn probably also count.
* The Keys Stand Alone, the four are bombarded with sayings, poems, rumors, and suchlike. They're told that these things are the only way the Pyar gods can communicate with their imported heroes, so George dubs them "Gods Chat". Some of what they find is relevant to them, but much isn't.
* The Keys Stand Alone, the four attempt to have an audience with an important wizard. They are rebuffed:
* The Keys Stand Alone, the four find a store called Anything, where you can buy any nonmagical item (you tell the proprietor what you want, and he goes in the back and gets it). George twice buys a guitar there. The four wonder how such things are created, especially since a junky guitar costs exactly the same as a really good one.
* The Keys Stand Alone: The four inadvertently introduce pizza to C'hou. Whenever one of the inhabitants or outworlders mentions the food, it's always spelled “peetzah,” but when the four or the narrative use it, it's always “pizza.”
* The Keys Stand Alone: The four notice a lot of odd characteristics about the revamped C'hou. Eventually the Pyar gods tell them that they reshaped the world to be pleasing to both the G'heddi'onians and the skahs.
* The Keys Stand Alone, the four spend a good deal of time trying to avert this trope. Which, ironically, sometimes results in violence being employed against them, not that it works too well.
* The Keys Stand Alone, the four succeeded on Tipaan where many others failed because they were the only people to treat the Svenjaya decently and to defend them when others gave them hell. They were designated Svenjaya Friends, so that not only did the Svenjaya patriarch offer to help them get the otherwise inaccessible Cloud Horn but when George and Ringo were accosted onstage by a trio of drunken punk cowboys, the Svenjaya band they were jamming with beat the crap out of the attackers and helped the two get away later.
* The Keys Stand Alone, the Pyar gods physically inhabit the substance of the White Tower, which is keeping them alive.
* The Keys Stand Alone; they cut his ponytail off and gave him a buzzcut to symbolize that he's becoming one of them. After John rescues him, he eventually has his hair regrown to reassert his separation from the Guardians.

* The Keys Stand Alone, they're even more ready to get home as quickly as they can manage.
* The Keys Stand Alone this, since it makes him feel like George's dinner!
* The Keys Stand Alone, though, he's able to handle all that detail—indeed, is addicted to it, and when he can't use his mindsight he finds the world hopelessly drab, shallow, and slow.
* The Keys Stand Alone (though not by ninjas, so technically management was correct). After that they give up on inns entirely.
* The Keys Stand Alone. Tipaanese security just dares you to try to steal it. The four, who want it, figure out another way to get it.
* The Keys Stand Alone until something (usually the thought of his wife) snaps him back. So when he becomes a Leader Tayhil so he can boss other Tayhil around, he learns a lot about Tayhil in general. Later, he ponders shapeshifting as an aid to interspecies understanding.
* The Keys Stand Alone want to be communicated to that way.) The next day they find out that it is indeed relevant, and John proclaims Paul the winner. Nothing changes hands, though, since that wasn't the point.
* The Keys Stand Alone want to be communicated to that way. They soon run into more poems and lines of poetry, all bad (“Hooray, more shitty poetry!” John cries at one point). When they find out that the gods wrote some of this stuff, John sniffs, “Well, now we know they ain't the gods of poetry.”)
* The Keys Stand Alone when he's paralyzed in the library basement, having been mistaken for the aggressor. He was trying to explain that he was actually the one who saved the day, when suddenly he finds himself lying on a table upstairs. His explanation shifts into an expression of angry surprise.
* The Keys Stand Alone when Ringo gives Theecat his (extremely compressed) backstory. He wasn't sure if Theecat would understand what he was talking about, but it turns out the little steampunk Irorin is very familiar with mass media and its effect on people.
* The Keys Stand Alone. When the four finally find out why they've been returned to C'hou, they're told that the world will effectively end in a year unless the Black Tower falls. Everyone estimates that it will take six months to that full year to accomplish the task. This doesn't sit well with the four, as they were hoping to take no more than a month to do whatever it was they were supposed to do (because the timeflow of C'hou is 30 times faster than that of Earth, so they would only be gone a day if they took a month).
* The Keys Stand Alone, while he lost the strength, he didn't lose the sense he would harm Linda if he just hugged her, let alone had sex with her. It takes him a ways into the book to reveal to the others that their marriage almost collapsed because of it.
* The Keys Stand Alone who can easily turn into a dragon, is not at all impressed, though he pretends to be.
* The Keys Stand Alone (whose title simply screams this trope) has several:
* The Keys to December the homeless protagonists are cooling down a planet too hot for them. This forces the local humanoids to evolve civilization on par with Ice Age humans. The main point of the story is the Catforms' dilemma, if they should doom the intelligent natives. There are multiple hints that Ice Ages on Earth may have been a similar terraforming project, which somehow was reverted.
* The Keystone Cops — Slapstick comedy series. Made hundreds of films in the 1910s and 1920s.
* The Keys to the Kingdom: The Border Sea is full of lost object from the secondary realms.
* The Keys to the Kingdom was insanely badass, as well as having a fiery temper. His own soldiers were terrified of him.
* The keys to the TARDIS look perfectly ordinary, but are given to companions as a sign that they've been fully accepted by the Doctor. More in line with the trope, they've been shown to glow when the TARDIS is active, and been retrofitted to

* The Key to Her Heart will help, but the general secret-keeping drives pretty much every problem they have.
* The Key to Marauding Buffy, and although she learns that Spike's counterpart is alive in this world she never bothers looking for him as she recognises that it took a very specific set of circumstances to make Spike 'good' in her world. However, when a history lesson reveals that Angel's counterpart killed Darla and the Master after he was cursed before exposing himself to the sunlight shortly before World War One, Dawn is genuinely sorry at that news, mourning how all the good Angel could have done was cut short like that.

* The Key to Vector Sigma, Part 1, in reference to an explosion that was cut from the finished episode.
* "the Key to Vector Sigma" types programmed to protect Vector Sigma while the latter were meant as laborers lacking any battle capability.
* The key word being 'directly': If you anger the shopkeeper by zapping him with a wand or throwing things at him, the guards won't care, and any subsequent beating will apparently be considered self-defense.
* The keyword being "old" - the Twelve Colonies had a bunch of different languages in the past, but everybody seems to speak "English" now.
* The KGB in real life are often called "Dzherzhinsky Square", after the street where the headquarters are located (which in turn is named after the first head of its predecessor, the Cheka). (Lubyanka is a prison). They are also generally depicted as having the same power and nightmarish disregard for life as the real life NKVD, their predecessor in the Stalin era.

* The Kharkanas Trilogy Azathanai don't have one fixed physical form, as they can shapeshift at will. So, when Draconus poses as a Tiste to be able to live among them they accept him as one of them.
* The Kharkanas Trilogy in structure, manages to be even darker in tone and story.
* The Kharkanas Trilogy prequel takes place and is still alive and kicking during the main series, making him older than many of the current gods of the setting and wittness to the rise and fall of entire civilizations.
* The Kharkanas Trilogy. Sharenas' agreement amounts to "Sure, buddy".
* The Kharkanas Trilogy takes the form of a flying raptor, while K'rul seems to change his gender every few hundred years.
* The Kharkanas Trilogy things ended up the way they did is a wholly different matter, sometimes overturning supposedly known facts without actually contradicting them.

* The Kharkanas Trilogy this is Spinnock's reaction when he learns that innocent flirting with his cousin Faror Hend was a lot less innocent from her point of view.
* The Kharkanas Trilogy, urges him to kill them, so he still ends up the nice parent of the two.
* The Khepri have small, non-functional insect wings, but attached to their beetle-heads rather than their backs.
* The Khergit Khanate is the obligatory nomadic, steppe-dwelling, Mongol-like culture, with an almost purely cavalry army. Some Turkish cultural elements are thrown in as well.
* The Khmer Empire (modern-day southeastern Thailand, central and southern Vietnam, and the entirety of Cambodia) was all but forgotten in the centuries following its demise until 1861, when Frenchman Henri Mouhot stumbled across the ruins of Angkor Wat deep in the jungles of Cambodia. Later research indicated that the city of Angkor might have boasted a population of more than one million people.
* The Khmer Rouge (allegedly) used to cut out their enemies' livers and gall bladders, and sometimes are reported to have put the liver on a stick and parade around with it. It's apparently surprising how long someone can survive while their liver is outside their body.
* The Khmer Rouge executed at least 700,000 people for being too "bourgeois" or "intellectual" (which could mean simply wearing glasses for reading) or for other tiny infractions, and another 700,000+ died due to starvation and disease. Experts agree that Cambodia's political and economic development was set back by decades as they lost nearly their entire skilled labor force and educated populace.
* The Khmer Rouge forcibly evacuated town residents under extremely poor conditions.
* The Khmer Rouge government of Cambodia considered the ownership of money, the collection of fruit by yourself, owning Western clothing, criticizing the government and sleeping on the job to be all punishable by death. Almost anything that would appear to violate the ideology of the dictator Pol Pot would send someone to prison, where 99.9% of inmates were later killed. Even Khmer Rouge cadres themselves were arrested because of how corrupt the government was and how easy it was to commit a "crime" accidentally.
* The Khmer temples in Angkor Wat have several depictions of war elephants, including elephants carrying ballistae on their backs. It is unknown if these ballistae were shot from atop the elephants or they just transported them, however.
* The Khorne Daemonkin are basically Khorne Berserkers taken up to eleven; no longer being shackled by concepts such as causality and inter-god rivals, they are the combined forces of the literal God of War himself and are terrifyingly effective at what they do.

* The Kicks. "Breakaway" sees Devin getting the standard punishments for the events of "Go Big or Go Home": Two weeks without her phone or laptop, and, because she mouthed off about the previous two, television privileges. She's initially as devastated as you might expect, but by the end of the episode, she decides that she didn't mind being unplugged for a little while. She even declines her parents' offer to return all of the above early.
* The Kicks episode "The Best Defense is a Good Offense." It culminates in The Kicks getting caught trying to steal a prized Alex Morgan jersey.
* The Kicks is an expert at parkour. In "The Best Defense Is A Good Offense", she easily climbs a tall trophy case without any help. Her skills also come in handy as a goalkeeper.
* The Kickstarter page after ominously stating "all will be revealed…" shows a picture of a calendar with June 19th on it, and the Kickstarter itself ended on June 19th.
* the Kickstarter project, begins this way. It gets derailed after about a minute as a stuntman hurtles through the greenscreen.
* The Kicks, The Pinewood Academy soccer team are portrayed as a bunch of elitist snobs who look down on The Kicks and deliberately sabotage them by luring away their coach with an attractive job offer. However, they never resort to actual cheating.
* The Kicks, though this is largely due to laziness. "Breakaway" reveals that she believes she's not smart enough to pass her classes, so she doesn't bother trying.
* The Kid (1921), the owner of the night shelter identifies the Tramp and the kid when noticing the Wanted ad in the newspaper.
* The Kid (2000), part of the movie's drama involves Rusty finding it odd that Russ (his adult self) is 40 and unmarried. This makes the film feel rather dated knowing an increasing number of people have since been choosing to remain single into adulthood.
* The Kid (2000) to the latter's home era in 1968 near the end of the film.
* The Kid (2000) when Russ realizes he's been paying a lot more attention to Amy than he'd realized.
* The kid (always Jimmy Schwab) would attempt to replicate Mr Science's experiments, with disastrous results.
* The Kid & I, Bill Williams is a transparently obvious avatar for screenwriter and star Tom Arnold.
* The Kid & I includes cameos from Shaquille O'Neal, Whoopi Goldberg, Pat O'Brien, Arnold Schwarzenegger, and Jamie Lee Curtis.
* The Kid & I written by Tom Arnold, unabashedly bases its stars on Arnold himself and his neighbor's son Eric Gores.
* The Kid at the protagonist's orphanage says a variant of this after attacking the protagonist for disobedience.
* The Kid Brother, Harold has the bad guy trussed up in the back of a cart and is racing back into town. The bad guy manages to get to his feet in the cart, and, unseen by Harold, is working himself free of the ropes, when a low-hanging tree branch clubs him back down to the bottom of the cart.
* The Kiddie RideThese are often based on popular kids’ franchises.
* "The Kid from Borneo" (1933) — The kids mistake a black "wild man" for their uncle.
* The Kid From Brooklyn, where a milkman is mistaken for a prizefighter, right down to the well-timed ducking slapstick.
* The Kid Gets It: A kid from the audience, usually nominated in secret by a friend, would be called down to sit inside the booth, and had to pick one of the celebrity guests on the show that week to attempt the challenge. The chosen player would have to speak for one minute about themselves (often with prompting from the hosts) without saying a certain "trigger word" that had been shown to everyone else via the low-tech medium of a bit of paper waved around at the audience beforehand. Naturally they always said the forbidden word in the end and the Kid very much Got It.

* The Kid Gets It, but completely changed the idea to a courtroom-type setup where one contestant would plead the case for gunging one of their friends to a panel of celebrity judges (common crimes included borrowing stuff and not giving it back, or being obsessed with a band the other one couldn't stand). If successful, the friend would be led into the tank and gunged - if not, the nominator would be gunged instead for "wasting the court's time".
* The Kid having amnesia and having strange glimpses of future events and knowing things about people that he can't possibly have known. Sounds a lot like Tsugumi's amnesiac friend from the research lab who could see the future, right? Even the ages seem to match up. But it's not him, obviously.
* The kidnapped humans manage to botch up the sacrifice and survive, setting the plot in motion.
* The kidnapper drives a delivery truck. Which also means that your cousin Nanako, who was left home alone
* The Kidnappers also do a power-up ritual when they turn red, leaving them wide open to a backstab.
* The kidnapper's reason for having abducted said person, or people, involves a belief that it is a benevolent act toward his victim(s).
* The Kidnapping, by Shiga Naoya, the narrator sees a little girl and decides that he must have her for his own.
* The Kidnapping Of The Sun And The Moon, experimental and highly revered animated short.
* The Kidnapping Of The Sun And The Moon received accusations that it was anti-Chinese when screened at the International Short Film Festival Oberhausen, with certain viewers thinking the evil dragon that eats the Sun and Moon represented China. In reality, it's about "good vs evil" in general, and the dragon bears no resemblance to a traditional eastern dragons.
* The kids accused their parents of being pedophiles to have them taken away, leading to the town being nothing but the kids.
* The kids also find a group of elderly women in a retirement home, who survived only because post-menopausal women were the only adults that weren't affected by the virus.
* The kids also have trouble standing on Pluto in "From Pluto With Love".
* The kids (and later teens) Mike, Will, Dustin, Lucas, Max and Eleven in
* The Kids Are All Right. After one partner's infidelity has been discovered, she is subsequently seen sleeping on the couch, though it's not clear whether her partner kicked her out or she took the initiative to do so.
* The Kids Are All Right incorporated many of his younger brother's personality traits into his performance. His brother had been shot to death in an unsolved homicide a few years prior, and Ruffalo has stated he regarded the character as a way to pay tribute to his brother.
* The Kids Are All Right jobs or endeavors that she's taken on over the years—and as the neglected "woman" eventually has an affair.
* The Kids Are All Right was only allowed one print with an R21 rating, significantly limiting its theatrical release, and was entirely banned on home video.
* The Kids Are Alright (2018), which is set in the early seventies, Mike brings a microwave prototype home for testing. Peggy resents it because she sees it as an intrusion in her kitchen, so she sabotages it by putting a fork inside and turning it on. It shorts out a fuse and causes a blackout.
* The Kids Are Alright extols the virtues of the hotel chain he's advertising, while Keith is destroying the hotel room.

* The Kids Are American: Characters have American accents even though their parents are not American.
* The Kids Are AmericanThe adults have foreign accents, but the children don't.
* "The Kids" centers on Gumball and Darwin's suffering from extremely exaggerated voice breaking: Gumball calls Penny and her dad thinks he's some creep. He loses his voice when talking to her in person, making her dad think he's giving her the silent treatment. A store clerk thinks they're harassing him because they keep accidentally yelling. Their voices get so deep that a bus driver assumes they're adult
* The Kids From Room 402: Freddy once accidentally brought his mom's grocery list to school, rather than his homework, and didn't realize his mistake untill Miss Graves started to read it out loud in front of the class.
* The Kids From Room 402 has this with Cody's mom, who doesn't seem to grasp the fact that her son's bathroom habits aren't the sort of thing to be discussed in public, let alone in front of Cody's peer-group.
* The Kids From Room 402: In "The Peep and the Sheep", Jesse and Vinny teach a parrot to say rude things as part of a prank. Unfortunately, for them, the parrot heard them using their names while discussing ideas.
* The Kids From Room 402: Jordan is afraid of being seen as one because of her wealth.
* The Kids From Room 402: Nancy tried to get a job as a dog walker. There's a reason a troper mentioned it in this page.
* The Kids From Room 402: Subverted. When Jesse and Vinny taught insults to a parrot, Jesse suggested teaching curse words but that was as close as the trope came to being played in the cartoon.
* The kids from the Lucky Charms commercials, who will incessantly hound and chase after Lucky the Leprechaun to take his cereal. It's not as bad as the Trix example since Lucky is clearly toying with them.
* The kids' guardians, who, though often ignored or avoided by the main characters, show up all over the place, occasionally helping the kids from the background while engaging in their own adventures.
* The Kids Guide to the Internet (a "How To" guide for using the Internet) was released in 1997.
* The Kids Guide to the Internet, despite explaining things to their friends, Peter and Dasha face the camera to speak. The viewer is directly addressed by the Jameson family at the beginning and end, but visitors Lisa and Andrew never address or acknowledge the camera.
* The Kids Guide to the Internet it uses the term with graphics of the kids' heads flying around.
* The Kids Guide to the Internet living room, with the computer front and center.
* The Kids Guide to the Internet of their home. Mom and Dad, Peter and Dasha. They make it abundantly clear that Mom likes to pay bills and how the kids grades have improved, and Dad likes to check the stocks and sports scores. On top of that they all helped set up the computer, each having their own job. Any sweeter and Lisa and Andrew would have died of diabetes upon entering the house.
* The Kids Guide to the Internet Peter and Dasha's friends Lisa and Andrew fill this role. Their knowledge of Internet things varies according to whatever subject is being discussed.
* The Kids Guide to the Internet, this issue is skirted around and not mentioned by name. The Internet was already a major purveyor of porn and creepy people by 1997, so there is a part at the end of the video about watching your kids' Internet habits.
* The Kids Guide to the Internet used and lines the walls around the room, with the computer dead-center. Sears HomeLife Furniture is thanked in the credits.
* The kids in "Lucky Charms" are constantly robbing a leprechaun blind of his possessions. Unlike most examples, however, he seems to be enjoying this. It helps that Lucky has magic powers to fly away or rescue his cereal if he doesn't want it taken, though he'll often bungle these spells resulting in the kids getting his cereal anyway. He's sometimes shown making new Lucky Charms marshmallows for the kids' enjoyment.

* The kids, in response to a movie that they agreed was terrible, end up filming a movie. The episode ends with a younger group of kids deciding that the movie that was filmed by the original group
* The Kids in the Hall” When, even after repeating the punchline, the other man reacts with a blank stare, the man proceeds to sarcastically ask if the other man is deaf—which it turns out he is.
* The Kids in the Hall. A guy refuses to answer the phone. Reasoning it must be a wrong number. But as the phone keeps on ringing, it causes increasing hysteria in his friends. They convince themselves that something sinister about the call. "Or it's a very wrong number. 42 rings? What kind of FREAK is sitting there by that phone?"
* The Kids in the Hall, a man is caught after a wild weekend when his wife finds a pair of earrings on his nightstand. He tries to pass them off as his own, saying that all the "hip" men wear earrings, going so far as to force them through his not-pierced ears. He goes to work like that, seeing a number of his male co-workers wearing, variously, a bra over his shirt, a garter belt over his pants, and... a second tie.
* The Kids in the Hall"; as his wife (Bruce) kept looking at him without an answer while dusting, the husband quickly invoked this trope.
* The Kids in the Hall, Dave Foley plays a character doing a monologue about being a mass murderer. He says the second kill is easy. "The third time you start to get cocky so you gotta be careful. Y'know, you gotta stay humble or you make dumb mistakes."
* The Kids in the Hall did a skit as themselves, Kevin MacDonald inevitably took on this role.
* The Kids in the Hall did something similar with a police chase— when the criminal's car runs out of gas, both criminal and cop pull into a gas station to fuel up. While pumping, they glare at each other but the cops do nothing to arrest the criminal. At the end of the skit, the criminal gets past the border without getting caught.
* The Kids in the Hall did this when the mailroom clerk is given a promotion. Not two seconds after receiving it he instantly goes mad with power (even admitting it) and starts to boss around his co-workers.
* The Kids in the Hall features this testimonial endorsing the wonder drug Gleemonex:
* The Kids in the Hall gets a male slave, he acts like a not-yet-housebroken puppy and this is how he is "disciplined".
* The Kids in the Hall had a song called "Daves I Know", each verse being about a different Dave (or David) from his life.
* The Kids in the Hall has a man so obsessed with completing the items on his list that it doesn't faze him when he is taken hostage by bank robbers. He just adds it to the list.
* The Kids in the Hall has a sketch with a delightfully over-the-top example; in the sketch "Stereo Bargaining", the titular negotiations are interrupted by a pitiful old man shuffling onto the sales floor. The clerk's response is
* The Kids in the Hall has been openly gay since the '80s, and his most famous character is the "alpha queen" gay socialite Buddy Cole.
* The Kids in the Hall has said that part of the character's intent was to acknowledge that the stereotype is based on reality while pointing out that there's nothing wrong with being effeminate, but a lot of people misinterpreted it as just making fun of gay men.
* The Kids in the Hall: If a line is so slow that its forward movement would only happen "when pigs fly", cue said Flying Pig to appear and entertain the crowds.
* The Kids in the Hall involving a businessman asking his secretary to write a letter for him, takes this to the point of complete incoherence. He is unable to speak five words without mentioning breasts in some way and eventually forms a sentence made almost entirely of words for breasts.
* The Kids in the Hall, in which a comedy writer's boss chews him out for writing bad sketches like "Comedy Inc", ends with a long pause, after which the boss asks the writer, "You forgot to write an ending, didn't you?"

* The Kids in the Hall in which Dave Foley plays an affable axe murderer.
* The Kids in the Hall, in which the characters referred to a time period where mankind was so stupid they actually believed in someone named God.
* The Kids in the Hall, many people thought the sketch was seriously supporting those theories.
* The Kids in the Hall: One memorable sketch features Dave Foley as an alien spy on Earth. After accidentally letting slip that he is an alien, he beams out and orders the planet destroyed. Then, back on the alien planet, he is berated by his superior for blowing up Earth as well as several other planets in the past. The spy then lets slip that he is a double agent, so of course, that planet must now be destroyed.
* The Kids in the Hall, one with headlines telling of teenager Bobby's below-average poetry and songwriting, and another with Simon & Hecubus ("Simon Eats Soup In A Fit Of Rage")
* The Kids in the Hall on this trope. After doing this for over fifty years, one alien argues that they haven't learned anything from probing, except that one out of every ten "doesn't seem to mind". He wonders if his Great Leader is just some kind of weirdo with a disturbing fetish.
* The Kids in the Hall role frets that if his next contribution isn't good enough, the others will kick him out of the group.
* The Kids in the Hall: Scott Thompson's idiot Canadian character walks into a shop where Dave Foley's shopkeep character speaks to him in perfect English. The catch is, he doesn't speak English and memorized those words phonetically, so when Scott asks a question, he can't answer, but continues reciting more unrelated English, which gets Scott angry. Eventually, the speech the shopkeep has memorized finishes with insults and the phrase, "Would you like to fight me?"
* The Kids in the Hall. Scott Thompson transfers this trope to Canada (where KITH is produced) saying that Canadians burn their flags all the time—to keep warm. He then proceeds to pull a tiny Canadian flag out of his pocket and blow his nose into it.
* The Kids in the Hall sketch about the three-man garage band "Rod Torkelson's Armada Featuring Herman Menderchuk".
* The Kids in the Hall sketch a man told of how a shark bit him in half. It really did. His wife measured.
* The Kids in the Hall sketch had a company's CEO presenting a chain letter to his board and asking them what to do. Only one character refuses to take it seriously.
* The Kids in the Hall sketch had Dave Foley as a stereotypical Frenchman talking about how beloved Kevin MacDonald is in France, where it is known as "Le Poopie," which is French for "The Poopie."
* The Kids in the Hall sketch has a lazy thief robbing a lazy man whose idea of self-defense is to hold out his hand so the robber can't reach him. It works as the thief walks right into the hand, twice, and then uses his "street smarts" to simply brush the hand away.
* The Kids in the Hall sketch has some office workers becoming sick over innocent things like someone licking a stamp, or the name Mel. Interestingly, the idea of eating cow brains or licking the belly of a bloated dead rat does not bother them.
* The Kids in the Hall sketch revolves around a couple trying to record their outgoing message. The wife wants a simple, straightforward message while the husband wants something clever. While attempting to record their message, they have an argument while the tape is still running. A friend calls in and hears their message, which contains the argument. The caller laughs and congratulates the couple on creating their funniest message yet.
* The Kids in the Hall sketch "This Scene Was Written in Haste" has the premise that the sketch itself was written by a writer who was too anxious about meeting a deadline to pay attention to his many spelling errors, leading to things like a character sitting on a "chain" instead of a chair, and wearing "rubber boobs" on his feet instead of boots.

* The Kids in the Hall sketch where a disgruntled employee barges into his boss' office to berate him. He tries to flip the desk over but it proves too heavy. He makes several attempts but fails each time, eventually settling on throwing a pen across the room.
* The Kids in the Hall sketch, where a hitman is contracted to take himself out.
* The Kids in the Hall sketch where the trappers targets are office workers. (One of the workers actually manages to escape, and is seen hopping away on his one good leg, so the trappers don't give chase.)
* The Kids in the Hall spoofed this. A white gay man is being bashed by his cab driver, but it turns out the cabbie thought he was Chinese.
* The Kids in the Hall - Susan, a white girl (Dave Foley) brings her black boyfriend Tony (Scott Thompson) to meet her parents, warning him about their attitudes. His race isn't an issue to them at all, and in fact they like him immediately - but she reacts to every friendly conversational line of theirs as if it were an indictment against him.
* The Kids in the Hall than the Kids In The Hall fan club. He had a few more cameos (including a second contest where the prize was to have breakfast with him) before one speaking line during the final scene of series.
* The Kids in the Hall that involves a very bored criminal robbing a very bored homeowner, then they're interrupted by a very bored police officer who tells the robber, "You have the right to blah blah blah..."
* The Kids in the Hall: There's a sketch where a couple is being very loud in a restaurant with their arguing. Mark's character complains to them and he gets punched in the face by the guy, only to get up and see that the couple has forgotten about him and begun making-out passionately.
* The Kids in the Hall was one of the few North American shows to use the technique.
* The Kids in the Hall, where a cop vomits at the sight of a corpse and then at an expired parking meter.
* The Kids in the Hall who were entertained by The Flying Pig? "Hey, hey, hey! Look at meeee!"
* The Kids in the Hall, who would not only relate but demonstrate her Little Known Facts.
* The Kids in the Hall will sometimes do a sketch in the recovery room of an attempted suicide. Expect no one to have read the attempter's (long and detailed) suicide note.
* The Kids in the Hall with a film showing us "The Most Handsome Man in the World!", who is barely real-life average, strutting down the street, acting up to his title.
* The Kids in the Hall word again," indicating this is an ongoing cycle.
* The kids in the "Leggo my Eggo!" commercials go to unbelievable and often insanely complex lengths to keep their parents from ever having even one bite of Eggo waffles, even when the kids have already eaten their own.
* The kids introduced in the fourth season (and, by extension, the entire Baltimore school system). Roland Prezbylewski realizes that nothing he does can curb the school system's trend of cutting corners and mismanaging internal resources, even though he tries to give the kids a better education. Most of the main students end up becoming "hard" to the Baltimore street life and take up the roles of past main characters (Dukie becomes a drug user like Bubbles, Michael becomes a stick-up artist like Omar, and Randy becomes a thug in a group home).
* the kids knowing that he needs to get a vase to put in flowers in "Jet's Time Machine".
* The kids never show any emotion, besides their trademark line, when
* The Kids Next Door frequently come up against technology that can rapidly age them into adults. Eventually, they come up with "birthday suits", armor that protects them from such effects in one hour-long episode,
* The kids of the "Trix are for kids" advertising campaign love to torment the
* The Kid Super Power Hour With Shazam! gets an idea and plants a treasure chest ahead of them. Adam opens it and reads from the scroll within aloud.

* The "Kids' Week" games that started in the early 2000s were widely loathed for featuring questions that are too easy even for that demographic (in addition to making the "Teen Tournament" feel redundant). They stopped doing them after 2014,
* The Kids We Were has players being able to play the next chapter by paying 10 coins. One needs to watch ads or explore Kagami to get more coins. But players also have the option to pay in order to remove this restriction, aside from the ads.
* The Kid, they cover it all up to preserve their reputation and then kick him out.
* The kid warlock in "Swap Meat" did this with Sam, although (apparently unexpectedly) this also let Sam walking around wearing him. They showed this by having the actors port with the characters, so while mirrors and all other characters and the physical world agreed that Sam's scenes involved a scrawny little asthmatic, magic viewer-vision still saw Jared Padalecki.
* The Kid Who Became President eliminated all nations except a tiny dictatorship, where the game was made, and its enemy, the USA.
* The kid who turns into Ultra Magnus or Galvatron at the end of the commercials was
* The Kid Who Would Be King, no one in the cast is particularly well known. Though given the majority of the characters are preteens, this was a probably given.
* The Kid Who Would Be King: One bit that was in all the trailers has Kaye (who is too young to have a driver's license) behind the wheel of a car, knocking undead minions out of the way.
* The Kid Who Would Be King. So what a surprise it was when upon release the film gathered widespread praise (its Rotten Tomatoes score stands at 89%) - but not that it made little over half of its moderate $59 million budget, the studio anticipating a $50 million loss on the movie.
* The Kid with water, realizing his weakness after spitting in his face causes him to scream in pain, as the saliva burns him like acid.
* The kif have two sets of jaws, one at the front of their mouths and one at the back. The front set of jaws is used to rip flesh off of still-living prey, while the second set chews the meat into a paste before swallowing it (the throat of a kif is so narrow that it's incapable of swallowing anything solid). Further, the kif are carnivores who can only eat fresh meat, where "fresh" means "could be used in organ/muscle transplant operations". Meat that most other species of carnivores would consider fresh will make kif so nauseous that even when starving to death they'll be unable to eat it.
* The Kig-Yar/Jackals are mercenaries, a mix of soldiers and pirates who were more or less hired into the Covenant and privately could care less about the Great Journey.
* The Kig-Yar/Jackals hail from Eayn, which has 87.5% Earth's gravity. They are not physically strong or durable (being birdlike and thus likely having fragile skeletons doesn't help them either), relying on shields to protect them. However, even in Earth gravity they're pretty fast on their feet. There is also a subspecies of Kig-Yar that settled on the asteroid of T'vao, which has a much harsher environment and higher gravity than Eayn, and over generations the "Skirmishers" that resulted are much physically stronger, tougher and faster than their counterparts.
* The Kig'yar/Jackals/Skirmishers communicate among themselves and with the rest of the Covenant with screeching noises. Its implied that
* The Kilian Experience's, showing that Kilian took over everything but a single island in that time.
* The Killer, Ah Jong and Inspector Li Ying spend a scene tending one of the former's wounds, a gunshot to the arm, leading to Li using a bit of gunpowder from a shotgun shell and a match in order to cauterize the wound.
* The Killer, Ah Jong uses a swivel chair to good use when the bad guys attack, launching himself backward before blasting the hell out of the first guy to enter the room. It's later reenacted by Inspector Li Ying, who thoroughly spooks out his partner Chang while doing so.
* The Killer, and even that requires him getting armor-piercing incendiary rounds to have the kind of effect he wants.

* The Killer Angels. A Union soldier asks an imprisoned Confederate soldier why they are fighting. The Union soldiers are confused because the Confeerates say it's for their "rats" (rights).
* The Killer Angels notes that the bugle call in question was known back then as "Butterfield's Lullaby" and had no connotation of death.
* The Killer Angels (which kept Garnett's need to go on the charge without explaining the reasons why), his final scene shows him riding straight towards a loaded cannon, followed by his riderless horse emerging from a cloud of gunsmoke.
* The Killer Ascendant, has a sudden thought that Hilger is using the call to activate a bomb remotely and kills him. Later Rain wonders if he allowed Hilger to make the call just so he'd have an excuse to kill him.
* The Killer: At one point during the big shootout in the beach house, Chow Yun-Fat's title character blasts the hell out of a car to cover the escape of his maverick cop partner and his love interest. Eventually, the gas tank goes up and the car goes kaboom.
* The Killer Becomes the Killed: A murderer ends up murdered themselves.
* The Killer Becomes the Killed: A murderer is killed by someone else.
* The Killer Dame, use this as a means of communication when they're tied up by Hirogen captors.
* The Killer Dame. When Neelix decides to start carving it up for food, the crew wonder if they should invite the Hirogen back again.
* The Killer falls for Jenny this way. Then he accidentally blinds her during a shootout, and the plot happens.
* The killer from "Haunted", a previously non-violent man who had a psychotic break as a result of newly-unlocked memories of childhood trauma that he simply couldn't cope with.
* The killer from "North Mammon" has one about wanting revenge on his former high school friends who went on to have careers and families while he was reduced to working as a school janitor after a football injury cost him any real future.
* The Killer has Chow do it again during the three main action scenes - the restaurant massacre, the house shoot-out and the siege on the church. At one point, he wields a submachine gun and a shotgun.
* The killer in "Field of Fire" was on a ship that was blown up, and was one of only six survivors out of a crew of more than a thousand. His exact motives aren't fully explored, but it's implied that it may have begun with a case of survivor's guilt, which was twisted into a rage against those who didn't have to suffer the way he did.
* The Killer in Me: A character that is chasing or is chased by a rampant killer is revealed to the audience (and sometimes to themself) to be the killer in question.
* The Killer in Me: One of the protagonists has been the villain the whole time — which can be as much of a shock to them as to everyone else.
* The killer in "Sacrifice" becomes a lot more sympathetic when we learn his motive: the victim was developing a program that would have allocated educational resources based on a mathematical assessment of "potential", and the killer, who came from a poor neighborhood, knew that such a program would have denied him the opportunities that allowed him to escape and that other people like him would be denied pretty much any opportunity if the program were ever implemented.
* The Killer Inside Me graphically beats a woman to death for five whole minutes. Her face is mangled beyond belief when he's done.
* The killer in the episode "By Perjury" is a lawyer, and Cutter explicitly describes him as the adversarial system gone insane: he's willing to do
* The killer in "Traffic" has this on multiple levels. First off, he was injured in a hit-and-run and consequently had no concrete person to blame for his own misfortune, so he displaced that rage by identifying with people who had suffered similar injuries and then taking revenge for those incidents. And secondly, he didn't just target people who directly caused accidents, but rather pretty much anyone who was involved other than the injury victims themselves — his targets included accident witnesses and even a
* The Killer is kicked off by one of these. Specifically, Jeff and Lee are holding guns on each other, when Jeff fires off a shot... at an assassin approaching the house outside the window. This unfortunately leads to Lee shooting Jeff in the arm in retaliation, though it isn't fatal.

* The killer is stated to do this to pretty much anyone who comes even remotely close to being able to identify him.
* The Killer, Jenny's song from near the beginning of the movie is played on the soundtrack in instrumental several scenes later when Ah Jong saves the blinded Jenny from the muggers and he's telling her about how not everyone is untrustworthy. It plays again for Inspector Li after he is taken off the case, signifying that he's come to care about Jenny as well.
* The Killer Peach's victims are all decapitated by the katana in her possession.
* the killer physically resembled his victim; he'd opened the front door, saw his own reflection and mistook it for the man he'd come to kill, and panicked, shooting the mirror he made his way out to the garden and found his real target.
* The Killer protagonist often makes his assassinations look like either accidents or suicides to dissuade any further investigation that might ultimately lead to his capture.
* The Killers advises to "take a number where the blood's just barely dry..."
* The Killers, and then that goes further with the ending of the video showing the soundstage on which it was contained and filmed.
* The Killers: As Johnny is taking Sheila for a joyride in his race car, she deliberately puts her hand on his thigh. He slams the gas pedal down and the speedometer needle flips over.
* The Killers, based on the Ernest Hemingway short story, has a payroll heist with double and triple crosses among the thieves.
* The Killers, during the scene when frontman Brandon Flowers is playing checkers with Eric Roberts.
* The killer sends a note to the police, or a newspaper, or both, with a
* The Killer Shrews scene where a scientist, having just been bitten by one of the title monsters, sits down at a typewriter and records the process of his body succumbing to the shrew's poisonous saliva. Based upon the real-life incident of herpetologist Karl P. Schmidt (see folder "Real Life", below).
* The Killer Shrews: The giant shrews were played by dogs in shrew costumes.
* The Killer Shrews: Which looks even sillier than it sounds, since it's so obvious that the 'shrews' are actually Collie dogs in bad makeup.
* The Killers inflate and release balloons in the video for "Read My Mind". Mocked in the literal video version. "How'd we make these fly?"
* The Killers" is an animated narrative book-ended with live-action sequences.
* The Killers Of Krypton, a belt of Kryptonite asteroids is occupying Krypton's former orbit around Rao, for which Kara needs a radiation-proof suit to explore the region.
* The Killers Of Krypton: After the climatic battle between the Omega Men and the Citadel, Harry Hokum's body is seen floating through space.
* The Killers Of Krypton, an alien tries to bully Supergirl. He is twice as tall as her, his arms are twice as thick as hers, and he is easily taken down anyway.
* The Killers Of Krypton and then orders his head scientist to manufacture a army of Kryptonian clones. Nonetheless, Hokum demands to speed their development up, and his batch of new super-soldiers begin decaying quickly after being released.
* The Killers Of Krypton Archives — where she might find evidence regarding Rogol Zaar and the Circle's dirty dealings — by listing the massive amount of paperwork she must fill to be allowed access to the Tower.
* The Killers Of Krypton: As he watches Splyce fighting Supergirl, Harry Hokum states he wishes he had some popcorn.
* The Killers Of Krypton aside to discuss over a Kryptonian's arrival shortly after Rogol Zaar dropped by. In their defence, they were whispering. Yet still, they were talking about the self-proclaimed perpetrator of Krypton's destruction while standing three meters away from a Kryptonian, and they should know that whispering would not help.
* The Killers Of Krypton: As poking around a destroyed Kryptonian outpost, Z'ndr

Kol finds a recording of a settler sending a distress call to ask help because the colony was under attack.
* The Killers Of Krypton: As Supergirl and the Omega Men fight an army of Kryptonian clones, Harry Hokum watches the battle while inside his starship, which is standing by out of the planet.
* The Killers Of Krypton building a spaceship in the Fortress of Solitude. The story then flashes back to the prior conversation between Kal and Kara where she declared she was leaving Earth for a while to investigate Rogol Zaar's claims of destroying Krypton.
* The Killers Of Krypton calmly states she will be unable to find out anything evidence, or she will be easily dealt with anyway. Not only does Supergirl find out the truth, but also she defeats Gandelo with little trouble when the Empress decides to "deal" with her personally.
* The Killers Of Krypton, dozens of aliens trapped in liquid-filled transparent cylinders are found in Harry Hokum's science labs.
* The Killers Of Krypton: During one of his journeys across the galaxy, Z'ndr Kol finds the ruins of a ravaged Kryptonian outpost. As exploring, he stumbles upon a record where one of the settlers is sending a distress signal which ends up with the woman getting speared to death.
* The Killers Of Krypton, Empress Gandelo orders her minions to find and kill Supergirl before her investigation uncovers she is responsible for Krypton's destruction.
* The Killers Of Krypton gets in front of her and gives her a sad, ashamed look. Realizing she was about to commit murder, Kara gets horrified and spares her enemy's life.
* The Killers Of Krypton grabs Harry Hokum's left arm when he attempts to stab her with a knife. Right then Hokum is teleported away, but his left hand is sliced up and left behind by the teleporting portal.
* The Killers Of Krypton, Harry Hokum manages to capture Supergirl and take tissue samples for cloning. Then he wonders what he should do with her now she is not longer useful to him, since executing such a pretty girl would be a waste...
* The Killers Of Krypton, Harry Hookum tries to stab Supergirl, prompting her to sneer at him:
* The Killers Of Krypton has just fought and beaten Splyce among the radioactive remains of Krypton when she is suddenly teleported away. Supergirl passes out, and when she comes around, she finds herself in the Citadel, captured by war-mongering tyrant Harry Hokum.
* The Killers Of Krypton in planet Taavar, Supergirl punches her enemy into the clouds, then flies up and punches her into the island beneath them, triggering an earthquake.
* The Killers Of Krypton. Kara dons a Kryptonite-proof spacesuit to explore Krypton's radioactive remains. Unfortunately, the intensity of the Kryptonite radiation is too strong to be completely filtered out by the suit, and it can only protect Kara for a short while.
* The Killers Of Krypton, Kara explicitly says she cannot forget about Rogol Zaar's claims of destroying Krypton because she is still alive whereas her family and her friends are all dead.
* The Killers Of Krypton, Kara's ship travels across the galaxy quickly by leaping through the Hyperspace (which looks like a glowing, multi-colored limbo).
* The Killers Of Krypton, Kara tries to talk her mindless clones out of fighting her by stating they can overcome their programming and fight their rage and pain. Unfortunately, it does not work.
* The Killers Of Krypton revolves around Supergirl seeking and punishing the ones were behind of Rogol Zaar killing her family and friends.
* The Killers Of Krypton's face is clearly visible through her spacesuit's helmet while she's exploring the ruins of Krypton.
* The Killers Of Krypton, Supergirl builds her own faster-than-light spaceship to reach and navigate around the edges of the galaxy in a ridiculous lapse of time.
* The Killers Of Krypton, Supergirl flies high up above her and then unleashes her eye beams. Gandelo's body endures Kara's attack, but her heat vision mows down to ashes the island where Gandelo is standing on.

* The Killers Of Krypton, Supergirl has just scared an alien into confessing everything he knows about Rogol Zaar, but he is blasted to ashes by one of his own allies right when he is about to spill the beans:
* The Killers Of Krypton, Supergirl needs to escape from a squad of Green Lanterns surrounding her, so she looks up briefly before rocketing downwards, succeeding in catching off guard the Lanterns who expected her to fly off upwards.
* The Killers Of Krypton, Supergirl scours the edges of the galaxy and gets involved in at least one rebellion while investigating and uncovering the crimes of an interplanetary secret society.
* The Killers Of Krypton, Supergirl sets out to find out whether Rogol Zaar, who claimed to be real cause of Krypton's explosion, was a madman working independently or was being backed by someone. Eventually she learns he tried and failed to convince a clandestine organization known as The Circle to exterminate the Kryptonian race. However, Empress Gandelo went behind of the Circle's back and helped Rogol Zaar destroy Krypton. During the story, Kara faces Harry Hokum, and learns what Hokum found out about Gandelo's actions, so the empress gave him the strip-mining rights to Krypton's ruins as long as he kept his mouth shut, which is because he owns Kryptonian cloning tech.
* The Killers Of Krypton, Supergirl's faster-than-light spaceship is capable of travelling between planets and space colonies in a ridiculous lapse of time.
* The Killers Of Krypton, Supergirl travels through the galaxy in search of several hidden data stones recording evidence of a genocyde perpetrated by a secret galactic organization. Then, while Kara is resting by a lakeside in planet Tavaar, Krypto casually digs up one of the super-hidden Stones. Kara blurts out a "Are you joking?" line, and concludes her universe is weird.
* The Killers Of Krypton, Supergirl tunnels her way out a Green Lantern's construct by rapidly whirling around.
* The Killers Of Krypton, the bodies of the Trilium alien species are made of some crystalline, blue organic mineral.
* The Killers Of Krypton to freeze the manacles and then she shatters the strained metal.
* The Killers Of Krypton: When Krypto comes to Supergirl's help by bursting through a bar's ceiling, one of the patrons gets so shocked and frightened that he spits his drink out.
* The killer's own attorney appears at one point and appears less than thrilled to be working for
* the killer's own knowledge against them that was used to kill Marty Corrigan.
* The killers themselves recorded a large number of home movies in which they planned and discussed their future killing spree. Many of the "basement tapes", as these videos are sometimes known to
* The Killers' video for When You Were Young is a sordid love story set in Mexico with some great production values
* The Killers, where Santa threatens to kill the song's protagonist for being too naughty. The music video has Santa kidnapping the lead desert and brandishing a shovel at him.
* The Killers While the "Jenny Was A Friend Of Mine" and "Leave the Bourbon on the Shelf" don't qualify, "Midnight Show" fits pretty well.
* The Killer That Stalked New York, features one of these. The beginning and end of the movie, as well as some other moments in the movie such as key points in the public health response, are narrated by an unidentified man who tells us that he lived in New York City at the time of the smallpox outbreak.
* The Killer That Stalked New York, Matt tries to evade capture by the police by climbing out of a window onto one of these rather than go down the stairs were they will surely be waiting for him. Sheila goes after him, but she's so delirious from her smallpox infection that she's unable to get off the ledge safely. Dr. Wood has to save her by getting her off it so she doesn't fall to her death.
* The Killer That Stalked New York Sheila Bennet is the character who causes the most problems for the good guys by (unknowingly) spreading smallpox. She is not quite a bad guy, though she is involved in diamond smuggling.

* The Killer That Stalked New York Sheila Bennet succumbed to smallpox after telling the authorities what they needed to know to contain the outbreak.
* The Killer That Stalked New York Sheila Bennet (though he did not know she had the disease when he met her) and the doctor caring for the six-year-old girl who would go on to be the first diagnosed case of smallpox. The Health Commissioner puts him in charge of the effort to find whoever is spreading the disease.
* The Killer That Stalked New York Sheila then decides that she is going to kill Matt. As the narrator puts it, she has "the strength that comes when a woman has to settle a score with a man like Matt Krane".
* The Killer That Stalked New York subplot with diamond smuggling, infidelity, and revenge.
* The Killer That Stalked New York that the only viable course of action is to vaccinate the whole city—all eight million people.
* The Killer That Stalked New York, the General at the army lab in Washington, D.C. does one of these to reveal that he has a face full of scars from previously surviving smallpox.
* The Killer That Stalked New York, the index case was not a smuggler but a regular tourist, did not get infected in Cuba but in Mexico, and was not the subject of a contact-tracing manhunt but was rather admitted to hospital before the outbreak really began.
* The Killer That Stalked New York when Dr. Wood imagines what would happen if they fail to contain the smallpox outbreak.
* The killer that the player has been pursuing for the entire game is eventually revealed to be
* The Killer: The protagonist justifies his own life as a contract killer to the reader by pointing to past atrocities and other injustices in the world, reasoning that him taking out a few lives here and there won't make a difference in the grand scheme of things.
* The Killer: The protagonist kills a lot of his targets with a sniper rifle; he notes that he would probably have made a good army sniper if he didn't hate following orders.
* The killer was a cable installer who unlocked a window to a hidden attic while working in the house.
* The killer was a mob enforcer and a serial rapist who shot the brother when he interrupted a rape attempt. The victim of the rape was so scared that she fled the city. When she returned a year later, the killer hired a mook to kill her and gave him the same gun. The mook screwed up and killed the witness's sister instead.
* The killer was in the room below with a very powerful magnet, which he used to make the weight the victim was using fall on his windpipe and crush it.
* The killer was planning to invoke this trope in the second case of
* The killer was the lead stagehand, Murakawa, who killed Michiko to avenge his wife and child, whom Michiko ran over with her car two years ago. She was such a bitch that she laughed about it
* The Killer where Sean Archer and Castor Troy end up in a standoff at a church, with Archer's FBI agents and family on one side, and Castor's family and crew on the other, which is made very dramatic by the fact that Archer and Castor are wearing each other's face and both sides are trying to convince the other which is which. When the stalemate is finally broken, the shootout that commences is the most memorable of the entire movie.
* The Killing did not reveal who killed Rosie Larsen, creator Veena Sud was quick to say she never actually said the answer would be given this season. The fans counter-argue that her sitting back and saying nothing while all kinds of interviewers and critics said that exact thing is just as bad.
* The Killing Fields. The first half of the movie shows the American reporter Sydney Schanberg trying to escape from Cambodia in 1973. In the second part, Dith Pran - Sydney's Cambodian interpreter - finds himself stranded in Cambodia and caught up in the genocide. This is notably one of the few films in which a native of the country in question is allowed to become the film's protagonist.

* The Killing for a boy, thanks to her short hair and unkempt baggy clothes, as well as her overall masculine demeanour.
* The Killing Game Show and use the newfound fame to displace said government.
* the killing game was supposed to push Mitarai into broadcasting the Hope Video.
* The Killing Ground and burns him to secure his compliance with the ordeals to test him for Chaos taint. (Once they pass the first ordeal, a mind probe, Leodegarius is far more conciliatory.)
* The Killing Ground on several later occasions. Other cards drawn include The Hierophant, The Sorceror and Justice. No Death card this time.
* The Killing Ground, when the Space Marines make contact with Imperial forces, they first scout them carefully; Pasanius assures Uriel that their machinery is well-maintained, which points toward Imperial forces, but they still meet them with some trepidation, as there is no way to be sure. Later when the Grey Knights arrive, they take Uriel and Pasanius prisoner — none too gently — because they might be tainted and so enemies.
* The Killing. His role is to smuggle the guns onto the track for the others and to unlock the door to the counting room so they can gain access.
* The Killing in Season 3; she had called the police saying she had info on his identity.
* The Killing Joke, about a panel and a half, where it looks almost like the Joker will accept. The Joker even turns the concept into a joke that has even Batman laughing.
* The Killing Joke about how the world is so absurd and cruel, the only thing he can do is laugh at it.
* The Killing Joke as a Straw Nihilist who will do anything to prove to Batman that life is one big joke and that the only sensible response to it is to give into the madness.
* The Killing Joke chastises Batman for not admitting to his particular insanity.
* The Killing Joke (even though the story as a whole wasn't funny in the least).
* The Killing Joke features the Joker telling a joke that uses such a dilemma to Batman. Two men escape from an insane asylum by climbing onto the roof. One jumps to a nearby building, but the other is too scared to follow. The first offers to shine a flashlight across the way, letting the second walk across the beam of light. The second man replies "What do you think I am? Crazy? You'd turn it off when I was half way across!".
* The Killing Joke has referred to the fact that the water on the ground at some point looks red, maybe with blood. The recoloured deluxe edition shows that it's not red (although the afterword of that edition nevertheless affirms the ambiguity).
* The Killing Joke is paralleled by the joke at the end. How the parallel works can be interpreted many ways.
* The Killing Joke on Joker's part for his relationship with Batman; Batman is insane but somewhat functional and tries futilely to help people like Joker who cannot safely function in society.
* The Killing Joke: The Joker finds he is out of bullets when his gun produces a flag saying "CLICK CLICK CLICK".
* The Killing Joke to prove his claim that one bad day is enough to reduce the sanest man to lunacy).
* The Killing Joke trying to break Commissioner Gordon. He fails. Ironically in virtually every adaptation of Joker's origin story, this trope is the main reason he... um, well... is the way he is.
* The Killing Joke" was not intended to be canon by him, but DC liked it so much or it was so popular that it was made canon. Some of his fans seem to claim DC is "lazy" for doing so.
* The Killing, Linden discovers the serial killer of young girls she's been chasing all along is her own ex-partner (and lover). Following a lengthy conversation where he attempts to explain himself, she shoots him dead, in cold blood.
* The Killing, Linden doesn't find out who the real killer is until it's too late for Seward.

* The Killing, Nikki befriends the black parking lot attendant a little too well, causing the attendant to keep showing up to chat when Nikki is getting ready to take his shot. Nikki eventually has to call him a nigger to get rid of him.
* The Killing, Nikki's part in the caper is to shoot the leading horse in the race to guarantee that everyone's attention is focused on the track while the robbery goes down.
* The Killing of a Chinese Bookie. Things hit a snag when Cosmo mows through all the Chinese gangsters and lives. The mob then tries to put out a hit on him, but he proves to be more than they can handle. During one confrontation, Cosmo dismisses the mobsters as "amateurs."
* The Killing of an Egg), a 1977 short by Dutch animator Paul Driessen that ran from time to time on Nickelodeon back in the early 1990s.
* The Killing of a Sacred Deer, the second stage of Martin's curse on Dr. Murphy's family is the inability to eat food, which makes his affected son and daughter lose weight. Not only do they completely lack appetites, but attempting to put food in their mouths makes them instantly cough it back up. Dr. Murphy and his wife Anna are eventually forced to intubate the kids so they can get enough nutrients to live.
* The Killing of Satan on the other hand runs away with Red Tuxedo Satan and his gang of flamboyant sorcerers.
* The Killing of Sister George features the butch June "George" Buckridge with the femme Alice 'Childie' McNaught and Mercy Croft, the butch trying to break them up.
* The Killing of Sister George (lesbian main character, lesbian supporting character; subject matter includes queer female romance)
* The Killing of Sister George, one scene was filmed in a real and extremely famous lesbian bar, Gateways. Perhaps due to the time period (1969), it's not as wild as your stereotypical gay venue. Most of the extras were regulars — and many lost their jobs as a result.
* The Killing Room (2009). The protagonists are locked in a room and told that only one of them will get out alive. They're given a test question that requires a numerical answer, and the person whose answer is furthest from the correct one will be killed. A digital clock counts down the time until they have to give the answer. There's actually plenty of time to think up the answer (several hours), as the point is to put as much psychological pressure on the occupants as possible and seeing the clock adds to this.
* The Killing Room of the experiment apparently escapes his captors, only to end up in another room with two more prisoners, to undergo Phase 2 of the experiment.
* The Killings at Badger's Drift), the discovery of an extremely sexualised nude painting of a woman by her artist brother confirms the incestuous relationship between them, which motivated the crimes.
* The Killing saying they had absolutely no reason to want to keep watching.
* The Killing Star, first contact with the aliens consists of them slamming relativistic missiles into the Earth, nearly wiping out humanity.
* The Killing Star Once the birds are brought back and the ecosystem restored, the technology becomes an ordinary part of life, with miniaturized dinosaurs becoming household pets by 2070.
* The Killing Star shows how destructive the liberal application of kinetic energy can be when a barrage of solid matter accelerated to near light speed is used to destroy all advanced life on Earth. They are appropriately called relativistic bombs.
* The Killing Star, some of the survivors of an alien attempt to exterminate humanity use "absorbic bombs", which turn energy into matter. It's theorized that enough such bombs can make the sun implode.
* The Killing Star that destroy most of human civilization across the Solar System.
* The Killing Star was the richest country and last democracy on Earth before the destruction of civilization.
* The Killing Star. While they're referred to as "The Intruders" more often, both by the characters and the narration, the word "aliens" is still used.

* The Killing suffer from this on a larger scale, as if the case appears to be completely wrapped up with episodes still to go it's pretty certain that the detectives are barking up the wrong tree.
* The Killing the perspective of the characters involved in setting up the robbery are shown.
* The Killing. The series is all about solving the murder of Rosie Larson at any cost. Early on the case bring the police to a Seattle mosque where the imam explains that no one in the community is interested in helping the police because the police haven't even bothered to investigating missing children from their neighborhood. After that, the implications of an entire show dedicated to a missing white girl are sort of just awkwardly ignored.
* The Killing: The thug Maurice, whose job during the heist is to brawl with the police as a distraction, is played by Kola Kwariani, a professional wrestler.
* The Killing Way. The lead character is an ex-soldier of Arthur's who sleuths for him after being handicapped in battle. While not actually the first Arthurian books to take the unusual whodunit angle, they're the first ones to be historical-styled. For instance, Merlin is suspected of murder, but it seems Saxon spies did it, and it gets complicated by the warlords of Britain trying to elect a new High King.
* The Killmoulis was an ugly brownie that hung around mills. It helped the miller work but was known to eat food and pull tricks and pranks.
* The "kill or cure" hangover remedy Daisy administers to Fat Charlie in
* The Kill Order approximately a decade before the events at the Glade, while the latter is a direct prequel to the first book.
* The Kill Order has a flashback where Thomas's mother calls him "Thomas" before he's handed over to WCKD, and in a later scene Teresa, having recovered her memories, mentions a memory of her own mother calling out "Teresa" long before she was ever taken by WCKD. All of this suggests that the names they've been using are their real names - which is implied to be true for the other Gladers as well.
* The Kill Order, Mark and Trina with Alec and Lana turn into a makeshift family after the Flare took away their family.
* The Kill Order, Mark often flashes back to living in a skyscraper, because the city was flooded with scorching water after the solar flares melted the ice caps.
* The Kill Order opens with Mark living peacefully in a small Appalachian village with the other survivors of the Flare. No guess that it's going to meet a grisly end, if only so Mark can go outside his comfort zone.
* The Kill Point after hopping onto a passing train to escape the pursuing SWAT team.
* The Kill Point as the enemy soldier he killed is someone he hopes one day to emulate.
* The Kill Point due a variety of circumstances forcing the robbers to hole up inside the building, such as an off-duty FBI agent starting a firefight outside, and a security guard from an armored truck getting involved after he drove back to pick up something he lost. They do manage to steal a few million dollars after forcing the bank manager to wire the money to another bank in a way that wouldn't arouse suspicion.
* The Kill Point, Horst Cali constantly corrects people's grammar while they're trying to talk to him about the ongoing hostage situation.
* The Kill Point: One of the hostages, Ashley, tries to distract Mr. Pig, who shows some sexual interest in her and makes various awkward attempts at flirting, so she can grab his gun. She later tries to arrange a "date" with him so the other hostages can try to overpower the hostage takers.
* The Kill Point: Quincy, a police sniper stationed on the roof opposite the bank, is often shown making wisecracks about the situation and playfully bantering with his spotter.
* The Kill Point. Some of their old comrades later reunite in Pittsburgh to help them stage a break-out.
* The Kill Point that they're ex-military who are already used to sleeping in a war zone with bombs going off around them. Mr. Wolf starts prank calling the FBI negotiator until she gets so annoyed that she turns it off.

* The Kill Point: The bank robbers' final ploy to escape involves dressing up three of the hostages as bank robbers, and disguising themselves as hostages so they can escape from the scene in an ambulance.
* The Kill Point: The FBI takes over negotations from the Pittsburg P.D. after one of their agents, who happened to be in the bank during the initial robbery, dies in the hospital from injuries sustained in the shoot-out. The new FBI negotiator immediately tries to throw her weight around, and proves to be far more incompetent than Horst Cali in dealing with the situation (although some of the things that happen are beyond her control, such as an independent sniper trying to kill one of the hostage takers), leading to him reassuming control of negotations.

* The Kill Team is based on the 2009 Maywand District Murders during the War in Afghanistan.
* The Kimera research vessel encountered in the 2nd season was a highly unusual spacecraft, designed as a labyrinthine laboratory to test the higher reasoning abilities of other species. Its obstacle-course like interior design included pits of fluid that contained predatory creatures as well as other seemingly nonsensical additions to a spaceship.
* The Kimmunicator has never once failed due to signal interference, unless it was deliberately jammed. It works anywhere on Earth or in near-orbit space, even deep underground. At one point, the Kimmunicator sprouts wheels in order to get Kim. According to Wade, it also has its own satellite. She has, however, lost it a few times, and when the writers got sick of that plot, they gave her a compact wrist-mounted version. Justified, though, because Kim has helped so many people and done so many favors for others, that everybody helps boost the signal worldwide for her.
* The Kindaichi Case Files a lot of murder rely on this. This was even done by Kindaichi (albeit, not a murder case), of all people!
* The Kindaichi Case Files, also counts although it's more of "Detective who knows some magic tricks". This knowledge is very useful in solving several impossible crimes since several tricks uses similar basic concepts as how magic performance works.
* The Kindaichi Case Files also does so. More often than not, the rant makes the killer a lot more sympathetic than his/her actions do.
* The Kindaichi Case Files amount of money and physical exertion the killer needs to go through in order to pull off their tricks, not to mention the taxing facade they need to put up to pretend to be an innocent civilaition, only for everything to completely fall apart when Kindaichi gets involved.
* The Kindaichi Case Files. A rich butterfly collecter is so obsessed with butterflies that when he finds an amnesiac young man with a butterfly-shaped scar on his back, he takes the stranger home to become his assistant, and frequently forcing him to strip whenever he wants to look at the scar.
* The Kindaichi Case Files bickering rather than any serious attempt to challenge or undermine Kindaichi's efforts.
* The Kindaichi Case Files business, and the man he murdered found out and was blackmailing him over this.
* The Kindaichi Case Files can get is when Hajime has to solve a botched murder only to find out that it was a misunderstanding, the victim got better and all is forgiven.
* The Kindaichi Case Files ends every story arc with one of these, although they rarely happen in a parlor, instead usually occurring in the same place where one of the victims was killed. The summation is usually accompanied by a dramatic explanation of exactly how the killer carried out his crimes. Kindaichi will explain everything — motive, method, all the secrets behind the case — without revealing the killer's identity, leaving that for the very end.
* The Kindaichi Case Files ends up killing three people, and attempting to kill a fourth, to cover up a misdeed many years ago.
* The Kindaichi Case Files, Hajime Kindaichi is the grandson of famous detective character Kosuke Kindaichi, created by Seishi Yokomizo.

* The Kindaichi Case Files have won the trust of Inspector Kenmochi and, to a lesser extent, Inspector Akechi. Whenever a clueless district officer tries to stop him from snooping around, Kindaichi could always get their reference to force them to allow him continue the investigation.
* The Kindaichi Case Files) isn't exactly the kind of thing that'll get him into a good school. He's basically lazy about everything EXCEPT a good murder mystery. When one of those comes along, he's incredibly dedicated.
* The Kindaichi Case Files, is the most desired girl in her high school, and in most cases, at least one guy is interested in her. She has exactly the same body type as other girls in the series and her face is very normal too.
* The Kindaichi Case Files manga had Hajime suffer from this. Worse yet, Miyuki thought it was something in his pocket and started going through them. The next scene Hajime has a slap-print on his face.
* The Kindaichi Case Files manga, when childhood friend Miyuki was jokingly speculated by her friends to have feelings for him.
* The Kindaichi Case Files: Once happens in "Opera House Third Murder Case". All evidence pointed at a certain person, and thus that person was locked with the key on constant watch. The next day, that person was found murdered. It was deliberately set up by the real killer to create this locked-room situation.
* The Kindaichi Case Files story, Kindaichi proves that a victim whose handedness was unknown was left-handed based on his use of left-handed scissors, specifically designed to only function efficiently for lefties.
* The Kindaichi Case Files. The victims are all survivors of a crashed ship, with the same initials. One of them had worked out this equation and pushed a girl off who was trying to climb aboard a full lifeboat; in falling, she managed to grab their keychain with their initials.
* The Kindaichi Casefiles, thinking that Kindaichi stood her up on their date, and goes out on her own, not knowing what actually happened. The last scene of the episode has Kindaichi apparently alone in jail shouting for his innocence, even solving the crime himself (having come to the same conclusion as Akechi did).

* The "kinetic barriers". Capable of deflecting small, fast-moving objects (i.e., bullets) but will yield to slower-moving objects ("so the subject can sit down without knocking away their chair"-gametext). These are the game's equivalent to "second chance armor" in the sense that it offers total protection from enemy fire, but only until the barrier's very small amount of power is exhausted and the shield cuts out. Interestingly enough, the shields' ability to only deflect certain shapes of objects traveling at certain speeds is used heavily in-game to create bullets that fly at different speeds or are shaped differently than the standard to cut through kinetic barriers more effectively.
* The "Kinetic Bombardment System" (commonly nicknamed "Rods from God" and "Brilliant Pebbles") is meant to fire not missiles, but 20-meter-long tungsten rods. Their kinetic energy from their fall, plus the plasma sheth created by
* The Kinetic-Energy Harpoon is mentioned, although not used on-page, in "The Nano Flower" by the same author; described as a "poor man's nuke"
* The Kineticist class uses a resource called "burn" to fuel their abilities. A kineticist can choose to accept burn in order to use more powerful class abilities, and they even get bonuses depending on how many points of burn they've accumulated. The downside to accepting burn is that each point of burn comes with an amount of nonlethal damage that can't be healed until they've rested and lost all of their accumulated burn. While it's not inherently crippling, it does severely reduce how much damage a kineticist can take before they pass out.
* The Kinetics power Siphon Speed allows you to drain the speed from an enemy and become fast yourself. The same powerset also has Speed Boost, a much-loved buff that bestows Super Speed on other players.

* The King and I, as the Thai language doesn't even have a word for 'frozen' and in the time frame of the setting uneducated Thais would be likely to believe it was made up. The snow subplot is based on an anecdote of Anna Leonowens that the royal children refused to believe snow was real until she asked the King to give a guest lecture on it.
* The King and I comes to a high boil during the 'Shall We Dance' number. Anna is clearly having trouble breathing when the King puts his hand on her waist.
* The King and I conjures up. His first pair of minions are giant traditional Chinese dragons who ruthlessly attack the teacher's ship to the point that it's near sinking. How are they defeated? Whistling. Everyone aboard whistles a happy tune and they dissolve into nothingness.
* The King and I. He orders the men to bow to show respect, and calls on his mother, Lady Thiang, to demonstrate how "the ladies will make dip, as in Europe."
* The King and I Her Serene Highness Princess Vudhichalerm Vudhijaya (green dress, far left).) So in this detail, the animated version is more accurate than the original!
* The King and I — which, ironically, ends up being a huge success much to Lois's chagrin.
* The King and I reprising his role as King Mongkut, and the occasional recycling of dresses and jewelry from the movie.
* The King and I she serves him a breakfast composed of random food items. When he asks her what's the deal, Lois says that she did to his breakfast what he did to her production.
* The King and I's performance as the King was such that Anna is now the secondary focus of the show, despite the fact that the King sings exactly once and has much less stage time.

* The King and I spoke, Christiane Noll sang. The Prince also has Allen D. Hong as the speaking voice, and David Burnham as the singing. Tuptim was voiced by Armi Arabe, and sung by Tracy Venner.
* The King and I, takes off the ring which the King not long before the confrontation had insisted she put on, and tells the Kralahome to return it to him. The script calls this "the final humiliation for his King to suffer."
* The King and I tends to stare with her mouth slightly agape in response to anything that calls for powerful emotion.
* The King and I that did not come with undergarments, accidentally did this to some visitors from England. One of the visitors unintentionally scares them with his monocle, causing them to lift up their skirts and run away.
* The King and I. The King prepares to whip Tuptim for running away but decides he just can't do it with Anna watching.
* The King and I. The real Anna was in her late 20s or early 30s (though she most likely claimed to be younger than she was) when she came to Siam, while King Mongkut was nearly 60, but they're usually both played by performers in their mid to late 30s or 40s.
* The King and I; the real Chulalongkorn's mother, Queen Ramphoei, actually died when her son was just nine years old, the same year Anna Leonowens first arrived in Siam.
* The King and I, this happens to the King after his hot air balloon goes down.
* The King and I, though only Margaret Landon's novel is credited as a source.
* The King and I Tuptim and Lun Tha contrast with Anna and the King's non-romantic, frequently antagonistic but nevertheless strong relationship. This is an unusual case of the secondary couple having the stronger singing parts.
* , the king and queen have one of the most trusting and loving relationships in folklore. The queen loves the king for his kindness and wisdom, and the king loves the queen for her own cleverness.
* The king and queen of Atlantis, who are both last seen as a recently added giant floating stone head and the Atlantean Crystal, respectively, while their son-in-law and daughter become the next king and queen.
* The King and the Clown, claiming she wants to find out whether he's really a man or not.
* The King and the Clown ends with Gong-gil and Jaeng-sang having a conversation about reincarnation before jumping off of the tightrope as Jaeng-sang throws his fan. Simultaneously, troops invade the palace but neither the King or Nok-su are seen to be captured/killed before the film ends. The viewer would have to be pretty far into denial though to think any of them lived.
* The King and the Clown, it is strongly implied that they will be reborn and meet again in the next life.
* The King and the Clown: When Jaeng-sang and Gong-gil arrive in Seoul they crash the show of some local jesters and engage in a little showdown. Their double act clearly wins and that evening the Seoul clowns propose to join forces.
* The King and the Mockingbird falls for the Shepherdess, another painting come to life, and the main conflict of the film revolves around the king trying to marry the Shepherdess while not letting her be with her actual love, the Chimney Sweep.
* The King and the Warlord, which introduces a number of Night Goblin units, brings Night Goblins who ride squigs, spherical fungoid creatures provided with a giant fanged mouth, strong hopping legs, and nasty attitudes.
* The King Beyond the Wall sends a messenger inviting Craster to join his army (which of course would mean submitting to his authority). Craster sends back the man without his tongue, which he nails to his wall.
* The King Black Dragon, like the player character, is able to return from the dead because
* The King Cake is a traditional pastry eaten during the Mardi Gras season, and oftentimes contains a small trinket inside representing the infant Jesus, usually a tiny plastic baby. The cake is hollow inside and the baby is easy enough to spot, but bakers have lately began leaving the baby outside the cake for the consumer to insert themselves, to avoid liability on the off-chance some idiot chokes on it while wolfing down a piece.

* The King character who is central to the game when playing in Regicide mode in
* The king does not want to see her married off and resorts to this as a form of
* The Kingdom (2007) has the FBI assisting the Saudi Interior Ministry investigate a terrorist attack in Saudi soil.
* The Kingdom and the Crown, boy saves girl from getting raped, girl warns boy of Roman ambush, girl is sent to Rome and boy follows to sneak her out and bring her home.
* The Kingdom and the Crown has an old Roman Centurion named Sextus Rubrius.
* The Kingdom and the Crown, punctuated by the occasional crack of a whip, where they find Jesus throwing money tables around and using the whip to drive back anyone who approaches.
* The Kingdom and the Crown the Greek girl Livia's Jewish husband is killed during a Roman ambush. Rather than return to her home, she opts to remain in his home village.
* The Kingdom and the Crown: While describing the events leading up to the birth of Jesus, Mary offhandedly mentions that Joseph marrying her after she was found with child was him basically admitting he was the one who got her pregnant in the first place.
* The Kingdom, aspects of the multiverse began to appear inside the Planet Krypton restaurant Batman is in.
* The Kingdom believes that Superman is a divine being, even to the point where he builds a church and offers up prayers to him.
* The Kingdom Beneath the Waves, a lashlite (a dragon-like humanoid) is exiled for dooming his clan to damnation by not giving them the proper last rites. He pleads that he couldn't, as lashlite death rites require the dead to be eaten by their clansfolk, leaving "nothing for the enemy". He was the last one left alive out of hundreds, so he couldn't possibly eat them all.
* The Kingdom Beyond The Waves donate from their own "body fluids". Unlike most examples, he and the other siltempters can retrieve this oil and use it to lubricate their mechanisms again between baths.
* The Kingdom Chums, there was a series, although it was obviously too obscure for IMDb and Wikipedia.
* The Kingdom counterparts, are transported to Planet Krypton by Hunter to fight Gog with the various items collected, with Batman saying something like "this isn't a museum...it's an arsenal". Where they become museum pieces of a sort is that these items have appeared during the Silver and Bronze Age period DC Universe.
* The Kingdom (DC). Batman raised Nightwing and even legally adopted him in the main DC universe, making these two kinda-sorta uncle and niece. This is one reason Dick is not especially happy with their relationship.
* The Kingdom) is now gone and that he can escape into the mainstream DC Universe again...someday.
* The Kingdom: Janet Mayes (Jennifer Garner). Justified in that she is an FBI agent. Currently 18% of FBI agents are female, it would not be terribly unlikely for her to appear. Now the question of whether they would send her to Saudi Arabia is a different story.
* The Kingdom Keepers book, Finn's mother says this line after Finn explains to her what's been going on, but he cuts her off, saying that she won't understand.
* The Kingdom Keepers rides brought to life. "It's a small world" is a lot less cute when the dolls are trying to kill you.
* The Kingdom Keepers, she gushes about Finn meeting "a cute girl", earning a look.
* The Kingdom Keepers suffer in their holographic DHI forms carry over when they wake up in their beds.
* The Kingdom Keepers to indicate that stronger language was used but in book five this is not the case after a character states "You about scared the pee out of me!"
* The Kingdom Keepers Virtual Magic Kingdom avatar dresses this way as well.
* The Kingdom, mainly due to two members, 2011 Top Prospect Tournament winner Mike Bennett and 2013 Top Prospect Tournament winner Matt Taven. The RoHbots didn't agree with either decision then and by 2015 still hadn't warmed up to either man after years of pushes, especially not with tag team title runs that saw them emulate the Hardy Boys. Sorry thing is they are decent enough wrestlers, decent enough for Taven to get a "thank you" chant at least once, just a little too hyped for fans' tastes.

* The Kingdom of America is the result of the failures of the Constitutional Convention leading to
* The Kingdom of Avalon is very much medieval England with some Arthurian legend thrown in. They get grail knights and longbows and even the men of Sherwood, and are naturally enemies of the Celtic Gaelic Nations.
* The Kingdom of Bretonnia has its own version of the three feudal estates: Nobles, who thanks to Bretonnia's warrior culture all have to be anointed knights and serve as warriors and rulers, Damsels of the Lady who serve as priests and consists of female children with magic taken and trained by
* The Kingdom of Corona, Eugene leaving Rapunzel on the boat therefore goes unexplained and made it seem like he really abandoned her for the tiara.
* The Kingdom of Daein is shown to have an impressive military might in
* The Kingdom of Ehb map has a temperate south, and a north of extremes. The northwest is snowy and frigid, while the northeast is sandy and arid.
* The Kingdom Of Endless Dreams. It's the Extra Field theme, the most terrifying Christmas carnival ever.
* The Kingdom of Gods, several godlings work at an upscale bordello due to curiosity or human interest, so mortals can pay for the spiritually transcendent experience of sleeping with divinity.
* The Kingdom of Lancre has several governmental agencies, departments and bodies. It's just that
* The Kingdom of Liberl, the setting of the first Arc, is vaguely based off of England, being a monarchy with a mostly English naming scheme.
* The Kingdom of Libya under its only King Idris was overthrown in 1969 by a cadre of the Free Officers Movement led by Colonel Muammar Gaddafi.
* The Kingdom of Little Wounds, given Isabel lost her looks years ago and is widely known to be not right in the head. Subverted when Christian is only bedding his wife to try to hide the fact that he's interested in men.
* The Kingdom of Little Wounds. Jacob fled the country (presumably to Denmark) because it wasn't safe for him to be a Protestant in Skyggehavn.
* The Kingdom of Little Wounds, Midi isn't actually a witch, but everyone—including the other protagonist Ava—treats her like she is because she is "The Negresse."
* The Kingdom of Little Wounds pregnant no matter how hard she tries to abort.
* The Kingdom of Little Wounds. She's barely twelve at the time, but her father needs the marriage and the alliance desperately.
* The Kingdom of Little Wounds, the kingdom acts like this is the case, going so far as to call her "The Perished Lily."
* The Kingdom of Little Wounds, this was King Christian and Queen Isabel. Isabel has lost her looks since then, but Christian always looked a bit like a sheep.
* The Kingdom of Louisiana is the central part. It's another monarchy, founded by French monarchists during the when France was split during French Revolution. The first ruler, Louis I, was
* The Kingdom of Manticore itself starts off with 5: Terran, Manticoran (the official one for the kingdom), Gryphon, Sphinxian (the latter two for their own seasons and days), and Medusan. Each additional planet that's added to the Kingdom adds another one.
* The Kingdom of Marley, which resides beyond the three Walls. They practice systemic racism and exclusion against the people of Eldian descent (bonus points for the Jewish overtones of the Eldian culture and mythology), forcing them into conditions that heavily remind of the treatment of Jews during The Holocaust.
* The Kingdom of Mistral on the eastern continent of Anima has a culture very reminiscent of Japan; houses with sloping rooftops, kitsune masks,
* The Kingdom of Navarre was a medieval kingdom in the northern Iberian Peninsula, at a time in which what is now Spain was divided between several petty kingdoms.

Gradually these kingdoms conglomerated until all of modern Spain save Navarre was at least unofficially unified by 1492. In 1512, Spain conquered virtually all of Navarre except for a tiny portion north of the Pyrenees, where the former Kings of Navarre remained as a kind of government in exile. In 1589, King Henry of Navarre succeeded to the French throne. From 1589 right up to 1830, every French monarch (except Napoleon) styled himself 'King of France
* The Kingdom of Olenia can enter a civil war to overthrow King Johan and restore Princess Velvet, or to abolish monarchy altogether and create a communist state.
* The kingdom of Overture is based on 19th-Century Europe as a whole, being a colonial empire with colonies all over the world that has just gone through a major industrial revolution.
* The Kingdom Of Paramithi: The king and queen only wear their robes for their royal duties. They will otherwise be shown wearing formal attire.
* The Kingdom of Shadow feature Zayl and his "companion" Humbart. Humbart is a spirit bound to a skull. Nothing else, just a skull. He can see, hear, and talk, but that is about it. Zayl makes it a point to keep Humbart hidden when he's around anyone else, lest they think he's evil.
* The Kingdom of Swadia is Western European, sort of a hybrid between France and the German states, or like a longer lasting version of the Frankish Empire. The classic
* The Kingdom of Tantal represents lust. The name is derived from the word "tantalize", which itself is derived from King Tantalus, a figure from
* The Kingdom of the Nords is Scandinavian in tone, but refreshingly not of the stereotypical Viking raider sort (Viking-esque raiders are a separate mini faction of bandits in the game). The portrayal of Nords is more akin to Danish Vikings, the Normans or even the Anglo-Saxons. Their armies are very infantry-heavy and they have the sturdiest infantry in the game.
* The Kingdom of the Vaegirs is Eastern European in flavour, mostly Slavic (and particularly Russian) in tone (with some Polish, Balkan and Hungarian elements thrown in). A mix of infantry and heavy cavalry, with big axes and polearms being the most common weapon and few soldiers carrying shields.
* The Kingdom of Torna, which was destroyed, represented wrath. Its name is a play on the Dutch word "toorn", or "anger."
* The Kingdom of Uraya represents envy. "Uraya" comes from the Japanese word "urayamashi", which means "to be envious".
* The Kingdom of Vacuo (found in the western reaches of the central continent of Sanus) was a once-prosperous area that is now isolated to the point where the inhabitants don't have as advanced technology as the outside world has, but still feature massive reserves of valuable natural resources (in this case,
* The Kingdom of Valdemar has the Forest of Sorrows; subverted in that though it certainly is dangerous... that's only if you have evil or cruel intent. A toddler would be safe in there but a group of bandits would get torn to pieces.
* The Kingdom of Witchland and its many vasall states in E. R. Eddison's
* The kingdom protista is for all organisms that don't fit into other kingdoms in traditional taxonomy. The new system (with Domain) is partially fueled by an attempt to fix that problem.
* The Kingdoms of Evil employs gas-filled flying squid as a means of transportation.
* The Kingdoms of Evil Evil, leaving all nations to rework their systems of morality. The problem is getting there so he can go home and finish college.
* The Kingdoms of Terror, Lone Wolf needs to follow someone fast. There's a horse in the open; he can either buy it legitimately off the owner, or just steal it. The latter's riskier but a heck of a lot cheaper.
* The kingdoms of the Aldabreshin archipelago in Juliet E. McKenna's
* The Kingdom: There is a series of terror attacks in Saudi Arabia - and we follow a group of investigating US agents.
* The kingdom where the hippogriffs-turned-seaponies live is called Seaquestria.
* The Kingfisher, and the Circle persecutes the Crowboys with the ostensible excuse of keeping vampires secret.

* The Kingfisher, a vampire webcomic that has no truly important human characters. Fortunately for these muggles, they are often seduced and left alive.
* The Kingfisher Comes in real handy when he's shot with incendiary rounds during the day.
* The Kingfisher features vampires that require invitation. There are degrees of invitation and other complications, most of which isn't explained in the comic unless it becomes an issue.
* The Kingfisher is a vampire comic in which the condition can be communicated. It usually doesn't affect the mind of its victims directly, unless they become too hungry for blood.
* The Kingfisher: Most of the vampires in this comic show no signs of boredom or guilt at the prospect of immortality. Dragomir vampires especially seem to enjoy eternal life.
* The Kingfisher risk mindless blood frenzy if they don't drink blood regularly. This isn't the focus of the story so it doesn't come up much.
* The Kingfisher some vampires can turn into animals, animalistic monster forms, mist, and/or some kind of shadowy form. These abilities are all at will and seem limited by the vampire's lineage.
* The Kingfisher: The young vampires in this comic are shown adjusting to their new unlife. Only one doesn't have moral issues, having been a killer in breathing days, but Nick the Cutter has other problems.
* The Kingfisher: Vampirism doesn't make one inherently evil, but the pro-human vampires are few: mainly Helen, Vitus, Jack, Tristan, and Darren. Notably, some of the least powerful characters in the story.
* The King in Yellow, as does The First Book of the Kellith. Unfortunately for the future of said universe, that particular book was actually published as a horror novel, and it was a best seller.
* The King in Yellow. He keeps a swimming pool full of the stuff in his house, which is kind of asking for trouble.
* The King in Yellow, in which an artist created a liquid that turned anything stuck into it into stone. He killed a lot of flowers and bugs. Then his wife fell in. This petrification was also reversible, but by the time anyone found out, the artist had shot himself.
* The King in Yellow: The eponymous play, supposedly published in 1889, drove the author to suicide, and all who read it to suffer a tragic fate, or go mad from irresistible revelations.
* The King in Yellow to Captain Smith's taskforce, and Weyland refuses to take any steps to stop them in the face of the Senate's cries for their removal.
* The King in Yellow which simultaneously enlightens and drives mad anyone who reads it all. (Presumably a production would be impossible to stage.) Only a few brief excerpts, not enough to clearly indicate the plot or subject matter, are ever given. Likewise, the Yellow Sign is never actually described. Chambers' stories predated Lovecraft's Cthulhu Mythos stories and Lovecraft cited them as an inspiration.
* The King is being dropped as a mascot so that the chains can focus on products and "there are no plans to bring the King back anytime soon".
* The King James translation of Deuteronomy 23:17 is as follows: "There shall be no whore of the daughters of Israel, nor a sodomite of the sons of Israel".
* The Kingkiller Chronicle (60+ pages of faerie sex dropped into the middle of a heroic fantasy novel) distract from the more interesting main plot. The fact that Kvothe's motivation for running off with Felurian is basically "might as well since I'm here" doesn't help either.
* The Kingkiller Chronicle: After first meeting Kvothe, Chronicler has to amend his impression of the man's age several times, first realizing that he's younger than 30, then deciding that he's not a day over 25. Kvothe has seen and done quite a lot in his short life.
* The Kingkiller Chronicle Amyr whose actions are "above reproach", to the point that if they walk up to someone on the street and kill them, no one would question their decision.

* The Kingkiller Chronicle appliance to people who can afford them, and Kvothe makes easy money on the side by manufacturing them.
* The Kingkiller Chronicle as irrelevant to his story, you realize how important all those little children's rhymes are.
* The Kingkiller Chronicle, a week is called a "span" and has eleven days. It's unknown how many spans there are to a month, nor months to a year.
* The Kingkiller Chronicle barely covering her, he similarly struggles with the urge to gawk.
* The Kingkiller Chronicle can cross over to the mortal world, and on a moonless night, mortals might get pulled into Fae.
* The Kingkiller Chronicle, creatures called "sipquicks" are mentioned that are strongly implied to be hummingbirds.
* The Kingkiller Chronicle future, only the worst future it can provoke with one short conversation.
* The Kingkiller Chronicle gives us a euphemism-laden nursery rhyme, ripe with foreshadowing:
* The Kingkiller Chronicle gives us this gem from Count Threpe: "know a lady by her manner, a man by his cloth." when advising Kvothe to stay fashionable abroad.
* The Kingkiller Chronicle has Lanre, who was once a great hero but went mad with grief when he was unable to use his power to resurrect his beloved.
* The Kingkiller Chronicle, he's quite single-minded about pursuing his desires.
* The Kingkiller Chronicle. He's rumored to have started a bar fight with a man who wouldn't stop saying "utilize" instead of "use." Another version of the rumor is that the man wouldn't stop saying "moreover."
* The Kingkiller Chronicle is an omniscient being that was sealed in a tree in the Fae realm. Unfortunately, it's actively malevolent, so it carefully picks its words in order to create the worst outcome possible.
* The Kingkiller Chronicle is full of mysteries, only some of which are resolved (the third book is forthcoming). Right off the bat, the series's framing device raises many questions about how the narrator came to be in his current situation after the events of the main plot. Fan theories abound: for instance, there's a hypothesis about the hidden identity of one character based on some wordplay in a song.
* The Kingkiller Chronicle is when he is flogged - he takes a drug beforehand to dull the pain, which has the side effect of constricting the blood vessels and causing him not to bleed - earning him the nickname "Bloodless".
* The Kingkiller Chronicle. It basically consists of doing random things for stupid reasons, letting the students figure out how to name stuff.
* The Kingkiller Chronicle (it includes grappling techniques, most of which seem to be standing armlocks and pain compliance throws, and it also contains swordfighting and a deep philosophical base). It's so effective that a mediocre Adem is a match for three or four professional soldiers. Proficiency in the Ketan is based on understanding of the Lethani, the moral code of Ademre. Adem believe that women are more naturally moral than men and therefore are also better fighters than men.
* The Kingkiller Chronicle, it's shown and said that the Fae are weak to iron, and that it hurts incredibly, even if they just brush it, as well as viewing the smell as very distasteful, akin to rotten eggs. However, at the end of book 1, Bast, one of the Fae, grabs and holds an iron medallion while delivering a threat just to show he's serious, cementing how badass he is for all eternity.
* The Kingkiller Chronicle Kvothe frustrated that they see his profession as akin to prostitution.
* The Kingkiller Chronicle, Kvothe spins this into a respected position when he visits the Vintish court. As an outsider enjoying the Maer's hospitality, courtly etiquette suggests that the nobles treat him as an equal until they can determine how his pedigree compares to the Vintish ranking system. He draws this out until his assumed rank settles somewhere in the middle of the noble hierarchy, and the court remains none the wiser that he's a penniless commoner in his homeland.
* The Kingkiller Chronicle not regained his full mental faculties, as his brain is still trying to cope with the trauma he sustained.

* The Kingkiller Chronicle often practice using less than ideal links, such as trying to set a hair on fire by burning a straw.
* The Kingkiller Chronicle. Pat happily ends his blog entry, stating "I have truly arrived on the scene as a fantasy author."
* The Kingkiller Chronicle professor how many Names he knows, the professor says with some embarrassment that the question is akin to asking how many people he's slept with.
* The Kingkiller Chronicle running an unsuccessful inn while he waits to die.
* The Kingkiller Chronicles books. This is partly because he's genuinely special (a natural magician with eidetic recall and a talent for Naming), partly because his quest puts him in situations that just happen to be legend-building status, and partly as a reputation he's deliberately cultivated.
* The Kingkiller Chronicle series, Kvothe displays a low-key yearning for Denna.
* The Kingkiller Chronicles is pretty, magically-gifted, superlative at everything he does, but poor, arrogant and a wreck in the present day.
* The Kingkiller Chronicles. Played straight with Naming, more traditional magic, as well as the Fae.
* The Kingkiller Chronicles series, the fey creature Felurian is in the Divine beauty cateogry, basically being a sex goddess with whom men fall instantly in love and presumably die either from exhaustion or separation. Then there's Denna, who from Kvothe's point of view is a World Class beauty. However, there are some subtle hints from other characters that Denna is merely Common or Imperfect beauty, implying that Kvothe's impressions are skewed by his love for her. But because she is constantly with other male suitors and essentially lives off her looks, she probably is rather beautiful. Most other women in the series fall into the Common beauty category.
* The Kingkiller Chronicles uses a very Europe-like map, with sea to the north, west, and south and land to the east and southeast.
* The Kingkiller Chronicle: Sympathy, not to be confused with "Naming". If you know the true name of something you can command it, but if you don't then you can find something to represent it and use your willpower to force what happens to this to happen to that. Sympathy is seen as magic by many people in-universe, but people who actually use it insist that it isn't.
* The Kingkiller Chronicle, the Ketan, which makes even a mediocre Adem fighter the match for several normal soldiers. The Adem believe that morality is more important for skill in the Ketan than any physical advantage. They also believe that woman are more naturally moral than men. Therefore, woman are both better fighters and better people than men. All of their leaders are women for this reason.
* The Kingkiller Chronicle. The lecturer surrenders the class to Kvothe believing that Kvothe will embarrass himself by his own ignorance. Highly intelligent and educated, Kvothe could easily lecture the class or even conduct a demonstration. Instead, he uses magic to attack the lecturer and blames the victim for not stopping him.
* The Kingkiller Chronicle trilogy has each book being a spoken retelling of a large part of Kvothe's life. Each book in spite being very lengthy represents only a day of his storytelling even though that storytelling covers several years of his life. The strange part is that the actual retelling (with the book read out loud via Audiobook) is well in excess of a 24 hour day in length. To be fair, it's never mentioned that a day is 24 hours in this world.
* The Kingkiller Chronicle trilogy suffer from this in relation to Kvothe's pursuit of the Chandrian, which has barely advanced at all over the course of two huge doorstoppers. Kvothe only sporadically makes any effort to find information on them, leading to what is supposedly the series' myth arc falling by the wayside frequently as more mundane issues like Kvothe's student finances take centre stage for extended periods of time.
* The Kingkiller Chronicle uses a lot of this. Other nations do too but to a lesser extent because the main source of magitek is The University, located in the Commonwealth.
* The Kingkiller Chronicle who occasionally helps Kvothe and serves as a patron to a number of musicians and entertainers.

* The Kingkiller Chronicle with the matriarchal Adem culture of warrior-philosophers. The hero's female mentor states that women are better fighters than men because they are more moral and therefore understand their fighting style better. The hero asks about men's superior reach and strength, which the mentor dismisses as irrelevant. Since Adem are far and away the most skilled warriors in the world, their views are apparently justified.
* "The Kingmaker" in rather a different light, revealing that he was, later in life, actually Richard III. (He'd traveled back in time to goad the pragmatic and unpleasant-but-not-actually-villainous Richard into following the version of history outlined in his play, and ended up victim of a case of mistaken identity at Bosworth thanks to a broken arm and wounded leg. The Doctor sent the real Richard back to Stratford with some play outlines.) Richard, for his part, had many experiences with aliens, having been visited regularly since his youth by time-tourists, who routinely pestered him about whether or not he was going to kill his nephews, and ran away if he mentioned doctors. And the Princes in the Tower? Well, they were actually girls, and following his relocation, Richard/Shakespeare raised them as his daughters.
* The Kingmaker, The Fifth Doctor and his companions, Peri and Erimem, are stranded in two separate time zones. The story jumps between the two zones, telling the 'before' and 'after' of a sinister plot.
* The King makes one in Season 8 episode 20 when he has the Supermen try to hit him with staffs to find which ones are the real ones... right after having his pain transferred to Big M. after having his leg hairs shaved for the magic spell to do so.
* The King Must Die make Theseus a complex and compelling character in his own right. She also succeeds in capturing much of the spirit of the myth because her first person narrator, Theseus, believes in the gods and their influence in his life, even if none of the book's events are depicted as blatantly supernatural - modern readers would interpret them quite differently.
* The King Nobody Wanted Drogo and his riders hear stories of a prophet in Lhazar who was exiled for preaching that his pacifistic society should rise up against their Dothraki oppressors. He returned to overthrow the council that exiled him and has his people preparing to defend themselves against the next attack.
* The King Nobody Wanted Falena Lothston expresses a longing to live at Harrenhal, even though the castle is a cursed near-ruin she has never seen in person and it is surrounded by both smallfolk and minor nobles who hate her family with a passion.
* The King Nobody Wanted of rape, which the first Lord Chelsted then downplayed by confessing to a lesser number of rapes done in the heat of battle to appear contrite about the whole affair.
* The King Nobody Wanted One of Drogo's rival khals spends three weeks trying to penetrate the outer walls of Saath. Once he finally does (after taking heavy losses), he finds that the locals have built a second wall directly behind the first one, and now he has to try to penetrate that.
* The King Nobody Wanted: The Horse Killers who are springing up among the Dothraki seem to be such a group, responding to the collapse of Vaes Dothrak by killing horses in the belief that if the Dothraki do this, the Great Stallion will reward them for their faith with new horses and the conquest of all their enemies.
* The King Nobody Wanted The merchants of King's Landing, who seem to be primarily descended from freed Essosi slaves and Reach bastards, are proud of their culture, treating their ceremonies and delegations with a good deal of seriousness.
* The King Nobody Wanted When a Volantene aristocrat tries to re-enslave several guests of the merchants guild, their leaders take turns assaulting him. They call their attacks before doing so, mockingly speaking as if they are giving him gifts (such as one man offering the gift of his boots before using them to kick the slaver).
* The King of All Cosmos suffers one in his youth, as depicted in his flashbacks in
* The King of Attolia Eugenides fakes doing this in order to get the court to overlook a very serious wound until he's in his private chambers because if it had been noticed in the throne room it would have started a very costly war. He knows that if he'd played down the injury his queen would have been suspicious so he hides it and complains loudly and dramatically instead.

* The King of Attolia Eugenides is told there is an urgent matter he needs to address and he half-halfheartedly notes he's wearing the queen's floral embroidered nightshirt in an attempt to delay it.
* The King of Braves GaoGaiGar; narration tells us at length that destruction is necessary as nothing new will come without the old first being destroyed.
* The King of Comedy: In one of the scenes, a writer who was scheduled to appear as a guest on Jerry Langford's show is told by the guard that he's not on the list (presumably, he was bumped off the list at the last minute to accommodate for a kidnapper demanding to appear as the first guest.)
* The King of Comedy is about Rupert and Masha, two delusional and socially awkward individuals stalking a celebrity late night talk show host. They never let reality get in the way of their obsession, with unpleasant if darkly comedic results.
* The King of Comedy, it's more like "Harpo Does Something Terrifying".
* The King of Comedy who says to Tony Randall, "I can't do anything. I'm just the director."
* The King of Dragons. At the end of the book, he is recovering, and tells his son, "I mistook molehills for mountains, but I taught you how to climb mountains."
* The King of Dragons, mummies attack the player in Level 10 (and maybe 15). They move slowly, use a grappling attack to sap the players' life and take a fair amount of damage before they die.
* The King Of Eden, as his crazy demands to get Akira and Saki to take a shower together for his movie just gets Juiz angry and frustrated at him.
* The King of Elfland's Daughter (Anglo-Irish, with a heavy emphasis on the Anglo portion) have elves and similar creatures to whom human life is an incomprehensible mystery. Even after living among humans for many years, they never quite get the hang of it.
* The King of Elfland's Daughter as the King. He also provided narration; his is the first voice you hear.
* The King of England and his Three Sons, the princes part on their quest at a cross road.
* The King of Fighters (188cm/6'2"), and especially Jun (199cm/6'6.3"). Whip much like Kunimitsu however has always been one of the shorter women as represented by her sprites/character model and artwork.
* The King of Fighters 1998, if the player had Yuri Sakazaki in their team and she was defeated, she'd be seen in this position in the background.
* The King of Fighters 2002: Unlimited Match, actually. All the fighters from 1999 to 2002 (except K9999, who is now replaced with an original character called "Nameless") are present here in the game.
* The King of Fighters 2002: Unlimited Match, screaming out "NANI YA?!"
* The King of Fighters '94 is widely considered the point where everything really took off.
* The King of Fighters Also, Kensou's awkward advances on her are...awkward.
* The King of Fighters and Athena implies that Yuki asked Athena to tell Kyo that she and others support him no matter what.
* The King of Fighters and he thinks his "double" is disguising himself as him to "steal" Athena. Thankfully, he doesn't let this go to the extreme.
* The King of Fighters and slashing with his fingertips like razor-sharp claws.
* The King of Fighters boss fight with Saiki, though it was due to his power to "turn time into ashes".
* The King of Fighters, by driving the NESTS space station into Southtown. K' dealt with him before that was to happen, though.
* The King of Fighters, Chae Lim enters her stage in story mode by kicking through the screen door. And splitting it in two. And leaping into the stage.
* The King of Fighters: Destiny hammer, making the girls more competent than they were shown to be in the games, the team known as Women Fighters Team is rebranded as Queen Fighters, describing the original name as old fashioned and lacking in proper self-promotion. Mai, Yuri, and King completely dominate Ryo Sakazaki and Robert Garcia, whose original game portrayals are on point to state are stronger than them. When the Queens are captured and brainwashed, they become troubling foes to even Kyo and Terry, the two main characters the show favors in making look very competent. In the end, Mai and Yuri even assist Kyo in his final battle against Rugal.

* The King of Fighters dipped his opponents in metal after beating them and kept them as statues.
* The King of Fighters does a piddling amount of damage in exchange for reversing the opponent's controls. And, like all previous examples, it has no effect on AI opponents.
* The King of Fighters: Duo Lon is definitely a huge embodiment of this trope. Xiao Lon as well in King of Fighters Maximum Impact Regulation A.
* The King of Fighters either, as he predates the fad by several years (his debut game was in 1995).
* The King of Fighters has an ongoing manga that is heavily influenced by wuxia manhua, which is perhaps expected giving its artist and writer have a great deal of experience drawing and writing for that particular comic genre.
* The King of Fighters has to wear a special glove to control the flame powers given to him by the Kusanagi DNA, otherwise he can cause explosions without trying. A similar character, Nameless, also has to wear a special glove to control his flame powers: at one point in his backstory he killed somebody accidentally by tapping them on the shoulder.
* The King of Fighters have elements of this, but some are more notorious:
* The King of Fighters having a strong opponent to face again at a later date...
* The King of Fighters: Heavy D! (exclamation point mandatory) is a black boxer who wears the American flag on his jacket sleeve and is quite scary and brash in the ring. Downplayed in that he's a pretty nice person when not in a fight.
* The King of Fighters. He can still tear you a new asshole with his bare hands.
* The King of Fighters, he will openly complain that Chizuru is babying the team and Terry will say "she's just worried for our sake". Additionally, Kyo recognizes that the only real reason he's in the "mission" is because Chizuru asked him to.
* The King of Fighters in 2020 that featured characters like The Rock and The Undertaker as playable characters.
* The King of Fighters. In a running theme for fighting games, he's been killed multiple times and resurrected just as often. Interestingly, he seems to have some Orochi power in him, which explains how he can go toe-to-toe with the likes of Akuma.
* The King of Fighters includes these, and features many character-based sight gags (such as Ryo and Takuma Sakazaki dropkicking Robert Garcia in the face after catching him hitting on Yuri).
* The King of Fighters) in his pocket, a tic he took from his late mentor-in-crime when he was younger, even during fights. He only attacks with his pocket-hand for his stronger attacks, such as pulling a knife from said pocket.
* The King of Fighters: In some continuities, Kensou refers to himself as Athena's boyfriend. Athena doesn't agree.
* The King of Fighters is actually a message from his girlfriend Yuki, whom Athena is friends with.
* The King of Fighters is normally amoral, and (judging from his winposes) has quite a few screws loose. Riot of the Blood Iori, however, has absolutely no sense of self-restraint and will attack anything on sight.
* The King of Fighters is that she does this to Nagase after their battle.
* The King of Fighters just like their dad. So much so that Adelheid has to force her to let the winners go as they won fair and square.
* The King of Fighters. Key differences between their attire includes Lilly wearing a white tank top under her overalls, said overalls having a heart-shaped window (revealing the aforementioned tank top), and her pants being shorts instead of Billy's jeans.

* The King of Fighters, King of Dinosaurs' Super Zetsumetsu Hurricane DM does a similar thing.
* The King Of Fighters KYO and settles for staying friends with them both.
* The King of Fighters, Kyo Kusanagi carries a good-luck charm given to him by his girlfriend Yuki.
* The King of Fighters, Kyo Kusanagi must allow himself to lose a match with Benimaru in front of her.
* The King Of Fighters Kyo to the neck of the ninja Eiji Kisaragi when she finds him digging in the archives of the Kusanagi family, sweetly asking him to stop whatever he's doing. When Kyo comes back home, he finds his mother and Eiji calmly drinking tea, and Shizuka is all smiles but Eiji looks still unnerved.
* The King of Fighters literally stabs you in the heart as part of her throw move, and as long as your HP isn't completely depleted, no overly long bleeding occurs and your character walk away just fine.
* The King of Fighters Maximum Impact 2, there's an unlockable character called Kyo Kusanagi Classic who's essentially Kyo's older version from the previous games, as he has Kyo's old appearance, quotes, and movelist.
* The King of Fighters. Naturally, the poor girl struggles a LOT with her feelings and thoughts, and it's only around XIII that she truly can come to terms with them.
* The King of Fighters of red shirt) and glasses, white hair, and yellow tie for the details in the figure cards.
* The King of Fighters, one of Yashiro Nanakase's winposes is picking a bottle of water and get dumped with it as he yelling when it happens.
* The King of Fighters original characters, since every major story arc so far has a different protagonist.
* The King of Fighters, poisonous gas makes an appearance... but only in cut scenes, as Rugal uses sleeping gas to kidnap the KoF champions and bring them to his presence.
* The King of Fighters pokes fun at this with Adel's "G. Princess" move; it calls Rose into the battle... by which we mean she strolls in under an umbrella and makes fun of Adel.
* The King of Fighters relates to how they cannot escape from fighting the Orochi clan.
* The King of Fighters replaces him with Nameless (that's his name), who stands on his own better as a character and is better received.
* The King of Fighters reveals that he had a number of problems controlling his pyrokinetic abilities. Most of his time after testing was spent in the infirmary recovering from severe burns, and on his first real assignment he killed somebody just by tapping them on the shoulder.
* The King of Fighters "Revolutionary Etude", in fact) but as the BGM progresses, it's obvious that she's not playing this at all.
* The King of Fighters Rugal (non-Omega) has the "Dead End Screamer" which in its SDM/MAX version starts with him snapping the opponent's neck with his feet.
* The King of Fighters series, has three large, parallel scars on his back, apparently the result of a bear attack. The scars are typically covered up by his shirt.
* The King of Fighters series, he's spent so much time fighting and training that he still hasn't graduated from high school.
* The King of Fighters series, holds the day job of Idol Singer when she's not in fighting tournaments.
* The King of Fighters series, where several of the characters introduced in that series have powers due to "Orochi blood", and the China team's powers come from being psychics (and Athena's partly because she's the reincarnation of a goddess). The rest of them, though, can throw fireballs just because they practiced.
* The King of Fighters. She speaks softly and in a borderline flirty way to her upcoming rivals, and it's almost immediately followed by a very aggressive quip about her wanting to see them bathed in blood after she kills them.
* The King of Fighters since she believes that being a girl should not be an obstacle to do so.

* The King of Fighters sister Chizuru's motorcycle as her hobby, as stated in her profile.
* The King of Fighters. So, each time he tries to tell her, she either pretends not to hear him, or she'll cut him off by telling him to focus on their upcoming match instead.
* The King of Fighters's Rugal Bernstein was apparently originally supposed to be able to do this, taking your attacks and turning them back upon you, but due to memory constraints, he was given Geese's Reppuu Ken and Krauser's Kaiser Wave, with the explanation that he had fought those men before. He also has his own version of Athena's Psycho Reflector, called Dark Barrier.
* The King of Fighters state when they lose control. Iori Yagami is the prime example of this kind of character.
* The King of Fighters technically his aunt. Obviously though, Mai didn't see it that way.
* The King of Fighters: the later end bosses tend to be stronger, but there's no consensus on which is the hardest.
* The King of Fighters, the older sister of Shun'ei's voice actor Takashi Ohara.
* The King of Fighters, to gain Yuri's partnership Kyo must take her side when during a discussion with her older brother Ryo and his father Takuma (and not doing so strengthens Kyo's bonds with Ryo instead), etc.
* The King of Fighters to smile or laugh. It's adorable just about much every time it happens.
* The King of Fighters to take over the original's role and further his plans.
* The King of Fighters utilizes this in K's story. He's still considered a clone of main hero Kyo despite only being injected with Kyo's genes and retaining his own appearance.
* The King of Fighters: Villain Rugal Bernstein. Also, Clone Zero from KOF 2000.
* The King of Fighters was released in 2008, a decade after the original.
* The King of Fighters was the first in the series to make the leap to 3D models, as well as a huge starting roster and the greatest proportion of new characters in the series so far. The developers said that in light of this, they saved some development time and expense by designing three characters who wouldn't need facial expressions: Kukri (a mysterious man in blacked-out hood), Mian (a masked fighter who styles herself on Chinese opera) and King of Dinosaurs (a heel wrestler in an enormous costume).
* The King of Fighters, which is functionally SNK limbo. Some like Hwa Jai have managed to return from it though.
* The King of Fighters, while both past and future entries are mutliplatform.
* The King of Fighters), whines when Yuri sees through him but doesn't insist, treats Athena with the due respect owed to a fellow fighter when she tells him not to look down on her ("I see that you're a warrior more than a little girl anyway"), and when push comes to shove he's a very loyal friend and companion.
* The King of Fighters, who was initially introduced as Kyo's rival (to the point that Iori was trying to kill him most of the time), and then became his reluctant ally when Orochi showed up.
* The King of Fighters will directly ask Athena if it's true that she can't "hang out with friends in public or date and stuff", which Athena will confirm.
* The King of Galaluna is in this state throughout the whole show (save flashbacks).
* The King of Hearts has nuns see a naked man holding a birdcage at their gate.
* The King of Hell's Kitchen has a yakuza group hopped on MGH trying to take Hell's Kitchen for them after the fall of the Kingpin. In this story, the Yakuza are played like a bunch of greedy thugs with tattoos and katanas. Daredevil wasn't amused.
* The King of Hyrule is aware that the royal princess's sealing power is the key to defeat Ganon so he makes Zelda dedicate her entire life to unlock it through prayer and rituals while unfortunately ignoring Zelda's own thoughts and feelings on the matter and devaluing all her other interests like research. Not only this this give Zelda a crippling inferior complex and ruins their relationship, but this actually prevents Zelda from accessing the power in the first place. The king's stubbornness and single-mindedness would end up getting him and nearly all of Hyrule's population killed.

* The King of Ireland's Son, the eponymous prince gathers an assortment of travelling companions in his quest to find and marry the woman of his dreams, each of which has a gift that comes in handy during their quest.
* The king of Katolis, the kingdom that shares its border with Xadia, accepts his own assassination by Elvish assassins in the hope that his death will disarm the diplomatic tension.
* The King of Kings (1927) includes a woman gleefully eating popcorn while observing the Crucifixion.
* The King Of Kings during filming. During filming, DeMille allegedly paid an anonymous woman to leave the country, as she was trying to blackmail Warner over some unknown scandal.
* The King of Kings, Jesus does a big favor for Lazarus, and then does this to himself.
* The King of Marvin Gardens as Sally cutting off much of her hair onscreen and throwing it into a bonfire.
* the King of Midland as punishment for deflowering Princess Charlotte. While personally administering lashes, the King reproaches Griffith for betraying his trust and rants about what a thankless job it's been trying to keep his kingdom from falling apart; his only comfort is his daughter, and Griffith would take even that away from him.. It might have been better for everybody if Griffith had kept his mouth shut.
* The King of Midland, even as the country descends into plague and famine, making it even more vulnerable to the Kushan invasion afterwards.
* The King of Miscarcand (a powerful undead boss fought in the main questline) has the trademark persistence of an
* the king of Persia calls Smerdis). After Cambyses' death, Bardiya became king, but Darius killed him and assumed the throne. But wait: That wasn't Bardiya at all, but an impostor! Cambyses had had his brother assassinated after Cyrus' death, and because the murder was kept secret, a Magian priest was able to steal Bardiya's identity. Many historians suspect the whole thing is a crock and that Darius actually did kill Bardiya, but there's no way of knowing.
* The King of Pigs came along in 2011 and a lot of animation enthusiasts declared that this was one of the best animated films that ever came out.
* The King of Pigs, which was released in 2011 to critical acclaim worldwide. A gritty, tragic story that deals with institutionalized bullying and suicide, it is definitely not for kids.
* The King of Queens "American Idle", Carrie says that she needs time to find herself after losing her job. But (as the title suggests) it seems to Doug that she just sits around watching TV all day — the very things she often criticizes him for doing.
* The King of Queens and manages to accidentally pick up the former football team captain.
* The King of Queens: a priest that worked at Camp Unity, the summer camp where Carrie and Doug attended as kids recalls seeing the two meeting, which they don't recall. Carrie latches on to the memory, which she interprets as a sign of fate. However, Doug later talks to his mother who reveals that he never attended Camp Unity at all: his parents sent him to "fat camp" claiming it was Camp Unity. The kid Carrie met turns out to be Danny. Doug then agonizes as to whether he should tell Carrie the truth.
* The King of Queens: a set of statuettes of stereotypical-looking black jazz musicians. It would seem a more appropriate title for the episode would have been "Revenge is a Dish Best Served with an Anniversary Present".
* The King of Queens averted and lampshaded in an episode when Carrie angrily storms out of her office and the elevator arrives as soon as she presses the button rather than leaving her standing around waiting.
* The King of Queens cannot get close enough to the window to collect his order.

* The King of Queens, Carey's sister hogs the shower when Doug has to get ready for work. When Carey asked if he tried flushing the toilet to get her out, Doug replies he did. She just screamed and kept on showering.
* The King of Queens, Carrie is temporarily blind after bad laser eye surgery. Her husband Doug tries to console her by saying her blindness makes her more approachable.
* The King of Queens. Carrie is upset that Doug loves Spence's girlfriend Becky's cooking, since Carrie herself is a mediocre cook. She gets so upset that she bans Doug from eating Becky's cooking or even going to her house. When Carrie confides in her father Arthur about it, he assumes that "eating Becky's cooking" is a euphemism for "cheating". Later on, when Doug gets angry at Deacon for eating Becky's food, Deacon asks if they were sleeping together.
* The King of Queens, Carrie's father Arthur hovers on the brink of an affair with Doug's mother. Doug decides this is beyond the pale of civilised conduct. Words happen. The obvious remark hovers painfully and obviously in the air but is never said.
* The King of Queens declares in one episode he has been called upon to serve as Judge, Jury, and Executioner. Well, okay, not so much the first and last ones.
* The King of Queens: Doug and Carrie and their friends Deacon and Kelly are on a bowling team.
* The King of Queens Doug and Carrie look after Deacon and Kelly's kids at their apartment while they're out of town. One of the kids walk in on Doug and Carrie having sex and draws a picture of it.
* The King of Queens, Doug's parents admit to him that he had to repeat kindergarten. At the time they had told him it was "Super Kindergarten".
* The King of Queens; Doug uses the restroom in an unfamiliar restaurant, and the doors both have South-Pacific-type carvings of indeterminate sex, whose only difference is in their arm positions. Naturally his first guess is incorrect.
* The King of Queens ends with Doug and Carrie adjusting to raising their one-year-old adopted daughter, Ming-Mei and their newborn daughter.
* The King of Queens features the Heffernans' photos getting mixed up with those belonging to another couple with a similar last name. The second time it happens, the other couple's photos are full of sex acts, which Doug tries to get Carrie to do with him. "You want me to do this?" "And this. And this. And assuming we can find the right kind of chair, this."
* The King of Queens, frequently, where Arthur does not bother with the setting up and instead screams out his comeback hours later, often by walking into his daughter's bedroom in the middle of the night.
* The King of Queens guy in the audience stands up, declares his love for the bride, and she runs off with him instead.
* The King of Queens has to have dental work done, and begins to suspect that his dentist is making the visits as painful as possible because he subconsciously resents Doug for marrying his old crush Carrie. Things get better when Doug introduces the dentist to Holly... but then they break-up...
* The King of Queens: in a flashback to the childhood of Jerry Stiller's character Arthur Spooner, Arthur's father is played by Jerry's son Ben Stiller.
* The King of Queens, instead of over their eyes where, you know, they could actually do some good.
* The King of Queens in the Heffernan's living room. In the end, their "chaos" only consists of a couch pillow lying on the floor. Needless to say, this doesn't really serve to convince the Palmers very much.
* The King of Queens it by making the wife enough of a bitch to counterbalance her looks, with the implication that her husband is one of the few people who would put up with her. One episode accentuates this into absurdity—Kevin James loses a noticeable but not extreme amount of weight, and one of Carrie's friends seriously suggests that he's now as physically attractive as she is, and Carrie doesn't seem too happy to hear this.
* The King of Queens more amoral and even more prone to doing things just for selfishness' sake. The result is that one or the other could be the "fool" in any given episode, while the other is the voice of reason.

* The King of Queens: One episode featured Kevin James' character winding up on one of these. Then he wound up in "voice-prompt hell".
* The King of Queens. On the drive to the convention an irked West explains that Sci-fi actors "look out for each other" and leaves Spence on a busy freeway.
* The King of Queens partially averts this by being on stage right, but they use the back door (stage left into the kitchen) as often as they do the front. The kitchen and living room have a great deal of access between them, however, and the stairs do slant down toward the door.
* The King of Queens resists as much as he can when Carrie tries to take him to classical music concerts or ballet. The trope was at least played with a bit when Carrie, upon actually going to a classical music concert, wound up being so bored she fell asleep.
* The King of Queens somewhat. Spence's ex-girlfriend, who he still has feelings for, is getting married in Memphis. Doug, Spence and the gang drive to Memphis in order to stop the wedding. Just as Spence is about to interrupt the wedding, a completely different guy says he loves her and they start kissing and leave her fiance at the altar.
* The King of Queens take place in similar settings and had frequent crossovers, and thus share largely the same fanbase.
* The King of Queens. Their attempts to overcome their insecurities and anxieties are examples of such well-meaning ineptitude that they invariably make the perceived problem ten times worse.
* The King of Queens, there were many occasions where Arthur Spooner (Jerry Stiller) might appear on the opening credits and be billed as a cast member, but did not appear in the actual episode.
* The King of Queens, the trope is lampshaded often in the episode "Awed Couple":
* The King of Queens they end up adopting, only to find out that they are having one of their own as well.
* The King of Queens, to update the characters and settings to the 1990s. Perhaps in deference to modern sensitivities, Doug Heffernan never threatens violence to Carrie, although the ungracious "Shutty!" gets a lot of the way there...
* The King of Queens. We even get to see poor Doug's legs up in stirrups and his wife holding his hand while he screams.
* The King of Queens, where Doug and Carrie think another couple has given them this kind of gift (a gravy boat) for their wedding. Turns out it had a check for a few thousand dollars inside, but by the time they finally discover this, the check has long since expired and they can't cash it.
* The King of Queens where Doug buys an ice cream truck and is later stalked and suffers repeated murder attempts by an unseen driver in another truck.
* The King of Queens, who deviates between this and lying all the time. Deacon's mother-in-law is also overbearing and relentless in her criticisms.
* The King of Queens: without Carrie, Doug degenerates into a complete slob and their house becomes a pigsty.
* The King of Red Lions also does this if you try to go anywhere but the row of three map tiles between Windfall and Dragon Roost Island before finishing Dragon Roost Temple, and the column from Dragon Roost to the Forest Haven before you clear the Forbidden Woods, so if you want to get back to Windfall Island from the Forest Haven, you have to go north and then west, rather than just cutting through diagonally.
* The King of Staten Island on accident, and that the film was only meant to be straight to video.
* The King of Super villains, The Dark is sometimes prone to this in
* The King of Sweden was attacked by a Strawberry Tart in 2005 by a 16-year-old boy. The King was reportedly "Surprised, but unhurt". In a hilarious case of Over-reaction
* The King of the Chimera Ants, Meruem, is able to manifest and upgrade the powers of the Nen users
* The King Of The Golden River, Gluck is nice to the odd man who visits them but his brothers are rude to him, so the odd man returns that night in his true form (the North Wind or something) and destroys the roof to the brothers' room (in a rainstorm no less), forcing them to bunk in Gluck's bed. (I wonder whether this was really such a great favor to Gluck.)

* The King of the Hill community has an outright unhealthy obsession with Nucleus (whose design offers greater advantage to certain classes than more balanced maps), and those who don't have a similar obsession with Kong King (added with the Pyromania update). If the current match has one of the two in its voting option for the next map, chances are 95% that it will be the one chosen. If you want to play any
* The king of them all so far though, has to go to "The Battle of Calth", shown in
* The King of the Monsters himself) is about to smash the aircraft carrier the cast is on, Godzilla suddenly leaps out of the water and shoulder-checks the Angel in the jaw, shoving it away from the carrier and knocking out more than a few teeth.
* The King of the Snergs Merse II is armed with one sword and one axe.
* The King of the Swords "Mabelode the Faceless" (or perhaps "Mabelrode").
* The king of the Western Keep seeks the Crown hidden in the Marsh Cave nearby. Upon delivering it to him, he reveals himself as Astos, and claims that he can become true elf king with the mystic power of the Crown in combination with... the crystal eye he pilfered from Matoya.
* The king of this though is Mr. 2 Bon Clay, who spins with pretty much all the time, regardless of whether he's fighting or not.
* The king of this, though, is probably Jonathan Joestar, the protagonist of
* The king of this trope, however, is named Li Syaoran and he is a male
* The King of Torts about a series of lawsuits against pharmaceutical companies.
* The King of Torts, giving aspiring tort lawyers advice on how to wring the most money out of their clients, which leaves the protagonist feeling like he needs to take a shower.
* The King of Town: Everything. But most frequently butter, or Thanksgiving food.
* The King of Town's reaction to being offered a "fun-sized" Butterfinger bar in "The House That Gave Sucky Treats":
* "The King of Town's Very Own, Quite Popular Cartoon Show" eventually became an actual episode. "For reals this time!"
* The King of Town's Very Own Quite Popular Cartoon Show". Initially subverted in that when it was originally released, it was just a well-disguised Strong Bad Email, but they actually released one a year later.
* The King of Town. The King of Town protests "You amateurs, you don't know what you're talking about. I'm on a diet! It's strictly Arbor Day and Earth Day for me this year!"
* The King of Vale was one of Ozpin's prior incarnations, a Sorcerer King.
* The King of Westeros' advisers have titles like "Master of Laws" (i.e. attorney general or justice minister), "Master of Coins" (i.e. secretary of trade or finance minister), and "Master of Ships" (i.e. secretary of the navy). In A Feast For Crows, Cersei's paranoia and lust for power inspire her to cull the word "Master" out of everyone's titles, so that they don't start thinking that they are anything more than advisers; Master of Ships, for example, becomes Grand Admiral and Master of Coins becomes Lord Treasurer.
* The Kingpin and thrown into the river didn't contain his body. Sure, he might have drowned trying to reach the surface and sunk into the mud but...
* The Kingpin comics is also bald and has a bullseye scarred into his forehead.
* The Kingpin comics. Matt is the primary main character, but we've watched Wilson run, lose, and rebuild his empire, seen the details of his messy personal life, and when he's not a part of Matt's life, it often feels like something is missing.
* The Kingpin fell into this himself when he discovered HYDRA was trying to attack his territory. Fisk treated it as if it was another gang war and he could handle it easily. In the space of five minutes, HYDRA has emptied the Kingpin's bank accounts, destroyed most of his business fronts (legal and illicit) across the city, and sent a helicopter gunship to blow apart his office.
* The Kingpin, he muses on his early days as a street thug when he would get blood on his hands. At the end of the story, he brutally kills a bunch of thugs who believe his glory days are over and once again gets blood on his hands. Noticing this, and remembering that his first rise to power involved a lot of days with bloody hands, he washes his hands in a gutter and wanders into the streets more determined than ever to be the Kingpin again.

* The Kingpin is one of the largest, non-superhuman villains in the Marvel universe while his wife, Vanessa Fisk, is a woman of normal height and weight.
* The Kingpin made his final ascent to power when he snapped the neck of his boss, Don Rigoletto.
* The Kingpin — fat-looking and monstrous in size, has his gorgeous wife Vanessa and is devoted to her. (She isn't blindly loyal to him, however. She has threatened to leave him frequently, and actually has on more than one occasion.)
* The Kingpin of the highest order. Second, by thinking he's just a fat guy, not getting it's all muscle and he's an expert martial artist.
* The Kingpin's defining vice. He takes and takes and takes, but it's never enough. He'll always want more.
* The Kingpin's real name is Wilson Fisk. In the show, while Wilson is still his real first name, "Wilson Fisk" is actually an alias and his real last name is "Moriarty."
* the Kingpin. The game came down to Spidey vs. Kingpin. He beat Kingpin's hand with four of a kind—he even pulled "two threes and another two threes" which, humorously enough, tricked Kingpin into a villain monologue.
* The Kingpin there every time he thought he was about to get out. Eventually, he only does because his wife convinces Matt to be his lawyer and gets all charges dropped.
* The Kingpin were in mortal fear of having to deliver bad news to their boss, as Wilson Fisk was infamous for killing anyone at the slightest provocation.
* The Kingpin won't take a run at the Kingpin, which says a lot. It's not that Frank doesn't want Fisk dead, he just knows that he's already got his hands full and taking down Fisk is going to increase his workload exponentially.
* The Kingpin would cause too much collateral damage to the innocent populace.
* The king Polydectes wooed Perseus' mother, Danae, hoping to marry, then ravish her. In order to get rid of Perseus, who knew of his foul intentions, Polydectes invited Perseus to a lavish banquet where all the guests had to bring a horse, as a gift. As Perseus had no horse to give, he, instead, was tasked with bringing back the head of Medusa, the only mortal Gorgon. Of course, Polydectes assumed that Perseus would either die trying, or live in exile as a failure. He did not anticipate that Perseus would receive divine assistance from Athena, and as a result,

* The King's Avatar: After Excellent Era forcefully retires Ye Xiu against his will, they literally throw him out into the cold as it starts snowing as soon as he leaves the building.
* The King's Avatar, all employees at the Happy Internet Cafe live on the second floor where Ye Xiu shares residence with his boss Chen Guo and fellow coworker Tang Rou. Although Ye Xiu is closer to those two, there are no romantic undertones between them.
* The King's Avatar. Muqiu even tells Ye Xiu that Mucheng is now his sister too.
* The King's Avatar. She has excellent hand speed, fast enough to challenge experts in Glory, but pros such as Ye Xiu can easily beat her due to her inexperience with the game. Played with as she is being trained by Ye Xiu himself and it will be only a matter of time before she minimizes her weaknesses.
* The King's Avatar the protagonist Ye Xiu reveals that he is in fact a famous pro gamer to his new boss Chen Guo, she doesn't believe him at all.
* The King's Avatar, to some fans of the latter, this would have been long and popular enough to rip off.
* The King's Avatar who is so chatty that the Pro League changed the rules on conversations during matches just to prevent his constant chattering from disrupting the players.

* The King's Avatar Ye Xiu is a former professional player in Glory's competitive league. After being kicked out of his pro gamer team, he replays Glory from the very bottom with a brand new character.

* "The King's Dark Lanterns" form an intelligence/counterintelligence agency, in charge of serving the King.
* The King's Demons" was credited in advance publicity as played by "James Stoker" (an anagram of "Master's Joke"), but the actual episodes credit Tony Ainley normally because the reveal that he's the Master in disguise occurs at the end of episode one.
* The King's Deryni in this outcome; Richard says, "For royal women, there are rarely other choices."
* , the king sends the daughter back to her father but permits her to take one thing from the castle — whatever she likes most. She drugs the king and takes him, since he was what she liked the most.
* The Kingsguard, and later its derivatives, the Queensguard and the Rainbow Guard, of
* The Kingsguard are seven knights sworn to serve for life protecting the king. Traditionally they are supposed to be great warriors and paragons of chivalry, but few actually live up to this and like the real Praetorians one of them was responsible for the death of the previous king, though unlike them it has not become a habit. Barristan Selmy is Lord Commander of the Kingsguard before he is coerced into "retiring."
* The King's Guard at the start of the series, though that's about as far as they are described.
* The Kingsguard is an elite group of seven knights, supposedly the greatest and most skilled warriors in all of Westeros, who serve as the royal bodyguard of the King of the Andals and the First Men.
* The King's henchmen put up fake walls in a maze to make sure the heroes can't find their way to the end. However, the Baron realizes a wall is fake, and the kicks it down—which, since the henchmen had unknowingly set themselves up like dominoes, causes a chain reaction of falling walls until they form a pathway straight to the exit.
* The Kings Island's coaster, Banshee, has a series of grave markers in front of it. One of these, on closer inspection, is a tribute to the Ill-fated wooden coaster "Son of Beast", due to Banshee being built in part of the space it once occupied.
* The King's Justice and "all but slammed down his bow, though he did manage a stiff little bow of acknowledgment before stalking off sullenly toward the stables". This is noticed and commented upon; Kelson says his cousin "hasn't yet learned the graceful art of losing."
* The King's Justice, he learns that Camber appeared to Loris in a dream (later speculation attributes this to his possession of Duncan's episcopal ring, which was originally made for Henry Istelyn from an old piece of altar plate associated with Camber himself). Reliving the experience through Loris's eyes, Kelson knows that while Camber spoke of tolerance, Loris so demonized all things Deryni that for him it was a nightmare.
* The King's Justice, Kelson questions Gorony and Loris telepathically after they're captured. Gorony was an enthusiastic inquisitor, and Kelson likens reading Gorony's mind to "taking a swim in the castle middens in the summertime." When it's Loris' turn, Kelson finds "[r]eading Loris was even more loathsome than reading Gorony had been"; Loris gave explicit instructions to Istelyn's executioners and reveled in their grisly work, and he engaged in inquisitions and burnings in many outlying areas of the kingdom prompted by his "long-standing and unreasoning hatred of the Deryni."
* The Kingslayer: Someone who commits the murder of a monarch (regicide).
* The Kingslayer: Someone who gains a reputation for assassinating a king.

* The Kingslayer: Someone who has committed regicide (the murder of a monarch).

* The kings of puns by the truckload in Western Animation are most likely the Jay Ward-produced cartoons
* The Kings of the Seven Kingdoms also have a long list of formal titles. During the War of the Five Kings, these titles get said a lot as Renly, Stannis and Joffrey all claim them.
* The Kings of Wrestling, Arik Cannon, Icarus, Chuck Taylor, Gran Akuma, Mitch Ryder, Shayne Hawke, Max Boyer
* The Kings Quest Companion games. Magical creatures and persons sensed this was happening, so they cast one last, big spell and opened a parallel universe where they withdrew in order to survive. The world they left was ours. The world they created is the one where the games are set.
* The Kings Quest Companion! It wouldn't be the first time the universe crossed over with Lovecraft, either.
* The King's Quest series.. Magical creatures, mythological beings, wizards, and other fantastic entities fled into a parallel dimension (called the Withdrawal in the player's guide) to escape encroaching modernity that threatened their existence.
* The King's Rifle by Biyi Bandele. One of the West African soldiers leans against a tree and gets a nasty shock when it runs off only to get blown up in a minefield. He spends the rest of the book in a state of paranoia, including shooting at his own shadow because he's convinced that if Japanese soldiers can become trees, they can also disguise themselves as shadows.
* "The King's Shadows" are in charge of missions which the King of Breland wants no official ties to.
* "The King's Shields" are warriors in charge of being bodyguards for the royal family and visiting foreign dignitaries.
* The King's Singers, an a capella group, once covered the Trope Namer on a G&S tribute album. They missed the point and sang very quietly. It was terribly disappointing.
* The King's Speech centers on Lionel Logue invoking this trope early and often with Albert/King George.
* The King's Speech end up becoming King (as George VI) precisely because of Edward's behavior.)
* The King's Speech features the future Elizabeth II and Princess Margaret, given the main character is their father.
* The King's Speech growls, "What is her hold over him?" on watching from the sidelines as Wallis Simpson orders around the future King of England. He's told the (quite likely untrue) rumor that she learned sexual skills in a Shanghai house of pleasure.
* The King's Speech her father; she gets her sense of duty from him, in particular, and their monarchies have certain key qualities in common.
* The King's Speech, King George V remarks on this when discussing the importance of radio with Bertie after giving his 1934 Christmas address. The king tells Bertie to try reading the speech himself, and when Bertie refuses, he replies:
* The King's Speech. Other than that, there's no violence or sexual situations. Without the cluster F-bombs, or any of the other swear words briefly stated, this film could've been rated PG.
* The King's Speech, since his point is that mechanics alone won't fix Albert.
* The King's Speech, when Bertie first meets his daughters after he became King, they do not run to hug him as a father, but coldly and formally curtsy to him.
* The King's Speech, when Lionel tries get Albert to bring up a topic, the latter responds: "Waiting for me to...commence a conversation, one can wait rather a long wait." Later, when Albert returns to apologize to Lionel, he tells him: "Waiting for a king to apologize, one can wait a long wait."

* The King's Speech where King George/Bertie tells a story involving a penguin to his two daughters before they go to bed.
* The King's Speech while listening to music that makes it impossible for him to hear himself. It's not until much later, after getting drunk and dismissing Logue as a crackpot, that Bertie listens to the recording... and hears himself speaking without a stutter for the first time in his life.
* "The King's Swords" are an elite offensive task force serving the king.
* The king's throne had grown too uncomfortable, so he ordered it thrown out the window.
* The Kingston Cycle are taken as a sign that the witch has completely lost her mind.
* The Kingston Cycle. It's not an idle threat: when an Amaranthine once told an offending king that "You will wither", his wife miscarried on the spot, his entire bloodline became infertile, and his dynasty fell out of power well before it died out.
* The Kingston Trio's hit cover version of "M.T.A." in the early 1960s is supposed to have so badly damaged the reputation of Boston's Metropolitan Transportation Authority that it took its current name, Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority, shortly afterwards to prevent the acronym from applying. But things have changed in the decades since. "Charlie", the protagonist of the song, has been the MBTA's official mascot, as used on its "CharlieCard" fare cards, since 2004.
* The King's Woman: Gongsun Li complains about the trouble Qin is causing... in front of Ying Zheng, the king of Qin.
* The King's Woman: Gongsun Li dresses as a man after her grandfather's death. It's an unconvincing disguise to say the least.
* The King's Woman: Lü Bu Wei is more interested in gaining power for himself than helping Ying Zheng rule. Ying Zheng is well-aware of this and eventually banishes him because of it.
* The King's Woman: The armour Ying Zheng and Gongsun Li wear is much more elaborate than practical. Ying Zheng's includes fur trim, while Gongsun Li's is little more than a chest plate over her long, flowing clothes.
* The King's Woman: Ying Zheng and Gongsun Li's marriage starts with him threatening to kill her because she's pregnant with another man's child. It just goes downhill from there.

* The King Who Would Be Stronger Than Fate", the old woman buries the slave girl's body.
* The Kinks are admired for their literary and heartbreaking songwriting, their overall underdog image and the fact that they are a sixties gang that escaped being overexposed and commercialized.
* The Kinks between brothers Liam and Noel Gallagher, coming to a head when a backstage fight resulted in the band's breakup.
* The Kinks' "Big Black Smoke", symbolizing the siren song of the big city that dooms its heroine.
* The Kinks change the line "tastes just like Coca Cola" to "tastes just like cherry cola."
* The Kinks have been known to introduce "You Really Got Me" as a Van Halen song when performing it live.
* The Kinks. However, in the mid 1970s, they came to be seen as overindulgent excess on the part of Davies, transforming from coherent collections of songs connected by a loose theme into full-blown musical theater type productions with stories and characters that were difficult to appreciate out of context.

* The Kinks is a nod to many country songs being about the subject of homesickness.
* The Kinks, is one of the first Western rock songs to add Indian themes and instrumentation.
* The Kinks' "Lola", in some of its releases, alters the line "when you drink champagne and it tastes just like Coca-Cola" to "cherry cola" because the BBC wouldn't play the song if it mentioned a commercial product. The band had to interrupt an American tour so the alternate version could be recorded.
* The Kinks: "Party Line" is about a shared telephone line. The singer wants to get acquainted with a girl he keeps hearing speaking on this line, but can't get the privacy to ask her more.
* The Kinks portrayal of the relationship at the time to his band-mate and brother Dave Davies: He was married with children, while Dave was single and more free to live the rock star lifestyle.
* The Kinks released "You Really Got Me" in the summer of 1964. "All Day and All of the Night" was released in October of the same year. These songs are practically identical, with nearly the same riffs and lyrics.
* The Kinks. Their onstage brawls were so bad that it led to a five-year ban from American venues.
* The KinksThe lyric in question, "...I'm glad I'm a man and so is Lola," could either mean that the naive narrator never found out that Lola was a crossdresser at all ("Lola and I are both glad that I am a man"), or that he did eventually figure it out and just doesn't mind ("I'm glad that Lola and I are both men" or I'm glad I'm a man, and Lola is also glad she's a man.").
* The Kinks to abandon American influences and Americanization and embrace their own roots and identity.
* The Kinks' two highest-charting hits on the Hot 100 reached #6. One was "Tired of Waiting For You", which is still a well-known song, if not as iconic as "You Really Got Me", "Lola" or "All Day and All of the Night". The other? "Come Dancing", which was released in 1983, long after their commercial peak, and not nearly as well-remembered. This is partially because the American Federation of Musicians banned them from touring in the US between 1965 and 1969 at the height of their success, due to an incident in which Kinks frontman Ray Davies got into a very nasty altercation with an AFM official, and thus their better-remembered material from that period did not do as well in America. "Come Dancing", meanwhile, became big in part to the Kinks being one of only a few 1960s bands that really took to MTV or new wave, and as a result it had an eye-catching, high-concept video that introduced the group to a new generation. That, in turn, caused the song's radio airplay and sales to sharply increase; Despite its popularity at the time, "Come Dancing" hasn't nearly had the staying power that their older tunes have had on classic rock radio.
* The Kinleys - "Please". A couple is "drifting further from each other", and the singer resolves to "do anything if it'll bring our hearts together."
* The Kintoki arc revolves around a robot lookalike of Gintoki trying replace him as the main character and when that fails, he aims to become the villain whose defeat will end the manga for good.
* The Kipper and the Corpse", following a guest dying, and Basil constantly trying to stop the guests seeing the body, he's confronted by dozens of angry guests who all demand an explanation for everything, in one of his few Crowning Moments of Awesome, he quickly declares that his wife, who has barely bothered to help him throughout the episode will answer all their complaints, then quickly escapes by hiding in a laundry basket which was being carried off, thus escaping his usual comeuppance and leaving Sybil to deal with it.

* The Kiss (1896): According to today's norms this would not qualify as an "erotic film", because all it features is a man kissing a woman. But at the time this picture was the first example of a movie with an erotic theme (kissing) and it caused an immediate scandal. People deemed it "pornographic" and wanted to have it banned. For that reason alone it deserves to be mentioned.
* The Kiss (1896) featured nothing but a couple kissing for 18 seconds. It was the first time movie audiences saw two people kissing on screen and by being seen in such a large frame it immediately caused a scandal.
* The Kiss 1988, a worm-like voodoo parasite jumps from the body of a young girl's aunt into her via a kiss. Years later, the parasite strives to take over the body of its current host's niece. The possession allows the host body to grow up, but eventually causes it to rot rapidly, leaving behind a particularly gruesome shell after it leaves.

* The Kissing Booth 2 it's revealed that Elle was in one of these with Chloe and Noah for the whole film; she had mistakenly thought they were attracted to each other, but they both confirm they're just friends and Noah only has eyes for Elle.
* The Kissing Booth: During the opening montage showing Elle and Lee as kids, the later's older brother, Noah, giving Lee a wedgie shortly after defending the two from bullies. Later on in the montage showing the two as teens, Noah gives Lee another wedgie, this time for trying to ride his motorcycle.
* The Kiss Seen Around the World in an attempt to amuse the audience. Before it is invoked, Meg (who had a crush on Tom throughout the episode) overhears Tucker and his cameraman talking and tells him that what he plans on doing is wrong.
* The Kiss: This 1896 silent film is only 18 seconds long, but it does feature a kiss. The first one in movie history.
* The Kiss who is married to a much older and very rich businessman. She isn't happy about it, and wants to run away with her young lover.
* The Kitchen Casanova, the title character is chopping vegetables while thinking of his love interest Doris, and he accidentally cuts off one of his fingers. He bandages it up but accidentally replaces it with a carrot at first.
* The Kitchen God's Wife. Pearl only cries after she actually sees her father's body one last time.
* The kitchens moved. Rowling intentionally wrote a bit in the first book saying how the layout of Hogwarts is constantly changing
* The Kitchen Warriors in a china cupboard. There's also dishwasher kelpies, deep freeze trolls and a dragon in the furnace.

* The kite-eating tree may count. Lucy once threw Schroeder's piano into it, and the tree immediately ate it.
* The Kite Runner: Amir carves, "Amir and Hassan, the sultans of Kabul," into a pomegranate tree with Ali's kitchen knives.
* The Kite Runner, Amir seeks to redeem his past actions towards Hassan by rescuing his friend's son.
* The Kite Runner, Amir's wife is infertile, and Amir believes that his inability to have a biological son is Allah's way of punishing him for refusing to report his best friend Hassan's rape.
* The Kite Runner. And movies set in Tibet have been filmed in the mountains of Argentina and Morocco.
* The Kite Runner: Baba blames his son Amir for the death of his wife.
* The Kite Runner did this, at least with the Afghan actors, using actual Afghan people.
* The Kite Runner had one of these, though it was more the fault of the setting (Taliban-occupied Afghanistan) than any malevolence on the part of the owners.
* The Kite Runner is blatantly crazy about Hitler; his German mother isn't happy about it.
* The Kite Runner, main character Amir writes a short story about a man who discovered a cup. Not just any cup; one that turns tears into pearls. In order to become rich, the man must make himself sad. The story ends tragically with the man crying over his wife's body (whose throat he has just slit to make himself cry) atop a mountain of pearls. This is all subverted when Amir's best friend asks why the man didn't simply cut up some onions instead.
* The Kite Runner most of the Afghans who made it to America were from well-off or even noble families (escaping a war-torn zone and getting a visa has its cost). Since their degrees or merits have no value in the U.S. most of them work in blue-collar jobs. Amir's father goes from tycoon to gas station worker (but eventually becomes the director), his father-in-law is too proud to work and lives on state aid money and what he earns from the flea-market.
* The Kite Runner, they and a close friend of Baba flee by way of Pakistan, and though the friend stays in Pakistan, Baba and Amir start a new life in San Francisco, where Baba gets a job as a gas station attendant.

* The Klingons favor their traditional swords when fighting the Borg, who can adapt their shields to counter disruptor fire but can do nothing about ordinary physical weapons.
* The Klingons, for their part in the arms race, seem to have been the only faction to have mastered operating a ship's transporters undetected while cloaked. Both the Romulans and the Federation (when equipped with a borrowed Romulan device) have been seen having to briefly decloak in order to beam people in or out.

* The Klingons have several turn up, especially in Third Fleet, after the Great Houses start meddling in warfighting to advance their political goals. Admiral Alcott takes advantage of this when he begins his counteroffensive.
* The Klingons reveal to the Federation that they now have cloaking technology. Previously, only Romulans and Suliban had the tech, and they weren't sharing. The advantage is first demonstrated, when the Admiral's flagship arrives, and the Admiral attempts to negotiate with the Klingons. The Klingon leader pretends to agree to a ceasefire, then a cloaked ship with a giant prow rams the Admiral's ship, cleaving it in half. Later on, the cloaking tech is disseminated throughout the Klingon fleet, making their ships all the more dangerous. That's why it's all the more important when the
* The Klingons seem to still have a monetary economy, and it's shown that they have a preference for eating their food while it's live or uncooked, which replicators cannot do. Economic Careers however are frowned upon and seen more as a necessary evil. Financially ruining a house into dishonor is abhorred.

* The Klutz. What starts as an annoying leak will often end with a flooded basement.
* The Knack...and How to Get It: Colin the math teacher zings his chalk at a boy who is being particularly blatant about gawking at the female students exercising outside. This is hypocritical, as the sexually frustrated Colin would like nothing better than to gawk himself.
* The Knack...and How to Get It, played by Rita Tushingham, wrongly accuses a nerdy school teacher, played by Michael Crawford, of raping her. He is extremely flattered and finally becomes a real man as a result of the false accusation (which is implied to be wishful thinking on the part of the girl).
* The Knack...and How to Get It (see TV), new housemate Tom, who is quite mad, paints his room completely white, including the windowpanes, justifying it as protection from The Bomb.
* The Knack. It only reached #94 on its second go-around, but the film's soundtrack reached #13 and propelled the song back into the public consciousness in a big way. It was the introduction to the song for many people who were born around the time it was originally released.

* The Knack Solipstic Defense allows you to ignore an attack entirely by believing it isn't real - since you have Legend, an element of the divine, what you believe
* The knee-deep water issue plagues most of the 3D games in the series.
* The Knick features an opium den and a brothel, each of which ensnares various characters to greater or lesser degrees.
* The Knick, Herman Barrow, the hospital administrator, is a committed social Darwinist. He's an equally committed racist.
* The Knick is called "Bertie" by most of his colleagues, but "Bertie the Wise" by the Chief of Surgery, Dr. Thackery. It seems initially like an affectionately ironic nickname, since Bertie is the youngest, least experienced, and lowest ranking doctor at the Knick. It eventually becomes apparent, however, that he is also the sanest, most reasonable, and most morally decent of all the doctors at the Knick (and probably among the entire cast to boot). In any case, ironic or not, it is meant affectionately, although Chickering, Sr. does not see it that way.
* The Knick, New York City health inspector Jacob Speight extorts bribes from building owners, threatening to force them to bring their buildings up to code. He also blackmails hospital administrators by threatening to send patients to other hospitals.
* The Knick: Thackery speaks of God as "the enemy" in his struggle to save people, which a nun characterizes as his "personal war against God".
* The Knife were notoriously shy in the early stages of their career, preferring to use masks to hide their faces in photos and rarely granted interviews. They've maintained that they were willing to talk to the press, just not the ones that want to delve into their personal lives, which limited the amount they did. When Karin started promoting her own music as Fever Ray, she was much amiable to interviews, albeit still refusing personal information and appearing covered in heavy makeup, largely to maintain her privacy.
* The Knight and Fairy of the Forward unto Dawn. The design is so simple and easy to make that many people (not just kids, but adults and even nobles) are able to build their own in no time at all, and then proceed to spend hours outside playing with them. Ned Stark notes that these simple toys have brought color and merriment back to the North.

* The knights of Cake Town all wear hodgepodge suits of armor made of random parts, and are just little more than glorified servants for King Croissant and his daughter, Princess Parfait. Because of the king's low standards of knighthood, most of the knights are easily defeated by Peridot during Cordelia's invasion of Cake Town. The rest of them turn traitor while one, Sir Carrot, escapes.
* The Knights of Columbus were founded for two main reasons: a) to sell affordable life insurance to Catholic workers, who often worked in dangerous jobs, and b) to serve as a fraternal organization that Catholics could join in good conscience, since they were prohibited from joining organizations like the Freemasons under pain of excommunication up until Canon 1374.

* The Konix Multisystem was a British console developed in the late 80s. Originally created as an advanced peripheral, Konix decided to go further with the project to create a 16-bit computer to compete with the Amiga. The system was then pushed back several times, up to Fall of 1990 due to a very troubled production and employees not receiving their wages. When Konix bankrupted without a finished computer, the project was scrapped.

* The Korean War, both the Korean and U.S. Army was able to advance in Incheon and in just a month, was able to reclaim most of the land in current South Korea. Furthermore, they had enough manpower to the point they broke the defense of 38th parallel and continue advancing to the very end of the current North Korea. It seemed that the war would be over and achieve unification until Kim-Il-Sung pulled out a major trump card: People Liberation Army. With a manpower of staggering 100,000 troops, PLA forces were able to quickly push them back to 38th parallel and the groundwork to end the war they'd expected it to has been destroyed.

* The Korean War expected it to work. Using Japanese tidal charts, the UN forces were able to accurately predict high tide and when ships could move in to release landing craft, then pull out before they got stuck in the mudflats. The result led to the first major turning point in the war.
* The Korean War. First the North Koreans pushed the South Koreans all the way back to Pusan. Then America and her allies intervened and pushed the Northern forces back to the Yalu River.
* The Korean War in Winter 1950, when a force of nearly 120,000 Chinese troops surrounded a joint American/British/South Korean force of roughly 30,000 at Chosin, including the U.S. Marine's 1st Marine Division, and led to a breakout operation to escape the encirclement and make for the Korean coast to evacuate by sea.
* The Korean War: The Chinese and North Koreans didn't succeed in uniting Korea. The United Nations (mostly Americans, British, and about twelve per cent from other allied nations like France, Australia, and Turkey) and South Korea only "won" because they stopped the advance of communism and inflicted incredibly high casualties against the enemy, but in reality at the end of the war everything was pretty much status quo. Except for the 2 million people killed due to North Korean aggression.
* The Korean War, the North Korean invasion was turned back when the UN forces under General Douglas MacArthur, staged an amphibious assault on the west coast of South Korea near Incheon, near the capital Seoul which was under communist control. To make it even more awesome, they landed in an area that was notoriously bad for shore landings (among other things, the area tends to get muddy and ships risked getting stuck), waiting until the tide was right before attacking. The North Koreans were not prepared for it, as the bulk of the KPA was at the Pusan Perimeter trying to take out the last UN hold on the peninsula.
* The Korean War. Unlike many examples though, they have a common language, culture, and heritage; the divide is solely political.
* The Korean War was going, he met the president in battered fatigues. Supposedly, he was trying to make it clear that he was subordinate to the President by making sure he wasn't as sharply dressed, but it was widely interpreted to be an insult.
* The Korean War was like this for both sides. First at Pusan when the North Koreans were about to win and MacArthur landed at Inchon, causing a helter-skelter retreat. This led to the Americans chasing the North Koreans all the way to the Chinese border when — you guessed it — the Chinese came over the border and sent them running back again.

They were designed with tail guns that fired bubbles that would both trap and drain the energy of their targets to make capturing them easier...but the major flaw found in the roughly two dozen that were originally made was that the energy drain was too severe and left the victims too weak to work for some time, which ran counterintuitive to the intent of putting troublemakers back to work as soon as possible. The later Vahki models did away with physical entrapment and settled for weapons that use

* The Krieger family of Boston, who lost husband and father Neil Kreiger to the Covid-19 virus, are campaigning to get a word added to the dictionary in his honor. The word, "orbisculate", is one he'd invented in college for a class assignment; it refers to having liquid, glop, or grease squirted on you by your food or beverage.
* The Kriegsmarine is less standardized as to which prefix is used when trying to make them appear consistent with American and British warships, but DKM (Deutsches KriegsMarine), DKS (Deutsche Kriegsmarine Ship/Schiff), and KMS (KriegsMarine Ship/Schiff) have all been used.

* The Kromaggs are changed to this after the show was moved to Sci Fi Channel. They start wearing Nazi-like uniforms, having breeding programs, and claiming to be the master race. They also perform cruel experiments on humans in order to further their scientific knowledge.
* The Kromaggs have a more advanced version, which they use to conquer human worlds. In their first episode, they use a device taken by one of the Sliders to track them down on another world. However, it turns out that they didn't invent sliding technology. It was
* The Kromoks invaded Aktarka with the help of Zirka, an alien scientist.
* The Kronies action figures. A political spoof of Crony capitalism where the villains are represented as heroes and vice versa.
* The Kroot also do something like this. They consume their slain enemies, and any useful traits are incorporated into the Kroot's DNA (which is mostly blank apart from their natural traits). Over a few generations, the traits gained from consumed enemies become a natural part of the Kroot's biology. The Kroot Shapers are shamans within tribes that direct what they eat, to ensure only good traits are retained and not detrimental ones. This came after one section of kroot decided it would be good to assimilate canine DNA, and getting trapped in an evolutionary dead end. The current Kroot themselves are actually not the base race, they use to be a type of scavenging bird before consuming a humanoid race.
* The Kroot are actually a subversion in that they are one of the least evil races in the Galaxy.
* The Kroot are an avian-descended race of barbaric cannibals, who were still using black powder weaponry when the technologically-advanced Tau found them, yet are capable of building and flying their Warspheres. * The Kroot are a race of humanoid avians which evolve primarily by eating other

Now answer us this: if their DNA is "blank", how do their embryos form into Kroot in the first place? Definitely a case of 'well, it sounded cool when I wrote it''.

By contrast, the would-be heroic resistance leader Eelek is transparently a power-hungry maniac.
* "The Krotons", the Doctor rejects this on the grounds they are too civilized.

It's a mega-franchise in-universe and Bart basically worships Krusty, but the only things we see are painfully awkward skits, stolen, hackneyed gags, clunky, painful-looking slapstick, and routines straight out of a 40s sideshow. One article described him as "somebody who grew up watching classic comedians, but could never figure out why they were supposed to be funny." * The Krypton Chronicles, former criminals Shyla Kor-Onn and Black Flame are recruited to help with the recontruction of the city of Kandor.
* The Krypton Chronicles mini-series tells how in ancient Krypton, Jef-El predicted Rao would turn the Sun yellow as a sign of its power. After listening to that story, Superman guesses the sun appeared yellow because that was the time of the Gold Volcano's first eruption which spewed vast quantities of gold dust into the atmosphere; but he adds Jef-El couldn't have known about one mountain suddenly erupting on the opposite and uninhabited side of the planet, so he can't rule out some kind of divine intervention.
* The Krypton Chronicles mini tells the history of Pre-Crisis Krypton. Throughout ten thousand years, Kryptonian society goes from rag-wearing barbarians dwelling in stone buildings to a civilization of people clad in bright, colourful robes and skintight suits, and living in shiny cities with tall, crystalline skyscrapers.
* The Krypton Chronicles: Over three thousand years before the birth of Superman, Krypton was invaded by an alien race known as the Vrangs, who ruled Krypton with an iron fist for two decades until they were thrown out by a planetwide slave revolt.
* The Krypton Chronicles, published forty-three years after the first story featuring Superman, narrates the history of Pre-Crisis Krypton and the House of El since the dawn of Kryptonian civilization.
* The Krypton Chronicles reveals that Kryptonians deployed this kind of weapon during their last pre-unification War: the city of Kandor tried to end the conflict by dropping mountain-sized flaming disintegrating fireballs on the city of Erkol, which retaliated by launching an robot-aircraft armed with a massive sun-powered beam which turned Kryptonopolis into a blackened hole within minutes.
* The Krypton Chronicles: Rokyn's humongous red sun and its red-hued skies are immediately apparent as soon as Superman's starship arrives in the planet.
* The Krypton Chronicles: Several millennia before the birth of Superman, Rao's prophet Jaf-El foretold that Kryptonians would have to be ready to leave Krypton eventually because their planet would be destroyed in the distant future. Unfortunately, his warnings would go unheeded.
* The Krypton Chronicles Sul-El, an astronomer who developed the first Kryptonian telescope, tried to warn the governor of Kandor that he had spotted an -possibly hostile- alien fleet approaching Krypton. He was mocked and despised by everyone until the Vrangs landed and began shooting people off indiscriminately.
* The Krypton Chronicles, Superman's starship takes a shortcut through subspace to reach planet Rokyn quickly.
* The Krypton Chronicles, which expanded on that story. The Vrangs forced their Kryptonian slaves to pretend happiness because it fed their egos and kept their slaves subdued. And the only reason Kryptonians smiled and declared they were privileged to serve their masters when asked is because they were being forced at gunpoint, and knew what would happen if they spoke their minds.
* The Krypton Chronicles: While investigating the life of his ancestor Val-El, Superman learns that, after reaching the continent of Lurvan and founding Argo City, Val-El and his men went to explore the interior. Eventually, they reached the Valley of Juru... and they disappeared from the face of the planet. Nobody knows what happens to them because no one who ever entered Juru afterwards returned.
* The Krypton Chronicles, Zor-El whips up a device which lets anybody relive someone else's memories by holding something belonging to that person. Later on, Superman designs some kind of camera-like device which displays scenes of the past.
* The Krypton Factor, in pre-1995 series, had the General Knowledge round at the end of the game. Whilst in most rounds the contestants scored 10, 6, 4 or 2 points according to their ranking in that round, in the General Knowledge round, you simply scored 2 points for a correct answer and lost 2 for an incorrect one. It didn't matter how good your Mental Agility, plane-landing skills or completing a gruelling assault course faster than anyone else was, the General Knowledge round (often comparatively easier) could essentially undo all that. The 1995 series had the final Super Round, with all previous rounds merely buying "advantages" that could be used at the end.

* The Kryptonians themselves, while a highly advanced civilization technologically, had a very closed culture, to the point of having built a device, the Eradicator, to assist in keeping them cut off from the rest of the universe, even introducing genetic modifications to make life offworld nearly impossible.

Saying no at this point will also get you killed, but saying yes again will make her slash you to match her because the Japanese word for "pretty" (kirei) pretty much sounds like a word meaning "to cut" (kire) and she is also apparently fueled by puns. Sasaki and Makino decide to go consult a guy who also studied embalming in America. They find he is running a beauty parlor, and he says he doesn't know anything about the body in the photo the girls show him. He offers them a free session when they get tired of chasing serial killers. Sasaki thanks him for his time and leaves. Makino protests that they didn't find anything out about the killer, and Sasaki answers it was the guy they just talked to, as they never said anything about serial killers, and there was only one body in the photo. Later, Karatsu and Numata figure out that the local civil servant is the one who killed Numata's dowsing teacher when he automatically assumes he fell off a cliff when they show up with his corpse in tow.

Since insurance won't pay for suicides, the members of the game have to get murdered - by other people playing the game. The players need to find the other members of the game and kill them, or lead other members who are more comfortable with murder to kill the ones whose house they have discovered. The game ends when about two-thirds of the original group dies and the rest gain an equal share of the collective amount gained by the escrow account for a second chance at life.

* The Kurosagi Corpse Delivery Service, Yata, the least openly talented of the main characters, only has one particular ability: channeling. However, he only seems to be able to channel one particular being— an extraterrestrial, who speaks via Yata's hand-puppet whether Yata wants him to or not. Something of a subversion in that, while he does seem to have nothing but contempt for "inferior" human life, he seems to like Yata and sometimes tries to boost his self-esteem.

The Kyton in the Pathfinder Bestiary? Is depicted as a shapely, blue-and-purple-skinned yellow-eyed woman who wears nothing but chains wrapped around her body to just barely hide her face, nipples and loins, leaving the rest of her largely bare. True, her body is also covered in dozens of fine scars, but these are subtle and don't really detract from her general attractiveness. Definitely a case of the cute monster girl still acting monstrous, however, as the racial profile as sadomasochistic kidnappers and hedonists remains pretty much identical to earlier editions.

* The Labyrinth of Grisaia: Yuuji's platoon can be called this, considering that those who ended up in their millitary training camp were petty criminals and other social outcasts to begin with, it's little wonder. * The lack of "space fighters" in Star Trek is mainly due to production costs and the laws of physics. In TOS, it was hard enough to afford the SFX for phasers, photon torpedoes, and a single shuttlecraft. In the movies, the reason was science advisor (and NASA engineer) Jesco von Puttkamer, who pointed out that physics doesn't allow fighters to maneuver in vacuum the way they do in atmosphere, never mind That Other Sci-Fi Movie Franchise over at 20th Century-Fox. To put it simply, anything a "space fighter" can do in an actual space battle, a guided missile can probably do better, not to mention cheaper. (It doesn't need a pilot, it can be stored in a magazine, and you don't have to worry about recovering it after you've used it.) Starships in ST, TV or movies, are basically the space-going equivalent of modern guided-missile cruisers, like the U.S. Ticonderoga class or the Russian Kirov class. Their job is to use long-range, precision-guided missiles (the photon torpedoes) to achieve "stand-off kills". Their phaser banks are technically secondary weapons, roughly equivalent to the cruisers' 5" (or in the Kirov's case, 100mm) turret guns, or their rapid-fire Close-In Weapon Systems for defense against the other side's anti-ship missiles. (It's interesting that only the Star Fleet Battles game ever picked up on this point.) The fact that they tend to end up in point-blank phaser duels more often than not is mainly due to Rule of Cool plus, frankly, writers who Did Not Read The Manual. (Yes, the Writer's Guide for The Original Series explains all this.)

* The Lady of the Well", even though her murder has been dated to the 1910s according to the items found with her. The body was found in 2006.
* The Lady, or the Tiger? by a starving tiger, or married off to the other woman.
* The Lady, or the Tiger?) by Frank Stockton. Criminals in a "semi-barbaric society are placed in an arena and must choose one of two doors. One door has a starving tiger that will kill the criminal, while the other door has a beautiful woman the criminal must marry.
* The Lady, or the Tiger?) features a prince who freezes when told to make a decision on very little information and with his life on the line. The looming nearness of the Discourager — a large man with a larger sword — finally breaks him out of it, and he makes the correct choice. But the men who hear that story (they had come to ask what happened with the 'tiger' incident) get caught up in overthinking it and thus never get the answer they wanted.
* The Lady, or the Tiger? in which a group of characters who ask are told that they shall find out the answer once they can answer an equally ambiguously ended story.

* The Lady, or the Tiger? is possibly the earliest use of this trope. Instead of revealing whether the princess has chosen for her lover to marry a stranger or be killed by a tiger, the narrator simply asks the reader what he thinks happened. A popular school assignment is for students to answer the question and write their own ending. Readers were so playfully insistent on getting the official answer out of Stockton that they once tried to trick him into choosing between platters of food shaped like a lady and a tiger. He politely refused.
* The Lady, or the Tiger?- one door has a tiger that will kill the prisoner, while the other has a lady he must marry- that are a public spectacle. In one trial, of a man accused of having an affair with the princess, she gives him a subtle but noticeable signal toward the door on the right. The spectators are so focused on the man that they don't notice the signal, although the man himself does.
* The Lady or the Tiger?. Stockton was once at a party where, in an attempt to get a straight answer out of him, the host(s) served two kinds of ice cream: one in the shape of a lady, the other in the shape of a tiger. They asked which he would prefer. Stockton said, "I'll have a bit of both."
* The Lady, or the Tiger the event request that a visitor who was there tell them which the hero chose; he makes it clear that a choice was, in fact, made. The whole thing sets the stage for another one, though. When pressed, the visitor presents a similar tale of a seemingly-impossible choice to the crowd, then says when they solve that one, he'll tell them what the Hero of the first story chose... and the story ends while they're considering it.
* The Lady says she's meeting her estranged husband, who has been ill. She also mentions Jacob's Ladder. In the end, the Englishman and the Scotsman carry a body up a flight of stairs with a white light emanating above it.
* The Lady's Death, and now it is the dull-witted manservant who wears an expression of horror at the results of his actions, having been the one who bought the fatal dose of laudanum at his mistress' request.
* The Lady's Dressing Room and is unable to look at any woman without remembering how disgusting they are behind closed doors. The narrator pities him, saying that he'd be far better off if he appreciated all the work that the women put in to their appearances.
* The Lady's Not for Burning, Alizon's parents have arranged for her to marry Humphrey, the mayor's nephew. When she arrives at the beginning of the play to prepare for the wedding, she mentions that she's only met Humphrey once. She finds a kindred spirit in Richard, the mayor's clerk, and she and Richard elope at the end of the play.
* The Lady's Not for Burning is deliberately non-specific; it's set more in the popular idea of The Olden Days When People Burned Witches than it is in an actual historical period. The stage direction setting the scene includes phrases like "as much 15th century as anything else".
* The Lady's Not for Burning is written in the style of a Shakespearean comedy.
* The Lady's Not for Burning, Thomas is an ex-soldier who has given up on life after seeing much of the world's ugly side. He confesses to a murder he didn't commit as a way of making his death useful by saving the innocent woman on whom the authorities are trying to pin the crime. (It's a comedy, so he and the woman both survive, and fall in love, which gives him a reason to go on living — although he insists he isn't happy about it.)
* The Lady's Not for Burning, Thomas is taken offstage and tortured in an attempt to make him change his testimony. Most of the details are glossed over, but thumbscrews are involved.
* The Lady Vanishes, an oblivious Iris manages to completely destroy a Nazi conspiracy just because she won't give up insisting that the eponymous lady exists.
* The Lady Vanishes, however, when she chooses to marry Gilbert instead.
* The Lady Voltigeur, Claire cried out so much on Nathalie because of her recent loss that her body gave out and she fell asleep after just a few minutes of doing so.
* The Lady Voltigeur shows a lot of this. In fact, a major element of the novel is showing the horrors of the war.

* ''The Lady Who Sailed the Soul'' is another early instance of the trope.
* The Laestrygonians are only around for about four paragraphs and are never mentioned before or again. However, they have by far the largest impact on Odysseus's followers of any of the threats he faces, reducing Odysseus's fleet down to a single ship; it's this massive turn of events that causes Odysseus to seek the land of the dead.

* The Lair of the White Worm. The villainess tries to sacrifice a woman to the title monster.
* The Lair of the White Worm: This rule seemingly works both ways. Lady Marsh also invites people into her home in order to kill them.
* The Lake at the End of the World subverts the trope at the beginning when a teenage boy shows up at a farm and claims to be from an underground settlement of a few hundred people. The family that takes him in assumes he's gone insane with loneliness, but naturally it turns out he's telling the truth.
* The Lake House: Dr. Kate Forster and Alex Wyler fall in love via a trans-temporal mailbox. They live in the same spot, but two years apart.
* The Lake House has an interesting variant: the distance isn't in space so much as in time.
* The Lake House ideologies. In some ways the timeline is constant — the guy she kissed at the party turns out to be the guy she's communicating with in the past. Yet in other ways the timeline is variable — she tells him how she misses the trees, so he plants one at the place she's going to live at — which she magically doesn't notice having grown until after she sent him that letter. And then there's the grandfather paradox involving the (lack of a) car accident at the end/beginning of the film, causing her to go/not go to the lake house and end up communicating/not communicating with the guy in the first place. And there's also the dog in the past timeline who responded to the name given to it in the future timeline.

* The Lake House, the main female character has not met the man she is writing letters to, as he is two years behind her time.
* The Lake House, two people living two years apart in the same house exchange letters through time. Near the end of the film, the woman (who's the one who lives in the future) realizes that the bloke she's been writing letters to is the one that died in her arms near the beginning of the film. Thus she frantically races to inform him of what happened before he gets run over.

* The Lamb Lies Down on Broadway. It comprises 23 tracks about a Puerto Rican juvenile's metaphysical journey in which he loses his brother (more probably his soul), is reborn, is castrated and gets his manhood stolen by a huge raven. This is after he meets, makes love to, kills (unwillingly) and eats a bunch of siren-like creatures. And those are only some of the highlights.
* The Lamb Lies Down on Broadway serves this purpose for the main character, Rael.
* The Lamb Lies Down on Broadway: since it's based on Peter Gabriel's own dreams, it goes without saying that the narrative is odd, to say the least. Basically, a New York street punk named Rael winds up in some bizarre, alternate underground New York City. After going through many increasingly bizarre locales and situations, he finally sees a way back to the real New York. But he's forced to choose between escape and saving his drowning brother John, who in all previous appearances had refused to save him. Rael dives into the water, rescues his brother, pulls him onto dry land, and then, according to the lyrics, "Something's changed, that's not your face! It's mine, it's mine!" And, um, that's it.
* The Lamb Lies Down on Broadway. This of course ignores Gabriel's problems with his wife and daughter around the same time (although he did end up writing the lyrics and overall story of the album) and the fact that the Banks/Collins/Rutherford trio had already gelled into the main creative force in the band. In fact, the band started crediting individual writers for each song in order to escape the notion that Gabriel wrote everything.
* The Lamborghini bull, which is linked to the company's tendency to name its cars after famous bulls/bull breeds from bullfighting history.

* The Lambton Worm both feature serpents who can bring themselves together again. In the former, if the snake is fought mid-stream and then hacked to pieces, it cannot re-form. In the latter, the middle section of the snake has to be taken and cooked for it to remain dead.
* The Lambton Worm of the details which appear in prose versions of the tale.
* The Lambton Worm was a serpent or dragon in English folklore that could heal any injury it took, to the point that it could eventually rejoin segments of its body that had been hacked off. It turned out that the only way to defeat it was for the son of the local lord to wear a suit of armour covered in spearheads and fight it in a river. When the worm, which fought by crushing opponents, wrapped itself around the knight, the blades on his armor cut it apart, and the running river washed the individual segments away so the worm couldn't reconnect itself.

* "The Lamp and Willow" fanfic, Willow discovers a magic lamp while she and Buffy (who are shipped as a couple in this story) help Buffy's mom sort out artifacts from a client's estate. Willow is sufficiently clever to handle the lamp and Balil, the genie within, as though she were handling a primed tactical nuke, and ends up employing a variation of the Prisoner's Dilemma to avoid any pitfalls. Her first of three wishes is for "the intelligence, knowledge, wisdom and understanding" to use her second and third wishes wisely (noting that intelligence and wisdom are not synonymous). Once she receives this wish, she and Buffy go over several drafts of her second wish, finally hitting on one that would meet their needs, as well as the needs of their friends, before presenting the draft to Balil. Willow uses the draft as her second wish, but adds as a condition that Balil may only grant the second wish if he is able to grant the third wish, which in this case is crafted to benefit Balil and his fellow genies. Willow correctly surmises that she would benefit most by treating Balil like an intelligent being and not like a magic slot-machine.

* The Lancer alongside the former and often acting as his truck, while sharing the position of handling military affairs with the latter.
* The Lancer and strikes a contrast with him; childish, naive, long distance attacker, etc.
* The Lancer and the team's supervisor, leading to clashes with Nick as the leader.
* The Lancer, a seasoned detective to counter balance Steve, and being from the mainland gives him an outsiders perspective on island life.
* The Lancer as he is the most gregarious and outgoing of the team, and gives the most public presentations. While Jamie is the most iconic person on the show, Adam is the one most responsible for presenting the show to the audience.
* The Lancer: Bluegrass, laidback and easygoing sharpshooter compared to Quicksilver's by-the-book nature
* The Lancer breakout character that finishes the catchphrase with "OK."
* The Lancer: Canach, who takes a much less serious attitude to the fight than the Commander, and seems to be in it just for fun (he even places a bet on the outcome of the final battle).
* The Lancer: Cera, bossy, egotistical, short-tempered, and she'll always come through for her friends.

* The Lancer chosen by the Fire Crystal, symbolizing courage. She's more on the ball than Bartz.
* The Lancer: Corrin, beloved by the siblings and takes command in Xander's absence. In contrast to Xander's direct nature and sense of duty to Garon, Corrin is conflicted and more caring towards the enemy.
* The Lancer due to bickering with the main protagonist until they learn to set aside their differences and respect each other.
* The Lancer Dumbledore, who has a cat Patronus and the Animagus form of a tabby cat (with eyeglass markings around its eyes) as well. Between them, various characters in the series demonstrate the gamut of cat personalities from malicious to beneficent.
* The Lancer: Etna, highly ambitious and has the tendency to transparently plot Laharl's overthrow, if only to keep him in line.
* The Lancer: Face, the con man. The practical, cynical, and grounded personality to Hannibal's risk-taking, idealistic, and mercurial one.
* The Lancer Fennec Shand steals some limelight herself and is confirmed to be appearing in a spinoff special alongside Fett.
* The Lancer foil to the old veteran Lightning, and holds a grudge against Snow, but eventually matures into a hero in his own right.
* The Lancer: Genis, Lloyd's childhood friend who is usually the one that figure out how to make his insane schemes work.
* The Lancer:Geoffrey, leader of the Royal Knights, Elincia's champion, renowned for being a strait-laced and honest figure.
* The Lancer: Gosalyn Mallard, Drake's spirited daughter who joins him on missions against his will.
* The Lancer: Gylfie, Soren's closest companion and the smallest member of the team, who is skilled in navigation.
* The Lancer: Haibara, who, like Conan, is a genius adult shrunk to child form but her coldness contrasts his heroics.
* The Lancer has varied widely, sometimes being the hotheaded rebel willing to risk lives needlessly, other times calling out Nightwing for being callous about the danger he's putting the team in.
* The Lancer: Iron Man, a sardonic hero that relies on techonlogy instead of Thor's brute force and magic.
* The Lancer: Irvine, whose cynicism and pragmatism acts as a counterpoint to Van's energetic idealism.
* The Lancer Jason's best friend, playful foil, and just as dedicated to the cause.
* The Lancer: Joe "The Condor" Asakura (G2), the weapons and marksmanship expert, driven by his desire for revenge.
* The Lancer: Karrin Murphy, a police officer and a skeptic who often seeks out Harry's help with magic cases.
* The Lancer: Lai, Virtue of Order, Warrior of Wood - the marshal of the Radius of Green who keeps order until Yun returns.
* The Lancer: Lance, burying the hatchet to become Keith's right hand man.
* The Lancer: Logan Thackary, who is distrusted by the other members for his conflicting loyalties which caused him to abandon the group in the past. Wields a sword in contrast to Eir's bow, and is short and stocky while Eir is tall. Logan is more conflicted and angsty in contrast to Eir and Rytlock's straightforward personalities.
* The Lancer: Maria, for First Response mode. A hot-blooded paramedic who has quick reflexes and a desire to be a hero. However, she lacks patience with others and dislikes teamwork.
* The Lancer mentality. Graduated the academy with top marks but passed over for leadership due to his ego.
* The Lancer: Miles, a snarky punk and spiritualist who specializes in the recently deceased.
* The Lancer: Newt, Thomas' best friend and most trusted ally, who's much quieter and less level headed than Thomas.

* The Lancer of the team as he butts heads with Satoru and his descent to darkness and out again.
* The Lancer: Ongo, the most mysterious character of them all and the one that is most connected to the planet.
* The Lancer on his father's trust fund, he follows the Speed career path.
* The Lancer Prince Barin, a who has a rivalry with Flash over Aura's affections.
* The Lancer: Rafael, as tritagonist he foils both of the leads. More open than Jewel, and more gut instinct than Blu.
* The Lancer: Ray Stanz, the idealist who interacts with Venkman the most. Innocent foil to the former's self-centeredness.
* The Lancer: Riku, Sora's best friend who operates from the shadows, after being corrupted by and then learning to harness Darkness.
* The Lancer: Robin. While he has the most crimefighting experience on the Team, he's also the youngest. Though he tried to lead the Team, he eventually realized he had no experience leading others and lacked the maturity to do so.
* The Lancer: Sai, a replacement Sasuke who's direct and rude nature foils the friendliness of everyone else.
* The Lancer: Saionji, the council's vice-president who is nominally Touga's best friend but is jealous and resentful towards him. While Touga is scheming and coy, Saionji is more direct and up front about what he wants.
* The Lancer: Sawyer, a rebellious crook, and hoarding willing to go to lengths most others won't. Jack's rival, but he eventually softens.
* The Lancer Shock Trooper who preferes to be in the thick of battle, unlike Welkin who commands from the back.
* The Lancer: Somah, your first ally and the only one from the same timeframe as you.
* The Lancer that doesn't play well with others. In Civil War he becomes at odds with Cap and leads his own rival faction.
* The Lancer that Ike trusts him as much as one of their own. His wit and upbeat pluckiness contrast Ike's pragmatism and unfazed personality. As a laguz he also provides the greatest visual and cultural contrast, and some chapters require him to work together with Ike.
* The Lancer: Tygra, second in command, Lion-o's jealous adopted brother.
* The Lancer, when the gang does split up, Shaggy leads one half. Shaggy (along with Scooby) often notices creepy things that Fred had missed.
* The Lancer who later teams up with him and becomes his close companion.
* The Lancer who was once the leader of Sector V and stands out as the cool and laid-back member of the team, contrasting Nigel's paranoid and work-oriented nature.
* The Lancer with no stake in your group or its mission. Reiji is focused only on taking down Kandori.
* The Lances basically let Sara get away with figurative murder because she was the baby of the family, and completely failed to parent her at all. Notably, this extends even after she gets back — Quentin has made no genuine effort to actually build a relationship with Sara and Dinah is willfully ignorant of how her 'favorite' daughter has been slowly

* The Land Before Time. A battle between Chomper's parents and a hungry Sharptooth results in bloody scratches.
* The Land Before Time: After Cera was cornered by a pack of Pachycephalosauruses that were scared off by a seemingly monstrous tar blob monster, she becomes afraid that the monster will get her too. However, the monster turns out to be Littlefoot and the others all covered with tar. Once Cera realizes this, she then proclaims that she knew all along that it was them, being the ego brat she is.
* The Land Before Time: Although Cera's companions see the Sharptooth standing right behind her, she doesn't notice it (thinking it's a gag) until it starts to drool on her.
* The Land Before Time, a massive horde of locusts suddenly appears in the Great Valley and devours all the plants, thus kicking off the plot since the Dinosaurs are now forced to abandon their home and seek refuge elsewhere. These locusts come without any foreshadowing, and once they have ravaged the valley they simply disappear, never to be seen or mentioned again.
* The Land Before Time. A notable part of his design is his long, feminine eyelashes, despite being a boy.
* The Land Before Time - A series of animated films taking place in the dinosaur era. 14 films and a TV show since 1988.
* The Land Before Time by the end, when Littlefoot uses it on a smaller tree to knock stones down over the hole.
* The Land Before Time, Cera and the other dinosaurs refuse to follow Littlefoot's instructions on where to go to find the Great Valley, instead taking an easier path. Their "easier path" winds up trapping them all in a deadly lava flow and nearly gets them killed until Littlefoot saves them.
* The Land Before Time: Despite the paternal filicide of her original voice actress Judith Barsi, five months before the first film's release, Ducky is still alive and speaking thanks to Heather Hogan and later Aria Noelle Curzon in the sequels and TV series.
* The Land Before Time does this when Sharptooth jumps onto Littlefoot's mother and bites a chunk out of her neck. (we see it in shadow though.)Interestingly, this was not the original plan, it was altered late in production.
* The Land Before Time do this to try to get leaves down from a tree. Since Petrie couldn't fly, they formed a ladder. Spike was supporting Littlefoot, who was supporting Ducky, who was supporting Petrie. Cera was pointing and laughing.
* The Land Before Time, Ducky walks backward right into an angry Sharptooth.
* The Land Before Time: Each of the child characters are separated from their parents and guardians on their way to The Great Valley.
* The Land Before Time film turns out to be this. Originally respected as the smartest resident of the Great Valley, having "been everywhere and seen everything", he soon confesses to the kids that he gets most of his knowledge from second-hand sources.
* The Land Before Time for this relationship and those who support this, cowed into submission only by Chomper's speech about him being intolerant.
* The Land Before Time, getting seemingly devoured by Sharptooth just before drowning.
* The Land Before Time gives a pretty big slasher smile when she decides upon seeing what is apparently Sharptooth's corpse to use it as ramming practice. However, a few rams in, she soon discovers that Sharptooth was not quite as dead as she originally thought, and just barely managed to survive to tell the tale.
* The Land Before Time: Grandma and Grandpa Longneck. Whenever their grandson is in danger, they come charging in full-force.
* The Land Before Time had Littlefoot and Cera voiced by children: then 12-year-old Gabriel Damon and then 8-year-old Candy Hutson.
* The Land Before Time has a prehistoric shark — possibly a Ginsu shark — as a "swimming sharp tooth".
* The Land Before Time has a total of thirteen sequels and a television series consisting of 26 episodes.
* The Land Before Time have a hard time remembering words like "tyrannosaurus" and "stegosaurus". Therefore, everything has incredibly simplistic names, such as "spike tail" for stegosaurus. They even have a word for the sun, "great circle" They actually refer to one species as "rainbow faces," despite the fact that they call rain "sky-water."

* The Land Before Time, hence why he ends up actively seeking out the entrance to the Great Valley in the climax.
* The Land Before Time. However, Cera was not back with the group to hear him at that time, though she uses the term on her own after running into them. "My father told me that flatheads have very small brains!"
* The Land Before Time. However, he learns how at the end of the movie, so the sequels don't always make sense. For example, in the ninth film, the group is cut off from their families by a large gorge. Petrie offers to fly over it and get help, but changes his mind after he is nearly burned by a jet of hot air coming out of the gorge. All he would have needed to do is, yes, you guessed it, fly higher. This may or may not be justified by his age.
* The Land Before Time II: The Great Valley Adventure and are saved by their angry parents, Cera asks if they all got the same lecture as her:
* The Land Before Time II: The Great Valley Adventure Chomper. It's only the arrival of Chomper's parents that saves the kids from being killed by them.
* The Land Before Time in that only smaller bipeds (under 400 lbs) get their necks snapped in this manner and it's usually a 1000 lbs+ dinosaur doing the snapping... and the dinosaurs have essentially taken a CQC course.
* The Land Before Time in the first film, despite Littlefoot's mother mentioning "spiketails" when telling her son about the different types of dinosaurs.
* The Land Before Time: In the first movie, Littlefoot, Petrie, Ducky, and Spike end up glued together after falling into a tar pit, and their combined form looks scary enough to frighten away a group of pachycephalosaurs that were attacking Cera.
* The Land Before Time is the only sharptooth who is seen befriending leaf-eaters and is the only sharptooth who lives in the great valley. As such, he prefers befriending leaf-eaters and generally doesn't associate with sharpteeth outside his family.
* The Land Before Time IV: Journey Through the Mists. But at the end of the day, they're still ruthless and dangerous predators who pose a legitimate threat to the heroes.
* The Land Before Time") Justified because he's a baby, and adult Stegosaurs in the films are shown to be perfectly capable of speech.
* The Land Before Time - Known for a tear-jerking scene involving Littlefoot's mother, the movie still has sillier moments in between more serious ones.
* The Land Before Time (Likely the most philosophical entry in the series, namely discussing the outside universe in an adult manner, plus the fact that it deals with an antagonist who had been banished from the Great Valley for accidentally causing the deaths of several migrants).
* The Land Before Time: Littlefoot and his friends fall asleep in what turns out to be one of Sharptooth's footprints. This is made clear in the morning when Sharptooth appears and goes after the young dinos, placing his foot right on the print.
* The Land Before Time: Littlefoot is a charismatic type given that he led his small mismatched herd to The Great Valley on little more than instinct/faith.
* The Land Before Time — especially for the "scalie" section of the fandom
* The Land Before Time movies, which is OK when you watch them on TV, but especially awkward when you watch them on video.
* The Land Before Time off the top of a volcano just before it erupts. Certainly, there were some impressive Pterosaurs in real life. Not so sure if one would give a young sauropod a ride.
* The Land Before Time once and for all, Littlefoot says they need some bait to lure him into their trap. With everyone else having a job, he stares up at Ducky.
* The Land Before Time received has two Japanese dubs. The original one was released in theaters in 1989 and the second for home video in 1992. All home video releases contain the second dub. The direct to video sequels would later use more or less the same cast from the second dub.

* The Land Before Time sequels starting with film VII. The sixth entry is not exempt either, but in that case, there is no interaction between the CG and hand-drawn characters.
* The Land Before Time series, especially in the very first movie. The very word frightens any other dinosaur who hears it.
* The Land Before Time series in fanwork. However, Little Foot's grandpa clearly states that Ali's herd are Little Foot's family's cousins.
* The Land Before Time, Sharptooth grabs Petrie as they plummet into the pond below, though the flyer survives.
* The Land Before Time, Sharptooth opens his menacing eye at Cera after she charges at his face, believing him to be dead.
* The Land Before Time. She spends most of the first film bragging about how she can take care of herself...until she nearly gets everyone killed following her way. In the sequels, while still egotistical and hot-headed, she has mellowed out greatly.
* The Land Before Time, Spike is adopted by Ducky's family, and he couldn't be happier.
* The Land Before Time, Spike is shown hatching in a patch of grass Ducky finds his egg in. Cut to outside the grass, and Spike inexplicably comes out looking the same age as the rest of the main cast. Of course he could just be big for his age.
* The Land Before Time that all went straight-to-video. (And a animated TV series.)
* The Land Before Time: the first movie has Ducky as a platonic version. When they first meet, Ducky pulls Littlefoot out of his long-standing depression (from losing his mother and being rejected by Cera) due to her cheerful, sunny disposition.
* The Land Before Time, the gang meets Chomper, the baby T-rex they befriended in the first sequel. During the "Friends For Dinner" song, Chopper is collecting various leaves and other flora for his herbivore friends to eat. As he's doing this, his parents are watching (and apparently unclear on what he's doing) and one says to the other, "Sometimes I worry about that boy."
* The Land Before Time. The original film is by far the most popular. It's considered to be an excellent piece of work, even for adults... the musical sequels on the other hand tend to be quite disliked. Still, they have scores of fans and an entire forum.
* The Land Before Time, the original villain Sharptooth (and his TV show parallel Red Claw) have a jagged red scar across one eye. Doc, a good guy in the 6th movie, has a similar scar, but it's thin and contrasts less with the skin.
* The Land Before Time) this way (before that, Cera shook her tail at it):
* The Land Before Time TV series, Spike is mistaken for an all-knowing being by a colony of mammals.
* The Land Before Time TV series, the episode opens with five of the main protagonists piled up on each other trying to reach for berries in a tree. From top to bottom, it was: Ducky, Chomper, Ruby, Cera and Littlefoot. They had no luck reaching it and decided they needed Spike to give them extra support, so they go get him and reform the totem with Spike at the bottom. They still failed. Though maybe they could have reached if Petrie would have helped instead of just flying around cheering them on!
* The Land Before Time two years, only stopping when Universal shut down their animation studio. And then nine years after the thirteenth film, another sequel was released.
* The Land Before Time VII, during the "Good Inside" song, Ducky briefly tickles Petrie.
* The Land Before Time VII: The Stone of Cold Fire so that they can take the stone's power for themselves.
* The Land Before Time V, when the herd leave the Great Valley after its vegetation is devoured by the "swarming leaf-gobblers", Littlefoot and the gang leave in search for food themselves, leaving behind footprints so the herd will follow their tracks and not having to split up.

* The Land Before Time: Want to know if the heroes made it to the Great Valley in the end of the first film? Don't watch any of the 14 sequels then.
* The Land Before Time), was killed by her father three months before the former film's release.
* The Land Before Time was only involved with the first). The first movie is widely regarded as a classic. The second movie, and every movie thereafter, was pretty obviously a cash-grab. That makes 13 straight movies of pure zombie.
* The Land Before Time. When a pair of egg-stealing Struthiomimuses arrive at the Great Valley after a long trek, one of them says that he's just "egg-xausted". His partner kicks him in the face in response.
* The Land Before Time when Sharptooth bites a chunk of flesh off of Littlefoot's mom's back.
* The Land Before Time when they are stationed on Earth. This is a slight inversion of the trope, however, because the rainbowfaces actually want to be stationed on Earth.
* The Land Before Time where Cera finds Sharptooth lying on its back, with its eyes closed. Thinking he is dead, Cera taunts it and charges at its face. When she gets closer, Sharptooth opens its eye, staring menacingly back at her.
* The Land Before Time, where Little Foot explains in detail how they're going to kill Sharptooth and things work out more or less as advertised.
* The Land Before Time who always helps her friends when they're in danger.
* The Land Before Time, who was a producer on the film, suggested changing the gender for a little extra diversity.
* The Land Before Time would be enough of a put-off, but in addition, the two do argue a lot (in three films, resulting in all-out fights). However, Cera has been known to be jealous when Littlefoot makes new friends.
* The Land Beyond the Magic Mirror first arrive in Murlynd's house they're in a room with stuffed animals. The description makes them sound scary.
* The [L]and command also appears to be context-sensitive. When flying over the wrong celestial body, it will inform you that
* The Land: Forging, a literal example is seen. A wood sprite joins Richter to fight at his side - with specific attention called to his red shirt - only to be killed moments later.
* The Land Ironclads, which feature tank-like vehicles a decade before the first tanks were used in the Somme.
* The land is part of the "Fertile Crescent". Compared to the desert or near-desert to the south and east, it's practically heaven, even without irrigation. Irrigation has ironically contributed to it becoming
* the Landlady has been shown having a variety of jobs: delivering pizza coupon fliers and temping at the Berry-Mart, along with other, unspecified part-time jobs. She does this so she can keep tenants' rents lower, which is definitely a help to students like Miyako (who has lower rent than the others for other reasons, in addition).
* The landlady who tips the Secret Service off to the would-be Presidential assassin's plan in
* The Land of Adventure: the Hero enters a strange, dreamlike realm, where logic is topsy-turvy and the "rules" are markedly different from the ordinary world. Carl Jung identified the Ordinary Realm with the conscious mind, and the Realm of Adventure with the subconscious mind.
* The Land of Days, one of the most thoroughly subjugated lands, is a desolate, barren wasteland home only to the Tyrant's fortress-cities and a few hardy, twisted plants; some of its main geographical features, Merith Lake and the Forest of Bersith, have by the books' time vanished completely — nothing is left of them but an enormous, polluted swamp.
* The Land of Elyon, a children's series by Patrick Carman, has walls surrounding the inhabited cities and the roads that link them. The main character finds a way out of the walls, despite the fear of many of the other characters about what is beyond the walls.
* The Land of Gorch, a far more successful endeavour into older audience material.

* The Land of Gorch being children's material. Head writer Michael O'Donoghue made his feelings for the skits clear when he was tasked with developing them:
* The Land of Green Ginger, telling the story of Aladdin's son and heir, and then provides its own Happy Ever After, as it's a children's book written in that mode.
* the land of Monstru is ruled over by Abe Lincolnstein, the reassembled, reanimated and quite unsane (yes, unsane) form of the former president,who resides in Lincoln City, a massive complex from which he rules with an tyrannical iron fist.
* the Land of Ooo will eventually destroy itself just like humanity did.
* The land of Rashemen in Forgotten Realms is implied to be a living being.
* The Land of Sand and ultimately treat the brothers nicely for most of the book. In the tv episodes, they simply believe the real Ed and Al to be con artists stealing their identities, completely ignoring that Ed still showed alchemic talent in front of them, and treat the two harshly throughout 2-parter.
* The Land of Stories, allowing the twins to meet Cinderella, etc, despite their tales being centuries old. Though due to the twins' birth the worlds have begun moving at a similar speed.
* The Land of Stories died a year before the events of the first book.
* The Land of Stories has brothers that are a striking image of their father. They look so much alike that even one of the two’s children thought they were the same person.
* The Land of Stories makes it so that the Prince Charmings of Sleeping Beauty, Cinderella, and Snow White are all brothers.
* The Land of Stories performs, the more grotesque features they gain.
* The Land Of Stories: The Wishing Spell (and presumably the other books in the LOS series) by Chris Colfer focus on two kids who enter a magical land through a book.
* The Land of Stories, where Alex is an overachieving "A" student and an optimist in love with fairytales, Conner is extremely lazy in school and a sarcastic skeptic.
* The Land of the Lost features two children who, with the help of a magic talking fish, find an undersea realm where all things lost at sea end up, gain sentience, and live in harmony. There the boy finds his old jackknife, who he helps become a knight as thanks for being a trusty tool.
* The Land of the Painted Caves came out in 2011, making another 9-year gap.
* The Land of the Painted Caves, with the whole story being one long journey and a six page sex scene every five pages, got pretty boring, too.
* The Land of the Silver Apples by Nancy Farmer. The elves kidnap toddlers, put them on leashes, and when they get tired of them, leave them for the wolves to eat.
* The Land of the Spellbinders is an agrarian/mining society with technology equal to the medieval era. The land is ruled by the Spellbinders, an order of scientists masquerading as sorcerers. Their power comes from technology based largely on electricity and magnetism (such as radios, flying ships and electrical combat suits). The Spellbinders' technology was created so long ago that the current Spellbinders do not even know how their own equipment works, nor can they repair it if it breaks.
* The Land of What Might-Have-Been, it's observed that the Radiant Empress (an insane alternate version of Elphaba) has established the most negative version of this. In her position as ruler of Unbridled Radiance, the Empress is so determined to make herself indispensable to her empire that it's basically impossible for anyone else to do the tasks asked of her, even when she could theoretically delegate some of her responsibility to her more skilled followers.
* The Land of What Might-Have-Been, the Radiant Empress is twisting peoples' minds and mutilating their bodies to fight her vision that beauty equals goodness, but she genuinely believes she is in the right.
* The Land Raider has, recently, undergone the same level of insane modding as its Rhino cousin. Anything you can stick on a Rhino these days, you can stick on a Land Raider - but more. (Helios has a multiple missile launcher like the Whirlwind, Prometheus has a massive comms array like the Damocles Rhino, Redeemer has a pair of super flamers and assault cannons like a Bhaal Predator... and so on, up to one variant which has a fortress-busting siege cannon on its forward miniturret).

* The Land Rover Series I's prototypes had a single seat and the steering wheel in the middle, due to the buyer demographics being perceived as having familiarity with that layout, driving tractors as part of their work. The final production version ended up being equipped with 3 front seats and a normal left- or right-mounted steering wheel.
* The Land Rush of 1889 had a number of people hide out in unoccupied lands of what is now Oklahoma to claim the land before the Land Rush officially started. Because they got there sooner than the others, they were referred to as "Sooners." This is why Oklahoma's state nickname is "The Sooner State."
* The landscape can be a hindrance or an advantage to the player. With enough height, you can strike mobs below you while they cannot reach you. If there's a huge drop off nearby, you can attack a mob and push them off a cliff for major damage or outright kill them.
* : The landscape of the dragon lands is gradually revealed to be the buried corpse of something immense, whose petrified organs fuel the land's volcanism and half-emerged bones shape its geography.
* The "Land Shark" variety of this trope shows up at the end of the trashy,
* The Lands Of Evelon, both the Lovey-Love Potion and the Eternal Love Elixir allow male pets to become pregnant and give birth/lay eggs. The trope is also inverted, as they also allow female pets to impregnante other females.
* The land south of Gondor, called Harad, is considered a savage land. Sauron musters an army from there. It is important to note that Harad is
* The land swarming with deadly eldrich horrors and the only remaining haven for humanity left is, seemingly, a cramped flying city, which enforces a strict Fantastic Caste System between those with damaged and undamaged DNA, who all live under the sway of a faith based around the ominously named "Lords of Light and Shadow" led by a very Smug Snake named Charles.

* The "Language professors hate him!" ads for the Pimsleur method. Dr. Pimsleur was a real person (who died well before such ads were made) who developed a real language learning method that many people do find effective. He did not, however, make any ridiculous claims like it being possible to learn a language in ten days, and there are plenty of language professors who do appreciate Pimsleur and his work. Some of his ideas are still the basis of foreign language acquisition research today.
* The languages and orthographies follow the "harshness of language = harshness of species" rule: the Elvish languages Quenya and Sindarin are very vowel-heavy with a lot of L's and R's; particularly Quenya, which looks and sounds a lot like Latin. Non-Elvish languages seem to go in a scale from softer to harsher as follows:
* The language skills of Indiana Jones mentioned above were also illustrated in the television series
* The language typically involves "the Spirit of God" / "the Holy Spirit" in some way: Being "filled with" the Spirit, having the Spirit "with" you, the Spirit "rushing upon" you, etc. The result may be miracles, or physical strength, or skill in battle, or even skill in craftmanship.
* The language used by the Vakhi, which are fully robots rather than biomechanical, constructed to act as law enforcement, was originally believed to be a starfish language because it was outside of normal range of hearing, and could only be translated with a special device that only the ruler of the city had access to. The Toa Metru were shocked when they returned to the abandoned city and encountered malfunctioning Vakhi who spoke normally. They theorized that the Vakhi had secretly been speaking in normal language all along but in ultrasonic.

* the larger the yacht, the less it is sailed. The reason is that sailing is manpower intensive activity, and the practical hull length limit for single-handed sailing is 35 ft and that of crew of two being 45 ft. The larger yachts require larger crews, and while a married couple can easily head for the sea for the weekend, it is far more difficult to gather the crew at the same time on the place.

* The largest stars have enough mass/gravity to prevent this for a while longer. It will burn through elements, fusing them into larger and larger elements. Then it hits iron, at which point all nuclear fusion stops dead. Then comes the supernova. To conclude this assortment of explosive events, one final caveat which affects the entire universe, including us here on Earth, comes from these gigantic blasts; in the incredible heat of the supernova, elements heavier than iron can be generated through fusion. Not only does this create elements such as gold and uranium, but also a whole host of lighter-than-iron elements are also expelled by the blast and into space, including those vital to life. Red giants also release these lighter elements when casting off their outer layers, enriching the universe with material that eventually may become part of a new star, a new planet, or maybe, just maybe, a new living thing - the adage of "you are made of stardust" is true, after all! Every organism that is alive, as well as every organism that came before it, owes its existence to the material ejected by expanding and exploding stars, and as the Stelliferous era is here to stay for a very, very long time, this will be the case for almost the entirety of the forseeable future.
* The largest volcano known to mankind, Olympus Mons, poses no threat to anyone but possible future Mars explorers. Estimates for how long it's been inactive range from 2 million years ago to back in Jurassic times; astrogeologists suspect that its activity cycle is much less regular than that of Earth's volcanoes, as Mars has no plate tectonics to dictate when pressures build up within its magma chamber. Hence, if and when it

* The Larry Sanders Show all the same. The main characters (both on-screen and off) of Larry's talk show and his guests are certainly far from being free of egotism, insecurity, scheming, backbiting, troubled personal lives, or cynicism, but at the same time they're not really malevolent either; they're just people with frailties and weaknesses like anyone else.
* The Larry Sanders Show had several, including Jon Stewart as his rival and David Duchovny, who had a gay crush on Larry.
* The Larry Sanders Show" if given such responsibility, but are forced to let him do it due to the last-minute nature of Larry's illness. True to form, after his initial appearance (in which he is bumbling but humble and self-deprecating, which the audience engages with) Hank becomes impossible to deal with - so Artie and Larry let him go on for a second evening, during which he is still incompetent and bumbling, but the audience finds his newfound arrogance so off-putting that he is booed off the stage, thus providing him with a humbling come-down.
* The Larry Sanders Show is so offended that he leaves before Stewart can interview him, and the network (which had warned Stewart about the sketch) immediately stops production on the episode and airs a rerun instead.
* The Larry Sanders Show takes this tack, with backstage plots affecting "onscreen" interviews.
* The Larry Sanders Show, who played himself in love with Larry, propositioning him backstage wherever he appeared.
* The larval states of some insects, like antlions, ants, bees and wasps, don't produce any waste until they pupate. These larvae live in the same spot until they pupate (e.g. antlion larvae live in pitfall traps), so this trope is necessary to avoid dirtying the place where they live. Some of these insects can remain in their larval state for several years.
* The La's about this. He is often treated as a Reclusive Artist because of the band's failure to produce a second studio album for over twenty years, and the rarity of their live performances. However, he insists that he has a perfectly normal social life, and complains that the media describe him as a "recluse" just because he doesn't get photographed falling over outside fashionable nightclubs with a model on each arm.
* The Lasat term for the Force, "The Ashla", was the proper name for the Light

* The laser gun item has the most recoil of all, even though it too fires nothing but energy, every character has to hold it with both hands and it still almost hits them in the face every time they fire. The Super Scope, however, has very little recoil and can fire rapidly, and only a little more when a shot is charged. It still only shoots light, however.

* The Last Airbender, anyway when it turns out the library is still fully accessible.
* The Last Airbender artistic choices were bad enough that we'll never see her or the others introduced in a sequel.
* The Last Airbender as Katara's brother Sokka. Both performances were criticized.
* The Last Airbender), but then called him in for some acting auditions and screen tests to see if he could double anyway, and was apparently so impressed by the boy, who does look a lot like Aang as well, that he was hired.
* The Last Airbender, deciding to look at the department heads and see if there's a weak link. Cue the amended title card, which reads "M. NIGHT SHYAMALAN IS THE WEAK LINK".
* The Last Airbender: Element bending occurs to the production logos: the stars in the Paramount logo are accompanied by splashes of water, and the Nickelodeon Movies logo is seen on fire and is cooled down with a blast of air.
* The Last Airbender fandom after the release of this movie can't help but be curious to know why it was panned to kingdom come.
* The Last Airbender first season did. Aang single-handily stops the Fire Nation from destroying the Northern Water Tribe and Ozai charging Azula with going after the Avatar. Unlike the cartoon however, the film gained too much of a negative reaction that will make it unlikely it'll have any sequels.
* The Last Airbender follows the logic of the animated show. Major differences include that firebenders require fire in order to bend and earthbenders need to work together to do feats that the earthbenders in the original show could pull off with little effort.
* The Last Airbender for the Avatar that he's on but that never comes across in the movie.
* The Last Airbender has a few levels where Zuko and Aang have to deal with spider-crabs. Two of the spiders fall under this trope, especially the hive queen.
* The Last Airbender has this happen after the first chapter. Zuko narrates about what happened to him and Aang that led to his ship getting blown up.
* The Last Airbender has to spiritually communicate with Doug Walker, who at one point complains at the Critic's idiocy.

* The Last Airbender in the original cartoon, but is soft-spoken and contemplative in the film.
* The Last Airbender In the series, Iroh explained this source was the bender's own body heat. In the film, it's suggested that creating your own fire is a skill lost over the ages, and that Iroh was one of the few who have mastered that element of firebending and subtly was teaching Zuko to do the same.
* The Last Airbender introduced this to the Fire Nation; They needed sources of fire in order to bend it. Compare this to the cartoon, where they could draw flame from anywhere. Iroh pulling fire out of nowhere shows how Badass he is.
* The Last Airbender, Kinley claims she left her water running, which you'd think would be I Have To Wash my hair, and then she adds "in Canada", putting it in this trope (this was taking place at an American convention).
* The Last Airbender, Noah Ringer, who played Aang, was cast for his martial arts ability (he has a black belt in Taekwondo), and had never acted before. He had to attend acting classes before shooting began.
* The Last Airbender. Only the most powerful can generate flames from nothing.
* The Last Airbender thanks to the rising sun and pull a sneak attack; whereas in the movie, Zuko hardly had to put in any effort to beat her.
* The Last Airbender. The ancient spirits Raava and Vaatu battled but couldn't exist without each other, so if one is killed they re-form within the other over a very long period of time. At some point Raava bonded with a human and became known as the Avatar Spirit. Being partly based off of the above mentioned Dalai Lama, the Avatar Spirit itself will always be reborn in mortal form. The current incarnation technically has access to the power and wisdom of all of the previous incarnations, but learning how to access that can be difficult.
* The Last Airbender, The Blue Spirit and Aang vs 200 Fire Nation guards.
* The Last Airbender then in canon. When Zuko was banished from the palace, he was left to live on the street, Ozai not even bothering to give him anything to help him, as opposed to canon, where he at least gave him a small ship and crew. Here, Zuko has to resort to trying to recruit a crew in bars, which fails, with one bar patron outright telling Zuko his quest to get the Avatar was just a way for his father to get rid of him. Zuko had to ask Azula to ask Ozai to give him a ship, but even then Ozai only gives Zuko the ship to get rid of Iroh. Upon arriving at the docks of a nondescript town celebrating the Fire Days festival, Commander Kanku refuses to produce any maps or intel on the surrounding region for the banished prince in fear of losing the Fire Lord's good favor. Basically, everyone can see that Zuko's quest for the Avatar for what it is except Zuko, because of his misplaced love and loyalty to his father and hope that capturing the Avatar can end his banishment.
* The Last Airbender the year before. It turns out that he doesn't even know their names and they catch him fapping to George Takei's biography for further insult.
* The Last Airbender, they note that the movie is nothing but exposition and gives the audience no reason to care about the characters themselves:
* The Last Airbender. They somehow took 20 episodes and edited down to only 103 minutes (for rather vague reasons), meaning that whole scenes had to be either dropped, replaced with narration, or combined in ways that just made it a mess. And that's not even including the scenes that were added that ruined what the series set up.
* The Last Airbender was rushed so the film could be converted to 3-D in time to meet an Independence Day weekend release.
* The Last Airbender we get an extended close-up on Aang's face in the Air Temple scene.
* The Last American Virgin productions written and directed by Boaz Davidson.
* The Last American Virgin stalks Karen by leering at her at the ice cream parlor, by letting the air out of her bike's tires so he can give her a ride to school, following her around and watching her have sex with Rick.
* The Last Angel: All of humanity's Dreadnoughts were named after Greek Goddesses, and their AI avatars are correspondingly female.
* The Last Angel centers on Red One, which is non-organic but has developed 'life' in the form of humanoid combat robots and insectoid repair drones. She describes herself as the ship and views damage sustained as 'injuries'.

* The Last Angel follows the last Human Dreadnaught, Nemesis in her quest for vengeance against the alien empire that wiped out Human civilization.
* The Last Angel great satisfaction to "feel" enemy ships break apart on her hull.
* The Last Angel involves quite many, the pacification of Varissha and the battle of Earth stand out in particular.
* The Last Angel: Nemesis, one of the last remnants of human civilization after Earth was destroyed by the Compact, is inhabited by the AI Red One. When she failed to protect Earth and humanity, Red One set herself the task of destroying the Compact whenever she came across it. Not an easy task when your enemy is a galaxy spanning civilization and you have just one ship, which probably explains why she is still at it, 2000 years later.
* The Last Angel. The basic technology completely disintegrates physical objects that strike it, but only partially diffuses energy weapons, allowing them to penetrate in weakened form. Unlike standard scifi shields, Angelverse shields actually use 'more' power the weaker they are, collapsing only when either there is no longer enough power to keep them up or, more commonly, when the shield becomes so saturated that the shield generator(s) cannot keep up with the stress and have to be shut down before they fail catastrophically. On top of that, each major power has a different implementation of, and terminology for, the technology:
* The Last Angel, the Compact, Askanj, and Humanity all have different words for ranks and titles. An Askanj Shipstress, a Compact Group Leader Prime and a Human Captain are all equivalent for example. The different naming conventions underscore the alien nature of the different civilizations.
* The Last Angel, this is how the compact grows. Standard first contact protocol is to jump a fleet in above an enemy world and ask it to join. If they decline, the fleet starts shooting until they say yes.
* The Last Angry Geek in his vlog for the movie, saying that he thought the characters were played up too much for comedy and that the characterizations were different from the ones from his favorite run of the team.
* The last arc of the third series revealed that Chase had an uncle who he had long believed dead. Apparently, because of his
* The last arc of the Unova era sees Ash, Iris, and Cilan accompanied back to Kanto by Alexa, a reporter from Kalos, and her Helioptile, a Pokémon native to Kalos, thus causing Ash to travel to Kalos.
* The Last Article: Germany defeated the UK and the Soviet Union and is taking over India by 1947, when Gandhi finds out the hard way how much worse the Nazis are than the British. It still is at war with the US and the Free French in Africa.
* The Last Astronaut, senses its surroundings through what seems like a mass spectrometer - it perceives objects as masses of their component elements.
* The last balrog and the last giant spider die and retreat from the world, respectively, in the course of the story, and the last of the
* The Last Bastion of Star City and its inhabitants. Two days pass in meatspace.
* The Last Bastion of Star City. Only two days pass in the real world.
* The last battle against SHODAN involves trying to shoot her in virtual reality while she
* The Last Battle cat who plots with the Calormenes to trick the other Narnian animals into following the false Aslan. Aslan himself is, of course, an aversion, since he's pretty much a lion version of Jesus.
* The Last Battle, ends in a world that's essentially the opposite of reality, in that the closer you get to the center, the more there is.
* The Last Battle ends with everyone except Susan dying and going to heaven. Susan's fate is still undetermined.
* The Last Battle ends with the destruction of all Narnia. The goodies get their happy ending in "True Narnia", a thinly-disguised version of Heaven after the Apocalypse.
* The Last Battle has corrupted the world and divided its animal inhabitants beyond repair. But it's played as a happy ending since they're reunited in the afterlife, along with characters who died in the previous books.

* The Last Battle. Jewel the Unicorn tells a story about Swanwhite the Queen, who ruled Narnia before the coming of the White Witch and the Great Winter. She was so beautiful that when she looked in a forest pool, the reflection of her face shone out of the water like a star at night for a year and a day afterward.
* The Last Battle, King Tirian tries to send Eustace and Jill home after they release him and Jewel, before he and his allies go into battle against the Calormenes. Jill refuses, but she feels like Eustace ruins the drama of the conflict by pointing out that they have no way of getting back to their world even if they wanted to.
* The last battle of the Wehrmacht's 9th and 12th armies during the fall of Germany. Well aware of what the fate would probably be for civilians stranded in Russian territory rather than American territory, the surviving soldiers of these two forces formed a literal corridor and fought to the last man to evacuate as many civilians to American lines as they could. They ended up saving some 250,000 people. Immortalized by Sabaton's song Heart's of Iron, particularly the line in German: It's not a battle, it is a rescue mission.
* The Last Battle: One reason why Susan refuses to remember Narnia is her obsession with makeup.
* The Last Battle that things can work the other way round too; King Tirian sees a (two way) vision of our world, and the various heroes of the series, and minutes later Jill and Eustace appear to save him (he had been tied to a tree by the bad guys). In the "real" world, they had spent a few days formulating a plan to get back to Narnia and save him.
* The Last Battle treat them worse than they do many of their own valued animals (such as war horses).
* "The Last Battle": Zeb is forced to play the role of the hostage in a war game set up by the droid general Kalani, leader of a Separatist holdout. He spends the time snarking at him.
* The last beheading in Denmark took place in 1892. The last beheading before that had been in 1882, and the death penalty was largely on the vane in the country. Indeed, Jens Nielsen, the prisoner sentenced to death, had had two prior death penalties converted to life in prison, but he didn't want to rot in prison, so he kept attacking the prison guards. After the third incident, his deathwish was finally carried out. When the death penalty was re-introduced following
* The last beheading in Scandinavia happened 1910 when Swedish murderer Johan Ander was guillotined in Långholmen prison, Stockholm.
* The last beheading in West Germany occurred in 1949 when a convicted robber-murderer Berthold Wehmeyer was executed by guillotine. He was also the last person to be executed in West Germany. The last time a guillotine was used in these countries was in 1961 in East Germany.
* The last, best hope against the forces of chaos is a race of man-eating lizards, who only has a fraction of the knowledge they once had and have trouble coordinating their actions at that (Not to mention the fact that their plan is to separate all the races and lock them up in different spots of the world).
* The Last Birdling between Tayo, a human child, and Bimonia, a Birdling child. Neither of them has ever had any friends their own age, Tayo due to her "unladylike" interest in archery and Bimonia due to being one of the last members of her species, and thus the two take to each other very quickly.
* The Last Blade ("A Bakumatsu Romance: Swordsmen in the Moonlight"), and evidenced in many visual elements in the game.
* The Last Blood, was released by the National Crime Prevention Council to promote teenage issues and to educate viewers about criminal acts affecting teens and students.
* The last book ends with one of the characters reciting the first lines from the first book.
* The last book gave Jacob, who suffered from unrequited love for Bella and who vehemently hated imprinting, his own happy romantic ending by having him imprint on Bella's newborn daughter Nessie. Oh, don't worry; Nessie grows really fast, so she'll be physically 17 years old in 7 years and ready to start a relationship with her "Uncle Jake" then! And what of Jake's loss of free will? Who cares as long as he's still (forced to be) in Bella's life!

* The Last Book of Swords: Shieldbreaker's Story Fred Saberhagen destroyed all but one of the Twelve Swords, ensuring that no further stories could be written involving his 'characters'.
* The last book of the 3.5 edition was 'Elder Evils', which introduced various
* The last book of the Bible is Revelation. Not "Revelations". Odd how the latter usage seems to be more common than the
* the last book of the last surviving mook. Oh, and the best part? He looks like a total pushover herbalist, so when he enters the room unarmed, the mooks just laugh.
* The last boss fight with Jeanne starts on a tower, then on a soaring missile, and finally on the wall of a building.
* The Last Boy Scout and Damon Wayans trying to stop a corrupt senator from getting assassinated at a football game. In addition, the movie starts with a player Billy Cole (portrayed by Billy Blanks), high on PCP, bringing a gun onto the field and shooting the opposing defense's players on the way to the end-zone, shortly before killing himself.
* The Last Boy Scout' character, who rescued her dad by pretending to be a lost little girl and approaching a gang of cutthroat corporate mercenaries and hands her father a .357 hidden in her teddy bear.
* The Last Boy Scout: He's a former Secret Service agent! He's a former pro-football player! They Fight Crime!
* The Last Boy Scout introduces Bruce Willis' character as the cuckolded husband in this scene... and as a cop, he correctly sniffs out that the other guy is hiding in the closet and nearly shoots him.
* The Last Boy Scout. Jimmy being thrown off a viaduct. You do the math.
* The Last Boy Scout takes place during a big American Football game (possibly the Super Bowl). A US Senator is the target; slight twist, in that he's a corrupt senator who the Big Bad is targeting because he asked for too much bribe money.
* The Last Boy Scout, this film panders with such determination to the base instincts of the action crowd that it will, I am sure, be an enormous hit." Guess which three words the posters loudly declared Ebert saying? (Although he did it give a three-star "Good" rating.)
* The Last Boy Scout to exclaim, "Shit, we're being beat up by the inventor of Scrabble!"
* The Last Breakfast Club, with the seven main characters being the sole survivors. The musical takes place years later, as they survive in the school building and contemplate leaving to attempt at restarting society.
* The Last Broadcast by a short time, causing many viewers to mistake it for a rip-off.
* ''The Last Brony: Kingdom Hearts With a Black Sora''. Black Sora and Black Riku have the same names as their original counterparts, but they are otherwise completely different characters. The Heartless and Keyblade do make an appearance, but they have very little effect on the plot. And the "similarities" end there.
* The Last Brony: Kingdom Hearts With a Black Sora has the Great Archive, which doubles as a memorial for bygone worlds.
* The last can be applied to some eateries in some third-world countries, who had photos of its most popular foods. Some places have even real samples of its food in exhibition, who change inter-daily. Anyway, while rarely looking appalling and disgusting, those photos and samples rarely look that delicious either.
* The last case is more of a subversion, though, since Major General Armstrong commanded her men to remove the fuses from the rounds to limit the damage done to the facilities where the battle was held. Besides, the tanks
* The Last Castle from saluting each other, regardless of their former ranks. To get around this, they run their fingers through their hair and claim they are just brushing their hair. Combined with common slang that they use for specific ranks, allowing them to address each other by their previous titles, they retain a sence of personal dignity and a semblance of order.

* The Last Castle, Irwin is ordered by the Warden to move a massive pile of rocks from one end of the prison yard to the other. When that doesn't break his will, Irwin is subsequently told to move all the rocks back to their original position.
* The Last Castle provides a very good example of the classic armchair general, the warden of a military prison played by James Gandolfini, who is envious of one of his prisoners (played by Robert Redford) who has actually served in combat.
* The Last Castle, Robert Redford's character, a three-star general is put into a military prison. When the other inmates begin to respect him, they aren't permitted to salute, so they raise the right hand to the right temple— and then run the fingers through the hair.
* The Last Catholic in America has a scene in which the main character is despairing over his imminent damnation for stealing a dollar after being told by a nun that a dollar is about the amount that would qualify for a mortal sin. The priest he confesses this to disagrees.
* The Last Chance Detectives, welding the two previously unrelated Focus on the Family franchises.
* The Last Chancers: after long serving under a Glory Hound, he demanded adequate supplies to carry out an attack, and when they were refused, his men went berserk and he did not stop them.
* The Last Chancers. He can stroll up and down a battlefield filled with Orks and Tyranids like he was on parade, decapitating Carnifexes and seeing the whole battle through without a scratch. At the same time, the hardened criminals of the 13th Penal Legion absolutely fear him more than those same Orks and Tyranids.
* The Last Chancers novels, Colonel Schaeffer scrupulously pardons all the dead of his penal legion. Not only does it give their families succor, it frees their souls before the Golden Throne.
* The Last Chancers. One of the Last Chancers asks why they don't use lasguns against the orks since they are quieter, they could carry more ammo per kilogram and logistics would make it easier to resupply. The leader of the Catachan squad explains that orks have a great deal more respect for weapons which are loud and flashy, and that it is much easier to stop a charging bull ork with a bullet than a laser beam.
* The Last Chancers. Then he takes them through one hellish battlefield after another to separate the "elite" from the "fodder." The survivors get to join him in undertaking really important suicide missions given by the Inquisition which any sane commander would have sent Death Watch or Grey Knights to do instead.
* The Last Chase across the continental US. The highways are also in really good condition considering nobody's used them in years.
* The Last Child. Each U.S. couple is only allowed to have one child. If the first child dies, they can't have another, even if they died before puberty.
* The last chorus of Xeno & Oaklander's "Palms" repeats "Symphony, by the sea. Tympanies and mythology." ad nauseam.
* The Last Christmas, where Scrooge greets his past self in a Christmas party with a casual gesture, and likewise for his past self. Paradoxes are brought up however, which indicates this trope is still in effect, but Scrooge time travels so much that he actively expects to meet older and younger versions of himself.
* The Last Chronicle of Barset, Major Grantly wants to marry Grace Crawley. The Major's father is appalled at this, because Grace's father has been accused of forgery and theft.
* The Last Chronicles shines a bit more light on how this cosmology works. The Creator is literally the Anthropomorphic Personification of
* The Last Church short story: The Emperor in disguise visits to the last (implied to be abrahamic) church on earth, to talk with the priest over matters of spirit. Though the priest impresses him, the Emperor still burns the church to the ground, with the priest refusing his offer to join him and instead burning with his faith. Inside the burning church, a bell tolls. One that was prophesized to only toll when the end of humanity was nigh.
* The Last Church) the priest explained exactly why this would happen.
* The Last Circus it is Javier's love for Natalia that leads into his downfall and eventual descent into insanity.

* The Last Circus it's a recurring theme, with revenge-driven people ending up making the situation much worse for themselves and to others:
* The Last Circus: The movie opens with a clown act in which one of the clowns gets his costume ripped off revealing that he's in drag, at which point he bawls with water spraying from the sides of his face.
* The Last Circus the protagonist is subjected to this gag as part of the clown act we only see the aftermath of.
* The last clear example of this trope among the Japanese holdouts was the last IJA officer and last ethnic Japanese person to surrender, Lt. Hiroo Onoda. Onoda formally surrendered a few months before Nakamura, in March 1974, after Norio Suzuki, a young Japanese adventurer (
* The Last Colony by foregoing the use of their technology. Note that this requires far more than simply not making radio transmissions—much of their technology relies on wireless communications, even between different components of the same item.
* The Last Colony has Space Mennonites mixed in with the rest of the Roanoke colonists. They are willing to use technology up to internal combustion, but not electronics, which is important as the colony can't use electronics or risk detection by the Conclave.
* The Last Comer, a fan-game with an expectedly female Jesus at the end. Turns out that Jesus has an ability like any other, it just so happens that her ability to "turn water into wine" is just as broken as any other abstract power in Touhou (wine is considered Christ's sacred blood, and since there is tons of water around us and we are also mostly made of water...). She also doesn't particulary emphasize being God's child.
* The Last Command is about a former Tsarist Russian general living out a degrading, poverty-stricken life as a Hollywood film extra. He gets $7.50 a day.
* The Last Command is a short story by Arthur Clarke in which the USSR built one of these, armed with nuclear missiles, as the "ultimate deterrent".
* The Last Command prisoner, and for Leia, "suddenly, all the pieces had fallen into place...and the picture they formed was one of potential disaster."
* The Last Command: Sergius has a non-stop head twitch. He explains that he "suffered a great shock once." It turns out that the head twitch dates from when he saw a train plunge off a bridge and into a river, with his lover aboard.
* The Last Command simultaneously subverts and inverts this. During a tense peace conference with some native aliens on a very dangerous planet, Han and Chewie spot a predator stalking the gathering. Chewie reacts faster, shooting the predator dead with his laser crossbow. Mara Jade points out it's probably a bad idea to fire weapons during a peace conference, to which Han replies that it's also a bad idea to let the conference get eaten. It looks like the distrustful and violent aliens are about to attack our heroes, when one of them asks why their Wookiee is armed. Since this is a former Imperial world, the last Wookiees these natives would have seen would have been Imperial slaves, definitely not allowed to carry weapons. By showing that Chewbacca was armed, they proved to the natives that they were not the same as the Empire, and secure their aid.
* The Last Connor, part of the reason Pops has remained in ‘stand-by mode’ for a couple of centuries is that the ‘upgrade’ that gave him T-1000-esque shapeshifting abilities is also a drain on his power supply, so he remained offline to conserve power. As events unfold, Pops’ power supply continues to run down, forcing him to increasingly improvise or time his actions just right so that he expends the least amount of power possible to defeat the current threat.
* The Last Continent, a carnivorous dinosaur spontaneously "evolves" into a chicken, in an effort to make itself useful enough for the Unseen University faculty not to blast it with fireballs. They end up roasting and eating it instead of just roasting it.
* The Last Continent, a group of wizards have to try to explain to the God of Evolution what sex is. It leads to a very, very amusing conversation, and gets even more awkward for the wizards when the normally straitlaced housekeeper, Mrs. Whitlow, volunteers to explain "the facts of life" to the God (and prompts the wizards to wonder, out of morbid curiouity, what Mr. Whitlow's life was like).

* The Last Continent also lampshades this in a similar situation, with the lighting being provided by glowing rocks.
* The Last Continent... because most of them have been eaten by the spiders.
* The Last Continent below the dons) take delight in performing a loud, noisy, drill manoevre, with lots of BRIAN BLESSED-style shouting, right underneath the Bursar's bedroom window in the wee small hours. They get pointedly louder to drown out his fractious protests. Tradition is, after all, not to be complained at or interfered with.
* The Last Continent-dangerous wildlife produces a slip of paper, with the words "some of the sheep".
* The Last Continent does this with a tree that's been made into a boat by the local god of evolution. The sail is a leaf, the hull is a floating seed, etc.
* The Last Continent had a tradition of making unique desserts for famous opera singers which share their last names. Then around came Dame Nellie Butt. So Rincewind invented the Peach Nellie (This is a reference to Dame Nellie Melba, of whom the Peach Melba is named, among several other dishes). At the end of the book there is also a mention of a singer called Doreen Trifle.
* The Last Continent. He goes from (presumed) middle twenties to over ninety in seconds –- and gets a taster of what it will be like to be one of the old men of the Faculty. He does not like it very much.
* The Last Continent, he is the only one who can possibly handle them.
* The Last Continent is a place where million to one chances crop up nine times out of ten. Logic really can only take you so far in that world.
* The Last Continent it's mentioned that the young Ponder Stibbons was the only child in history who actually got hours of fun out of a mix-and-match picture book promising hours of fun.
* The Last Continent, not made, on Discworld, so it's possible that one such species did successfully spread to other islands.
* The Last Continent or other sacred site. Subverted because he's told the natives said the builders were welcome to the land, it was completely unwanted and unsacred.
* The Last Continent. Or rather, is buried in the many volumes comprising the work, which extends at least as far as Volume 29c Part 3. When he asks for a list of creatures that aren't dangerous he receives a sheet of paper reading "some of the sheep".
* The Last Continent parody, one member of the road gang shoots Rincewind's hat off with his crossbow. Since an awful lot of Rincewind's personal identity is tied up in his hat, he is not happy.
* The Last Continent, Rincewind drinks a lot of beer so that he can think better (or at least bendier) and guess what he has to do. Apparently, the state of mind where you can understand what happened to the wizards is very similar to the state of mind where Dibbler's meat pie floater sounds like a good idea.
* The Last Continent, Rincewind notes the Ecksian term "no worries" can fix just about any problem.
* The Last Continent, see Live-Action TV below) informs Rincewind that the kangaroo language has a gesture that means "come quick, someone's fallen down a deep hole."
* The Last Continent, some Ecksian ranchers complain that, with the water table running dry, if they dig their wells much deeper they'll give one of the elephants that support the Disc a nasty shock.
* The Last Continent starts turning purple, and when the same spider bites a stick, the stick starts to dissolve. They are also known to use their webs as trampolines to go for the face.
* The Last Continent takes the form of an elderly man with a long white beard, despite possibly not being familiar with humans at all (his backstory seems a bit confused on this point), because he can sense that this is a form which the wizards (who are mostly elderly men with long white beards) associate with wisdom.

* The Last Continent takes this trope to extremes. A god of evolution causes trees and bushes to sprout with anything the wizards who land on the island desire, up to and including cigarettes. Let's just say that, when they decide to leave the island, a fully organic ship turns up, complete with a figurehead (with a disturbing resemblance to the only female on the party).
* The Last Continent the danger and tries to stop, but "his method of running was very efficiently based on the idea that stopping was the last thing he'd do."
* The Last Continent, the God of Evolution creates a plant that grows galleons as fruit in order to get the wizards off his island. It has a leaf sail, a trumpet-like flower that detects land in the crows nest, and the seeds are surfboards.
* The Last Continent the hanging. ("It's still rope, right? Genuine rope.") We're also told of the humanitarian tradition that if the gibbet sticks three times... the prisoner will be given breakfast while someone fixes it.
* The Last Continent. The losers timidly try to explain that they can't exactly pay off the bet they made with him, and Rincewind tries to reassure them with a friendly "No worries" type gesture. Unfortunately, he does so while holding the shears he was just going wild with, so it comes off as rather more intimidating than he intended.
* The Last Continent, the Luggage gets stuck in the earth on our world for a couple of geological periods.
* The Last Continent, the Sledgehammer Plant of Bhangbhangduc has been know to take the occasional human victim who doesn't see the mallet in the long grass.
* The Last Continent the thermometer went that made the Librarian mad.
* The Last Continent, the Wizards of Unseen University visit an island populated only with single specimen species. This is because the island is home to the god of evolution, who personally engineers each animal (and tweaks it as it goes along), and is blissfully unaware of things like sexual reproduction.
* The Last Continent to find was a vine which, if you carefully peel off the bark, gives you a serviceable twine. It took him several more rashes to achieve that part.
* The Last Continent water used to fall out of the sky, but everyone who grew up there thinks that's ridiculous.
* The Last Continent, when it unwisely drops butt-first onto an unsuspecting victim who happens to be Rincewind. Turns out that pointy "WIZZARD" hat is good for something after all...
* The Last Continent, when Rincewind downs several Ecksian beers in quick succession. He'd assumed that its clarity meant it couldn't possibly be as strong as Ankh-Morpork beer, and was 100% wrong.
* The Last Continent, when the jailer tells Rincewind (who's been sentenced to hang for sheep-stealing) of a humanitarian tradition they have if the gallows fails to work three times — they let the prisoner go back inside and have lunch while they fix it. The jailer can't understand why Rincewind doesn't appreciate this; it's better than standing around in the sun waiting, isn't it?
* The Last Cowboy because she's speaking to beings who have no word in their language for "space ship."
* The Last Cowboy, in 1947 the women in the town of Roswell all contract a disease that renders them sterile. Since no-one knows about the visiting aliens, no-one makes a connection between the two events. This has disastrous consequences two decades later when the same aliens land all over the Earth.
* The Last Cowboy the human race is dying due to a plague. They have recently made contact with an alliance of alien races, so they use their remaining resources to set up a series of schools to teach the aliens everything they can about humanity before it's gone forever.
* The last criminal to be executed in Finland from civilian crimes was Toivo "Kirves" Koljonen, a fugitive prisoner who killed a family of six with an axe - the father of the family had been conscripted in the army. He was
* The Last Crown: Midnight Horror takes place in and around a pub Halloween party.
* The Last Crusade: The inquisitor says this outright as he burns down the last library in existence. After culling too many commoners it has occurred to him that he's seen and done too much to seek redemption or justify his actions. Seeing as he's a ruthless sociopath with a tendency to freak out and kill people, he may be right.

* The Last Crusade, when Indiana smashes a hole in the floor of a library in time with a librarian stamping books, glancing over at the librarian to make sure he times his blows right. Though Rule of Funny is another interpretation of that scene, as the sound of stamping books isn't that loud. Indy is checking to see if anyone is coming to see what's going on, while the librarian is staring at his stamp, wondering why it made such a loud noise.
* The last cutlass action in the British Navy occurred in 1940, during the Altmark Incident.
* The last Cylons eventually interbreed with the last humans to form a new race.
* The Last Dance: Character decides that if they're going to die, they may as well go down fighting.
* The Last Dance. Part Two, which unfolds over a few hours at most and is limited to the interiors of a Dalek city and its surrounding wasteland, revolves around the Doctor coming to a new understanding of a familiar villain even as he struggles to outwit them, revealing the better aspects of his own nature in the process and ultimately atoning for his mistake.
* The Last Date showed teenaged boys as inheritently reckless drivers who scoffed at traffic laws.
* The Last Daughter) fight Behemoth, who has complete control over all types of energy. The fight quickly devolves into them trading these to little effect. At one point Behemoth punches her so hard that she flies from Paris to Portugal. Taylor later returns the favor by hitting him so hard that it create a nuclear reaction every time she punches him.
* The Last Daughter. In addition to changing her outfit and lowering her voice, Taylor vibrates her face fast enough that it just looks like a blur. Once the PRT and Protectorate get a picture with a good enough camera, they have no trouble figuring out who she is.
* The Last Daughter in the city destroys the two most powerful criminal gangs in one night.
* The Last Daughter subverts and plays this straight. According to Jor-El, they had to remove Taylor's ancillary thumbs and re-add her canine teeth back, among other things, in order for her blend in on Earth. Amy notes that humans genetically have more in common with sea sponges than with Kryptonians. However, the end product means that virtually no one, including Taylor for most of her life, can tell the difference.
* The Last Daughter, Taylor, a Kryptonian, doesn't need to eat as long as she has access to yellow sunlight.
* The Last Daughter, Taylor Hebert learns she's a Kryptonian, named Zara Jor-El by her birth parents. She greatly respects her deceased biological parents but she still thinks of herself as "Taylor", the name chosen by her human adoptive parents.
* The Last Daughter, Taylor is endowed with Kryptonian powers. She uses her super-speed to disguise herself by vibrating her face to create a blur and fly from America to Paris in just a few minutes.
* The Last Daughter, the Endbringers, who had been considered impossible to destroy for over three decades, meet their end at the hands of Kryptonian Taylor Hebert.
* The Last Daughter. Word of God stated he was avoiding stuff like Kryptonite, or red sunlight to hurt the main character.
* The Last Day (and the control copy) suspended in a clear glass tube, while innumerable tubes and cables enter from above to attach to her skull (to feed her information) and abdomen (to feed her.) The control copy is only attached to a feeding tube, with no augmentations. Neither unit had ever existed outside the tube until the meteor hit...
* The Last Day of a Condemned Man as civic education about death penalty
* The Last Day Of Summer has a plot like this. The main character, scared of his first year of middle school, wishes it could be summer forever. He then ends up repeating the last day of summer over and over again. Each reset is actually set off by him getting hit in the head and losing consciousness. Memorizing the day doesn't do him any good, as something else hits him, culminating in him avoiding everything possible, only to be struck by a meteor.

* The Last Days by Scott Westerfeld, this is how Moz gets an expensive electric guitar for free, and also how he meets Pearl.
* The Last Days of American Crime and of course technology advanced enough to end all crime.
* The Last Days of American Crime is eventually revealed to be set in Detroit, despite that the film was shot in Cape Town, Western Cape and Johannesburg, South Africa.
* The Last Days of Coney Island was announced in 2005, but due to multiple distributors and production problems, it was eventually out in Development Hell. However, in 2013, Bakshi managed a successful Kickstarter for the film to be made as a short anthology film. It was eventually released to Vimeo on his 77th birthday on October 27th, 2015.
* The Last Days of Disco board a subway train to the sounds of "Love Train" by the O-Jays, with no indication that the song is in any way diegetic... until the two suddenly start dancing to it, leading to everyone else in the car joining in, until we eventually see people on the station platforms disco dancing as the train passes.
* The Last Days of FOXHOUND, an explosion which destroys the entire building around them just leaves everyone charred and smoking. (Except for Mantis, who gets impaled on some debris, but he turns out to be okay too.)
* The Last Days of FOXHOUND. As such, the last chapter is just a montage of their bodies. It's emphasized by how sudden it is — cutting straight from the "preparing for battle" montage to the death montage. At least the ghosts of the dead characters show up to joke about their ineptitude, providing a relieving comical note.
* The Last Days of FOXHOUND, but they start out the comic as heroes working for the US government, and remain so right up until the very end, where they become heroes working against The Patriots, Metal Gear's version of the Illuminati.
* The Last Days of FOXHOUND) by ODing him on Liquid's blood and having Mantis brain-scramble him into thinking he's Liquid. Although the intention differs, the result fit the trope perfectly as Octopus starts rambling about how he beats up all the enemy people and hates dominant genes.
* The Last Days of FOXHOUND can take on the shape of anyone. However, to do so, he needs to drink some of their blood (with a special ingredient added).
* The Last Days Of Fox Hound. Cue said eavesdroppers breaking silence to wonder how Ocelot does it while Ocelot rolls his eyes and Gurlukovitch listens in disbelief.
* The Last Days of FOXHOUND does plenty of these, mostly with Psycho Mantis — to the point that, after a huge reveal, Ocelot points out that he "only brought you that coffee to watch you do spit-takes." Extra humor because he does the spit-takes through his gas mask. Apparently he practiced that while practicing drinking through it.
* The Last Days of FOXHOUND during the Normandy invasion The Boss (then known a The Joy) went into labor while on the battlefield and performed a c-section on herself. She and the baby were both fine, while the baby's father The Sorrow passed out pretty much immediately when she made the first cut.
* The Last Days of FOXHOUND, Fatman runs off immediately after getting rescued from an enemy base.
* The Last Days of FOXHOUND for his pet project, playing with action figures on the job, and misplacing his instruction manual for the aforementioned Death-Mobile.
* The Last Days of FOXHOUND give this game a go while awaiting rescue. Unfortunately they're in a very dark, rather deep, featureless holding cell.
* The Last Days Of Fox Hound has one nice thing to say about The Patriots:
* The Last Days of FOXHOUND. He bounced when someone got ahold of his employee record (or, rather, complete lack of one). Ocelot, upon learning of it, becomes completely freaked out.
* The Last Days of FOXHOUND, he's outfitted with an explosive implant for the upcoming mission.

* The Last Days of FOXHOUND however is so traumatized by witnessing it that he ends up fainting.
* The Last Days of FOXHOUND (however, there's evidence that Otacon's in denial about Metal Gear's true purpose at this point, and Liquid did threaten to feed him to a largely-unfriendly-to-him-wolf).
* The Last Days of FOXHOUND, in which Decoy Octopus (who, through drinking their blood, can take on another person's appearance) disguises himself as Sniper Wolf. It's a very complete transformation.
* The Last Days of FOXHOUND is usually placid in the afterlife, reflecting upon his life of slaughter and deciding that he doesn't want to fight anymore. That is, until Liquid Snake lets slip that he's dating his sister. Liquid and Naomi went on one date and don't even like each other; Liquid panicked after Sniper Wolf asked him out (because she kills almost all her crushes) and and asked out the first woman he saw, and Naomi agreed because she wanted to kill Liquid.
* The Last Days of FOXHOUND keeps Mantis from being able to tell for sure. In the end, Mantis becomes too paranoid to drink his beloved coffee.
* The Last Days of FOXHOUND. Mantis' only response is a deadpan "No you're not. I killed my father when I was eight." Ocelot looks slightly uncomfortable (no small feat) and changes the subject to the actual reveal.
* The Last Days of FOXHOUND often uses this to communicate to the living if they can't speak to spirits.
* The Last Days of FOXHOUND of the cast. When going on a spiritual journey with The Sorrow, he appears as an empty fedora and trenchcoat, because he doesn't see any of the faces he wears as himself.
* The Last Days of FOXHOUND played with a bit, as everyone, including the misfits themselves, readily acknowledge how unstable and insane the team is, but also recognize that they are able to accomplish feats that would be impossible for any other group.
* The Last Days Of Fox Hound, preventing her from zipping it up and forcing her to wander around showing off half her bust. Meryl, having previously been chastized for not wearing a balaclava because of her hair, is not amused:
* The Last Days of FOXHOUND reaction to being approached by them — at one point he would rather fall to his death than let Sniper Wolf pull him to safety.
* The Last Days of FOXHOUND (see last two panels, then go back to see the context).
* The Last Days of FOXHOUND skips seven months after FOXHOUND allies themselves against the Patriots, but other than that they seem to skip indeterminate amounts of time between major story arcs and even simple conversations within an arc.
* The Last Days of FOXHOUND snatches one of the guns out of the air, points it at the ground, and fires (revealing it to be the gun with the bullet), all the while lecturing Ocelot that "there's no such thing as luck on the battlefield."
* The Last Days of FOXHOUND, states that he isn't. Ocelot concedes the point since the only reason he said it was to rip up in Mantis' old wounds.
* The Last Days of FOXHOUND surprised and Octopus just shrugs, claiming he's more suited for espionage than fighting.
* The Last Days of FOXHOUND, the white flowers in a field turn red in a dramatic moment. Decoy Octopus questions the reason for such a phenomenon, only to be told it doesn't matter.
* The Last Days of FOXHOUND, this is spoofed with Ocelot's lines: "I've been working for [The Philosophers] since I was born," and "I've been trained to be an X-Tuple agent from the age of four."
* The Last Days of FOXHOUND to be such a good liar that not only is he completely immune to telepathy, but he managed to string along Psycho Mantis for most of the comic's run.
* The Last Days of FOXHOUND was both killed and resurrected by Mantis.
* The Last Days of FOXHOUND, where at least half the jokes are mostly Mantis and Ocelot making each other's life a living hell.
* The Last Days of FOXHOUND, with Big Boss (in Liquid's body) encountering the Sorrow. And lampshaded in the same panel by The Sorrow. "Is that all I get? One pronoun?"

* The Last Days of FOXHOUND), you've done something worthy of Deconstruction.
* The Last Days of Krypton: Gil-Ex freaks out during the destruction of Krypton and is ready to do whatever Jor-El wants if the scientist who he's spent several chapters antagonizing can pull off an eleventh-hour miracle. Unfortunately for everyone involved, it's too late for that.
* The Last Days of Krypton In the comics, the Phantom Zone hosts scores of colorful prisoners convicted of crimes of varying severity. Here, Zod and his followers are the only inmates at the time of Krypton's destruction.
* The Last Days of Krypton Lara meets Jor-El while rescuing him from the Phantom Zone projector he accidentally sealed himself in. A loving relationship quickly develops.
* The Last Days of Krypton Tyr-Us and Gal-Eth are both shown in malnourished, disheveled states after being forced out of their homes by Zod's loyalists.
* The Last Days of Krypton, when the book portrayed him as a neutral alien who stated (To Zod, no less) that he had no further designs on Krypton besides stealing their capital to be preserved. Zod does this so he can use the threat of alien invasion as an excuse to build up his power base.
* The Last Days of Krypton Zod gathers several disgruntled younger sons of Kryptonian noble families to build his dictatorship. Only one protests.
* The Last Days of Krypton Zod is in charge of confiscating and destroying potentially dangerous inventions, but keeps them for his own ends. Zod himself discusses this trope when he confiscates the Phantom Zone projector. Jor-El says that it could be kept under guard to prevent misuse, but Zod replies that the guards could succumb to temptation as easily as anyone else.
* The Last Days of Krypton Zod randomly selects a completely innocent servant to send to the Phantom Zone as a test.
* The Last Days Of New Paris, Miéville claims that he was summoned to a hotel room by an old friend, where he instead met a mysterious man who relates the story in a huge, 36-hour marathon. He suspects the man was the artist/protagonist Thibaut.
* The Last Days Of New Paris, Sam, who wants to document the bizarre events and living art of New Paris, attaches herself to Thibaut the surrealist artist who lives—and fights Nazis—in New Paris.
* The Last Days on Mars. A flashback shows that the hero nearly spaced himself during an attack of claustrophobia, only to be saved by the intervention of another crewmember.
* The Last Days on Mars, a twitching space glove signifies she's about to attack him as a zombie.
* The Last Days on Mars trope is defied however when Irwin steals the Rover after unsuccessfully trying once more to persuade Campbell to abandon Rebecca.
* The Last Day, which will record everything that happens to him in case he's killed in action.
* The last D.C. level actually ends with Corporal Dunn stating that he can't wait to go to Moscow and "
* "The Last Defender of Camelot" has Lancelot still alive in modern times thanks to Merlin's magic. When he learns Merlin is still alive, he's eager to help, citing how much of a friend the man was. Morgan Le Fay snaps that Lancelot only remembers the romantic version of Camelot and not how dark it was or the sinister moves Merlin used to get his own way. When he finds Merlin ready to sacrifice an innocent teenager to gain the power to "set the world right," Lancelot is forced to admit Morgan was right and he's let time warp his memories of Camelot being much brighter than it was.
* The Last Detail. the motherfucking shore patrol!" line more than anything else.
* The Last Detail: Two navy personnel have prisoner escort detail for another sailor who is a kleptomaniac. Throughout the movie he keeps producing chocolate bars etc from his clothing, always insisting "I bought it" to their suspicious looks.
* The Last Detective and centers around a past robbery similar to the actual Great Train Robbery.

* The Last Detective episode "Dangerous and the Lonely Hearts". Dangerous draws the Hanged Man, which the script implies is a dire portent; it's actually associated with transformation (like much-maligned Death) and hard-earned wisdom.
* The Last Detective idea, in that someone nicknamed Lofty would actually be assumed to be short rather than otherwise.
* The Last Detective — think a washed-up Gene Hunt. In one episode, the latter talks nostalgically about no longer being able to have suspects "fall down the stairs".
* The Last Detective: The plot of "Dangerous Liasons" revolves around a 20-year-old snuff film and the murdered man who apparently recorded it.
* The Last Ditch and destroys most of the bridge they can't decelerate the ship enough to get into a stable orbit. The attempt to use atmospheric braking to fix this goes wrong when they hit the atmosphere at to steep an angle and end up crashing.
* The Last Ditch tactics, arguing they're not doing their duty to the Emperor, Col. Kasteen accurately retorts that the 597th is inflicting twice as many enemy casualties as the 1st while taking less than a third.
* The Last Ditch than let anyone know it wasn't (just) orks out there.
* The Last Ditch the ship Cain and his regiment arrive on crashes on arrival before the shuttles assigned to unload them even leave the spaceport. The shuttles are therefore declared lost and made to leave so there's room for shuttles that exist. Cain doesn't give details, but apparently ex-quartermaster Sulla absolutely rips the administrators responsible a new one getting it straightened out.
* The Last DJ: A character who values their personal integrity over career advancement, even if it means being demoted or fired.
* The Last DJ, although on at least one occasion he played a 33 at 45 by mistake but decided it sounded better that way.
* The Last DJ, or is using it as a cover for his emotional issues, or else just wants to control others:
* The Last Dogs and apologizes, explaining that he was just worried for him. Rocky accepts the apology and apologizes too for making Max and Gizmo worried for him.
* The Last Dogs: Max, a younger yellow Labrador retriever, is friends with an older black Labrador retriever named Madame Curie. Her urging Max to discover the meaning of the symbol on her collar is what sets Max off on his journey: to find her and help her find the humans.
* The Last Dogs, Rocky usually says "Hiiii-yah!" whenever he jumps from a great height or launching himself at an enemy. So, while on board a burning boat, Max jumps into the river while yelling, "Hiii-yah!"
* The Last Dogs series is about a Labrador Retriever named Max who notices all the humans are "vanishing". He and a group of other dogs attempt to find their families again.
* The Last Dogs tells of three dogs (a Labrador retriever named Max, a dachshund named Rocky, and a Yorkie named Gizmo) traveling to find any remaining humans after they suddenly disappear. Along the way, they come across several packs of feral dogs, alligators, and a wolf pack (led by their aggressive leader Dolph) hell-bent on vengeance against the three pets.
* The Last Door. Birds in general are a motif, but crows are especially worthy of mention. There are at least two scares involving them in the first chapter alone.
* The Last Door has a yet-unidentified cabal of creepy people in yellow robes wearing expressive white masks that reveal themselves to the protagonist.
* The Last Door is chock full of this. Everything feels a little unhinged from reality and each person seems to be at least a little insane. The closer Jeremiah gets to solving the mystery of what's going on, the more warped and bizarre everything gets.
* The Last Door, Jeremiah Devitt and the rest of the Witnesses express horror upon seeing The Eye of the Bird.
* The Last Door, taking full advantage of stuff like the city's labyrinthine slum and foggy streets to build an effectively creepy atmosphere.

* The Last Dove: Every single character can do this. Some clans will shun those who can't.
* The Last Dove: the Doves, particularly Queen Vasi, have the ability to defuse tension and make people feel at ease.
* The Last Dove to refer to the ability of all the characters to shapeshift.
* The Last Draconequus: According to Discord's inner monologue, eastern dragons exist alongside the western kind:
* The Last Dragon both plays this straight with a trio of Asian rapper wannabes and reversed with Bruce Leroy, who does the same with Chinese culture.
* The Last Dragon Chronicles: Essentially, how Agawin's story begins: a pilgrimage to see a dragon leads to a quest to save a girl.
* The Last Dragon Chronicles of the way it usually happens - the first two books form a more complete and coherent story, with the third one being more separate.
* The Last Dragon Chronicles rant, his landlady Liz soothes him: "David, stop talking in italics. It doesn't help anything."
* The Last Dragon genre released after the trend for both had faded. "Bruce Leroy" Green battles Sho'nuf, Shogun of Harlem in a quest to be the greatest fighter.
* The Last Dragon genre. Though a modest success in theaters, it found a home on Saturday Afternoon movie blocks and introduced us all to Sho'Nuff, the Shogun of Harlem, and Bruce Leroy.
* The Last Dragon, Leroy gets the idea to infiltrate a fortune cookie factory using this device. He gets the idea after he sees a clip of Bruce Lee doing the same thing in another movie.
* The Last Dragonlord has dragonfire, orbs of harmless and seemingly cold fire that give off light.
* The Last Dragonlord, still looks the same, and is still called "little one." They cannot have children with ordinary humans, and while that does not apply between Dragonlords, they voluntarily do not have children, since when they do reproduce their offspring are very nearly always human. The same Dragonlords who enjoy their human friends and grieve and let go when they age and die have a lot more trouble with it when it's their own children.
* The Last Dragon, where Bruce Leroy fights off everyone from a wrestler with a white Mohawk to an acid bath murderer...
* The Last Drive-In. Shudder put up a special disclaimer for content, preceded by one penned by Briggs himself that read:
* The Last Elf" is pretty much this- no food, horrible 'caretakers' and so on. The children are told all day long about how their parents were selfish, horrible people and they deserved to die. Robi doesn't quite believe it.
* The Last Emperor, a biography of the Emperor Pu Yi, chronicles Chinese history in the 20th century.
* The Last Emperor: Made in 1987, it shows the eponumous protagonist's release from political prison in 1959.
* The Last Emperor qualify. Actually, so do the Kuomintang, the Japanese and the Communists, seeing that this film details the life of a very marginalized and lonely man.
* The Last Enchantment, Merlin is puzzled by his attraction to his new boy apprentice, Ninian, who turns out to be a girl, Niniane.
* The Last Enemy, a government that already makes its citizens carry ID cards everywhere is plotting to upgrade to tracking chips. At least one character gets secretly chipped after attracting the government's attention.
* The Last Enemy gives us a society in which reincarnation has now been proven, so their view of death is far more relaxed. Assassination is a legal profession because of this (though there are certain rules, such as no nukes). Near the end of the story, lawsuits start to be launched by people trying to recover property they had in their past lives, though we don't see whether any succeed.
* The Last Engineer and the Master Renegade are left out due to the comic
* The last episode has Sasuke trying to bond with Sarada. Sadly, with a combination of
* The last episode in the series is subtitled "Both the Immortals and Those Who Aren't Sing the Praises of Life Equally."

* The last episode is particularly notable for this, being a blatant
* The last episode itself has the Titans repeatedly clash with some sort of elementally-metamorphic robot, while Beast Boy's distracted by the apparent return of Terra, who insists she's just a regular girl who doesn't know him. Neither of these issues really gets a resolution, as BB decides to leave her be and join his friends in fighting the good fight once again.
* The last episode of the animated series has the characters waving goodbye at the audience.
* The last episode of the anime also has Tamaki and Haruhi falling from the bridge with this kind of sky, toward the water below holding onto one another.
* The last episode of the second season contains a series of stills showing an intimate moment between the sisters, done in the style of the
* The last episodes recorded by Bob Trow (who played himself, Robert Troll, Bob Dog, AND Harriet Elizabeth Cow) and "Chef" Don Brockett before their deaths were dedicated to their memories.
* The last episode to air when the series creator Stephen Hillenburg was alive was "Goons On The Moon", as he died from ALS the day after it premiered.
* The Last Equestrian Doom Patrol princesses), and who is (maybe) capable of turning out to have been there all along, and now it's too late to flee.
* The Last Express, boards a train to find his friend murdered, and proceeds to investigate both the murder and various pieces of international intrigue aboard.
* The Last Express is set in real time, albeit sped up by a factor of six, and the ending changes based on where you are at certain times, meaning that the player must very carefully manage where they are to get certain endings. The only time this is broken away from is when the player character is knocked out or goes to sleep.
* The Last Express one of the ways to stop anyone from finding the body is to stash it in your bed, this is only a temporary solution though. You can also just chuck it out the window, but then the police will find it and search the train at the next stop.
* The Last Express, part of which was probably because Brøderbund's entire marketing staff had quit a month before the game's release.
* The Last Express takes place in just under four days, starting in the evening of July 24th, 1914, and ending in the early morning of July 28th.
* The Last Express, the main character finds his murdered friend's body in a train carriage. Since the protagonist is already a fugitive for an earlier incident and can't be seen by the police, he assumes his friend's identity in order to track down the killer.
* The Last Express, which is set entirely on board a train, could hardly escape a scene like this.
* The Last Express you can obtain a key that opens all the locks on the train, belonging to the conductor, and you can use it to sneak into other people's compartments and snoop around for information.
* The last faction of the 40k setting you'd suspect to have these kinds of teams would be the Space Marines, but even they have them, in the form of the Deathwatch and their kill teams. Officially an elite fighting force of the Inquisition dedicated to combatting xenos in all their forms, the Deathwatch recruits experienced Marines from loyal chapters. In reality, many Marines forwarded to the Deathwatch are misfits and relatively undisciplined for Space Marines, and so are sent away from the Chapter. When a Kill Team of Deathwatch Marines is formed, the team often grow a longlasting brotherhood of misfits, who learn how to deal with their differences to perform a single goal.
* The Last Farewell of a man who must return to his (sailing) ship to fight in the war, then (if he survives) return home to England and leave the woman he loves behind in her tropical paradise.
* The Last Federation and reverse-engineering it is out of the question too.
* The Last Federation: An essential part of war, allowing a civilization (or the player) to deplete rivals' infrastructure and population without risking soldiers.

Two species have particular interactions with it:
* The Last Federation's Obscura put the rest to shame though; they're a particulate based form of life with which communication is impossible.
* The Last Federation The Hydral homeworld was destroyed when the Acutians strapped a moon full of engines and sent it into a collision course with it. With enough influence, you can convince them to do it again to a faction of your choosing.
* The Last Federation, this was the first stage of Evucks attack on Hydral. If Evucks achieve the space travel and start a war with someone, they can use it again.
* The Last Federation, two are robots, one we do not get a good look at all and one looks like a barn owl. The last one looks humanoid, but is red, seems to have a carapace and lacks visible mouth.
* The last few arcs before Naruto's final duel with Sasuke is basically one giant battle between the Allied Shinobi Forces and Akatsuki, with almost every notable character (
* The last few episodes hint at possible romance between Tylor and Yuriko, though, and in the follow-up
* the last few minutes of the final episode of It winds up being far more brutal than anything the villains ever put them through, — almost offputtingly so.
* The last few seasons have seen the Chicago Bulls fall into this rut. After a 2010-11 season that saw the Bulls advance to the Eastern Conference Finals before bowing 4-1 to the Miami Heat; the 2011-12 team finished the strike-shortened season with a 50-16 record and the top-seed in the Eastern Conference; only for point guard Derrick Rose to tear his ACL in the opening game of their first-round series with the Philadelphia 76ers; a series that the 76ers won in a 4-2 upset. The next season saw the Bulls advance to the Eastern Conference semi-finals even though Rose would not play a single game despite having been cleared to play in March 2013 and again losing to the Heat. The 2013-14 season saw the Bulls finish 48-34 and 4th in the East only to be upset by the Washington Wizards in the first round 4-1 in a season where
* The last few seconds of the episode "Canterlot Boutique" feature an obese, almost misshapen pony (credited as "Incidental Pony" but nicknamed "Whoa Nelly" by fans and referred to as the "Love Yourself pony" among the show's animation staff) with a cutie mark of her own face as a customer looking for the Princess Dress. She makes cameo appearances in at least two other episodes as well.
* The last five episodes of season four aired over the course of one workweek, but went up online the Friday before.
* The Last Five Years, as Cathy is writing her letter to Jamie from her summerstock gig in Ohio, she finally regrets everything she's saying once she reaches the part where she goes "slowly batty forty miles east of Cincinnati" It is at this point that she erases everything she wrote so far, and the musical accompaniment grinds to a halt.
* The Last Five Years loosely based the show off his first failed marriage, and the character, Cathy, is based off his first wife.
* The Last Five Years. The comical song "What's Wrong with Him?" was cut and replaced with the much darker "See I'm Smiling".
* The Last Five Years: The Musical. It's here that Cathy has a massive fight with her husband, realizing their marriage is damaged beyond all hope of repair, and she finally voices her (correct) fears that he's cheating. The fact that this is all happening on her birthday is just the cherry on top.
* The Last Five Years, which actually has a song titled "Shiksa Goddess" in which Jaime reiterates that he'd take any girl as long as she wasn't Jewish.
* The Last Flight Of Noahs Ark has two Japanese soldiers on a lost island.
* The Last Flight Of Noahs Ark, the eponymous plane is not an ark per se, but borrows some themes due to transporting a lot of animals and becoming a boat.
* The last flight of the Mercury program, with Gordo Cooper at the controls, suffered a failure of nearly every system on board during orbit. Cooper had to perform the deorbit burn and upper-atmosphere steering manually, with only the horizon out his window for reference and his wristwatch for timing. Not only did he succeed in splashing down safely, he landed closer to the recovery ship than any previous astronaut.

* The last four episodes of season four and first five of season five (from
* The Last Friday the board game. Players take on the role of the killer or campers repairing an old, abandoned summer camp as they alternate between hunting each other down and trying to survive until the end.
* The last game of the season against the White Sox which would decide the American League pennant because of a celestial rule — only Roger and Knox know this, though. The Angels' starting pitcher Mel Clark has been pitching the whole game and, with the Angels up 3-2 but the White Sox having the bases loaded and their massive slugger at the plate with a full count, is clearly exhausted after throwing around 160 pitches
* The last game of the trilogy invokes this on the final boss, whose shield is so powerful only the Hyper Weapon of Kazuya's chosen Angel can bypass it. Because said Angel is the strongest of the team (not to mention the newly-activated wings) this is justified. The exact move that does the job depends on the identity of said Angel.
* The last gasp of the franchise came in 1994, with yet another (short-lived) spinoff:
* The Last Generation, has a seven year old daughter. Making sure that she's safe is the primary reason why she abandons her homeworld in an attempt to stop the Multiverse's destruction.
* The last greater vestige of United States' influence on the entire setting is the main
* The Last Great Frost Giant War, with Asgard, Avalon and their human allies (including the ancestors of the founders of Hogwarts) on one side, and the Frost Giants on the other, circa 500 AD. The Avalonians were swept aside early by the might of the Casket (something which Odin puts down to them having been weakened by fighting Asgard), the ancestors of the Founders rallied for the
* The Last Great Time War, between the classic and new series. It was never shown, we know only that it caused a lot of destruction and wiped out entire races, including the Time Lords, whose last survivor was the Doctor. We find out that the Doctor was the one who ended the war, killing
* The Last Great Time War has the Thanatos Anomaly, a vast region where time and space have been twisted and mutilated by the War.
* ''The Last Great Time War'' is a good example, revealing many mysteries about the Time War and striving to be the first fanfiction to cover it fully.
* The Last Great Time War. Its effects on the Doctor reverberate through the new series.
* The Last Great Time War seems to be this as well, from what little we know of it. The Time Lords and Daleks seemed to be out to simply destroy each other, and at some point, the Doctor decided that both sides had to be destroyed. There is, however,
* The Last Guardian (2001): T.G. (a college student in 1975) is utterly shocked to walk into a diner in the year 2000 and see a cup of coffee is two dollars. For reference, it would have been 25-35 cents when he left Earth, depending on the quality.
* The Last Guardian (2001) while being a religious story, utterly glories in the alien world of Noron, the people and culture, the dinosaurs.
* The Last Guardian) all wear metal helmets that have snarling dragon faces carved into them. Even just the shape of the helmets make the beasts look more threatening.
* The Last Guardian is a story being told by the nameless protagonist as an adult while the actual gameplay and plot occurred when he was a child. Naturally, we know he eventually got out of it all okay since he's telling us the story and all, and is also explains the hints that appear when the player becomes stuck at a particular part of the game: they're told by the adult player character, explaining his thought processes as he solved puzzles and found his way around the setting of the game.

* The Last Guardian tended to form a closer bond with Wander's horse than with Mono, the girl who was supposed to be their driving motivation. They thus decided to explore the concept of a game about a human and an animal working together.
* The Last Guardian", the name of the griffon-like creature that accompanies the playable character, before getting its official name at E3 2009.
* The Last Guardian was dismissed by many as a cancelled title until Sony announced the title in 2015, and the game finally released in December 2016 to everyone's relief and surprise.
* The Last Guru is loosely based on the story of Maharaj Ji of the Divine Light Mission, who became famous as an avatar of God in his early teens.
* The Last Guy features the zombie hero(?) rounding up the various survivors of a zombie apocalypse. From the looks of it, the zombies have devolved (or evolved) into large, dangerous, non-human things, however.
* The last half of the opening credits in the main series does this as well, cutting back and forth between scenes and major characters from the show, jargon from the show and medical terms written on stark white-on-black title cards.
* The Last Halloween has an extreme example that goes on for several pages when Mona realizes that Dr. Fugue and his associates aren't humans in costume. It doesn't exactly help when Dr. Fugue suggests primitive brain surgery to make her be still.
* The last happened a while before the epilogue. Rei was wasting her life and Asuka went to her house to have a serious talk with her. When Asuka came back to her and Shinji's apartment she brought Rei along, and both girls were bruised and exhausted.
* The Last Herald-Mage Herald Vanyel never gets over the suicide of his first love, Tylendel. When he finally loves again, his beloved Stefen turns out to be 'Lendel reincarnated, though neither of them realizes it at first.
* The Last Herald-Mage his lover goes insane and commits suicide) when the same event gives him Mindspeech and he finds out that most of the Heralds despise him. And the Herald set to watch him is not only unsympathetic but homophobic to boot.
* The Last Hero. As the Saint would later reminisce on page 140 of Count on the Saint (hardcover edition), the public knew of him at first as only "an avenging wraith". When Templar attempts to stop warfare in The Last Hero, the authorities became aware of him. However, in later stories such as The Sleepless Knight, the Appalling Politician, and The Melancholy Journey of Mr. Teal, the Saint and his associates would wear masks as needed after the Saint made an understanding with Inspector Teal.
* The Last Hero by Leslie Charteris, the Saint engineers the assassination of a weapons designer who had created a sort of death cloud device. However, we do not find out what happened to a prototype death cloud machine seen earlier in the novel, nor what, if anything, the Saint did with the plans for the machine.
* The Last Hero. Cohen and his barbarian heroes have been exploiting it their whole lives, so when they realize they have the numbers on their side against an apparently ordinary man (Carrot again) and that therefore it would be him benefiting from it they instantly stand down.
* The Last Hero, Cohen explains why he a) wants to do something that will ensure he's remembered forever, and b) has dragged a minstrel along to record it:
* The Last Hero: Cohen the Barbarian is bored stiff as the Emperor of the Agatean Empire. He decides that being Emperor is no fun...but more than that, neither is getting old or living past the age of barbarian hero. He and his Silver Horde (of seven other veteran barbarian warriors, all septuagenarians at the youngest) go out to destroy the gods for allowing this to happen.
* The Last Hero Discworld comic, Cohen and his Silver Horde have made it their mission to bring fire back to the gods —- via a large explosive. This would suddenly remove magic from the world and cause everything to die.
* The Last Hero' flies underneath the Disc, thousands of miles of intervening geology causes the link to fail with more and more static and white noise creeping in.
* The Last Hero gives us Agatean Thunder Clay. Cohen the Barbarian and his Silver

Horde fill a fifty-pound keg with the stuff and plan to deliver it to the gods. Such an explosion would not only blow up Cori Celesti but temporarily erase the Discworld's magic field. And with no magic, there would be no Discworld.
* The Last Hero. He recognizes there needs to be a villain in the story for the heroes to fight, and happily fills the role for the Silver Horde, since only they and he actually care about the hero's code anymore. And since the villain always escapes to cause trouble in the next story, he's always able to survive.
* The Last Hero, in which among other things, the heroes realize the gods are the ones who give them the maps they use while adventuring.
* The Last Hero, it serves Vetinari's interest to make Archchancellor Ridcully agree with him, because the two are theoretically of equal rank and friction between the city and the University could be troublesome:
* The Last Hero. Its settings can be fiddled with to view anything, anywhere, anywhen - but as Ponder Stibbons explains to the Patrician, it's best not to look into the future. If you don't know what will happen, anything can happen. But whatever potential future the device shows you will inevitably happen, and it might not be the future you like...
* The Last Hero: It turns out that the Gods of the Discworld have been leaving mysterious maps around for ages, all leading heroes into dangerous deathtraps for their amusement. They over-reach themselves when the latest one, to the abode of the Gods themselves, turns out not to be as deadly as they plan and Cohen the Barbarian turns up on their doorstep with an unpleasant surprise.
* The Last Hero, mention is also made of the now retired Pamdar the Witch Queen.
* The Last Hero: One of the wizards explains that when Cori Celesti explodes, the effects will last a few years. So when one non-wizard asks if they just need to bunker down and get back to life as usual once that's over with and enjoy a world free of magic and wizards...
* The Last Hero out of wood. Powered by dragons. It makes it to the Moon and back.
* The Last Hero, reaching to Cohen the Barbarian, and Cohen ... indicating his opinion of gods.
* The Last Hero Rincewind is strapped into a three-axis rotation device, stripped down to a loincloth for no clear reason other than this. The clear reason other than this is that it's a parody of Da Vinci's Vitruvian Man (oh, come on, you've seen it, it's the "guy with multiple arms and legs in a circle" picture). The loincloth is a sop to modesty, VM is fully nude.
* The Last Hero. Rincewind thought them up. With something between amusement and disdain, Lord Vetinari prompts him to translate: "We who are about to die, don't want to." (literally, "{the}About-To-Die We-Do-Not-Want To-Die")
* The Last Hero series, Simon Templar takes a back seat to his gallant and tragic associate Norman Kent, who falls in love hopelessly with Templar's girlfriend Patricia Holm (who hardly notices him) and at the end of the book sacrifices his life to let Templar and his other comrades-in-arms escape the current villain and fight again another day. A book called "Knights Errant of the Nineteenth and Early Twentieth Centuries" by Caroline Whitehead and George McLeod says it all: "Norman Kent is an archetypal knight-errant. Though formally a man of 20th Century England, he lives (and dies) by the Code of Chivalry. He loves totally his Lady, Patricia Holm — who, like Don Quixote's Dulcinea, is not aware of that love. He is totally loyal to his Liege Lord, Simon Templar. Like Sir Gawain in "Sir Gawain and the Green Knight", Norman Kent takes on the threats to his Lord. Not only physical threats to life and limb, but also the sometimes unavoidable need to take on dishonourable acts which would have reflected badly on the reputation of King Arthur/Simon Templar is taken on, wholly and without reservation, by Sir Gawain/Norman Kent."
* The Last Hero, the atmosphere of the disc never completely ends, it thins, but does not diminish to a point where it is virtually non-existent. The intrepid travellers discover they can still breathe on the Discworld's moon, for instance. As the spacecraft has wings to steer with, tis comes in very handy.
* The Last Hero the character of "Evil" Harry Dread proudly wears this as his hat, and even reminds the party that he is evil and therefore contractually obliged to betray them at some point. The heroes accept this as part of the Heroic Code and even congratulate him on a job well done when he does betray them.

* The Last Hero, the gods allow the Silver Horde to infiltrate Dunmanifestin and greet them as equals (the "new gods we've been hearing about"). Initially it was only a joke, but Cohen's trick with the dice seems to have earned the respect of at least a few deities.
* The Last Hero the moral objections of Carrot or Rincewind that ultimately convince them, but the bard's appeal to their vanity ("No one will remember you.").
* The Last Hero they dragged along asks who wrote the scrolls guiding them up the mountain of the gods if nobody has survived the journey.
* The Last Hero to because he's smart enough to know he's going to wind up on the mission regardless, so he figures he might as well get out in front of it. His personal philosophy is "It doesn't matter where you're running, it only matters where you're running from." Seems like a good mantra for any Action Survivor.
* The Last Hero. Turns out it's the Librarian, who stowed away before takeoff. Luckily, Discworld's moon has breathable air, so they are able to land there and refill.
* The Last Hero, Vetinari deals with this sort of problem in his truly magnificent style; when leaders from hundreds of nations come to Ankh-Morpork to discuss how they're going to stop Cohen the Barbarian and the Silver Horde from blowing up the world, he has them form committees and then locks them in the room. Then, while they're arguing, he takes a few of the people he knows aside and tells them how they're going to save the world.
* The Last Hero when the Bard, having lost his instrument, fashions a new lute utilizing the skull of a fallen hero while he works on the Silver Horde's ballad. Despite finding the sound pleasant, he understandably worries this may be seen as disrespectful, particularly given the group he's traveling with. Cohen muses that being turned into a musical instrument on which heroic ballads are played might actually be quite desirable for a hero.
* The Last Hero, when the Silver Horde arrive at Dunmanifestin, Cohen strikes a dramatic pose and declaims "Behold, the citadels of the gods!" Then Caleb replies "Yes, well, we can see it. Is there something wrong with your back?" and the bard asks if he can replace "citadels" with "temples" in the saga because it has a better rhythm.
* The Last Hero, where his clumsiness reveals that one half of a broken omniscope automatically sees out the other half's POV.
* The Last Hope (also meaning that the previously unused Showa kaiju Garasharp, which features in the comic, is retroactively made canon as well).
* The Last Hope, Daisy is not only the oldest nursery queen, but she's also seen hunting and fighting like the other Clan cats.
* The Last Hope for Humanity is a terrorist organization that tries to sabotage diplomacy and first contact missions, believing alliances with aliens "soil the purity of humanity." Xandri finds this rather hypocritical of them, since they've modified themselves almost to the point of speciation.
* The Last Hope Myuria express an interest in Edge, but he ultimately ends up with Reimi.
* The Last Hope, wrapping up all the plot hooks and giving all the characters one last time in the glory. Well, at least it did before HarperCollins decided that the series was selling too well to end it.
* The Last Hours. Except for Tessa, of course, but her young looks are never a hindrance, and she is generally treated as a senior in the community.
* The Last House on Dead End Street met while attending college. A few of them later went on to find marginal success on Broadway after filming wrapped.
* The Last House on Dead End Street was made for $800. The budget was originally $3,000 but the creator spent most of that on drugs.
* The Last House on the Left, has a villainous character named Krug, after the same bully.
* The Last House on the Left identify as hippies or if they're just shaggy from the road, but they definitely have a Manson family vibe.

* The Last House on the Left is a rape / revenge movie with various versions where the rape, humiliation, torture and murder takes place during the day, and by virtue is more horrific than the revenge which takes place at night, since the more normal among us cheer on the revenge more than the other stuff.
* The Last House on the Left: Krug Stillo, who rapes and tortures women for fun and got his son addicted to drugs to maintain control over him.
* The Last House on the Left or at least the remake, ends on this note.
* The Last House on the Left: Production assistant Steve Miner appears as a hippie taunting the bumbling cops.
* The Last House on the Left takes exception to a transition going from a rather dark moment to a humorous one and vows to react with comedy the next time someone gives him bad news. When his wife tells him her great-grandmother died, he reacts by doing this trope naked on his front porch.
* The Last House on the Left, who clearly belong in a comedy rather than a horror film.
* The Last Human (2019): Emma is from a bunker where a disease broke out and wiped out the entire population except her. Emma didn't even seem to catch the disease.
* The Last Human (2019): Robots have a tendency to take everything they hear at face value, so most of them don't understand things like puns and slang. Ceeron is a rare exception because he has a fascination with them. This allows him to serve as a translator for such things to XR_935 and SkD.
* The Last Human and told she was an entirely different species because being human would get her hunted down and killed. The species she thought she was don't get periods; if they start bleeding like that, it means they're dying. Her mother found her hiding in the air vents, preparing for some sort of blaze of glory suicide attack so that she could "die like a Widow should," and was forced to tell her that she was human after all.
* The Last Human: A Tale of the Pre-Classical Era, the Human (and, it's implied, all his kind) are not only resistant to magic, they can completely nullify magic and enchantments with their presence.
* The Last Human; humans are mostly remembered as aggressive and vicious predators who would make war among themselves for seemingly no reason. At the same time, they are acknowledged as being highly advanced and creative, and capable of great deeds, hence their reputation as "the creature of contradictions".
* The Last Human In A Crowded Galaxy or his consciousness is transferred to a fresh body, as only one body is ever awake at a time.
* The Last Human In A Crowded Galaxy, Sarya's goggles provide augmented reality, for example showing her colored holograms covering otherwise colorless toy blocks.
* The Last Human In A Crowded Galaxy: Sarya's goggles provide augmented reality, for example showing her colored holograms covering otherwise colorless toy blocks.
* The Last Human In A Crowded Galaxy. She does admit that it can be occasionally isolating, even in the vast diversity of galactic society.
* The Last Human In A Crowded Galaxy: Shenya and Sarya move to one early in the comic, and most of the story takes place there.
* The Last Human In A Crowded Galaxy: This is the prevailing belief among aliens, despite no human sightings in over a millennium. The titular last human Sarya (who doesn't know what she is) plays "human" with other children, in which she acts as a terrifying, acid-spitting monster.
* The Last Hurrah than in the novel, which is slightly more ambivalent about him and his legacy.
* The Last Illusion. Harry still lives in a supernatural-haunted world complete with Hell and all, it's just that "Lazy Susan Demon" was little more than an animated puddle of poop from another world and not some Prince of Darkness.
* The last Imperial Japanese Army soldier to surrender was Pvt. Teruo Nakamura, who was contacted on the Indonesian island of Morotai in December 1974,
* Thelast.io. However, it takes a couple of seconds to do so, and while you won't be damaged by your own trap, you cannot take them back either, so you have to be careful about choosing a location. For the other players, the trap is invisible until you approach it closely, and the players who are going somewhere in the hurry will likely not notice at all until it closes on them. Once it does, it deals 30 damage and traps them in place for several seconds. Oh, and killing their original owner does not deactivate the trap.

* Thelast.io: There are quicksand pools in the desert area, but they simply mire down the player and make it difficult for them to get out. They won't actually kill them on their own, but being a sitting duck for the other players is often dangerous enough regardless.
* The Last Jedi adds Rose, who's Southeast Asian. She is the first Southeast Asian actor to play a part with lines in the franchise. There's also her sister, but she dies early on and has no lines.
* The Last Jedi also ends with a grim note with Luke Skywalker dead and the remaining Resistance soldiers are down to a few dozen. However, Luke has regained his faith in the Jedi Order and named Rey his final apprentice who will restore peace to the Galaxy, while Leia assures that the Resistance will rise once more.
* The Last Jedi and dramatic music, pans out to reveal it's really a clothes iron.
* The Last Jedi, and it's not like he would've been able to tell the difference.
* The Last Jedi, and they happen to be Force-sensitive, though crudely so. Like the Empire and the First Order, the Sith Eternal has bodyguards in red armor for Emperor Palpatine, the Sovereign Protectors.
* The Last Jedi appears to the now-reclusive Luke, assuring him he is always an honorable Jedi.
* The Last Jedi a red mineral planet covered with a layer of white salt? Because the visual of geysers of red earth exploding from beneath the white surface looks FREAKIN' AWESOME!
* The Last Jedi, but reacts when Luke reaches out to her with The Force for the first time in years.
* The Last Jedi, but the First Order simply view them as rebels by this point.
* The Last Jedi, but they're millennia-old artifacts of the old Jedi Order. Despite being from a rundown backwater, Rey shows every indication of understanding what it is, suggesting books are mostly gone, but not forgotten.
* The Last Jedi, but what isn't known is why anyone thought that would work on any level.
* The Last Jedi by launching her vessel's cargo of bombs at a massive First Order warship, knowing she'll be caught in the backblast. Her efforts are impeded because the control box to launch her bomber's payload is teetering at the top of a ladder, there's no one else alive on board to retrieve it, and she's sprawled on her back after falling down the ladder. In desperation, she kicks the ladder until the control box tips over the edge, snags it one-handed before it can plummet out of her vessel's bomb bay, and triggers the payload's release.
* The Last Jedi-class Siege Dreadnought, which specializes in that kind of things.
* The Last Jedi. Despite his warnings that he will have to kill her, he appears extremely reluctant to fulfill this promise.
* The Last Jedi, destroying both ships and shredding the rest of the First Order armada with lightspeed shrapnel.
* The Last Jedi drops out of hyperspace and prepares to attack, her behemoth size contrasted by the numerous Star Destroyers dwarfed by her presence.
* The Last Jedi during Rey's first lesson with Luke. Telling Rey to close her eyes, and reach out, Rey literally reaches out with her hand much to Luke's annoyance. Her eyes closed, he decides to mess with her by tickling her fingers with a blade of grass, leading her to believe she's actually feeling the Force, right before giving her a nice smack.
* The Last Jedi fleet is able to stay far enough away from the First Order fleet that the First Order's weapons couldn't penetrate their shields.
* The Last Jedi), Force bubble (to survive briefly in the vacuum of space), Force ghosts being able to use Force powers, and astral projection.
* The Last Jedi goes even farther, not releasing in any form until close to the DVD release of the film. Perhaps owing to the divisive reaction to the film, it's being advertised as being an "expanded edition".
* The Last Jedi has a siege as one of the primary narrative threads. The Resistance capital ships are under attack from the First Order with limited fuel, and their deflector shields can only hold off the First Order for so long. The siege continues and climaxes on the planet Crait, where the final pocket of surviving Resistance members are in a base under siege by First Order walkers and a battering-ram cannon.

* The Last Jedi have an effective range of just a couple thousand kilometers before damage fall-off over range makes them useless against anything with shields.
* The Last Jedi he encourages her as a Force ghost and gives her his X-Wing, and ends up among the Jedi who talk to/empower Rey as she's facing Palpatine with two lightsabers. In the end, Rey adopts the Skywalker name for herself to honor Luke (and Leia).
* The Last Jedi, he initially tries to run in order to protect her, not really interested in trying to join up with the Resistance. It's his journey with Rose that really begins to make him see the greater cause.
* The Last Jedi He may start the movie badly depressed, but when he gets back in the fight, he saves the day and proves himself to be by far the most powerful Force user we've ever seen.
* The Last Jedi in that no human explicitly says it. Ultimately played straight. Word of God confirmed BB-8 says it to Poe at one point in his droidspeak, to which Poe replies, "Positive thoughts, buddy".
* The Last Jedi is also a relatively undetailed period of time, making it a goldmine of fanfic content, between Kylo Ren's reign as the First Order's Supreme Leader, Rey's continued Jedi training under Leia, and Palpatine preparing his Final Order.
* The Last Jedi is an exaggerated and infamous example of this trope in the Star Wars saga. It's a giant target that is sluggish, poorly shielded, and possesses a brittle hull. But carries a massive payload of magnetic proton bombs that can destroy a single dreadnought if it reaches the target. Unfortunately the bombs need to be in close proximity to the target, and the magnetic bombs can be a hazard to wingmen should a bomber be destroyed.
* The Last Jedi Kylo "Ben Solo" Ren serves as this as the Dark half of the Force that his bond with Rey's Light half represents.
* The Last Jedi: Kylo Ren launches a pair of torpedoes into the Resistance cruiser's fighter bay, destroying all of their remaining fighter craft. This also kills all of the pilots who were preparing to launch, with Poe surviving because he was just entering the bay.
* The Last Jedi, leaving her visibly stunned. Notably, it's after this admission that she stops being so antagonistic to him.
* The Last Jedi notwithstanding, both of which had more attention from other countries than China) resulting in a lack of interest in outer space among the Chinese as a whole.
* The Last Jedi of Ben Solo, who destroyed it, killed most of the students and became Kylo Ren.
* The Last Jedi often referred to by fans as "Broom Boy", was named after the child actor who portrayed him, Temirlan Blaev.
* The Last Jedi opens with a space battle over the Resistance's base of D'Qar, with Poe launching a daring strike against the First Order Dreadnought in order to buy time for the evacuation; a massive furball ensues as the Resistance bombers make their way through hordes of TIE Fighters. The fight culminates in the Dreadnought's destruction, though at the cost of much of the Resistance's starfighter corps as well as all of their bombers. The Resistance spends the rest of the movie on the run, too crippled to conduct an effective counterattack against the pursuing First Order.
* The Last Jedi, primarily from the viewpoint of Historical European Martial Arts.
* The Last Jedi: Rey and Kylo Ren begin regularly communicating across interstellar distances.
* The Last Jedi, roughly 1/3 of his chest is blocked by high-waisted pants. Apart from not suiting his overall appearance... the fangirls were not pleased.
* The Last Jedi saw a second big push on sales of replicas of Kylo Ren's mask. In the actual film, he smashes it in a fit of rage early on, after Snoke mocks him for wearing it, and goes unmasked for the rest of the film.

* The Last Jedi says that Kylo Ren survived being shot by Chewbacca because he contained the blast's energy with the Force.
* The Last Jedi? Seems like a good shot compared to the Hail Mary the Rebels went for.
* The Last Jedi shows the remaining Resistance forces evacuating their base on D'Qar as the remnants of the First Order attack.
* The Last Jedi) so he can't just shoot the six guys with melee weapons. The camera then deliberately draws focus to Ben performing a bizarre move where he bends forward, holds his lightsaber behind him, and just stands there for a solid few seconds as one of the Knights goes out of his way to hit the blade instead of his completely exposed legs, torso, and waist. The way it's shot indicates the audience is supposed to take it in as cool-looking.
* The Last Jedi so they can have their very serious moral conversation.
* The Last Jedi. The circumstances are a bit different though. She is tempted to, and intentionally seeks out a dark side cave on Ahch-To, hoping to find answers about her absentee parents. She is subjected to trippy visions, and admits that she should have felt trapped or panicked, but her determination to find answers wins through. However, when the cave doesn't give her the answers she was looking for (or so she thought at the time), she is left broken and feeling alone.
* The Last Jedi. The film ruthlessly deconstructs this behaviour. In defying General Leia's orders to disengage from the attack on the First Order Dreadnaught, he gets dozens of pilots and ships destroyed just to take out a ship that was too big and cumbersome to chase them down later.
* The Last Jedi. The only reason Poe's actions were a threat was that she was so secretive that the entire crew was convinced she had no plan whatsoever. In short, while she is a good strategist, she has questionable leadership that only hinders her plans.
* The Last Jedi. The pod is stored in a small docking bay, slightly larger than itself.
* The Last Jedi, the Resistance bombers. A thirty year old, slow, strategic bomber that has been repurposed to destroy starships. It's no wonder they lost their entire fleet destroying the First Order dreadnaught.
* The Last Jedi, there's the entire sequence on Snoke's ship, with Rey and Kylo confronting Snoke, Finn fighting Captain Phasma, and Holdo's big sacrifice.
* The Last Jedi. This problem obviously doesn't exist if you just watch the films back-to-back.
* The Last Jedi, though like Krennic he just lacks the intimidation factor compared to dear Annie Skywalker.
* The Last Jedi to cover up but she notably doesn't continue asking when he doesn't.
* The Last Jedi uses many of the same kinds of techniques while still being unique. Rey's style is more like fighting with a staff than a sword, for example, and Finn's style is noticeably direct, evoking a possible riot weapon training from his Stormtrooper past.
* The Last Jedi was released for the fans who are the most critical (and very vocal about it) of the Disney era films.
* The Last Jedi, when Kylo Ren reveals to Rey that her parents were no one special, he adds that "You have no place in this story."
* The Last Jedi, while others believe the nuanced take is perfectly in line with Luke’s characterization from the Original Trilogy and fits well with the movie's theme of overcoming failure.
* The Last Jedi). While this did help get more merchandise out there, the fact that it was specifically and blatantly girl-focused made it fall into the non-merchandising version of this trope; as some people viewed it through the lens of "media aimed at girls sucks".
* The Last Jedi, who played Princess Leia in the franchise and who passed about a year before the film's release.

* The Last Jedi. Why didn't Hux shoot the Resistance ship when they arrived at the Resistance base at the start of the film? Many say because he was arrogant and wanted to make them suffer. Why didn't Holdo reveal her plans to the crew? Fans claim she suspected a spy or wanted to teach Poe a lesson in being too gung-ho, or that they were following real world military protocols and thus had no reason to tell him. Your milleague may vary if these are seen as legitimate explanations.
* The Last Jedi, with the Resistance fleet staying far enough ahead of the First Order ships to avoid destruction, although the First Order keeps picking off stragglers through the course of the movie.
* The Last Judgement depicts Christ's resurrection, it's only natural for the painting directly above it to depict a figure seen as foreshadowing Christ: the prophet Jonah, who is sitting back as if too large for his portrait.
* The Last Judgement is covered with dozens of saints, prophets, and sinners that are either ascending to Heaven or descending into Hell, with Christ and Mary in the center below the throne of God.
* The Last Kids on Earth, has Malondre the Queen of Slime Monsters as its main villain. She was created for the game by Max Brallier and Scott Peterson, who are also involved in the TV show, and Brallier is even the author of the books both are based on.
* The Last Kingdom, middle-aged father Beocca tries to help a young traumatized girl Thyra who was imprisoned as a sex slave to Sven, and he falls in love with her. She seems to have found her safe place with him. Uhtred advises his friend Beocca to ask her to marry him. Beocca is anxious about the age gap as he says that he knows he could be her much, much older brother. Another obstacle for them is their origin: he is a Saxon while she is a Dane. They get married and seem very happy together.
* The Last Kingdom that isn't a duel between individual fighters invariably has at least one side, and usually both, forming a shieldwall.
* The Last Kingdom, the German Alexander Dreymon plays Uhtred, a Saxon born in what is now England. Interestingly, Uhtred does not have an English accent as he was raised by Danes.
* The last King of Ankh-Morpork. After a description of how Samuel Vimes' ancestor killed him, it is mentioned that "he was very fond of children".
* The last king of Ankh-Morpork (Lorenzo the Kind, evil SOB if there ever was one) was fat, as were Lords Winder and Snapcase, the previous Patricians before Lord Vetinari came to power.
* The last king of Ankh-Morpork, Lorenzo the Kind, had one of these. With child-size equipment.
* The last King of England to die in combat was Richard III at Bosworth in 1485. The last King of Scotland to do so was James IV at Flodden Field in 1513. The last King (of both) to lead his troops in battle personally was George II at the battle of Dettingen in 1743.
* The Last King Of Osten Ard, a book which has been banned by the church since the mysterious disappearance of its author, over two hundred years ago. The censors' copy is kept apart from other books.
* The Last King of Scotland and their conclusion is spelt out in the headline: HE'S MAD—IT'S OFFICIAL.
* The Last King of Scotland gas attack from Amin. Garrigan later advises Amin to never mix beer with aspirin again.
* The Last King of Scotland, he specifically despises English culture, so his affinity may also have something to do with seeing both Uganda and Scotland as rebels to the British state.
* The Last King of Scotland, Idi Amin has consumed some medicine with beer, which results in a gas buildup in his stomach; Amin thinks he's dying, but his doctor presses on his stomach with a baseball bat; this lets his gas escape in an enormous fart. This scene is the first time the doctor sees the dark side to Idi Amin's personality; up until now, he has seen Amin as a jolly, comical individual but now he sees him ranting and paranoid (until the doctor cleared the gas, Amin thought someone had poisoned him).

* The Last King of Scotland is not so much about Idi Amin as about the fictional doctor Nicholas Garrigan who befriends him and gradually becomes disillusioned with his regime. Forrest Whitaker's Amin still steals the show, though.
* The Last King of Scotland: It's a movie based on the reign of Ugandan dictator Idi Amin - as told by a Scottish doctor.
* The Last King of Scotland, Nicholas Garrigan comes home to find his entire house (provided to him personally by Idi Amin) ransacked and his UK passport replaced with a Ugandan one.
* The Last King of Scotland: Nigel Stone to Nicholas Garrigan after he inadvertently causes the death of an innocent man.
* The Last King of Scotland, where the reign of Ugandan dictator Idi Amin is viewed through the eyes of his Scottish doctor.
* The last king of the Shang dynasty had a cruel concubine named Daji, who dragged the entire kingdom into senseless debauchery, cruelty, and bloodshed.
* The last king was deposed and replaced by his Soviet-leaning cousin in 1973. Everything seemed fine for several years, until said cousin went increasingly astray from the Soviets and eventually assassinated by a rival communist group in 1978.
* The Last Knight, Sir Michael releases Fisk from his obligation to stay with Michael only to have Fisk stay anyway to keep his employer-turned-friend out of trouble.
* The Last Knight. This explains why humans are little more than pissed off hornets to the Autobots.
* The Last Laugh all across the floor, tripping up everyone it slides under.
* The Last Lecture, Randy Pausch referred to this trope as a "head fake", saying "The best way to teach somebody something is to have them think they're learning something else."
* The Last Legionary allows the problem to be bypassed allowing her to potentially take Keill to visit her home galaxy.
* The Last Legion by Valerio Manfredi, adapted into a film of the same name (see above), involves the Ninth Legion.
* The Last Legion: Mira, a female Indian warrior who's very elegant while beating every opponent she faces. She's also overall graceful and reserved.
* The Last Legion: Mira and Aurelius married after the film's events, as the final scene reveals.
* The Last Legion, obscuring the original Latin inscription until only "Es calibur" is visible.
* The Last Legion, the titular last legion must get the very young last emperor of Rome to Britain. The kid isn't as stupid as some other examples, but he still gets kidnapped pretty often.
* The Last Leg, kind of) and gets his tongue stuck and has to be pulled free by Alex.
* The Last Leprechaun: Ethel and Tommy use a passage hidden behind the fireplace. They later use a passage behind a bookcase to go to the basement.
* The Last Leprechaun: Finn the leprechaun is played by English actor Mick Walter.
* The Last Leprechaun, Finn uses one to wake him up and make breakfast.
* The Last Leprechaun: Henry sees his fiancee covered in mud and hears his kids accuse her of being a witch. When she offers him a drink, he gladly takes it.
* The Last Leprechaun: Right after Laura is introduced, the banshee kills her and takes her body.
* The Last Leprechaun: The banshee steals Laura's body so she can have a body and be rich.
* The Last Letter From Your Lover: At one point early in their affair, Anthony and Jenny scramble to the car in the middle of a rainstorm, leading to a romantic moment.
* The Last Letter From Your Lover, Jenny and Anthony refer to each other as "J" and "Boots".
* The Last Letter From Your Lover: The film opens with Jenny's plot in the '60s, but gives almost equal screentime to Ellie in modern-day London, who is trying to piece the story of Jenny's affair together. As a result, Jenny and Ellie find the same letters at similar points in time in the narrative.

* The Last Letter From Your Lover under an umbrella in a rainshower near the end.
* The last letter of Motel Hello's sign is constantly flickering on and off, providing the
* The Last Lieutenant (1993), the eponymous character comes out of retirement to fight against Hitler's invasion, but the regular army soldiers mock this old man in his obsolete uniform. They're sent to blow up a bridge, but the detonators fail to explode. The old man proves his bravery by walking out onto the bridge and setting the charges off manually.
* The Last Light charged and have a good number of flares to get to the end.
* The last light novel ends with Lina and Gourry traveling to Lina's homeland, Zephilia. Cue loads of
* The Last Light of the Sun somebody while keeping them alive. Since blood-eagleing involves cutting open the victim's ribs and removing their lungs while they are still alive, this means all his victims are in for a long, drawn-out, and thoroughly agonizing death, which Ivarr enjoys every moment of.
* The last line in "The Alphabet Song" only rhymes if you pronounce Z "Zee", as the Americans do, instead of "Zed", as Canadians and most Europeans do.
* The last line of each verse repeats the same thing differently. In the first verse, the narrator is eager about setting out on the crusade and is apparently encouraged by his father's words. "Son, know your enemy, as I know my son." In the second one, he has a
* The last line of "Sugar We're Going Down"'s chorus sounds like it's not even in any language humans speak; for all anyone can tell by listening to it, it's "A lewded gah complex caught in the pudding." Yes, it does sound like he is singing about pudding.
* The last line of the Barenaked Ladies' song is "If I had a million dollars....
* The Last Lovecraft, Captain Olaf recounts us with the story about how the monsters of the deep like to mate with humans.
* The Last Lovecraft: Relic of Cthulhu has Starspawn and his pets as fish people; they're weakened from being away from the ocean. Also there was a curious "Half-Breed" show, probably offspring of one of the many rapings we hear about in the movie.
* The Last Lovecraft: Relic of Cthulhu has the titular Cthulhu himself sealed (by choice) somewhere under the sea. The last remaining Lovecraft must guard the relic of Cthulhu to prevent it's awakening.
* The Last Lovecraft: Relic of Cthulhu it switched to a comic-book style animation.
* The Last Lovecraft: Relic of Cthulhu our "heroes" are trapped in a small RV, when one of the monsters from the deep smashes through the window all they can do is close a flimsy fold out wooden screen to slow it down.
* The Last Lovecraft: Relic of Cthulhu. Which is a comedy about one of Lovecraft's descendants fighting off Cthulhu's minions in order to retain him in his watery prison.
* "The Last Mabelcorn" reveals Mabel got banned from a petting zoo for taping a traffic cone to a horse's head to make it look like a unicorn.
* The last major conflict of the series to be resolved is that Kyoko is B to Godai's A and her late husband Soichiro's C.
* The Last Man After Lionel washes up on the shore of Ravenna as the last man on earth, he mourns the loss of his companions who drowned at sea, he then travels on foot to Rome where he is able to live comfortably for a year (except for being depressed and lonely) until he decides to spend the rest of his life traveling around the earth to search for another human.
* The Last Man Alive scenario without a lot of rotting corpses. Some brainstorming and voila.
* The Last Man Heard a Knock...: Someone believes that they are the last living being or human on the planet, but not only are there others, but they also manage to run into each other.
* The Last Man on Earth, achieved the look by filming on location in suburban L.A.

early on Sunday mornings, when there was little traffic to speak of and most local businesses hadn't yet opened.
* The Last Man on Earth, a virus wipes out not only most of humanity but almost all animal life as well. This is really brought home when Phil and Carol go to Malibu and find dozens of dead whales washed up on the beach.
* The Last Man on Earth character's surname was changed from Neville to Morgan.
* The Last Man on Earth did at least explain where it would have gone in an interview.
* The Last Man on Earth does this to the extreme once a season, starting in season two. The characters in question always die within a minute of their first appearance and are always played by well-known actors:
* The Last Man on Earth fairly faithfully, and includes the subplot with the dog that Neville befriends for a short time.
* The Last Man on Earth) has all the markings of the Manic Pixie Dream Girl, but her natural pairing Phil (Will Forte) doesn't seem all that taken by her manic energy for the most part, only reluctantly coupling up with her as no one else appears to be able to stand him. On the other hand, Phil 2.0 (Boris Kodjoe) falls head over heels for Carol, so the trope still stands.
* The Last Man on Earth has Phil constantly thrashing around socially and failing in the most humiliating way(s) possible in his every scheme to escape Carol or have sex with Melissa/Gail/Erica.
* The Last Man on Earth: In a pre-outbreak flashback set in a drug-lord's mansion, soldiers of a rival gang approach the house, guns drawn, and gallantly tell the elderly gardener lady to stay quiet. Once they're in the house, the lady follows them in and shoots them all. They didn't know the drug-lord was a woman, of course.
* The Last Man on Earth, Mike is able to guess that the combination to his brother's safe is 6969.
* The Last Man on Earth, Phil and the other main survivors don't appear in "Pitch Black".
* The Last Man on Earth: Phil "Tandy" Miller marries Carol under the belief that she is the last Woman on Earth. She isn't, and while at first he curses being stuck with the quirky, needy Carol, and not the beautiful, glamorous Melissa, after proving her loyalty towards him Tandy eventually does begin to fall in love with Carol, and becomes the most loyal and loving, if harebrained husband, on the face of the newly barren Earth.
* The Last Man on Earth, Phil tells one of his bad jokes to the group, no one laughs, crickets are heard — and the group gets excited because crickets had survived the apocalypse.
* The Last Man on Earth: Robert Morgan is speared to death by other survivors, who view him as a monster for unwittingly killing them.
* The Last Man on Earth, self-explanatory. Though the title's still deceptive, since there are at least 7 other people left, but that still puts humanity down to one billionth of its old number.
* The Last Man on Earth, Todd gets a bad case of this when Gail falls for him in the wake of her grief over Gordon, Melissa can't let go after he turns down her marriage proposal, and Erica shares a kiss with him when she asks him to serve as the father of her baby.
* The Last Man on Earth while apparently dying of the apocolyptic virus so that Phil won't stick around to watch him die. It doesn't work, so he makes it his "dying wish" for Phil to leave.
* The Last Man on Earth, whose election coincidentally occurred during a pandemic similar to the one depicted in the show.
* The Last Man on Earth with him. At one point, Phil wakes up and goes to get ready for his day, then looks in the mirror to discover Mike shaved off the hair on one side of his head.
* The Last Man On Planet Earth some of the women show in destroying their enemies, it's implied that the women aren't much better.
* The Last Man's Reward a group of neighborhood kids living in the same temporary apartment building buys a box of baseball cards at a garage sale, which contains many rare and valuable cards. They hide it in a cave, and the last kid to move out of the apartment building gets to keep the whole box.

* The Last Mechanical Monster. A 99-year-old supervillain who's completely out of touch with modern society after serving a sixty-four year prison sentence. Pretty amusing comedy there, right up until he restores one of his flying, flame throwing robots...
* /The Last Mechanical Monster. The local neighborhood is poor and run down, and there's no magic or incredible inventions anymore.
* The last Mementos quest is the toughest and the only quest ranked at the highest S-Rank, pitting the team against
* The Last Metro contact in a church. Sure enough, the contact is arrested.
* The Last Mimzy had keychain versions of the titular character given to patrons on the first week of release.
* The Last Mimzy: has the boy able to drive a truck because of gaming experience (ignoring alien influence).
* The Last Mimzy the brother has already found a strange cube that deposited several mysterious items, including a strange crystal that makes noise that only he and his sister can see (adults think it looks like a flat rock), a crystalline conch shell that enhances his hearing and teaches him how to command spiders through sound, and a set of stone "spinners" that his sister can spin to create a strange portal that causes her hand to split harmlessly into a million particles. Yet he still refuses to believe that her stuffed rabbit, which also came through the cube, speaks to her, despite it being the one that taught her how to spin the spinners. It takes the mimzy predicting their father's arrival to convince him.
* The Last Minute, a fully outfitted Gauss Rifle that deals bonus limb damage, purchasable from Ronnie Shaw after the completion of "Old Guns" for the Minutemen.
* The last minute and 12 seconds of The Beatles' "While My Guitar Gently Weeps" from
* The last moments of the Rumbar Pirates. Knowing they will die from the poison their enemies used, they used their last moments to sing one final song and having a good time. Until they succumbed one by one, leaving Brooks as their
* The Last Movie concerns a western being shot in a small Peruvian village. The Peruvian natives begin "filming" their own movie with "cameras" made of sticks, and acting out real western movie violence, as they don't understand movie fakery.
* The last mutiny by a Royal Navy ship's company occurred in 1945 on the support ship HMS Edinburgh Castle, as it passed through the Panama Canal. Embarrassingly for the Royal Navy, United States Marine Corps assistance was called for to put down the mutiny. The Edinburgh Castle mutiny is regarded as such a "perfect storm", where all the possible causes of mutiny came together
* The Last Mystical Legend Of The Fantastic Fantasy Trigger Star evil than the main character. In an actual fight against the main cast, they point out how weak this enemy was and that it couldn't be the real Black Licorice-at which point he pretends being a mook, flee, and burst out crying wondering what's going to happen to him.
* The Last: Naruto the Movie Hanabi seems pretty okay for a girl who was kidnapped and had her eyes temporarily removed.
* The Last: Naruto the Movie. Her shirt and skirt almost fully expose her hips and abdomen, is barely above her groin and looks like it could slip off at any time, yet somehow stays on.
* The Last: Naruto the Movie is stopping the moon from crashing into Earth.
* The Last: Naruto the Movie) makes him understand that his feelings for her are also romantic, which paves the way for them to get together.
* The Last: Naruto the Movie, Naruto has become famous after winning the war and has gained a very large female fan base, being fawned over immensely and receiving countless gifts from his many female admirers during the Rinne Festival. However, he is far more interested in his childhood secret admirer Hinata, since she liked him before he became famous.
* The Last: Naruto the Movie was due to the strength and potency of her untapped chakra of their mutual ancestor Hamura.

* The Last of August, while bailing Jamie out of a difficult situation, Charlotte asks for wine because she's had a long day.
* The Last of England has a narrator (played by Nigel Terry) who uses this:
* The last "official" attempt by America at gaining Canada was the so-called
* The Last of His Kind is either carnivorous or simply hyper-aggressive, as it chases down and kills people).
* The Last of Mrs. Cheney starts off as what seems like a romantic comedy with Fay Cheney the wealthy widow being pursued by two British nobles, stuffy old Lord Kelton and handsome young Lord Dilling. The end of the first act reveals that she is an impostor and that she and her "servants" are actually a gang of thieves, looking to worm their way into high society so they can steal a pearl necklace.
* "The Last of Our Kind", Rykka's song for Switzerland in the 2016 edition of the
* The Last of Sheila as Phillip explains the extremely complicated murder solution to Tom.
* The Last of Sheila movie producer Clinton Greene. Clinton bought the option to Tom's dream script some years ago, and refuses to make it, and also refuses to let go of the option.
* The Last Of The Just uses the legend of the Tzadikim to frame a tale of Jewish persecution and survival through eight centuries in Europe.
* The Last of the Meheecans as a Mexican stereotype, it promotes patriotism and nostalgia towards Mexico and mocks the whole illegal immigrants panic in America.
* The Last of the Mohicans and pairs him up with one of the female characters. This is silly, because there's already a romance - two, even.
* The Last of the Mohicans another musket-ball which his compatriots had used to drive a nail into a post at 50 yards.
* The Last of the Mohicans. As Major Heyward is dragged away to be burned alive in place of Cora Munro, he responds to Hawkeye's protests with a hurried, but nonetheless perfectly polite: "My compliments, sir. Take her and get out."
* The Last of the Mohicans averts this: the few times that bullets are actually shown hitting something (usually a stone cliff face) the only indication of it is a puff of dust and rock debris. Perhaps sparks wouldn't have felt 18th century-ish?
* The Last of the Mohicans, Chingachgook will not dignify Magua's body with a Disney Villain Death, since the heroes are the ones who fall heroically off the cliff.
* The Last of the Mohicans has this trope as a subplot, where two white British women are captured by Indians, but rescued by the heroes of the film, who also happen to be Indians. One of the Indians is a white man who was adopted by them. The three heroes save the girls on multiple occasions, leading to romance and assimilation.
* The Last of the Mohicans Hawkeye shoots two flintlock Kentucky longrifles and hits both targets, while running, no less.
* The Last of the Mohicans is an extremely distilled version of a very long and rather complicated novel. Omitted portions include redundant portions where the women are captured and quickly freed, a deranged white man at the Huron camp, a shooting contest, and Natty Bumpo disguised as a bear.
* The Last of the Mohicans — as well as in the actual incident that inspired it — the French commander offers the British fort a chance to surrender; they accept, knowing that they don't have a chance against the French mortars.
* The Last of the Mohicans: rigorous period-appropriate survivalist training, learning to hunt and live off the land.
* The Last of the Really Great Whangdoodles gives each of the children a special hat that will help them travel to the magical world of Whangdoodleland, and warns them never to take the hats off while they're there, or they may not be able to return home. Near the end of the book, he admits to the Prock that the hats are just hats, a ploy to help the children channel their imaginations. It's then played with, as it's suggested that the hats might, unknown to the Professor, have actual power.
* The Last of the Really Great Whangdoodles: There's a newspaper report near the beginning about Professor Savant being awarded the Nobel Prize for his work in genetics.

* The Last of These Is Not Like the Others: A gag where the last item listed is noticeably different from the rest in some way.
* The Last of These Is Not Like the Others: A list ends in something different and crazy.
* The Last of These Is Not Like the Others out on his generous hospitality, saying that Natasha Legerro was blessed with the ability to birth a child, etc.). The exception came with Jeff Ross, who he simply refers to as a "melting hippo" before moving on.
* The Last of These Is Not Like the Others's name only appears in the newspaper on three occasions: when she is born, when she gets married, and when she dies.
* The Last of the Starks care about honor? And on the heroic side, Missandei is standing right next to Cersei and knows she (Missandei) is going to die, so why not grab Cersei and jump off the wall while she's at it?
* The Last of the T'En, where the main male character is once possessed by something evil and nearly rapes the heroine, but realizes what he's doing and stops 'himself' from doing it, and also in a rather dodgy scene in her bedroom. Both times he says, "I'm not really like that," or some variation of the theme...
* The Last of the Untouchables, by Oscar Fraley & Paul Robsky. Robsky tells of how he got lost after raiding a backwoods distillery, eventually running into an old hermit armed with a rifle who guides him to the correct trail. His partner goes pale when he hears this, as from Robsky's description the man was a notorious multiple murderer, who apparently thought that a rookie Prohibition agent wasn't worth bothering about.
* The Last Of The Untouchables is working undercover and runs into a criminal he's arrested on a previous occasion. Fortunately he's posing as a bank robber, so when the criminal thinks he looks familar, he's just told that he must have seen his wanted poster if he ever entered a post office.
* "The Last of the V-8 Interceptors", or also known as the "Pursuit Special", the 1973 Ford XB Falcon, in the first, second and the fourth
* The Last of the Wine by being a.) lovers and b.) the same age; this surprises Alexander's father Philip. However, these days historians think that relationships between adolescent coevals, albeit with a lover/beloved dynamic still obtaining, were probably common in ancient Macedon; each area had its own tradition of homosexuality. Bagoas, who comes from a different culture, sees Alexander as Hephaistion's "boy" and takes pride in giving Alexander the chance to play the "man's" role. Obviously, the Alexander/Bagoas relationship, the Harmodios/Aristogeiton relationship and Plato's relationships with younger guys are fictional depictions of actual relationships recorded by history.
* The Last of Us, after fighting through an infected infested sewer, you get outside, turn around, and see a warning "INFECTED INSIDE! DO NOT ENTER!" Ellie says the trope upon pointing this out.
* The Last of Us, allows you to restart the game with all your skill and weapon upgrades. In fact, doing this is necessary to obtain certain trophies in the game, since there aren't enough supplements or weapon parts to unlock all abilities and upgrade all weapons on one playthrough. Unusually for this trope, the difficulty settings for New Game+, denoted by a + at the end, are harder than their equivalents for a new game.
* The Last of Us and doesn't get brought up again until about 2/3 of the way through the story when you get to the town where his brother Tommy lives. When you get there, he and Tommy go off on their own and Ellie stays with Tommy's wife, Maria. Maria tells Ellie about what happened with Sarah and Ellie tries to broach the subject with him.
* The Last of Us and mashing sqaure to bash their heads in with whatever blunt object you can get your hands on. The game’s only boss fight comes at about the 3/4 mark and after a terrifying game of cat and mouse playing as Ellie with a cannibal pedophile rapist, it’s very satisfying to beat his face in with a machete after he tries to rape her.
* The Last of Us are, both of them seem chronically incapable of moving a pile of chairs and shelves out of their way, no matter how haphazardly they're stacked.

* The Last of Us are dependent upon echolocation, as fungal growths around and over the face block off the host's vision.
* The Last of Us as the fungus breaches the body of the infected. Bites are a common form of transmission, but people can also contract the fungus by breathing in the spores released from the corpses of the infected.
* The Last of Us: Both protagonists feel this. Joel for his daughter Sarah’s death in the prologue and Ellie because she's immune to the virus and her best friend that was with her when she got bitten wasn't. Joel’s brother Tommy also wasn’t able to forgive himself for what happened to poor Sarah.
* The Last of Us But once he gets the location and kills the one who told him, the other one says that he got what he wanted, but Joel kills him nonetheless.
* The Last of Us came to fruition, Sony had nothing to say about Ellie's face being the only other thing on the cover besides the title.
* The Last of Us category, as the fungal infection that creates the Infected only affects living human beings that have either been bitten by an Infected or through the airborne spores left behind by fungal pods and the remains of dead infected. This is even stated by Joel within the game: "Dead people don't get infected."
* The Last of Us caused by a mutated strain of the Cordyceps fungus, which turns people into bloodthirsty zombies and, over time, covers the victims in fruiting bodies, starting with the head.
* The Last of Us caused by fungi; one of the main characters is a lesbian, there is also a gay supporting character and a lesbian/queer female supporting character; subject matter includes queer female romance)
* The Last of Us develops into large growths that anchor the remains of the infected in place. Limbs and bones are sometimes visible in the overgrown patches of fungus, reaffirming the horror of the cordyceps "zombies" and reminding players that the corpses are still dangerous (even in this sessile form, they release spores that can infect vulnerable humans).
* The Last of Us, Ellie finds herself locked in a cage, with James butchering a corpse on a nearby table, in a room full of bloodstains.
* The Last of Us, Ellie surprises Joel in that she is a wise-talking, swearing, clever girl (who is also handy with a gun or two and not afraid to complete dangerous tasks). There's also her reaction to a gay porn magazine she finds:
* The Last of Us. Every time the person playing her saw an opportunity to intervene constructively she’d Point it out, leading to the character being retooled as having more competence and agency.
* The Last of Us fandom has Outbreak Day (September 26th), the day the fictional cordyceps outbreak started in the universe.
* The Last of Us fits the trope. She's just 14 and has never known the world before the cordyceps infection. She starts off green, but gradually learns to survive by watching Joel, to the point that she takes care of him after he's badly injured. Joel fits in some ways, and definitely was an action survivor at one point, but 20 years of living in the ruins of society have changed him. Despite his age, he's tough and strong and is willing to kill and torture to survive and protect Ellie.
* The Last of Us for those killed by high-caliber bullets to the head.
* The Last of Us has an "listen" ability that gives you the ability to see people as white outlines through objects. Then late at the game you need to fight multitudes of enemies in a blizzard, where everything that isn't about five feet in front of you is lost in a comple wall of whiteness.
* The Last of Us has claimed. In-game, their interactions and trust in each other can be read in various ways, with Bill mentioning 'trouble in paradise' at one point, but nothing ever being a name for the exact nature of their relationship. Tess does say at one point that 'there must be enough here', being the closest to indicating that there might be romance between them, but whether it goes into the physically intimate or merely a deep bond of trust realm is up for interpretation.
* The Last of Us have stated last names. Joel, Tommy, and Sarah's is Miller and Abby’s is Anderson. Ellie's name was Williams in the original draft of the first game before they decided to remove all of them but the Japanese translation decided to use it officially.

* The Last of Us, including the US Army before the apocalypse, the FEDRA soldiers after it, and the Firefly resistance forces fighting against them.
* The Last of Us). Joel and Tommy, when they get Sarah and try to flee the outbreak, talk about news reports including how many dead, where it started, and other things. Police cars are also seen speeding past.
* The Last of Us Joel carries his daughter Sarah like this after the car crashes during the infection breakout, symbolically mirrored at the end of the game when Joel carries Ellie like this when escaping the Fireflies.
* The Last of Us: Joel finds most of Ellie's jokes groan-worthy, but one does get him to laugh and admit he's never heard it before:
* The Last of Us, Joel is a grizzled survivor in his 50s who befriends the 14-year old Ellie over the course of the game.
* The Last of Us only a short while ago and is severely weakened. The guy can barely walk on two feet and still sends people running for the hills.
* The Last of Us on PS4 is this too, for those who didn't play it on PS3 but bought a PS4.
* The Last of Us Part II, an enemy does this to Ellie after she kills one of his teammates while hiding under a car. It doesn't end well for him though.
* The Last of Us Part II, a symptom of post-traumatic stress disorder.
* The Last of Us Part II. Both are paramilitary separatist organizations that overthrew federal control of Washington and Sri Lanka's Northern Province respectively. Much like how the WLF controlled much of Seattle, the LTTE ruled their controlled regions with an iron fist, leading to the persecution and deaths of dissidents and members of minority religious communities. On top of that, both groups utilized regionalist propaganda and even referred to by their animal nicknames (Wolves and Tamil Tigers respectively).
* The Last of Us Part II had a habit of perfectionism and only hiring the best, most driven people to make their games as good as could be, which meant they'd be willing to put up with twelve-hour-plus workdays and coming in sick to work on the game. They were never asked to work overtime week after week until they were hospitalized because they'd do it anyway. Some employees found it impossible to do it for the art in the extreme crunch, to the point that most game animators refuse to work with Naughty Dog at all.
* The Last of Us Part II has Ellie and Dina struggling to open a jar full of joints. Dina ends up just shattering it open.
* The Last of Us Part II has many fans, but the many who don't like it argue that the game isn't a huge improvement on the original in terms of gameplay. The plot, on the other hand, is extremely controversial and opinions vary wildly from "masterpiece of the medium" to "unnecessary and incoherent disaster". Thankfully, the major consensus seems to be leaning on "average".
* The Last of Us Part II has safes scattered throughout the game. Although a clue to the combination can usually be found by searching the vicinity, the option to brute-force your way through is available by listening for the slightly louder clicks when turning the dial.
* The Last of Us Part II, Isaac's death leads to the complete destruction of the WLF assault force attacking the Seraphites. This implies the civilians the WLF were protecting are now utterly helpless against the Seraphites since the WLF committed their entire military force to the assault. At best, the remnants of the WLF will be besieged in their largely fortified and self sufficient headquarters with no hope of escape or help from the outside. At worst, they will all be murdered or forcibly converted by the Seraphites.
* The Last of Us Part II is a super-organism consisting of the fusion of multiple Stalkers, Clickers, and a Bloater, connected together by the Cordyceps fungus.
* The Last of Us Part II, Joel comes up behind Ellie and puts his hand over her mouth and says, "Do you think I’d just let you do this on your own?" In the game itself, it’s actually Jesse who does it. It also happens after Joel dies, meaning it was just made to mislead the audience.
* The Last of Us Part II of the pre-outbreak period, as they believe it is full of sin. That said, they have no problem using guns and powered elevators for military purposes.

* The Last of Us Part II (one of the main characters is a lesbian and her love interest is a bisexual woman, there is also a transgender male supporting character; subject matter includes queer female romance, homophobia, transphobia)
* The Last of Us Part II seems to have two favorites she often takes on assignments with her, those being Alice and Bear.
* The Last of Us Part II takes place over three days, although the first part takes place a few months earlier and the last part takes place a year later.
* The Last of Us Part II, the antagonist has a revolver & pulls it out when she has one of the protagonists cornered. She hears noises coming from the forest & fires a few shots. When the other protagonist tries to attack her, she fires again but misses as the first protagonist grabs her and pins her down. She tries to fire at the first protagonist, but the revolver is out of ammo.
* The Last of Us Part II. Their hobbies somewhat subvert this: Ellie likes to draw, play on her guitar and write lyrics, while Dina has a penchant for electronic devices and likes to tinker.
* The Last of Us Part II. Them executing their revenge is the catalyst for most of the second game's plot.
* The Last of Us Part II. The Seraphites in the present are a bunch of crazy cultist murderers in a blood feud with the Washington Liberation Front. However, ex-Seraphite siblings Yara and Lev say that the current Elders in the cult are the people who've warped her beliefs and that there's nothing violent in what she taught. Adding further ambiguity is that if you ask Lev, he doesn't deny that she did blow up a truck and kill a bunch of soldiers.
* The Last of Us Part II. This would imply that she regrets what she did... until she says that the person in question deserved to die.
* The Last of Us Part II to be the greatest work he's ever made and, within that game, Abby to be his favorite character. Fans, however, have a much more divisive view of both.
* The Last of Us Part II to the original, or the most awesome video game guitar simulator, letting you play almost any song. Since the game's release, numerous videos have come out of people doing covers of various songs using the game.
* The Last of Us Part II, while capable of verbal communication, largely use eerie whistling to communicate while out in the field. This can range from hushed whistles to alert other Seraphites to a disturbance to loud, shrill whistles to put all Seraphites in the area on high alert. This, combined with their odd lingo, makes Seraphite communication difficult to understand to any enemies.
* The Last of Us take place in a world where the Cordyceps fungus (nicknamed the "zombie ant fungus") has evolved into a strain that can infest human brains, causing most infected to become violent to the point of insanity. With no way to stop spreading spores, 90% of humanity ends up wiped out over the course of a few years, with only small pockets left in military controlled cities or colonies of independent survivors.
* The Last of Us That said, the game only follows the very narrow viewpoint of two people on their way across the continental United States, with next to no word on how the rest of the world is doing, which means there might be other groups looking for a cure somewhere in the Americas, not to mention on other continents.
* The Last of Us. The bureaucrats in the U.S. government are removed from power due to their failure to contain the zombie outbreak. The only civilian branch that hasn't been shutdown is the Federal Disaster Response Agency (FEDRA), who assume total governmental control. FEDRA is technically a civilian government agency (like homeland security), but they apparently have the exact same goals as the military. Even 20 years after the outbreak, FEDRA still has control (and the support) of the military; although they're so similar that it's hard to tell them apart.
* The Last of Us: the group enters the sewers in order to take a shortcut to their destination (hopefully avoiding the raiders along the way), only to find the place home to hordes of Infected. They barely make it out the other side... where they see the entrance has been barricaded and has big, obvious warnings: "INFECTED

INSIDE! DO NOT OPEN!"
* The Last of Us. The settlement's leader David claims that they only did it to survive because the winter had been so harsh. However, David is a maniac and a less than reliable source, leaving open the possibility that they are actually just cannibals.
* The Last of Us the trio Joel, Tess and Ellie go a short way around the edge of a sky scraper on a ledge. The segment of ledge lasts only a moment, and the ledge is a foot thick, but they stick closely to the wall anyway.
* The Last of Us, though it's questionable as to whether you would want to.
* The Last of Us warning her to not come too close, because these dogs are much different from the ones that live in human settlements. There's also a dog that lives in Jackson and is a bit of the settlement's mascot, since he's too old to actually do much guarding work.
* The Last of Us when an explosion knocks out the broadcast, at which point the character watching the news sees a massive fireball several miles away.
* The Last of Us when he scolds her for messing with his magazine pile.
* The Last of Us, when Joel stabs a Hunter neck first onto a broken window pane.
* The Last of Us, while driving on the highway Joel and Ellie come across a man hobbling in front of them asking them to stop. While Ellie's all for helping him out, Joel sees right through it and tries to run him down, causing the man to drop the act and pull out a gun. Joel later states that he's been on both sides of that trick.
* The Last of Us who slaughtered over a hundred of them, attempt to get revenge instead. This ends poorly for them. This is something of a trend when it comes to bad guys that Joel and Ellie encounter, really.
* The Last of Us with the protagonists Joel and Ellie. They're in Salt Lake City headed towards the hospital where Ellie will have surgery to get the zombie virus out of her brain to make a cure. While climbing through the remains of the city, they come across a herd of giraffes to which Ellie responds with childlike wonder. They both sit back for a minute and just enjoy the peace and quiet.
* The Last of Us. You can mark enemies and get bonus Supplies if you kill them while the marker is active. The skill "Hawk-eyed" makes the spotting mechanic even more useful by making the enemies glow and marking additional players in range of the marked foe.
* The Last of Us, you can open Ellie's backpack and find that she stole a picture of Joel and his deceased daughter from his sister-in-law several hours before she gives it to him in the story itself.
* The last of what is now the fifty United States was acquired in 1898, when the USA annexed the independent nation of Hawaii, three years after American plantation owners in Hawaii overthrew the Hawaiian monarchy.
* The Last Olympian AFTER he realizes the Great Prophecy had been fulfilled (ending the war).
* The Last Olympian. All demigods have psychic dreams, and the more dangerous the situation is, the more such dreams they experience. Naturally, they hate this, as it just makes already stressful situations more stressful.
* The Last Olympian, Percy and Annabeth are promptly tossed into a lake by their friends when they started kissing. Percy, being the son of Poseidon, turned it into a prolonged underwater kiss.
* The Last Olympian, Percy believes that the reason Mrs. O'Leary is not noticed while bounding through the busy streets of Manhattan at mid-day is because the Mist makes them mistake her for a semi truck.
* The last one and the protagonist, "Kumoko", explicitly made it her goal to eventually achieve the Arachne evolution in order to gain the ability to communicate through speech. The result is a monstrous spider lower body (complete with massive scythe-like arms) with the upper body of a beautiful woman sticking out of its head. The human torso's appearance carries over
* The last one came in the Astrodome after the Oilers had gone on to clinch the #2 seed and a first-round bye. They went on to face the Kansas City Chiefs where, after starting the fourth quarter holding on to a slim 10-7 lead, the Oilers became the victim of another comeback, this time orchestrated by Joe Montana that culminated in a 28-20 loss.

* The last one of the three alternative endings subverted the trope by revealing that
* "The Last One Standing: The Tale of Boba Fett" of Montellian Serat" for slaughtering hundreds of Rebel POWs on Devaron. He claims he was forced into it by his superiors: He had been ordered to join up with another force after taking the city of Montellian Serat and not to leave anyone behind to guard the prisoners, and he didn't have the resources to bring them with him either, so...
* The last one to join, Suki, averts the above reasoning since with Zuko's induction, there are no more teachers to search for and the team is complete. Instead, she is in as a combination of coincidence (between Zuko's induction and Suki's own, the Gaang actually take up
* The Last Page are set in a steampunk world full of Zeppelins (and tanks, cars, etc., all of which run on "chemiostatic" engines). They're even referred to as "Zeppelins", despite the fact that this series is not set on an alternate Earth but a made-up fantasy world, making it highly unlikely that Lord Zeppelin would exist, much less have his name associated with airships.
* The last page of that chapter shows that what looked like pasty guy in plastic green monster gloves to Kat looked, to the others, like
* The last page of the last chapter features a newborn baby. She's Haruka Godai, the daughter of Yusaku and Kyouko.
* The last panel of the strip shows many, many world graves, showing that countless worlds have been destroyed in the past.
* The last part is made even worse in "The New Director" given how much
* The last part is somewhat justified in that the soldiers are likely carrying a hundred pounds of metal in the form of armor, weapons and ammo.
* The last part of the final stanza of "I Just Can't Wait to Be King", from
* The last part of "Tomorrow Never Knows". Of the beginning, of the beginning, of the beginning...
* The last part of which really depends on the teachings of one's denomination: Lutherans believe that all have been saved by Christ's sacrifice regardless of any sins, whereas Catholics teach that one must accept salvation and some have to go through Purgatory before their eternal reward.
* , the last person to be interviewed in the video describes the group as a One-Hit Wonder (which they weren't; In fact, they had already had several, much bigger hits than that song).
* The last phase of a Tyranid invasion involves the hive fleet sending out trillions upon trillions of Ripper swarms; tiny worm-like tyranid lifeforms who's only purpose is to eat biomatter so that it may be consumed by the fleet. Most imperial guardsmen are known to commit suicide if they live to this stage, as the Rippers will happily devour anyone and anything even if they're still alive. Worse still, they'll take their time but will immobilize their foes; leaving you to agonize at their jaws while being completely unable to do anything about it. The Rippers themselves are then eaten alive in-turn when they toss themselves into the digestion pools, which melts them down into a meat slurry to be funneled up to the hive ships to produce more tyranid bioforms and continue the cycle.
* The last photo included in the file is a yellow sign with the marking "ABSOLUTELY NOTHING; NEXT 22 MILES". The caption has this apt explanation:
* The Last Picture Show in rural Texas, placing it at some remove from the middle-class "mainstream" of the era. (The teen characters listen to country and western songs and watch cowboy flicks!)
